FILMS | VIDEO | TV FILMS | RADIO | MUSIC | STAGE

VARIETY

Published Weekly at 154 West 46th Street, New York, N. Y. 10036, by Variety, Inc. Annual subscription, $15. Single copies, 35 cents.
Second Class Postage at New York, N. Y.
© COPYRIGHT 1963 BY VARIETY, INC. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED.

Vol. 234 Feb. 26 64
PRICE
35¢ FEB 17 9

Vol. 233 No. 6 NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 1, 1964 56 PAGES

N.Y. PIX NEED ROOM TO BOOM

Mary Martin, Boyer, Colbert-Ritchard Plus 3 Other B'way Foldos; 900G In Red

By JESSE GROSS

Broadway, which took a more severe beating than usual at the boxoffice during December, saw six shows folding Saturday (28) at a combined loss of around $900,000. They were "Jennie," "Man and Boy," "Rehearsal," "The Irregular Verb to Love," "Love and Kisses" and "Double Dublin."

"Jennie," the most costly of the lot, is figured to have dropped its entire investment, at least. The musical, in which Mary Martin starred, was financed at $550,000, including 10% overcall. It closed after 11 weeks at the Majestic. The Cheryl Crawford-Richard Halliday presentation, which opened on Broadway to a $1,250,000 advance sale, failed to generate boxoffice activity following its preem to bad notices. It employed a company of more than 140 and needed around $51,000 weekly to break even.

"Man and Boy," a Terence Rattigan play presented by Alexander H. Cohen and H. M. Tennent Ltd., was capitalized at $72,000, including 20% overcall. According to Cohen, around $30,000 more was dropped on the venture for a total loss of about $102,000. He, as general partner of the Charles Boyer-starrer, is responsible for any losses in excess of the capitalization. The play, which preceded its Broadway engagement with a London stand, put in seven weeks at the Atkinson Theatre.

"Rehearsal," presented by David Merrick in association with Tennent, is figured to have lost about $35,000 of its $75,000 investment. The Pamela Hansford Johnson-

(Continued on page 54)

Israeli Dancers to Train In Gotham; Later Will Go Grahamesque Overseas

Bethsabee de Rothschild, of the French division of the banking family, lives with her husband in Manhattan and is commonly supposed to have three enthusiasms: Israel, Martha Graham and modern dance, as distinguished from ballet. Her Rothschild Foundation in 1964 takes action to bring all three values together in one project, namely the introduction of some seven men and nine girls from Israel into the dance techniques of Miss Graham. For which purpose the dancers come to New York for several months of training in the Graham repertory. Israelis thereafter will tour Europe presenting modern dance germinated in Manhattan.

Ruth Harris will be in charge of the visitors' education in N.Y Under Foundation grant each student will be paid 500 Israeli pounds a month (about $200) while studying.

Leer on Santa's Face

Fairly suggestive film titles more or less dominated Times Square's Yule offerings, starting with "Love on A Pillow" at the Forum, "Not Tonite, Henry," at the Embassy. Side-by-side Victoria and Astor marquees were hawking "Who's Been Sleeping In My Bed?" and "Move Over, Darling."

Vegas Lounge Act Costs Up, Trying 'Minimum' Tabs

By FORREST DUKE

Las Vegas, Dec. 30.

The nights may be numbered—nights on which you can sit in a Las Vegas lounge and be entertained by Billy Eckstine or Guy Lombardo for the price of a root beer. Minimum charges, now in effect in all hotel main showrooms, may be introduced to lounges.

First to experiment with a minimum in the lounge is Dunes prexy Major Riddle, who had a dining policy in the lounge during the main showroom's remodeling for the current "Casino de Paris" production. For the lounge attraction (Frederic Apcar's "Vive Les Girls!") dinners were served, at prices comparable to those in the main showroom; a $3-per-person minimum was charged for the second show, and there was a no minimum policy for the third show.

Other hotel operators on the Strip are studying, with Riddle's cooperation, the results of the $3 minimum policy on those second shows.

In the early days of the Las

(Continued on page 54)

NO BULLET CAN STOP AMERICAN GOVERNMENT

U.S. Information Agency, International Motion Picture Service, headed by George Stevens Jr., has put together a documentary film on the succession of Lyndon B. Johnson to the presidency of the United States upon the assassination of John F. Kennedy. Film is designed to dramatize to the world the continuity of American government, and let foreign audiences be assured of this, while also apprising the public abroad of Johnson's qualifications.

Film is called "The President," and was written and directed by Bruce Herchensohn, with narration by Gregory Peck. English-language

(Continued on page 54)

RENTAL SPACE BIG NECESSITY

By VINCENT CANBY

Filming activity at the larger New York area studios has increased approximately 300% over the last several years, according to educated estimates of several of the studio managers, and the outlook is good for the upbeat activity to hold on.

While production of feature films continues to occupy the East Coast stages on a fairly "irregular" basis, it's the almost constant production of tv pilots and series which has removed the slack in N.Y. production which followed the "decentralization" of tv commercial production to other points around the country.

Because of the fairly high level of activity enjoyed during the last year—and in prospect for 1964, most studio people agree that the oft-touted drive to make New York a feature film production centre can never be realized until there is more—and—bigger—studio rental space available. This is one reason why realtor Alan Haymes' plans for the construction of a $2,000,000 studio complex on Manhattan's West Side is anticipated with a certain amount of optimism.

One of the sharpest unbeats in

(Continued on page 54)

AFM-Disk Biz Ink New 5-Year Pact

An agreement on a new five-year contract between the record industry and the American Federation of Musicians was wrapped up over the weekend.

The pact will give the musicians for the first time direct participation in the sale of records. Contributions will continue to the Music Performance Trust Fund, which provides free music for worthy causes, but the musicians who make the recordings will receive significant individual benefits.

Other firsts noted by Herman Kenin, AFM president, include premium payments for Sundays, holidays, and after-midnight sessions; for doubling, for tracking, for dubbing and for sweetening (subsequent re-recording procedures).

The new pact also provides for mandatory rest periods, for music contractors, for cartage costs, and for penalty payments in event of tardy reimbursements.

Musicians of major symphony orchestras responsible for most of the serious music recordings, benefit by substantially the same wage and working conditions gains applying to the larger category of so-called commercial recording musicians.

In addition to participating in

(Continued on page 54)

Trying to Get Set on $100-Mil. Worth Of TV Comedy No Laughin' Matter

Ted Willis a Peer

London, Dec. 30.

Ted Willis, playwright and author of many screenplays and television series, notably "Dixon of Dock Green," which has run for many seasons on BBC-TV, has been made a life peer. He will be taking his seat in the House of Lords in the New Year.

Among his best known screenplays are "Woman in a Dressing Gown," "No Trees In the Street," and "The Blue Lamp."

Olsen & Johnson Library Intended As a Memorial

Eileen O'Dare, widow of Ole Olsen (& Chic Johnson), while vacationing with Bill Lears (he's the plane mfr.) in Miami, took inventory of her late comedian-husband's library of theatre history and humor. Mrs. Lear is Olsen's daughter.

Eventually, after the family savors it for a while, as seems to be a current intention, Miss O'Dare plans to donate the entire collection of 25,000 volumes as a memorial to Olsen & Johnson, the famed comedy team who were partners for some 40 years. As in life, they are now buried together in Las Vegas.

The 25,000 books on theatre and comedy go back to the 16th

(Continued on page 54)

BANK DATA CHEERS PROSPECTS FOR '64

Minneapolis, Dec. 30.

Buoyed by the latest Minneapolis Federal Reserve Bank report, local film circles are looking forward optimistically to 1964's boxoffice start. The past month's lively grosses for the most part also point to a healthy new year's beginning, it's pointed out.

The Federal Reserve Bank report shows a 17% Twin Cities metropolitan area business gain over the corresponding 1962 month. This is measured by checkbook spending.

Minneapolis banks reported $3,184,499,000 bank debits, up 17% from the corresponding month a year ago—in adjoining Twin City, St. Paul, the gain was 21%. Among other things, bank figures represent the dollar volume of checks written for payments for goods, services and debts.

With [illegible] General Foods, Procter & Gamble and Philip Morris coin already committed to CBS-TV for next season, the bulk of it channelled into comedy segments and adjacency half-hours, network prexy Jim Aubrey and his top program aide, Mike Dann, have their work cut out for them. For trying to keep all three clients happy in formulating the '64-'65 schedule and at the same time deliver the same impressive Top 15 Nielsens that presently prevails will take a bit of doing.

For example: Should CBS move "Beverly Hillbillies" out of its top-rated Wednesday at 9 position and try to shore up its Sunday night 9 to 10 (for years a trouble spot at CBS) by shifting the cornpone stanza to the 9 o'clock Sabbath berth, thus risking the "Bonanza" competition? Yet that's definitely in the scheme of tentative thinking. Or, if the new Allen Funt show which has just gone into the Wednesday 8:30 niche as replacement for Glynis Johns, fail to make the grade, would it be smart to move "Beverly Hillbillies" and Dick Van Dyke up a half-hour, with a new half-hour comedy show (possibly that Andy Griffith spin-

(Continued on page 54)

Yes, Virginia, There Are No B-Girls—It Says Here Via AGVA Branch Mgrs.

Most branch managers of the American Guild of Variety Artists have concluded there are no such things as B-girls—in their jurisdiction anyway. One branch manager, Sam London of Cleveland, doesn't even know what a B-girl is, not even after the copious publicity recently given the craft by the Senate Subcommittee on Permanent Investigations headed by Sen. John McClellan (D.-Ark.).

The responses were put together in a mimeograph by chairman Johnny Woods of the Interim Committee now governing AGVA following instructions by the committee to survey the B-girl spots and activities in their territories as a prelude to casting them out of the union.

Now that all the replies are in, Woods as well as the other members of the Interim Committee (comprising Ann O'Connor, Russell Swann, Dick Jones and Ernie Fast), are wondering whether Sen. McClellan and his staff queried the right people.

For example, the committee found that Baltimore was loaded with the girls who make a career out of hustling customers for drinks. The AGVA demand also queried the branch managers on dressingroom conditions. However, Jerry Green, branch head in Baltimore, told the Interim Committee

(Continued on page 54)

European Reaction to U.S. Films: U. S. Labor, Gals, Culture, Comforts Fine But Crime, Kids, Race Bias Ugly

Washington, Dec. 30.

Western Europeans have gained a "generally favorable" impression of the U.S. from viewing Yank films, the U.S. Information Agency reported. Lifting the classified lid from its survey of U.S. pictures, USIA reported the total impact of American films is on the wane, as viewing has declined as a European pastime.

On the plus side, Europeans garnered a good impression of the American standard of living, level of culture, and of U.S. women and workingmen.

However, Hollywood's presentations of crime, adolescents and U.S. treatment of Negroes left a bad taste with Europeans.

The check taken in Britain, France, West Germany and Italy revealed considerable disagreement on film portrayals of specific aspects of U.S. life. A majority of Italians and West Germans felt films gave a creditable view of America while the British and French thought Hollywood gave a distorted picture.

Germans averred they received a more accurate impression of this country from television programs. Contiarily, Italians favored film presentations. A stand-off was reported on British and French comparisons of the two media.

Among those criticizing the al-

(Continued on page 54)

Only 6 Years To Go

Frankfurt, Dec. 30.

In West Germany, where films are strictly regulated as to the age group which can view them, "Cleopatra," now in its sixth week, is for the "over 12 years olds only."

VARIETY's Hazel Guild's six-year-old, Stefani Stroth, has been so touched by the busty queen-size cutout in front of the theatre and all the talk about this sensational film that she said sadly, "Just think—in only six years I'll be able to see 'Cleopatra'."

Authors Lose Court Plea; Say Bejart No Gentleman To 'The Merry Widow'

Brussells, Dec. 30.

Society of Authors took the National Opera House to court in an attempt to stop the current production of "The Merry Widow," a staging by Maurice Bejart which has stirred a lot of local debate. Opera Management defends the production on the grounds that the music by Lehar has not been altered or changed in any way, nor has the book been altered, except that it has undergone some cuts. Only the manner of staging is "radical," says theatre's director, Maurice Huismanns. This, he claims, is not in the province of the authors' society.

Court ruled in favor of the theatre management, turning down the argument of the scribblers' association that "deforming" a work, in whatever manner, is in its province. Society says it will take the matter to a higher court, insisting that there is an important "principle" involved.

YANK SINGERS RULING OPERA — IF IN EUROPE

Zurich, Dec. 30.

Where there's European opera, there's American talent. This formula seems more and more to become common practice in European opera houses, as witnessed once again by a series of "gala" performances organized this season by the Zurich Opera, Stadttheatre, in commemoration of Giuseppe Verdi's 150th birthday. Guest singers inked for these shows, with hiked ducats, are predominantly Americans and, what more, they're potent boxoffice draws.

For example, two performances of "Aida" with James McCracken as Radames, were immediate sellouts and enthusiastically received. In the same opera, colored soprano Martina Arroyo sang the title role, with Greek-American baritone John Modenos as Amonasro. In the part of Amneris, U.S. mezzo Annamaria Bessel, currently under Zurich contract (same as Modenos), is alternating with Cora Canne Meijer, from Holland.

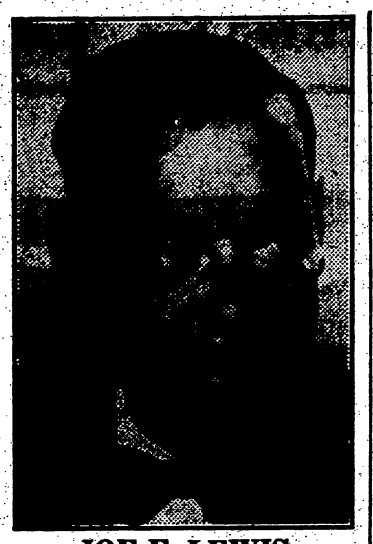
In other performances of "Aida" this season, Gloria Davy sang the lead (with Italy's Aldo Protti as Amonasro) and Eugene Tobin, an-

(Continued on page 40)

2 Coast Tout Masters Merge Into Nat'l Org

Major toutery merger of Cleary-Strauss-Irwin & Goodman with McFadden & Eddy, both dominantly based in Hollywood, but with Frank Goodman as Gotham veepee, is a new largescale p.r. setup. Both organizations frequently competed for the same clients hence the decision to form McFadden, Strauss, Eddy, Irwin & Goodman, as will be the new corporate billing.

Chip Cleary, original president of one component, resigned in 1959 and retired to another business. Frank McFadden, John Strauss, James Eddy and Ben Irwin are the other principals besides Goodman.



JOE E. LEWIS

Beloved raconteur of the bistros, says:

"It took me decades to 'Climb the Highest Mountain' but this young PAUL ANKA has scaled the heights, all over the world, in a few years.

"Well, that's youth, coupled with diverse talents and an ingratiating personality.

"Personally, I love PAUL ANKA."

Taormina, in Sicily, Would Like a Cut of The Action If Casino Opens

Taormina, Sicily, Dec. 30.

"Thou shalt not pay the neighbor's taxes"—this is the text that the Mayor of Taormina would like to find, if not in the Bible, at least in some law code, or other reputable source, carrying moral weight.

The new gambling house at Taormina, whose legal life still hangs in the balance pending a decision of the Court of Appeals of Aquila, has run into further trouble. This time with the city fathers of Taormina itself who are asking for a 25% cut on the action. The owner of the casino answers "no," pointing out he is already obliged by court order to put aside 50% of all earnings toward what may eventually be the cut of the Italian State and the Sicilian Regional Government plus $100,000 towards the erection of the building.

Burghers having no legal right to sponge on the Casino, have fallen back on public opinion, inciting the Taorminesi against the gambling house. To counteract this move, Signor Guarnaschelli, the owner, has come up with a

(Continued on page 52)

Rome Likely to Pass Up Italo Prod. of 'Deputy'

Rome, Dec. 30.

"The Deputy," the controversial Rolf Hochhut play, may no longer be staged in Rome, according to a local report. Play was to have been second of season by "I Nuovi Giovani," a rep company made up of Ilaria Occhini, Gian Maria Volonte, Corrado Pani and Carla Gravina, currently doing a Goldoni season at the Valle Theatre.

Presumably for censorship reasons of other "difficulties" such as those encountered in play's recent Paris staging, company appears to have switched to Aldre Gide's "Caves of the Vatican" as a replacement.

COLUMBUS LAURELS FOUR

Remembers Elsie Janis, Thurston, Baxter, Thurber

Columbus, O., Dec. 30.

Show business personalities, all deceased, are among Columbus natives honored by inclusion in the new Columbus Hall of Fame in City Hall here. The four are vaude singer Elsie Janis, "Sweetheart of the AEF" in World War I; Howard Thurston, magician; Warner Baxter, film star and James Thurber, writer, playwright and cartoonist. Photos have been placed in the City Hall lobby. The idea originated with Mayor W. Ralston Westlake.

Other Columbus natives honored include Gen. Curtis E. LeMay; Hank Gowdy, Mary Catherine Campbell (twice chosen Miss America), Jack Nicklaus, Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, George Bellows and Howard (Hopalong) Cassidy.

Saints Falter But Not Art Buchwald

Art Buchwald was the hit of his own party and belied Circus Saints & Sinners prexy Harry Hershfield's ad lib that the N.Y. Herald Tribune syndicated columnist "was shaking like a leaf." Buchwald's thankyou speech was as witty as his writings. What was lacking, in this shindig particularly, was the brilliance which the "fall guy" should have inspired. Somehow, perhaps because Friday (27) was postChristmas and everybody had bottle fatigue, or something, the pacing didn't have the spirit to match the alleged Gallic leers that were keyed to Buchwald's erstwhile Parisian base. As he said, "I thought I'd get a column out of this" but expressed disappointment.

None the less the turnout was distinguished and publisher Jock Whitney was almost costarred with the officially honored guest via constant references to him.

Columnists were called "the third oldest profession"—ad agency men rated the deuce spot.

It would appear that the Saints could take stock of its scripting and presentation to insure zing and pace and, withal, the appeal commensurate with the occasion and the turnout. Prexy Hershfield is usually surefire with the newest stories, invariably ribald, but whether it's the shortcomings of the 44th St. Stock Co. (Lambs layoffs) in the sketches, or the pro acts booked (perhaps at "show," or even no dough prices), or a little of both, the Circus Saints sin chiefly on material. There's too much talent on both sides of the podium not to correct this easily. The CS&S has been a Gotham institution and the monthly shindigs at the Waldorf should not risk shortchanging themselves.

Abel.

Ingmar Bergman's 'The Silence' Art Or Pornography?-An Israeli Problem

Tel Aviv, Dec. 30.

Israel's board of censorship decided to ban public showing of Ingmar Bergman's "The Silence", unless the distributor agrees to cut three scenes in it. This decision has raised a bitter controversy, whether this latest Bergman film is art or pornography and whether or not anybody has the right to meddle with the artist's work.

Being one of the first foreign countries to buy the film, Israel can't even look for precedent in any other country. In his native Sweden this picture had raised strong public denunciation, yet the local censor didn't intervene, feeling that "cutting scenes of sexual intercourse and intimate relations beteween the sexes would tend to encourage, regarding such relations, as obscene and 'dirty', a view we do not hold".

Israel's censors, meeting in plenary session, decided that but for Ingmar Bergman's name, this film should have been completely banned. His artistic fame com-

(Continued on page 52)

Negro 'Man of Year'

First Negro ever to be so designated by Time since its establishment in 1927, Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. is that publication's "Man Of The Year" for 1963.

Mag speaks of 1963 as the time of the black citizens' disappointment, disillusionment and discontent.

Piqued L'ville Mayor Padlocks Press Room, Also Shuts Out AM&TV

Louisville, Dec. 30.

Louisville's Mayor William O. Cowger, at various times at odds with the local press, last week ordered that the reporters' room at City Hall be closed. Cowger announced his decision in a statement handed to reporters by his assistant, to the effect that he saw no reason to allow the news media any special privileges at City Hall that would not be extended to other private, business, or political enterprises.

The reporters' room is one in the Mayor's suite in City Hall, and has been used by press, radio and tv reporters as a courtesy during previous administrations. Reporters have had use of telephones, keep files, and prepare Louisville Times, Courier-Journal, WAVE radio and tv, WKLO radio, and WHAS radio and tv. WLKY-TV, Channel 32, also keeps a desk there and other radio stations use stories. Users included reps of the

(Continued on page 41)

OZONER LIVE TALENT: CAR-CRASHING FETTERS

San Antonio, Dec. 30.

Crash Fetters, former Hollywood stunt man appeared in person at the Lackland Drive-In Theatre in conjunction with the showing of "Thunder Road" (UA). Fetters drove for Robert Mitchum in the film.

Fetters in his exhibition on the ozoner will crash two cars and do a slide for life at 10:15 p.m. on Friday and Saturday showings.

1/1

VARIETY

Subscription Order Form

Enclosed find check for $.....

Please send VARIETY for ☐ One Year ☐ Two Years ☐ Three Years

To .....
(Please Print Name)

Street .....

City..... ..... Zone.... State.....

Regular Subscription Rates

One Year—$15.00 Two Years—$28.00

Three Years—$39.00

Canada and Foreign—$1 Additional Per Year

VARIETY Inc.

154 West 46th Street New York, N. Y. 10036

VARIETY

Trade Mark Registered

FOUNDED 1905 by SIME SILVERMAN; Published Weekly by VARIETY, INC.

Syd Silverman, President

154 West 46th St., New York, N. Y. 10036 JUdson 2-2700

Hollywood, Calif. 90028
6404 Sunset Boulevard, HOllywood 9-1141

Washington, D. C. 20004
784 National Press Building, STerling 3-5445

Chicago, Ill. 60611
400 No. Michigan Ave., DElaware 7-4984

London, S.W.1
49 St. James's Street, Piccadilly, HYde Park 4561-2-3

SUBSCRIPTION Annual, $15; Foreign, $16; Single Copies, 35 Cents

ABEL GREEN, Editor

Volume 233 120 Number 6

HAPPY NEW YEAR

INDEX

Bills	44	New Acts	44
Casting	50	Night Club Reviews	42
Chatter	53	Obituaries	55
Film Reviews	6	Pictures	3
House Reviews	44	Radio	20
Inside Pictures	14	Radio Reviews	34
Inside Radio-TV	34	Record Reviews	36
International	18	Television	20
Legitimate	45	TV Film	24
Literati	52	Television Reviews	26
Music	35	Vaudeville	39

DAILY VARIETY
(Published in Hollywood by Daily Variety, Ltd.)
$20 a year. $25 Foreign.

RICH LI'L LANDS EYE CINEMA

20th-Fox Art Subsid Cooks for 1964; First on Bill of Fare: 'Good Soup'

First 1964 release of 20th-Fox's arty affiliate, International Classics, will be the recently completed French import, "The Good Soup," tentatively skedded to get prestige release this side in April. Pic, which presents Annie Giradoux, Marie Bell and a number of top French male players, will actually be the second IC release (the first being the Brigitte Bardot exploitationer, "Please Not Now" which was released last year) but the first one of real prestige possibilities.

Expected to follow "Good Soup" into release on the IC sked is the made-in-Hong Kong color spec, "The Empress Wu," which should be of historical impact as the first Chinese film to get general release in the U.S. outside the Chinese language houses. It's hoped that the pic, produced by Run Run Shaw, will stir the same critical interest which greeted the first Japanese costumers this side. Both "Soup" and "Wu" will play initial dates in subtitled versions.

Earl Hollander, who succeed Bill Shelton as IC head early this year, will supervise the launchings of these two pix as well as the five or six other pix on the affiliate's sked.

Canadian Critic
GERALD PRATLEY
who has covered the show business scene has writen an incisive treatise
Word Assassins
one of the many Editorial Features in the soon-due
* * *
58th Anniversary Number of
VARIETY
Plus other statistical and data-filled charts and articles

Norway Produced 5 Films in 1963

By PAL BANG-HANSEN

Oslo, Dec. 30.

Norway's film year is completed with a fifth feature production, "Lovers" adapted from the novel of Terje Stigen. Of the five productions perhaps one may garner some small rental response from other countries.

The season's first Norwegian pic to find release was "Backicks," directed by Bjorn Breigutu, a folksy comedy of indifferent quality, which was followed by Nils Reinhardt Christensen's second pic featuring the moppet-hero, Stompa. The most interesting local production to date has been young Rolf Clemens' romantic dwrama, "Episode," shot in 14 days on a budget of $20,000.

While it is not entirely successful, being derivitive of the work of Alain Resnais of France (where Clemens studied film-making), the picture gives evidence of real directorial skill. It also shows that professional films of quality can be made here for very little money.

Undoubtedly the best pic of the crop is Arne Skouens' "About Tilla," a sort of Norwegian version of "David and Lisa," though there's no evidence that Skouens had seen "D & L" before he made his film. The picture, dedicated to pioneer Norwegian psychiatrist Nic. Waal, tells of the treatment of a young girl who has closed herself off from the world as a result of traumatic experience in her early life. Film is honest, unsentimental and offers no easy solutions to a complex problem.

"Lovers," produced by local show biz tycoon Egil Monn-Iverson, is a lugubriously faithful screen version of the Stigen novel. Film, which was directed by Nils R. Muller, was photographed in color and the most expensive Norwegian film of the year. Though its star, Ingrid Vardund make a beautiful semi-nude heroine, film isn't likely to wind up with the profits which were originally anticipated.

UNCLE SAM'S 'BOOKING'

Bridgeport, Dec. 30.

Robert Potenziani, brought in from New Haven College to become Bridgeport manager of Loew-Poli houses, has already had to give up his portfolio to serve Uncle Sam in the Army.

Drafted manager has been replaced with Frances Connors, who had been moved from Bridgeport to Waterbury when Potenziani came in.

'Darling' Shows Changed Holiday Playoff Pattern

Dramatically demonstrating the extent to which domestic release patterns are changing is the current example of 20th-Fox's Christmas pic. "Move Over, Darling."

The big-budget Doris Day starrer, which in years past might have played only one Broadway house in New York, one in Chicago's Loop and a handful of day-daters in Los Angeles, is currently playing no less than 52 firstruns in those three keys: 17 in Gotham, eight in Chicago (all outside the Loop), and 27 in L.A.

At the weekend, one 20th exec predicted that first week's theatrical gross in the N.Y.-Chi-L.A. swing would hit close to $1,000,000, which is a lotta coin to take out of three cities in one firstrun week. In Chicago alone, pic received $250,000 as cash advances from the eight takers.

See 'Portrait of Murder' Paying Off by February

London, Dec. 30.

Only one previously unproduced play sponsored by American interests in London's West End has survived during the current legit season. The sole stayer is "Portrait of Murder," which Ben Kamsler is presenting in association with Bob Swash.

Among the failures in this category were "Pocahontas," the musical which ran for 12 performances at the Lyric, "Shout for Life," which folded after four performances at the Vaudeville, plus several others which collapsed on the road and never reached the West End.

Having opened Oct. 24 at the Savoy Theatre, "Portrait" transferred yesterday (Mon.) to the Vaudeville, with a six weeks' guarantee by the management. On its present performance it should pay off around next February.

The production, capitalized at $28,000, was backed exclusively by U.S. investors, and producer Ben Kamsler is partnered in the venture by George Shdanoff, who staged it. The weekly operating nut is in the region of $5,600, and during its run at the Savoy was averaging a weekly profit of around $1,400. Its only unprofitable weeks were on its out-of-town tryout, where it dropped over $2,200 in three weeks.

The play, by Robert Bloomfield, stars Phyllis Calvert, George Baker and Renee Asherson, with Jack Gwillim, Tenniel Evans and Barbara Hicks in featured roles.

Yul Brynner, reportedly the biggest investor in the West End production of "Portrait of Murder," with a stake of 65%, planed from Paris to Hollywood at the weekend to negotiate a film production deal. It is understood he is to confer with Metro executives this week.

PIX AS KEY TO O'SEAS CURRENCY

There are several rich little countries around the world which are growing increasingly interested in film production. This is so because, although they are rich in their own currency, they are short on outside money and motion pictures are one of the ways to get such dough coming in.

Two such countries are Southern Rhodesia and South Africa. Both are currently being developed by outside film interests which are establishing production units there. This per F. Herrick-Herrick, globetrotting filmmaker who is presently involved in projects in both countries.

Actually, Herrick has been working in S. Africa for a while now, in association with S. A. Films. He will make a film called "Ringo" with the outfit in April and has some feature and tv film plans also under consideration. But his newest love is Southern Rhodesia where Herrick has formed a partnership with some others called Impala Films, headquartering in Salisbury, which is only 50 air minutes from Johannesburg and S. A. Films. Latter, incidentally, is backed by Rand Mines, a wealthy diamond mining operation in S. Africa.

The British government maintained a film unit in S. Rhodesia which made pix for local consumption. Despite its purpose it is well-equipped, Herrick reports, with color and b&w labs, technicians and such. Impala is absorbing about 75% of this operation after the British pull out and home rule comes in shortly. In connection with existing lab facilities, Impala will build sound stages. Also, a partner in the project, an ex-Milwaukeean named Lawrence Hautz who owns a large motor court there, will remodel his place into dressing rooms, sleep over facilities and cutting rooms.

Impala has purchased a book called "The White Men Sang," about the futile attempt of a group of soldiers to fend off a native attack, and this will be made there this summer. Also, there are plans to make a tv series in the Salisbury location. The new stages are expected to be ready within the next few months and Herrick is now in Hollywood buying equipment for the project. The Salisbury studio will also be a rental arrangement, available to outside producers who want to work in the vicinity.

Herrick feels that the area has many advantages for filmmaking. For one thing, it is scenically perfect for the appropriate project or anything for that matter which needs space and personnel. Laborers are available for 75c to $1 a day and dress extras can be gotten for $6 a day, while native extras are there for $1 per diem. Also, there is the availability of considerable livestock and other items at very low rates. Additionally, there are experienced cameramen, soundmen and others, he says, from both the Rhodesian and S. A. film units (the latter, which is government-sponsored, containing a very large staff).

Round trip fare per person from Gotham to Johannesburg is $1,200, Herrick reports, but this can be circumvented by flying large groups by charter, which represents considerable saving. He says that there have been several inquiries made regarding film work there and he feels that things will soon begin to develop on a fair scale.

Seidelman Exits AIP

Samuel L. Seidelman, who has been veep in charge of foreign distribution for American International Pictures for the last two years, is ankling the company as soon as a replacement can be found.

No explanation for Seidelman's departure is given. A replacement is expected to be named shortly.

Box Takeover of British Lion As Oneupsmanship for Indies

London, Dec 30.

In a move that could have significant effects on the entire film industry in this country, the British Lion Film Corp., which now is 100% Government-owned, likely will be taken over within the next three weeks by Sydney Box, 56-year-old producer, as head of a group of independents. The projected purchase price is $4,200,000.

British Lion had been regarded as the only indie film company here and as such was a haven for indie producers. The Government, via National Film Finance Corp., acquired 100% ownership just two weeks ago, buying the 50% which had been held by private interests. Government previously had held the other 50%.

The complete government ownership had been criticized in some film industry circles and the House of Commons. Fear was expressed that British Lion eventually would come under the control of either the Rank Organization or Associated British Film Corp., these being the only two major production, distribution and exhibition organizations in Britain. If this were to occur, the indie producers would be left stranded and an obvious extra product supply would be wiped out.

Thus very much welcome is the development which sees the Box syndicate on the verge of acquiring British Lion.

Incidentally, Columbia Pictures, of the U.S., has an indirect interest in British Lion. Col and B-L jointly own a company called BLC Ltd., which distributes the product of Col and B-L. Victor Hoare heads BLC.

Religious Writer
ROLAND GAMMON
who lectures on and has written books about religion and personalities, besides being V.P. of a P.R. outfit, has written about Religion In Show Biz another informative feature in the soon-due
* * *
58th Anniversary Number
of
VARIETY
Plus other statistical and data-filled charts and articles

156 Made in '63; Hollywood Films Up From 143 ('62)

Hollywood's feature production pace for 1963 rose by 13 films over last year's filming tempo, according to scoreboard figures maintained in conjunction with weekly production charts. Tally for current year is 156, as compared with 143 pictures started in 1962, representing roughly an 8% increase.

Metro, with 27, led the field in films started, supplanting last year's leader, United Artists, which dipped from 28 features in 1962 to 15 this year, sharpest decrease in town. Only other studio to show a decline was Universal, which fell from 14 to 11. Most significant rise was racked up by 20th-Fox with 11 features started this year, a gain of seven over last year's slim figure that reflected studio production shutdown.

Others to register increases were Allied Artists, with seven compared to last year's two; American International, nine compared to four; Columbia Pictures, 19 compared to 16; and Disney, six as opposed to four. Paramount and Warner Bros. held steady with 12 and 14 features, respectively, exact same totals as a year ago. Twenty-four indie productions kicked off this year, a rise of four over the 20 launched a year ago.

MCA's 12-Camera Crew, Indianapolis, May 30

MCA is going all out for its coverage of the Indianapolis 500-Mile Speedway Race, to be covered on closed-circuit tv May 30. MCA-TV will assemble 12 cameras, 30 microphones and nine announcers to handle the event and will also, in cooperation with the Speedway, build a large, permanent studio on the grounds to facilitate the coverage.

Preparations are being made to enable viewers to see every foot of the two-and-a-half mile track, as well as what goes on in the pits. A three-month survey has been completed by Jay Michaels, MCA-TV sports supervisor, who has made eight trips to Indianapolis and has been huddling with network engineers and closed circuit tv pros. The special studio will be the largest ever constructed for the coverage of a single sports event.

Studio will comprise all the necessary facilities for full color-casting of the race in subsequent years, although the first showing will be in black and white. Equipment will be installed beginning April 1 and limited tape coverage will begin May 1 with full operation expected to be underway by May 23.

No allocations of franchises have yet been made for the theatre showing of the event, pending finalization of the just-completed survey. Interest is reported high.

Latins Well Dated, Goltz to Europe

Embassy Pictures is now 100% sold out in South America with its current product, according to exec v.p. Leonard Lightstone. All of the company's pictures, up to the three Carlo Ponti-Joseph E. Levine coproductions which recently opened in Europe, have been sold in the available latin marts, the exec says.

Accordingly, Embassy is pulling its South American sales supervisor Joseph C. Goltz from his Mexico City headquarters for a couple of months during which time he will tour European markets helping to clean up sales business there. Goltz, after a week of confabs with Lightstone in New York, has offed to Europe.

The Mexico City office will not be shuttered during Goltz's absence, however, being manned by Embassy staffers while he's away. After the European sales junket is completed, he will return to Mexico City and start the sales drives going on Embassy's next batch of features, continuing to headquarter there.

The SRO South American situation is the culmination of a concerted effort by Embassy to push its product in that area. Goltz was only appointed several months ago to head S.A. operations for the distrib. Embassy has been pushing strongly in several overseas areas and Lightstone has spent many flying hours during the year now ending widening the distrib's foreign outlet pattern.

SPENCER TRACY ILL

Warners last week encountered a production setback as Spencer Tracy was taken ill and forced to leave the cast of "Cheyenne Autumn," John Ford-Bernard Smith entry, which started rolling last September. Edward G. Robinson immediately was named as the replacement for Tracy.

Film is being lensed in Super Panavision. Other players include James Stewart, Richard Widmark, Carroll Baker, Karl Malden and Sal Mineo.

Only Sure Thing About 'Showcasing': Everybody's Getting Into the Action

United Artists may be involved in RKO Theatres' "showcase" thinking in New York. Warner Bros. and Universal are already known to be talking with RKO about the possibility of setting up some kind of "showcase" plan. UA, thinker-througher and innovator in the "premiere showcase" multiple first-run scheme of New York, looks like RKO's colleague to be.

UA's "premiere showcase" plan to date has utilized indie situations primarily and some of the smaller chains on Long Island. When it first came up with the "showcase" scheme a year and a half ago distributor offered the notion to RKO and Loew's. Neither was then interested. But, as time has passed, the revolution has gained momentum. RKO and Loew's are now mulling "showcase" plans of their own. Who isn't?

Warners and Universal are regular RKO traders, along with Allied Artists and sometimes Buena Vista. The circuit's plans would naturally effect these distribs but UA's involvement would be a new wrinkle for the chain. Comment made by a UA exec last week indicated that something is in the wind, stating that he "had a feeling that something may eventually come off with RKO." Just what that "something" might be is guesswork.

UA has been noting with peculiar-to-a-pioneer interest all the various reports and developments anent "showcase" and its potential imitations. RKO's notion is believed a plan to pull certain houses in each borough for "showcase" on multiple firstrun. The rest of the chain would then pick up the attraction after "showcasing," giving the chain considerable playing time with each "showcase" picture. Other theatres would also participate in the plan, it is figured, with RKO as the main force.

Besides Warners and Universal expressed interest in "showcase" comes from Paramount and Metro.

One of UA's "showcase" customers from the start has been the Century circuit which operates laregly on Long Island. There has been some trade talk of a break in this relationship but, as was noted by an exec at UA, this can't really be told until UA puts its next pic up for bids which won't be for another couple of weeks. There is no indication, the UA spokesman said, as to whether Century will balk or not. The circuit is presently in negotiation with International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees projectionists Local 306 which has been seeking, and getting in most cases, increased scales for "showcase" runs and this may be a factor.

UA has also been trying the "showcase" idea out in other cities besides New York and indications are that other distribs, if they form a "showcase" plan in Gotham, may also do so in other cities. More than one exec has opined that the pattern has more than local significance. RKO, being a national chain, could also play a role in this broader idea. There is still a lot to be crystalized, however.

20th-Fox, which has been using U.A's "showcase" idea in Gotham, has been using a multiple firstrun plan currently for "Move Over, Darling" in a few cities and reports hefty gross results.

L.A. to N.Y.

Bern Bassey
Shinley Booth
Walter Brooke
Peter Falk
Stathis Giallelis
Sherman Grinberg
Phillipe Halsman
George Pal
Donald Woods
James Young

U.S. to Europe

Clancy Bros.
Paul Kohner
Susan Kohner
Tommy Makem
Anthony Mann
J. Lee Thompson
Lupita Tovar

The Finest Address In London

May Fair Hotel

BERKELEY SQUARE, LONDON W.1
Res.. Cable Collect—Mayfairtel, London or Your Travel Agent

UNIVERSAL BUILDING TO STAGGER REALITY

Universal has been authorizing hefty tabs for set construction lately. Latest in the building boom at the studio is an $80,000 layout covering virtually the entire space of one of the lot's largest sound stages, constructed for "Send Me No Flowers."

U has been no slouch in the past for building mamouth sets, having reconstructed part of Gotham's East Side Highway for "The Thrill of It All" and duplicating a section of Paris' Montmartre district for "Wild and Wonderful." This latest bit of construction is the work of art directors Alexander Golitzen and Robert Clatworthy. Two full homes have been built, one belonging to Rock Hudson and Doris Day in the film and the other belonging to Tony Randall.

The Hudson-Day residence consists of seven rooms, a portion of the exterior, a patio and a landscaped back yard. Randall's has five rooms, a portion of the exterior and a patio. Both abodes are completely functional, including operational sinks, electric stoves and refrigerators in the kitchen. Both also have stairways leading to the upper floors but the upstairs rooms are on yet another stage.

The irony of the mammouth construction is that "Send Me No Flowers" originated on Broadway where such building isn't possible, either from a space or economic point of view. For the picture, however, producer Harry Keller and director Norman Jewison figure it will more than save its cost through eliminating lost shooting time that is possible because of uncertain weather at this time of year if the exteriors were shot out of doors.

Palace at Winnipeg Now First Run Site

Winnipeg, Dec. 30.

Palace Theatre, one of 10 remaining neighborhood houses in the city is going on a firstrun basis, for the second time in recent years.

The 820-seat north-end house is now on a day-and-date basis with the downtown Lyceum. Both houses are operated by locally-based Western Theatres, although the 1,119-seat Lyceum is owned by Famous Players-Canadian, subsid of Paramount Pictures.

Lyceum is a firstrun double bill action house. Policy of the downtown house is being adopted by the Palace.

Previous attempt at firstrun product by the Palace was in 1954, when the introduction of television caused the closing of many of the city's neighborhood houses.

Theatre managed to weather the initial attendance fall-off and eventually dropped the firstrun policy to operate on a subrun basis. Most recent change was adopted in an attempt to increase attendance, but the initial two weeks of operation under the new terms has shown little difference.

Sam Chernoff's New One

St. Louis, Dec. 30.

Sam Chernoff, operator of the Paris Art Theatre, opened another one on Christmas Day, the Beverly Art, following extensive remodeling, big foyer and art gallery and installation of a aluminized screen.

Beverly seats 900 and will show firstrun films plus encores of international picture hits of yesteryear. Adjoining the theatre are parking facilities for 200 cars.

Europe to U.S.

Mrs. Barney Balaban
Alain Delon
Ann Firbank
Eddy Gilmore
Michael Gough
David Lewis
Harold Mirisch
John Nettleton
Brian Priestman
Sugar Ray Robinson
Eric Schepard
Eli Wallach
John Warner
Arnold Wesker

N.Y. to L.A.

William Dieterle
Donald Klauber

Grainger Sues MGM

Los Angeles, Dec. 30.

Claiming he had not been paid for his services as producer of a picture tentatively tabbed "Navy Story," James Edmund Grainger demands $88,875 from MGM Inc., in a suit filed in Superior Court. Grainger claims he was hired by studio for this assignment and between period of Jan. 2 and Oct. 4, 1963 he had performed service, pact calling for $2,250 weekly.

Additionally, producer asks $9,000 as a penalty under the State Labor Code for "willful failure" to pay him his salary.

Patricia Neal & 'Jones' 2d Firsts; N.Y. Critic Picks

United Artists' British-made "Tom Jones" which won the National Board of Review first, swept the top awards of the New York Film Critics for 1963. Critics, voting Monday (30), named it best picture of the year; its director, Tony Richardson, best director, and star, Albert Finney, best actor.

Patricia Neal, another National Board winner, was named best actress for her work in Paramount's "Hud," which was also cited by the critics for best screenplay. Federice Fellini's "8½" was voted best foreign film of the year.

In a break with tradition, the critics will present their awards at a small dinner party (Jan. 18) at Sardi's, as opposed to the big cocktailery they usually throw.

It's UA's 'Tom Jones'

In reporting the National Board of Review picks of "best pictures of 1963" in last issue, VARIETY identified "Tom Jones", which rated as the Board's first choice of all, merely as "British".

It is, of course, a United Artists-Lopert release. Moreover it's one of the standout instances of canny deal-making of the present season.

Italo Biz Good Today; 'Yesterday' Due Tomorrow (Feb. 11) in N.Y. Market

Current boxoffice champ in Italy is "Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow," which has been racking up totals since its opening a couple of weeks ago topping such previous hits as "La Dolce Vita," "8-1/2" and the big-in-Italy—if-not-in-U.S. release "The Leopard."

An Embassy Pictures release which will open in the U.S. in New York around Feb. 11, three-tense film is playing to record business in Rome, Milan and Naples. In Rome, it has grossed over $29,-422 in its opening week, in Milan it has topped the $24,792 mark and in Naples it has exceeded the $27,-363 gross total. These figures are one-week totals, missing a couple of days even.

Pic was produced by Carlo Ponti as a coproduction with Embassy prez Joseph E. Levine. It is one of four such coproductions made under a deal set early in 1963. Another film in the foursome, "A Ghost at Noon," is doing sturdy trade in Paris where it has drawn 21,000 paid customers in its first three days under the title "Contempt." Another pic in parlay, "Empty Canvas," has also been playing well abroad.

The fourth feature in the pack is due to start shooting shortly. This is "Casanova," which will star Marcello Mastroianni who's costarred with Sophia Loren in "Yesterday." Brigitte Bardot and Jack Palance topline "Contempt," while Bette Davis, Horscht Buccholtz and Catherine Spaak lead the "Canvas" cast.

Omnibus Repeal of Jim Crow Laws

Atlanta, Dec. 30.

City's "dead letter" segregation laws have been officially swept off law books by Atlanta's Board of Aldermen with passage of a blanket repealing ordinance introduced by Alderman Ed A. Gilliam, chairman of board's Police Committee. Invalidated are "all ordinances which require the separation of persons because of race, color or creed." Ordinance passed unanimously.

Some of the segregation ordinances, such as those affecting motion picture and legitimate stage theatre attendance and city transit passengers, had long since been invalidated by action of federal courts.

Many others, obviously, have not been enforced.

Repealing ordinance was offered, however, in the words of City Atorney Henry Bowden, as an "affirmative action" to remove any doubt about the validity of the laws.

Bowden cited some of the segregation ordinances repealed:

Law which forbade Negro barbers from cutting hair of white women.

Law which said that persons seated in a place of assembly must be separated by race.

Law forbidding amateur baseball players of one race to play within two blocks of players of the other race.

Law requiring barber shops to post signs indicating whether they are serving white or Negro patrons.

Law barring wine or beer establishments from serving white and Negro patrons in same room.

Bowden cited these other repealers:

Law which denied Negroes access to "white" public parks, except that part of Grant Park (not named for Ulysses S.) occupied by Atlanta zoo.

Law prohibiting members of one race to occupy seats in any place of assembly designated for occupancy of the other race. (This was the law which permitted white patrons to attend shows sponsored by Negroes, such as jazz and dance-concerts, where white patrons could buy tickets to "sections reserved for whites.")

Law stating that taxicabs must display signs showing whether they serve white or Negro patrons.

Law requiring segregation of the races on transit buses.

Law requiring separate seating of the races in theatres.

43 YANK ITEMS TO UNSPOOL IN FLORENCE

Some 43 American pix will participate in the Festival dei Popoli in Florence, Italy, Jan. 20-26. Fest, sponsored in part by the Italo Ministry of Education, stresses sociological documentaries.

U.S. filmmakers Richard Leacock and Donn Pennebaker will show seven of their films and take part in a forum on "film of social inquiry for television." Gordon Hitchens, editor of Film Comment and American rep at the fest, also will participate.

Millar & Turman Alone On 'Best Man' Credits; Scratch Mirisch Bros.

"The Best Man" has had a windy road to the screen. Its producer billings have changed several times and it now has ended up a Stuart Millar & Lawrence Turman Production, sans the Mirisches, which is how it stood pro tem.

Originally, United Artists bought the rights to Gore Vidal's Broadway comedy for Frank Capra. Afterwards, William Wyler was going to make it and then the Mirisches entered the project. Eventually Millar & Turman became the producers and now the Mirisches fade out, leaving UA the sole heir to the results.

For a while, the billing had been "the Mirisch Co. presents" and further down the credits it read "produced by Stuart Millar and Lawrence Turman." New billing elevates Millar & Turman and scratches the Mirisch outfit. Project is now editing and is slated for May release.

In terms of numbers, the Mirisches won't miss "Best Man." They currently have "Kings of the Sun" in release and have positively set "Pink Panther," "633 Squadron," "Shot in the Dark," "Satan Bug" and "Dazzling Hour" for release in 1964, "Panther" is to be their Radio City Music Hall debut. Additionally, the indie outfit has a heavy production schedule to contend with. All, natch, are for UA. Of these pix, all are either made or shooting except "Satan" and "Dazzling," both of which are to begin soon.

Squirrel Hill Goes Dude

Pittsburgh, Dec. 30.

Squirrel Hill, Stanley Warner's Pitt arty, has unveiled its new $100,000 remodeling job includes wall to wall screen that can handle all types of films except Cinerama.

Using the new concept of comfort and good viewing for the audience and eschewing garish accountrements, the Hill has put in 800 brand new upholstered seats which will cut their capacity by 32.

Opening film for the new look at the Hill is "Ladies Who Do."

Iffy On 'Genius,' Prem May Go On 'Harm's Way'

Otto Preminger's next film project, the screen version of Patrick Dennis' novel "Genius," may not be made for United Artists as had been planned. There are conflicting concepts. UA spokesman said only last week, "There is no decision on the project."

Differences are believed to centre on Ring Lardner Jr. script, which was completed and brought to UA a couple of weeks ago distrib apparently freed Preminger to take the project elsewhere. However, according to UA, whether the film will be made for it or not is "based on many contingencies."

"Genius" has been moving backwards on Preminger's schedule. Originally, it had been visualized as beginning in January; then it was moved to February and now the latest word is March. It hasn't been cast as yet either. Preminger usually won't begin shooting before all details are set.

"Harm's Way," which was to follow "Genius" on Preminger's schedule, may now precede it. This would be particularly likely if those "contingencies" of UA mention get sticky. "Harm's Way" is for Columbia for whom the producer-director made his present pic, "The Cardinal." The script for the Col picture is believed almost ready, although it was to have been lensed this summer.

KNOXVILLE FILM YEN GETS SOME CHEER

Knoxville, Tenn., Dec. 30.

Four motion picture producers "expressed an interest" in Knoxville as a possible filming site, Mayor John J. Duncan has reported after returning from New York City. Two features have previously been shot here.

Plans are now underway for the construction of a second sound stage and studio at city expense, to be made available on rental.

Embassy Pictures is sending a representative to Knoxville early in January, according to Mayor Duncan. Seven Arts Productions will also send a scout to the area, Mayor Duncan added.

Ely Landau Productions which produced "The Fool Killer" in Knoxville may also repeat with picture of Southern setting.

David Susskind, producer of "All The Way Home" with Knoxville as headquarters said he may make another film soon with Knoxville as the filming site. His picture had its world preem here.

Mayor Duncan reported that he talked with some 30 film producers and visited several studios in the New York area.

CHI 'GAINS ITS LOSS' IN NABES

National Boxoffice Survey

Xmas Week Trade Soars; 'Charade' First, 'World' 2d, 'Sword' 3d, 'Cardinal,' 'Darling' Next

Key cities covered by VARIETY this session are enjoying the usual year-end holiday upbeat, with biz booming in all spots. Many new pix, launched to take advantage of Christmas week (some sessions taking in New Year's Eve) naturally are helping to boost trade.

"Charade" (U) (1st wk) is new boxoffice champ by a wide margin. Present indications are that it will go well above the $550,000 mark just in keys which VARIETY covers. It is establishing new records in at least three keys and is uniformly big to mighty. "It's a Mad World" (UA) (6th wk), is pushing up to second position for highest coin total so far for this pic.

"Sword in Stone" (BV) (1st wk) is finishing third with some 15 playdates. "The Cardinal" (Col) (3d wk) will take fourth position. "Move Over Darling" (20th) (1st wk) is capturing fifth spot and likely will be heard from additionally.

"Four For Texas" (WB) (2d wk) is taking sixth money, playing in some 16 key cities. "Kings of Sun" (UA) (2d wk) will take seventh place. "Cleopatra" (20th) (27th wk) is winding up eighth, feeling the stern competition from so many newcomers.

"The Prize" (MGM) (1st wk) is landing in ninth spot. "How West Was Won" (MGM (53d wk) will be 10th, it too feeling the opposition of so many strong, newcomers.

"Who's Minding the Store" (Par) (2d wk) still take 11th position. "Lord of Flies" (Cont) (7th wk) rounds out the Top 12 grossers.

"Love With Proper Stranger" (Par) is shaping as a potentially big newcomer, being sockeroo both in N. Y. and L. A. "The Victors" (Col) is rated boffola in L. A. and N. Y., to hint great future potential.

"Dr. Newman" (U) is rated smash on initial playdate in L. A. "To Bed or Not To Bed" (Cont), also new, shapes socko in N. Y. and hot in Hub.

"Who's Sleeping in My Bed" (Par) looms as a future bet at the wickets, being boff in N. Y., hep in Hub and great in Chi. "Comedy of Terrors" (AI) is rated big in Detroit on preem date.

"Ladies Who Do" (Cont) is starting out like a winner, being torrid in Hub, neat in Minneapolis, big in St. Louis and Frisco and nice in Pitt. "Conjugal Bed" (Embassy), hep in Denver, is okay in Chi and Hub.

Note: The number of weeks out in release for bigger and longrun pix are designated in such cases.

(Complete Boxoffice Reports on pages 8-9-10).

United Artists' Specialty: Television

Company Setting Up Sub-Department to Plan And Administer TV Plugs

United Artists, has for some time expressed partisanship to television for advertising and publicity. It will presently expand the pub department to include a special tv arm, with a staff of its own.

The idea is to specailize, spend more time and money in the preparation and planting of publicity film footage on tv. United Artists will soon be spending as much, if not more effort in this area as it has in the past on preparing still photo material and related copy for newspapers and magazines

UA has for a while now been exercising more and more concentration on tv in the plugging of its pix and has obtained what have been termed "excellent" results. Most recently, Stanley Kramer's "It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World" and then "McLintock" were given a heavy tv ad-pub push by the company and this has payed off substantially, UA pub execs feel. True, the "Mad" premiere was preceeded by a highpowered national exploitation drive geared to the press, plus a giant junket.

This tv scheme is not merely the increasing of budgets for tv advertising. It will be geared to getting considerably more free tv space via the publicity and news route. This was done with "Mad World" with substantial success around the country and this case was the final confirmation of a longstanding idea within the UA pub brass that tv is being underused in selling pix to the public, while the print media enjoy an exaggerated prominance.

This has been the thinking of UA pub chiefs for some time now as regards advertising. The spread to "free" publicity is an extention of this thinking and will shortly give birth to the new pub arm. Number of new staffers and the man who'll head the branch are still being decided and some word on this should be forthcoming in the near future. Tv has been a pet project of certain pub bosses at UA and this new project will be getting considerable attention as it gets under way.

John L. Fagan, owner of the Bunavista Drive-In at Borger, Tex., suffered a heart attack and was taken to Dallas where he is recovering in hospital.

PRICKETT BACK AT DESK

Columbus, O., Dec. 30.

Ken Prickett, executive secretary of the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, has returned to his desk.

He underwent treatment for emphysema at Will Rogers Hospital.

FIRST RUNS UP AS IF NO TV

By MORY ROTH

Chicago, Dec. 30.

In a 17-year period, the number of Chicago firstrun houses has almost doubled. On the face of it, one could assume that television was the best thing that ever happened to deluxer biz in the Windy City.

Take the last week in December as a measuring mark. There were 10 firstrun houses in Chi when video was in its diapers in 1945 and now there are 17 in operation with immediate prospects for two more. Art Wirtz has asserted that he will reopen the Palace if he can get the roadshow engagement of "My Fair Lady" and Michael Todd Jr. says he expects to find the right film for the relighting of the Cinestage within weeks.

If those figures are not impressive enough, then add the possibility of approximately six of the new and deluxe shopping centre hardtops ringing the city entering into at least a day and date relationship with the mainstemmers in the next year or so. There has been much jockeying between the distributors and the owners of the outlying deluxers in recent months and a general feeling of ferment as regards this situation.

The Paradox

The question which asserts itself in the face of the facts of the fall-off in customers and increase in first-run theatres was articulated by one Film Rower as "So where did we gain all the loss?"

The answer to that query lies in Chicago neighborhoods, where property erosion and television steadily continue to chop away at the number of existing theatres and no new houses are being built. Four nabe houses were axed this year, and it has not been untypical of recent years. The flight of the middle class to the suburbs has left mostly the poor in the neighborhoods despite the stated intention of the City Father to

(Continued on page 14)

Larry Moyer Faces IATSE Accusers; Meanwhile He Talks Like a Producer

Larry Moyer, indie filmmaker who incurred the wrath of the East Coast Motion Picture Council by making a non-union film called "The Moving Finger," will bring his side of the story to the Council at a special meeting Jan. 3.

At that time Moyer will attempt to iron out the differences which have put the Council into a tizzy which has resulted in Moyer's possible expulsion from International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees editors local 771 and action by the City Dept. Investigations. The Council has also requested action by the City Dept. of Commerce, which issues street shooting permits.

Moyer, an editor who made his first film with "Finger," figures that he faces his biggest battle with 771. He has learned that formal charges are being drawn up by the local, according to the Council's recommendations, but he still doesn't know what they will be. So far as he knows he hasn't broken any union bylaws or any other rules and considers the action unprecidented.

Moyer did edit his non-union film, however, and perhaps therein will lie the charges. He has two other projects on his schedule and had planned to edit both of these himself as well. If he is expelled this won't be possible, however, if the films are made according to union scales and regulations as is his plan. One of the pix, called "Hail to the Chief," is three-quarters scripted by Moyer and Charles R. Allen Jr., dealing with Madison Ave.'s merchandising of a U.S. president into office. It will be budgetted at $300,000 with Moyer also producing-directing. He plans to set up a limited partnership to finance it, with shooting to begin this spring.

His other project is a Revolutionary War opus called "1776," which is still a way off. He has no distrib lined up for these or "Moving Finger," for which he won an award at the San Francisco Film Festival. It is being screened for U.S. distribs presently and will open in London at the Academy Theatre in mid-February.

NEW EXEC DIRECTOR

Pastor Fore To Council's Air-Film Commission

Rev. William F. Fore has been named exec director of the National Council of Churches' Broadcasting and Film Commission. In the new post, effective Feb. 1, Fore will have responsibility for religious radio-tv and film production and distribution on behalf of the 31 communions cooperating in the NCC.

Fore, who reps the Methodist Board of Missions, has actively participated in the BFC's program in the past as a member of its film committee and as chairman of its audio-visual committee on missionary education.

Supervision for 'Daffy'; It's for New Horizons Scheme at Universal

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Late January filming start has been set by Pennebaker Inc. heads Marlon Brando Sr. and Walter Seltzer for "Daffy," their "New Horizon" joint venture with Universal. The indie company toppers, who will jointly supervise "Daffy" as exec producers, also have acquired "Arabella," an original screenplay by Stephen Kandel, for filming next summer but have not as yet a distribution deal.

Al Ruddy, who will produce "Daffy" also will function similarly on "Arabella," an adventure-comedy with a southern European setting.

Pennebaker, in association with Robert Mitchum's Talbot Inc., recently completed "Man in the Middle" for 20th-Fox release. Los Angeles premiere of pic produced by Seltzer and starring Mitchum, Frances Nuyen, Barry Sullivan, Trevor Howard and Keenan Wynn will be held late next month.

OUT NEXT WEEK!

The

58th Anniversary Number

Of

VARIETY

East Flirts Still With West Coast: Directors Pact?

All apparantly is not lost as far as the continuation of talks between the Screen Directors International Guild of Gotham and the Directors Guild of America aimed at merging the two units. Although negotiations have been broken off on the West Coast, the SDIG is going to its membership Jan. 25 to discuss the collapse and possibly work up new proposals to get talks going again.

The late January meeting will be held at the Henry Hudson Hotel. During the session a report will be made to the membership about the talks, which had proceeded for nearly five months before breaking down. A digest of the terms for merger will be presented, along with explanation of SDIG's interpretation of the differences which separate the east and west directors groups.

The membership will be polled to check its feeling as to further merger dialogues. The SDIG is represented as interested in amalgamation despite George Sidney, DGA prez, charge that he felt Machiavellian motivation working against it in N. Y. Subsequently, the SDIG expressed its "regret" that the talks had collapsed.

The issues which have dampened things so far are primarily some technical points concerning membership rules and legal representation. But there are many things involved in this merger attempt beyond the mere amalgamation itself. Hollywooders have wanted to get a piece of the lucrative commercial film action, now controlled largely in east.

Pie In The Sky

Allen Baron & Merrill Brody (Dorothy B. Reed) production. Directed and written by Baron. No release set. Stars Lee Grant, Richard Bray. Camera, Donald Malkames; editor, Ralph Rosenblum; 2d unit camera, Brody; music composed, conducted by Robert Mersey; asst. director, Richard Wolf. Reviewed at Lytton Center, Los Angeles, Dec. 23, '63. Running time, 86 MINS.

Suzy ..... Lee Grant
Brill ..... Richard Bray
Carl ..... Michael Higgins
Paco ..... Roberto Marsach
Brill's father ..... Robert Allen
Rose ..... Sylvia Miles
Rick ..... Jaime Charlamagne
Farmer's Wife ..... Ruth Attaway
Farmer ..... Robert Earl Jones
Artificial Inseminator ..... Charles Jordon
Preacher ..... Roscoe Browne
Pickpocket ..... Rick Colitti
Brill's older sister ..... Muriel Franklin
Pitchman ..... Monroe Arnold
Haberdasher ..... Boris Marshalov
Doorman ..... Spencer Davis
Gas station attendant ..... Fred Feldt
Hot-dog vendor ..... Bill DaPrato
Delicatessen man ..... Joseph Leberman
Bartender ..... Milton Luchan
Truckdriver ..... Mel Brown
Brill's brother ..... Danny Dresser
Brill's sisters ..... Debby Bliss, Susie Dresser
Rick's gang ..... Edward Greenberg, Willie Tomlin, Carmelo de la Cruz, Orlando Rosa, John Evans, Johnny Paczynski

With his second attempt at directing and writing, N.Y. filmmaker Allen Baron has created an extremely realistic, sometimes harsh, but heartwarming film of a few important and formative days in the life of a nine-year-old boy. A previous effort, "Blast of Silence," after creating a stir at the 1961 Locarno Film Fest, was picked up by Universal but never got off the ground in the U.S.

A better film is "Pie in the Sky." With the expert handling and advertising by a major distrib, it could realize on gentle appeal. Despite the obvious emphasis on children, this pic is for grownups.

Readily admitting his debt to the European directors, particularly Truffaut, Bergman and De Sica, Baron shot his film in 26 days on a $180,000 budget, of which $80,000 has been deferred pending release. Filmed entirely in N.Y. and farm country outside N.Y., the sporadically engrossing story's greatest flaw is lack of some needed bridging sequences to connect the small hero's adventures. Whether this hit-and-miss narration is due to a limited budget (and insufficient cover shots) or a possible addiction to "new wave" fast cutting, it is a shortcoming and, if still possible, should be remedied.

Brill (Richard Bray) runs away from his farm home when his father (Robert Allen) speaks harshly to him after he has accidentally damaged the roof. The lad, knowing that his widowed father finds it tough going to provide for his large brood, believes that he can make his fortune in New York City.

Arriving in Manhattan, Brill meets a gang of shoe-shine boys and paper carriers who work under the "protection" of Rick, a teenage punk (Jaime Charlamagne), who takes half their earnings. Paco, a Puerto Rican boy (Roberto Marsach), about Brill's age, befriends him, helps him get a job selling papers and takes him home for the night. Next day Brill wins most of Rick's money in a crap game and he and Paco take off for a night in Manhattan, which includes everything from 42nd Street pizza parlors to a Central Park hansom cab.

When Rick's gang beats him up for winning their money, Brill is rescued by Suzy, a prostitute (Lee Grant), who takes him home to patch him up. He remains with her that night and next day she treats him to new clothes, then the unlikely pair explore New York's daytime attractions.

Returning from an errand, Brill sees Suzy and another call girl, Rose (Sylvia Miles), being taken away by the police. Deciding to return home, he buys a bicycle for the journey. On his way out of the city, he is spotted by Rick's gang who give chase, but he gets away when Paco intercepts his pursuers. On the highway a truck wrecks the bike and Brill takes refuge for the night with an elderly Negro couple (Ruth Attaway and Robert Earl Jones). Next day he arrives home, a tired but wiser prodigal son, to turn over what is left of his "fortune" to his father.

Most of the action has to be carried by the non-professional Bray, an attractive towheaded type who tends to be self-conscious when a scene is contained or requires much emotion but for the most part he is delightfully natural, particularly during the action sequences, in exchanges with Paco, or roaming Central Park with Suzy. Miss Grant's "philanthoropic prostitute" role is an actress's holiday, tender with the boy, abrupt with her customers, flippant with merchants who know her trade, and moving in a scene with an abandoned lover (Michael Higgins). The latter scene is the weakest in the film, saved only by Miss Grant's convincing reading.

The gang sequences, while reminiscent of Luis Bunuel's "Los Olvidados," are free of that film's brutality, and are well-handled. Baron occasionally skirts the edge of vulgarity by writing provocative opening phrases for some key speeches but succeeds in avoiding actual suggestiveness. Paco's explanation to Brill of Suzy's "love for sale" profession is the typically exaggerated fabrication of a precocious child.

The incident between Brill and the Negro couple begins awkwardly, in an almost patronizing vein, but is saved by the dramatically humorous realism of his departure. The boy can't find his money and thinks they've stolen it. Finding that he has only dropped it, he's too ashamed to apologize and runs out. However, upbringing wins over embarrassment and he comes back and drops some money in the farmer's lap. The latter's "This ain't no hotel," shouted at the fleeing lad, is both a declaration of self respect and chastisement of the boy.

Besides the outstanding acting of Miss Grant, Bray and Marsach (the latter is really a find and steals every scene he's in), excellent performances in a smaller scale are provided by Charlamagne, Miss Miles, Miss Attaway, Higgins and Allen. All kids in pic are nonpros. In some colorful but brief vignettes, Charles Jordan is an "artificial inseminator" of cows who gives Brill a ride and finds it hard to explain where his bull is; Rick Collette is a pickpocket who, observed at work by the boys on a Fifth Avenue bus, gets hijacked by the cool Paco; Roscoe Browne is a fire-and-brimstone sidewalk preacher in Times Square.

Donald Malkames' clear, crisp photography is one of the film's greatest assets, considering the entirely-on-location shooting. The night scenes on 42nd Street were done from a hand-trundled cart bearing a concealed cameraman who kept contact with Baron via a two-radio intercom. Some of these long tracking shots along one of the world's busiest streets are amazing as is the bicycle chase through upper Manhattan. Ralph Rosenblum's editing, too imitative of the Europeans, uses fast cuts recklessly, even when the plot does not require them. Whether this choppiness is his own interpretation of pace or the influence of Baron, it hurts the film.

The sound recording by James Shields and Charles Federmack has the feeling of post-synchronization, frequently too strident and putting a shrillness on some voices, but Baron insists that post-sync work was kept to a minimum, most of film being recorded on the spot. Robert Mersey's delightful score has a definite Caribbean flavor (pic was originally planned with a Puerto Rican setting) but the jauntiness is perfect for the N.Y. setting and the antics of the boys, many of whom are Puerto Rican.

"Pie In the Sky" (which may get a title change) is a good film that could have been better with those much-needed bridging shots and a clearer, better-plotted script. A possible "sleeper," even in its present form, it's one of those too-rare motion pictures that send you out of the theatre the better for having seen it. Robe.

'Bolivar' Film Angles

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

A Ronald Lubin reports he has promises of official cooperation from the Governments of Venezuela, Peru, Ecuador, Colombia and Bolivia for his upcoming production of "Bolivar."

Lubin and writer Robert Presnell Jr., who is doing the original screenplay, will go to Bogota, Colombia, in February as guests of the Colombian government to map final plans for film, which will be shot on locations in the sites of Bolivar's battles. Two staffers of the Bolivian Society have been assigned to aid Lubin and Presnell in research, with armies, towns and populace of each area offered during filming.

Lubin states he has had discussions with both Charlton Heston and Kirk Douglas for title role. He reports Paramount interested in release deal.

Willy
(GERMAN)

Exploitation angle: Negro G.I. sires son of fraulein; faces German race prejudice.

Hollywood, Dec. 17.

Allan A. Buckhantz production. No star billing. Directed by Buckhantz. Screenplay, Guenter Rudorf, as adapted from his play by Marcus Scholz; camera, Ludwig Berger; editor, Klaus Dudenhoefer; music, Nicholas Carras; assistant director, Frank Guthke. Reviewed at MGM Studios, Dec. 17, '63. Running time, 73 MINS.

Willy ..... Hubert Persicke
Klara ..... Hannelore Schroth
Grandmother ..... Edith Schultze-Westrum
Herbst ..... Joseph Offenbach
Scott ..... Peter Kuiper
Teacher ..... Klaus Behrendt
Brother ..... Reinhard Kolldehoff
Agent ..... Kurt A. Jung
Secretary ..... Viktoria Von Campe
Herbert ..... Wilhelm Fricke
Wolfgang ..... Arnfried Lerche

A timely and provocative subject—the struggle of a 15-year-old "illegitimate colored occupation child of German nationality" to find a place for himself in the hostile environment of modern West Germany—is given only skin-deep treatment in this post-dubbed import. At its core, "Willy" is a film of social significance. Had it been approached and developed with greater sensitivity and penetration, the ABA production might have generated considerable commercial impact in any country. But what emerges is a two-dimensional, black-and-white dramatization, haphazardly directed, transparently acted and crudely dubbed. Although it explores a pertinent problem of our time, and has merit as such, the cinematic imagination and/or trenchant social statement necessary for acceptance in the domestic art house sphere is lacking.

Produced and erratically directed by Allan A. Buckhantz from a shallow, glancing scenario by Guenter Rudorf, "Willy" tells of the plight of an "Afro-Aryan" boy who is the offspring out of wedlock of a German fraulein and a Negro G.I. who met during the post-war occupation of Germany. The film depicts the struggle of the boy, who was raised by his mother after his father returned permanently to the U.S., to locate and succeed in a job following graduation. Small town prejudicial pressures persuade his mother to allow him to seek a better life in Hamburg, on the assumption that perhaps the more impersonal environment of a larger city will enable him to get along better. The picture thus concludes on a note of hope, not solution.

All of the performances are severely handicapped by the dubbing. Hubert Persicke plays the title role, with Hannelore Schroth in the key role of his troubled, mistreated mother and Edith Schultze-Westrum, Joseph Offenbach and Peter Kuiper in other major characterizations.

Production contributions are rather haphazard. A title song by Nicholas Carras and Ric Marlow adds a somewhat jarringly commercial note over the titles, which come at the tag-end of the film. Tube.

Entrega Inmediata
(Special Delivery)
(MEXICAN)

Columbia Pictures release of a Posa Films International S. A. production. Stars Cantinflas (Mario Moreno). Features Gina Romand, Claudio Brook, Guillermo Zetina, Fanny Cano, Maria Amelia, Alberto Catala. Directed by Miguel M. Delgado; screenplay, Jaime Salvador; camera, Gabriel Figueroa; music, Gustavo Cesar Carrion. Nitery sequence by Rafael de Cordoba y Ballet Espanol. Reviewed at Million Dollar Theatre, Los Angeles, Dec. 23, '63. Running time, 112 MINS.

Himself ..... Cantinflas
Carlota ..... Gina Romand
Spy ..... Claudio Brook
Female agent ..... Fanny Cano
Baby ..... Maria Amelia
Professor ..... Alberto Catala

With the proven international appeal of Cantinflas and the excellent production values his films now contain, it is puzzling why Posa Films or Columbia, who distributes in the U.S., make no greater effort to sell his pix in the non-Spanish-speaking market. The "little man" has the universality of Chaplin and the commercial appeal of Jerry Lewis and it requires no knowledge of languages to derive pleasure from his peccadilloes. To realize, however, how many more laughs lie in "what" he says, one should view his films in a theatre filled with "understanding" Latins.

This time around, Cantinflas is a "special delivery messenger" who becomes the victim of every comedy cliche in the book—from the beautiful spy to the beautiful "baby" palmed off on him.

As the innocent involved in intrigue, the comedian gets away fast with an establishing shot that identifies him immediately as funny and ineffectual — an encounter with a bakeryman so contrived and so hilarious that you're sure it will be used again. Naturally, it gives the pic an equally funny close.

For northern audiences, much of the evident plot could be edited out. Indeed when Cantinflas is absent from the screen, the flimsiness of the script is embarrassingly evident. An exception is a well-staged nitery sequence featuring dancer Rafael de Cordoba. Here the imaginative camerawork of Gabriel Figueroa gets a real workout with a series of closeups that show off the machine-gun rapidity of de Cordoba's footwork.

The comedian, after having established the unkempt, swivel-hipped figure the world knows best, works in several disguises including an elegant, ancient boulevardier and a slicked-down, bespectacled undertaker. He also uses planted opportunities to show his dancing and singing prowess.

Gina Romand as a gorgeous, Gabor-ish spy, Maria Amelia as the orphan "baby" who turns out to be a pulchritudinous senorita who gets her Cantinflas, and Fanny Cano as a pretty government agent, provide beaucoup cheesecake for the pic, and turn in fairly good jobs of acting. Claudio Brook's chief spy and Alberto Catala's professor-accomplice, like most of the supporting cast, are stamped from worn, familiar moulds.

Director Miguel M. Delgado plays it safe, giving Cantinflas his head while keeping the plot moving, albeit slowly, when the star is off-screen. Gabriel Figueroa's photography is excellent throughout but particularly so in the nitery sequence. Gustavo Cesar Carnion's music, with the exception of the nitery and a closing musical sequence, is used merely to underscore humorous or would-be suspenseful key scenes. Robe.

L'Appartement Des Filles
(Girls' Apartment)
(FRENCH)

Paris, Dec. 23.

UGC-Sirius release of Paul Graetz-Transcontinental Film production. Stars Mylene Demongeot, Sylva Koscina, Renata Ewert, Sami Frey. Directed by Michel Deville. Screenplay, Nina Companez, Deville from novel by Jacques Robert; camera, Claude Lecomte; editor, Nina Companez. At Marignan, Paris. Running time, 88 MINS.

Melanie ..... Mylene Demongeot
Elena ..... Sylva Koscina
Lolotte ..... Renata Ewert
Fibere ..... Sami Frey
Christophe ..... Jean-Francois Calve
Francois ..... Daniel Ceccaldi

Slight comedy, about a gangster playboy trying to seduce any of three air hostesses to smuggle gold for him, is breezy enough to gloss over a certain repetitiveness in treatment. Familiar affair does not appear to have the uniqueness or tang for arty use abroad, but could be an okay dualer or playoff item on its general entertainment qualities. Local chances are fine.

The would-be smuggler is naturally transformed by love for one of the hostesses, who include a blase snob, an adventurous one and a sentimental femme. The last named naturally gets him. Director Michel Deville can not energize the slim material into much even if he does give it a glossy finish.

There are a bunch of promising people in this but without enough of personal flair and zest to give this the right drive that comedies of this ilk need.

Sami Frey tries hard but does not have the dash for the small-time smuggler, who mends his ways. Mylene Demongeot has a graceful pouting dottiness as the lovestruck blonde if inclined to play things on one note. The girls at play appear quaint rather than giving this a pithy romp.

Film has a neat production gloss. And director Michel Deville still shows promise as a new, sophisticated comedy director even if he needs to get down to business instead of embroidering needlessly. Mosk.

Chevrons For Esbin

Jerry Esbin has been named administrative assistant to Columbia president Abe Schneider.

Esbin has been with Col since 1948 and has served in various administrative posts as well as in the sales accounting and domestic and foreign exchange departments.

Le Mepris
(Contempt)
(FRENCH-ITALIAN)
(COLOR)

Paris, Dec. 30.

Cocinor release of Rome Paris Films-Concordia-Champion Films production. Stars Brigitte Bardot, Jack Palance; features Michel Piccoli, Fritz Lang, Georgia Moll. Written and directed by Jean-Luc Godard from novel by Alberto Moravia. Camera (Technicolor), Raoul Coutard; editor, Agnes Guillemot. At Lord Byron, Paris. Running time, 100 MINS.

Camille ..... Brigitte Bardot
Jeremie ..... Jack Palance
Fritz Lang ..... Fritz Lang
Paul ..... Michel Piccoli
Francesca ..... Georgia Moll

Crossing Brigitte Bardot with an arty, personal director, ex-New Waver Jean-Luc Godard, was not a bad idea. Miss Bardot appears, at last, as an actress in her own right with her trademark nude scenes not forced but aptly stemming from the plot. However, thus appears less accessible for depth use with best bet as an arty booking in the U.S.

Slim tale has Miss Bardot married to a hack scriptwriter called in by an egotistical American producer to rewrite scenes on an epic he is making in Italy with Fritz Lang himself directing. Film details her sudden intimations of contempt for her husband because of a series of incidents. It ends in her beginning to give into the assiduous courting of the producer and with both killed in an auto accident when she leaves her husband and goes off to Rome with the producer.

Main appeal is in the filmic manner as far as this pic is concerned. Based on an Alberto Moravia novel, Jean-Luc Godard still makes this a personally told tale. Though full of inside film talk, grandiloquent phrasings, sudden sharp elipses or quick repeat montage scenes of early incidents to make a point, this does have a decisive visual flair that lays bare these figures and discourses on that popular modern theme re the dissolution of a couple.

Miss Bardot, who oldtimers like H. G. Clouzot, Claude Autant-Lara, Julien Duvivier and Christian Jaque tried to force to act in the more general mold, here is given her head as a young married woman who is physically amorous but begins to doubt her respect for her husband.

She handles her lines well and displays a feel for a scene, and a timing and presence scarcely seen in her more undraped pix. There is a pre-title love scene that unveils her familiar chassis, as well as others, but none of this is out of character with her sensual, free wheeling character.

Jack Palance has fire and frenzy as an officious film producer while Fritz plays himself with a gentle air of wisdom. His filming of "Ulysees" does have some symbolic ties with the tale but none of this is overdone.

One brilliant scene has Miss Bardot and her husband, sharply etched by Michel Piccoli, lolling about in their half finished Rome apartment that is full of shrewd observation, delineation of character and witty aspects. Here her growing distaste for her husband, because of his seeming lack of manlihood, is brought forth clearly yet subtly. But then the film just jogs on and repeats its points and builds to an arbitrary ending of the accidental death.

It will not be an easy film for circuit spotting. But by spreading in arty houses, this could be given more legs especially well sold. And then there is the Bardot name and exposure. It will also call for smart arty theatre handling, with perhaps the revelation of Miss Bardot as an actress, as well as a sex symbol, its main handle. Color is good if sometimes overindulged for mood effects. Godard has soft pedaled his penchant for jump cuts but still uses intellectual editing techniques that sometimes jar if they do not mar the general mood and development of the story.

This marks a step forward for both Miss Bardot and Godard if it still is not exactly an outright exploitation offering. Its hybird aspects call for careful placement but it may be worth it on its unorthodox aspects for arties.

Joe Levine's Embassy Pictures has this for the world but has sold it for France and Italy. There is no attempt to find short cuts for languages and all of Palance's dialog is translated by his secretary. This makes it both easier to handle for depth with subtitles and, respectively, harder to dub. English title is "Ghost at Noon." Mosk.

NAMES & 'ACTIVE RETIREMENT'

Hollywood Typewriter Corps Look To Pile Up $26,537,291 in Wages

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Writers Guild of America-West members earned approximately $26,537,291 in 1963 per estimate by Nate Monaster, president. First nine months earnings from video were $12,006,815 against $11,896,152 in like period of 1962. Figure for 1963 includes $2,500,000 residuals and royalties. Screen earnings first three-quarters 1962 $7,903,173; this year $7,896,152.

Combined pix-tv earnings first nine months 1963 totaled $19,902,967 with safe assumption final quarter will hike earned income or writers to approximately $26,537,291. Monaster expects 1964 to top this record year.

Guild's royalty plan for telepix giving writers share in world royalties of telefilms operated for first time this year.

Monaster told members that there was never better opportunity for screen originals than at present and that Laurence Weingarten of Screen Producers Guild is trying to encourage royalty plan for original screenplays similar to play or book rights.

LOUIS SOBOL

who flits from New York to Los Angeles when he is not globe-trotting airs some sardonic views on

The Hollywood Idea Of Couture

another bright Feature in the

58th Anniversary Number of VARIETY

Plus other statistical and data-filled charts and articles

April-May Thin, Needs Nourishm't

Edward L. Hyman, v.p. of American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, and longtime crusader for "orderly release," is now bearing down on April-through-May as the time when better pictures are needed. He adds the distributors are complying with his wishes in providing more quality product for this heretofore "orphan" period.

AB-PT has gotten out a booklet, to be sent to 3,000 theatremen gratis, in which the various film companies pledge themselves to the "orderly release" in the spring and specifically list their pictures for April and May.

Hyman said he thanks the distribs for their support and urges his fellow-exhibs to back up the flow of product with robust campaigns on the local level. He also asks the exhibs to inform the distribs about such campaigns.

The Parade to 'Charade'

"Charade" is on its way to becoming one of Universal's alltime top grossers, if not the champ itself. Having been scoring top biz at Radio City Music Hall for a couple of weeks now, the pic opened in numerous locations coast-to-coast last Wednesday (25) and has been doing strong biz since.

Opening day at Grauman's Chinese Theatre, L. A., was the biggest weekday opening figure in the treatre's history, a tally of $6,188. In Chicago at the city's namesake treatre, it neared the $6,000 mark and at the Esquire in St. Louis it did $4,415. Wednesday and Thursday at the Memorial, Boston, was $8,932; at the Mercury, Detroit, the two-day total was $7,429; at the Golden Gate, San Francisco, it was $7,500; a four-theatre combination in Miami grossed $23,900; the Gateway, Pittsburgh, did $6,568; at the Towne, Washington, it registered $5,760 and at the Trans-Lux, Philadelphia, $6,030.

Biz was also reported brisk in Providence, Cincinnati, Rochester, Louisville, Wilmington, Dayton, Charlotte and elsewhere, with second days topping opening day biz. Meanwhile, back at the Music Hall, the Cary Grant-Audrey Hepburn starrer drew $31,090 for the first day of its fourth week and seemed headed for one of the biggest weeks in the house's history.

Kansas Censoring Goes On to Keep Fees Still Coming?

Kansas City, Dec. 30.

Long stranglehold of film censorship in Kansas is gradually being loosened, according to study by K. A. Harris of the U. of Kansas Governmental Research center at Lawrence. His report, just released, shows the Kansas board of review no longer has unlimited authority to censor motion pictures under recent U.S. Supreme Court decisions.

"The Kanasa board now is forced to cite obscenity as its reason for all eliminations or totally disapproved films whether they involve vulgarity, nudity, love scenes, homosexuality or themes that are 'lustful'," the Harris study declares.

"Greatly concerned about the many movies and scenes it no longer feels it can eliminate, the board, nevertheless, eliminates what it can, realizing that it must try to fulfill its statutory obligations and act within its constitutional boundaries.

"Unfortunately, the board is riding the horns of a dilemma. The most recent Kansas statute, enacted in 1949, charges them to 'disapprove films that are cruel, obscene, indecent or immoral or films that tend to debase or corrupt morals.'

"Clearly in view of recent Supreme Court decisions, they can no longer do this. In fact, very little of what it was intended that they do can be done. They have no rule pertaining to 'cruel' movies. Nor can they legitimately censor the sort of things—approval of adultery, criminality and narcotics from which, under previous rules, Kansans were shielded. Furthermore, the fact that the board eliminates words and scenes from movies is difficult to reconcile with the meaning and the wording of their obscenity rule."

Most realistic of the three review board members is the chairman, Mrs. Kitty McMahon, who also is in charge of the office and its staff of four. She believes her board has followed the decisions of the Supreme Court in ruling on films. The other two members, Mrs. Mary Trehey and Mrs. Polly Kirk, believe the board "has unlimited powers."

Mrs. Kirk said the board has been following the Supreme Court's decisions on censorship of literature. She said the board "could not pass judgment on any censorship ruling until so instructed from the attorney general's office in Topeka."

In the last couple of years, all indications are that the board has been advised to avoid court confrontation on specific pictures, for instance Embassy's "Sky Above—Mud Below" which, after rejecting in toto the board looked at again, after the filing of court action on behalf of the distributor—and the second time passed it, reportedly without deletions.

PROMOTE, SHARE IN NEW BOOM

By KAY CAMPBELL

Los Angeles, Dec. 30.

Some of the biggest names in show biz have invested more than $500 million in various types and phases of "active retirement" housing developments in the Southwest. Others are known to be evaluating properties to compete in this burgeoning, bonanza realty market.

"Active retirement" is the catchphrase of the day with a multitude of meanings. It implies country-club communities, mobile home parks, resort hotels and lush rental apartments, offering lures for "adults" with the underlying motif, "Now is the hour for fun." The spiraling success of this movement which has not yet reached its zenith makes it the nation's No. 1 economic and sociological phenomenon.

Art Linkletter's "Sierra Dawn Estates," a mobile home park near Hemet with a $350,000 recreation center, celebrated its second birthday recently, declaring half of the 300 homesites unloaded. These lots range in price from $3090 to $5000. Fess Parker's "Rancho Santa Barbara", north of the Channel City, is somewhat smaller, but has an equally successful sales record.

Joe E. Brown's $30 million "Hueneme Bay" town house community, near Ventura, made its debut August '63 and sales totaled 600 houses December 1. These ranged in price from $15,950-$21,950. Others are under construction. Noel Sullivan, impresario of the Monterey Bach Festivals, has opened a $20 million retirement community near Carmel. And the $40 million "Friendly Valley" with its $1 million country club for residents, is located on Bob Hope's ranch near Newhall. The New York clergyman, Norman Vincent Peale, and Don Belding, of Foote, Cone & Belding ad shop have teamed up to build a $10 million community, "Los Penas Quitos" near Del Mar.

Bob Moon, ex-staff announcer at CBS, ABC and Mutual, is vice prez of the extensive Rossmore Leisure World projects, which will involve a total population of 150,000 at a cost of $2-1/2 billion. The first Leisure World, at Seal Beach, with 11,000 residents, has been hailed as the most successful project of its kind in existence. It was a sellout in 17 months. Preview of Leisure World, Laguna Hills, representing an investment of $500 million, with 18,000 residential units, was held last October.

Del Webb, owner of the Sahara, the Mint and other establishments in Las Vegas and co-owner of the Yankees, fronts for a $10 million investment in Sun Cities in Arizona and California. Tom Breen (Joe's son) is senior veepee of the organization.

In addition to the heavy investors in "active retirement" hundreds from all walks of show biz have bought houses, apartments and mobile home lots in the various projects. Retired and not-so-retired authors, artists, art directors, auditors, musicians, composers, screen writers, engineers, technicians, producers and directors have thronged into the divergent "adult" living spaces. Many have continued with their careers, commuting from their near and distant homes to Hollywood; others have found part-time employment; and some have two or more "retirement" residences at the beach and in the desert, for example. Many turn their talents to putting on theatrical productions, promoting outstanding sports events such as the $35,000 San Diego Open Golf Tournament (Jan. 8-12) at Rancho Bernardo, contacting top name entertainers and bands for community shows and dances, staging fash shows, forming clubs, organizing classical music orchestras and pop bands, instructing classes in square dancing, boat-building and navigation, travel, dressmaking and other crafts.

Anton Grot, for example, who came to Hollywood as art director on Doug Fairbanks' "Thief of Bagdad", and worked with DeMille prior to moving to Warner Bros

(Continued on page 14)

See 20th Balking on Paying Liz Any Further Percentage on 'Cleo' Pic

"Cleopatra" star Elizabeth Taylor may never see any of the loot under her fancy percentage-of-the-gross deal with 20th-Fox, as result of a statement issued in New York Monday (30) by 20th exec veep Seymour Poe in which he revealed that attorneys for 20th and the star will "review Miss Taylor's contractual situation sometime around the end of January."

(Poe's statement was prompted by a story by Earl Wilson in the N. Y. Post saying that 20th had notified Miss Taylor that the $2,140,500 she'd already received in salary and expenses was all she's going to get for the film. Poe called the story, attributed to a 20th "spokesman," "neither authorized nor true.")

Miss Taylor's contract called for her to receive — in addition to salary and expenses—10% of the picture's gross over $7,500,000. Considering that the pic has already taken in more than $20,000,000 in cash advance guarantees, that would mean Miss Taylor would now be due for a minimum cut of at least $1,250,000, over and above salary and expenses, had no legal hitches developed. She has, however, received no portion of any such percentage as yet.

It's been an open secret for some time that 20th execs have been studying all aspects surrounding the production of the film, especially those concerning the star's absences from the set.

Expected to spearhead the 20th side of the upcoming talks is the company's general counsel, Jerome Edwards, a member of the law firm of Phillips, Nizer, Benjamin, Krim & Ballon. Partner Louis Nizer, incidentally, is repping Eddie Fisher in latter's divorce negotiations with Miss Taylor.

Sportswriter

HAROLD ROSENTHAL

who has covered the national pastime for the N. Y. Herald Tribune syndicate for many years, dwells on

When and How Hollywood 'Discovered' Baseball

* * *

another Bright Feature in the upcoming

58th Anniversary Number of VARIETY

Plus other statistical and data-filled charts and articles

Of 15 Films Set For UA Only Two Shooting O'Seas

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

United Artists will enter 1964 with 15 major productions on definite schedule. Adding to an apparent trend for more production at home, it is significant to note only two of the slate are skedded for filming overseas. Seven of the pictures are for the Mirisch Corp., which has 12 pictures remaining on its UA contract.

Two films planned for shooting abroad are "Goldfinger," third in the Broccoli-Saltzman series of James Bond character films based on the Ian Fleming novel, with script by Richard Maibaum, and "Hawaii," long-prepping Fred Zinnemann production of the James Michener massive novel. Alec Guinness has been set as one of the stars of "Hawaii," with Dalton Trumbo now scripting. "Goldfinger" has a February starting date.

Other pictures underway, in order of starting dates, are as follows:

"Mister Moses," Frank Ross production of the Max Catto novel, with screenplay by Niel Patterson, to start next month; "Bandoola," Mirisch Corp.-Ted Richmond project, with Yul Brynner starring for producer Lewis R. Rachmil and director Elliott Arnold, to start shooting in February; "Dazzling Hour," I.A.L. Diamond production for the Mirisch Corp., from script by Diamond, with Dean Martin, Peter Sellers, Felicia Farr and Kim Novak starring, to begin in February; "The Confessor," James T. Donahue novel with screenplay by Nathan E. Douglas and Ned Young, to be produced by Edward Lewis, directed by John Frankenheimer, with Tony Curtis and Henry Fonda starring, to start in March for the Mirisch Corp.; "How to Murder Your Wife," George Axelrod - Frankenheimer production, with Jack Lemmon probably to star and Richard Quine to direct.

Screenplays now in work, with starting dates to be set in 1964, include: "Everybody Loves A Lover," prepping by Bud Yorkin and Norman Lear; "The Hallelujah Train," with John Sturges producing and directing for the Mirisch Corp., John Gay scripting from the Bill Gulick novel; "Khartoum," biopic of Charles George Gordon with screenplay by Robert Ardrey; "One More Time," Arne Sultan-Marvin Worth original screenplay for their own company; "A Rage to Live," Walter Mirisch producing from John T. Kelley screenplay of the John O'Hara novel.

"Return From the Ashes," to be produced by Arthur Jacobs and directed by J. Lee Thompson for Mirisch Corp.; "What Did You Do in the War, Daddy?,"

'Cleo' Two-a-Day, Sit as Please

Although 20th-Fox has officially stated that its hardticket "Cleopatra" will not go to the "reserved performance" policy domestically until late February and March, the Trans-Lux Hippodrome in Baltimore has already switched.

Pic is now playing the 2,208-seat showcase on a two-a-day (afternoon and evening), but with no seats reserved. There's a top price of $2, somewhat lower than for the hardticket policy.

A 20th spokesman says company agreed to the change "at the request of the exhibitor," who felt that it would materially benefit overall grosses. "We regard it," said the 20th man, "as an experiment."

FRONTIER'S NINTH SPOT OF ALBUQUERQUE'S 19

Albuquerque, Dec. 30.

Frontier Theatres, Inc.—which already operates eight of the 19 film houses in this city—has added Tesuque Drive-In to its chain through a lease-purchase agreement with Marlin Butler, owner of the ozoner.

Lou Avolio, Frontier resident manager, took over the 650-car situation on Dec. 29. Details of the transaction are strictly under wraps.

Tesuque was built in 1949, Butler has been owner since 1954. His brother, Wilson Butler, has been operational manager for the past several years.

Marlin Butler has been in the theatre business since 1928 and started with R. E. Griffith Theatres, Inc. (forerunner of Frontier) in 1934. He left the company in 1944, and has been in business for himself since that time.

Count by Frontier in Albuquerque is now six hardtoppers, three drive-ins.

L.A. Great; 'Charade' Huge $42,000 Tops; 'Darling' Wow 33G, 4 Houses; 'Sword' Lush 29G, 'Victors' 28G

Los Angeles, Dec. 30.

Firstruns are setting fire to final week of 1963, take including Dec. 25 and New Year's Eve for biggest gross of year expected. Ten incomers and eight holdovers should hit a mammoth $426,000 or slightly above last year's record-breaking $418,800 for same period.

Pacing city by a goodly margin is "Charade," looking to hit a smash $42,000 opening week at the Chinese. "Move Over Darling," in four houses, is heading for a wham $33,000. "Sword in Stone" is lush $29,000 in same number of spots. "The Victors" at Fox Wilshire" looks sock $28,000 at Fox Wilshire.

"Love With Proper Stranger" is rated wow $27,000 at the Village. "Capt. Newman, M. D." shapes socko $25,000 at Hollywood Par as is "The Prize" at Warner Beverly.

"Four For Texas" is hotsy $18,000 in two locations. "America, America" shapes big $17,000 at Beverly. "Tom Jones," moving over to Vogue and at Orpheum in fifth round is headed for a giant $27,400.

Estimates for This Week

Fox Wilshire (FWC) (1,900; $2-$2.40) — "Victors" (Col). Sock $28,000. Last week, with Hillstreet, "Lillies of Field" (UA), "Lafayette" (Ind) (Fox Wilsh), "Stolen Hours" (UA) (Hill) (2d wk, 4 days at Fox Wilshire), $5,000.

Chinese (FWC) (1,408; $2-$2.40) —"Charade" (U). Mighty $42,000. Last week, "Yum Yum Tree" (Col) (9th wk), $11,000.

Beverly (State) (1,150; $2-$2.40) —"America, America" (WB). Big $17,000. Last week, with Orpheum, "Tom Jones" (UA) (9th wk, Beverly; 4th wk, Orpheum), $22,700.

Hollywood Paramount (State) (1,468; $1.55-$2.40) — "Capt. Newman, M.D." (U). Socko $25,000. Last week, "V. I. P.s" (MGM) (15th wk), $3,200.

Warner Beverly (SW) (1,316; $2-$2.40)—"The Prize" (MGM). Big $24,000 or near. Last week, "Wuthering Heights" (Con) (reissue) (4th wk), $3,000.

Music Hall (Ros) (720; $2-$2.40) —"Ceremony" (UA). Modest $5,500. Last week, "School for Scoundrels" (Cont), "Battle of Sexes" (Cont) (reissues) (4th wk), $4,000.

Village (FWC) (1,535; $1.49-$2) —"Love with Proper Stranger"

(Continued on page 10)

Key City Grosses

Estimated Total Gross

Last Year $2,985,700
(Based on 20 cities and 246 theatres).

This Week $2,651,200
(Based on 20 cities and 243 theatres, chiefly first runs including N. Y.)

'Charade' Fat 19G, Balto; 'Prize' 10G

Baltimore, Dec. 30.

Solid new product and holiday trade will give first run exhibitors a big lift this round. "McLintock" is great in first at the suburban Senator. "The Prize" is stout on bow at the Charles "Move Over Darling" looks hot on opener at downtown Little.

"Charade" shapes great in first at Stanton. "The Cardinal" is holding lofty in second at the Mayfair. "Four for Texas" looms big in second at the Town. "Cleopatra" is on the rise in 26th week at the Hipp where new, lower price scale has gone into effect.

Estimates for This Week

Charles (Fruchtman) (500; 50-$1.50)—"The Prize" (MGM). Socko $10,000. Last week, "Conjugal Bed" (Embassy) (7th wk), $2,300.

Five West (Schwaber) (435; 90-$1.50)—"Murder at Gallop" (MGM) (2d wk). Nice $3,000. Last week, same.

Hippodrome (T-L) (2,200; $1.50-$2)—"Cleopatra" (20th) (27th wk). Good $9,000. Last week, $8,500.

Little (T-L) (300; $1.25-$1.65)—"Move Over Darling" (20th). Hep $7,000. Last week, "Irma La Douce" (UA) (23d wk), $2,000.

New (Fruchtman) (1,600; 50-$1.50) — "Who's Been Sleeping" (Par). Nice $9,000. Last week, "Secret Passion" (U) (reissue), $4,000.

Mayfair (Fruchtman) (700; 50-$1.50)—"The Cardinal" (Col) (2d wk). Lofty $10,000. Last week, $11,000.

Playhouse (Schwaber) (365; 90-$1.50)—"All Way Home" (Par). Pleasing $3,000. Last week, "Lord of Flies" (Cont) (5th wk), $1,800.

Rex (Freedman) (500; $1.50)—"House on Bare Mountain" (Indie). Fair $2,500. Last week, "Weird Lovemakers" (Indie) (2d wk), $1,500.

Senator (Durkee) (960; 90-$1.50) —"McLintock" (UA). Great $12,000. Last week, "Great Escape" (UA) (9th wk), $4,500.

Stanton (Fruchtman) (2,800; 50-$1.50) — "Charade" (U). Socko $19,000 or close. Last week, "Wheeler Dealers" (MGM) (5th wk), $4,000.

Town (T-L) (1,125; 90-$1.50)—"Four For Texas" (WB) (2d wk). Big $7,000. Last week, $9,000.

'Sword' Mighty at 20G, Cincy; 'Charade' Boffo $13,000; 'World' 17G, 2d

Cincinnati, Dec. 30.

A smash New Year's week session is in prospect for firstruns here, rewarding a holiday array of class entries and weather relief from severe cold. "Sword In Stone," Disney's glad rush for juves, bids to top the town in smash tempo at Keith's. "Mad World" shapes hotsy in second week at Capitol. "Move Over Darling" looms tall at outlying Valley, which is operating daily from 2 p.m. Also wow is "Charade" at the flagship Albee on opener. "Kings of Sun" at Palace looks big.

The prosperous bent extends to the arties, "Small World of Sammy Lee" shaping big at Guild and "Carry On Regardless" looking okay, daydating at Esquire and Hyde Park Art. "Cleopatra" rates a stepup with extra matinees at Grand.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; $1.25-$1.50) —"Charade" (U). Boff $13,000 or close. Last week, "Days Wine and Roses" (WB) and "What Happened to Baby Jane" (WB) (reissues), $5,500.

Capitol (SW-Cinerama) (1,339; $1.25-$2.75) — "Mad World" (UA) (2d wk). Hotsy $17,000 or near after $12,500 preem.

Esquire Art (Cin-T-Co) (500; $1.25) — "Carry On Regardless" (Indie). Okay $1,500. Daydating with Hyde Park Art. Last week, "Get On With It" (UA) (2d wk), $1,000 in 5 days.

Grand (RKO) (1,396; $1.80-$3)—

(Continued on page 10)

'CHARADE' WOW 12G, COL.; 'STORE' GOOD 9G

Columbus, O., Dec. 30.

Business bounced back Christmas week, aided by extra matinees and New Year's Eve shows. "Charade" is the standout leader at RKO Palace for best at this house in months. "Who's Minding Store" at Loew's Ohio looms solid. "How West Was Won" loomed large in 37th session at RKO Grand.

Estimates for This Week

Grand (RKO) (860; $1.50-$2.75) —"How West Was Won" (MGM) (37th wk). Big $8,000 or over. Last week, $3,400.

Ohio (Loew) (3,079; 50-$1.50)—"Who's Minding Store" (Para) (6 days). Solid $9,000. Last week, "Stolen Hours" (UA) (10 days), $3,500.

Palace (RKO) (2,845; 50-$1.50)—"Charade" (U). Whopping $12,000. Last week, "Cry of Battle" (AA) and "Gunfight Comanche Creek" (AA), $3,100.

'Charade' Great $16,000, Prov.; 'Texas' 5G, 2d

Providence, Dec. 30.

The upswing has started here with a bang and has RKO Albee clicking its heels with town topper "Charade." Also on the hot side is Majestic's second of "Four for Texas." Strand is just fair with "Who's Minding Store." State's second of "Kings of Sun" is on weak side.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; $1-$1.50)—"Charade" (U). Leaping to wham $16,000 or close. Last week, "Secret Passion" (U) and "Great Imposter" (U) (reissues), $3,500.

Elmwood (Snider) (2,200; $2.50-$3)—"Cleopatra" (20th) (22d wk). Nice $6,000. Last week, $3,000.

Majestic (SW) (2,200; 75-$1) — "Four For Texas" (WB) (2d wk). Very happy $5,000 after $8,000 opener.

State (Loew) (3,200; 75-$1)—"Kings of Sun" (UA) (2d wk). Mild $3,500. First was $4,500.

Strand (National Realty) (2,200; 90-$1.25)—"Who's Minding Store" (Par). Fair $5,000. Last week, "Under Yum Yum Tree" (Col) and "Critic" (Col) (6th wk), $3,000.

'Jones' Record $28,000, Toronto; 'Charade' Huge 22G, 'Sword' Sock 45G

Toronto, Dec. 30.

"Tom Jones" broke the Hyland house record this week. Famous Players assembled 12 houses for a big week's biz with "Sword in the Stone." Nine Taylor hardtops daydated "Samson and Slave Queen" plus "Goliath and Sins of Babylon" for a rousing week. Trio of Rank houses rushed in "Move Over Darling" for torrid biz.

"Charade" is doing amazing trade at the Uptown on opener.

Second week holdovers include "Who's Minding Store" this holding over for five days at two houses. The Hollywood is doing similar sock biz with "Take Her, She's Mine" while "The Cardinal" is near capacity and continues ditto. "It's a Mad World," housed in Rank's Canadian showcase, looms lively in second round. For five days of "Kings of Sun" in second week shapes hotsy.

Estimates for This Week

Alhambra, Beach, Birchcliff, Capitol, College, Golden, Mile, Palace, Parkdale, Runnymede, Vaughan, Westwood, Willow (FP) (994; 1,288; 865; 848; 1,499; 995; 1,485; 1,397; 1,377; 929; 994; 992; 35-$1) — "Sword in Stone" (WB). Very big $45,000.

Carlton (Rank) (2,058; $2-$3) — "It's a Mad World" (UA) (2d wk). Off to smooth $20,000. Last week, $25,000.

Century, Downtown, Glendale, Kingsway, Midtown, Odeon, Prince of Wales, Scarboro, State (Taylor) (1,342; 1,059; 995; 697; 1,082; 752; 1,197; 682; 696; 50-$1)—"Samson and Slave Queen" (Astral) and "Goliath and Sins of Babylon" (Astral). Swell $40,000.

Danforth, Fairlawn, Humber (Rank) (1,324; 1,165; 1,203; $1-$1.75) — "Move Over Darling" (20th). Hep $35,000. Last week, Danforth and Humber, "Horror Hotel" (Indie), $10,000; Fairlawn, "Yum Yum Tree" (Col) (8th wk) (m.o.), $5,000.

Eglinton (FP) (1,066; $1-$1.50)—"All Way Home" (Par). Fine $6,500.

Hollywood (FP) (1,080; $1.25-$1.50) — "Take Her, She's Mine" (20th) (2d wk). Hot $14,000. Last week, $13,000.

Hyland (Rank) (1,357; $1.25-$1.50) — "Tom Jones" (UA-Lope). Boffo $28,000.

Imperial, Nortown (FP) (3,216; 959; $1-$1.75) — "Who's Minding Store" (Par) (2d wk). For five days, lively $16,000. Last week, $24,000.

Loew's (Loew) (1,641; $1-$1.50) —"Kings of Sun" (UA) (2d wk). Hotsy $7,000 in 5 days. Last week, $12,000.

Tivoli (FP) (935; $1.50-$2.50)— "Cardinal" (Col) (2d wk). Near-capacity $18,000. Last week, $17,500.

Towne (Taylor) (693; $1-$1.50)— "Conjugal Bed" (IFD) (2d wk). Upsurge to big $10,000. Last week, $7,500.

University (FP) (1,344; $2-$3.50) — "Cleopatra" (20th) (27th wk). Stout $10,000. Last week, $9,000.

Uptown (Loew) (2,245; $1.25-$1.75)—"Charade" (U). Whopping $22,000. Last week, for six days, "Small World of Sammy Lee" (7 Arts) (4th wk), $5,000.

Hub Soars; 'Charade' Wham $30,000, 'Sword' Big 31G, 'Bed' Socko 16G, 'Darling' Great 10G; 'Texas' 15G, 2

Boston, Dec. 30.

Xmas day biz boomed here as thousands of homecoming students and travelers descended on downtown theatre area. Rash of new product unveiled for the holidays also was a big help, biz picking up after frigid period during which two snowstorms smacked the Hub. One standout is "Sword in Stone" at the Music Hall, where big on opener. "Who's Been Sleeping in My Bed" is sock in first at Astor.

"Charade" is rated wow at the Memorial on initial week. "Kings of Sun" at the Orpheum did well on opener. "Move Over Darling" is boffo at the Capri. "To Bed or Not to Bed" is fancy at Cinema, Kenmore Square.

"Ladies Who Do" shapes hotsy at Park Square Cinema. "Love On a Pillow" looks lofty at the Mayfair. "Tom Jones" looms brisk in second at Beacon Hill. "Goliath and Sins of Babylon" is okay in second at the Center. "Four for Texas" is smash at Paramount in second. "Cardinal" is big in third round at the Saxon.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (B&Q) 1,117; 90-$1.50) — "Who's Been Sleeping In My Bed" (Par). Socko $16,000. Last week, "Yum Yum Tree" (Col) (7th wk), $8,000.

Beacon Hill (Sack) (900; $1-$1.80) —"Tom Jones" (UA) (2d wk). To record $25,000. Last week, $17,000.

Boston (Beacon Ent.) (1,354; $1.20-$3.95) — "Mad World" (UA) (7th wk). Sixth week ended Dec. 30, boffo $35,000.

Capri (Sack) (850; 90-$1.50) — "Move Over Darling" (20th). Sock $10,000. Last week, "Incredible Journey" (BV) (4th wk), $3,000.

Center (E. M. Lowe) (1,250; 90-$1.25)—"Goliath and Sins of Babylon" (AI) and "Samson and Slave Queen" (AI) (2d wk). Slick $7,000. Last week, $7,800.

Cinema, Kenmore Square (Indie) (320; $1.40-$1.90)—"To Bed or Not to Bed" (Indie). Hotsy $6,000. Last week, "Lord of Flies" (Cont) (14th wk), $3,000.

Exeter (Indie) (1,276; 90-$1.49)— "Any Number Can Win" (Indie). Nice $9,000. Last week, "Heavens Above" (Janus) (8th wk), $3,000.

Fenway (Indie) (1,300; 90-$1.49)

(Continued on page 10)

Broadway Grosses

Estimated Total Gross

This Week $969,000
(Based on 32 theatres)

Last Year $603,400
(Based on 30 theatres)

'Charade' Hep 12G, Denver; 'Prize' 8G

Denver, Dec. 30.

There's a great upsurge going on this session at firstruns as there was a break in the severe cold weather and a batch of new pictures are being unveiled this session. It's only a matter of how high some of the new films will go. "Charade" seems almost assured of making the best all-around showing with a wow take in sight opening week at 900-seat Aladdin. "Move Over Darling" also is big at the Centre.

Sword in Stone" is rated fancy at the Denver while "Four for Texas" also is boffo at Paramount. "The Prize" looks big on opener at the Towne.

Estimates for This Week

Aladdin (Fox) (900; $1.45) — "Charade" (U). Wow $12,000 or over. Last week, "Take Her, She's Mine" (20th) (5th wk), $2,500.

Centre (Fox) (1,270; $1.25-$1.45) —"Move Over Darling" (20th). Big $23,000 or near. Last week, "Yum Yum Tree" (Col) (5th wk), $5,500.

Cooper (Cooper) (814; $1.65-$2.50) — "How West Was Won" (MGM) (42d wk). Sock $12,000 or near. Last week, $6,000.

Denham (Indie) (800; $1.45-$3)— (20th) (28th wk). Big $9,000. Last week, $3,000.

Denver (Fox) (2,432; $1.25) — "Sword in Stone" (BV). Fancy $22,000. Last week, "Samson and Slave Queen" (AI) and "Goliath and Sins of Babylon" (AI), $6,000.

Paramount (Wolfberg) (2,100; 90-$1.25) — "Four for Texas" (WB). Smash $21,000 or over. Last week, "Kings of Sun" (UA), $8,000.

RKO International 70 (RKO) (1,200; $1.25-$1.45) — "The Cardinal" (Col). Great $19,000 or over. Last week, closed for remodeling.

Towne (Indie) (600; $1.25-$1.45) —"The Prize" (MGM). Big $8,000 or better. Last week, "Man With Gun" (AI) and God's Little Acre" (AI), $1,500.

Vogue (Art Theatre Guild) (450; $1.25) — "Lord of Flies" (Cont). Potent $5,000.

'Sword' Torrid $18,000, Port.; 'Charade' Big 14G

Portland, Ore., Dec. 30.

Biz is perking here this stanza. "Charade" shapes torrid in first at Broadway. "Move Over Darling" looks lofty on opener. "Kings of Sun" also is nifty on initialer at Laurelhurst. "Sword in Stone" is hotsy for first stanza at Orpheum. "Who's Minding Store" shapes loud in first at Music Box.

Estimates for This Week

Broadway (Parker) (1,890; $1-$1.50) — "Charade" (U). Torrid $14,000 or near. Last week, "Wheeler Dealers" (MGM) and "Main Attraction" (MGM) (reissue) (5th wk), $3,100.

Cinema 21 (Foster) (648; $1.50)— "Yum Yum Tree" (Col) (6th wk). fast $4,500. Last week, $3,700.

Esquire (Cruikshank) (475; $1.25) —"McLintock" (UA) (m.o.). Fine $4,000. Last week, second-run.

Fine Arts (Foster) (421; $1.50) —"L-Shaped Room" (Col) and "In French Style" (Col) (3d wk). So-so $3,000. Last week, $2,400.

Fox (Evergreen) (1,600; $1-$1.49) — "Four For Texas" (WB) and "Man From Galveston" (WB) (2d wk). Tall $9,000. Last week, $6,800.

Hollywood (Evergreen) (1,890; $1.49-$2.75) — "It's Mad World" (UA) (2d wk). Rousing $27,000. Last week, $12,400.

Irvington (Smith) (650; $1.50) — "Move Over, Darling" (20th) and

(Continued on page 10)

'Charade' New High 24G, Philly; 'Darling' $27,000, 'Sword' Sharp $23,000

Philadelphia, Dec. 30.

Current holiday session will see booming biz at many firstrun cinemas with some eight new pix launched. "Sword in Stone" shapes sharp on first at Randolph. "Charade" is hitting a new record at Trans-Lux Theatre on opener. "It's a Mad World" is heading for a wow take on second at the Boyd. "The Prize" is rated big first at Arcadia.

"Move Over Darling," also new, looks brisk in first at Fox. "Kings of Sun" shapes bright in second at Goldman. "Cardinal" is rated sockeroo in second at Midtown. "Four for Texas" looks good in second at Stanton.

Estimates for This Week

Arcadia (S&S) (623; $1.20-$1.80) —"Prize" (MGM). Big at $16,000 but rated disappointing. Last week, "V.I.P.s" (MGM) (13th wk), $2,000.

Boyd (SW) (1,536; $2-$2.75) — "It's a Mad World" (UA). Wow $30,000. Last week, $25,000.

Bryn Mawr (Goldman) (630; $1.49)—"Devil and 10 Commandments" (India). So-so $3,500. Last week, "Bell' Antonio" (Indie) (2d wk), $2,100.

Fox (Milgram) (2,400; 95-$1.80)— "Move Over Darling" (20th). Brisk $27,000. Last week, "Yum Yum Tree" (Col) (7th wk), $14,000.

Goldman (Goldman) (1,000; 95-$1.80)—"Kings of Sun" (UA) (2d wk). Bright $22,000. Last week, $16,000.

Lane (SW) (1,000; $1.49) — "Ladies Who Do" (Cont). Mild $3,200. Last week, "Lord of Flies" (Cont) (11th wk), $1,500.

Midtown (Goldman) (1,200; 95-$1.80)—"Cardinal" (Col) (2d wk). Royal $28,000. Last week, $20,000.

Randolph (Goldman) (2,200; 95-

(Continued on page 10)

Chi Climbs; 'Cardinal' Smash $39,000, 'Charade' Terrif 48G, 'Texas' Bangup 32G, 'Stone' Sockeroo 32G, 'Bed' 26G

Chicago, Dec. 30.

With the unveiling of the big holiday pix, Chi firstrun biz is soaring. Preem of "The Cardinal" is taking a wow $39,000 at the Woods while "Charade" is bowing to a mighty $48,000 at the Chicago. "Four For Texas" is nailing a wow $32,000 in first United Artists sesh.

Daydating debut of "Who's Been Sleeping In My Bed" shapes a rousing $26,000 at Loop and Esquire. "Sword In Stone" looms boffo $32,000 in first Roosevelt round. Monroe duo of "Red Lips" and "Hunchback of Rome" looks tidy.

"Tom Jones" is tallying a terrific second Todd stanza. "Kings of Sun" is tapering but should end up with a classy Oriental second. Daydated "My Life To Live" is posting a slick second frame at World and Town.

"Conjugal Bed" is registering an okay sixth Carnegie lap. Longrunning "Lord of Flies" profited from the school holidays looks excellent at Cinema in 14th round.

On hardticket, "It's A Mad World" is hefty in fourth McVickers canto, and "Cleopatra" looks okay in State-Lake 27th.

Estimates for This Week

Carnegie (Brotman) (495; $1.25-$1.80)—"Conjugal Bed" (Embassy) (6th wk). Okay $2,000 or near. Last week, $1,900.

Chicago (B&K) (3,900; 90-$1.80)—"Charade" (U). Wham $48,000 or over. Last week, "Palm Springs Weekend" (WB) (4th wk), $9,000.

Cinema (Stern) (500; $1.50) — "Lord of Flies" (Cont) (14th wk). Excellent $4,500. Last week, $3,000.

Esquire (H&E Balaban) (1,236; $1.25-$1.80) — "Who's Been Sleeping In My Bed" (Par). Big $10,000. Last week, "Leopard" (20th))9th wk), $4,000.

Globe (Teitel) (700; 90)—"Resurrection" (Artkino) (2d wk). Trim $2,200. Last week, $2,800.

Loop (Brotman) (606; 90-$1.80)—"Who's Been Sleeping In My Bed" (Par). Wow $16,000. Last week, "Incredible Journey" (BV) (5th wk), $9,000.

McVickers (Beacon) (1,100; $2.20-$3.80)—"It's a Mad World" (UA) (4th wk). Slick $20,000 or close. Last week, $18,000.

Monroe (Jovan) (1,000; 65-90)—"Red Lips" (Indie) and "Hunchback of Rome" (Indie). Okay $4,500. Last week, "Private Lives

(Continued on page 10)

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include U. S. amusement tax.

'Charade' Hot 23G, St. L.; 'Sword' 21G

St. Louis, Dec. 30.

Several new, strong pix are helping to enliven the holiday session here this stanza. "Charade" shapes standout with a wow showing at the Esquire while "Sword in Stone" looks great at Loew's Mid-City, also on opener. "Who's Minding the Store" looms good in first at the St. Louis.

"Four For Texas" is rated sturdy in second at Fox. "The Cardinal" looks good in first holdover round at the Ambassador.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (Arthur) (2,970; 90-$1.25)—"Cardinal" (Col) (2d wk). Good $10,000 or near. Last week, $15,000.

Apollo Art (Grace) (700; 90-$1.25) — "Nice in Water" (Indie) and "Thursday's Children" (Indie). Average $1,500. Last week, "La Dolce Vita" (Indie) (2d wk), $1,000.

Esquire (Jablonow-Komm) (1,800; 90-$1.25) — "Charade" (U). Wow $23,000 or close. Last week, "Wheeler Dealers" (MGM) (5th wk), $6,000.

Fox (Arthur) (5,000; 90-$1.25)—"Four for Texas" (WB) (2d wk). Sturdy $16,000. Last week, $17,000.

Loew's Mid-City (Loew) (1,160; 60-90) — "Sword in Stone" (BV). Big $21,000 or over. Last week, "Two Women" (Embassy) and "Sky Above" (Embassy), $6,000.

State (Loew) (3,600; 60-90) — "Kings of Sun" (UA) (2d wk). Good $10,000. Last week, $11,000.

Martin Cinerama (Martin) (913; $1.25-$2.50) — "How West Was Won" (MGM) (28th wk). Big $9,000. Last week, $8,000.

Pageant (Arthur) (1,000; 90-$1.25)—"Ladies Who Do" (Cont) (2d wk). Fine $2,000. Last week, $2,500.

Paris Art (Chernoff) (800; $1.50) — "Playgirl and War Minister" (Indie). Modest $1,500. Last week, "Lady Chatterley's Lover" (Indie) and "Bed" (Indie), $1,300.

St. Louis (Arthur) (3,800; 75-90) — "Who's Minding Store" (Par). Good $14,000. Last week, "West Side Story" (UA) and "Breakfast at Tiffany's" (Par) (reissues), $6,000.

Shady Oak (Arthur) (760; 90-$1.25) — "Lord of Flies" (Cont) (4th wk). Nice $2,000. Last week, $2,500.

'World' Boffola $18,000, K.C.; 'Store' Brisk 40G, 'Prize' Lusty at 13G

Kansas City, Dec. 30.

Moderating weather, skyrocketing spirits and long-awaited big film fare teamed to give the city's first runs one of brightest holiday weeks in memory. A runaway hit, even beyond hopes, is "The Prize" in downtown Roxy. Also outstanding is "The Cardinal" at the Brookside for a potent opener. "Sword in Stone" shapes great at Uptown and Granada. "Move Over Darling" looms neat in first four days at Plaza.

A Christmas Day saturation in four drive-ins and eight indoor houses on "Who's Minding Store" clicked for good returns.

"It's a Mad World" is boffo in second Empire round. "Four for Texas" shapes neat in second Paramount week.

Estimates for This Week

Brookside (Fox Midwest-Nat. Gen. Corp.) (800; $1.50)—"Cardinal" (Col). Lustrous $10,000 or near. Last week "Take Her, She's Mine" (20th) (5th wk) $2,600.

Capri (Durwood) (1,260; $1.80-$3)—"Cleopatra" (20th) (7th wk). Good $17,000. Last week $14,000.

Empire (Durwood) (886; $1.50-$2.50)—"It's a Mad World" (UA) (2d wk). Boff $18,000. Last week $15,000.

Paramount (Blank-UP) (1,900; $1.25-$1.50)—"Four for Texas" (WB) (2d wk). Neat $9,000 or over. Last week, $7,000.

Plaza (FMW) (1,630; $1.25-$1.50)—"Move Over Darling" (20th). Should do a gala $10,000 or near

(Continued on page 10)

'Charade' Rousing 11G, Seattle; 'Cardinal' 9G

Seattle, Dec. 30.

Sturdy biz, now that Yule is past, prevails at most first runs, New Year's and school holidays helping. "Charade" shapes sockeroo in first week at Orpheum. "Sword in Stone" looms big on opener "Cardinal" at Fifth Avenue looks good in second. "How West Was Won" is big at Martin in 39th round. "Four for Texas" looks lofty at Music Hall in second.

Estimates for This Week

Blue Mouse (Hamrick) (739; $1.25-$1.50)—"Prize" (MGM). Nice $7,000 or over. Last week, "Wheeler Dealers" (MGM) (4th wk), $4,100.

Coliseum (Fox-Evergreen) 1,870; $1.25-$1.50) — McLintock" (UA) abd "Great Van Robbery" (UA) (3d wk-4 days. Big $7,500. Last week, $10,000.

Fifth Avenue (Fox-Evergreen) (2,500; $1.25-$1.50) — "Cardinal"

(Continued on page 10)

'Charade' Whopping 30G, Pitt; 'Sword' Sock 25G

Pittsburgh, Dec. 30.

Excellent product and start of Yule season is giving Pitt deluxers one of their best rounds in many months. "Charade" is top grosser being boffo in first at Gateway. Also new, "Sword in Stone" looms big at Penn. "Ladies Who Do," another newie, is nice at remodeled Squirrel Hill. "It's a Mad World" is doubling its take of last week and looks great in second at Warner. "Four for Texas" is fatso in second at Stanley.

Estimates for This Week

Forum (Assoc.) (1,900; $1.75)—"Lilies of Field" (UA) (8th wk). Wow $4,500 after last week's $2,300.

Fulton (Assoc.) (1,900; $1-$1.75)—"Cardinal" (Col) (2d wk). Tall $13,000 after last week's $11,000.

Gateway (Assoc.) (1,900; $1-$1.75)—"Charade" (U). Wham $30,000 and top city grosser. Last week, "Wheeler Dealers" (MGM) (4th wk), $3,500.

Penn (UATC) (3,482; $1-$1.50)—"Sword in Stone" (BV). Socko $25,000 or near. Last week, "Cleopatra" (20th) (26th wk), $2,600.

Shadyside (MOTC) (623; $1.75)—"Suitor" (Atl). Fairish $2,500. Last week, "Carry On Regardless" (Gov) (5th), $1,700.

Squirrel Hill (SW) (800; $1.75)—"Ladies Who Do" (Cont). Nice $3,500 as house bows with remodeling job. Last week, "Franch Style" (Col) (3d wk-10 days), $2,700.

Stanley (SW) (3,700; $1-$1.75)—"Four for Texas" (WB) (2d wk). Fat $13,000 after last week's $12,000.

Warner (SW) (1,260; $1.50-$3)—"It's a Mad World" (UA) (2d wk). Torrid $24,000. Last week, $12,000.

'Charade' Loud 22G D.C.; 'Darling' 25G

Washington, Dec. 30.

Holiday trade is clicking on mainstem here, with several smash openers adding to upbeat. "Tom Jones" is smash on Ontario debut while "Charade" is rated wow at the Town. "Move Over Darling" at Palace looms sock. "Prize" shapes great in first at Embassy.

In second session, "Kings of Sun" figures boffo at Keith's. "Lord of Flies" looks hotsy at Playhouse for second. Slower in second round is "Four for Texas" at Ambassador - Metropolitan.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador-Metropolitan (SW) (1,480; $1-$1.49) — "Four for Texas" (WB) (2d wk). Okay $9,000 after opening at same.

Apex (KB) (940; $1.25-$1.40) — "Suitor" (Indie). Fair $4,000. Last week, "Wuthering Heights" (Cont) (reissue) (3d wk), $2,300.

Embassy (Loew) (567; $1.25-$2)—"Prize" (MGM). Socko $14,000. Last week, "Twilight of Honor" (MGM) (2d wk), $2,100 for six days.

Keith's (RKO) (1,838; $1-$1.49)—"Kings of Sun" (UA) (2d wk). Boffo $14,000 after initialing at $13,000.

McArthur (KB) (900; $1.25-$1.40) — "Murder at Gallop" (MGM) (7th wk). Oke $3,200. Last week, $3,600.

Ontario (KB) (1,240; $1-$2) — "Tom Jones" (UA). Smash $25,000. Last week, "Macbeth" (Indie) (reissue), $1,100.

Palace (Loew) (2,360; $1.25-$1.80) — "Move Over Darling" (20th). Smash $25,000 or close. Last week, "Wheeler Dealers" (MGM) (5th wk), $6,000 for six days.

Playhouse (TL) (459; $1.25-$1.80)—"Lord of Flies" (Cont) (2d wk). Hotsy $10,000 after $8,000 on opener.

Plaza (TL) (278; $1.25-$1.80) — "At Lil's Place" (Indie). Boff $8,000. Last week, "Male and Female" (Indie) and "Wild Is My Love" (Indie), $4,500.

Town (King) (800; $1.25-$1.80)—"Charade" (U). Wham $22,000 or over. Last week, "Secret Passion" (U) (2d wk), $1,500 for five days.

Trans-Lux (TL) (899; $1.49-$2)—"Cardinal" (Col) (2d wk). Smash $9,500 or above after $6,500 for first.

Uptown (SW) (1,300; $1.65-$2.75)—"How West Was Won" (MGM) (42d wk). Brisk $9,000. Last week, $8,500.

Warner (SW) (1,250; $1.50-$2.75)—"Cleopatra" (20th) (27th wk). Good $7,000 or near. Last week, $4,000

Yule Booms B'way; 'Texas' Sock 67G, 'Love' Great 70G, 'Darling' Wow 56G, 'Charade' Record 239G 4th at Hall

Broadway firstrun biz is booming in current session, aided by six new, major pictures and usual holiday patrons. Numerous cinemas are helped, too, by the fact that current weeks not only take in the Christmas Day upsurge but New Year's Eve. Others have that advantage plus New Year's Day trade. Weather mostly was favorable through Monday (30) night.

"Four For Texas," one of the bigger newcomers, looks sockeroo $67,000 on initial round, daydating the Paramount and Trans-Lux 52d Street. "Move Over Darling" hit wham $56,000 in the first session, daydating the Astor and Trans-Lux 85th Street.

"Love With a Proper Stranger" looks whopping $70,000 on initial session, daydating the State and Murray Hill. "Who's Sleeping in My Bed" landed a smash $18,000 in opening five days at the Victoria.

"Sword in Stone" is heading for a great $50,000 opening week at the Place. "Best of Cinerama," playing hardticket at the Cinerama, shapes to get a boffo $40,000 on first stanza for 21 shows.

Still mammoth champ is "Charade" with Xmas stageshow, which is heading for new alltime high for one week with $239,000 in current (fourth) round at the Music Hall. This tops the old record of $234,000 made by "Bye, Bye Birdie" last Easter. Pic duplicated the non-holiday high of the second week last Saturday (28) by soaring to $40,800 on that day. Bill continues on.

"The Victors," which hit $37,500 opening week at the Criterion, did even better in second session by registering a great $26,000 in first three days of first holdover round. "The Cardinal" looks to hit a huge $58,000 in third round at the DeMille, biggest of engagement.

"It's a Mad World" soared to a giant $72,000 in sixth stanza at the Warner. "Love on a Pillow" pushed to nice $20,000 in second week, daydating the Forum and Fine Arts.

"Kings of Sun," playing 19 United Artists Premiere showcase houses, soared to $162,537 in first five days ended Sunday (29).

"Move Over Darling," daydating in some 18 houses in Greater New York, shapes $282,498 for first five days, indicating popularity of this pic.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,094; $1.25-$2)—"Move Over, Darling" (20th) (2d wk). First week ending Dec. 31 looks like great $42,000 or near. Also at Trans-Lux 85th Street.

Cinerama (Loew) (1,552; $1.50-$3)—"Best of Cinerama" (Cinerama) (2d wk). Initial round finished Tuesday (31) was socko $40,000 or thereabouts for 21 performances.

Criterion (Moss) (1,520; $1.50-$2.50) — "The Victors" (Col) (2d wk). First three days of this week hit wow $26,000 after $37,500 for opening week ended Dec. 26. Stays on, natch!

DeMille (Reade) (1,463; $1.50-$3.50)—"The Cardinal" (Col) (3d wk). This round ending Wednesday (1) looks mighty $58,000 or over for 19 shows after $37,000 for second week, helped by two extra matinees. Continues on.

Embassy (Guild Enterprises) (500; $1.50-$2.50) — "Not Tonite, Henry" (Janus) (3d wk). This week winding Friday (3) looks like good $9,000 after $10,000 for second round.

Forum (Norel) (813; $1.25-$1.80)—"Love on Pillow" (Col) (3d wk). Initial holdover stanza finished Sunday (29) was nice $13,000 after $12,000 for opener. Daydating with Fine Arts.

Palace (RKO) (1,642; $1.25-$2)—"Sword in Stone" (BV). First round ended Tuesday (31) was great $50,000 or close. Stays on.

Paramount (AB-PT) (3,665; $1-$2)—"Four For Texas" (WB). First session completed Tuesday (31) was boffo $55,000 or near. Daydating with Trans-Lux 52d Street.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (6,200; 95-$2.75) — "Charade" (U) and annual Christmas stageshow (4th wk). This session ending Wednesday (1) and taking ing in New Year's Eve looks to soar to $239,000 or over, new alltime high for any week here. Old high was $234,000. Third was $193,200, snowstorm Monday, with crippled traffic, hurting. Continues on.

Rivoli (UAT) (1,545; $2.50-$5.50)—"Cleopatra" (20th) (30th wk). The 29th week finished Tuesday (31) looks like smash $30,000 or close after $23,000 for 28th session.

State (Loew) (1,850; $1.50-$2.50)—"Love With Proper Stranger" (Par). Initial round concluded Tuesday (31) was wow $52,000 or close. Daydating with Murray Hill. Holds on, of course.

Victoria (City Inv.) (1,003; $1.25-$2)—"Who's Sleeping in My Bed" (Par). First five days ended Sunday (29) was boffo $18,000 or near. Stays on.

Warner (SW) (1,504; $2.50-$4.80)—"It's a Mad World" (UA) (7th wk). Sixth week ended Saturday (28) was giant $72,000 for 19 performances after $35,000 for fifth and 10 shows. The sixth round's total was biggest of run here.

First-Run Artie

Baronet (Reade) (430; $1.25-$2)—"Billy Liar" (Cont) (2d wk). First round completed Sunday (29) was socko $15,000 or better on initial week after it had played one week at the Coronet.

Beekman (Rugoff Th.) (590; $1.50-$2) — "Lawrence of Arabia" (Col) (m.o.) (3d wk). Second stanza fiinished Sunday (29) was big $12,400 after $8,500 for opener.

Cinema One (Rugoff Th.) (700; $1.50-$2)—"Tom Jones" (UA) (13th wk). The 12th round ended Sunday (29) was huge $42,000 after $26,200 for 11th week. The new high for 12th week was biggest of run and highest mark for any Eastside house.

Cinema Two (Rugoff Th.) (300; $1.50-$2) — "Ladybug, Ladybug" (UA) (2d wk). First stanza ended Sunday (29) was good $7,500.

Coronet (Reade) (599; $1.50-$2)—"To Bed or Not To Bed" (Cont) (2d wk). First session finished Satur-

(Continued on page 10)

'Charade' Great $30,000, Frisco; 'Texas' Mighty 49G; 'World' Huge 42G

San Francisco, Dec. 30.

In a week marked by some great showings by newcomers, "Charade" looks one of standouts with a wow take at Golden Gate. It has close competition from the upped-scale run of "It's a Mad World," which is rated smash in second at Orpheum. "Sword in Stone," another newie, looks great on opener at Paramount.

"Move Over Darling" is nice in first at Embassy and nearly as good at Mission Drive-In. "Four For Texas" shapes mighty daydating Warfield and Geneva Drive-In. "The Cardinal" looms great in second at St. Francis. "Tom Jones" is sockeroo in second at United Artists. "Kings of Sun" is rated solid in first holdover round at Coronet.

Estimates for This Week

Alexandria (United Calif.) (1,444; $5) — "Cleopatra" (20th (27th wk). Sock $12,000. Last week, $7,000.

Clay (Ros) (370; $1.49)—"Ladies Who Do" (Cont) (2d wk). Big $3,200. Last week, $2,200.

Coronet (United Calif.) (1,250; $2) — "Kings of Sun" (UA) (2d wk). Smash $11,500. Last week, $9,000.

El Rancho Drive-In (Affil.) (925 cars; $1.25 person) — "Kings of Sun" (UA) (2d wk). Hot $4,200. Last week, $5,000.

Embassy (Dibble - McLean) (1,400; $1.75)—"Move Over Darling" (20th). Hep $14,000. Last week, reruns.

Esquire (No. Coast) (846; $1.25-$1.50) — "Who's Minding Store" (Par). Fast $9,500. Last week, reruns.

Geneva Drive-In (Syufy) (910 cars; $1.25 person) — "Four For Texas" (WB). Fancy $13,000.

Golden Gate (RKO) (2,850; $1.25-$1.50)—"Charade" (U). Wow $30,000 or over. Last week, subruns.

Larkin (Ros) (384; $1.49)—"The

(Continued on page 10)

Mpls. Booms; 'Charade' Whopping 16G, 'Sword' Big 14G, 'Darling' Hep 15G

Milwaukee, Dec. 30.

The holiday period continues to spell good times for showhouses here, school vacation and Christmas shopping's end being among the upbeat factors. After the lengthy, extremely frigid wave, the current stretch of more moderate weather also is a help. Some more newcomers are a factor in the upsurge. At least four of the fresh entries rate above par. These are "Charade," "The Prize," "Move Over, Darling" and "Sword in the Stone" and all look in for longruns. "Charade" is rated mighty at the Mann.

The newcomers, together with such still highflying holdovers as "How West Was Won," "Who's Minding Store," "The Cardinal" and "Four for Texas" make for the strongest array of pix in some time. "Cardinal" is good in second at State while "Texas" looks sockero in second at Lyrie.

Estimates for This Week

Academy (Mann) (1,000; $1.25-$1.50) — "Sword in Stone" (BV). Mighty $14,000. Last week, house was dark.

Avalon (Frank) (Frank) (900; $1) —"Tropical Holiday" (Indie) and "Very Private Affair" (MGM) (subrun). Okay $1,400.

Century (Par) (1,300; $2.10-$3.50) — "Cleopatra" (20th) (27th wk). Stout $7,000. Last week, $6,000.

Cooper (CF) (905; $1.25-$2.50)— "How West Was Won" (MGM) (43d wk). Sock $14,000 Last week, $7,500.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; $1.25-$1.50) — "Move Over, Darling" (20th). Wham $15,000. Last week, "Old Dark House" (Col) and "Maniac" (Col), $1,600 at $1-$1.25 scale.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; $1.25-$1.50)— "Four for Texas" (WB) (2d wk). Socko $12,000. Last week, $11,000.

Mann (Mann) (1,000; $1.25-$1.50) —"Charade" (U). Mighty $16,000, best here in months. Last week, "Kings of Sun" (UA), $6,000.

Orpheum (Mann) (2,800; $1.25-$1.50) — "Who's Minding Store" (Par) (2d wk). Okay $6,000. Last week, $9,000.

Park (Mann) (1,000; $1.50) — "Ladies Who Do" (Cont). Nifty $4,000. Last week, "Auntie Mame" (WB) and "Summer Place" (WB) (reissues), $2,500.

State (Par) (2,200; $1.25-$1.50)— "Cardinal" (Col) (2d wk). Looks to push up to good $11,000. Last week, $10,000.

Suburban World (Mann) (800; $1.25)—"Suitor" (Atl). Nice $3,000. Last week, "Lord of Flies" (Cont) (10th wk), $1,000.

World (Mann) (400; $1.25-$1.50) —"Prize" (MGM). Corking $8,000. Last week, "Wheeler Dealers" (MGM) (6th wk), $2,500.

SAN FRANCISCO

(Continued from page 9)

Suitor" (Indie) (2d wk). Big $3,100. Last week, $2,100.

Metro (United Calif.) (1,000; $1.75-$2)—"8½" (Emb) (7th wk). Hotsy $5,000. Last week, $4,000.

Mission Drive-In (Syufy) (950 cars; $1.25 person)—"Move Over Darling" (20th). Fair $5,000.

Music Hall (Ros) (364; $1.49-$1.75 — "Love on Pillow" (Col). Smash $4,400.

Orpheum (Cinedome) (1,439; $2.50-$3.50)—"It's a Mad World" (UA) (2d wk). Wow $42,000. Last week, $31,000.

Paramount (Par) (2,646; $1.50-$1.75) — "Sword in Stone" (BV). Great $24,000. Last week, "Palm Sprihgs Weekend" (WB) (4th wk), $5,500.

Presidio (Art Theatre Guild) (750; $1.25-$1.50) — "Murder at Gallop" (MGM). Good $4,000.

St. Francis (Par) (1,400; $2) — "The Cardinal" (Col) (2d wk). Great $19,000 or close. Last week, $22,000.

Stage Door (A-R) (444; $1.75-$2) —"Lawrence of Arabia" (Col) (2d wk). Good $6,000. Last week, $5,000.

United Artists (No. Coast) (1,148; $2-$2.40) — "Tom Jones" (UA) (2d wk). Boffo $24,000. Last week, $20,000.

Vogue (S. F. Theatres) (365; $2) —"Knife in Water" (Kana) (2d wk). Big $5,200. Last week, $3 500.

Warfield (FWC) (2,656; $1.25-$1.50) — "Four for Texas" (WB). Great $36,000.

PORTLAND, ORE.

(Continued from page 8)

"Bye Bye Birdie" (Col) (reissue). Torrid $9,000. Last week, "Irma La Douce" (UA) (21st wk), $4,000.

Laurelhurst (Cruikshank) (650; $1.25) — "Kings of Sun" (UA) and "Summer Holiday" (UA). Nifty $5,500. Last week, "McLintock" (UA) and "Mouse On Moon" (Indie) (reissue) (4th wk), $3,100.

Music Box (Hamrick) (640; $1-$1.50) — "Who's Minding Store" (Par) and "Last Train Gun Hill" (Par) (reissue). Loud $8,000. Last week, "All In A Night's Work" (Par) and "Breakfast At Tiffany's" (Par) (reissues), $2,300.

Orpheum (Evergreen) (1,536; $1-$1.49) — "Sword In Stone" (BV). Torrid $18,000 or over. Last week, "Samson and Slave Queen" (AI) and "Goliath Sins of Babylon" (AI), $5,800.

Paramount (Port-Par) (1,406; $2-$3.50) — "Cleopatra" (20th (27th wk). Good $9,000. Last week, $5,-100.

CINCINNATI

(Continued from page 8)

"Cleopatra" (20th) (27th wk). Nice $7,500, with extra matinees, Last week, $5,000.

Guild (Vance) (272; $1.25) — "Small World Sammy Lee" (Indie). Big $2,400. Last week, "Devil and 10 Commandments" (Indie) (2d wk), $1,800 in 10 days.

Hyde Park Art (Cin-T-Co) (700; $1.25) — "Carry On Regardless" (Indie). Fair $1,300.

Keith's (Cin-T-Co) (700; $1.25-$1.50) — "Sword In Stone" (BV). Smash $20,000 or close, for biggest here in months. Last week, "McLintock" (UA) (4th wk), $4,500.

Palace (RKO) (2,600; $1.25-$1.50) —"King of Sun" (UA). Big $11,-000 or near. Last week, "Take Her, She's Mine" (20th) (5th wk), six days, $5,500.

Twin Drive-In (Cin-T-Co) (West side only; 800 cars; $1)—"McLintock" (UA) (subrun) and "Thundering Wheels" (Indie) (reissue). So-so $3,000. Last week, "Battle of Worlds" (Indie) and "Lust to Kill" (Indie), $1,500, a winter low.

Valley (Cin-T-Co) (1,275; $1.50) —"Move Over Darling" (20th). Sweet $14,000 or thereabouts. Last week, "Yum Yum Tree" (Col) (5th wk), $5,800 in 5 days.

BROADWAY

(Continued from page 9)

day (28) was wow $19,800. Here after it had played a few days at the Baronet.

Fifth Ave. Cinema (Rugoff Th.) (250; $1.25-$2) — "Hellelujah of Hills (Indie) (2d wk). This round winding Jan. 1 looks to hit okay $4,300 after $6,000 for opener.

Fine Arts (Davis) (468; $1.80-$2) —"Love on Pillow" (Col) (3d wk). Second frame ended Sunday (29) was solid $7,000 after $6,300 for first week.

Guild (Guild) (450; $1-$1.75)— "Thomasina" (BV) (4th wk). Third week ended Tuesday (31) was smash $17,000 or close after $13,-000 for second.

Murray Hill (Rugoff Th.) (565; $1.50-$2) — "Love With Proper Stranger" (Par) (2d wk). First session ended Tuesday (31) was great $18,000 of near. Daydating with State.

Paris (Pathe Cinema) (568; $1.50-$2)—"America, America" (WB) (2d wk). First stanza ended Thursday (26) was trim $13,500.

Plaza (Lopert) (525; $1.50-$2)— "City Lights" (Indie) (reissue) (6th wk). Fifth round ended Monday (30) was great $20,000 after $12,000 for fourth. With youngsters out of school, biz naturally is perking for fifth week.

Sutton (Rugoff Th.) (561; $1.50-$2)—"The Victors" (Col) (2d wk). This frame finishing Jan. 1 is heading for big $15,000 after $13,000 for opener. Stays on. Daydating with Criterion.

54th Street East (Reade) (456; $1.50-$2)—"High and Low" (Toho) (2d wk). First round ended Monday (30) was solid $10,000 or near. Also playing the Toho where now just winding its fifth week.

Toho Cinema (Toho) (299; $1.50-$2)—"High and Low" (Toho) (5th wk). This session finished Monday (30) was big $7,000 after $6,500 for fourth. Now also playing several small artles. Continues on.

Tower East (Loew) (588; $1.50-$2)—"Fantasia" (BV) (reissue) (9th wk). Eighth week ended Monday (30) was great $12,000 or near after $8,500 for seventh.

Trans-Lux East (T-L) (600; $1.25-$2)—"Act One" (WB). First week ending Thursday (2) looks like good $11,000 or close.

Trans-Lux 52d St. (T-L) (540; $1.25-$2)—"Four For Texas" (WB). Initial round completed Tuesday (31) was big $12,000. Holds on, naturally. Daydating with Paramount.

Trans-Lux 85th St. (T-L) (550; $1.25-$2)—"Move Over Darling" (20th). First stanza ended Tuesday (31) was socko $14,000 or close. Daydating with Astor. Continues on indef.

World (Perfecto) (390; 90-$1.50) —"Traveling Light" (Vic) and "Amorous Sex" (Mishkin) (10th wk). Ninth week finished Monday (30) was swash $7,500 or near after $6,000 for eighth.

LOS ANGELES

(Continued from page 8)

(Par). Wham $27,000. Last week, with Warren's, Pix, Four Star, "Kings of Sun" (UA), "Invincible Gladiator" (7 Arts) $27,300.

Baldwin, Crest, Hillstreet, Iris (State-Metropolitan-FWC) (1,800; 750; 2,752; 825; $1-$2)—"Sword in Stone" (BV) and "3 Stooges Go Round World in Daze" (Col). Lusty $29,000 or close. Last week, Crest, "Lawrence of Arabia" (Col) 5th wk), $3,000. Iris, "Saturday Night, Sunday Morning" (Cont), "Taste of Honey" (Cont) (reissues), $3,000.

Los Angeles, Wiltern (Metropolitan-SW) (2,049; 2,344; $1-$1.49) —"Four for Texas" (WB) and "Man from Galveston" (WB). Superb $30,000. Last week, with Hollywood, Loyola, "Haunted Palace" (AI), "Mind Benders" (AI) $18,700.

Warren's, Hollywood, El Rey, Loyola (Metropolitan-FWC) (1,757; 856; 856; 1,298; $1-$1.49)—"Move Over Darling" (20th) and "Harbor Lights" Indie). Whopping $33,000 or close.

Egyptian (UATC) (1,392; $1.25-$3.50)—"The Cardinal" (Col) (2d wk). Superb $30,000. Last week, $28,900.

Fine Arts (FWC) (631; $2-$2.40) —"Thomasina" (BV) (2d wk). Nice $6,000. Last week, $7,000.

Pix, Four Star (Prin-UATC) (756; 868; $1-$1.49) — "Kings of Sun" (UA) and "Invincible Gladiator" (7 Arts) (2d wk). Busy $11,-500.

Lido (FWC) (876; $1.$1.49) — "Ladybug, Ladybug" (UA) (3d wk). Fair $4,000. Last week, $3,500.

Orpheum, Vogue (Metropolitan-FWC) (2,213; 810; $1-$1.49)—"Tom Jones" (UA) (5th wk, Orpheum; 1st wk, Vogue). Giant $27,400. Last week, Vogue, "Bros. Grimm" (MGM), "Jumbo" (MGM) (reissues), $2,500.

Cinerama (Pac) (915; $1.49-$3.50) —"It's a Mad World" (UA) (8th wk). Wham $30,200. Last week, $30,100.

Pantages (RKO) (1,512; $2.50-$5.50) — "Cleopatra" (20th) (28th wk). Torrid $35,700. Last week, $20,500.

Warner Hollywood (SW) (1,291; $1.25-$2.80) — "How West Was Won" (MGM) (45th wk). Smash $29,000. Last week, $26,000.

Open RKO-70, Denver

Denver, Dec. 30.

RKO International 70, a $200,-000 conversion of the $2,000,000 former RKO Orpheum here opened Christmas Day. Lights, bands, radio and live television, combined with the presence of local and state dignitaries. Harry Mandel, RKO Theatres prexy, was here for the opening.

The conversion to modernity is complete — from 70mm 6 track stereo sound equipment in the booth to giant 30x60 foot screen and surround curtain for the auditorium. The seating has been reduced from 2,690 to about 1,300 providing for greater comfort and a more intimate theatre.

William T. Hastings, for 17 years manager of the Orpheum continues as managing director of the new situation.

Opening booking is Otto Preminger's "The Cardinal." (Columbia.)

'Charade' Smasheroo 20G, Det.; 'Prize' 15G, 'Sword' Fast 17G, 'Darling' 18G

PHILADELPHIA

(Continued from page 8)

$1.80) — "Sword in Stone" (BV). Brisk $23,000 or near. Last week, "Fun in Acapulco" (Par) (3d wk), $4,500.

Stanley (SW) (1,450; $2.50-$3)— "Cleopatra" (20th) (27th wk). Fat $18,000. Last week, $8,200.

Stanton (SW) (1,483; 95-$1.80)— "Four for Texas" (WB) (2d wk). Good $12,000. Last week, $14,000 for 5 days.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (500; 95-$1.80) —"Charade" (U). Record $24,000. Last week, "Take Her, She's Mine" (20th) (5th wk), $1,800 in 5 days.

World (Rugoff) (499; 95-$1.80)— "Devil and 10 Commandments" (Indie). Good $3,800. Last week, "David and Lisa" (Cont) and "Balcony" (Cont) (reissues) (2d wk), $2,800.

Yorktown (SW) (1,000; $1.49)— "No, My Darling Daughter" (Indie). Mild $3,000. Last week, "Rising of Moon" (Indie), $3,000.

BOSTON

(Continued from page 8)

—"Erotica" (Indie) and "Eve and Handyman" (Indie) (reruns) (2d wk). Mild $2,400. Last week, $3,100.

Gary (Sack) (1,277; $2-$3.90) — "Cleopatra" (20th) (m.o.) (7th wk). Oke $8,000. Last week, $6,000.

Mayflower (ATC) (689; 90-$1.50) — "Love on Pillow" (Col). Fast $7,000. Last week, "Oklahoma" (reissue), $2,500.

Memorial (RKO) (3,000; 90-$1.50) —"Charade" (U). Wham $30,000 or over. Last week, "Great Imposter" (U) and "Freud: Secret Passion" (U) (reissues), $7,000.

Music Hall (Sack) (4,300; 90-$1.80) — "Sword in Stone" (BV). Big $31,000. Last week, closed.

Orpheum (Loew) (2,900; 90-$1.65) —"The Prize" (MGM). Opens Tuesday (31). Last week, "Kings of Sun" (UA), hot $11,000.

Paramount (NET) (2,357; 90-$1.65)—"Four for Texas" (WB) (2d wk). Smash $15,000. Last week, $17,000.

Pilgrim (ATC) (1,909; 75-$1.25) —"Bachelor Tom Peeping" (Indie) and "Stripper" (20th) (2d wk). Perky $5,000. Last week, $7,400.

Park Square (Indie) (300; $1.80) —"Ladies Who Do" (Cont). Hot $5,000. Last week, "My Life to Live" (Union) (5th wk), $2,400.

Saxon (Sack) (1,000; $2-$3.90) — "Cardinal" (Col) (3d wk). Second week was wow $40,000.

West End Cinema (E. M. Lowe) (500; 75-$1.50) — "Conjugal Bed" (Embassy) (8th wk). Eighth week started Friday (27). Seventh was oke $3,100.

CHICAGO

(Continued from page 9)

Adam and Eve" (Indie) and "Girls Without Rooms" (Indie) (2d wk), $3,500.

Oriental (Indie) (3,400; 90-$1.80) —"Kings of Sun" (UA) (2d wk). Stout $22,000. Last week, $28,000.

Roosevelt (B&K) (1,400; 90-$1.80) —"Sword In Stone" (BV) and "Disneyland After Dark" (BV). Boffo $32,000. Last week, "Wheeler Dealers" (MGM) (5th wk), $8,000.

State-Lake (B&K) (2,400; $1.50-$4)—"Cleopatra" (20th) (27th wk). Okay $19,000. Last week, $18,000.

Surf (H&E Balaban) (684; $1.50-$1.80) — "Family Diary" (MGM) (2d wk). Good $3,000. Last week, $3,500.

Todd (Todd) (1,089; 90-$1.80)— "Tom Jones" (UA) (2d wk). Torrid $22,000 or close. Last week, $17,500.

Town (Teitel) (640; $1.25-$1.50) —"My Life To Live" (Union) (2d wk). Brisk $3,500. Last week, $4,000.

United Artists (B&K) (1,700; 90-$1.80) — "Four For Texas" (WB) Wham $32,000 or over. Last week, "Yum Yum Tree" (Col) (8th wk), $9,000.

Woods (Essaness) (1,200; 90-$1.80) — "Cardinal" (Col). Wow $39,000. Last week, "Take Her, She's Mine" (20th) (4th wk), $11,000.

World (Teitel) (608; 90-$1.80)— "My Life To Live" (Union) (2d wk). Busy $6,500. Last week, $6,000.

Detroit, Dec. 30.

Downtown firstrun biz is on upbeat this week. "Move Over Darling" is hotsy initial unwinding at the Palms. "Charade" looks wow on opener at Mercury. "Cardinal" shapes great in second round at Madison.

"The Prize" looms big in first stanza at newly renovated Adams. "Comedy of Terrors" shapes big at the Fox on opener. "Sword in Stone" is rousing at the Grand Circus for first.

Estimates for This Week

Fox (Downtown Fox Corp) (5,041; $1.25-$1.49) — "Comedy of Terrors" (AI) and "Madmen of Mandoras" (Indie). Big $18,000 or close. Last week, "Goliath and Sins of Babylon" (AI) and "Samson and Slave Queen" (AI) (2d wk), $6,000.

Michigan (United Detroit) (4,926; $1.25-$1.49)—"Kings of Sun" (UA) (2d wk). Good $13,000. Last week, $12,500.

Palms (UD) (2,995; $1.25-$1.49)— "Move Over Darling" (20th). Sock $18,000 or near. Last week, "Flipper" (MGM) and "Captain Sinbad" (Indie), $4,000 in five days.

Madison (UD) (1,408; $1.25-$1.49) —"Cardinal" (Col) (2d wk). Tremendous $27,000. Last week, $23,-000.

Grand Circus (UD) (1,400; $1.25-$1.49)—"Sword in Stone" (BV) and "Disneyland After Dark" (BV). Rugged $17,000 or near. Last week, "Take Her, She's Mine" (20th) (6th wk), $5,000.

Adams (Community) (1,450; $1.23-$1.50)—"The Prize" (MGM). Big $15,000 or close. Last week, theatre closed for facelift.

United Artists (UA) (1,667; $1.50-$3.50) — "Cleopatra" (20th) (27th wk). Steady at $6,500. Last week, $6,700.

Music Hall (Beacon Enterprises) (1,213; $1.25-$2.80) — "How West Was Won" (MGM) (44th wk). Great $19,000 or over. Last week, $18,500.

Mercury (Suburban Detroit) (1,468; $1-$1.80) — "Charade" (U). Wow $20,000 or better. Last week, "Yum Yum Tree" (Col), $5,200 in four days of seventh week.

Trans Lux Krim (Trans Lux) (980; $1.49) — "All Way Home" (Par) (2d wk). Oke $5,000. Last week, $4,700.

KANSAS CITY

(Continued from page 9)

in first four days. Last week, "Kings of Sun" (UA), $8,500—in 10 days.

Rockhill (Art Theatre Guild) (821; $1-$1.50)—"Suitor" (Indie). Light $1,600. Last week "Lord of Flies" (Cont) (6th wk—5 days), $1,600.

Roxy (Durwood) (664; 75-$1.50) —"The Prize" (MGM). Great $13,000. Last week, "Wheeler Dealers" (MGM) (6th wk). $4,000.

63d Street (E&S) (1,500 cars), Shawnee and Leawood (Dickinson) (1,000; 750 cars), Hiway 40 (General) (1,000 cars); Centre (Commonwealth) (508; $1.25); Isis, Vista, Fairway (FMW) (1,360; 700; 700); Waldo (Rhoden) (1,000) ($1-$1.25); Dickinson, Overland and Englewood (Dickinson) (700; 700; 850; $1 each)—"Who's Minding Store" (Par). Bright $40,000. Last week, playing subruns, except Centre, which opened new Christmas Day.

Kimo (Dickinson) (504; $1.50)— "Devil and 10 Commandments" (Union). Flashy $3,000. Last week, subruns.

SEATTLE

(Continued from page 9)

(Col) (2d wk). Good $9,000. Last week, $11,000.

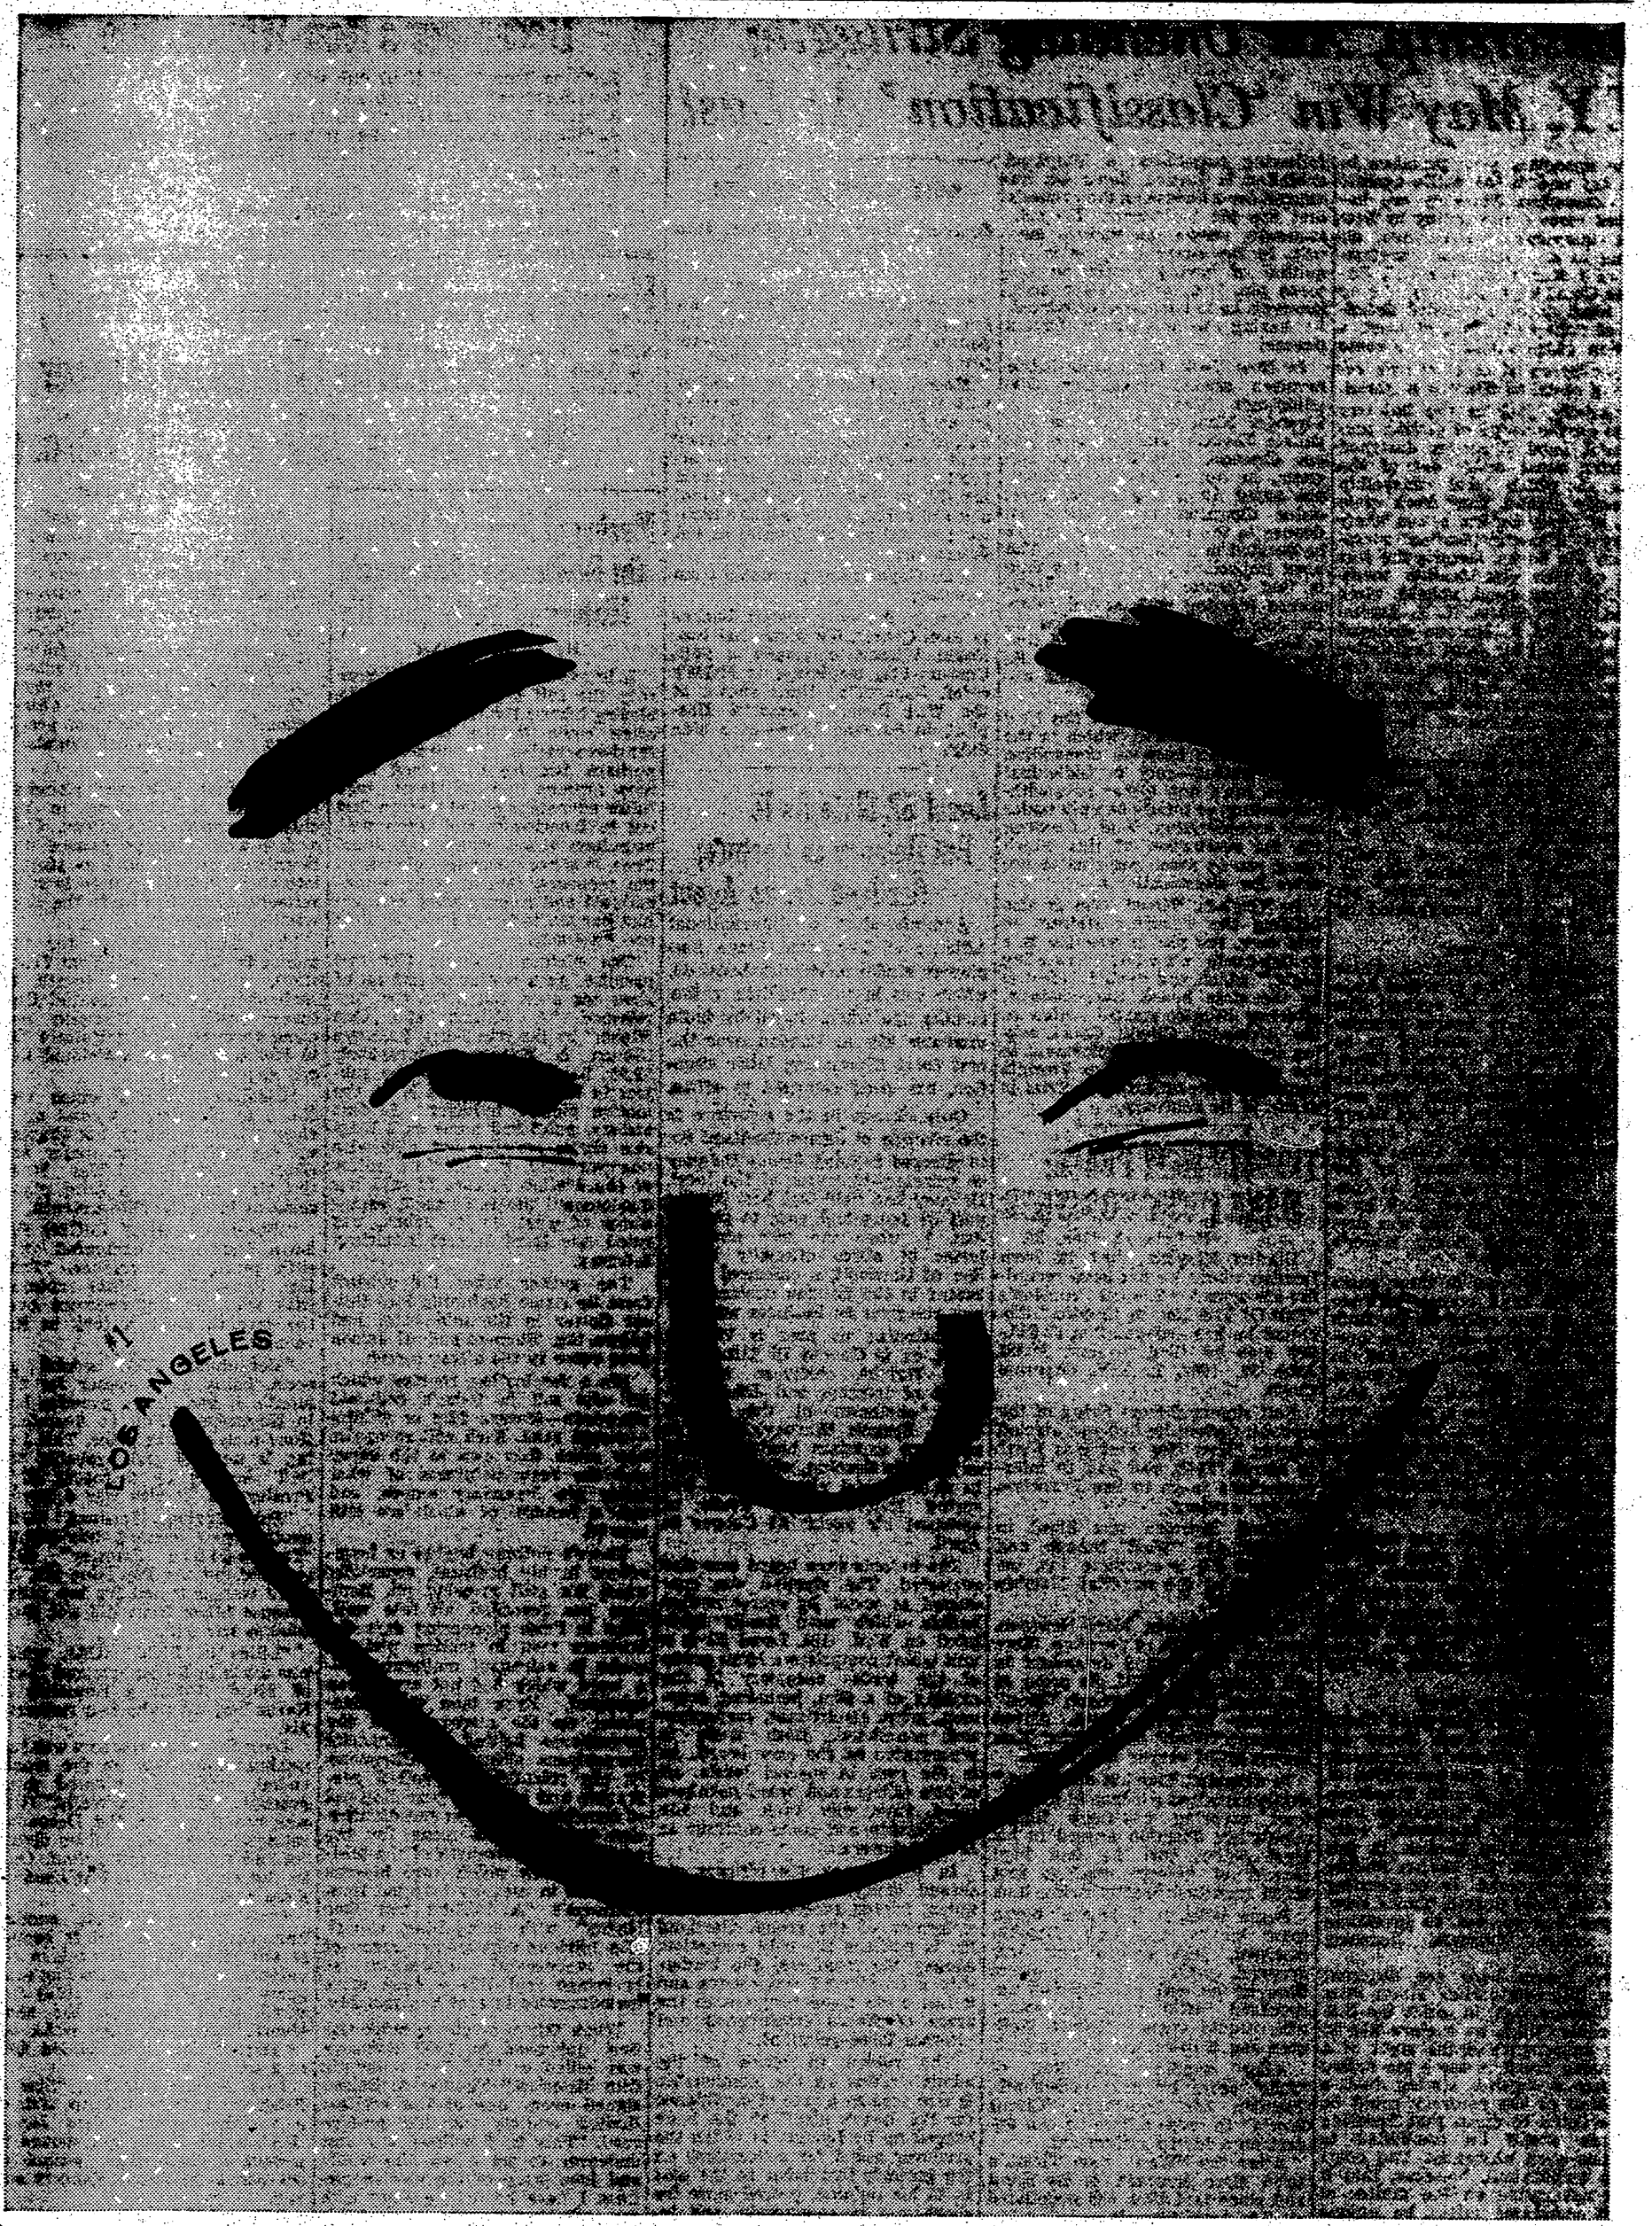
Martin Cinerama (Martin Theatres) (870; $1.25-$2.20)—"How West Was Won" (MGM), (39th wk). Big $10,000 or near. Last week, $8,000.

Music Box (Hamrick) (738; $1.50-$1.75)—"Irma La Douce" (UA). (23d wk). Solid $6,500 or near. Last week, $7,400.

Music Hall (Hamrick) (2,200; $1.25-$1.50) — "Four for Texas" (WB) and "Man from Galveston" (WB) (2d wk). Stout $9,000. Last week, $8,500.

Orpheum (Hamrick) (2,200; $1.25-$1,50)—"Charade" (U). Sockeroo $11,000 or over. Last week, "Kiss of Vampire" (U) and "Sword of "Lancelot" (U), $2,800.

Paramount (Fox-Evergreen) (3,-000; $1.25-$1.50) — "Sword in Stone" (BV) and "Great Chase (Cont). Big $12,000 or close.



NO WONDER THEY'RE SMILING FROM COAST TO COAST!

They brought the New Year in with DORIS DAY, JAMES GARNER and POLLY BERGEN in 20th's great comedy sensation "MOVE OVER, DARLING"—#1 ALL OVER!

Censorship, An Unending Struggle; N.Y. May Win 'Classification' At Last

The upcoming year promises to be a key one in the battle against film censorship. Not only are important cases now pending in New York, Maryland and Virginia, all having to do with prior examination of features, but the U.S. Supreme Court hopefully may, at long last, hand down a decisive definition of "obscenity," or, at least, a decision which would impose some uniformity on state standards regarding so-called obscene material.

Ironically, just as the industry seems on the verge of getting precedental legal decisions designed to bring some order out of the chaos in which local censorship currently stands, New York state now, as never before, seems likely to get a "film classification" measure on the books. Despite the fact that no film classification measure has ever been upheld when tested in the courts, N. Y. Assemblyman Luigi R. Marano declared last week that his Joint Legislative Committee on Offensive and Obscene Material would sponsor a classification measure largely based on recommendations of the N. Y. Board of Regents.

Under these recommendations, the N. Y. education and penal statutes would be amended to allow the film licensing division to recommend as "suitable" pix for school age children, and provide for penalties to exhibs who allowed kids to see "unsuitable" pix if they were not accompanied by parent or guardian.

'The Lovers'

The matter of standards, which has always been the principal issue in every court battle against film classification, also figures prominently in the case skedded to be heard by the U.S. Supreme Court. This is the appeal of Ohio theatre manager Nico Jacobellis, who was convicted in 1960 for having shown an "obscene" film ("The Lovers") in Cleveland Heights. Case, which was already heard once by the court, is to be re-argued in conjuction with an appeal filed by a California bookseller who was convicted for selling Henry Miller's "Tropic of Cancer."

Of great interest in these cases will be the high court's attitude towards its own ruling in the Roth vs. United States case. The precedental Roth decision, cited in almost every censor fight since, specifies that a book, film, etc., must be judged as a whole, and not for isolated parts, and thus, in effect, says that censors cannot just snip out pieces of a film but, rather, must pass the entire work or restrict the entire work as obscene.

However, the Roth also decision specifies that that a work may be judged obscene if its violates "contemporary community standards," without defining the scope of the "community." This is a point under attack in attorney Ephraim London's defense of Jacobellis in "The Lovers" case.

Bilgrey's Foray

Meanwhile, the Maryland Court of Appeals last week heard attorney Felix Bilgrey's arguments in his appeal of the conviction of Baltimore exhib Ronald Freedman who exhibited the innocuous Irish pic, "Revenge at Daybreak," without an exhibition license. In this fight, in which the Motion Picture Assn. of America is cooperating with the indie distrib, Times Film, Bilgrey has set out to invalidate the entire Maryland licensing statute.

The issues here are different from Bilgrey's earlier Times Film vs. Chicago case, in which the U.S. Supreme Court, by a close five to four ruling, upheld the right of a licensing board to see a pic before issuing a license, stating that a decision to the contrary could be interpreted to mean that licensing boards would be compelled to license even obscenity. The court then emphasized, however, that it was not ruling on the matter of what standards might be upheld in the baning of a film.

In the Maryland case, unlike Chicago where the content of the film was not an issue, the content of "Revenge at Daybreak" is part of the case which has to do with the exhib's arrest on a criminal charge. It is admittedly a test case, but, says Bilgrey, "there is no need to comply with an invalid requirement (the request for a license) in order to test the law."

To emphasize the inequity of the Maryland statute, Bilgrey cites the following possibility: a Maryland exhibitor is turned down on his request for a license on the grounds that the pic is obscene. He subsequently shows the picture anyway. In the court trial, he is acquitted of having shown an obscene pic. Immedately afterwards, however, he is tried, and convicted, for having shown a film without a license!

In New York, the censor battle revolves around Trans-Lux Distributing's Danish import, "A Stranger Knocks," which the Appellate Division earlier ruled was not obscene. The Board of Regents, in appealing the decision, has asked for a stay in the court order directing it to issue an license to the pic. This matter will be decided in a matter of days. The most important aspect of the case is that despite two controversial scenes (dealing with sexual intercourse), the Appellate division (in a four to one decision) ruled that the picture must be judged in its entirety and, as such, is not obscene.

It seems apparent that the New York licensing board, which in the past has been keen on demanding —and getting—cuts in individual scenes, must now either pass without cutting, or totally ban pix under their consideration. (And, of course, it's the realization of this which has given so much impetus to the drive for classification.)

In Virginia, Times Film is also battling the licensing statute. In this case, the pic in question is a British-made nudie, "Traveling Light," which was denied a license by the state board. Subsequently, attorney Bilgrey started action in the Richmond Circuit Court, asking for a declaratory judgement to the effect that the entire Virginia statute is unconstitutional. Trial is expected in February.

TIOMKIN-MGM PEACE: MAKE MUSIC TOGETHER

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Dimitri Tiomkin, just in from London where he has been recording his score for Samuel Bronston's "Fall Of The Roman Empire," disclosed he has dropped that $2,630,000 suit he filed against MGM June 27, 1962, in N.Y. Supreme Court.

Suit stemmed from firing of the composer when he had just started scoring "How The West Was Won" in March, 1962, and had to interrupt chore to go to San Francisco for eye surgery.

Alfred Newman was hired to complete the "West" tuneup, and Newman did a complete job, using none of the material Tiomkin had started.

Alfred's brother, Marc Newman, agented Tiomkin at the time. Marc Newman was named defendant in suit along with MGM, its prexy at that time, Joseph R. Vogel; "West" producer Bernard Smith, Alfred Newman; "West" choirmaster Ken Darby; MGM veepee Ray Klune.

In dropping Tiomkin off "West," studio exercised a clause in his contract covering two-week illness stipulation. Tiomkin argued in his legal action that he had kept abreast of "West" scoring; that MGM breached pact in firing him.

Peace talks, it is known, began some weeks ago and Tiomkin emerged, just before suit was dropped, with a new contract whereby he will tune up two unspecified MGM pix. He meets with studio veepee Robert Weitman Jan. 6 to set the first project.

After winding recording of "Fall" score by next mid-month, Tiomkin has Bronston's "Circus World" to score before he can undertake a Metro assignment.

After the "West" row, Tiomkin fired Marc Newman as his agent and since that time has negotiated all his deals himself.

Asked how and why the turnabout in feelings toward MGM, Tiomkin said, "they have changed management"—obvious allusion to fact company prexy now is Robert O'Brien. Former prexy, Vogel, was named in the suit.

"Escape from Hell Island" is new tab for Crown International's release of Mark Stevens starrer filmed under title of "Man in the Water."

ROSE GOYETTE, BOOKER

Succeeds Moore Who Moves Into Meat Trade

Albany, Dec. 30.

"Film Center" here has a new femme booker, Rose Goyette, appointed by United Artists to replace Jimmy Moore, resigned.

Moore, who started as a booker with Warner Bros. and advanced to salesman, before World War II, quit to enter an established Albany meat market business with his brother-in law. He had also sold for WB in Boston; for Paramount and Columbia, in the Albany territory; served several months as UA datesetter.

Miss Goyette was promoted from secretary.

She is the only distaff booker in Film Center, but Metro has two. Helen Wisper, originally a 20th Century-Fox employee, is MGM's chief. She "sets" films shown at the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital, in Saranac Lake—as a side duty.

Local 52 Slate As Is But Delaney to Pasture; Gartland Jr. as Agent

Administration of International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees studio mechanics Local 52, which was in the limelight a few months ago when chided by indie producer Ely A. Landau over the east coast filmmaking labor situation, has been returned to office.

Only change in the structure is the election of James Gartland Sr. to succeed retiring James Delaney as secretary-treasurer of the local. Delaney had held that post for the past 37 years and goes to pasture Jan. 1, when the new one-year terms of office officially begin. Son of Gartland, a principal combatant in the Landau business, he was returned as business agent.

Continuing as prez is William Swift, as is George Di Titta, v.p.; Tom Wright, chairman of the board of trustees and John Kennedy, chairman of the benefit board. Francis (Barney) Brady is again an assistant business agent as is Eddie Scanlon, who was voted in at a special election held last spring following the death of assistant biz agent Al Cooper in April.

The union's exec board was also reelected. The election was conducted as usual by secret mailed ballots which were finally tabulated on Wed. (18). Local 52 is a unit which comprises a large group of the trades necessary in the making of a film, including propmen, grips, electricians, carpenters and soundmen. Each trade is represented on the exec board. As is the case in several locals, all of 52's officers and board members came from the rank and file membership and some continue as active laborers.

In most cases, the officers are second generation leaders of the union, having succeeded the elder statesmen of the group. Gartland Sr. is perhaps the only exception. Among the members, the leadership is considered progressive and it has made some progress in the areas of Negro employment and internal labor relations.

The return to office of the administration by the membership is also seen as a vote of confidence for the body's stand on the issue stirred up by Landau in which the producer asked for concessions on the grounds that labor in the east is, in his opinion, geared more for short-term tv commercial and industrial production than for features, which generally run for a couple of months. The 52 position was that it would only make concessions as to weekly rather than daily rates and such if producers could come up with long-term work guarantees.

Some further talks on this subject were held but then the whole thing sort of fizzled out and not much has been forthcoming on the matter for a while now.

December's Non-Whine Nine

1. "Yum Yum Tree" (Col) (9th wk).
2. "Cleopatra" (20th) (27th wk).
3. "How West Was Won" (MGM) (53d wk).
4. "Wheeler Dealers" (MGM) (8th wk).
5. "Take Her, She's Mine" (20th) (7th wk)
6. "McLintock" (UA) (7th wk).
7. "Fun in Acapulco" (Par) (5th wk).
8. "Palm Springs Weekend" (WB) (6th wk).
9. "Incredible Journey" (BV) (8th wk).

Happy Days Under 'Yum Yum Tree'; 'Cleo' (23 to 27 Wks) Rates as Deucer; December a Tale as Told Before

By MIKE WEAR

VARIETY's regular weekly boxoffice reports are summarised each month, retrospectively. Based on an average of 24 key situations, the source data constitute an adequate sampling of current releases but are not, of course, fully "definitive." An index of relative grossing strength in the U.S.-Canada market this monthly reprise does not pretend to express total rentals.

The usual doldrums sloughed biz ahead of Christmas in key cities reporting to VARIETY. Only a few new pictures braved the downbeat period. Pickup started late Christmas day. There is some reflection herewith as to the final week of December.

New national champ for the month is "Under Yum Yum Tree" (Col), which finished fourth in November. Comedy captured first three weeks in succession and came through with uniformly big to smash trade on individual key city showings.

"Cleopatra" (20th), which was No. 1 in November, wound up a close second although not shaping up too well in some major key cities. "How West Was Won" (MGM) wound up in third place, same as in the previous month.

"Wheeler Dealers" (MGM) finished fourth as compared with fifth place in November. "Take Her, She's Mine" (20th) captured fifth spot, an improvement over the seventh place it took in November.

"McLintock" (UA) wound up sixth, being a newcomer for the month. It had shown promise late in November. "Fun at Acapulco" (Par) took seventh place. This rating is unusual and probably the best showing by a recent Elvis Presley pic. It also was a newie.

"Palm Springs Weekend" (WB), another new entrant, was eighth. "Incredible Journey" (BV) rounded out the Top Nine pix. No more were selected for top rating because other films did not show enough strength.

"Lilies of Field" (UA), which was ninth in November; and "Lord of Flies" (Cont), a runnerup in November, were the two runnerup pix.

Long line of newcomers was just getting under way as the month ended, and many showed great promise. "It's a Mad World" (UA) was not placed in the December ratings because only out on distrib for two weeks to any extent. Only in the final week did it show in more than four keys.

"The Cardinal" (Col), another newcomer, did so well it copped second place the first week in circulation to any extent. In like category, "Four For Texas" (WB) captured third place in the same stanza. "Kings of Sun" (UA), out in release one week, landed fifth in a weekly rating.

In a similar situation, "Sins of Babylon" (AI) wound up 10th in a weekly survey. "Tom Jones" (UA), which finally got started on a tour of key cities, wound up seventh in a weekly VARIETY survey.

"Charade" (U), which has proved a record-breaker at the N.Y. Music Hall in its first three weeks, started duplicating its great showings with a string of playdates starting late in December.

"Conjugal Bed" (Embassy) was a runnerup pic two weeks running. "Irma La Douce" (UA) still was holding up on marathon runs in a few keys to finish as runnerup film several weeks. "Who's Minding Store" (Par) also started out like it might become a sizeable grosser.

Musing of Fame 'n' Fortune On Re-Reading Ramsaye's History of Early Film Biz

By ABEL GREEN

It is axiomatic that few pioneers reap the full fruits of their trailblazing labors; the rich rewards too often come to the second- and third-generation opportunists who, perhaps because of refined business acumen (or inflation), take fuller advantage of the pattern first cut to laboriously and often with boundless blood, sweat and tears. True, it is not infrequent that even the pioneers, for all their unpremidated and untrammeled courage just happen to be as lucky as they are visionary.

The picture business fits this premise. As a matter of fact all of show biz does. But since the just reissued "A Million and One Nights" by the late Terry Ramsaye (Simon & Schuster; paperback, $3.95; hardcover, $10) is the subject in hand, the accent is on the motion picture industry. In this history, published anew as a king-size single volume but otherwise unexpurgated, the onetime editor of the Motion Picture Herald has documented the fascinating beginnings of what, in its prime, was rated the third largest American industry.

The author takes the subject from its crude beginning into fullest flower in the mid-1920s, just before the Warners and Al Jolson gave voice to the silver screen.

It's a fascinating reprise which all who toil in today's celluloid vineyards—feature film or vidfilm —should read. Each will recognize how much they owe to the savvy and the resourcefulness of what today are legendary names, and only a handful of which are still around.

There's nothing benign or benevolent in big business, especially when it's still growing up. Ramsaye has recorded all this well. Even in those pioneering days the business men in motion pictures spoke in astronaut mathematics—a word which had not even been invented. Even then the name-power on the marquee was the powerhouse behind the financial shenanigans although, subsequently, the scientifically plotted geographic and regional parceling out of franchises, theatres and distribution arrangements made for the real economic strength of the business. Names which have become obscured in memory leap out from Ramsaye's "A Million and One Nights" with compelling appeal. The intrigue surrounding some of the resourceful shenanigans of backstage reel life is even more melodramatic in real business life.

When this two-volume work was first published in 1926 Ramsaye was hailed as "the first authentic film historian." Thomas A. Edison signed every one of the original limited edition and his preface read, "This is, I believe, the first endeavor to set down the whole and true story of the motion picture. I have been in contact with the author's researches through his years of preparation and I am aware of an unrelenting effort at exact fact. A high degree of detailed accuracy has been attained. Ramsaye's theories, opinions and deductions are his own." The Wizard of Menlo Park's words remain stet. S&S has been enterprising in reissuing "A Million and One Nights. Besides the $3.95 paperback there is a $10 hardcover edition. Both are pertinently illustrated.

Easy DOES IT! RAVE REVIEWS AND SMASH BUSINESS AT THE FESTIVAL THEATRE, N.Y.!

"NEVER HAS THE CHARM, CORRUPTION, DELIGHT AND DANGER OF THE RECKLESS LIFE BEEN MORE BRILLIANTLY PORTRAYED!

Gassman's performance is spectacular, Trintignant is equally good. An unforgettable ending."

—Archer Winsten, N. Y. Post

"SENSITIVE... COMPASSIONATE... MEMORABLE! AN UPPER CLASS 'LA DOLCE VITA'!

Dino Risi's fast-paced direction and, more important, the truths he underlines, give his uncluttered film meaning and poignancy."

—A. H. Weiler, N. Y. Times

"THE SLEEPER OF THE SEASON!

It is a sophisticated social comedy that races at a roaring pace to a climax of literally stunning power. It boasts not only Vittorio Gassman's fascinating and matchless performance, but also a stinging wit and brilliant comment."

—Judith Crist, N. Y. Herald Tribune

"'THE EASY LIFE' IS ONE OF THE MORE REWARDING SURPRISES IN THE FLOOD OF HOLIDAY FILMS!

Gassman gives a towering performance."

—Alton Cook, N.Y World-Telegram & Sun

"ONE OF THE MOVINGEST MOVING PICTURES EVER MADE!"

—Jack Thompson, N. Y. Journal-American

JOSEPH E. LEVINE presents

the Easy Life

(TITLED IN ITALY "IL SORPASSO")

starring VITTORIO GASSMAN
CATHERINE SPAAK
JEAN LOUIS TRINTIGNANT

Directed by DINO RISI
Produced by MARIO CECCHI GORI

AN EMBASSY PICTURES RELEASE

BOOK IT NOW!
...from Embassy

New York Sound Track

Joe Levine back from a Puerto Rico vacation today (Tues.). Incidentally, Fortune mag, is preparing a profile on him for the March issue . . . Herb Gillis given a testimonial in Baltimore last week by exhibs, salesmen and other members of the local film community trumpeting him for his sales work in that area on behalf of Paramount. He's coming to New York to head the "Fall of the Roman Empire" campaign and tributers journeyed from as far as Gotham, Philly and Pittsburgh to attend the Balto bash.

More than 550 reservations already are in for IFIDA's annual international film awards dinner-dance at the Americana Jan. 21, reports dinner chairman Dan Frankel . . . Harold Pinter's "The Guest," film version of his legit play, "The Caretaker," will be the next attraction at the Guild . . . 20th-Fox says "Cleopatra" racked up a new Manila record by taking in $47,094 in its first two weeks at the Ever Theatre there. Previous Manila two-week record was $44,000, though 20th doesn't say what the pic was.

Columbia has a new one upcoming with a trio of unsubtle comedians and this is the title: "The Three Stooges Meet the Gunslingers: Or, How the Stooges Won the Wild, Wild, Wild, Wild West." Barring unforseen difficulties, it will go into production in March.

Ann DeRagon, Strand Theatre, Plainfield, N.J., and Jon Doyle, Carlton Theatre, Red Bank, N.J., were top cash winners in Walter Reade Theatres' just concluded "big profit bonanza drive" . . . 20th-Fox homeoffice is being over-run these days by cute kids—all seeking roles as members of the Trapp family for the upcoming "Sound of Music" . . . Indie producer-director Larry Moyer did not ask guests at his New Year's Eve bash to sign releases—as he has in the past when planning to shoot his friends in cinema verite.

Twentieth-Fox exec veep Seymour Poe flies to the Coast on a one-day quickie this week to see a rough cut of "What A Way To Go." Later in January, when prez Darryl F. Zanuck returns from the Continent, Poe will make another biz swing along the London-Paris-Rome axis . . . Kanawha's import, "Knife in the Water," will be Poland's official entry in the foreign language Oscar derby.

Mike Hutner, UA pub manager, back from Florida yesterday (Mon.) . . . Otto Preminger back in New York after attending preems in London and Paris of "The Cardinal" . . . George Stevens' "The Greatest Story Ever Told" is now seen as world preeming in November, a schedule revision from the original June release notion.

George Pal off on a three-week tour of the South Pacific scouting locations for "Project 13" . . . Glenn Ford and his son, Peter, in town for the holidays . . . Another title from Col: "Hey There, It's Yogi Bear," this for the animated feature which had been called "Whistle Your Way Back Home" . . . "The Woods Were Full of Men," by Irma Lee Emmerson and Jean Muir, is a novel about one lone gal in a logging camp with 60 men, and the screen-rights interest out Hollywood way is running high.

Jack Hoffberg flew to Rome on Friday (27) for two weeks of huddles with Italian producers on U.S. distribution deals . . . Maggie Dent writes from her Rialto Theatre in Durham, N.C. that Burl Ives sat in theatre lobby for hour with his head buried in a copy of VARIETY and that the parlay of the familiar face and the flying-V really sent the Duke U. students.

AIP has signed its "perpetual motion girl," Candy Johnson, to a three-year contract . . Carl Foreman and Col made "The Victors" available to the Aspen (Colo.) Film Conference Committee for two special benefit showings Saturday-Sunday (28-29), to help raise funds for the second annual conference to be held Sept. 3-9, 1964 . . . Debbie Reynolds and Tony Curtis costar in 20th's upcoming "Goodbye, Charlie," starting at the studio in March. This is the George Axelrod Broadway play which was originally acquired as a vehicle for the late Marilyn Monroe.

Seymour Poe, exec veep of 20th, has been named chairman of the entertainment division for the 1964 March of Dimes. The 1964 drive will be held next month . . Richard Rodgers is expected to write at least one new song for 20th's film version of "The Sound of Music," which producer-director Robert Wise puts before the cameras in March . . . Incidentally, it's going to be a busy year for Wise. He plans to wind all work on "Music" in time to be able to start photography on "The Sand Pebbles," also for 20th, by October, 1964.

IFIDA's freedom-of-the-screen committee planning to unveil a new kind of anti-classification program shortly after the first of the year. Tom Brandon chairs the committee which includes Irving Wormser, Carl Peppercorn, Dan Frankel, Dick Brandt and Felix Bilgrey. Need for some kind of new approach to the classification-censorship problem can be seen from one estimate that the industry during the past year spent $250,000 in fighting various legal battles . . . Nelson Riddle scoring "What A Way to Go."

Irish-born Stephen Boyd naturalized as a U.S. citizen last week in Los Angeles. Another Irish-American, Maureen O'Hara, assisted . . Joan Shawlee has the femme lead in "Guerillas in Pink Lace" opposite star-director George Montgomery. Pic rolls in the Philippines in February for Montgomery's own company . . Artkino planning for the U.S. release of its newest Russ acquisition, "Dimka."

Kevin McClory plans to film the Ian Fleming novel he owns ("Thunderball") on his own with "the new James Bond," as opposed to the "old James Bond" (Sean Connery"), if negotiations with Harry Saltzman and Cubby Broccoli don't pan out. Latter, of course, are the producers of "Dr. No" and "From Russia With Love," which introduced the James Bond character, as played by Connery, to screen audiences . . . Surfing cinematographer Bruce Brown has left California on a two-month round-the-world junket to get material for a new 16m feature on surfing.

Joe Levine presented with a gift last week at a special office "ceremony" participated in by the entire Embassy Pictures staff, execs-to-mail-room, in the boss' office . . . the Sammy Glick Society, a group of underling pub staffers, had its second meeting recently and qualified those at Warner Bros., bringing the total membership now to 11 . . . Embassy's "Ghost at Noon" opened in five Paris theatres last Dec. 20 and "Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow" world preemed in Rome the following day.

Former CBS Staff genius Bernard Herrmann doing his eighth consecutive scoring job for Alfred Hitchcock with "Marnie" for which he has just been signed and to which Louise Latham is a cast addition . . . Philip Bourneuf, Walter Reed, Roy E. Glenn Sr. and Whit Bissell into "Where Love Has Gone" . . . Ted Krassner appointed Paramount's Washington, D.C., branch manager, succeeding Herb Gillis who has been named U.S.-Canadian sales director for "Fall of the Roman Empire."

James Garner and Dick Van Dyke set for Ross Hunter's forthcoming "The Art of Love" for Universal . . . an estimated $250,000 was raised for charity in 13 U. S. and Canada preems of "Mad World" Dec. 18-20 . . . Universal will distribute "Young and Willing," a Rank presentation produced by Betty E. Box and directed by Ralph Thomas, in the U.S. . . . RKO refurbishing its Orpheum Theatre, Des Moines. . . . the Italo film industry has selected Federico Fellini's "8½" as Italy's official bid for the April Oscars.

Peter Stone inked to an exclusive five-year pact with Universal calling for him to script five screenplays, based on original material or that from other sources, not including his current scripting of the untitled Cary Grant-Leslie Caron comedy to be directed by David Miller for the studio . . . "The Seventh Dawn" set as the new title for UA's William Holden Susannah York-Capucine starrer, formerly known

(Continued on page 16)

JEANNETTE M'DONALD'S BLOOD CLOT SURGERY

Houston, Dec. 30.

Jeannette MacDonald is reportedly doing well in recovery here at Methodest Hospital from surgery to remove a block in an artery leading to her head. The operation was performed about a month ago. Such blocks in major brain arteries can lead to strokes if they are not corrected.

Surgeons at Baylor U.'s College of Medicine who performed the operation are known for this specialty, which they helped perfect.

Chi Crazy-Quilt

Continued from page 5

mount an aggressive neighborhood redevelopment plan.

Another important factor explaining both the increase in first-runs and the decline in nabe houses is the fewer-and-better pictures being produced and the way they are being booked throughout the Chicago area. (Going back to that 1945 issue of VARIETY, it would not be unkind to say that half of the films in the 10 firstrun houses extant then would have tough going as one-half of a dualer in a saturation booking in today's market.)

Much of the deluxer gain in the past decade in Chi has been in art and hardticket houses. However, these additions proved not to be at the expense of the list of "standard" firstrun theatres, with only two of the latter (Grand and Garrick) folding in the last 10 years.

Numerically, the arties have influenced the total the greatest. Since 1953, the World, Carnegie, Cinema, Globe and Town have been added to the then two existing art houses, the Surf and Ziegfeld. (The latter is now the Capri, a nudie house.)

During the same period, the McVickers went from grind to hardticket, was legit for a brief period, then went back to roadshows with "Bros. Grimm" and is still on the same policy (under new ownership) with "It's A Mad World." The Palace preemed with "Cinerama" in 1953, tried another couple of hardticket pix in 1960, went to Cinerama reissues on grind in '61 and went dark a year later. The other two hardticket houses are the Todd and Cinestage, which were the Selwyn and Harris legit houses until Mike Todd bought them in 1957 to launch "80 Days" and show other hardticket pix.

Nabes Slump

Current booking trends in Chicago hold little prospect for the diminishing number of neighborhood houses. The "showcase" virus that is gripping Gotham is being explored with some success to date in Chi, and is creating a situation not unlike the one that existed here before the Jackson Park Theatre antitrust case broke up "clearance" requirements in the early 50's. The smaller houses are being pushed back further in getting pictures, and a group of 12 to 20 "elite" nabes are getting what amounts to preferential treatment.

The differing effects of a "showcase" presentation in Chi and in New York result from the fact that Chi is all one borough. While "showcasing" can amount to almost daydating among the Gotham boroughs, in Chicago it is a preferred run for the entire city.

'Active Retirement'

Continued from page 7

lot for a 25-year sojourn, gives free courses in art to fellow-residents at Leisure World, Seal Beach.

Although show biz folk represent only a fraction of the hundreds of thousands of persons who have moved into these centers, their contribution to the various communities has been heavy.

More than 500 of these developments have been opened in California. Plush hotels, such as Ocean House in Santa Monica, and luxurious rental apartments—both high rise and garden—report 80% occupancy.

There's a Studio club, made up of former Hollywoodites and headed by Larry Fein, a Choral Group organized by James A. Durbin (Deanna's father), a Classical Musicians Club sponsored by composer Herbert Borodkin, in addition to hiking, pinochle, fishing, bingo, stamp, chess, and trailer clubs. (Some members of the latter are on a 3-months trek through the Far East, currently). Bob Titus, ex-BBDO executive who has made several round-the-world trips, heads up a travel club. More than a score of residents own small boats, moor them in the nearby Long Beach Marina and participate in the frequent sailboat races. The Christmas Festival is a lavish spectacle held under the stars in the amphitheatre, under the direction of Fred S. (Hap) Hazard, the stage director.

Dema Harshbarger, Hedda Hopper's manager, commutes between her trailer-cabana at Laguna Beach and a new mobile home in Linkletter's vast Sierra Dawn Estates, similar in many ways to the finest parks in Palm Springs, on the opposite side of Mt. San Jacinto. Smiley Burnett is one of her neighbors.

Success of these segregated-by-age housing projects are complex in motivation. Some residents made the move in pursuit of congenial neighbors, free recreational facilities, 24-hour medical care, and country-club surroundings. Others are escaping from home maintenance and upkeep in view of the servant shortage.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Statistics compiled by Filmblaetter, W-Berlin trade paper, revealed that the Swedish film, "Angels—Are There Any?" a Sandrews production released here by Topas (a small outfit), was the most screened film in German key cities within the 1962-'63 (Aug. 1, '62-July 31, '63) season. This isn't necessarily the season's commercially most successful pic in Germany. Respective statistics, are only based on playdates. A film that runs a week and is constantly SRO biz, of course, spells more money than a picture that runs three weeks in a half empty house. Germany's most successful (money-wise) film of the 1962-'63 is undoubtedly Rialto's "The Treasure of Silver Lake."

Of the 80 most screened pix, 28 are of American and 19 of German origin. Four are Austrian, three each Swedish, Italian and British, two are French, one is Greek and 17 are coproductions, mostly Italian-French movies, according to Filmblaetter.

Universal's "A Touch of Mink" landed second spot, with Darryl F. Zanuck's "The Longest Day" (20th) finishing third position. Runners-up were the second part of the German documentary, "Dream Road of the World," United Artists' "West Side Story," the German documentary, "Flying Clipper," Metro's "Mutiny on the Bounty," Sam Bronstons "El Cid," Gloria's "Three Penny Opera," a German-French coproduction, and the Italo-French "Boccaccio '70." Noteworthy the successful runs of the German full-length documentaries. Filmblaetter listed Rialto's "Treasure of Silver Lake" on 15th position, but as said these statistics are only based on the screening time in the German key cities. "Silver Lake" did extremely well in small towns and provincial districts too. These territories are not included in the Filmblaetter statistics—this must be taken into consideration.

U. S. director Joseph Losey who operates in England has joined in the current dispute there over producers who alter a director's work, which was sparked anew by Luchino Visconti's letter in the Times last week, in which he commented on the difference between the original version of "The Leopard" and that now being shown in London. In a letter to the Sunday Telegraph, Losey hit out at this form of unofficial and unacknowledged censorship. He made no reference to his own experience a year back with his version of "Eva," which was altered by producers Robert and Raymond Hakim after it had been delivered in final form. On that occasion, the finished film was cut by some 35 minutes, without the director's approval. Not only Losey, but Jeanne Moreau and Stanley Baker, as well as the writer, editor and designer, made unsuccessful pleas to have their names removed from the credits. They objected to the pic being cut, to changes in the score and to the text, and to the resounding of tracking voices. All but one, however, were by contract precluded from making a public objection, and although there was the right to seek redress in the Courts, there were heavy financial risks in delaying the release of the picture.

Normally, directors have full authors' protection for films made in Italy, but in the case of "Eva" the contracts with the stars, etc., were patterned on English law.

Whether Warners' "My Fair Lady" reaches the reported $15,000,000 or $17,000,000 (production cost mentioned by Jack L. Warner) it would appear that the film will start sharing its 47½-52½% terms with the authors and other principals just about when WB recups its first $20,000,000 gross. Had it been brought in at the originally expected $10,000,000 (including $5,500,000 for the property), WB would be that much ahead but, as seems to be the rule rather than the exception in recent years, it went over budget.

George Bernard Shaw estate gets 5% from the first distribution dollar but adaptors Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe's deal $5,500,000 (for the screen rights) calls for 50-50 after $20,000,000 gross. Audrey Hepburn received a reported $1,000,000 for her co-starring role with Rex Harrison, the stage original Prof. Higgins (about $250,000 for his chore).

WB figured that by the time $20,000,000 gross revenue was returned this would have been double the negative cost and, of course, a nice profit.

On the same subject of pyramiding costs, George Stevens' "The Greatest Story Ever Told" (UA), is now believed to stand at $17,000,000 in production investment.

Frank Whitbeck who died at 81 in Hollywood was identified in trade recall with his high-gloss trailers for Metro studio product during its heyday and with lifelong nostalgia for and interest in circuses, with which he trouped in younger years. Whitbeck had an exceptionally resonant baritone speaking voice and a style which oldtimers in the craft sometimes developed. His many jobs in the different branches of theatrical touting included an extended stand for Fox West Coast at San Francisco HQ during the old Arch Bowles reign. He was mentor and blessing to the last salaried representative VARIETY maintained in Frisco, Robert J. Landry, now VARIETY's managing editor. Thereafter Metro tagged Whitbeck and he spent the balance of his career at Culver City, where he enjoyed unique status as a dean of exploiteers who was a trade celebrity in his own right. He retired some eight years ago. His widow, Laura, has wide acquaintance in show business, notably in California.

Film industry in the United Kingdom has reached serious straits, according to indie producer Walter Shenson prior to departure from Hollywood for his London headquarters. American producer, who has made films in England for past six or seven years, attributes this to rising production costs. There is very little production in England at the present time, he said.

While on Coast, Shenson acquired screen rights to the Max Wilk novel, "Don't Raise the Bridge, Lower the River," and inked Wilk to script his comedy. Pic will be lensed in Britain and Portugal, locale of story, starting next summer, with an American male lead and British femme lead.

Singer Tommy Sands reportedly has formed his own indie company, Antoned Productions, with C. Edward Goldstone, to produce "The Jasmine Tree," with Sands to direct from his own original script. It deals with current problems in the south . . . Actress Grayson Hall has returned to New York after completing her role in the Metro-Seven Arts "Night of The Iguana."

★ ★ ★ ★

TITRA

Is Proud of the Work It Performed
On Three of the Ten Best Films of 1963 as Selected by Bosley Crowther

ANY NUMBER CAN WIN
8½
AMERICA AMERICA

★ ★ ★ ★

TITRA DUBBING CO.
1600 BROADWAY, NEW YORK CITY PL 7-6681

Screen Writers' New Contract Terms

Improved Stake In 'Sequels' Further Separation Of Individual Subsidiary Rights

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Screenwriters' compensation for a motion picture sequel is hiked from 15% to 25% in the recently-finalized contract with the Assn. of Motion Picture Producers, and the maximum of $12,500 for a sequel provided for a term scripter is upped to $20,000.

Additional details of the pact made known also disclose that publication rights were expanded to cover all forms and media excluding only comic books and newspaper comic strips, in the separation of rights provisos. For the first time, it is established where the writers' separable material is used as the basis for a live or film free tv series, the writer is to get (excluding residuals) not less than $135 for each 15-min. seg, not less than $225 for each half-hour episode, and $425 for each hour seg, and $625 for each 90-min. or longer show. If sequel rights payments under the vidfilm basic are higher than these minimums, then higher minimums are to be paid.

This proviso is applicable only to material written under the new pact, and not applicable if only title of material is used for a series. It's not applicable where a writer is entitled to royalties by reason of the vidpix basic. If a writer has a percentage participation in a series, then percentage receipts may be credited against royalty. Anent a writer who has penned "separable" material and who has received more than $50,000, said sum to include percentage participations, the sums over $50,000 may be applied against the royalties, provided the writer's pact specifically allows this.

New pact also eliminates the special minimums for producers of low budgeted pix. Instead, there is a proviso calling for minimums of $4,504.50 for pix costing $250,000 or more, and pix costing under that figure shall be 10% less. Gone are the former minimums of $3,753.75 for pix budgeted between $125-225,000 and the $2,772 for pix budgeted under $125,000.

Contract coverage has been expanded to include the purchase of unproduced and unexploited material from a writer, where the writer is thereafter hired by producer to develop his own material. A minimum of $1,500 is established under these circumstances.

For the first time, individual unpaid salary claims up to $30,000 and any defenses arising out of the transaction up to $30,000 are subject to conciliation and arbitration, something previously limited to minimums.

Pay tv provisions gives the guild an option of two alternatives, both with reopening clauses in the event feevee comes, so that the guild can negotiate terms. Principal difference in the two clauses is that one states the guild position that feevee is a new and different medium, while the other is similar to the Screen Actors Guild clause which contains a statement that toll tv is an extension of the theatrical b.o.

Credits provisos stipulate that on screen, names of neither the producer nor director on their respective title cards shall be in larger size or style of type than the writing credits. The so-called "box-office value" exception rule in advertising for the producer or director is deleted.

Producers agreed that for any stage play based on a motion picture under the basic pact, where the screen credit to the writer is a "written by," "story by," or "screen story by," producer will provide in its pact with stage producer that such credit as it appears on the screen will be given in the program for the stage presentation.

Producer will not give to any person on the screen or in advertising a "A Film By" credit, unless the pic is written, produced and directed by the same person.

Marshall Thompson has partnered with Peer Oppenheimer and Richard Moore for several indie films, initialer to be "Operation Saigon," to be filmed there, followed by "At Ready," lensed in Sweden, both starring Thompson.

Ozoners, Take Heed!

Auburn, Me., Dec. 30.

Prowlers who entered through a vent at ground level caused considerable damage in projection room of the Auburn Drive-In Theatre, which was closed for the season during the latter part of October.

Workmen who went to the establishment found several thousands of feet of film strewn around the interior of the building, an electric clock taken from the wall and broken, a window had been shattered, and a concrete block removed from the wall of the projection booth.

Antitrust Suit By Miami Beacher

A $2,160,000 antitrust suit has been filed in N. Y. Federal Court by 227 Theatres Inc., operator since 1960 of the Roosevelt Theatre, Miami Beach, Fla. Defendants include the major distributors as well as Continental and Embassy Pictures, and numerous competitive theatres and chains which operate them in Florida.

Complaint charges that defendants discriminated against the Roosevelt in runs and clearances. The action also brings up the controversial topic of splits, claiming that there was conspiracy among the defendant distribs ad exhibs to set up splits which eliminated the Roosevelt.

In addition to damages, the suit also seeks to restrain defendants from "monopolizing trade and commerce and effecting unreasonable agreements with respect to the licensing and exhibition of pictures in the Miami Beach area." Action also would direct defendants to "negotiate in good faith" for the exhibition of pictures in the Roosevelt, "free from unreasonable terms, conditions and other restraints."

Complaint attacks rental deals and claims that reductions, ad allowances, extended runs and day-date runs have been arrived at as part of a "conspiracy" against the Roosevelt. Harry M. Pimstein, who reps 227, states in his brief that the Roosevelt's biz has been damaged as a result of the alleged actions of the defendants.

In all, 33 defendants are named, including corporations, indies and officers of the various defendant outfits.

UPCOMING MG SLATE MAY NUMBER 30 PIX

Metro expectedly will have 30 new features for release in the new year, representing a negative investment of $58,000,000, Morris Lefko, domestic distribution v.p., disclosed in New York this week.

He said they come in various budget sizes and there are no roadshows included but there are roadshow possibilites among the films definitedly slated for the future. These include "Say It With Music," "40 Days of Musa Dagh" and "Dr. Zhivago."

Lefko yesterday (Tues.) joined MGM president Robert H. O'Brien along with other execs, including Maurice (Red) Silverstein, Clark Ramsay and Dan Terrell, in a quickie to London and Paris to look in on new product coming up from these areas.

A Smoke Evacuation

Knoxville, Dec. 30.

A clogged furnace pipe gave patrons and the Bijou Theatre manager a scare. At the evening performance smoke started rolling into the first-run main street house. There was no panic.

Hugh Rainey immediately evacuated the theatre. He is manager of the house for Simpson Operating Co. which borrowed it from Wilby-Kinsey Theatres because the Riviera, another main street house, recently was destroyed by fire.

New Union Films' Titles

Union Films, indie distrib firm taken over this year by a group headed by Josef Auerbach, has acquired for new features for distribution in 1964.

Titles include "Gentleman from The East," drama of the French secret service starring Jean Marais and directed by Jean Charles Dudrumet; "Holiday in Hell," produced by Gilbert de Goldschmidt, directed by Jean Kerchbron; "Happiness Is for Tomorrow," directed by Henri Fabiani, with Jacques Higelin and Irene Chabrier, and "Sun Kissed," apparently a nudie, "produced with the cooperation of naturists of five nations—Germany, France, Spain, Sweden and Switzerland."

PENN NEGOTIATES OUT ON 'CLEOPATRA' RUN

Pittsburgh, Dec. 30.

In a move that was not unexpected, the Penn Theatre got together with 20th Century-Fox and dissolved the agreement to keep "Cleopatra" in the Pitt UATC house for 30 weeks. The Penn had put up $275,000 front money which 20th kept but it was economic foolishness to keep the film going now that it was grossing an average $2,500 in a house that needs $11,000 a week to break.

"Cleo" started off big but the danger signals were raised after Labor Day when the gross fell to around $10,000 per week. In October the figures were cut in half and after a slight surge during Thanksgiving week, the film levelled off to the $2,500-$3,000 figure.

Penn was faced with the stiff competition of four big films coming in on Christmas day at opposition houses. The Stanley has "4 for Texas," the Warner, "It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad "World," "Cardinal" at the Fulton and "Charade" at the Gateway. The Penn was able to book in "Sword in the Stone" opening Dec. 25 to reach a competitive level.

Leases Sullivan's Crest; Com'wealth Operates 121

Kansas City, Dec. 30.

O. F. Sullivan, longtime Wichita theatre builder and operator has leased the Crest Theatre there to Commonwealth Theatres (which headquarters here) effective Jan. 1. Negotiations, concluded between Sullivan and Richard Orear, Commonwealth president, included the adjacent parking lot, as well as the theatre.

Commonwealth operates 121 theatres in eight states, including the Meadowlark, Twin and Terrace outdoor theatres in Wichita in addition to two drive-in theatres there built by Sullivan—the 81 and 54 drive-ins.

Sullivan and his wife entered the theatre business in Wichita in 1925. They purchased the West Theatre, local in West Wichita, then the only area suburban house. Following that, they built the west-side Civic Theatre and operated the Crawford and Palace in the central business district, and the east-side Tower.

A pioneer in drive-in theatre construction in Kansas, Sullivan built the state's first ozoner—the 81 Drive-In. Later he built the 54 Drive-In and in 1950 created the Crest, considered one of the most attractive hardtops in the midwest.

The Sullivans will continue to operate the Civic Playhouse—no longer a theatre. Several years ago it was converted to its present status as a party-house and is equipped for catered refreshments, dancing and cabaret-type entertainment to groups and private parties.

The Crest will be under the jurisdiction of Dale Stewart, Commonwealth's city manager in Wichita.

May Raze Saskatoon Roxy

Saskatoon, Sask., Dec. 30.

The Roxy, built in 1930, will be sold at the first offer unless there is a strong indication by the public that it is wanted and needed, according to the owner, David Rothstein of Winnipeg.

It would have been sold before but for "sentimental reasons," he said. He had helped build it when living in Saskatoon.

Warren Beatty toplines Arthur Penn's Columbia Pictures production of "Mickey One," to roll in March with Penn also directing.

New York Soundtrack

Continued from page 14

as "The Third Road" among other things . . . Martin Ritt has signed a new three-pic producer-director deal with Paramount, a separate pact from the three-film agreement between him, Par and Paul Newman's Salem Productions under which he'll produce-direct "The Spy Who Came In From the Cold" toplining Burt Lancaster in early 1964. Irving Ravetch and Harriet Frank Jr. cited for "best screen adaptation" and James Wong Howe for "best black and white cinematography" by the British film mag Films and Filming for "Hud" . . . Universal will handle U.S. and Canadian distribution of British Lion and Magna Films' musical "The Dream Maker," formerly titled "It's All Happening," which stars British pop singing teen fave Tommy Steele. . . . Ralph Nelson's "Lilies of the Field" opened in 50 Gotham neighborhood theatres during the Christmas-New Year week.

Paramount cooking in the tv featurette field with films about "Seven Days in May," "Who's Been Sleeping in My Bed?" and "Who's Minding the Store?" currently making the rounds . . . UA's "Irma La Douce," "The Great Escape," "The Caretakers" and "Lilies of the Field" reopened in the Los Angeles area for the viewing convenience of Academy balloters . . . Allied Artists' "Soldier in the Rain" set for over 200 bookings in the San Francisco, Dallas, Boston and Salt Lake City areas during January and February . . . Gotham winners of RKO's "Salute to Hollywood" drive include managers Warren Rodenbach, Frank LaCava and Irving Gold, the winning division manager being Charles Oelreich.

Eli Wallach back in town after winding Walt Disney's "The Moonspinners" in London. He takes off next month for Cambodia to join Richard Brooks' "Lord Jim" troupe . . . Hang on to your fez: Shirley MacLain's new 20th assignment, "John Goldfarb Please Come Home," has to do with a female photographer who gets caught in a sultan's harem. Husband Steve Parker produces.

Robert Aldrich cast Joan Crawford to star in his upcoming indie, "What Ever Happened to Cousin Charlotte?" (not a sequel to "What Ever Happened to Baby Jane?"), in which actress will receive participation of profits plus salary.

Sophia Loren in Madrid dubbing "Roman Empire," completely recovered after hospitalization in Rome . . . . Nat Cohen, managing director of Anglo Amalgamated Films, in New York huddling with Dave Emanuel, head of Governor Films . . . Into "Where Love Has Gone" are Howard Wendell, Carol Conn, Olga Sutcliffe and Jack Greening . . . Allied Artists' "Now It Can Be Told" retitled "The Secret Door" . . . Ross Wheeler, eastern division sales director for Cinema Distributors of America, touring the Jacksonville-Charlotte-Atlanta area setting Jan.-Feb. multiples for "The Flesh Eaters."

Jerry K. Levine, Par ad manager, back in New York from London and Madrid, following confabs on "Fall of the Roman Empire" . . . Director Daniel Mann pulls a "Hitchcock" in his "Who's Been Sleeping in My Bed?", making an on-screen appearance during a street scene . . . Marcello Mastroianni awarded the 1963 W. German critic's award as best actor for his work in "Divorce—Italian Style" and "The Assassin" . . . UA presently cooking in the Gotham area with five films in release for the holiday period, including "Mad World," "Tom Jones," "Ladybug Ladybug," "Lilies of the Field" and "Kings of the Sun."

Eric Pleskow, UA foreign distribution v.p., back in Gotham after an extensive European biz trip touring the company's offices . . . Fred Baum has joined Paramount's pub staff as radio-tv-music contact . . . Jack Lemmon will star in and Richard Quine will direct George Axelrod's new comedy "How to Murder Your Wife," (American style) to begin filming in March for UA release . . . Don Costa has waxed "The Love Song From Tom Jones" on his new DCP label.

News of the art work from the set of "Where Love Has Gone": internationally sculptor Rafe Affleck inked as technical advisor on art-studio sequences, also tutoring Susan Hayward in the art. Mark Bussan, a Paramount backlot worker who's also an amateur sculptor, will have four of his originals on screen during the gallery sequences in the film. Also, Clem Hall, prez of the California Water Color Society, is painting a special oil (traitor?) portrait of Bette Davis which will appear in the picture. (He's also a scenic artist at Par).

Joseph C. Goltz, Embassy Pictures Latin America supervisor, in Gotham for h.o. huddles . . . Sam Fuller penning "The Charge at San Juan" which he'll produce independently having completed "Shock Corridor" and "The Naked Kiss" for Leon Fromkess-Sam Firks-AA . . . Par's "Seven Days in May" awarded Photoplay's Gold Medal Award . . . Jerry Liddiard, Embassy tv sales manager, in New York from Hollywood for homeoffice confabs.

Title changes at Universal: Ross Hunters "The Richest Girl in Town" is now "I'd Rather Be Rich" and "Renegade Posse" has been renamed "Bullet for a Badman" . . . Ralph Nelson's "Lilies of the Field" grossed a sturdy $303,091 in three weeks as a "Premiere Showcase" pic in Gotham, following an exclusive run at the Murray Hill Theatre . . . Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio has reminded its members in a recent bulletin that "Lassie's Great Adventure," being distribed by 20th-Fox, is not an original feature but is composed of four sequences shown on the regular "Lassie" tv show.

More New Situations

Youngstown, O., Dec. 30.

The Boardman and Lincoln Knolls Plaza Theatres, both with nearly 800 seats each, are scheduled to open shortly, per Gus Limbert, vice president of Broumas Theatres. The first film for the Boardman will be "McLintock," starring John Wayne.

Bill Petrych, manager at the State, downtown, has been named city manager for the four Broumas theatres when all are built. The Liberty Plaza Theatre will likewise have almost 800 seats.

Stanley's Texas Roundup

Galveston, Tex., Dec. 30.

Annual managers meeting and convention of the Texas zone of the Stanley Warner Corp. was held here with some 40 managers from Texas, Oklahoma City and Memphis attending, as well as officials from the New York headquarters.

Albert H. Reynolds, zone manager in Texas, with headquarters in Dallas, reported that the primary purpose of the meeting was to organize plans for the coming spring and summer season.

This was the second zone meeting since Stanley Warner took over operations of the Lone Star Theatres Inc.

N. M. Obscenity Law Takes in Pix

Albuquerque, Dec. 30.

It's official. Bernalillo County, N. M. (Albuquerque is on the county seat), now has an anti-obscenity ordinance on its lawbooks.

Ordinance, prohibiting sale and exhibition of obscene writings and pictures (including movies), was okayed by the county commission by a 2 to 1 vote on its third and final reading last week. New law formally goes into effect in the county area on Jan. 20, and will be the first such anti-obscenity ordinance ever enacted by county officers.

All cases are to be prosecuted through the county's district attorney office. Conviction could result in a fine upwards of $100 or 90 days in jail or both.

Ordinance exempts publications with a second class mailing permit. New law, incidentally, does not define the word "obscene," and critics note that it may be interesting to see who in charge will actualy rule on the matter.

Hollywood Production Pulse

ALLIED ARTISTS
Starts, This Year 7
This Date, Last Year..... 2

AMERICAN INT'L
Starts, This Year ... 9
This Date, Last Year 4

"MUSCLE BEACH PARTY"
(James H. Nicholson-Samuel Z. Arkoff Prod.)
Prods.—James H. Nicholson, Robert Dillon
Dir.—William Asher
Frankie Avalon, Annette Funicello, Harvey Lembeck, John Ashley, Jody McCrea, Morey Amsterdam, Dick Dale & the Del Tones, Candy Johnson, Buddy Hackett
(Started Dec. 3)

COLUMBIA
Starts, This Year 19
This Date, Last Year .16

"HEY THERE, IT'S YOGI BEAR"
(Hanna-Barbera Prods.)
Prod.-Dirs.—William Hanna, Joseph Barbera
Voices: Daws Butler, Mel Blanc, Don Messick, Julie Bennett, Hal Smith, J. Pat O'Malley (Started June 24)

"THE TRAVELING LADY"
(Park Place Prods.)
(Shooting in Texas)
Prod.—Alan J. Pakula
Dir.—Robert Mulligan
Steve Mcueen, Lee Remick, Don Murray, Paul Fix, Josephine Hutchinson, Charles Watts, Carol Veazie, Kimberly Block, Ruth White, John Day
(Started Oct. 28)

"THE 'NEW' INTERNS"
(Robert Cohn Prods.)
Prod.—Robert Cohn
Dir.—John Rich
Michael Callan, Dean Jones, Telly Savalas, Stefanie Powers, Barbara Eden, George Segal, Inger Stevens
(Started Nov. 4)

"LORD JIM"
(Richard Brooks Production)
(Shooting in Hong Kong)
Prod.-Dir.—Richard Brooks
Peter O'Toole, James Mason, Curt Jurgens, Eli Wallach, Jack Hawkins, Paul Lukas
(Started Dec. 9)

WALT DISNEY
Starts, This Year 6
This Date, Last Year 4

"EMIL AND THE DETECTIVES"
(Shooting in Berlin)
Prods.—Walt Disney, Peter Herald
Dir.—Peter Tewksbury
Walter Slezak, Bryan Russell, Roger Mobley, Cindy Cassell
(Started Sept. 9)

"THE MOON-SPINNERS"
(Shooting in Crete and London)
Prods.—Walt Disney, Bill Anderson
Dir.—James Neilson
Hayley Mills, Peter McEnery, Eli Wallach, Pola Negri, Joan Greenwood, Irene Papas, Michael Davis
(Started Sept. 10)

METRO
Starts, This Year 27
This Date, Last Year.....25

"THE UNSINKABLE MOLLY BROWN"
(Lawrence Weingarten Prod.)
Prod.—Lawrence Weingarten
Dir.—Chuck Walters
Debbie Reynolds, Harve Presnell, Ed Begley
(Started Sept. 4)

"THE AMERICANIZATION OF EMILY"
(Filmways Prods.)
Prod.—Martin Ransohoff
Dir.—Arthur Hiller
James Garner, Julie Andrews, Melvyn Douglas, James Coburn
(Started Oct. 13)

"SIGNPOST TO MURDER"
(Lawrence Weingarten Prod.)
Prod.—Lawrence Weingarten
Dir.—George Englund
Joanne Woodward, Stuart Whitman, Edward Mulhare
(Started Oct. 28)

Hear . . .
Hollywood
Commentator
DICK STROUT
ON over 800 Stations in Americal
Suite 404
1717 N. Highland Av.
Hollywood 28, Cal.
469-8884

New York Theatres

RADIO CITY MUSIC HALL
Rockefeller Center • PL 7-3100
The Music Hall's Great Christmas Show
CARY GRANT • AUDREY HEPBURN in "CHARADE"
A Universal Release in Technicolor
ON STAGE "The Nativity" and "CHEERS"

"JUDGMENT IN THE SUN"
(Harvest-February-Ritt-Kayos Prod.)
(Shooting in Arizona)
Prod.—Ronald Lubin
Dir.—Martin Ritt
Paul Newman, Claire Bloom, Laurence Harvey, Edward G. Robinson, William Shatner, Howard Da Silva, Albert Salmi, Thomas Chalmers, Paul Fix
(Started Dec. 9)

PARAMOUNT
Starts, This Year 12
This Date, Last Year 12

"CIRCUS WORLD"
(Samuel Bronston Prods.)
(Shooting in Barcelona)
Prod.—Samuel Bronston
Dir.—Henry Hathaway
John Wayne, Claudia Cardinale, Rod Taylor, Rita Hayworth, Lloyd Nolan
(Started Sept. 23)

"ROBINSON CRUSO ON MARS"
(Schenck-Zabel Prod.)
Prod.—Aubrey Schenck
Dir.—Byron Haskin
Paul Mantee, Vic Ludin
(Started Dec. 2)

"WHERE LOVE HAS GONE"
(Joseph E. Levine Prod.)
Prod.—Joseph E. Levine
Dir.—Edward Dmytryk
Susan Hayward, Bette Davis, Michael Connors, Joey Heatherton, George Macready, Jane Greer, Anne Seymour, DeForest Kelley
(Started Dec. 10).

20th CENTURY-FOX
Starts, This Year 11
This Date, Last Year ... 4

UNITED ARTISTS
Starts, This Year 15
This Date, Last Year 28

"THE TRAIN"
(Les Productions Artists-Ariane-DEAR Film)
(Shooting in France)
Prod.—Jules Bricken
Dir.—Arthur Penn
Burt Lancaster, Jeanne Moreau, Paul Scofield, Claude Dauphin, Michele Gordon, Suzanne Flon, Albert Remy (Started Aug. 5)

"TOPKAPI"
(Filmways, Inc.)
(Shooting in Istanbul, Greece and Paris)
Prod.—Martin Ransohoff
Dir.—Jules Dassin
Melina Mercouri, Maximillian Schell, Peter Ustinov, Robert Morley, Akim Tamiroff, Gilles Segal, Jess Hahn
(Started Aug. 12)

UNIVERSAL
Starts, This Year 12
This Date, Last Year 14

""MARNIE"
(Alfred Hitchcock Prod.)
Prod.-Dir.—Alfred Hitchcock
Tippi Hedren, Sean Connery, Diane Daker, Mariette Hartley, S. John Launer
(Started Nov. 25)

"SEND ME NO FLOWERS"
(Universal-Martin Melcher Prod.)
Prod.—Harry Keller
Dir.—Norman Jewison
Rock Hudson, Doris Day, Tony Randall, Clint Walker
(Started Dec. 19)

"I'D RATHER BE RICH"
(Ross Hunter Prod.)
Prod.—Ross Hunter
Dir.—Jack Smight
Sandra Dee, Robert Goulet, Andy Williams, Maurice Chevalier
(Started Dec. 27)

WARNER BROS.
Starts, This Year.....14
This Date, Last Year 14

"CHEYENNE AUTUMN"
(John Ford-Bernard Smith Prod.)
Prod.—Bernard Smith
Dir.—John Ford
Edward G. Robinson, James Stewart, Richard Widmark, Carroll Baker, Karl Malden, Sal Mineo, Dolores Del Rio, Ricardo Montalban, Gilbert Roland, Arthur Kennedy, Patrick Wayne Elizabeth Allen, John Carradine, Victor Jory, Mike Mazurki
(Started Sept. 23.)

"ROBIN AND THE 7 HOODS"
(P-C Prod.)
Prod.—Frank Sinatra
Dir.—Gordon Douglas
Frank Sinatra, Dean Martin, Sammy Davis Jr., Bing Crosby, Peter Falk, Victor Buono, Barbara Rush, Edward G. Robinson, Allen Jenkins, Jack LaRue
(Started Oce. 31)

"SEX AND THE SINGLE GIRL"
Prod.—William T. Orr
Dir.—Richard Quine
Tony Curtis, Natalie Wood, Henry Fonda, Lauren Bacall, Diane McBain, Otto Kruger, Fran Jeffries, Edward Everett Horton, Count Basie
(Started Nov. 1)

INDEPENDENT
Starts, This Year 24
This Date, Last Year 20

BRITAIN

ANGLO - AMALG
Starts, This Year.....19
This Date, Last Year.....17

"THE VERDICT"
(Merton Park Prod.)
Prod.—Jack Greenwood
Dir.—David Eady
Nigel Davenport, Zena Marshall, Cec Linder
(Started Dec. 4 at Merton Park studios)

"MASQUE OF THE RED DEATH"
(Anglo-American Intl.)
Prod-Dir.—Roger Corman
Vincent Price, Hazel Court, Jane Asher
(Started Nov. 18 at Associated British studios, Elstree)

ASSO. BRIT.-PATHE
Starts, This Year..... 9
This Date, Last Year..... 6

"WONDERFUL LIFE"
(Ivy Prod.)
Prod.—Kenneth Harper
Dir.—Sidney Furie
Cliff Richard, Susan Hampshire, Denis Price
(Started Dec. 2 on location in Canary Isles. Due into ABPC studios Feb. '64.)

BRITISH LION
Starts, This Year..... 9
This Date, Last Year.....11

BUTCHERS
Starts, This Year..... 3
This Date, Last Year..... 6

COLUMBIA
Starts, This Year..... 9
This Date, Last Year..... 4

"THE GORGON"
(Hammer Films)
Prod.—Anthony Nelson Keys
Dir.—Terence Fisher
Peter Cushing, Christopher Lee, Barbara Shelley (Started Dec. 9 at Bray Studios)

"LORD JIM"
(Keep Films)
Prod.-Dir.—Richard Brooks
Peter O'Toole, Curt Jurgens, James Mason, Eli Wallach, Jack Hawkins
(Started Nov. 18 in Hong Kong location. Skedded for Shepperton studios April '64)

COMPTON CAMEO
Starts, This Year.. 1
This Date, Last Year..... 0

DISNEY
Starts, This Year.. .. 2
This Date, Last Year..... 2

"THE MOONSPINNERS"
Exec. Prod.—Walt Disney
Coprod.—William Anderson
Assoc. Prod.—Hugh Attwooll
Dir.—James Neilson
Hayley Mills, Eli Wallach, Peter McEnery, Joan Greenwood
(Started Sept. 9 on location in Crete, into Pinewood studios from November 14)

GALA
Starts, this year 1
This Date, Last Year..... 1

MGM
Starts, This Year..... 4
This Date, Last Year..... 8

PARAMOUNT
Starts, This Year 1
This Date, Last Year..... 0

PAX
Starts, This Year..... 1
This Date, Last Year..... 0

PLANET
Starts, This Year..... 3
This Date, Last Year..... 1

RANK
Starts, This Year..... 8
This Date, Last Year..... 8

"THE BEAUTY JUNGLE"
(Formerly "32:26:36")
(Val Guest Prod.)
Prod.-Dir.—Val Guest
Janette Scott, Ian Hendry
(Started Sept. 30 on location in Weston Super Mare, Nice, Cannes. Into Pinewood studios from end of October)

20TH-FOX
Starts, This Year 3
This date, last year 0

UNITED ARTISTS
Starts, This Year.... .6
This Date, Last Year..... 7

"A SHOT IN THE DARK"
(Mirisch Films)
Prod.—Lewis J. Rachmil
Dir.—Blake Edwards
Peter Sellers, Rerbert Lom
(Started Nov. 11 at MGM studios, Elstree)

UNIVERSAL
Starts, This Year.. 5
This Date, Last Year.. .. 4

NO DISTRIB

"THE FINEST HOURS"
(Le Vien Films)
Exec. Prod.—Jack Le Vien
(Started July 15. Location in Chartwell, Blenheim and Chequers)

"GIRL HUNTER"
(Present Day Productions)
Prod.—Charles Reynolds
Dir.—Ray Rowland
Mickey Spillaine, Shirley Eaton, Hy Carder
(Completed Metro studios, Elstree, March, 1963)

Town Selectmen or Local Bluenoses Can't Punish for 'Objectionable' Films

Boston, Dec. 30.

Local licensing authorities or other state, city, town officials or boards do not have authority to revoke or suspend licenses of exhibitors in Massachusetts for showing "objectionable" films, the state attorney general, Edward W. Brooke, has ruled in a nine page document. This was in response to request of Theatre Owners of New England after several exhibitors suffered revocation of license by township bluenoses. In one instance authorities "sealed off" a drive-in for showing of "objectionable" pictures.

Attorney general Brooke concluded in his finding: "In view of the foregoing cases of the supreme court and the supreme judicial court, it is my considered opinion that G. L. C. 140, paragraph 181 does not confer upon the mayor or selectmen the power to revoke or suspend the license of a motion picture theatre operator because the operator exhibited a picture which, although not violative of any statute, is objectionable to a large part of the community."

The state, city and town authorities do not have the authority to ban "objectionable" pictures because there is no Massachusetts law giving them that power, it was revealed. Brooke's ruling in essence says that an exhibitor who exhibits a film which does not violate any statute but happens to be "objectionable" to a large part of the commpnity, cannot have his license revoked or suspended or have his theatre closed by a mayor or board of selectmen.

ALL-FRESH GEAR FOR N. KANSAS CITY SPOT

Kansas City, Dec. 30.

Using only the shell of the old Armour Theatre in North Kansas City, the North Kansas City Development Co. and Commonwealth Theatres are opening a new Centre Theatre on Christmas Day. I. Selden Catlin represents development firm, and Richard Orear the circuit project which provides new heating, air conditioning, seating, carpeting, draperies, screen and hi-fi sound.

Enlarged lobby and concessions area plus redone restrooms and updated booth equipment complete inside changes, while the outside is getting a new front and new marquee.

Clyde Crump, long at southtown Waldo, will manage, reporting to Earl Douglass of Columbia, Mo., Commonwealth district manager. Opening attraction will be "Who's Minding the Store?" on date-and-day local first-run saturation, though later policy may follow that of other peripheral houses and drive-ins here, shaping practice to fit release pattern.

North Kansas City is a separate municipality, completely surrounded by K. C., which may account for separating Centre operation from that of Commonwealth's two drive-ins and downtown grind house, last-run Regent.

A few miles down river in Richmond, Mo., the Farris Theatre reopened Friday (6)

Variable Exports: U.S. Gear, Stock

Washington, Dec. 30.

Exports of motion picture film and equipment were mixed for the first nine months of 1963, the U.S. Commerce Dept. reported. Up over last year's figures were exports of cameras, arc lamps, screens and studio equipment and parts.

Slumping were exports of projectors, sound reproducing equipment and positive and negative film rawstock.

On the import side, figures were down this year for unexposed raw stock.

Three quarter figures for 1963 and 1962 showed exports of cameras climbing from $658,183 to $771,785.

Arc lamp exports rose to $142,488 from $121,088 while screen exports moved to $1,855,681 from $1,574,607. Exports of studio equipment jumped to $2,835,492 from $1,932,711.

On the downbeat side, positive rawstock exports declined to $3,950,052 from $4,421,726. Negative rawstock exports slid to $4,384,872 from last year's $4,385,604.

Exports of sound reproduoting equipment fell from $509,948 to $436,527 as did projector exports which dropped to $284,873 from $302,696 last year.

Imports of unexposed motion picture film fell from $1,846,322 last year to $1,534,033 in 1963.

Victoria, Canadian Co., Readying Film on Calgary

Victoria Productions of Canada, which plans to make a feature film in Calgary next summer in connection with the annual Calgary "stampede," has opened ad-pub offices in New York under John Edward Lee and I. H. Rose.

Pic, to be called "Calgary," is to be shot in color with Hollywood "name" players in top roles. Casting is being done on the Coast.

Theatre-Wrecker's Fatal Fall.
Albany, Dec. 30.

During demolition of the old Colonial on Central Avenue—the site to become a municipal parking lot—Francis Mayhew, 49, a worker with John DiGulio Co., fell 55 feet from the collapsed rear roof.

Mayhew was rushed to a hospital, where doctors pronounced him dead.

After 31 years of great steak dinners, we're finally open for lunch.

Gallagher's

New York's Official Steak House
52nd St. just west of Broadway • CI 5-5336

Sardi's East
123 East 54th St. New York
PLaza 1-6655

Sardi's
234 W. 44th ST. NEW YORK
LA 4-0707

How That Nude Model at Edinburgh Fest Barely Missed TV Exposure

By GORDON IRVING

Edinburgh, Dec. 30.

The full story of that "happening' at the recent International Festival here, when a nude model was wheeled on a trolley in full view of a writers' and dramatists' confab in the dignified McEwan Hall, was unveiled here in the trial of the model, 20-year-old Anna Kesselaar.

Pressmen representing sheets and journals from all parts of the world crowded the small burgh court for the trial.

Miss Kesselaar denied behaving indecently in the hall at the final session of the drama confab.

One of the points disclosed in evidence was that the nude girl would have been seen on television if BBC cameras had not missed their cue.

Kenneth Dewey, 29-year-old American director, who planed in from Stockholm to give evidence, denied any erotic motive in the incident when the femme was wheeled nude across the organ gallery. He said the BBC had planned to film it for their program "Monitor."

"I gave them the sequence so that they could get their cameras to pick it up," he said. But there was some confusion in the electronic cueing because a person starting the debate spoke twice. The BBC missed it because their cameras were on the audience.

Defending, an agent asked: "It had been arranged and intended it should be shown on tv?" To which Dewey replied: "Yes, sir."

Agent—"They knew before of the model being a part of it, and were perfectly prepared to put it on tv?" Reply—Yes.

Dewey, of San Francisco, was accused by city prosecutor J. D. Heatly of having fled Scotland.

Said the prosecutor: "I make no bones about it. If he had been in this country, he would have been in the dock as well. He fled the country."

To this, Dewey replied: "I would have been happier if charges had been placed against me."

Dewey rejected the suggestion that he had fled the U.K., saying: "I had work to do in Palermo, Sicily. I left with no knowledge of any legal proceedings. I didn't know until a week ago when John Calder (organizer of the international drama confab) wrote and asked me if I would be a witness. I came voluntarily."

According to Dewey, in evidence, the incident in which the girl model was wheeled across the organ gallery was an illustration of a serious form of theatre. There were about 50 different events in the illustrations, and nine different things were working simultaneously.

An organ was playing, a debate was taking place, fragments of conversation were being broadcast, and people were appearing at different windows in the hall.

Dealing with audience reaction, Dewey said that some people appeared greatly amused and pleased. "There was a great deal of laughter and quite a bit of clapping," he said.

The tragedy of the conference, he said, was the lack of communication between the speakers and the audience. But, through the incident, he felt that something was suddenly reaching the audience. The whole matter was entirely genuine, he said.

Prosecutor Heatly, cross-examining: "You don't see any objection to this incident?" Reply—"I consider it an impression of art, the same as painting."

Dewey was shown a clipping from the Los Angeles Times, in which he was quoted as saying of the incident: "We just decided to break the ridiculous rule that nudes should not be moved or touched." But, he told the prosecutor, he had been "completely misquoted."

He said it did not occur to him that some people might be outraged. There was no outcry, but rather amusement. The use of the nude related very much to life, truth or vision.

Asked by the agent for defense if any member of the audience would take offense at the mere appearance of a naked woman, Dewey replied: "No. In one way or another, people have taken offense at practically everything which is new or has been done, including Shakespeare and Michaelangelo. There is nothing new about the female form. It is one of the symbols of art. If people choose to see it as a vulgar or obscene object, then that is their choice."

Dewey was described as director of the Avante-Garde Art Theatre of Los Angeles.

Describing the incident further, he said that when the girl model went across there was quite a bit of applause, and at the end of the piece, when the bagpiper appeared, there was clapping in unison and quite a bit of shouting and applause.

Said the prosecutor: "Do you know what the McEwan Hall is? Do you know how the citizens of Edinburgh obtained the McEwan Hall? The McEwan Hall is not a theatre. It doesn't have a stage, or footlights, or backcloth."

When Dewey pointed out that Greek theatre didn't have a stage and didn't need one, the prosecutor threw up his hands and said: "Oh, never mind!" (Laughter).

Duncan Macrae, a leading Scot stage and film actor, who followed Dewey into the witness-box, was asked about audience reaction to the nude incident, and replied he thought they were "pretty glum."

"There was a certain amount of tittering," he said. "Had I been exercising my own professional skill, I would have been disappointed by the reaction."

Macrae added: "I believe I was among the first to object, in purely aesthetic terms. My objection to the happening was that it was an intrusion—this was a drama conference." He thought the incident was irrelevant.

Playwright Rohert McLellan, who had been present at the confab, said there was no distaste in the reaction.

"There was some puzzlement, some derision, and a lot of amusement," he said.

Prosecutor Heatly said that, in another place and at another time, this incident might have been all right. But this was not a theatre; it was a drama conference, in the McEwan Hall, where serious debates and literary speeches were expected.

A 76-year-old former missionary, Miss Catherine Hotchkiss, said it was "an absolute scandal" that this should happen in a hall from which so many people had received university degrees.

Asked why she attended the drama conference, she said: "I felt drama was a very important part of the Festival. There had been some discussion about Lenny Bruce coming, and I felt that was something we couldn't condone in this country."

Defense agent: "So you went to see what took place which you couldn't condone?" Reply—"Certainly not."

"You thought Lenny Bruce being invited was shocking?"—"Certainly. And our Member of Parliament, Mr. Clark Hutchison, thought so, too, and brought it up in Parliament."

Defense lawyer Nicholas Fairbairn, concluding, claimed that the fact of the state of nudity of either sex without specification had never been an offense known to the law of Scotland or England. In order to commit an offense, he said, there had to be some gesture, movement or act which was obscene, indecent or erotic.

EXHIBS CAN BE WRONG ESPECIALLY IN CHILE

Santiago, Dec. 23.

For six years not an exhibitor here wanted Berlanga's "Calabuig" (whatever the terms) and the film collected successive layers of dust in the office of distributor Victor Alvarez. No stars and a title no one can pronounce was the unanimous verdict for rejection of this pic.

Now it turns out that the exhibs may have been wrong. The amusing story of an atomic scientist enjoying the simple pleasure of life in a Spanish village where everybody is engaged in smuggling and where fishing is a recreational activity, is doing surprisingly well. It was finally opened at the 440-seat Cine Espana during the pre-Christmas doldrums.

Despite all this, "Calabuig," strongly backed by crix and retitled "Calabuch," has made a tidy $5,000 in five weeks. This is above average for this theatre which specializes in Spanish films.

Edinburgh U. to Honor Actor Laurence Olivier

Edinburgh, Dec. 30.

Laurence Olivier is to be honored with the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws by Edinburgh University. Award will be made at a special ceremony on July 2 next year. Degree is listed as going to "Sir Laurence Kerr Olivier, director of the National Theatre since 1962."

Others receiving the same degree will include the husband-and-wife partnership of Professor Gunnar Myrdal and his wife Alva. Both are Swedish writers, she as a sociologist, he as an economist and international statesman.

Bardot Says She Would Go for Yank Musical Pic If Made in Paris

Paris, Dec. 30.

Brigitte Bardot, described as an international sex kitten, who has been wooed by Hollywood for some time, said this week that she would like her next film to be an American musical provided it was made in France, and not in Hollywood.

Miss Bardot has been up for a pic with Gene Kelly and one with Frank Sinatra but nothing ever came of them. She said that American filmmakers were better at film musicals than any other nation, and it was one of the best types of U.S. pix.

Since she had been trained as a dancer, has cut records, and done a yearly tv musical New Year's Eve program, she felt ready to try her hand at one. She had made one French film that had some dance numbers in it via "Cette Sacre Gamine" (That Darn Kid), but it was far from the Hollywood manner.

Miss Bardot also said that she had not refused to go to Hollywood for any reasons about preserving her myth or mystery, or anything like that, but because she felt that working conditions were different there and she was more at ease at home.

In fact, her presently shooting pic "Une Ravissante Idiote" (A Ravishing Idiot), with Tony Perkins, had to call off British studio work when she was mobbed by fans and press people. And Italy, for her just released pic "Le Mepris" (Contempt), was harder to work in, due to prying photogs, than in France.

However the Hollywood tuner will have to wait for she feels she has been overworked of late and wants a rest. She has even put off her annual tv stint this year. She recently had an offer for a straight comedy role from George Axelrod, in a pic to be made here, but she turned it down. She is waiting for a good musical pic offer.

Miss Bardot is now reportedly learning English and once had a bit part in a British pic before she became a star, "Doctor at Sea."

Smaller French Exhibs Happy With Added Aid

Paris, Dec. 30.

Small exhibitors, who make up a big part of the over 5,000 hardtops, as well as substandard (16m) and ambulating setups, got some satisfaction and aid from the government after their recent meeting.

They felt themselves cut off from aid for renovation, overtaxed, unfairly deprived of pix by the booking systems and also unfairly competed against by nationalized tv showing of pix at prime filmgoing weekend times.

Small exhibs are defined as those who have less than 1,200 admissions per week and charge a maximum 40c tab. Now they will get pegged by yearly incomes, based on 1,200 times 40c, but which may allow for raised ducat prices during holidays to make up for slack weeks, way under the minimum level set.

Also, aid loans may be forthcoming to renovate houses as well as special tax cuts for showing films deemed worthy for family and youth attendance. They may have access earlier to more important pix, with allowed special above average prices, and may also get satisfaction on tele showings of pix.

International Sound Track

London

Filming is to start at the Metro British studios in February on "Journey's End," based on the R. C. Sherriff, trench warfare play, which was first staged in the West End in 1929. Ben Arbeid is to produce and the screenplay is by David Pursall and Jack Seddon. The following month, Metro starts a new Agatha Christie thriller, "ABC Murders," with Zero Mostel playing Hercule Poirot. Lawrence P. Bachman is producing . . . "How the West Was Won" has grossed almost $2,240,000 in its first five engagements in Britain. At the Casino alone, where it has been playing for more than a year, the take exceeds $1,800,000. It has also played 11 weeks in Glasgow, 13 weeks in Birmingham and seven weeks apiece in Newcastle and Manchester . . . Another Cinerama-Metro production, "The Wonderful World of the Brothers Grimm," has grossed over $420,000. It originally opened at the Coliseum on July 15, and moved to the Royalty at the end of November.

Paris

At leat $80,000 may be spent on promoting Otto Preminger's "The Cardinal" (Col) in Europe. Prem was in for the gala opening himself last week at the Opera with thesps Tom Tryon, Raf Vallone, Carole Lynley and Romy Schneider. Press reaction was mixed but generally okay. At a press conference Prem, in answer to a question about why he made a Catholic pic, said it was not a Catholic film but on tolerance. He opined that he was not a virgin but made "The Moon is Blue," not a dope addict but did "The Man With Golden Arm," not a politician but did "Advise and Consent." When somebody asked about "Exodus," Prem smilingly said "Touche." . . "It's A Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World" (UA) got good early reviews underlining the pic had plenty of yocks. It should be in for good biz . . . France will exchange films with Red China under a cultural exchange deal with five French pix against two Chinese . . . It seems that 13 pix were conceived by groups of pic thesps and technicians and advance looksee at scripts by the Centre Du Cinema had been recipients of promised advance aid handouts. However only two were purportedly backed by local producers. As one puts it, governmental aid is not enough and it is autofinancing and commercial outlook that count . . . Of the 15,000 actors registered under the Social Security setup here only 5,000 worked in '63 . . . "Cleopatra" (20th) has now registered 221,509 entries in six weeks. But Jerry Lewis's "The Nutty Professor" (Par) averaged 240,833 in the same period. But it is true latter had more shows per day and was in more houses, yet had a lower admission fee . . . H. G. Clouzot prepping an April '64 start of his "La Nuit Obscure" (Obscure Night) with Serge Reggiani and Romy Schneider. Theme is jealousy. Incidentally, Miss Schneider's breaking of her longtime "engagement" to actor Alain Delon made for frontpage news . . . Sue Cardozo, Yank frelance public relations woman, married last week to a non-pro local, Marquis De Brantes.

Francois Reichenbach winding a documentary on small town French life "La Douceur Du Village" (Sweetness of the Village). He also made a pic on a voyage of the liner France with co-director Pierre Grimblat which is called "Les Amoureux De La France" (The Lovers of the France) . . . Overall last third of the year had an upbeat in film attendance which has heartened film people here. But attendance is still too low for huzzahs . . . Fernandel's son, Franck Fernandel, into pic "Look for the Idols" and will headline a vidpic series "La Caravane Pacouli" . . . Marcel Pagnol still feels that films are a minor art compared to theatre or literature. He thinks they are all right for focusing closer looks at adaptations of plays and can give some feel of a literary work. But he opines they are great for conserving the work of great actors . . . "Charade" (U) started out with nice biz and okay reviews.

Rome

First organizational wheels on Federico Fellini's new film are grinding: an advance production group is being assembled for "Giulietta degli Spiriti," temporary title of pic, at Safa-Palatino Studios which Angelo Rizzoli's Cineriz has taken over and refurbished . "Sexy Nudo" becomes the nth Italo pic banned in recent weeks; it'll be yanked out of all Italo runs pending court decision on reported charges of obscenity and suggestive garb.

International Film Service officially gunned its new ad film section, Primo Piano, which also handles industrial and other documentaries, at press and client pour held at HQ for RISPRA, a pub-rel firm which has signed a pact to handle I.F.S. drumbeating efforts in sector; company reports heavy foreign interest in the Italo ad film production sector . . . Festa Campanile and Massimo Franciosa wound their second joint pic, "Le Voci Bianche" (Franca) on sked; Cineriz releases . . . Royal Film topper Guido Giambartolomei appeared in court to deny charges his latest, "I Tabu" is offensive to morals and religious sentiments, noted that pic had passed censorship and consisted of real-life sequences, making it a documentation on current customs.

"Cleopazza" (Crazy Cleo) is latest takeoff title for prduction here. . . . special Disney Caravan currently touring Italy stopped off at Collodi, home of Carlo Lorenzini, the creator of "Pinocchio," about to be re-released here . . . Lex Barker booked solid for next couple of years, thanks to success of his recent European-made westerns . . . Guy Madison equally ditto, having just wound 3 pix, comes back here after brief vacation in States over holidays.

Catherine Spaak busy these days with skedded shots for Roger Vadim's "La Ronde," opposite Marcello Mastroianni in Carlo Ponti's "Man of the Five Balloons," directed by Marco Ferreri, and "The Garden of Finzi-Contini," opposite Jacques Perrin, with Valerio Zurlini directing; her "Empty Canvas" is a current release, and "The Warm Life" an upcomer . . . Marco Vicario back from States, does two pix in spring, one starring his wife, Rossana Podesta.

Joseph Fryd's "An Italian in Poland," starring Antonio Ciffariello, completed; producer now readying his U.S. western starring Steve Reeves, among other plans . . . Edgard Ulmer brought his "The Cave" unit back from Trieste for local interiors, with Rosanna Schiaffino, Brian Aherne, John Saxon, Peter Marshall making trek on CineDoris production.

Berlin

Erich Koenig's Berliner Filmclub 1949 showed "The Tunnel" which Kurt (later Curtis) Bernhardt directed in 1933. Pic starred Paul Hartmann who recently observed his 75th birthday and Gustaf Gruendgens who died in Manila at 64 in October . . . This week's guest list included the names of actor Guy Madison and director Hugo Fregonese. Fregonese directed the German western, "Old Shatterhand," for Artur Brauner's CCC. Pic stars Americans Lex Barber and Madison . . . Another American actor, Walter Barnes, who has a featured role in Horst Wendlandt's "Winnetou," is now also sought after by German producers . . . Wendlandt is going to observe his 25th anni in the film biz in a number of weeks. He's 42, started at 17 . . . Ingrid van Bergen could have eventually played the role of Annie in "Annie Get Your Gun" here (as a substitute for Heidi Bruehl from time to time), yet the actress had to nix this stage offer. She's expecting (fourth month now). Her husband is Michael Hinz, actor-son of actor Werner Hinz . . . A big-scale gala preem of Stanley Kramer's "It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World" took place at Capitol. Lots of local showfolk attended the event.

Inside Stuff—International

In Paris the Society of Men of Letters has instituted suit against a book publisher here on a matter which may have important repercussions internationally. Publisher put out a "condensed version" of several novels by Dumas ,the Society's action being based principally on a 100 page version of "Three Musketeers." Book is in public domain, but Society claims its function is to "protect" works of art. Condensation, or "mutilation" of standard works, even when the author is long dead, the Society claims, is "an offense against taste" and in its domain to "protect." Obviously, if the Society wins its suit, it would affect thousands of "digest" versions of classics around the world.

Reflecting Germany's prosperity, the Frankfurt Music Conservatory sent 60 of its best students to Italy for a two-week study trip during which some of the students gave recitals in other music schools and civic institutions with great interest and success on the part of Italian authorities. "Cherubini" Conservatory of Florence has been chosen as the "twin" institution to exchange students and material between Frankfurt and Florence.

Just back in Manila from Europe is Eduardo Puzon, general manager of Insular Film Exchange. He was Philippines official (and only) representative at 1963 Venice Mostra and the fall MIFED meeting in Milan, Italy. He also visited Rome, Munich, Berlin, Paris and London.

Congress of the International Musicological Society will take place in cooperation with the International Mozart Foundation in Salzburg, Austria, from Aug. 30 to Sept. 5, 1964. President of the Society is Prof. Donald J. Grout (USA).

'Surfie' Shows to Draw Teen Trade On Big B.O. Wave—Aussie Ops Hope

Sydney, Dec. 30.

Promoters Dennis Wong and Harry Miller will bring the first imported "surfie" show into Sydney Stadium Jan. 16 in a major bid to win back teenage trade to live performances. Wong is a partner in Chequers, a top local nitery. Miller has long been associated with live shows in New Zealand.

Wong-Miller's talent slate includes the Surfaris, Paul & Paula, Roy Orbison, The Beach Boys, plus some local acts. Troupe will also play Melbourne, Adelaide and Brisbane, with a possible New Zealand and Far East tour. Transportation of the performers is costing the promoters $20,000.

Meantime, the Hoyt's cinema circuit beat Wong-Miller to the surfie punch by switching its film policy at the 800-seat Palace Theatre here to a live show tagged "Once Upon a Surfie." It preemed Thursday (26). Stars of the troupe are Lucky Starr, Brian Davies, Jackie Weaver, Jay Dustin, Dig Richards and The Deltones.

It's understood that Dale Turnbull, Hoyt's new general manager, will tour "Once Upon a Surfie" through the circuit's key suburban houses if teenage biz warrants it. He's re-named the Palace "Teenage Theatre." Top for the show will be $2.50.

Minor surfie shows, with strictly local talent, have been playing suburban seaside clubs this summer to very solid biz on Saturday nights on a $1 admission basis.

Odd angle to the local scene is that there are two teenage groups vying for top honors along the "beach circuit" — Surfies and Rockets. Former bleach their hair a bright yellow; latter sport red shirts and black jeans.

Frequent clashes between the rival factions brought prompt action by the local gendarmes, and a truce has been called by the two teenage "clans." Meantime, Sydney showmen are awaiting b.o. results of the Wong-Miller and Hoyts' surfie shows.

British Screenwriters Guild Quits FIAF

London, Dec. 30.

Britain's Screenwriters Guild, increasingly unhappy at the functioning of FIAF (International Federation of Screen and TV writers), has quit the membership and is working on the formation of a new global organization with American, British, Australian and Yugoslav writers as its nucleus.

Constituent Assembly of this new international body is planned for November 1964 in London. According to the Guild, the scripter associations in many countries already have expressed interest in becoming founder members of the new global federation, initially tabbed International Writers' Guild.

Screenwriters Guild withdrawal from FIAF follows several unsuccessful attempts by Guild delegates to introduce reforms into its procedure and administration.

'STRAUSSIANA' TROUPE

Dancers Moonlighting When Not Needed at State House

Vienna, Dec. 30.

Principal Dancers at the Statoper have banded together to form the Vienna Ballet Theatre. Directors are Lidia and Fred Mastaire (they have been twice in the U.S., once in 1960 with Andre Merteu's "Vienna on Parade" and in 1962 as a duo.) Troupe plans a "Straussiana" program of "Blue Danube" Valse, "Pizzicato" Polka and the "Radetzki" March. Soloists will be Dietlinde Klemisch and Erika Zlocha, and Paul Vondrak and Kaill Musil—all from the Opera.

In spite of dancers' 9-12 and 4-7 rehearsals at opera house they will perform on evenings when ballet is not part of the opera.

RCA Italiana's Soundtrack Pitch

Rome, Dec. 23.

A decided pitch for international soundtrack trade is currently being made by RCA Italiana, which operates what many repute one of the most up-to-date recording plants in this part of the world, here in Rome. Company, an affiliate of Radio Corp. of America, is not new in the field, having in the last few years recorded tracks for over 120 feature films as well as for some 50 documentaries.

Winding with such current releases as "Empty Canvas" (Ponti-Levine); "La Corruzione" (Arco); "La Visita" (Ergas); "I Mostri" and "Successo" (Fairfilm); and the 1963 Venice Festival Grand Prix winner, "Hands Upon City," RCA Italiana has among others recorded such widely-seen pix as "Dolce Vita," "Barabbas," "Sodom and Gomorrah," "Family Diary," "Prisoners of Altona," "The Leopard" and "Fellini 8½," to name a few.

Company is prepared to record, package and distribute at its own expense, the sound track music of pix made either in Italy or abroad —or both—in exchange for music revenues accruing to such platters in various world areas.

Company exec notes that as production of such soundtrack disks often can run to $20,000-$50,000 per pic, depending on size and importance, the local "package deal" also saves filmmakers the equivalent production nut while allowing RCA quality and distribution channels to provide pix with built-in publicity of a direct and indirect nature. Diskery for its part asks only for the proportionate share of music rights where these are awarded directly (as they are in most European countries) out of boxoffice takings.

Arrangement is felt "mutually advantageous," RCA spokesman said here, pointing to growing number of nationally and internationally known producers who have tested the new scheme.

EXHIB LEAVES BULK OF ESTATE TO SCOT FEST

Edinburgh, Dec. 30.

Louis Dickson, former cinema exhibitor here, who died here two years ago, left the bulk of his $183,000 estate to the Edinburgh Festival Society. It will aid a special appeal fund launched by the festival authorities in 1960.

Exhib owned the Astoria in the nabe Corstorphine area here.

Perth Fest Opens Jan. 15 This Year

Perth, Dec. 23.

The 12th Festival of Perth opens here on Jan. 15 and carries through until the end of February. It embraces music, drama, opera, films and art exhibitions.

The drama will take in productions of Anouilh's "Thieves' Carnival," "Hamlet" and John Whiting's "The Devils," with the first appearance Down Under of the Black Theatre of Prague from Czechoslovakia. The Elizabethan Trust Opera presentations of "Marriage of Figaro" and "La Boheme" already seen in other Aussie capital cities, will also be featured during the festival.

Flutist Allyne Tilsed and violinist Berl Senofsky will be featured as soloists in concerts with the West Australian Symphony. Spanish guitarist Jose Luis Gonzalez also will give recitals.

Most of the films are "old hat" in Overseas countries but new to Perth and, in some cases, to Australia.

Half of Columbia's Pix Lineup to Be Made In H'wood, Others Foreign

Tokyo, Dec. 23.

Recently named Columbia Pictures first veepee in charge of world production, Mike Frankovich told VARIETY he will step up the filmery's production to 30 pictures a year, about half to be made in Hollywood and the balance on various foreign locations.

Oozing optimism in discussing his lensing plans, Frankovich noted that three of Columbia's upcoming films will have Far East shooting. He cited "The Centurians," which will be made by Mark Robson and is set in Indo-China, the adaptation of James Clavell's novel, "King Rat," which has a Malayan background and will be written and directed by Bryan Forbes, and "The Green Beret," which deals with U.S. Special Forces' troops. It's set in Vietnam.

Asked if he wasn't bothered by pressures against so-called runaway productions, Frankovich replied: "On the contrary, we don't call them runaways. You can't call a picture made in England by Englishmen a runaway. And you can't call 'Lawrence of Arabia' a runaway. It was made in realistic, natural settings." He also mentioned the advantages of Columbia making "Bridge on the River Kwai," "Guns of Navarone," "The Victors," "Barabas" and "Rise and Fall of the Roman Empire" outside the U.S.

Enroute from London to take up his new post in Hollywood, Frankovich stopped in Hong Kong and Cambodia to see that "Lord Jim" was properly launched. The filmization of the Joseph Conrad novel, under producer-director-writer Richard Brooks, started rolling in the Crown Colony with a cast headed by Peter O'Toole, James Mason, Jack Warden, Curt Jurgens, Eli Wallach, Paul Lucas, Akim Tamiroff and a British crew and staff of about 85. In mid-January, the unit is skedded to move to Cambodia for 10 or 12 weeks of shooting and then goes to England's Shepperton Studios for a similar period.

In describing the lineup of Columbia's future productions, Frankovich made frequent mention of sexy angles. Asked if sex was now a necessary ingredient of a pic, he replied, "You have to use sex in them. But elements of sex can enhance a picture's value if they're presented in good taste. 'Room at Top,' 'From Here to Eternity' and 'The Victors' had lots of sex, but it was not the basic theme."

Co-op Production Gains Momentum In Italy; Scarce Funds Force Issue

Rome, Dec. 23.

The co-op production idea is gaining momentum in Italy. Achievement of lower budgets for equal values (and artistic independence) via pooling of talent in various phases of filmmaking is not a new idea, but financially-pressed Italo filmites are taking to it as a solution to the continued freeze on pix finance imposed by local banks.

Ironically, latest group to jump on the bandwagon, Franca Films is not doing it out of the same necessity (scarce funds and backing) but because it feels this method is the soundest at the present economic moment.

"The top budget for an Italian film cannot top $320,000 and be sure of its financial outcome," says Franca's Luciano Perugia, who heads the co-op outfit together with scripter-directors P. F. Campanile and Massimo Franciosa, and with production manager Nello Meniconi.

Company's first pic, "Tentativo Sentimentale" (Sentimental Attempt) was shown at the Venice Film Fest this year but only met with moderate success. Yet, thanks to its modest budget and co-op contracts, not much harm came of it. (Pic has now been recut and partly re-dubbed).

"In fact, the many errors we made served us as valuable experience on our current film," its co-authors Franciosa and Campanile admit.

Current item is "Le Voci Bianche," untranslatable title which literally means the "white voices": those of youngsters who in the 17 Century Rome were castrated and sold to choirs or employed, thanks to their falsetto voices, in female roles. Controversially plotted pic is played out basically as comedy, with a few bitter and satyric undertones by a cast headed by Paolo Ferrari, Anouk Aimee, Barbare Steele, Jeanne Valerie and Jean Tissier. Campanile and Franciosa directed from their own script. Cineriz is releasing this Technicolor pic, which was brought in under the key $320,000 figure.

Always on a co-op basis, Franca next plans a film version of Vasco Pratolini's "La Costanza della Ragione" (The Constance of Reason), which Campanile will direct alone.

Campanile and Franciosa's credits range far and wide in recent Italy show biz history, from "Rocco," "The Four Days of Naples" and "The Leopard" screenplay credits to writing the billing on "Rugantino," local hit stage musical which is due to hit Broadway early next year.

MILDRED MILLER'S DARING

Tackle Three Roles In Five Days Before Viennese

Vienna, Dec. 30.

Mezzo soprano Mildred Miller's made a threefold debut at the Vienna state opera First, as "Octavian" in "Rosenkavalier" then, as "Cherubino" in "Marriage of Figaro" and finally, as "Composer" in "Ariadne auf Naxos." Three such successes within five days have hardly ever been accomplished here before. At least none of the regular opera buffs remembers a similar event.

Mildred Miller dared to come to the home of Mozart and Richard Strauss and before one of the most critical opera audience in the world. Local newspaper "Die Presse" even headlines the critic with "Miller's Courage."

Mike Wilson Cops 'Arabia' Credit

London, Dec. 30.

A claim by Michael Wilson that he was entitled to screen credit on "Lawrence of Arabia" has been upheld by the Screen Writers Guild after investigation by an arbitration committee, composed of screen writers of long experience and high standing in the industry.

The inquiry lasted many months, and the committee examined all versions of the script and other relevant documents. In its adjudication, the committee held that Wilson was entitled to equal credit with Robert Bolt, and that the decision has been ratified by the Guild's executive council.

In arriving at its decision, the arbitrators were guided by the rules laid down in the credit agreements by the producers associations and the Guild, which stipulate that a writer who contributes at least one-third of the script shall be entitled to a screenplay credit. They decided that Wilson's contribution was sufficient to justify an equal credit. Contractual rights to credit were considered but did not influence the final decision.

The committee emphasized that its decision "in no way brings into disrepute the professional integrity of Robert Bolt," who, apart from his other contributions, wrote the entire dialog of the final screenplay from source material supplied by the company.

An official statement from the Screen Writers Guild says that in recognition of Wilson's contribution to the script, which received an award for the best dramatic screenplay for 1962, he will be presented with a similar award.

Irish Film Finance Corp. Warns Stockholders Of Likely Further Losses

Dublin, Dec. 23.

The Irish Film Finance Corp. warned shareholders of the probability of further losses on existing commitments. C. Russell Murphy, chairman, made the pronouncement at the corporation general meeting here.

Advances totalling $1,063,157 have been made and $639,079 is due the corporation for principal and interest on eight productions. Recovery of the amount depends on the success of the films, five of which are on release. Provision for an estimated loss has been made on a remaining film following the appointment of a receiver over the production company.

Murphy also referred to the difficulties of an independent producer getting a release in the UK. He said that in the future the company must limit consideration of applications to cases where there is a strong probability of a circuit release. He mentioned the labor troubles which beset Ardmore Studios, and the appointment of a receiver for the Studios in October.

'Mad World' Preem In Berlin Hurt by Many Factors; Crix Laud It

Berlin, Dec. 23.

German opening of "It's a Mad World" (UA) was on Dec. 19 via a gala preem at the Berlin Capitol. Proceeds of the preem went to the A Place In the Sun enterprise which gives needy Berlin children the opportunity to spend their holidays away from this city.

Although the gala preem had been carefully prepared, there was a half empty cinema. Entire lineup of the invited local Senate officials was absent because of the sudden death of Erich Ollenhauer, Social-Democratic opposition leader in Bonn. These officials were attending the state funeral there.

Patrons who would have attended the preem skipped it because they were standing in line for permits to go into the East Sector.

But there is some consolation for Stanley Kramer in the form of good reviews. Dieter Strunz, critic of Morgenpost, city's largest paper, praised "the rebirth of the glorious slapstick grotesques of the silent film times" and added "He who has a taste for optical humor is presented with an advanced Christmas gift via this film . . ."

Walter Kaul, a relatively fastidious critic of the Kurier, had high praise for the film's technical side ("rarely have we seen such effective chases") and also lauded the principal players.

Rise Of the Indie Telefilmery As H'wood's Major Development In '63—Otherwise Status Quo

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Hollywood's indie telefilmeries, their star ascending rapidly in the past few years, gained dominance over the major film plants in total output of production the past year. It was the outstanding development in an annum which otherwise was marked with little progress, as no perceptible trends developed in the program area this season. Nor were there any smash hits to approximate the success of such previous starters as "The Beverly Hillbillies," "Ben Casey," or in earlier days of tv—"I Love Lucy" and "Dragnet."

It was to a large degree a status quo year, with the majority of tv favorites being such returnees as "Bonanza," the Danny Thomas show, "The Lucy Show," "Hillbillies," the Andy Griffith series, "Dr. Kildare," "Casey." Only newcomers to break into the top 10 this semester were a pair of comedies, "My Favorite Martian," and "Petticoat Junction."

CBS-TV not only retained, but improved its dominance, relying principally on its personalities series featuring entertainers such as Lucille Ball, Thomas, Van Dyke, etc.

TV's attempt to bring new personalities on in regular series this season was something less than spectacular, the only one to succeed being Danny Kaye with his CBS-TV variety series. Jerry Lewis was cancelled out of his two-hour ABC-TV show after 13 weeks, and Judy Garland's series on CBS-TV has not been an auspicious success.

Despite Revue's dominance in the 90-min. series field, where the studio has the only three on the air, there does not appear to be any follow-the-90 trend at other production companies, nor any similar desire by networks to extend the longies trend. CBS-TV prexy James T. Aubrey Jr. has flatly come out against them, his sentiments being that they are usually padded, and don't benefit from the extra 30 minutes. Consequently, that web has no plans for longies for next season.

Behind-the-scenes, one of the most significant developments was the attempt to bring about a merger between Desilu studios and the Danny Thomas-Sheldon Leonard comedy combine. These talks are still on, and if they succeed could bring about one of the biggest telefilm operations in the industry, particularly in the field of comedy.

Dominance in the production field continues to be held by Revue studios, the MCAdjunct, which has 11 series in production, with an estimated $40,000,000 in production involved. MGM-TV is runnerup with five hour-long series.

Actually, the major film studios in tv film have not enjoyed a particularly good season. MGM-TV lost its "Harry's Girls" in midseason and its "The Travels of

(Continued on page 28)

Toss Hunt Stromberg's Name in SG Hopper As Bill Dozier's Successor

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Hunt Stromberg Jr., veepee in charge of program development for CBS-TV in Hollywood, loomed over the weekend as a possible candidate for the Screen Gems west coast chief spot, to succeed Bill Dozier, who is exiting the company.

Gerald Hyams, SG boss in N.Y., contacted Stromberg and said he wanted to discuss the situation with him when he arrives here Jan. 6 with other SG brass from Gotham. However, the chances of Stromberg exiting CBS-TV are considered remote because of his close relationship with network prexy James T. Aubrey, Jr.

Meanwhile, early reports that Dozier's successor may be Burt Schneider, director of biz affairs for SG in N.Y., were flatly denied by Columbia top brass in the east.

$2,000,000 Hypo For ABC Daytime

ABC-TV's daytime biz perked sharply last week with over $2,000,000 racked up in 1964 advertiser buys.

Daytime deals with the web were made by Wallace & Tiernan drug company, Golden Grain, Corn Products, Miles Labs, Rexall, Pillsbury, Dow, Hartz Pet Foods, Eureka, Kirsch Drapery, Union Drapery and Clairol, which added to a previous buy. In addition, General Mills and De Luxe Reading have been signed to sponsor a new half-hour cartoon show to start next fall on ABC-TV's Saturday morning block of kiddie shows.

News-Pubaffairs Sparks CBS Radio On Sales & Affils

CBS Radio, as it looks toward '64, is riding the crest of an increase in news, pubaffairs programming, a form of network service which has won the radio web greater sales and more affils.

In '63, about 61% of the network program service consisted of regular scheduled news and pubaffairs programming. That ratio, according to Robert Skedgell, assistant general manager of CBS News-Radio, is expected to persist in '64. Skedgell, though, felt that the number of special news, pubaffairs shows on the network will increase in the '64 Presidential election year.

In '64, CBS Radio is introducing a new 20-minute news show, to be broadcast at 6:10, called "The World This Week," with Harry Reasoner serving as anchorman. preem date is Jan. 4. On the same Saturday, web is increasing its regular 9 a.m. news broadcast from five to 10 minutes. This will give the web 10 minutes of news feeds on the hour from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.

Skedgell also told of a recent innovation of the web's hourly news feed. First minute of the hourly wrapup is devoted to a news summary, which affils can elect to wipe out for important local news. Web news feed is so formulated that affils can switch back and forth from local to web news without a hitch. Skedgell

(Continued on page 30)

ELLIOT REID AS 'TWTWTW' EMCEE

Actor Elliot Reid has been picked to host the new NBC-TV satirical review, "That Was the Week That Was," which premieres Friday, Jan. 10, in the 9:30 to 10 p.m. slot.

Reid, who has a long list of tv, legit and film credits, will anchor the U. S. version of the BBC hit with comedian Henry Morgan and singer Nancy Ames, who appeared in the network's hour preview a few weeks ago, also signed on as regulars. Also signed were the three writers on the preview, Robert Emmett, Earl Doud and Gerald Gardner. Leland Hayward is exec producer and Marshal Jamison is producer-director.

De Gaulle Sits in On French Tint Preview & Likes What He Sees

Paris, Dec. 30.

On a visit to the new radio and tv building last week President De Gaulle was shown an experimental color tv show on closed circuit. He reportedly liked it very much and asked tv and radio chief Robert Bordaz why it was not in general use yet. Usualy what De Gaule wants De Gaulle gets, but Bordaz had to explain that it was still somewhat premature and a very expensive proposition.

It still seems like it will be some time before tint tv is a part of the tv picture here. First, a definite process has to be chosen and put into general use in Europe, due to Eurovision, 2nd it will have to be the same process. However countries have not picked yet between opposing ones, namely RCA, NTSC, the French SECAM and Germsn PAL.

U.S. process is in use in America and Japan. French one can still be worked on and improved but local technicians claim it has certain advantages over the U.S. on reproduction of tape and films. In fact, it is claimed that U.S. system has been looking at the French one retape processing.

Also, the second web is just starting here and not enough sets have been sold to warrant a try at color as yet.

De Gaulle's positive reactions could speed work on the local process and perhaps help it in gaining future acceptances from other countries. All this remains to be seen.

Silliphant's CBS Deal

Creator-writer Sterling Silliphant has been signed to develop a dramatic vidseries for CBS-TV for the 1964-65 season.

Deal with Silliphant was set up by the network's coast axis team of Hunt Stromberg Jr., veepee in charge of program development. Hollywood, and senior veepee John Reynolds. Silliphant created "Route 66" in association with producer Herbert B. Leonard.

The New Nielsens

(Two Weeks Ending Dec. 8)

CBS-TV captured 12 of the Top 15 in the newest National Nielsen report (for the two weeks ending Dec. 8). On the overall average audience rating spanning the 50 half-hours (7:30 to 11 and 7 to 11 on Sunday) CBS led with a 20.9; NBC had 18.8 and ABC 16.0. CBS took five nights of the week, NBC the other two (Friday and Sunday). On half-hour wins the score reads: CBS 26; NBC 17 and ABC seven.

Following is the Top 15:

Beverly Hillbillies (CBS)	38.1
Bonanza (NBC)	36.9
Dick Van Dyke (CBS)	33.3
Andy Griffith (CBS)	29.6
DeMille Special (NBC)	29.6
Walt Disney (NBC)	29.0
Petticoat Junction (CBS)	28.1
Lucy Show (CBS)	27.5
Candid Camera (CBS)	26.9
Red Skelton (CBS)	25.4
I've Got Secret (CBS)	25.3
Danny Thomas (CBS)	25.1
My Favorite Martian (CBS)	25.1
Jackie Gleason (CBS)	25.0
Lassie (CBS)	25.0

Terrytoon's Cartoon Soap Opera, Other Items on '64-'65 Board

Terrytoons, the cartoon producing subsid of CBS Films, plans to come in with new network projects comes the fall, says Terrytoon v.p. Bill Weiss.

Weiss also held out the possibility that "Deputy Dawg," now in syndication, may also become a network entry in '65. He pointed to such series as "Casper, the Friendly Ghost" and "Bugs Bunny," which rides both the syndication and network trails with different cartoon episodes.

Weiss, whose Terrytoon plant is in New Rochelle, wasn't high on farming out the art work in foreign countries. The savings, he said, under current methods either aren't actually realized, or result in inferior work. He has visited cartoon faclities in Mexico, Japan, Czechoslovakia, and other points, currently being utilized for cartooning by American producers, but found them wanting to his needs. He said one of the pitfalls in producing cartoons abroad is that the foreign artist doesn't understand the American climate for which the cartoons are made. Simple gags and reaction sequences fall on square ears abroad, he maintained.

He didn't see any major upbeat in cartoons produced explicitly for syndication. Among the few produced last season were fresh episodes of "Deputy Dawg," Seven Arts' "Ko Ko, the Clown," Trans-Lux's "Hercules," King Features "Barney Google," "Krazy Kat," and "Beetle," and entries out of the Hanna-Barbera stable.

Unlike many other cartooneries, Terrytoons develops its own characters.

Terrytoons is producing the first cartoon soap opera, titled "Pitiful Penelope and Her Search for Misery," slated as a theatrical short and a possible tv series. CBS Films subsid still produces a few shorts yearly for theatrical distribution by 20th-Fox.

Sylvia Sidney Settles $350G Suit Vs. NBC-TV

Los Angeles, Dec. 30.

Sylvia Sidney has settled her $350,000 defamation suit against National Broadcasting Co. out of court for an undisclosed sum.

Actress claimed she was referred to as leader of an "all-mother harmonica band" in a tv commercial Jan. 31, 1963 for an upcoming Bobby Darin show.

German TV-AM Income for 1963 Hits $237,500,000

Frankfurt, Dec. 30.

Income of the West German radio stations which are members of the Association of German Radio and TV, and of the country's two television stations has been estimated at about $237,500,000 for 1963.

And the income of the same group for next year is expected to gross the billion German mark line—and come to about $300,000,000.

The Working Group of German Radio and TV, which met recently, estimated that in 1964 the German radio and television stations will collect about $80,000,000 in fees from owners of sets (each German radio set owner pays 50 cents monthly, and each television set owner pays $1.25 monthly to

(Continued on page 30)

Polluting The Rating Reports

By LES BROWN

Chicago, Dec. 30.

Competing broadcasters are raising the cry of "police thyselves" against those stations that attempt to inflate their ratings by means of tune-in contests during the survey period for that first crucial market report of the season. Purpose of these contests, they say, is clearly to distort the competitive picture of a market and to deceive advertising agencies with artificially-gotten figures that they hope will be mistaken for the normal viewing profile of the locale.

Worst of all, state the objectors, the contests actually seem designed to corrupt the diary-keepers by tempting them to compete for extravagant prizes (cars, color tv, etc.) when they know they can improve their chances of winning by marking their books the way they mark their ballots. If only a single diarist should give into the temptation and enter a station contest, that would be enough to pollute the rating report. It might also be enough to raise eyebrows in Washington and bring the government agencies and subcommittees back down on the industry's neck. So say the protestors, and ergo their plea to stations to cease and desist of their own will.

A majority of the stations that have held such contests this year were NBC affils. There's the "Pick the Winners" or "You're the Critic" ploy, which asks the entrant to guess which will be the station's top 10 programs in the next rating report. This is the one that was used by KMTV, Omaha; KXAB-TV, Aberdeen, S.D.; and KARD-TV, Wichita, with its three Kansas satellites.

And there are the must-watch-to-win promotions, such as the "Spot the Stars" gimmick employed by WDSU-TV, New Orleans, which requires the entrant to count the number of times the station's symbol is flashed on the screen in a given period. A similar promotion was used by KRIS-TV, Corpus Christi, Tex.

Such promotions and contests have been going on for several years in different parts of the country, but the opposition to them is only now beginning to reach the boiling point. The objection is not to contests themselves but to the timing of them for the "rating weeks," as if to deliberately make the survey period a typical, if not to actually falsify the viewer habits in the market. The practice is lumped in the same contemptuous category as that of preempting prime time public affairs shows, and other weakish network programs, during the survey period and substituting hokey sci-fi movies that would guarantee a higher rating.

Those troubled by the contests have called it to the attention of ARB and Nielsen, and both services promptly tossed it into the lap of the industry, recommending that the National Assn. of Broadcasters find the solution. Their one concession has been to put a notation in the front of the pocketpiece to the effect that a contest had been held in the market by whatever station. That hasn't been enough to appease the irate broadcasters, however, because they feel that time buyers will either fail to notice it or, if they do, will by and large ignore it and continue to play the numbers as reported.

Code Board Apprised

The matter has also been brought to the attention of members of the NAB Code Review Board, who have indicated that they're not sure the contests are a Code infraction although para-

(Continued on page 32)

New Allen Funt Show Variation on a WBKB 'First Freedom' Theme?

ABC-TV's lawyers are taking a close gander at Allen Funt's new CBS-TV show, "Tell It To The Camera," to find out just how similar it is to a show on ABC's tv o&o in Chicago. Latter show, "The First Freedom," on WBKB-TV, Chicago, early Saturday evenings, resolves around comments by local citizenry on any question that they want to sound off on.

"The First Freedom" is a pet programming project of WBKB-TV's general manager, Red Quinlan, who was reportedly irked at the new Funt show. ABC exees, however, tend to be skeptical over the possibility of establishing a unique claim to a man-on-the-street interview, one of the oldest formats in broadcasting.

Cinader Exits WB

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Robert A. Cinader, consultant on Warner Bros.' "Temple Houston" teleseries, has completed his assignment and left the studio.

BARRY & TERRY—NBC'S MERRY

'64: Big Year for Sports

The sports fever will be mounting to a new high on network television in 1964 when advertisers will be spending about $75,000,000 to sponsor various athletic contests from bowling to baseball and from track-and-meet to tennis. Sports billings in 1964 will be about 50% over the gross of $50,000,000 tucked away by the three networks during the year just finished.

One of the chief factors of the sharp rise in 1964 is the quadrennial Olympic games, winter and summer, which will be adding some $11,000,000 in sports billings to NBC-TV and ABC-TV. Former is telecasting the summer Olympics from Tokyo while ABC-TV is running with the winter Olympics and the summer tryouts. Latter web has an exceptionally heavy schedule of winter Olympic coverage with a total of 17½ hours to be presented on 13 consecutive days starting Jan. 29 and ending Feb. 10.

Another factor in the booming billings is the sharply upped price for the NCAA football games, which switches from CBS-TV to NBC-TV, and the anticipated higher cost for the National Football League, which comes up for grabs early in the new year.

In addition to these high-powered sports events, there'll be more coverage of specialty sports, such as bowling, golf, swimming, Little League baseball, bowl games, etc., during the year as regular weekly events. Both ABC-TV and NBC-TV are rolling with their 90-minute Saturday afternoon sports shows, while CBS-TV is going with a 90-minute sports show during the first quarter of 1964 and then will continue with a regular half-hour shows.

The heavy increase in sports availabilities is permitting advertisers to make some sharp buys in this area. Only the rare sports event can command the stratospheric charges of around $70,000 per minute at which NBC-TV sold the NFL championship game last Sunday (29). Much of the lesser sports have to go scrambling at far thinner prices.

Recently joining Gillette as the leading bankrollers of sports on tv are such advertisers as Texaco, Chrysler, Lincoln-Mercury, Firestone, and various insurance companies.

NBC's Walter Scott: 'Longest Living Network V.P. Anywhere'

By BILL GREELEY

The mortality rate of network veepees being what it is, a logical question for NBC-TV exec veepee Walter Scott (whose 25 years of continual service gives him the longevity edge on any living network veepee anywhere) is, "how did you do it?"

His answer is not exactly to the point, but then, on second thoughts, it's not exactly evasive either:

Actually, this business, more than most, has been a business of terribly interesting personalities; a few beginning to be legends, and quite young—and not all still in the business."

Scott (quite young himself for a quarter century on the job) will be among 18 network employees (seven from the New York office) who will be honored at a Waldorf-Astoria luncheon Jan. 7 for completing 25 years of NBC service.

But even with all the years behind him, Scott would rather leave the reminiscence to others (most likely the terribly interesting legendaries no longer in the business). He likes to look ahead, cautiously.

"In the last quarter of a century, we've learned to expect a totally new kind of business every five or 10 years." He cites the transfer of radio formats to tv, followed by the eventual diminishing of the "agency package" against the rise of "new sales

(Continued on page 32)

Colgate's $750,000 For NCAA Post-Game

NBC-TV, which sold out its exclusive telecasts of next season's NCAA football games in a matter of a couple of days, has sold the post-game, 15-minute wrapup to Colgate, via Ted Bates agency, for around $750,000.

Several orders are in for the pre-game, 15-minute show, including Carter, General Mills, Union Carbide and Bristol-Myers. Sale is yet to be cleared along with pricing. Preview may go for a little less than the post-game show.

TWO TV PROS IN KINTNER ENTENTE

By GEORGE ROSEN

Television—a business fascinatingly replete with "now it can be told" lore—has added a new and big one to its long list. New because it recently happened. Big because it produced an $18,400,000 network billings bonanza over two years.

That $13,044,000 bid by which NBC snatched the NCAA football games for the autumns of '64 and '65 was far more than a figure conjured up by the two Bobs (Sarnoff and Kintner) in collaboration with exec v.p. Bill McAndrew and the veepee in charge of sports, Carl Lindemann Jr. It had been metieulously set, with an eye on a sure profit (a relatively small $200,000 per season profit for the games alone, which is exclusive of the tidy profits from the pre and post game telecasts and that derived from an expected additional $20,000,000 per year in nighttime billings which tie-in rate card discounts will bring from the NCAA co-sponsors).

For while Lindemann, under Kintner's surefooted direction, was plotting a minimum bid designed safely to deliver the prestige-laden NCAA to NBC, the latter—as NBC bossman and quite likely unknown to Lindemann—was lining up (in advance) the advertisers at $2,300,000 a quarter sponsorship per season.

Kintner turned to two veteran tv pros with whom he's negotiated many tens of millions of dollars in deals throughout many years and in whose ability to work secretly with their clients he had complete confidence. Thus Kintner induced Young & Rubicam's Bud Barry to line up clients Chrysler and General Cigar, each for a quarter sponsorship. The negotiations were conducted without a leak to the competing networks.

Simultaneously, Terry Clyne, now chief of the Maxon agency, and Pete Levathes, who used to be at Y & R and is now in charge

(Continued on page 28)

ABC-TV's Midseason Cancellations, Reruns of 'O'Toole', 'Empire' With NBC Collecting % on License Fees

ABC-TV this past week, in a broadly based effort to plug holes in audience-leaking time periods, decided on several coordinated moves. Unusual aspect of the ABC move lies not so much in its midseason cancellations of faltering programs ("77 Sunset Strip," Jimmy Dean, Sid Caesar-Edie Adams, "Jamie McPheeters;" "Channing"), in addition to the already cancelled Jerry Lewis, "Laughs for Sale" and "100 Grand," as it does in the choice of their replacements.

For new program entries, ABC is heavily relying on two reruns of shows which were on NBC last season. And not only are these ex-NBC entries going into a rival network's prime time, but NBC collects a percentage of the coin derived from the rerun license fees which ABC has agreed to pay.

Thus "Ensign O'Toole," the Four Star comedy, goes into the critical Thursday 9 to 9:30 half-hour replacing the first half hour of Jimmy Dean, who exits the network about the middle of March. And "Empire," out of the Screen Gems stable, which was an hourlong NBC program last season, is due to replace either "Jamie McPheeters" Sundays 7:30 to 8:30 or to be slotted at 9:30 Thursdays immediately following "O'Toole."

Reason for delay in scheduling decision traces to possibility American Tobacco may order an alternate half hour of the Joel Grey "On The Brink" live entry, featuring new talent, budgeted at about $30,000 per program. Metromedia Broadcasting group, which had previously contracted for a syndicated rerun of "Empire" this season, released Screen Gems from its commitment to allow ABC to help solve its program problems this year.

Metromedia had planned to use it on its N.Y., Washington, Kansas City and L.A.-owned stations). Its K.C. station and one in Peoria are ABC affils.

Earliest ABC switch will be effected Friday, Feb. 14, when "Destry," the MCA production, replaces "77 Sunset Strip" at 7:30 to 8:30. Then "Sunset" reruns (from previous season's programs produced by Warner Bros. Bill Orr and not by Jack Webb as in the case of this year's disappointing new product) will replace "Channing" Wednesdays 10 to 11 after the latter completes its 26 low-rated run. All told, ABC will thus be scheduling at least 2.5 hours of reruns in prime time in the spring.

TV News Sumup

Here's the year-end scorecard on the inter-network tv news rivalry, based on the newest Nielsens:

Huntley-Brinkley	(NBC)	17.8
Walter Cronkite	(CBS)	15.9
Ron Cochran	(ABC)	8.0

Yearend Report: Henry Vague On Blurb Curb Action

Washington, Dec. 30.

The guessing game on commercial time limits was heightened by FCC's yearend report which only vaguely alluded to possible blurb curb action.

Chairman E. William Henry's annual roundup said only: "The Commission conducted an inquiry into commercial time standards and its report and findings are expected to be released in January."

While the report gave credence to the main opinion here that FCC is shying away from writing commercial rules, Commission sources refused to say this was the case.

At the same time, FCC sources denied the report of the House Commerce Committee that commercial limits had been dropped from the Commission docket.

The Committee report, following up the bill of Rep. Walter Rogers (D-Tex.) forbidding FCC to impose commercial curbs, said, "The Commission . . . has voted to abandon the proposed rules limiting the frequency of commercial broadcasts."

Commission sources flatly denied this statement and questioned where the House Committee gar-

(Continued on page 28)

OUT NEXT WEEK!

The

58th Anniversary Number

Of

VARIETY

New P&G Soaper Set for NBC-TV

Procter & Gamble will expand its soap opera operations in the new year with a new half-hour strip slated for NBC-TV's mid-afternoon lineup come spring or early summer.

New package, out of Young & Rubicam agency, will reportedly be scripted by Irna Phillips, vet churner of the meller suds who is currently on the CBS-P&G daytime hot-rater, "As the World Turns" (with Bill Bell also getting a writing credit).

NBC's only sudsville entry current (with CBS virtually running the town) is Colgate's, "The Doctors," also a half-hour strip.

NO. 8 FOR 'CONCENTRATION'

Lever Bros. has renewed NBC-TV's daytime game show, "Concentration," for the eighth straight year.

Soapery's order runs throughout 1964, and was placed via Sullivan, Stauffer, Colwell & Bayles. Company first ordered the show in May of 1957.

Granada's Group Profit $17,133,818

London, Dec. 30.

Granada, which holds a key commercial tv franchise and owns a chain of hardtops and is also diversified in many non showbiz directions, amassed a group profit for the year ending Sept. 28, 1963 of $17,133,818. After tax and depreciation, etc. the net balance was $5,958,335. This compares with the $9,269,178 net profit of a year earlier which, however, contained 17 months of Granada's tv operation.

Company is paying a final divi of 18 cents per Ordinary and "A" Ordinary 70 cents a share to make 32 cents for the year. A similar payout was made in the previous year.

'Three By Tennessee Williams' As Granada Paces TV Drama Accent

London, Dec. 30.

While this season has seen a heavy emphasis on comedy in the networks' race for ratings, the way things are shaping a lot of the new year's excitement will be engendered by dramatic shows.

For instance, Granada-TV, a major drama force on the commercial web, in a rare burst of program promo, states: "During 1964, Granada-TV will . . . develop and broaden the pattern of drama for tv which it has pursued over recent years." In effect, station intends to transmit plays by "master playwrights" both past and present or to dramatize great stories like "War And Peace"; to revive period pieces with "characteristic" flavor and to project new plays specially written for the medium, together with experiments in new forms of vidrama.

In the works at Granada are three plays by Tennessee Williams, never before seen on tv. In 90-minute versions, they are "The Rose Tattoo," "The Glass Managerie" and "Camino Real." Also in preparation are four of Noel Coward's best known works "Blithe Spirit," "The Vortex," "Present Laughter" and "Design For Living."

In Shakespeare's quatrocentenary year, indie is readying a spate of little-seen melodramas by Jacobean contemporaries of the Bard which will go out under the blanket title "Blood And Thunder." Among those slated are Cyril Tourneur's "The Revenger's Tragedy" and Thomas Middleton's "The Changeling." Another period series, under the umbrella tab of "Paris 1900," are six plays by the master of Parisian farce, Georges Feydeau.

Station anticipates commissioning at least four new plays for "leading authors," two of whom will be writing for tv for the first time, if the deals goes through. Another series of Friday night dramas authored by Northern playwrights, is to be given the greenlight.

Among dramatic experiments next year will be a new feature called "Triangle." This will comprise a series of one-act plays in a single program by three separate authors, each dealing with the same or an associated theme. Idea is that scripts should be passed from one author to another, with the individual scripters treating a central theme as, say, a comedy, a farce or a tragedy.

In competition with Granada, and other drama-conscious indies on the commercial web, is BBC which is scheduling one of its heaviest dramatic years to date. Not only is the web wading in with mammoth dramas like its 170-minute production of "Hamlet" as part of its Shakespearean celebrations, but it is launching a new web with a new adult look about its plays.

Serials like "Madame Bovary" are inked for BBC-2, which bows in April and which has four key drama slots planned.

RTF Says Non To Monte Carlo Fest

Paris, Dec. 30.

Raymond Bordaz, director of Radiodiffusion-Television Francoise, has informed the heads of the Fourth Monte-Carlo International TV Fest, due to run from Jan. 19-Feb. 1 that RTF will not participate as planned.

Actually the Eurovision group, of which France is a member, were out of the first two Monte-Carlo affairs, but finally gave in last year at the request of RTF when Monte-Carlo began giving prizes akin to those handed out by the Eurovision International TV Fest at Cannes and the Prix Italia.

Monte-Carlo added prizes for best adaptation for tv and best news reporting this year, besides those for best direction, scripting, and thesping, plus one for the program best helping understanding between nations.

Bordaz claimed it was done without consulting the RTF or Eurovision and thus the former would decline to participate this year. Monte-Carlo usually gets entries from private tv reps in most countries as well as from the nationalized networks.

CRENNA'S MULTIPLE WB DIRECTOR PACT

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Director-actor Dick Crenna has signed a multiple directorial deal with Warner Bros. tv, his first assignment being on the studio's "No Time for Sergeants" pilot. Option in the pact is for him to direct six more shows for the studio, three more "Wendy and Me" and a trio more of "Sergeant," if those pilots sell, or to direct six "Wendy" segs. Pilot on "Sergeant" rolls Jan. 6, and studio is testing for leads now.

Crenna passed a bid to star as John C. Fremont in a "The Great Adventure" seg in order to direct "Sergeants."

Arnot: Covering Vietnam Study In Frustration

The U.S. Government has spent over $3,000,000,000 in buttressing up South Vietnam against the Reds, but American broadcasters working in that country have to use equipment left over from the French colonial administration.

Charles P. Arnot, ABC News southeast Asia correspondent in New York last week for a year-end news wrapup, said that next to being bitten by leeches, the worst thing about South Vietnam was the rotten state of the transmitters. "Every time there's an electrical storm or a monsoon, we're out of business." Arnot said that a very powerful transmitter has been given to the South Vietnam government by the U.S., but it hasn't yet been offered to the foreign newsmen.

Censorship in South Vietnam is handled through the cumbersome machinery of a five-man board, but not exceptionally onerous, Arnot said. Sometimes, the South Vietnamese misunderstand an American idiom, such as "Ambassador Lodge is expected to handle the situation gingerly," which they construed as meaning that Lodge was going to make it hot for the locals. At the present time, the new South Vietnam administration is trying to make a show of liberalism, Arnot reported.

During sporadic periods of tight censorship, the American correspondents manage to get their film out to South Vietnam via personal luggage of passengers en route to the U.S. Generally, film freely traveles out of the country and can be seen in the U.S. within 36 hours of its shooting in South Vietnam.

Covering the guerilla war in South Vietnam is a study in frustration, Arnot said. "You don't know who the enemy is and you never know where the action is going to be," he said. In a typical week, 4,000 military operations of all sizes are launched against the Vietcong, but only about 120 contacts with the enemy are made.

Over the past decade or so, Arnot has managed to turn up at all the major shooting wars. He was at Suez when the Israelis, French and British invaded Egypt; in the Congo during the struggle for national unification; in the Himalayas when the Chinese invaded India; and currently South Vietnam. "I'm just unlucky, I guess," Arnot said.

Scots' Pirate Station Getting Bigger Audience

Glasgow, Dec. 30.

Radio Free Scotland, pirate station which propagates Scottish National Party aims and views, announced here that it will make "bigger and better" pirate broadcasts.

A more powerful transmitter came into service here, broadcasting on BBC-TV wavelengths. Station now reaches out well beyond Glasgow, on three nights a week, its own late-late show is beamed to Edinburgh, Fife, Glasgow, Bathgate and Broxburn areas.

'Buzz' Blair Tapped

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Monty Hall, executive producer of "Your First Impression" on NBC-TV, has named Leonard "Buzz" Blair as producer of the program.

Blair replaces Steve Hatos, who has taken over as producer of "Lets Make A Deal", which Hal and Hatos packaged for NBC. Hall stars in "Deal", which starts on air Dec. 30.

Averty's Macabre Show of the Year Stirs French TV

Paris, Dec. 30.

The controversial monthly variety tv show "Les Raisins Verts" (Green Grapes), directed and produced by Jean-Christophe Averty was moved from its former prime time Saturday 9:30 p.m. berth to Tuesday at 8:30. But it will remain a regular feature.

Averty's two previous shows were attacked by many critics and the public but also had plenty of boosters from both camps. The governmental RTF program head Albert Ollivier did not comment on the move, and Averty felt it did not matter when an offbeat program of his was shown as long as it was not censored. And, so far, he still has a free hand.

As previously reported, Averty came up with a sharply imaginative variety show with small scenes between numbers that had corrosive, macabre humor and brought on the pros and cons. Averty averred that he was not out to shock for its own sake but to treat audiences as adults. Perhaps the change in day was to get it more out of the range of children, he thought.

But he pointed out that the general public had come through with plenty of backing for his show in spite of the many critics who adamantly demanded it be taken off the air so as not to shock and disgust the public. Averty said that this was mostly hypocritical or just a matter of taste.

He had wanted to dust off variety shows and also add a moral to it, with his little in between number sketches, made up of humor and love. If his humor was black, that was the way he saw things and he was generally satisfied with reactions.

However his third show last week had critics who previously attacked him saying he had now mellowed and his show was good. This enraged Averty more than the previous attacks. He insisted he was the same as usual and maybe the critics had matured somewhat in the interim.

One lauded the sharp, uncluttered blacks and whites in his treatment of dance numbers and singers and the little sketches were thought much more gentle and in better taste. Appraiser said there was only one shot of a baby and it was not put into a meatgrinder as a celluloid one was two shows ago. Averty answered that the baby in question was also celluloid and a little refrain accompanied it about no more babies, though they were pretty. It was supposed to make a comment about birth control ambivalent outlooks in France today.

Critic went on to say that a dancer had something in her hand which turned out to be a glass eye and not a real one and even found funny a man with rifle to the background of a lullabye while he shot at a cardboard teddybear target. Also liked was a completion of the Venus De Milo with two more legs.

Still, Averty felt he was as he had always been and his next show will come Jan. 13. He is also planning straight dramas and is interested in kiddie shows. Averty was a bit worried about suddenly being lauded rather than attacked. At any rate this is one of the first tv shows to get such strong public critical and governmental rep pros and cons. It was generally felt a good thing. It now remains to be seen if this will be extended to more daring programming on the present, and coming second, channel.

TV-Radio Production Centres

IN NEW YORK . . .

Johnny Carson taking his "Tonight" show to Hollywood for two weeks of Coast originations starting Feb. 17 . . . Imogene Coca set for a nine-city cross country p.a. tour on behalf of her NBC "Grindl" show starting Jan. 8 . . . "Ladies of the Press" now seen on both Coasts—WOR-TV and KHJ-TV . . . Songstress Connie Francis set for a world television tour, the first of its kind, in April, beginning in Hawaii and threading her way through the Orient before heading for the Continent. Only two personal appearances, both benefits, have been scheduled in Tokyo . . . Xavier Cugat and Abbe Lane do the Ed Sullivan show Jan. 19 . . . Tony Bennett flying to the Coast for guest shots in the Danny Kaye and Edie Adams shows . . . Jack Ging, star of "Eleventh Hour," guesting on "Truth or Consequences" with his wife Thursday (2) . . . Alfred L. Mendelsohn, general sales manager of Elliot, Unger & Elliot, commercial division of Screen Gems, to the Coast for 10 days of huddles with studio execs.

NBC-TV's slick mag new-season promotion piece, "Startime," which was sold to viewers via write-in for 25c, was discovered in a 6th Ave. book shop on sale for $1 . . . WHLI, Hempstead, L.I., radio station has established a ski report phone number . . . Guy LeBow scripting a daily pubservice show for WHOM . . . Shirley Booth, NBC-TV's "Hazel," in town for a few days doing promo stuff plus shopping . . . Paul Cunningham filling in for vacationing Frank Blair on "Today," the latter vacationing . . . NBC News production manager Bill Quinn and family adopted four Chilean orphans last week . . . NBC-TV's "Sunday" will have first films on Sunday (5) of Pope's visit to Holy Land . . . Yvette Mimieux bows in first tv drama shot on "Dr. Kildare" two-parter Jan. 16 and Jan. 23 . . . Bill Cosmas joins "Tonight" show staff as a new unit manager . . . NBC News correspondent Irving R. Levine jetted back to Holy Land Monday (30) to prepare for coverage of Pope's visit.

Helen Hall, host of WCBS Radio's "One Woman's New York," interviews Julie Harris Friday (3) . . . Tom Dawson, CBS-TV v.p. of sales, vacationing in Palm Springs and Carl Tillmanns, CBS-TV v.p. and general sales manager, back from a two-week hiatus in St. Croix . . . John Karol, CBS-TV v.p. of network sales special projects, back Monday (6) after a Florida vacation . . . Ida Picker, (daughter of CBS-TV press info's Julian Picker), and a Radcliffe College freshman, wrote and produced a satiric comedy which had a recent run at Harvard's Loeb Experimental Theatre, Cambridge. Mary Costa signed for guest stint on "Beverly Hillbillies." . . . Mel Torme back to Coast and his Judy Garland assignment, after a Carnegie Hall concert . . . WDBF Radio, Delray Beach, Fla., joins CBS Radio, effective Sunday (29) . . . Paul Lynde guest on Jack Paar show Jan. 3 . . . Johnny Tillotson set to do guest stint on Jan. 16 "Jimmy Dean Show." . . . Larry Kert returns for second appearance on "Today" Jan. 10 . . . Jerry Liddiard, west Coast sales manager for Embassy Pictures TV, here from Hollywood for home office confabs . . . Tony Cabot to serve as musical director for WOR-TV's Cerebral Palsy Telethon Jan. 11-12 . . . James Jackson, production manager for "Twentieth Century" back in N. Y. after several weeks filming in Yugoslavia . . . "Captain Kangaroo" had its 2,500th broadcast on CBS-TV Thurs. (26). Bob Keeshan as Captain Kangaroo has participated in every one of the broadcasts since the program made its debut on Oct. 3, 1955.

IN HOLLYWOOD . . .

Dick Moore, quietly active in pay-tv since he left the presidency of the then-owned L.A. Times' KTTV, is moving into the community antenna field, which he calls the gateway to tollvision. In his setup is Paul McNamara, late of Telemeter . . . James Saphier, who knows to the penny, says that published reports of Bob Hope's tv income from Chrysler are "ridiculously low." The figures were $275,000 for the hour comedies and $400,000 for his GI tour which will show up as a 90-minute special . . . KHJ-TV bought another quarter of a million dollars worth of oldies, a block of 33 from Embassy . . . Edith Todesca is retiring from CBS after 32 years and will be feted by her co-workers at Television City. She started in Boston, which also spawned at the time Joe Rines and the late Ed Cashman . . . Pat McDermott gifted two of her staffers with veepee stripes—Anthony DiMarco and Roy Guyver . . . It's 20 years this month for Tom Cassidy as host of KFAC's "Evening Concert" of classical music.

IN CHICAGO . . .

Frank Ward exited as general manager of WVON (formerly WHFC), the Negro-oriented station that put itself on the map within the first nine months. Lloyd Webb succeeds him in a moveup from sales manager, and Ric Riccardo gives up his on-the-air chores to take Webb's vacated post . . . John Weigel's UHF station, WCIU, is having antenna troubles which might delay its promised January debut . . . WBKB's new antenna atop Marina Towers probably won't be ready for another 12 months . . . Bruce Roberts narrated a special on the Chicago Bears for WBBM-TV Thursday (26) . . . Charles McCuen, John Doremus and Harry Volkman are alternating as subs for Jack Eigen on WMAQ while he vacations in Florida . . . ABC Radio director Mike JJacobson has set an April date with Donna Vercillo of WBKB's accounting dept. . . . FM Guide, five-year-old indie magazine of station listings, absorbs the Zenish (WEFM) publication, "An Invitation To Finer Music," after the first of the year . . . William Gargan guests on Mutual's "Reviewing Stand" this week, with the subject "A Positive Outlook For the Handicapped" . . . Jim Hurlbut anchors WNBQ's annual yearend news review and forecast program this Sunday (29). . . . WBKB performer Jim Stewart goes back to Africa in January to shoot more footage for his "Safariland" series . . . Keith Holden, a former v.p. of Take Ten, joined Scott & Scott Advertising as radio-tv director.

IN LONDON . . .

BBC Radio slotted 45-minute biographic show, "The Singing Barber" depicting the rise of Perry Como . . . Associated-Rediffusion's top pubaffairs show, "This Week," turned the spotlight on showbiz for its holiday edition . . . Actor Chris Sanford, who played a pop singer in Granada-TV's 20,000,000-viewer show "Coronation Street" had so much success with his first actual disk "Not Too Little, Not Too Much," he's quit the show to enter the pop trade more seriously . . . Lord Hill, boss of the Independent Television Authority, set to make charity appeals on BBC Radio . . . Granada-TV chieftain Sidney Bernstein, alone among the commercial station operators in his decision not to broadcast the national anthem to close daily viewing (though he does on special occasions as, for instance, the Queen's birthday), was the only indie not to relay the Queen's Christmas radio message. . . . Spike Milligan, who sparked off the successful radio Goon shows, has another coming up for BBC Radio, "The Omar Khayyam Show." William Mervyn and Keith Barron pacted to take star roles in new Granada-TV dramatic skein "It's Dark Outside."

IN BOSTON . . .

WBZ-TV held gala Xmas bash at Yankee Fisherman and Joe Ryan, WBZ-TV press chief, set up a special table for the tv eds . . . WBZ-TV's Jim Jensen, newscaster and personality, has a reported $50,000 contract offer from CBS-TV, N.Y., covering five years. Jensen came to

(Continued on page 24)

CBS-TV'S $88,000,000 FACADE

Navigating Nielsen Channels

The major advertising agency tv factotums in the past few days failed to find that customary lull in their work and planning which in past seasons typically marked the interval between Christmas and New Year's. With next season's tv buying expected to occur earlier than ever (insiders expect all the quality availabilities sold out by the end of February), agency tv experts were pouring over the latest National Nielsen report (for the two weeks ending Dec. 8) to chart the rating depths, reefs and shoals of the various network time periods. Particular attention has also been given to comparisons with parallel reports of previous seasons to guage the effect of the shifting program tides on the National Nielsen shoreline.

The reason, of course, lies in the greater than ever determination on the part of the astute advertisers and their agencies to navigate safely through the Nielsen-marked 30% share or better channels to avoid network shipwrecks.

Thus the agency men are probing far below the mere surface data of network evening averages of a 20.9 for CBS, 18.8 for NBC and 16.0 for ABC as revealed in the first December national Nielsen findings. Many were more interested in the trend versus the same report one year ago which reveals a resurging NBC having closed over half the gap which separated it from CBS. As witness:

	Dec. '63	Dec. '62	% Change
ABC	16.0	15.6	+ 3%
CBS	20.9	21.7	— 3%
NBC	18.8	16.9	+ 11%

Thus while CBS has settled a slight 3% from tv's top Nielsen plateau and ABC has moved up 3% from its bottom plateau, NBC is now providing the Nielsen surge; i.e., a healthy 11% gain vs. last year. Furthermore, it's noted the NBC gain was not distorted by any high rated special, such as Bob Hope. In fact, the deMille special, "World's Greatest Showman," rated some seven Nielsen points below "Bonanza" which it replaced on one of the two measured weeks.

Agency attention was also in line with the tendency to focus not so much ratings per se but on the relative network by network and time period opportunities of reaching a 30% or better share of audience. In this connection, several agencies were studying long term trends with an eye to what they portend for '64-'65.

In the vital 30% share of better category, CBS placed 19 evening hours, according to the just released Nielsen report; NBC placed 13.5 evening hours and ABC seven evening hours, with ABC down from the eight hours of last season, CBS up slightly from the 18.5 of a year ago and NBC showing the major gain—up from eight hours last year to 13.5 hours or over half its evening program schedule this season.

Geo. Scott's New Base of Operation

There will be no dilution in the controversial nature of "East Side, West Side" series, when the main character Neil Brock, portrayed by George C. Scott, changes his base of operation from that of a social agency to the office of a Congressman.

The stamp of the series, judging from the story ideas as related by producer Larry Arick, remains true to today's social reality. Among the stories to be essayed in the Monday night CBS-TV series are: an episode dealing with corrupt business practices which finds some legislators profiting by their government association; an hour examining the morality of some shady union practices; an episode dealing with the numbers racket, touching on the social implications of illegalizing 5c number bets and legalizing $2 track bets; an episode dealing with the conditions at a Manhattan women's home of detention; and the social services the United Nations provides for its members.

Scott, as the main character in the series, will change his base of operations in February. He will become an aide to a Manhattan Congressman, whose political affiliation will not be identified. Purpose of the shift is to widen the hero's horizons, allowing him not only to deal with the effects of social problems, but some of the causes. New role also will allow the portrayed character of Scott to offer solutions to social problems.

Lyndon Childs will portray the Congressman.

Series, which according to the latest Nielsens polled an 18.9 rating and a 35.8 share, is winning its time period. In the wake of the rating climb, more affils are taking the series, produced by Talent Associates-Paramount. Some nine stations have been added to the "ESWS" roster, bringing the total to 144 stations. Usual complement for network series is from 160 to 170.

Half the show remains unsponsored. Philip Morris sponsors the first half one week and Whitehall Pharmical the next. The second half has only an occasional spot commercial.

NAB Meets Jan. 8 In N.Y. to Adopt Bylaws On New Rating Plans

Washington, Dec. 30.

NAB filed articles of incorporation for its Broadcast Rating Council Inc. in Wilmington, Del., and at the same time unsheathed more details about its rating plans.

The council will hold its first meet in New York, Jan. 8 to adopt bylaws and elect a Board of Directors.

NAB said the American Assn. of Advertising Agencies has decided to become a Council member but the Assn. of National Advertisers isn't budging from its "liason" status.

Board members will be selected from NAB, Radio Advertising Bureau, Television Bureau of Advertising, 4A's, Station Representative Assn., FM Broadcasters Assn. and the webs, ABC, NBC and CBS.

Rating services, to receive the Council's seal of approval, will have to submit to 14 "ethical and operational" standards.

Under these standards, raters would move to control bias in research, maintain "rigid control" in samples and uphold quality control procedures in their operations.

The rating service records would be subject to independent audits and raters would have to verify other numerous aspects of their sampling operations.

RYAN HITS BROADCAST BAN ON RUBY TRIAL

Washington, Dec. 30.

The decision not to broadcast the Jack Ruby trial in Dallas was called "a defeat for the public," by Edward Ryan, prexy of the Radio Television News Directors Assn.

Coupling the association's regrets with a blast at the American Bar Assn., Ryan said live broadcast coverage would have contributed—not detracted— from a fair trial for Ruby.

Ryan, who also serves as general manager of WTOP News here, termed the no-broadcast decision a "victory for the present leadership" of the ABA.

Ryan said the courts "remain for the most part remote, unfamiliar and inaccessible. The ABA now wants them kept that way."

IT'S A 20-YEAR 'LOOKING AHEAD'

CBS-TV will be going into the new year with an $88,000,000 facilities splash under way, representing building construction on both coasts. And the figure comes closer to the $100,000,000 mark in terms of the overall CBS corporate design for the future if the new Columbia Records plant in Santa Barbara is included.

Combined it represents Bill Paley-Frank Stanton's 20-year projection and pledge of allegiance to an industry that, in the envisioning of the population explosion, is pacing itself for an era in which the billings from television (plus the other corporate entities) could double and possibly triple. And it's a projection that's been accelerated by the Wall St. avowals of faith in the CBS masterminding as evidenced by the stock performance in recent months (capped by the proposal of a two-for-one stock split).

There is, of course, the new $40,000,000 CBS skyscraper (address: 51 West 52d) as the administrative temple in N.Y. which will house all divisions except CBS News and the studios. The granite building, an innovation in Manhattan modern-day construction, is going up at the going rate of $1,000,000 per floor and is now scheduled for opening in April, '65.

The new and expanded CBS Production Center on West 57th Street will represent when completed an investment of approximately $20,000,000 as, it says here, the ultra in modernity. Yet singularly enough, for all its space availabilities (including the housing of CBS News), the network will hold on to all its leased and bought theatre studios in N.Y., in anticipation of upgrading its New York live/tape originations, an in fact is in quest of additional properties. (The CBS blueprint-for-the-future: 35% New York-originations; 65% Hollywood; 40% live programming, 60% on film.)

On the West Coast the major thrust in '65 will be the tv network's purchase of the Republic Studios which, when expanded an redesigned, will tote up to some $23,000,000. Presently it's on lease to CBS (with the latter farming out some of its facilities to Four Star) but the network is now in negotiation to acquire Republic as its own. This, of course, is in anticipation of CBS creating its film shows "from within" (as with the present Republic lot tenants, "Rawhide," "Gunsmoke," "Great Adventure") plus such other filmed entries as "Perry Mason" and "Twilight Zone." It puts CBS in the unique position of owning its own Hollywood lot and thus staving off threatened lockouts from such majors as MGM, 20th-Fox, Warners, etc., since the latter have plans to utilize their facilities for their own exclusive tv use.

Also under way is a $5,000,000 expansion program at CBS Television City in Hollywood, now operating on a round-the-clock basis, with its multiple daytime and nighttime shows.

Aussie Viewing Pattern

Sydney, Dec. 30.

Figures released here show the relative viewers to commercial tv between 5 p.m. and 11 p.m. as follows:

5 p.m.-6 p.m.
SYDNEY	371,715
MELBOURNE	329,000
6 p.m.-7 p.m.
SYDNEY	662,250
MELBOURNE	573,893
7 p.m.-8 p.m.
SYDNEY	878,671
MELBOURNE	746,105
8 p.m.-9 p.m.
SYDNEY	848,107
MELBOURNE	738,678
9 p.m.-10 p.m.
SYDNEY	664,465
MELBOURNE	638,858
10 p.m.-11 p.m.
SYDNEY	286,786
MELBOURNE	374,964

Paar Re NBC: 'They Treated Me Badly'; He's Now an ABC Affil

Poland Spring, Me., Dec. 30.

Jack Paar came to Maine to inspect WMTW-TV-FM, the stations he recently purchased and made the following observation:

He won't appear on his Friday night NBC show next year.

"I can plead the 13th amendment to the constitution and not be made to work." He borrowed $1,900,000 from the Marine Midland Trust Co. in New York to consummate the purchase of a trifle more than 80% of the stations' stock. Total price was $3,675,000.

He will do some live shows from the station here if he can get a release from his NBC contract.

Since WMTW is an ABC affil late there is speculation that he might sign with that network.

While the comedian was extolling the virtures of Maine and revealing that he intends to purchase a summer home at nearby Boothbay Harbor, a tow truck was hauling his Rolls Royce to a service station. The engine block had frozen in the 18-below zero temperature.

Paar said his holdings are not as extensive as most people think.

He said the holds title to waterfront property in Florida which he purchased for $38,500 and now seeks to sell. Other assets include his Bronxville home and rights to television productions.

Paar said he is awaiting FCC approval of the sale.

He said he intends no personnel change and general manager John Guider will continue to boss the station.

Paar said when he moves to Maine he would like to buy a boat, if he has any money left.

"Remember this is my own money, I'm using here" he quipped. "Usually some one else's money is involved when I'm around, but not here."

Paar continued his harangue against NBC.

"I think the network has treated me rather badly" he said. "Friday is the least popular time for shows and they've placed me just after two clinkers for two years in a row. I don't think I'll ever have a high rating but I'd have a better one with better shows before mine."

It was an affable Paar who appeared before the Maine press. He hugged his daughter, cuddled his wife, rode on a snowcat for the benefit of cameramen, and had some harsh observations about Boston newspapers.

"They're undemocratic" he declared.

New CBS-TV Biz

CBS-TV's new "Tell It to the Camera" series wrapped up a second sponsor, Whitehall division of American Home Products. R. J. Reynolds was the first.

In a big morning minute plan deal, Colgate-Palmolive signed for 351 morning minutes, effective this week.

Other new biz found Lincoln-Mercury division of Ford Motor Co. inking for shortterm participations in "East Side, West Side," "Nurses," "Great Adventure," and "Rawhide." Heublein signed for 23 minutes in the morning minute plan.

Gleason Wants To Quit, Fontaine Gets Bid to Helm Show

Boston, Dec. 30.

Frank Fontaine says Jackie Gleason "wants out" and the Great One has asked him to take over the show.

Fontaine, home for the holidays and a nitery stint at the Monticello for four days, was given a press reception by WHDH-TV at Jimmy's Harborside Thursday (26).

"Gleason wants to bow out; it's a rough road, and he would like to produce and direct," Fontaine told the Hub tv editors.

"I want you to do the whole show," Fontaine said Gleason told him, adding, "I'll produce and direct it."

Fontaine said "we're all thinking about it. The whole show is on vacation now and Jackie is in Florida; this is a rest period where we're all thinking. When he comes back, we'll sit down and work it out."

Fontaine said he has offers from three nets to do shows of his own; and he's thinking." "I have to do what's best for the Fontaine family," he said. "I want my kids to grow up in Massachusetts so they won't be changing schools like I did when I was a kid."

MACK BING TO HELM GARRY MOORE SHOW

CBS-TV's Garry Moore show, which is having its rating troubles this season with ABC-TV's "Fugitive" topping it in the Tuesday, 10 to 11 p.m. time period, has secured new production aides.

Mack Bing, effective with the Jan. 7 broadcast, becomes director. He replaces Stan Harris. Bing was associate director of the Moore show during its first four years on the air. Recently he was associate producer of the Jerry Lewis show.

Mickey Ross (of the comedy team of Ross & West) takes over supervision of comedy presentations. Carol Burnett, onetime regular on the Moore show, and Jose Ferrer have been set for a Jan. 28 outing.

Irwin Kostal returns as musical director of the show after a six months leave of absence during which time he worked on the Walter Disney pic, "Mary Poppins." Harry Zimmerman was the pinchhitter during Kostel's absence.

Jos. Hayes Into TV

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Joseph Hayes, writer of "The Desperate Hours," among other works, has been set for his initial tv assignment, to script "Rick's Riviera," 60-min. Screen Gems series based on characters created by Paul Gallico.

Exec producer is Howie Horwitz, currently developing the new project for SG. It's a sophisticated suspense series. Hayes deal was set by Lee Rosenberg of the H. N. Swanson agency.

CBS Price Tag On Election Package

CBS has posted a gross price of $2,050,000 for one-quarter sponsorship of its 1964 Election Package, the price encompassing the radio network, as well as the tv web.

To date CBS has signed Institute of Life Insurance for one-quarter sponsorship, leaving the other 75% yet to be sold.

The election package is anticipated to entail 62 hours of broadcasting on tv. The anticipated package kicks off with a pre-Republican Convention program in midsummer prior to the Republican National Convention. There then will be a pre-Democratic Convention program and coverage of the Democratic National Convention, to be followed by four half-hour post-Convention profiles of the major candidates. Capping the package will be a one-hour preelection program, election returns, and a one-hour post-election analysis.

CBS-TV, in addition to the specials in the election package, will have some 12 other election specials.

CBC's Major Thrust in Exporting With Shows Getting Global Exposure

Ottawa, Dec. 30.

In 35 months ending Nov. 30—since Hugh Salmon took over as export sales manager—Canadian Broadcasting Corp. has sold 39 bundles comprising 416 programs (202 of them dramas) to 14 companies in Australia, Denmark, England, Finland, Ireland, Italy, New Zealand, Scotland and the United States.

Largest single sale was to Associated-Rediffusion Ltd., England: 35 one-hour dramas from weekly "Playdate," which also provided A-R with another 26 later—along with 26 half-hour "Parade" variety shows plus a 90-minute "Festival" drama: Brian Moore's "Luck of Ginger Coffey." Granada-TV bought 26 one-hour "GM (General Motors of Canada) Presents" dramas and 26 half-hour "Unforeseen" chillers; 26 "Friendly Giant" kid segs (made by ex-New Englander Robert Homme); 26 of science "Web of Life"; and Johnny Wayne & Frank Shuster's English-styled Xmas panto "Mother Goose" — which also sold to Australian Broadcasting Commission.

Latter is biggest over-all purchaser so far — 140 items including 26 "GM Presents" and nine "Unforeseen"; 12 half-hour science "Live and Learn"; 12 travelog-documentary "St. Lawrence North"; 26 "Web of Life"; 26 science "Nature of Things"; 13 musical variety "While We're Young"; half-hour historical documentary "Diary of Simon Fraser" — plus four musicals: "Barber of Seville," "HMS Pinafore," "Pirates of Penzance" and "Gondoliers." Latter three were tapes of Stratford, Ont., Festival productions, all tv-directed by Norman Campbell ("Pinafore" in collab with Tyrone Guthrie).

"Pinafore" and "Gondoliers" also sold to BBC—and to Southern Ireland Television Network. BBC also took a "Close-up" documentary seg ("Rickshaw") for two showings, as well as some film footage of Cuba. Scottish Television Co. bought an "Explorations" documentary, "Skid Row," and educational "Listen With Your Eyes."

U. S. purchases thus far: RKO General Inc.—26 "GM Presents" and a background film, "Powers of the Presidency"; N.Y. Theatre Guild — "Playdate" "Troubled Heart"; National Educational Television & Radio Centre, N. Y. — "Close-up" seg "Birth Control."

New Zealand Broadcasting Commission bought 26 "GM Presents" plus "Pinafore." Danish Radio & Television took four "St. Lawrence North"; Beta Films, Hamburg, 13 of the same; Rome Television Service, 12 of the same. Finnish Broadcasting Co. Ltd. bought "Pemberton Valley" documentary.

All above are English-language

(Continued on page 28)

Ease Metromedia Ownership Rules

Washington, Dec. 30.

FCC eased the multiple ownership conditions hanging over Metromedia's wrapping up the purchase of WCBM-AM-FM, Baltimore.

Commission gave Metromedia interim relief but did not waive the multiple ownership rules for the Baltimore deal to be completed.

Under FCC's terms, the two mutual fund companies owning minority stock in Metromedia and other stations will not vote any stock which violates multiple ownership rules. The companies—Keystone and Fidelity Trend—are also forbidden to attempt to influence station policies.

Commission said it plans to begin an inquiry or rulemaking on the problems of mutual funds and other financial companies owning and trading investments in stations.

Commissioner Lee Loevinger dissented from the letter to Metromedia.

Favoring the missive were Chairman E. William Henry and Commissioners Rosel Hyde, Robert E. Lee, Frederick Ford and Kenneth Cox.

Hub AFTRA Elects

Boston, Dec. 30.

Dave Rodman, WNAC, has been elected prexy of Boston local AFTRA. Vicki Vola, national prexy AFTRA, guest spoke at the election meeting of the local. Dick Tucker, WBZ, was elected first vice president; Roy Leonard, WNAC, second vice; Claire Devaney, freelance actress, secretary; Dick Kilbride, freelance actor, treasurer.

New local board members include: John Bassett, WHDH; Bill Hahn, WNAC; Bill Hennessey, WTIC, Hartford; Jim Pansullo, WHDH; Tom Russell, WEEI. The two national board members from the Boston local are Jack Chase, WBZ-TV; Fred B. Cole, WHDH. Robert M. Segal, counsel; Rodman, and Miss Vola made reports.

The New England local now covers radio tv performers in 30 stations in New England, Segal said.

There's Just No End to Miami's Ch. 10 Imbroglio

Washington, Dec. 30.

Miami's ever-embroiled Channel 10 is headed for the cauldron once more.

An FCC hearing examiner recommended bumping the present occupant WLBW-TV and recommended giving the channel to South Florida Television Corp.

The initial decision of Examiner H. Gifford Irion is subject to further action by the full Commission.

The same decision denied the competing applications of Civic Television Inc. and Miami Television Corp. for the channel which was the center of controversy in 1958. The imbroglio brought the resignation of the late FCC Commissioner Richard Mack on charges he had conspired with the late Thurman Whiteside, a Miami attorney, to give the channel to Public Service Television Inc.

Averring all four applicants proposed superior service, Irion recommended against renewing the shortterm license granted WLBW-TV in 1960. The outlet is licensed by L. B. Wilson Inc., owner of WCKY-AM, Cincinnati.

Instead the Examiner backed South Florida, giving it points for broadcast experience, local participation and for making a better showing that it could fulfill its programming and service promises.

Irion showered special praise on South Florida for its survey of the "tastes and needs" of the community.

Dick Gilbert's KYND Upped to 50,000 Watts

Phoenix, Dec. 30.

The saying that "old disk jockeys never die, they just segue (segaway)" will be proved a canard Wednesday (1) when former N.Y. City deejay Dick Gilbert pushes the button that ups the power of his KYND radio station from 10,000 to 50,000 watts, making it the first maximum power outlet for metropolitan Phoenix.

Since ankling Manhattan's WHN in 1946 for the cactus country, Gilbert built and owned two other Arizona stations, KWBY in Scottsdale and KENT in Prescott, prior to debuting KYND on June 1, 1960.

Dubbed "the Fifth Avenue Troubadour," Gilbert started warbling with wax on the air in 1941 and that year attained a certain distinction by being the first platterspinner ever called a "disk jockey."

KYND is a non-directional daytimer at the 1580 spot and Gilbert, a 41-year radio veteran, holds down the anchor spot of his deejay chain with a daily broadcast from 4 p.m. 'til signoff at local sunset.

WHK's AFTRA Pact

Cleveland, Dec. 30.

A two-year contract, upping base salaries to $175 a week has been inked by AFTRA and WHK (Metromedia) involving station's newsmen and announcers.

The new agreement has minimum weekly base being increased $7.50 for each of two years, plus a $30 guarantee on overtime, etc. New talent fees averaging $2 increase, plus four-weeks vacation after 10 years, two weeks notices or pay in addition to severances of one week for each year up to 15 weeks, and sponsors having to join AFTRA if they do their own commercials round out the contractual points.

AFTRA now opens negotiations with WERE.

KCOP-TV's Rise A 'Whole Town's Talking' Story

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

With KCOP-TV snagging the lucrative Kellogg cartoon bundle ("Yogi Bear," "Huckleberry Hound," "Woody Woodpecker"), the station's ascendancy after a 13-year red ink operation has been cause for considerable local comment. This year the station will return its owners, Chris-Craft Corp., not only a sizable profit, but indications are the '64 gross will show even greater strides.

Turn of events for the station, one of the four indies in the country's only eight-station market (seven V's, plus a commercial Spanish-language U), started in April, 1962, when Chris Craft named John Hopkins president and general manager. Hopkins' principal heritage was one of the largest accumulation of red ink in the industry.

Hopkins had program revisions flying within two weeks after he took over, at the same time making a major personnel change by bringing in Bill Andrews, who'd worked with him in Dallas, as general sales manager. In adidtion, Hopkins made a series of other major moves:

1. Overhauled Monday through Friday programming, concentrating on the 3 to 10 p.m. hours, with special emphasis on overall program diversification and building the kid audience. His theory was that grabbing the kids would give him maximum lead-in to the early evening hours and the color travel-action shows the station strips, starting at 7 p.m. Hopkins notes that grabbing off the important Kellogg business is the payoff on this tack.

2. Major emphasis on color programs, with the result that KCOP now airs more color than any other independent in the country. Only KNBC, the NBC o & o airs more tint shows than KCOP and L.A. itself has a higher than average penetration of color receivers.

3. Pinpoint scheduling of specials, both in color and black and white. Last year these included top film premieres, such as "PT 109" and "Longest Day," as well as "Pacific—Then and Now," several beauty pageants and a slew of others. This policy is being expanded, and for January, 1964, Hopkins and his program director, Gary Waller, have already scheduled the Nat King Cole special—its first U.S. showing; "One for the Money"; "Blackpool Tower Circus" and others.

4. A $100,000 advertising campaign in consumer dailies keyed to the "New Channel 13" theme. This was followed, on the trade side, by a specially produced presentation film, in color, which Hopkins and Andrews personally "roadshowed" to agencies in clients in over 20 key markets throughout the country.

As important, or more so, than the switch from red to black, says Hopkins, is the change in the station's image in the eyes of national advertisers and agencies, with the result that national biz doubled in '63 over '62.

Same policies are continuing for '64.

From The Production Centres

Continued from page 22

Hub from Peoria, Ill. tv station three years ago, and his contract is up at this year's end . . . Louise Morgan, WNAC-TV personality, pinned daisies on guests at goingaway party for publicity gal Daisy Weichel, who exits Hub's Statler Hilton for San Francisco's Hilton Jan. 2 . . . Phyl Doherty, WNAC-TV press chieftain, readying to screen the Phyllis Diller spec for local tv eds . . . Bill Buchanan, former tv ed Record, now on the Globe, back from Germany where he wrote special articles . . . WNAC had five winners in billboard contest . . . David E. Henderson, senior account exec at TVAR, N.Y., has been appointed WBZ-TV asstt sales mgr. succeeding acting asst. Chet Zaneski who has joined TVAR, Chicago.

IN ST. LOUIS . . .

KSD-TV covered play-by-play of the "Soccer Bowl Game on Saturday (28) between the St. Louis University team (collegiate champs) and the '64 Olympic squad . . . Don Whiteley named assistant promo director for KTVI-TV under Don Fischer. Whiteley held similar post at KTAL in Shreveport, La. . . Pat Dailey, 22-year-old son of Tom Dailey, currently performing as a guitar-playing folk singer at the Chase-Park Plaza's "Penthouse 11." The elder Dailey is station manager of KADY radio . . . KMOX radio's Grant Williams heading a drive for Christmas food contibutions for the Boy's Town of Missouri . . . KTVI-TV has slated a series featuring French lessons, "En France," for an early ayem slot after the turn of the year . . . Don Levitan, former deejay at KCFM and WAMV, joined Batz-Hodgson-Neuwoehner as radio-tv account exec . . . Apollo Radio of Houston has asked the FCC for a permit to open a new FM'er in St. Louis.

IN PITTSBURGH . . .

Morey Amsterdam was in town to m.c. the annual KDKA-TV and KDKA telethon for the benefit of the Children's Hospital. This year was the 13th year in a row that Group W v.p. Harold Lund has participated in the big fund drive. Three KDKA deejays, Art Pallan, Bob Tracey and Kurt Russell raised a total of $1,200 for the fund in a penny-a-month radio campaign . . "Dahlgren's Dog House," new audience participation show is now being heard daily Mon. through Fri. over WJAS with Bob Dahlgren as host. Show is aimed at women and features live phone conversation between Dahlgren and listeners. . . . WTAE pretaped a special half-hour program, "Sing a Song of Christmas" for Christmas viewing with the combined voices of 176 school children in private schools in the Pitt area. The program required the full use of two studios, four cameras and 30 technicians, floor directors and stagehands . . . Nine NBC correspondents will appear at the Pittsburgh Hilton as guests of the Foreign Policy Association Jan. 3 . . . Joel Nixon led a team from the Maxon Agency and ABC-TV news for the "Fight of the Week" at Pitt's Civic Arena between Hurricane Carter and Emile Griffith. Don Dunphy did the narration.

IN SAN FRANCISCO . .

KGO-TV revamping its morning schedule for the new year. Keynoting the new setup is "Newsday." a solid hour of news, local and internatibnal, handled by news director Ray Tannehill and reporter Bob Trebor, with Marty Pasetta directing. Another spot will feature Count Marco, the Chronicle's controversial columnist, in 15 minutes of his specialty, which is telling the femmes what's wrong with them . . . KSFO introducing a new series of IDs written specially by Mel Torme, 15 distinct tunes, batoned by Marty Paitch, with the Jud Conlon singers backgrounding the Velvet Fog. Idea was dreamed up by program director Al Newman . . . Jack R. Wagner, program director of KNBR, appointed a member of the Governor's Advisory Committee on Emergency Communications . . . Channel 7 (KGO) news photog Ralph Mayher promoted to West Coast news cameraman for the ABC-TV network. He'll operate out of Hollywood . . . A one-hour special on the history of Hawaii being readied by Lee Mendelson Films in Burlingame. Documentary will be similar to historical show on California that picked up a Peabody for Mendelson when he was a KPIX staffer a year ago.

IN MINNEAPOLIS . . .

State sanitation officials are kicking up fuss over upcoming David Brinkley Journal dealing with water pollution. The NBC-TV special, "Our Man on the Mississippi," is slated for airing Feb. 2. It'll deal in part with sewage disposal in the upper Mississippi River area. Frank Woodward, head of the Division of Environmental Sanitation for the State Dept. of Health, criticized NBC's research for the program, charging an attempt to "go around the fringes and get damaging information" . . FCC has granted Duluth-Superior Area Television Corp. an okay to build noncommercial educational tv station at Duluth. It'll be the second such station in the state . . . University of Minnesota will begin beaming closed circuit classroom instruction to graduate engineering students in Rochester, Minn., in January. International Business Machine Corp. is installing the 86-mile hookup and will underwrite part of the estimated $8,000 cost

IN DETROIT .

Sportscaster Bill Flemming leaving WJBK-TV after 10 years for "Wide World of Sports" ABC-TV's show, plus Big Ten and NCAA football shows. Flemming, who has been handling the net assignments for several years, said his participation will now increase now that he no longer has commitments to WJBK-TV . . . Carl Cederberg becomes news director of WJBK-TV and Bob McBride, formerly program director, has been named director of news and community affairs at the station . . . Dane Clark, starring in "A Thousand Clowns" at the Fisher, visits Ed McKenzie's "After Hours" show on WXYZ-TV . . CKLW-TV . . . inaugurates a new lineup of shows for the new year, including new cartoon series, expanded news coverage and a change in day and time for the station's popular "Theatre Nine" . . . John Kenneth Galbraith, former ambassador to Indian and economic advisor to the late President Kennedy, will be WWJ-TV's "Town Meeting" guest this week . . . Bettina Shaw guests on George Pierrot's "World Adventure Series" on WXYZ-TV to show her films of "Northern Europe".

IN PHILADELPHIA . . .

"Great Decisions '64," jointly sponsored by the World Affairs Council and the WRCV stations, will take place at a luncheon at the Bellevue Stratford Hotel (Jan. 8), instead of its usual locale, the Academy of Music. Veteran newsman Merrill Mueller will moderate the panel of nine foreign correspondents. Recalled from overseas posts for the forum are Joseph C. Harsch, London; Bernard Frizell, Paris; James Robinson, Hong Kong; Wilson Hall, South America; Wells Hangen, Bonn, Germany; and George Clay, Africa. They will be joined by Pauline Frederick, NBC correspondent at the United Nations and Elie Abel, NBC's State Department correspondent . . . For the 15th year WCAU-TV will give complete tv coverage to the annual Mummer's Parade. John Facenda, Hugh Ferguson, Bill Hart and Gene Crane will handle commentary . . . WCAU-TV to carry live college basketball games. Play-by-play to be handled by sports broadcaster Bob Wolff, former Phi Beta Kappa athlete from Duke University

$100,000,000 SYNDIE GROSS

200G-Per-Feature TV Potential

The up-up-up nature of the pix-to-tv biz is underscored by the new grossing estimates for fresh cinematics. It's forecast now that the more recent features making their way into tv can gross about $200,000 per pic in domestic syndication. That estimate is for "A" product.

Just about six months ago, the top for similar "A" product was put at from $125,000 to $175,000.

With 10 Shows Going, Hanna-Barbera Earmarks $11,000,000 for New Year

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Production budget of $11,000,000, highest in the history of the cartoon business, has been earmarked for next year by Hanna-Barbera. Company now has 10 shows on the air, network and syndication, and three new ones coming up next year. Ideal Toy has bought for 151 stations the new entries, "Magilla Gorilla" and "Peter Potamus."

On the budget breakdown, "The Flintstones" are down for $1,450,000; "Hey There, Yogi Bear," feature for Columbia, $1,500,000; "Magilla" and "Potamus" $4,200,000; high adventure series, $1,300,000; commercial division, live, action and animation, $2,000,000; industrial films, $900,000. Another $250,000 has been budgeted for research and development.

Next season H-B will have 13½ hours a week on tv, network and syndication. While "Flintstones" have cost up to $82,000 per program, advance planning has trimmed the current price to $62,000.

In the past seven years, H-B has produced 780 cartoons, all of which were sold to networks or syndicated. Both Bill Hanna and Joe Barbera, on the creative end, have developed 200 different characters. For Kellogg's sponsorship, they have produced 411 cartoons. While their "Top Cat" didn't survive on the networks, it's now a top rated show in N.Y. and England.

Cartoonery has proved a boon to actors whose voices are attuned to the characters. Many of them, including Mel Blanc, Bea Benederet, Daws Butler and Alan Reed, have earned up to $100,000 a year.

Cleve.-to-Cincy $4,500,000 Micro

Columbus, O., Dec. 30.

Ohio Bell Telephone Co. will soon begin construction of a $4,500,000 microwave transmission system between Cleveland and Cincinnati, with tributaries to Youngstown, Akron and Marietta scheduled about 1967. Smaller microwave systems now connect Youngstown and Canton with Cleveland. However, the company's plans call for some six to eight relay towers between Ohio's largest cities. A spur to Dayton will be built at the same time.

The new network is expected to be completed in two steps. The Canton-Cincinnati loop will start in spring, to be in use early in 1965, at a cost of $3,400,000. Then will come a Cleveland-Canton extension for use in 1967 at a construction cost of $730,000.

When the Canton-Cincinnati section is ready, the system will provide better communication channels among Cleveland, Canton, Zanesville, Lancaster, Columbus, Dayton, and Cincinnati.

Indpls.' All-Stereo

Indianapolis, Dec. 30.

WFMS-FM became the first all-stereo radio station in Indianapolis last Friday moments after the FCC granted approval of the changeover.

Martin Williams, owner-operator of the 5,000-watt station which has been on the air nearly seven years, has been ready for stereo for two years, waiting government approval.

TRIANGLE'S RIGHTS TO SEBRING RACE

Triangle Stations have acquired exclusive radio and television rights to the 1964 sportscar race at Sebring, Fla. Both the tv and radio shows will be offered for syndication to other stations.

Sebring event is part of Triangle's heavy coverage of auto racing, including a package of annual contests titled "The Big Four," a tv special of the Riverside, Cal., Grand Prix, and the syndicated weekly series, "Motor Racing Review."

Click of 'Battle Line' Cued by Rare Footage; Upcoming: 150 Markets

Official Films prexy Seymour Reed, who predicts 150 markets for his company's war series, "Battle Line" by March, figures that much of the show's success can be attributed to the exclusive film the company's been able to get.

In upcoming segs, says Reed (who is exec producer on the series), there is a lot of WWII footage never before seen in this country. In the Okinawa segment, he says, there are pictures of the first 13 Kamikaze pilots, and the Japanese narrator (show features one from either side) is a major whose job it was to escort the suicide pilots on the raid.

In the Midway stanza, there are interior shots of a Japanese submarine as well as film on the sinking of the Yorktown, and the Japanese narrator was the commander on the sub that sank the ship.

By way of rare survivors, Reed says that the Tarawa segment has one of 17 Jap survivors of the battle.

SPENDTHRIFT WIFE IN 500G CAMPAIGN

Indianapolis, Dec. 30.

WIFE AM and FM, new acquisition of Don W. Burden's Star Stations, Inc., has launched a $500,000 campaign to buy itself the largest radio audience in this market.

The station places a price tag of $113,000 on the merchandise it will give away during the next five to six weeks. Balance of the proposed outlay is going into newspaper, television, billboard and direct advertising.

Bob Ohlyer, station manager, said Burden has used the same system to gain radio leadership in his other two stations, KOIL in Omaha and KISN in Portland, Ore.

Burden purchased the AM-FM station, formerly WISH, from Corinthian Broadcasting in November and sat by quietly until the day after Christmas, then began booming the daylong giveaways.

Ten times an hour, the station reads off phone numbers. If the holder of the number calls the station within 30 seconds after it is aired, he wins a previously announced prize which may be a new car, a trip to Paris, a mink stole or a color TV.

"So far today, for example, we've given away two mink stoles and a color TV," Ohlyer said at midday.

SALE OF FEATURES HIT $65,000,000

Syndication, which has taken more twists and turns than the pretzel biz, finds itself at year's end, grossing more than $100,000,000 domestically.

That's the savvy estimate for '63, backed up by some indicative figures from the FCC. The more than $100,000,000 domestic syndication gross, encompasses feature-to-tv sales which is understood to currently top vidfilm series sales.

The estimate of some savvy execs is that cinematics now outgross vidfilm series in the ratio of about seven to three. What is called "significant vidfilm syndication product" is estimated to have grossed about $35,000,000 in '63. Features-to-tv is said to have grossed about $65,000,000 in its round of station sales.

According to a report of the FCC, U.S. stations reported that they spent on an average of $194,875 for film in '62. The average encompassed 520 U.S. stations, 447 VHF's and 73 UHF's operating the full year of '62 with time sales of at least $25,000. Multiplying the average film expenditure, which would include product ranging from pix to cartoons, by the number of stations, the total U.S. stations' film expenditure in '62 came to $101,335,000.

In '63, it's estimated that the grand total remained approximately the same. However, many of those in the syndication biz saw a more favorable swing in grossing performance towards features, with non-feature product declining from 10 to 15%.

Those vidfilm syndication houses still grossing more than $2,000,000 domestically are understood to include MCA TV, Four Star, Warner Bros., United Artists Television, Desilu, Screen Gems, Official Films, Independent Television Corp., CBS Films, NBC Films and ABC Films. Because most of the syndication houses do not make public their gross or earnings, these are estimates received by many quarters.

When the $35,000,000 estimate for significant syndication product is examined, the bulk of monies in that category comes from off-network product. Indicative of that situation witness the decline in importance of the first-run operation of United Artists Television (nee Ziv), and the growing importance of UA-TV's rerun Economee division. Another sign of the times is the emergence of Four Star, Warner Bros., and Desilu as syndication majors.

Outside the area of "significant vidfilm product," those series which command top competition in station sales, there is a growing biz composed of product spanning station group thrusts in syndication to cartoons of smaller stature. In aggregate, this "shadow" biz could total up to $15,000,000 domestically, according to estimates.

It would be incorrect to accept the FCC report on film expenditures of stations as reflective of the total grossing performance of syndication companies. Grossing performance of companies, in many instances, is pro-rated over the course of years. There is an approximation between the two sets of figures, however, which become parallel with one another over the course of years.

In the foreign field, syndication is estimated to have grossed some $60,000,000 in '63, the bulk of those monies derived from the sale of vidfilm series.

KVII $1,250,000 Sale

Amarillo, Dec. 30.

Jack C. Vaughn has sold KVII-TV here to John B. Walton Jr., of Monahans for a reported $1,250,000.

KVII-TV was sold by Southwest States Inc. of which Vaughn is board chairman. It has been operated by the Trigg-Vaughn radio-tv interests since 1958. It is the local ABC-TV affiliate.

PASADENA STATION MUST QUIT FEB. 10

Washington, Dec. 30.

Leaving the door slightly ajar for reconsideration, FCC told KRLA-AM, Pasadena, Calif., it has until Feb. 10 to stay on the air.

Commission told the revoked station's licensee Eleven Ten Broadcasting Corp. to submit a full statement and legal memo to back its contention that KRLA can continue broadcasting air without violating the intent of the revokation order.

The station's last resort plea against revocation was turned aside last month by the U.S. Supreme Court.

FCC said KRLA can continue broadcasting until 3 a.m. Feb. 10.

Universal Reactivates 'Woody Woodpecker'; Kellogg's 185 Stations

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Universal producer Walter Lantz has revived his "Woody Woodpecker" animation series on tv, with the new cartoons already sold to Kellogg's, which has cleared time on 185 stations for the series.

New cartoon series will begin airing the week of Jan. 16, will be seen on KCOP locally.

MCA-TV is handling syndication for the "Woodpecker" series, previously on ABC-TV from 1958-61. Lantz' new version of the character he created in 1941 will intro Space Mouse, a new character.

Lantz deal is for 52 weeks on the new series. In addition to three full-length, full "animation cartoons, each weekly half-hour seg contains a trio of live action featurettes narrated by Lantz: "Woody's Newsreel," "Around the World With Woody," and a three-part "History of Aviation."

WEWS IN REVAMP OF AFT. SCHEDULE

Cleveland, Dec. 30.

In an effort to tighten and improve its afternoon programming in view of its ABC commitments, WEWS has chopped the long-running 90-minute "One O'Clock Club" to one hour with the abbreviated stanza featuring Dorothy Fuldheim and Bill Gordon to begin at 1:30 p.m.

The six-year stanza featuring Miss Fuldheim has also been hit, rating-wise, by the KYW-TV "Mike Douglas Show" and the regrouping of programs will also permit the introduction of a weekly local "That Was The Week That Was" frolic with WERE's Jeff Baxter and Jack Riley who scored successfully when they subbed for Gordon last summer. Under the new format, Gordon will host the new hourlong, Monday-through-Friday stint with Miss Fuldheim a featured performer. The Joe Howard Trio continues on the show. Baxter and Riley will do their 30-minute program on Friday.

WNOX's 250G Expansion

Knoxville, Dec. 30.

WNOX-Radio, Scripps-Howard outlet in Knoxville has moved studio and executive facilities into a plush ultra-modern $250,000 building. The new studio and offices joins the recently constructed WNOX studio-auditorium which seats 1,400.

Stan Hagan, station manager, said a modern market media research and merchandising department will also be located in the new building. An expanded news department, enlarged studio areas and a recording department are included in the structure.

Profile of 'World's Top Grosser' (WCBS-TV) As It Gears for 1964

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

WCBS-TV, N.Y., the rock of Gibraltar of the CBS o&o's, winds up its most prosperous year ever, and enters '64 with these fortifications:

1. Purchase of Universal library of post-'48s and new packages from Metro and Seven Arts allows the staton to maintain its first-run pix thrust for its many movie showcases.

2. Separate news operation headed by Joe Loughlin continues to build its reportorial staff, a division which now encompasses 60 people ranging from editors to secretaries, a division which eventually will number some 70 people.

3. The formation of a documentary unit which will program Tuesdays 7:30 to 8 p.m. on a regular basis starting Jan. 21, when WCBS-TV elects to bump "Marshal Dillon," (half-hour "Gunsmoke" rerun fed by network for local sale).

These are some of the highlights of a tv o&o operation which is the top grosser in the country (and the world) in the nation's top market.

Like other stations in key markets, WCBS-TV has had to go that-away when the General Foods, Lever, P&G, and Colgate's took a good deal of their spot money to ride the network participation route. N.Y. o&o has been successful in winning advertisers, who for one reason or another cannot usefully buy a full network.

Prime example of such advertisers are the airlines. A couple of years ago only Pan Am used tv to any extent. Now, National Airlines, Eastern Airlines, American, and United Airlines are heavily engaged in spot tv. Another example of growing spot users are dealers associations. The auto makers may ride with the webs, but the dealers associations gain their impact via spot monies spent locally.

Local advertisers, too, have been successfully courted. Prime example in that field is the growing number of banks now using local tv.

While there has been some shifting of some national spot coin to networks, big advertisers are much more sophisticated to special marketing problems, and N.Y. being the

(Continued on page 34)

WGN-TV in Chi On Sports Binge

Chicago, Dec. 30.

While the tv webs jockey for the identity of "the" sports outlet, indie station WGN-TV here is taking steps to nail down that title locally. From Jan. 4 to March 29 the station will be telecasting no fewer than 28 sports events of local or national interest in what will amount to its greatest sports binge outside of baseball season.

High point will be reached on Feb. 29 when the indie gives over eight consecutive hours of its broadcast day to four different events, a one-day lineup that probably has no precedent in television. On that day WGN-TV will telecast the Illinois High School Swim Championship at 1:30 p.m.; will follow immediately with Big Ten Basketball from Ann Arbor, Mich. at 3:30; then the Greater New Orleans Golf Tournament at 5 p.m.; and finally the Blackhawks hockey game from Toronto at 7 p.m., finishing at 9:30. On at least three other dates the station will cover two events.

Lineup for the three month period includes 10 Big Ten basketball games plus the NCAA basketball finals and all-star game; seven professional hockey games; five golf tournaments; two swim meets; the NCAA ski championship and the National Indoor Tennis Championship. There's the additional possibility of the National Hockey League Stanley Cup Playoffs and Finals in the month of March, if the Chicago Blackhawks qualify.

MAKING OF THE PRESIDENT—1960
With Martin Gabel, narrator
Producer-Director: Mel Stuart
Writer: Theodore H. White
Editor: William T. Cartwright
Music: Elmer Bernstein
90 Mins., Sun. (29), 8:30 p.m.
ZEROX
ABC-TV (film)

(Parent, Koenig, Lois)

What would have been merely a revealing documentary study of the machinery of presidential politics as it functioned during the 1960 campaign fell heir to an enriching overtone of poignancy as a result of the passing of John F. Kennedy. This added post-production element brought otherwise ordinary views and recollections of that passionate and tumultuous national tournament a more touching, affectionate and deeply personal character. But even without this residual flavor the 90-minute documentary as presented on ABC-TV Sunday night, represented another outstanding effort on the part of David L. Wolper and those who toil under his banner.

Skillfully adapted for television by Theodore H. White from his own Pulitzer Prizewinning book, the program, expertly produced and directed by Mel Stuart and utilizing some film not previously seen on tv (or elsewhere), retraced the 1960 campaign trail from its small scale, grass roots origins to Kennedy's ultimate inauguration. Enroute, viewers were offered colorful recollections, some of an extraordinarily candid nature, of the spicier, rowdier five-sided Democratic contest and the cut-and-dry two-pronged Republican battle for nomination, followed by the memorable Kennedy-Nixon tangle. Humor flavored the proceedings throughout, most of it contributed by the late JFK, whose keen sense of humor was so vividly evident in this compilation of clips. Although the hour-and-a-half special seemed more comprehensive than penetrating, it served a rare purpose in giving its viewers a better overall understanding of the shape and substance of a political campaign for the presidency. Above all it was a triumph in assemblage and construction of footage.

Among the workmanlike assists to producer-director Stuart were those of resonant-voiced narrator Martin Gabel, editor William T. Cartwright, researcher Jules North and composer-conductor Elmer Bernstein. Tube.

TELL IT TO THE CAMERA
With Red Rowe
Exec Producer: Allen Funt
Producer: Mel Ferber
Director: Bruce Minnix
30 Mins., Wed., 8:30 p.m.
R. J. REYNOLDS, AMERICAN HOME PRODUCTS
CBS-TV, N.Y.

(Esty, Ted Bates)

That old radio staple, "The Man on the Street," is back, slicked up in tv frame. "Tell It to the Camera," from "Candid Camera" producer Allen Funt has replaced "Glynis" in the CBS-TV Wednesday night lineup.

In its premiere Christmas night, "Camera" proved to be "Candid" without the latter's perfect dramatic gimmick of the audience being in on something when participants are caught unaware. In frenetic sequence, individuals mugged around the country popped off on a variety of simple questions — "What's the worst Christmas present you ever received?" "What would you eat if you had to eat one food for the rest of your life?" and so on. No matter how hard the camera worked zooming in and out on the subjects, the show's basic sustainer must be the sheer wit or whackiness of the answers. People may be funny, but they're not that consistently funny. There was a tedium between yocks. There also should be some way to relieve the rigid formating.

Highlights included a stolid chap who spent a long minute trying to think of something funny to relate; a bearded hippy telling how he was under arrest for counterfeiting ("funniest thing that's happened to me for a long time"), and the husband talking about how it was a man's world while all the time unconsciouly faulting to his wife at every turn.

Vet CBS emcee Red Rowe was an engaging host, and the setting, with scores of framed pictures of the vox poppers, was interesting. Bill.

PROJECTION
With Frank McGee, moderator
Producer: Chet Hagan
Director: Bob Priaulx
60 Mins.; Sun. 10 p.m.
GULF
NBC-TV, from N.Y. (color)

(Young & Rubicam)

For its year-end news report, NBC called in 11 of its foreign correspondents and ordered them to go out on a limb with predictions about the coming year. An even more interesting show than this one would be one about a year from now when a scoreboard of the accuracy of these forecasts could be drawn up.

As it is, it'll be the rare viewer who'll remember that Washington correspondent Sandor Vanocur said flatly that Gov. William Stratton of Pennsylvania will be the Republican candidate for President or that Welles Hangen, from Bonn, said that East Germany will gain formal recognition. London correspodent Joseph C. Harsch, a veteran who understands the caprices of history, formulated his prediction about the upcoming British elections with oracular ambiguity: it looks like a Labor Party victory but don't count out the Tories. If the Tories do win, the NBC press department can establish Marsch's clairvoyance by quoting: "Don't count out the Tories."

The assemblage of correspondents, under Frank McGee's questioning about the prospects in their respective areas, generated an hour's worth of lively talks about world politics. Particularly incisive was Bernard Frizell's comments about De Gaulle and the NATO alliance and James Robinson's pessimistic estimate of the war in South Viet Nam. Also on hand with brightly phrased comments were Elie Abel and Ray Scherer, from Washington; Irving R. Levine, from Rome; John Rich, from Tokyo; George Clay, from Africa; and Wilson Hall, from South America.

Even if much of this commentary churned over familiar ground, the setting for this show was wholly original. The 12 newsmen, including McGee, were seated at three conference tables formed into an isosceles triangle and surrounded by a strikingly streamlined decor. Herm.

1963: TRANSITION AND TRAGEDY
With Howard K. Smith, anchorman; William Lawrence, John Scali, Sam Jaffe, Lou Cioffi, Bill Sheehan, Charles Arnot, Alan Boal
Exec Producer: Robert J. Quinn
Producer: Paul Greenberg
Director: Marvin Schlenker
60 Mins; Sun. (29), 10 p.m.
ABC-TV, N.Y.

ABC News brought in its top correspondents to appraise the year gone by and to forecast the year ahead, in a forum appropriately titled, "1963: Transition and Tragedy," telecast Sunday (29) night from 10 to 11 p.m.

The hour had its liveliest moments when the correspondents forgot their usual script phrases and spoke spontaneously. They really didn't seem to unwind until about 15 minutes in the program, when they appeared more at ease with each other and in the format of the show. It might have helped if they hadn't been seated formally around a semicircle with Howard K. Smith, in the center serving as anchorman.

Once they thawed themselves out, though, they did offer more of their personalities, the color which makes these year-round get-togethers different from the ordinary broadcasts. There was ABC News' Moscow man, Sam Jaffe, and John Scali, who covers the State Department, arguing about whether the split between Russia and China will widen or narrow. Jaffe and Scali also split on what Scali termed the "failure of the Communist system."

There was William Lawrence, prefacing a prediction, with "I have one neck to give to my network." Smith in the windup lambasted the current Congressional session for its inaction and antiquated machinery. Each of the correspondents lent some fresh insights in the news areas which they cover.

It was Bill Sheehan, of London, who brought up the fact that for the first time in years, the correspondents weren't addressing themselves to the question of whether there will be a major war next year.

It would be of interest next year to explore the differing viewpoints of correspondents, rather than to let them hang in air. Such seasoning would further help the show. Horo.

THE LAW AND LEE OSWALD
With Dan Rather, Newton Minow, Paul Freund, Leon Douglas, Percy Foreman Producer: Perry Wolff
Director: Tom Donovan
60 Mins., Sun., Dec. 29, 4 p.m.
CBS-TV, New York (tape)

With proper casting, Sam Benedict could still be on the network. However insignificant, that truth was clearly shown Sunday (29) as a lawyer man from Houston, Percy Foreman, starred in a cast of legal hawks in a CBS-TV discussion of the touchy legal aspects surrounding the case of accused Presidential assassin, the late Lee Oswald.

Foreman, a criminal lawyer and prexy of the National Assn. of Defense Attorneys, surfaced all the restraint the bar admires, yet was compassionate and colorful in his defense of the rights of the individual" in democratic society. In the confusing aftermath of the Dallas tragedies, he was a video testiment that civilized men are hard at work in the Texas bush.

Foreman's stand (along with Prof. Paul Freund of Harvard Law School) was that Oswald, had he lived, would never have had the benefits of fair trial. Had Oswald not been publicly lynched, said Foreman, he would have been judicially lynched. He pointed out that all evidence against the accused assassin was circumstantial — that his only defense could have been insanity—and that he was still being tried in the mass media.

He was gentle with the Texas constabulary, opining that cops in almost any U. S. community would have reacted the same way under the unprecedented pressures. And he was able to cite one side benefit of the giant press corps at the Dallas Police Station: "In 35 years, and at least 35,000 cases, I have never seen a man not confess if Texas police decided he was going to confess." The implication was, of course, that a confession most likely would have been extracted from Oswald if the newsmen had not been so close at hand.

Taking an opposing view was Leon Douglas, state's prosecuting attorney before the Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. His was the party line of Messrs. Wade, Curry, their enforcement charges and the sovereign state of Texas. Lee Oswald could have had a fair trial, that a jury of 12 unbiased citizens could have been rounded up in Dallas.

Former FCC chairman Newton Minow appeared in defense of the mass media, particularly broadcasting. It was rationally argued that media had a deep responsibility to the public as the law had a responsibility to the accused. All agreed that out of the shocking series of events should come "new ground rules" in legal and press handling. Prof. Freud viewed such justice as a continuing battle: "Before Madison Ave., there was James Madison."

CBS New Orleans newsman Dan Rather, the reporter at the hospital who gave CBS its jump of minutes on the announcement of President Kennedy's death, was moderator. He was a firm hand in the proceedings and looked to be a man on the rise in the network news organization. Bill.

A TALE OF TWO CITIES
With Second City Actors of Chicago, The Establishment of London, Burgess Meredith, others
Executive Producer: Dan Schuffman
Producer-Director: William Friedkin
60 Mins., Thurs., 9 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
WBKB, Chicago (film)

"A Tale of Two Cities" was not so much a tale as it was a demonstration of the filmic virtuosity of director Bill Friedkin and his directors of photography Wilmer Butler and Louis Wolfers. Friedkin has a great talent for the unusual and the off-centre, but he also tends to be narcissistic about his gift with the result that his directorial eye and ear overwhelm his subject mater. His latest opus for WBKB (a documentary not to be confused with the Dickens novel) was an orgy of visual and aural effects—a gorgeous hunk of celluloid, in its way—but not very cogent in what it has to say.

There is more to poetry than mood and imagery and more to the art of directing than the imaginative framing of scenes. Instead of magnifying or sharpening the "literature" of the piece, Friedkin's direction all but smothered it, so

(Continued on page 32)

XMAS NIGHT SKATING SHOW
With Jim Hutton, Vickie Fisher, Louise Wakefield, Judy James, Girls & Boys on Ice (55), others Producer-Director: Kenn Barry
30 Mins.: Wed. 9 p.m.
MPLS. FIRST NATIONAL BANK
KSTP-TV, Mpls.-St. Paul (tape)

This annual skating show, the ninth to be televised by Stan Hubbard's KSTP-TV, lived up to its predecessors' high standards which never fail to garner a large viewing audience. This was thanks to the adeptness of producer-director Kenn Barry, emcee Jim Hutton and the others who had a hand in the staging and execution, including, of course, the local amateur performers.

With the long and severe winters here, the Twin Cities boast outdoor and indoor ice skating rinks galore. These continuously give birth to silver blade stars, amateurs and professionals, a number of whom have become national and regional champions in their particular spheres. It was such local performers, Minneapolis Skating Club members, one a four-year old, who contributed their talents and, in doing so, came through with ice gliding of pro calibre.

Of course, this was on a much smaller scale than the big ice shows, if only because of its time limitation. But, just the same, plenty of high grade tv entertainment was packed into its 30 minutes.

Among those many who soloed and scored particularly with twists, spins, acrobatics, dancing and what-not on the show was good-to-look-at Vickie Fisher, a U.S. 1962 Olympic skating team member. Numerous flashy production numbers employed ensembles of 20 skating couples, and Lynne Dwyer injected much of the effective comedy business that spiced the goings-on.

Choreography and precision stepping reflecting the skill of Dorothy Lewis, one-time pro skate show star herself, responsible for the choreography and precision prancing.

A word of praise is merited for Barry's choice of the music and vocalizing which embroidered the ice doings. Orchestra, organ and singing numbers, giving zest to the skating, fitted in perfectly—the tunes were just what they should have been to enhance watchers' enjoyment. They were all recorded, but they sounded live. Rees.

THE YEAR PAST AND THE YEAR AHEAD
With Joseph Newman, moderator
60 Mins., Thurs. 10 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
WOR-TV, N.Y.

This show launched the year-end cycle of news wrapups on television with a panel of topflight newspapermen from all points of the country. The group included Clifton Daniel, assistant managing editor of the N.Y. Times; Emmet John Hughes, Newsweek columnist; Ralph McGill, editor of the Atlanta Constitution; Robert E. Johnson, editor of Jet magazine in Chicago; and Hugh A. Lewis, managing editor of the L.A. Herald Examiner.

Although partially billed as a retrospective glance at 1963, only one mention was made of the past year—a brief reference to the assassination of Pres. John F. Kennedy. That event served as a backdrop for the meat of the discussion —the prospects of the 1964 elections. In this area, each man was his own pundit about the identity of the Republican candidate for President, but there was unananimity that Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson now looks virtually unbeatable for another term in the White House.

The speculation revolved chiefly about personalities such as Goldwater, Rockefeller, Nixon, Lodge, etc. The role of the civil rights issue in the 1964 political race was touched upon by the Negro member of the panel, Robert E. Johnson, but no new insights were added to this hot potato.

As moderator, Joseph Newman gave the panelists their head, permitting them to focus lengthily on the anticipated domestic politicing. Not much time was left to explore very deeply the interesting international questions involved in America's evolving relationship with Russia, its attitudes towards China, etc. Herm.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Under Discussion

In the course of last Sunday (29) night's seg of "Under Discussion," WNEW-TV's two-hour discussion show which this time was devoted to a 1963 review of movies and tv, it suddenly occurred to one viewer that there is really nothing wrong with these talkathons that a little booze might not cure. Not for the panelists, but for the audience. This week's denatured cocktail party wasn't exactly dull—the panelists were a lively, intelligent lot —but one couldn't escape the feeling that he's heard it all before. Show Magazine's Otis Gurnsey Jr. moderated this time out, much in the manner of a tentative host who sees his party fragmenting into polite confusion. His chief contribution: calling time for the commercials.

Producer-director Otto Preminger, Betty Furness, Cue Mag's Jesse Zunser, the New Leader's John Simon, author-playwright Sumner Locke Elliott and Newsday's Barbara Delatiner were the gabber-without-hor d'oeures. With Preminger remaining uncharacteristically genial, it remained for Simon and Zunser to supply most of what interest there was, principally in a once over lightly discussion of how a critic approaches his work. It's Zunser's method to consider the intention of the creator and the specific audience for which a work is intended. Simon feels this is nonsense. He judges a work as good, bad, or indifferent according to his own unvarying tenents and hopes thereby to provoke considered judgement on the part of his readers. Actually, an entire show could be devoted to this topic alone.

The session otherwise was a fairly rambling anthology of generalizations, though Simon, when allowed, came up with some highly opinionated, comparatively provocative comments ranging from the film version of "Tom Jones" (without style), to Judy Garland ("a hysterical performer"), her tv show ("sentimental slosh"). American education (inferior to that in England and on the Continent), and Leland Hayward ("passe"). Anby.

Chronicle

Producer Don Kellerman who is leaving the pubaffairs vineyards of CBS to join the network of educational stations in an exec capacity, had a charming half-hour in the story of Hans Christian Anderson.

Telecast on Christmas Day at 7:30 p.m., the story about the Danish storyteller had Boris Karloff narrating, and the children's drawings of N.Y. and Danish schools to help illustrate the documentary. Other than the drawings, the program utilized the familiar still-photograph-in-action technique to fill the screen.

The combination worked well, aided by scripter Lane Slate, who exhibited just the right touch for a rags to riches tale of a man endowed with an expansive humanity and talent. Horo.

Bell Telephone Hour

The Bell Telephone Hour transmitted one of its glossier shows for its Christmas Eve presentation. The program had some excellent elements with well-written commentary which levelled some lofty items down to entertaining levels.

There were more pop items in this stanza than would be normal for a presentation with religious overtones. However, the producers made certain that the holiday spirit filled the air and the wealth of good feeling generally came through nicely.

Since Christmas is regarded as a children's holiday, the various segments were kept on a fairly simple plane. Earl Wrightson & Lois Hunt carolled nicely in a series of familiar tunes. The Bil

(Continued on page 28)

Gerald Green In Big Spec Spread (East and West)

NBC-TV producer Gerald Green is back from the west, down-under and Far East with three specials in full production and one in the future (west again).

In order of their scheduled air dates, the Green projects are, "Jawan," a telementary on the defense of India (against the threat of Chinese invasion) with author-soldier John Masters "as our Liz Taylor"; "The 1,000 Mile Campus," a Chet Huntley special on California's incredible system of publicly-supported colleges and universities; "Changing Matilda," another Huntley special on the socio-economic evolution in Australia; and, in the future, a follow-up on the nature telementary, "Voice of the Desert," featuring Joseph Wood Krutch, Columbia U. professor—this one on the Grand Canyon.

"Jawan," slated for May 10 airing, will be basically a study of what India is doing to build a border army that can withstand the threat of Chinese invasion. Aside from a queasy stomach (which the entire crew suffered from working in the border mountain ranges), Green's fondest memory of the recent days in India concerns footage shot during a reunion of Indian troupes with Masters, who was a British officer in the Indian army for many years.

The Australians, says Green, were something else—a bear loving, horse (race) loving, life loving and humorous people with whom "you can't get heavy and ponderous."

The lively Aussies provided him with a life-long dream, says Green—"We get rid of all the cliche's in two minutes. The cliche film clip dispenses with Kangaroos, boomerangs and all the other down-under familiars in a swoop, and "Changing Matilda," slated for March 31, gets down to Australia's amazing immigration situation (with thousands of Italians, Greeks, Yugoslavs and other new citizens on the way to becoming "fair dinkom Aussies." Results of the heavy immigration include a new mass industry in foreign meat delicacies, which is among subjects treated in the show.

Green couldn't find an Italian version of the Aussie pop anthem, "Waltzing Matilda," so wrote one himself, "Balla Matilda," and lined up an Italian pop trio from Buck's Steakhouse to give a rendition on the beach (which is almost as big an item in Aussie life as the ponies).

"Thousand Mile Campus" (March 15) deals with California's 71 community (jr.) colleges, 17 state colleges and nine-campus state university, all supported by public funds.

Like "Voice of the Desert" (which Green calls a sleeper because of the lack of promotion and big viewer response), the Grand Canyon special will be based on one of the professor's books.

NBC's $3,000,000 Biz

NBC-TV sales brought in about $3,000,000 in new nighttime business last week, with $2,000,000 of the total rung up on the Chicago office cash register.

Chi business, covering scatter plans in the first, second and third quarters, included Miller Brewing, $500,000; Plough Drug, $500,000; Green Giant, $500,000; Abbott Labs, $200,000; Miles Labs, $300,000; and Pfizer, $125,000.

General Cigar came in for another $1,000,000 in first-quarter coin.

SELMUR DICKERS NODELLA

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Selmur Productions is in discussions with Burt Nodella, veepee in charge of program development for ABC-TV in Hollywood, regarding his joining the telefilmery as a veepee.

Selmur is the vidfilm subsid of ABC-TV. Discussions have been held between Selmur prexy Selig Seligman and Nodella.

'64—'65 Program Development: 3 Network Pilots

SUPPLIER	ABC	NBC	CBS
Revue	Destry Broadsides Night People	2 Hour Movies 90 Bristol Court consists of 4 half-hour comedies Karen Court Martial Seven Little Foys
MGM	Great Bible Adventures. Take Me to Your Leader	Grand Hotel Flipper Please Don't Eat The Daisies Solo
United Artists	Pioneer Go Home Inner Sanctum		Kibee Hates Finch Mark Dolphin Calhoun Gilligan's Island John Striker
Filmways			Goggles My Son the Witch Doctor
Sultan & Worth			The Jones' Boys
Warner Bros.	No Time for Sergeants Wendy & Me
20th Century-Fox	Not Very Newsreel Valentine's Day Captain Ahab Three On An Island Peyton Place Voyage To the Bottom Of the Sea
Nat Hiken			Allen King Show
Desilu			Hello Hollywood Never Tease a Dinosaur PoppaSand Hey Teacher
Bing Crosby Prods.	McCaffrey Medical Center		The House
Thomas-Leonard	Tycoon		Jim Nabors
NBC (House)		Kentucky's Kids ISD The Magic Touch Yankee Rebel
Four Star	Royal Bay PDQ	The Rouges
Quinn Martin	Twelve O'Clock High
Keefe Braselle			The Reporter
Selmur	Mickey Criminal At Large Yellowbird Alexander the Great
Herb Brodkin			The Prosecutor
UPA		Mr. Magoo
Nick Vanoff	New Faces On the Brink	Funny Funny World
Jay Ward			Nut House
Real Life Prods.	One Patient At a Time
Rod Serling			Jeopardy Run
Velvet Prods.	Jody
Robert Saudek		Profiles In Courage
Screen Gems	File 109	The Paul Lynde Show
Talent Associates			Mr. Broadway
ABC (House)	Animal Crackers
CBS (House)			Robert Goulet Cara Williams
TOTALS	31	21	22

If Merger Goes Through, Sheldon Leonard Would Shun Top Echelon Post

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Sheldon Leonard, who with his partner, Danny Thomas, is involved in negotiations for a possible merger with Desilu studios, has no interest in occupying any top echelon production post with the company should the negotiations jell, he said last week. There had been trade reports Leonard would be in line for a top post if the merger talks succeed.

The producer-director explained, "in principle, I'm not interested in becoming a gear in a large organization. I'd rather be a wheel on my own. If the merger goes through, it would have to be in a manner which would overcome this principle."

He added, "I'm not interested in real estate matters, and would want to work in the same creative and management areas of entertainment as I do now. I am not interested in tax problems, the real estate end of it, computers, etc."

Leonard also said the amount of money to be made from such a move is not the most important question, because if the move is the right one that will take care of itself. People who concern themselves first about that aspect of it err in so doing, he opined.

Leonard said he would hope that if the merger is finalized, the production chief of the combined operation would be someone he could discuss his projects with that he considered "able to make a contribution, someone with a good track record."

French TV Gets 'Sneak-Preview' Of Second Channel

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Paris, Dec. 30.

People were lined up last week before electrical stores ogling tv shows as the second French tv web had its six-hour preview. It reached only the Paris area and is supposed to kick off officially next week. General consensus on material was okay, if not enthusiastic.

It looked like the new channel would aim more for entertainment than strictly cultural aspects. It fell below the present channel in many respects but showed a good image, if it was 625 lines to the existing station's 819. Even after it starts this week it is expected to take well over two years before all of France can receive it.

So far there are no intimations of any private licensing or commercials in the offing. But there

(Continued on page 32)

Success of 'Kildare' Now Official—Being Sued for Plagiarism

Los Angeles, Dec. 30.

Dr. Edward R. Pinckney, writer and techni advisor, last week (19) filed a $1,407,800 damage suit charging misappropriation of a literary property against MGM, Inc., NBC and others in connection with a "Dr. Kildare" teleseries segment.

Pinckney alleged that he had entered into an oral agreement Feb. 21, 1963 in which he furnished an original story, "The Handcuffed Hands," to studio and worked for six and one-half weeks at $250 weekly on screenplay, on the understanding he was to work for 32 weeks, but was discharged. Complaint also alleged that Pinckney loaned Metro his medical case history library in connection with "Handcuffed Hands," which studio has not returned.

Plaintiff charged that on Oct. 3, 1963 NBC broadcast a "Dr. Kildare" episode, "The Good Samaritan," which he said was taken from his library, and which did not give him any credit.

Named as co-defendants were Ted Richmond Productions, Colgate-Palmolive Co., Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., Singer Sewing Machine Co., Warner-Lambert Pharmaceutical Co., Arena Productions, and six individuals associated with the "Kildare" series.

Escapism Themes Majority Of Pilots For '64-'65 Season

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Sheer escapism is the preponderant theme in the majority of pilots currently being readied for the 1964-65 television season by Hollywood vidfilmeries. (See chart). Most pilots either have been produced or are currently in production, as the film factories seek to get their finished merchandise to N.Y. and the networks soon after the first of the year. Some webs, such as CBS-TV, have said they want the pilots in during January, so that they can proceed with the makeup for next season's schedule.

Obviously, the networks' problem is a two-pronged one. First, they must decide which shows are to be cancelled, and then which new entries they are buying. On the basis of the past few years' experience, it's estimated approximately 40 teleseries will be axed by spring.

Noticeable among most of the new pilots now being whipped up is a veering away from the so-called "sick" shows, those dealing in problems in the area of psychiatry, psychology, etc. Instead, the film factories are concentrating on comedy, action, adventure, spy series, and there is even some reactivation of oaters in the pilot area.

Bulk of the new programming being prepared is the 60-min. series, with only one new 90-min. pilot, "90 Bristol Court," at Revue, and two two-hour projects, one "Johnny North," forerunner of a contemplated Revue series for NBC-TV, the other "Arena," pilot for a prospective series with Goodson-Todman, also for NBC-TV.

Scope of the new programming has a wide range, touching just about every aspect, from a series with a political background ("The House") to a comedy-fantasy, ("Take Me to Your Leader"). Even though the psychiatrist series have fallen in favor, two new ones are being prepared, one by Bing Crosby Productions, on order from ABC-TV, the other from Revue.

Desilu studios turned out five pilots, all of them half-hour comedies; 20th-Fox TV, in coproduction deals with ABC-TV, has made seven pilots, covering a variety of themes, from high drama to comery; MGM-TV is producing a half-dozen pilots, most of them hourlong dramas such as "Grand Hotel" and "Solo."; Revue is leading the pace in pilots, with a number of them spinoffs on various studio series such as "Wagon Train," "Channing," "Kraft Suspense Theatre" and the Bob Hope-Chrysler theatre; Screen Gems has come up with a trio of half-hour comedy pilots; Warner Bros. has filmed a comedy, is plotting another; and Four Star with several, dramatic and comedy. In addition various other telefilmeries have been busy on pilot activity.

Most of the top production chiefs at the leading telefilmeries agree that the emphasis for next season will be on escapism, away from the heavier, so-called seamy and head-shrinking dramas.

Frank Kenyon Brown Settles With Creditors

Los Angeles, Dec. 30.

Total of 25 creditors of late Frank Kenyon Brown, television executive, in a compromise agreement approved by Superior Judge Clarke E. Stephens, have accepted what amounts to a fraction of their claims. Brown died April 19, 1961.

Court was informed that estate, once valued at $796,000, would probably be closed as insolvent due to multiplicity of claims against it. Mrs. Ruth E. Brown, widow of late exec, told court she was advancing $170,000 of her own capital as a loan to pay off debts in the hope that the estate would break even despite further liquidation of assets.

KCOP Television, Inc., which Brown once prexied and is one of the chief creditors, claimed $621,000 from the estate.

Indie Telefilmeries

Continued from page 20

Jamie McPheeters" fades in the spring; Screen Gems' "Redigo" was a midseason casualty and its "Route 66" has been axed; Warner Bros.' longtime private eye series, "77 Sunset Strip," fades in the spring; Revue's "Channing" also fades in the spring.

Exiting of "77" will leave WB with one series. At 20th-Fox TV, there is no production activity aside from pilots for next season.

There has been considerable turnover in top echelon production personnel the past year, with the principal developments occurring in the past week. Warner Bros. ousted tv production chief Jack Webb, despite the fact his contract has over two years to run, and William Dozier is exiting as coast chief of Screen Gems as the result of "policy differences." Bill Orr, Webb's predecessor, stepped in to take charge of tv at the Burbank lot.

In the producer ranks, many series had changes, the most being on "McPheeters," which had four different producers. In one of the early season musical chair gambits, John Houseman exited as producer of CBS-TV's "The Great Adventure," to be replaced by Bert Granet, who had been producing "Twilight Zone." Then the network lured Bill Froug from MGM-TV, where he had been producing "Mr. Novak," to produce "Zone." E. Jack Neuman, creator of "Novak," stepped in as producer of that series.

TV's go-to-school trend was something less than spectacular. Revue's "Channing" series, located in a midwest college, has already been given notice it won't finish out the season, and MGM-TV's "Mr. Novak," located in a high school, has been having its rating problems.

Among the major disappointments of the season were the Jerry Lewis show, Phil Silvers' comeback, "McPheeters," "Glynis," the Dick Boone series.

Henry

Continued from page 21

nered its information.

In its report to the House, the Committee said it is "imperative" the legislation be enacted to prevent FCC from running afoul of its Congressional guidelines.

The Committee majority termed the Commission's proposed rules "an outstanding example of a regulatory agency arrogating to itself the right to legislate."

Eight dissenting committee members (seven Democrats and one Republican) said overcommercialization is a proper concern for FCC.

They charged the Rogers bill doesn't give FCC any commercial policy or guidance and warned in the absence of Congressional action, "the trend is definitely in the direction of more and more commercialization."

On other fronts, Henry's annual statement averred that "major advancements" in establishing an international communications system was the most significant development of the year.

On the broadcasting end, FCC repeated the praise for the industry's coverage of President Kennedy's assassination and the aftermath.

FCC said the Ashbrook Bryant network study is "imminent." Commission sources wouldn't be more specific but indications are the report will be out in January.

TV Followup

Continued from page 26

Baird Marionettes gave a light and entertaining version of "The Night Before Christmas" and Jane Wyatt plus a brood of moppets provided some juvenile color.

The heavy artillery came from the excellent chorales by the Columbus Boychoir. The camera dwelt on the luminous faces of these youngsters hitting stratospheric notes. However, their work revealed depth and discipline and a lot of vocal color.

Completing the show was the pas de deux from Tschaikowsky's "Nutcracker Suite" danced excellently by Kirsten Simone & Henning Kronstam. The Donald Voorhees orch backstopped with its accustomed excellence. Jose.

VARIETY ARB FEATURE FILM CHART

VARIETY-ARB's weekly chart offers a day-by-day analysis of the top feature evening slots in a particular market. On Saturdays and Sundays, daytime feature slots compete with nighttime pix periods for designation as the top feature slot of the day. The analysis is confined to the top rated feature slots in the ARB measured period, broken down by days in the week. The ARB measured period usually covers three or four weeks. Other data such as the time slot and total area homes is furnished. Top competition and competitive ratings also are highlighted.

San Francisco • STATIONS: KTVU, KRON, KPIX, KGO • SURVEY DATES: September 11 - October 1, 1963

KRON

Total Area Homes: 214,000
Metro Rating: 19
Share of Audience: 27

MONDAYS 7:30-9:30
Program: MONDAY NIGHT MOVIES

Sept. 16 "LOVE IS A MANY SPLENDORED THING"
William Holden, Jennifer Jones
1955, 20th Century-Fox, 20th Century Fox

Sept. 23 "DAVID AND BATHSHEBA"
Gregory Peck, Susan Hayward
1952, 20th Century-Fox, 20th Century-Fox

Sept. 30 "EXECUTIVE SUITE"
William Holden, June Allyson
1954, 20th Century-Fox, 20th Century-Fox

TOP COMPETITION

PROGRAM	STATION & TOTAL HOMES
Outer Limits 7:30-8:30	KGO 257,300
Wagon Train 8:30-9:30	KGO 293,900

KGO

Total Area Homes: 101,500
Metro Rating: 9
Share of Audience: 31

TUESDAYS 5:00-7:00
Program: BIG SHOW

Sept. 17 "THE SHE CREATURES"
Chester Morris, Maria English
1956, American International

Sept, 24 "TARGET EARTH"
Richard Denning, Kathleen Crowley
1954, Allied Artists

Oct. 1 "THE WASP WOMAN"
Susan Cabot, Fred Eisley
1959, Allied Artists

TOP COMPETITION

PROGRAM	STATION & TOTAL HOMES
Early Show 5:00-5:30	KPIX 63,100
Mickey Mouse Club 5:30-6:00	KTVU 87,400
Huntley, Brinkley 6:00-6:30	KRON 147,100
CBS News 6:30-7:00	KPIX 111,500

KGO

Total Area Homes: 74,300
Metro Rating: 7
Share of Audience: 22

WEDNESDAYS 5:00-7:00
Program: BIG SHOW

Sept. 11 "TROUBLE MAKERS"
The Bowery Boys (Leo Gorcey, Huntz Hall)
1948, Allied Artists

Sept. 18 "SMUGGLERS CAVE"
The Bowery Boys (Leo Gorcey, Huntz Hall)
1948, Allied Artists

Sept. 25 "JINX MONEY"
The Bowery Boys (Leo Gorcey, Huntz Hall)
1948, Allied Artists

TOP COMPETITION

PROGRAM	STATION & TOTAL HOMES
Three Stooges 5:00-5:30	KTVU 68,200
Mickey Mouse Club 5:30-6:00	KTVU 79,600
Huntley, Brinkley 6:00-6:30	KRON 182,100
6:30 Report 6:30-7:00	KRON 126,900

KPIX

Total Area Homes: 69,000
Metro Rating: 6
Share of Audience: 29

THURSDAYS 5:00-6:00
Program: EARLY SHOW

Sept. 12 "DRANGO"
Jeff Chandler, Joanne Dru
1957, UA, UAA

Sept. 19 "PRINCE OF THIEVES"
Jon Hall
1948, Columbia, Screen Gems

Sept. 26 "GUNSIGHT RIDGE"
Joel McCrea, Mark Stevens
1957, U.A. (Livra), UAA

TOP COMPETITION

PROGRAM	STATION & TOTAL HOMES
Three Stooges 5:00-5:30	KTVU 55,500
Mickey Mouse Club 5:30-6:00	KTVU 90,100

KTVU

Total Area Homes: 68,100
Metro Rating: 5
Share of Audience: 29

FRIDAYS 11:00-1:00
Program: EARLY SHOW

Sept. 13 "BRIGHT LEAF"
Gary Cooper
1959, Warner Bros., 7 Arts

Sept. 20 "THE SEARCHERS"
John Wayne
1956, John Ford Prod., 7 Arts

Sept. 27 "FIRST TRAVELLING SALESLADY"
Ginger Rogers
1956, RKO Radio, Show Corp.

TOP COMPETITION

PROGRAM	STATION & TOTAL HOMES
11th Hour News 11:00-11:15	KPIX 89,500
Steve Allen 11:15-12:45	KPIX 46,700

KRON

Total Area Homes: 163,900
Metro Rating: 13
Share of Audience: 25

SATURDAYS 9:00-11:45
Program: SATURDAY NIGHT MOVIES

Sept. 14 "10 NORTH FREDERICK"
Gary Cooper, Diane Varsi
1958, 20th Century-Fox, 20th Century-Fox

Sept. 21 "SEVEN YEAR ITCH"
Marilyn Monroe, Tom Ewell
1955, 20th Century-Fox, 20th Century-Fox

Sept. 28 "THE JOURNEY"
Deborah Kerr, Yul Brynner
1959, MGM, MGM

TOP COMPETITION

PROGRAM	STATION & TOTAL HOMES
Defenders; Have Gun 9:00-10:00	KPIX 245,200
Fea., J. Lewis 10:00-11:45	KGO 218,300

(Continued on page 32)

Barry & Terry

Continued from page 21

of the Gillette account at Maxon, were persuaded to sell the razor company, again in advance of the bid, an additional one fourth sponsorship for the two seasons. With 75% of the sponsorship signed, sealed and delivered—NBC then had the competitive "muscle" to bid in confidence.

Shortly after NBC's successful bid, Texaco (its tv mentor, Benton & Bowles' Lee Rich, is considered a CBS partisan while "Barry & Terry" are known to enjoy a long-standing rapport with Kintner) quickly came through with the remaining one-fourth co-sponsorship, giving NBC one of the fastest SRO's in tv history.

The Kintner maneuvering is not without precedent. Just four years ago ABC — in a similar prebid sales maneuver — wrested the NCAA series from NBC by persuading Gillette, in advance of its bid, to guarantee a three-fourths sponsorship of the games for the '60 and '61 seasons. Understanding was that ABC, however, would use its best efforts to "sell off" 25% of Gillette's 75% commitment, which ABC promptly arranged by selling R. J. Reynolds and Humble Oil (Esso) each a one-fourth co-sponsorship. In the wake of the ABC-Gillette NCAA wedding, the Boston razor & blade marketing giant bestowed most of its remaining multi-million tv coin on ABC for several seasons. Now, with the new NBC-Gillette alliance restored after many years, it would appear that NBC will be Gillette's mainstay network for at least the two years involved in the new NCAA deal.

With NBC and CBS about to bid for the NFL professional football, which has been telecast by the Bill Paley network for the past few seasons, there's a strong suspicion that "Terry and Barry" are once again teamed in NBC's corner to give Kintner & Co. a double win in the tv gridiron sweepstakes. With such solid support, it's suspected that NBC—alone among the nets — could safely bid as high as $15,000,000 for the two-year NFL pact.

CBS, on the other hand, is apparently caught in the toils of its own sponsorship alignments. For example, should CBS reacquire the NFL series, which it would like to do particularly after losing the NCAA to NBC, it's felt that CBS prexy Jim Aubrey would feel a compelling moral and business commitment to give priority to Philip Morris' Personna Stainless Blades over Gillette. The rousing battle, fought on the tv advertising front between the new stainless steel blades, thus enabled Kintner, who is now bestirring himself on the sales front, to put Aubrey in a "pocket." For with Philip Morris placing all its network coin (over $20,000,000) on CBS, it's believed that Aubrey dare not risk PM alineation to woo Gillette with the same blockbuster feature that Philip Morris has co-sponsored on CBS for many seasons.

Hence, it appears to tv insiders that NBC (with its World Series, plus the already wrapped up NCAA) will likewise grab the NFL. It could go a long way toward reestablishing, in a thoroughly indubitable fashion, its historic status as the No. 1 network in sports.

CBC Exports

Continued from page 24

programs, but CBC exports plenty of French-language programs too. (Montreal is the largest live French-language tv production centre in the world.) They're exchanged with five members of Eurovision (of which CBC is an assoc. member): Belgium, France, Luxembourg, Monaco, and Switzerland. Main shows exchanged are CBC's ace French-network weekly shows—"Teletheatre" (drama) and "Music Hall" (variety). In return CBC gets programs from the five countries.

How that's handled is: a going price per program is worked out by all countries concerned. Exchanges are kept pretty even, and any differences are paid in cash at year's end. Exchanges are handled by Jacques Landry, French Network's asst. program director, in Montreal.

"Tell Me Not in Mournful Numbers was more than a public service contribution by the Public Affairs Department of KNXT. It was a public awakening to what is being quietly accomplished in the community... an indication to the television industry as to what can be done with the direct approach in the documentary-drama."

Arlene Garber, THE CITIZEN-NEWS Hollywood

"An extraordinary dramatized case study...by long odds the most distinguished work that any local station has produced this year...a splendid TV production by any standard."

[illegible] Smith, LOS ANGELES TIMES

"...well done, skillfully enacted and thoroughly researched."

DAILY VARIETY

"The most fascinating hour of the new television season...high entertainment in a highly informative, soaringly adult package."

[illegible] SANTA MONICA EVENING OUTLOOK

On the evening of November 7, from 10 to 11 pm, KNXT broadcast "Tell Me Not in Mournful Numbers," a dramatized case history of the only "numbers syndrome" in psychiatric records: a 12-year-old Los Angeles girl who could think, write and speak only in numbers. The hour marked another important "first" for Los Angeles' leading television station.

These sample comments from the Southern California press, typical of the reaction of both reviewers and the viewing audience (an audience for the period larger than that of the other two network stations combined) are apt indication of the calibre of this unprecedented local program.

KNXT [illegible]

*Based on ARB Telephone Coincidental Survey estimates, subject to qualifications which KNXT will supply on request.

VARIETY - ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top 10 network shows on a local level and offers a rating study of the top 10 syndicated shows in the same particular markets. This week five different markets are covered.

Both the network and syndication study features the total area homes reached and the metro area ratings on each show. The total area homes reached reflects the audiences on the basis of the total market area examined. The metro area ratings are based on the metropolitan markets within the total area examined. Top 10 shows, both network and syndicated, are listed on the basis of their showing in the total area homes barometer.

Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY Coupled with the rating performance of the top 10 network shows, on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every market in the U.S.

BALTIMORE

STATIONS: WMAR, WBAL, WJZ. SURVEY PERIOD: OCTOBER 16-29, 1963.

RK.	Top Network Shows	Sta.	Total Area Homes Reached	Metro Area Rtg.
1.	Beverly Hillbillies	WMAR	250,600	39
2.	Andy Griffith	WMAR	223,600	35
3.	Dick Van Dyke	WMAR	221,600	35
4.	Candid Camera	WMAR	189,900	32
5.	Lassie	WMAR	181,200	30
6.	Jackie Gleason	WMAR	180,400	33
7.	Perry Mason	WMAR	173,000	32
8.	What's My Line	WMAR	166,500	27
9.	Mr. Ed	WMAR	166,200	26
10.	McHale's Navy	WJZ	160,000	31

RK.	Top Syndicated Shows Day & Time	Sta.	Dist.	Tot. Area Homes Reached	Met. Area Rtg.
1.	Divorce Court; FB (Sat. 6:00)	WMAR	Storer	94,600	16
2.	Best of Groucho (Mon.-Fri. 6:00)	WMAR	NBC Films	75,000	13
3.	Lawbreaker (Wed. 8:30)	WMAR	UA-TV	73,300	12
4.	Naked City; World Girls (Fri. 10)	WJZ	Screen Gems	68,000	13
5.	Hennesey; FB (Sat. 7:00)	WMAR	NBC Films	55,100	8
6.	Checkmate (Sat. 7:30)	WBAL	MCA	50,100	9
7.	Huckleberry Hound (Tues. 7:30)	WBAL	Screen Gems	47,400	10
8.	Biography (Thurs. 8:00)	WBAL	Official	40,500	6
9.	Casper Cartoon (Sun. 11:00)	WJZ	ABC Films	37,400	6
10.	Ripcord (Sun. 7:00)	WJZ	UA-TV	36,500	7

Top Competition	Sta.	Total Homes
Wrestling	WBAL	50,400
Pinbusters	WBAL	87,900
5:00 Show	WBAL	36,600
Virginian	WBAL	108,600
Alfred Hitchcock	WMAR	159,700
Pinbusters	WBAL	95,700
Jackie Gleason	WMAR	180,400
Combat	WJZ	160,300
Donna Reed	WJZ	153,500
Gangs; Jungle Jim	WBAL	17,700
Lassie	WMAR	181,200

COLUMBUS, OHIO

STATIONS: WLWC, WTVN, WBNS. SURVEY PERIOD: OCTOBER 16-29, 1963.

1.	Beverly Hillbillies	WBNS	168,100	35
2.	Donna Reed	WTVN	156,300	32
3.	Andy Griffith	WBNS	148,000	31
4.	Price Is Right	WTVN	145,200	26
5.	Flintstones	WTVN	144,500	30
6.	My 3 Sons	WTVN	143,500	30
7.	Pro Football	WBNS	134,600	33
8.	Patty Duke	WTVN	133,100	25
9.	Petticoat Junction	WBNS	129,100	25
10.	Lucy Show	WBNS	129,000	28

1.	Death Valley Days (Sat. 7:00)	WBNS	U.S. Borax	73,000	18	Midwestern Hayride	WLWC	79,200
2.	One Step Beyond; Wea. (Mon. 7:00)	WTVN	ABC Films	71,700	16	Look Long; Spts; Fea	WBNS	67,400
3.	Lee Marvin; Wea. (Thurs. 7:00)	WTVN	UA-TV	68,800	13	Look Long; Spts; Fea	WBNS	67,300
4.	Sea Hunt; Wea. (Tues. 7:00)	WTVN	Economee	67,900	14	Look Long; Spts; Fea	WBNS	60,100
5.	Across 7 Seas; Wea. (Wed. 7:00)	WTVN	Crosby Prod.	60,300	12	Look Long; Spts; Fea	WBNS	62,500
6.	Bachelor Father (Thurs. 7:30)	WBNS	MCA	57,700	14	Flintstones	WTVN	144,500
7.	Bros. Brannagan; Wea. (Fri. 7:00)	WTVN	Screen Gems	57,400	12	Look Long; Spts; Fea	WBNS	55,800
8.	Adv. In Paradise; FB (Sat. 1:45)	WBNS	20 Fox TV	54,900	12	American Bandstand	WTVN	27,800
9.	Maverick; Sgt; Bron (Mon.-Fri. 6)	WTVN	Warner Bros.	54,100	12	Court; Glynis; Mr. Ed	WBNS	37,900
						CBS News	WBNS	55,400
10.	Wyatt Earp; Hall Fame (Sun. 6:30)	WLWC	ABC Films	45,800	13	Showboat	WTVN	63,200

DALLAS-FT. WORTH

STATIONS: KRLD, WBAP, WFAA, KTVT. SURVEY PERIOD: OCTOBER 16-29, 1963.

1.	Beverly Hillbillies	KRLD	328,600	44
2.	Dick Van Dyke	KRLD	285,300	42
3.	Candid Camera	KRLD	277,400	38
4.	Andy Griffith	KRLD	272,700	89
5.	Petticoat Junction	KRLD	257,400	34
6.	What's My Line	KRLD	239,700	33
7.	Jack Benny	KRLD	224,500	44
8.	Gunsmoke	KRLD	221,000	30
9.	Red Skelton	KRLD	220,500	29
10.	Lucy Show	KRLD	197,900	27

1.	Death Valley Days (Sat. 10:00)	KRLD	U.S. Borax	107,900	16	Saturday At Movies	WBAP	87,900
2.	Deputy; Football (Sun. 3:15)	KRLD	NBC Films	102,900	16	AFL Football	WFAA	71,000
3.	Deputy Dawg (Sat. 9:00)	WFAA	CBS Films	66,800	11	Quick Draw McGraw	KRLD	51,000
4.	Cheyenne (Mon.-Fri. 6:30)	KTVT	Warner Bros.	49,700	8	I've Got A Secret	KRLD	185,600
						Password	KRLD	79,800
5.	Yogi Bear (Mon. 6:00)	KTVT	Screen Gems	48,400	7	News; Wea; Wrapup	KRLD	89,800
6.	Quick Draw McGraw (Tues. 6:00)	KTVT	Screen Gems	45,000	7	News; Wea; Wrapup	KRLD	79,800
7.	Maverick (Sun. 5:30)	KTVT	Warner Bros.	43,600	7	Mr. Ed	KRLD	82,600
						Lassie	KRLD	239,700
8.	Huckleberry Hound (Thurs. 6:00)	KTVT	Screen Gems	41,500	7	News; Wea; Wrapup	KRLD	91,300
9.	Lawbreaker (Sun. 9:30)	WFAA	UA-TV	41,100	6	What's My Line	KRLD	239,700
9.	Tombstone Terr; FB (Sat. 12:15)	KRLD	Economee	41,100	6	Flicks; Bandstand	WFAA	49,100
						Action Theatre	WBAP	87,900

DETROIT

STATIONS: WJBK, WWJ, CKLW. SURVEY PERIOD: OCTOBER 16-29, 1963.

1.	Bonanza	WWJ	480,400	35
2.	Beverly Hillbillies	WJBK	424,300	33
3.	Candid Camera	WJBK	402,400	31
4.	Donna Reed	WXYZ	397,000	30
5.	Dick Van Dyke	WJBK	381,900	31
6.	Patty Duke	WXYZ	366,700	31
7.	Saturday At Movies	WWJ	362,400	28
8.	Ben Casey	WXYZ	356,800	30
9.	McHale's Navy	WXYZ	349,700	30
10.	Ozzie & Harriet	WXYZ	344,800	29

1.	Lee Marvin (Fri. 9:30)	WJBK	UA-TV	216,600	17	Farmers D'ghter; Olymp	WXYZ	204,700
2.	Huckleberry Hound (Thurs. 6:30)	CKLW	Screen Gems	210,900	18	Huntley-Brinkley	WWJ	225,400
3.	Weekend (Tues. 7:00)	WWJ	Arrowhead	210,700	15	Bat Masterson	CKLW	109,500
4.	Yogi Bear (Wed. 6:30)	CKLW	Screen Gems	204,900	18	Huntley-Brinkley	WWJ	228,100
5.	Leave It To Beaver (Thurs. 7:00; Sun. 6:30)	WJBK	MCA	204,800	16	Michigan Outdoors	WXYZ	148,100
						Popeye & Pals	CKLW	151,400
6.	Quick Draw McGraw (Tues. 6:30)	CKLW	Screen Gems	168,300	15	Huntley-Brinkley	WWJ	254,500
7.	Have Gun; Olympic (Wed. 7:00)	WXYZ	CBS Films	148,600	12	Groucho Marx	WWJ	134,100
8.	Surfside 6 (Sat. 6:30)	WWJ	Warner Bros.	141,600	11	Popeye & Pals	CKLW	138,500
						Dickens-Fenster	WXYZ	138,700
9.	Dickens-Fenster (Sat. 7:00)	WXYZ	ABC Films	138,700	12	Surfside 6	WWJ	144,300
10.	Stoney Burke (Fri. 6:30)	CKLW	Economee	138,000	11	Huntley-Brinkley	WWJ	236,100
						At The Zoo	WWJ	191,800

PITTSBURGH

STATIONS: KDKA, WTAE, WIIC. SURVEY PERIOD: OCTOBER 16-29, 1963.

1.	Candid Camera	KDKA	404,800	43
2.	Beverly Hillbillies	KDKA	397,300	42
3.	What's My Line	KDKA	376,000	42
4.	Dick Van Dyke	KDKA	352,300	27
5.	Andy Griffith	KDKA	329,900	32
6.	Ed Sullivan	KDKA	308,900	32
7.	Lucy Show	KDKA	307,800	30
8.	Danny Kaye	KDKA	307,500	33
9.	Jackie Gleason	KDKA	307,100	32
10.	Donna Reed	WTAE	305,300	31
10.	Lassie	KDKA	305,300	30

1.	Zane Gray; FB (Sat. 6:00)	KDKA	Four Star	162,400	17	Studio Wrestling	WIIC	113,500
2.	Target Corruptors (Thurs. 10:00)	WTAE	Four Star	137,700	13	Nurses	KDKA	273,300
3.	Death Valley Days (Tues. 7:30)	KDKA	U.S. Borax	133,500	14	Combat	WTAE	242,100
4.	Sea Hunt (Mon.-Fri. 6:30)	WTAE	Economee	119,500	12	CBS News	KDKA	127,000
5.	Rifleman; FB (Sat. 6:30)	KDKA	Four Star	111,600	11	Pitts Movie Spec.	WTAE	136,300
6.	Huckleberry Hound (Mon. 7:00)	WIIC	Screen Gems	105,600	13	World Tonight	KDKA	173,700
7.	Stoney Burke; Jr. Ball (Sun. 6:30)	WTAE	Economee	93,600	10	Three Star News	KDKA	145,600
						Lassie	KDKA	305,300
8.	Tombstone Terr; FB (Sat. 1:30)	KDKA	Economee	92,000	9	American Bandstand	WTAE	57,100
9.	Yogi Bear (Thurs. 7:00)	WIIC	Screen Gems	86,300	9	World Tonight	KDKA	194,600
10.	Lawbreaker (Tues. 8:30)	WIIC	UA-TV	85,600	10	Red Skelton	KDKA	313,800

CBS Radio Upsurge

Continued from page 20

said the innovation was prompted by the requests of affils, some of whom maintained that indies were getting the jump on them by spotlighting "hot" local news.

CBS Radio, which now is turning a neat profit after so many years of running in the red, currently boasts the widest complement of affils. Number of affils at the start of the new year is 242.

Only remaining entertainment shows on the web is the Garry Moore-Durward Kurby 10-minute strip, the 50-minute Arthur Godfrey strip, Art Linkletter 20-minute Monday-through-Friday show, and the five-minute Pat Boone strip.

Addressing himself to his area, Skedgell said that while CBS Radio and CBS-TV may cover the same news event, each uses a different version. Needs of tv and radio differ so that simulcasts fail to meet the standards of both media. CBS Radio will have its own complement of newsmen, for example, at the Presidential conventions and when CBS correspondents are tapped, they will gear their reports specially to the ear medium when working for CBS Radio.

Regina — Donald R. Dawson, manager of radio station CKCK since 1957, has been upped to general manager of CKCK-TV. His successor is James R. Grisenthwaite, general sales manager of CKCK radio since 1959.

L'ville's Big Stick

Louisville, Dec. 30.

WHAS-TV, Louisville, after taking several options on sites in Kentucky and Southern Indiana for a new tall tower, and having plans opposed by air line companies and Federal and local air boards, has finalized plans to build a new tower, 959 feet above ground level and 1,949 feet above mean sea level.

More than half again higher than the present WHAS-TV tower, the new structure is skedded to be built just across the Ohio River in a hilly section the German post for the programs, and multiply that by 12 months and by 16,000,000 radio sets and 8,000,000 television sets).

German TV

Continued from page 20

In addition, the stations expect to collect slightly over $10,000,000 from radio commercials and $120,000,000 from the television commercials on the First Television Net plus another $33,000,000 from the commercials on the Second TV Net.

when Len O'Connor speaks...Harry Volkman predicts...

Charles McCuen and Floyd Kalber report...

CHICAGO LOOKS AND LISTENS!

Newsmen Len O'Connor, Charles McCuen, Floyd Kalber and Weatherman Harry Volkman—part of the professional team that makes NBC News the largest and most respected news gathering organization in the world. That's why—in Chicago—people who want to be informed look to WNBQ ——————

CHANNEL 5 WNBQ

NBC OWNED • REPRESENTED BY NBC SPOT SALES

Polluting The Rating Reports

Continued from page 20

graph 26 of Section IV has been cited which states: "Any telecasting designed to 'buy' the television audience by requiring it to listen and/or view in hope of reward rather than for the quality of the program, should be avoided."

Bud Rogers, prexy of the Taft stations and a member of the Code board, opined in a letter to Code Authority director Howard Bell, "No matter how you slice it, or under whose auspices it is presented, it still boils down to a 'ratings hypo' scheme . . . particularly should any one of thousands of entry blanks 'inadvertently' fall into the hands of a holder of an ARB diary."

Rogers admitted that he admired the ingenuity of the contests but stated that he felt the subject deserved attention on the Code Review Board's next agenda.

Currently the most outspoken opponent of rating week contests is Martin Umansky, vice prez and general manager of KAKE-AM-TV, Wichita, who earlier this season was up against KARD's "You're the Critic" stunt which, incidentally, made specific reference to American Research Bureau as the survey authority in its contest rules. (Omaha station KMTV made the same reference, both presumably without ARB's previous knowledge). That reference, Umansky feels, was patently for the benefit of the diary-keeping respondents.

Having presented his case to both rating services and members of the NAB Code board, Umansky last week took the matter into his own hands and dispatched letters to most of the principal advertising agencies asking them to help solve not only a local problem, but the same problem as it exists nationally as well. He asked them to take "some effective action for correct evaluation of the Wichita audience measurement reports," adding that this example would be sufficient warning to other stations and would help to bring such practices to an end. "Otherwise," he wrote, "ratings will become meaningless."

Umansky said privately, "I think the agencies are the key. Their buying of time is directly related to these numbers, and they could put a stop to these shenanigans simply by flagging the markets where blatant violations exists. The offending station should be penalized with a percent discount —say 25%—in both ratings and homes, and that would be all the deterrent necessary. Attempts to hypo ratings would cease overnight."

The November Nielsen report for Wichita arrived shortly after Umansky sent his letters to the agencies—it being the first and most critical report of the new season for that market—and as it turned out the NBC station, KARD, finished last in spite of its contest. In prime time, the breakdown in shares was 41% for KAKE-TV (ABC), 31 for KTVH (CBS) and 28 for KARD.

Nevertheless, Umansky isn't convinced that this means KARD's contest had little effect. First, he says, if these contests were ineffective the stations wouldn't hold them. Second, "How do we know that KARD's figures wouldn't have been even lower if there had been no contest?" And finally, the contest named ARB and not Nielsen as the authority—and the ARB pocketpiece won't be published until this week.

French TV

Continued from page 27

is still hope since it is apparent there is not enough high power programming to give the new channel a strong, needed fillip. It is also thought that new sets for both stations will sell well but no upheaval in other show facets are awaited.

There were a few technical bugs but they are expected to be ironed out easily. Raymond Boradaz, head of the governmental Radio diffusion-Television Francaise, introed the new web. Then followed a flock of samples prepared for the coming station. He said it would complement, at first, and not compete with the existing web.

Up came a variety show, of Claude Boissoi, that was usually surpassed on the other one. A would-be comic interim on autos was strained, and a preview of a series of 13 half-hour shows, based on famous short stories, was not too promising. Neither was a comic affair trying to bring old style jokes and puns up to modern outlooks.

But there were some good entries too with an okay adventure series, a good homage compilation to the late Edith Piaf, a solid look at professional people and a witty, inventive musical program. It all added up to nothing really outstanding or new but a probable good addition to the confined one-channel setup here. It will need more exposure to judge.

VARIETY ARB FEATURE FILM CHART

VARIETY-ARB's weekly chart offers a day-by-day analysis of the top feature evening slots in a particular market. On Saturdays and Sundays, daytime feature slots complete with nighttime pix periods for designation as the top feature slot of the day. The analysis is confined to the top rated feature slots in the ARB measured period, broken down by days in the week. The ARB measured period usually covers three or four weeks. Other data such as the time slot and average share of audience is furnished. Top competition and competitive ratings also are highlighted.

(Continued from page 28)

KTVU

Total Area Homes: 129,700
Metro Rating: 11
Share of Audience: 19

SUNDAYS 7:00-9:30
Program: PREMIERE

Sept. 15 "PAT AND MIKE"
Spencer Tracy
1952, Metro Goldwyn Mayer, MGM

Sept. 22 "I'LL CRY TOMORROW"
Susan Hayward
Metro Goldwyn Mayer, MGM

Sept. 29 "DREAM WIFE"
Cary Grant
1953, Metro Goldwyn Mayer, MGM

TOP COMPETITION

PROGRAM	STATION & TOTAL HOMES
Lassie 7:00-7:30	KPIX 187,600
Disney's World 7:30-8:30	KRON 226,500
Grindl 8:30-9:00	KRON 227,000
Bonanza 9:00-9:30	KRON 290,200

Television Reviews

Continued from page 26

that his film made its impact on the senses rather than on the grey matter. The upshot was arty rather than artistic.

Begun about a year ago, when Chicago's Second City Acting Company swapped stages with The Establishment, its London counterpart in topical satire, the film intended to capture the candid impresions of each city by the visiting players. The performers are not to be faulted for the shortcomings of the film, for they obliged with witty and trenchant observations and acquitted themselves without self-consciousness as camera subjects. They were simply upstaged by the director, who vitiated their candor with scenes that were obviously set up and who, besides, could not restrain from using (and reprising) certain footage that was beautiful, intriguing or startling—but altogether irrevelant.

Friedkin loves parades, traffic, staircases and heights. He is gassed by the surrealism of a sports car racing down a deserted State Street at the break of dawn and by the prepossessing smile of a ragamuffin perched on a pillar under the Elevated tracks. All of these figure in the Chicago half of the film, but they belong to Friedkin's remarkable camera eye and not to the Londoners as attributed. The documentary didn't deliver what it promised—i.e., what Burgess Meredith promised in an introduction that set the whole pretentious tone—and that was its most serious failing.

Friedkin, who came on the scene as a mere boy some years back and was promptly dubbed "television's wunderkind," has worlds of talent but he's still displaying it instead of using it. Les.

FIRST FLIGHT OF S141 STARLIFTER
With Ed Blair, Al Cleveland, Leo Sullivan, W. A. Pulver, Glen Gray, others Producer-Director — Commentator: Blair
30 Mins., Tues. 11 p.m.
WAGA-TV, Atlanta (tape)

It was 60 years ago when Orville Wright made the first heavier-than-air airplane flight at Kitty Hawk, N. C. The distance covered was 120 ft. Last week on the anniversary of the historic occasion a huge new fan-jet carrier, the Air Force's Lockheed Georgia-made C141 Starlifter, flew for the first time at Dobbins Air Force Base.

The C141's fuselage is 145 ft. long and her wingspread 160 ft., both eclipsing the length of man's first flight in 1903. Capable of crossing an ocean at more than 500 miles per hour, C141, first aircraft designed for dual military and civilian use, can transport 154 troops or 123 paratroopers or a combination of men and supplies or a 70,000-pound payload.

WAGA-TV News Director Ed Blair took the station's mobile unit out to Dobbins AFB to cover what was scheduled as a "taxi-ing trial" of the aerial behemoth. This unit is equipped with a 68-lb. portable tape recorder.

Working with one camera, Blair was routinely describing the gigantic plane as it moved along the runway and got properly excited as the plane's wheels left the ground when chief engineering test pilot Leo Sullivan decided to take her up.

While plane was in the air Blair rounded up other Lockheed-Georgia officials, including Georgia Division, president W. A. Pulver, test pilot Glen Gray, assistant chief engineer Al Cleveland, Air Force officals, designers and ground crewmen, all of whom evidenced excitement and enthusiasm at the performance of the plane.

WAGA-TV, CBS mouthpiece and Storer station, is proud of its tape unit which permits on-the-scene videotaping and which can be rewound on the way to station and put on the air from the mobile unit by way of "umbilical cord" that takes picture and sound into master control. Luce.

Walter Scott

Continued from page 21

forms"—participations and the increased show control by networks.

For the coming season, Scott figures on a swing back (only "somewhat") to the single-sponsor show—"swinging back to a better balance of the whole," that is. "TW3" is his favorite network project ("Gawd, I hope it works").

On the closeup scene, the dean of veeps notes the amazing youth of NBC's top programming and sales execs—under 40 years of age—the Don Durgins (head of sales for five years), the Grant Tinkers (Coast programming veepee for two years), the Bob Stones (web's general manager "with the back of the house all reporting to him") the Jack Otters (national sales veep with 10 years at the web and in his early thirties), and the Mort Werners (just past the age that life begins at)."

For the record, Scott started in Jan. of 1938 as an NBC salesman. Seven promotions in a decade ('51 to '60) moved him from national sales manager for NBC radio network to exec veepee, NBC-TV, and a member of the NBC board of directors.

DON ADAMS
JOEY ADAMS
NICK ADAMS
JERRY ADLER
PHILIP AHN
ROBERT ALDRIDGE
BEN ALEXANDER
WOODY ALLEN
HERB ALPERT
ALLISON AMES
MOREY AMSTERDAM
ANN-MARGARET
ARMY ARCHERD
TONI ARDEN
FRED ASTAIRE
JOHN ASTIN

HARRY BABBITT
JIM BACKUS
DUANE BAKER
GENE BAKER
CARL BALLANTINE
JOE BARBERA
BOBBY BARE
BOB BARKER
BILLY BARNES
JACKIE BARNETT
JACK BARRY
JOHN BECK
ED BEGLEY
BEA BENEDARET
ANNA-MARIE BENNSTROM
PANDRO BERMAN
SHIRLEY BERMAN
MARSHALL BERNARDI
ELMER BERNSTEIN
CARL BETZ
JOAN BLACKMAN
RICHARD BLACKWELL
BILL BLATTY
RAY BOLGER
PAT BOONE
ARTHUR BORNSTEIN
JERRY BRESSLER
DAVID BRIAN
CHARLIE BRILL
LES BROWN, JR.
VICTOR BRUNO
ANITA BRYANT
FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN
CHAMP BUTLER
PAT BUTTRAM

SEBASTIAN CABOT
CORRINE CALVET
PETE CANDOLI
EDDIE CANTOR
FRANKIE CARLE
VICKI CARR
MINDY CARSON
BILL CASTLE
JOANNE CASTLE
JOHNNY CATRON
RICHARD CHAMBERLAIN
LON CHANEY
BOB CHARLES
RAY CHARLES
BARRIE CHASE
GEORGE CHRISTY
SANDRA CHURCH
GARY CLARKE
GORDON CLIFFORD
ROSEMARY CLOONEY
CY COLEMAN
PAT COLLINS
JERRY COLONNA
RAY CONNIFF
JOHN CONTE
DICK CONTINO
TIM CONWAY
BILL COSBY
COUNT MARCO
CHRISTINA CRAWFORD

DICK CRENNA
GEORGE CUKOR
BOB CUMMINGS
JACKIE CURTISS

BILL DANA
CESARE DANOVA
MICHAEL DANTE
BOBBY DARIN
JIMMY DARREN
BERLE DAVIS
WILD BILL DAVIS
DICKIE DAWSON
DENNIS DAY
LEO DELYON
WILLY DEMOND
ANDY DEVINE
ANTHONY DEXTER
HAL DICKENSON
JIMMY DODD
JACKSON DONAHUE
VIKKI DOUGAN
BILL DOUGLAS, JR.
DONNA DOUGLAS
RUSTY DRAPER
VERNON DUKE
GEORGE DUNNING

NELSON EDDY
BARBARA EDEN
ANTHONY EISLEY
MERL EVANS

SAMMY FAIN
LEONARD FEATHER
GEORGE FENNEMAN
TONI FISHER
JOE FLYNN
NINA FOCH
JUNE FORAY
GLENN FORD
HELEN FORREST
CHERRY FOSTER
PETE FOUNTAIN
SERGIO FRANCHI
STEVE FRANKEN

JACKIE GALE
PAUL GALICO
REGINALD GARDNER
EDDIE GARRETT
DICK GAUTIER
HENRY GIBSON
L. WOLFIE GILBERT
ARTHUR GODFREY
ERNEST GOLD
JERRY GOLDSMITH
MIKE GOODMAN
EYDIE GORME
MILDRED & GORDON GORDON
FRANK GORSHIN
SANDRA GOULD
VIRGINIA GRAHAM
GLORIA GRAHAME
EARL GRANT
HANK GRANT
JOE GRAVES
PETER GRAVES
COLEEN GRAY
JEANINE GRAY
JOHNNY GREEN
SHECKY GREEN
DICK GREGORY
GEORGE GREELEY
JOHNNY GUARNIERI

MONTE HALL
RON HARPER
PAT HARRINGTON, JR.
JIM HARRIS
WES HARRISON
JIMMY HASKELL
SIGNE HASSO

Thanks to our guests in 1963 who made 6 to 10 AM such a ball on KNX Radio –Hollywood and to the Donna Reed Show on ABC for my first full year in TV

TOM HATTEN
EDITH HEAD
HORACE HEIDT
BOB HENRY
EMALINE HENRY
CHARLTON HESTON
AL HIBBLER
DARRYL HICKMAN
GLADWYN HILL
BEVERLY HILLS
CONNIE HINES
CAROLE HOLLAND
EARL HOLLIMAN
HOMER AND JETHRO
EDWARD EVERETT HORTON
BRUCE HOWARD
JUDY HOWARD
RONNIE HOWARD
MARY BETH HUGHES
BOB HULL
BETTY HUTTON
JOE HYAMS

REO INGEL
MARTY INGELS

SHERRY JACKSON
DAN JENKINS
GEORGE JESSEL
LAMONT JOHNSON
ALLAN JONES
DEAN JONES
JACK JONES
SPIKE JONES
WILL JORDAN
VICTOR JORY

DICK KALLMAN
JOEL KANE
CHARLIE KANTOR
BRONISLAU KAPER
MARVIN KAPLAN
CAROLYN KEARNEY
RUBY KEELER
PAULA KELLY
TOM KENNEDY
DAVE KETCHAM
ALEXANDER KING
WAYNE KING
ARTHUR KNIGHT
NANCY KOVACK
JACK KRUSCHEN

FRANKIE LAINE
DAVEY LAMBERT
DON LANE
KEITH LARSON
TONY LAVELLI
STEVE LAWRENCE
NORMAN LEAR
PAUL LEAVETT
JOHN LEDWON
PINKY LEE
JACK LEMMON
JACK LEONARD
NAOMI LEWIS
ART LIEBERMAN
MORT LINDSEY
ART LINKLETTER
JACK LINKLETTER
TINY LITTLE
DON LOPER
JACK LORD
MARJORIE LORD
RON LUBIN
NICK LUCAS
ALAN LUDDEN
NELLIE LUTCHER
PAUL LYNDE

DICK MACK
GEORGE MAHARIS
HENRY MANCINI

JOHNNY MANN
DON MARLOWE
HUGH MARLOWE
JACK MARSHALL
FREDDY MARTIN
ROSS MARTIN
AL MARTINO
JACKIE MASON
MARLYN MASON
PAMELA MASON
CURT MASSEY
ASA MAYNOR
DANNY MEHAN
UNA MERKEL
ROBERT MERRELL
VERA MILES
RAY MILLAND
SIDNEY MILLER
MIKE MINOR
CORBETT MONICA
LOU MONTE
MARION MONTGOMERY
WALLY MOON
DEL MOORE
JOANNA MOORE
HENRY MORGAN
JO MORROW
VIC MORROW
GARY MORTON
ROBERT MULLIGAN

DIANE McBAIN
MITZI McCALL
RODDY McDOWELL
JIMMY McHUGH

GENE NELSON
RALPH NELSON
BOB NEWHART
WAYNE NEWTON
KATHY NOLAN
TOMMY NOONAN
RED NORVO
LOUIS NYE

BEN OAKLAND
ARTHUR O'CONNELL
DONALD O'CONNOR
GEORGE O'HANLON

ALAN PAKULA
MICHAEL PANAIEFF
JOE PASTERNAK
DAVE PELL
GEORGE PEPPARD
CYNTHIA PEPPER
FRANK AND ELEANOR PERRY
ROBERTA PETERS
PAUL PETERSON
PAUL PICERNI
BOBBY PICKETT
SIDNEY POITIER
OTTO PREMINGER
ANDRE PREVIN
JULIET PROWSE

LOUIS QUINN

MILT RASKIN
LOUIS RATHMIL
CLARA RAY
ROBIN RAYMOND
ALAN REED
ELLIOTT REID
CARL REINER
JOHN RICH
SHARON RITCHIE
PERNELL ROBERTS
CLIFF ROBERTSON
JIMMY ROGERS
ROSEMARIE
STEVE ROSSI
BENNY RUBIN

HARRY RUBY

SOUPY SALES
TELLY SAVALAS
LALO SCHIFRIN
WAYNE SHANKLIN
JOAN SHAWLEE
BARRY SHEAR
GEORGE SHEARING
JACK SHELDON
GALE SHERWOOD
ROBERTA SHERWOOD
ALLAN SHERMAN
ROBERTA SHORE
GEORGE SIDNEY
AL SIMON
EVA SIX
MR. & MRS. FELIX SLATKIN
CECIL SMITH
ROGER SMITH
SMOTHERS BROTHERS
HOPE SOMMERS
JOANIE SOMMERS
MICKEY SPILLANE
JILL ST. JOHN
JOAN STALEY
KAY STARR
JESS STERN
APRIL STEVENS
DALE STEVENS
REX STEWART
STILLER & MEARA
BARBARA STREISAND
JOHN STURGES
ALAN SUES
NANA SUMI
SANDY SUMMERS
PAT SUZUKI

NITA TALBOTT
BILL TALMAN
NINO TEMPO
MARLO THOMAS
DIMITRI THOMKIN
HARRY TOBIAS
MEL TORME
CONNIE TOWERS
JOHN SCOTT TROTTER

JERRY VALE
JERRY VAN DYKE
ROBERT VAUGHN
VIRGINIA VINCENT
BOBBY VINTON
JOHN VIVYAN

MALVIN WALD
JERRY WALLACE
CHRIS WARFIELD
RUTH WARWICK
WILLARD WATERMAN
DENNIS WEAVER
DOODLES WEAVER
PAUL WESTON
PAUL WHITEMAN
ARTHUR WILDE
BILLY WILLIAMS
JOE WILLIAMS
ROGER WILLIAMS
MAURY WILLS
MEREDITH & RINI WILLSON
STANLEY WILSON
DICK WINSLOW
DANA WYNTER

BRUCE YARNELL
BUD YORKIN
ALAN YOUNG GIG YOUNG

PENTHOUSE AVAILABLE
In the heart of New York's theater district. LARGE 1 RM. STUDIO APT., Air Cond. Ideal for visiting VIP, short or long term rental. Twin beds with private bath (stall shower & tub). Completely equipped kitchen; bar & private terr. Full hotel service. GORHAM HOTEL, 136 W. 55 St., New York

NBC Publicists To Stay With NABET

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

NBC publicists will remain with NABET after having previously filed a decertification election petition with the National Labor Relations Board requesting permission to decertify from union. Petition has been withdrawn, it is jointly disclosed by two groups.

Had the petition been granted, an election would have permitted the flack unit, which has 15 members, to decertify from NABET and seek other affiliation after the expiration of the present NABET contract with NBC on Jan. 31.

Reason for the withdrawal, according to Norm Frisch, shop steward, and Rolf Gompertz, was "renewed faith in NABET's ability to bargain effectively for all groups, engineering and non-engineering, within the union." According to Gompertz, NABET has assured them that it would "fully and completely back our demands without compromising them."

Although NABET was formerly primarily engineering, that is no longer true, and the group is no longer in the position of being bound by whatever agreement the bargaining representation might make, which they at one time felt would not always be to their best interests. Gompertz says that "We no longer feel this concern."

Along with withdrawal of their petition, the publicists overwhelmingly gave local prexy John Allen the first strike vote to come from the membership, for use, if needed, in current negotiations for a new contract.

Edwards' 'Casey' Friends Mob Him on Junket To Tokyo, 'Victors' Preem

Tokyo, Dec. 30.

Exploiting Vince Edwards' "Ben Casey" popularity, Columbia cashed in by having the actor here for a whirlwind, two-day promotional fling coincidental with the charity preem of "The Victors." Accompanied by manager Abby Greshler, Edwards was cajoled into cooperating for a jammed schedule of personal appearances, press interviews and picture posing. And while it's understood that he flatly refuses live tele appearances in the U.S., Edwards submitted to four live tv interviews here, including one post-premiere session that wasn't on his schedule.

As an inkling of the value received for what is estimated to have been a $10,000 investment, Julian Berman, Columbia's Far East supervisor, said "The Victors" will receive more than $80,000 worth of tele time on the 21-station TBS web alone. This is possible because the Sanyo electrical appliance outfit, which sponsors "Ben Casey," agreed to run trailer material for "The Victors" in its time slot for four consecutive weeks in gratitude for Columbia's having delivered Edwards to Japan and to several of their functions during his hectic weekend.

While Edwards threatened to erupt several times from the pressure, he complied with every Columbia request, including stops at a department store and the Japan Red Cross Hospital, without an event cancelled. This, despite the sluggish Tokyo traffic.

A crowd of around 1,000 broke through the police lines on Edwards' arrival at Haneda airport and Greshler was knocked to the ground. "We were fighting for our lives," Edwards later said.

Mobs of fans and cameramen trailed Edwards around Tokyo, making it virtually impossible for him to grab a moment for himself. The scheme of his departure was worthy of a military maneuver.

New York's largest specialists in motion picture & TV insurance
(cast, film, weather, liability, cameras, props, plagiarism...)
WINKLER ASSOCIATES, LTD.
120 W. 57 St., New York 19, Circle 7-3366

U.S. State Dept. Sets 'Color TV Workshop' For West Germany

Bonn, Dec. 30.

The initial showing of American color television to German radio and television authorities will be undertaken by the U. S. State Department in West Germany next February or March.

George Wallach, the Embassy's hep director of the film and television department, is inaugurating the scheme that is expected to attract several hundred German people connected with the radio and television industry.

Following the steps initiated for the workshop that he put on last year with enthusiastic reception, Wallach is planning to show live color television from the top companies in America, demonstrating all aspects of news and entertainment and dramatics.

Bid for Negro Aud

Pasadena, Tex., Dec. 30.

Felix H. Morales, owner and general manager of KLVL, local Spanish language outlet with studios in Houston, has announced that KLVL-FM will program for the Negro audience in this area.

As a special introductory offer, Morales is giving advertisers special rates on the FM outlet. For a 60 second spot, $1.25; a 15-minute program costs $5.

A-O-Kaye

Glasgow, Dec. 30.

Take a bow, Danny Kaye! Your Auld Lang Syne accent is the real Mackay, hooch aye!

Sir Alexander King, Scot cinema boss, who is a personal friend of the comedian, is a native of Keith, northeast Scotland, with a true ear for the real Banffshire accent. He commended the Kaye flair for mimicry to another American friend, Herb Wind, the golf scribe.

Now Wind has written to Sir Alex: "You are right about the quality of Danny Kaye's Banffshire accent. He used it on a tv show the other evening, and I thought I was back on the road to Nairn (northeast Scotland township)."

FM Stereo Dramas

Portland, Ore., Dec. 30.

Stereo-Sonics Unlimited, independent producer of "FM Stereo Dramas," has announced the release of a new 13-week half-hour series based on the works of Edgar Allen Poe.

Robert Bonniwell has been signed in the role of narrator and host. The decision to go into drama production was made by the board of directors of the company some months ago, and upon the signing of Bonniwell, the company obtained a custom built studio with special stereo equipment.

BBC-TV's Program Reshuffle In Bid to Pep Up Its Flagging Nights

London, Dec. 30.

In the face of direct and mighty competition from the commercial network, which is riding high this season on every night of the week, BBC-TV has made a tactical withdrawal in the tough play for prime time audiences.

Come the New Year's opening weeks, BBC will take advantage of the feeling of "everything's new" to shuffle its program pack in order to get itself a winning hand against the commercial operators who, at the moment, are holding most of the aces.

Corporation has, in fact, decided to play the '63-'64 hand another way, retaining the best of the old, while incorporating one or two new moves that could swing over the big audiences.

First off, BBC-TV's program toppers Stuart Hood and Donald Baverstock, i.c. the current vidprogramming operation at the BBC London hq, have yanked the main, prime time news bulletin from its 9 p.m. berth to re-slot it at 9:15 p.m. This means that the newscast no longer directly opposes the Independent Television News Bulletin which has resided at 9 p.m. for a couple of seasons now.

Move back of the BBC news is evidence of a major defensive rethink by Corporation toppers. For this particular newscast is regarded as a watershed for family and adult viewing. What the move means, in fact, is that BBC-1 program factotum Baverstock can get three major programs slotted in prime time before the news now that the latter is reberthed at 9:15 p.m. In its 9 p.m. slot, as tried out in the last semester, the big block of programming fell post-news and into "adult" time. Result was that the commercial web, which has been operating the two-news-three prime time play for several years, turned up trumps and cleaned up the audience kitty.

BBC's defensive play in reverting to its three-news-two formula also sees the retrieving of "Panorama" from its newly- appointed post-news slot to its original Monday at 8 p.m. peg. Baverstock's experiment with the shifting of the bi-weekly soaper "Compact" to a pre-prime slot has not paid sufficient dividends overall, so the show is being re-established in early prime time slot following the newsmag show "Tonight" instead of preceding it.

Baverstock has whipped the "First Night" dramatic series out from under the Sunday night domi-

(Continued on page 34)

"Imaginative, charming . . . a marvel to behold" says Variety's flattering review of Triangle's "Podrecca's Piccoli Theatre" featured in a one-hour special in more than 40 markets last month.

Podrecca's king-size marionettes are the syndicated hit of the season. Acclaimed by critics everywhere , they have earned outstanding ratings against top network competition: 9.4 (16% share) in New York, 19 (34% share) in Philadelphia, 13 (30% share) in Baltimore.

Now this delightful programming success which set fan mail records on Ed Sullivan's Show, is available February 1 in a library of 65 beautiful full-color five-minute vignettes, utilizing over 1,200 different marionettes in "The Colorful World of Music." Each program is a marionette interpretation of a selection from the world's great music.

Ideal for local sponsorship, slot these five-minute fantasies during children's viewing hours.

Buy Podrecca's success for your market before your competitor does. The one-hour special also continues to be available for showing at any time during the year.

TRIANGLE STATIONS
PROGRAM SALES

Another Creative Program Service of the Triangle Stations

TRIANGLE PROGRAM SALES, 320 Park Avenue, New York 22, New York. Telephone: 212-421-2770

Radio Reviews

THAT'S ENTERTAINMENT
With Ken Hildebrand, Frank Leslie
Producer: Bob Miller
Writers: Hilderbrand, Leslie
170 Mins.: Tuesday, 6:10 p.m.
WERE, Cleveland

This almost - three - hour - long stanza could be a refresher course for post-television radio personnel. It demonstrated that radio can be great without whistles, gimmicks, sounds and blares; without deejays who feel a microphone is an open avenue to corny jokes; hokey palaver, and boring repartee.

Acting on a suggestion by Bill Barrett, radio-tv editor of The Press-News, WERE put together some of the gems that were radio from 1921 to 1941. The flavor of the singers of that day—Russ Columbo, Rudy Vallee, Kate Smith, Judy Garland (making her debut on the Major Bowes show); the quips of Brenda and Cobina on the Bob Hope show; Fred Allen and Portland; sportscasters Graham McNamee and Ted Husing, along with snatches of programs with Ben Bernie, Easy Aces, Fanny Brice, the Lone Ranger, Fibber McGee and Molly, Amos 'n Andy —a total of 50 shows were utilized.

What's more, it was all put together with engineering artistry by Arnold Rosenberg and narrated by Ken Hildrebrand and Frank Leslie whose script reflected their feeling, understanding and appreciation of an era so full of entertainment's glory.

Significantly, WERE reported that following the program, calls, and then letters, poured into the station asking for more; and more will be coming. Much of the material came from the Ralston Purina Company and the Cleveland Public Library, and was augmented by contributions from private collectors who, thankfully, were willing to share a bit of good listening with the community.

Spots were neatly blended into the overall presentation. Mark.

THE DEVIL COMES FOR CHRISTMAS
With Rege Cordic, Sterling Yates, Richard Galuppi, Bob Trow, Brace Gilson, Allene Goodman, Patti Litell, Marlene Whited
Producer: Cordic
Writer: Ed King
Dec. 24, 8 p.m.
JOSEPH HORNE CO.
KDKA, Pittsburgh

The magic that has made KDKA nationally famous for more than 43 years spread its charm and multi-edged talents over this superb radio drama. Show dealt with with a Faustian professor, brilliantly played by Richard Galuppi, who made a deal with the devil to go back to the days of Christ and prove that the Lord's birth and priesthood never existed.

Ed King, who has many credits on network radio drama and was the host on "Party Line" the station's oldest and most popular nighttime show, wrote a flawless script as he took the professor back to the Nativity, through Christ's life, even to the point of putting him on the cross at the time of the Crucifixion. King made the whole tale credible, entertaining and memorable. The play has every chance of becoming a Christmas classic on radio and should be adapted for tv.

The whole cast turned in top drawer performances with a small edge to Sterling Yates as Galuppi's fellow professor. Bill Stefan was responsible for the special effects which added considerably to the effect of Rege Cordic's production. Lit.

WJW's 20th ANNIVERSARY
With Grady Edny, Spencer Dames, Robert Martin, others Producer-Director: Edny
30 Mins. Thurs. 7 p.m.
WJW, Cleveland

This anniversary stanza could, in effect, be tagged a "Tale of Two Cities." WGBS, the Storer outlet in Miami, saluted its sister Cleveland station in pointing out that the programming format of "beautiful music and total information news" was a common feature of the two stations, yet each operated to meet the specific needs of the community.

The Florida station personnel, from program manager through editorial director, saluted his northern counterpart. As a fillip, WGBS found that a pair of former Ohioans, Mrs. Julia Tuttle, ex-Clevander of 1890, and William Brickel of Steubenville, a land developer, were instrumental in Miami's growth: Mrs. Tuttle in getting Henry Flager to push his railroad into Florida, and the station is located at 710 Brickle Avenue.

It was a pleasant "beautiful music" type salute, in keeping with WJW's tempo, and an effective note in highlighting a station's 20th year in providing radio to a community. Mark.

HOT LINE
With Jim Small Producer: Stan Hagan
Director: Small
90 Mins.; 10:30 p.m.
Daily except Sat. and Sun.
WNOX, Knoxville

This live daily show eminating from the WNOX studio is ad lib conversation, a people-type telephone show. Informal, Jim Small usually brings up a topic for discussion, local or national, letting listeners call in giving their views.

Ratings for this late prime-time evening show have soared to slightly above 30%, and the time is well supported by area advertisers.

Small has pioneered the technique of a "people-show" in the Southeast. As moderator he doesn't engage in debate, just monitor, but he does demand facts, and asks questions for details when someone has a "way-out" theory or inaccurate facts.

Interviews are on the air about 90 seconds after the conversation as the 10 special lines are steadily busy with waiting callers from the 10:30 start until midnight.

Small is a member of the news staff, is called a combo executive-producer-newsman and announcer. "Hot Line" has gained the highest area listener rating for the period. Brad.

Mgt.: William Morris Agency

BBC-TV

Continued from page 33

nation of the ATV Palladium show and ABC's "Armchair Theatre" to slot it late on Saturday nights. "Dr. Finlay's Casebook," an audience fave, is now being tried against the seemingly invincible vaudeo show.

Other BBC shuffles in order to pep up flagging nights across the board include the shift of "The Defenders" from Monday to Friday, the introduction of selected "Maigret" reruns on Monday nights plus new timings for "Dr. Kildare," "Sportsview" and "This Is Your Life."

Corporation is also bringing back several of its oldtime hits in order to get a bigger slice of the kitty, as for instance another series of "Steptoe and Son," of "Hugh and I," of "The Dick Powell Theatre" plus introducing one or two new outings such as "Top of the Pops" at 6:35 p.m. on Wednesdays and "Hoot'nanny" on Mondays.

Commercial web, too, has made one or two shuffles, but on the whole minor ones. New series coming include "Scandal" on ABC-TV which is also bringing back "77 Sunset Strip." ATV is retreading "Sgt. Cork" for a Saturday night run.

Greenville, N.C. — A Hartwell Campbell has resigned as v.p. and general manager of television station WNCT. Campbell was founder, organizer and first president of Eastern North Carolina's first television station.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

A couple of songs about N.Y. Giants quarterback, Y. A. Tittle, written by a trio of commercial jingle specialists, and plugged over WNEW Radio, N.Y., may yet become popular hits. Songs, "I'm In Love With Y. A. Tittle" and "Ya, Ya, Ya, Y.A. Tittle," were cleffed by Ed Flynn, Lennen & Newell v.p.; Jim Fagas, a freelance arranger; and Alan Mirchin, recording engineer, all Giant fans. They recorded the tunes with Rose Marie June, who warbles a great number of jingles. They submitted them to WNEW Radio, which carries the N.. Giants games, and the station's jockeys began spinning them. Every time the tunes were played, the station's switchboards lit up with callers who wanted to know where they could buy the record. However, only one copy has been made so far for the exclusive use of WNEW Radio.

The buildings and facilities of the WFIL radio and tv stations, longtime Philly headquarters for the Triangle chain local outlets, have been formally turned over to WHYY, Inc., which operates the educational stations WHYY-TV and WHYY-FM.

At ceremonies in the station Roger W. Clipp, vice president of the radio and tv division of Triangle Publications, Inc., presented the deed to the property and the equipment to William Goldman, president of WHYY.

The two-story West Philly structure, occupying a half block has housed the studios, laboratories and offices of the WFIL stations since 1948. At that time it was the first structure in the world designed and built exclusively for tv.

Action culminates a plan announced several months ago by Walter H. Annenberg, president of Triangle, to make the gift to the non-profit educational outlet. The contribution involves real property, buildings, grounds and modern equipment valued by Goldman at $1,240,000 and as "a fabulous tribute to man's generosity to his fellow man."

The Triangle stations are moving to the company's new center on City Line Ave., Jan. 10. The broadcasting facilities will be moved Jan. 17 and will be on the air Jan. 19.

WCBS-TV

Continued from page 25

major market in the country, extra tv advertising monies are spent and WCBS-TV gets that coin.

It's interesting to note that 90% of the station's income is derived from non-network sales. In other words, the web's station payments only account for 10% of the o&o's income.

On the sponsor front, another sign of the times is the use of tv as the ad medium for newspapers, notably the N.Y. Herald Tribune and N.Y. Daily News on WCBS-TV. Tribune spent some tall coin on the station's "Late News" show and took on sponsorship of outlet's documentary package for the fourth quarter when Chock Full O' Nuts bowed out.

In late January, every fourth Wednesday from 8 to 8:30 p.m. will be taken over by "Repertoire Workshop," for the first time giving a regular nighttime exposure to local programming in the fields of drama, dance, and the lively arts. Initial outing will be "Shakespeare's Women—Their Infinite Variety," produced by Joseph Papp. "Workshop," which will be retitled "Stage 7" for its Wednesday night showcase on WCBS-TV, is a project of all CBS o&o stations.

Bulk of station's prime time programming, of course, is supplied by web. Some vital statistics, though, show the climb in local live programming. Compared to '59, there has been a 400% increase in local live programming, exclusive of regular news and election coverage.

Regular news programs of the station, too, has climbed considerably. On the local level, the CBS-TV, NBC-TV competition for news dominance finds Nielsen and Arbitron in disagreement on what happens in the prime news spot from 6:30 to 7:30. Arbitron clearly gives the edge to WCBS-TV, while Nielsen gives the nod by a nose to WNBC-TV.

From Angels To Skis

Subjects to be covered in the upcoming Tuesday, 7:30 to 8 p.m. slot on WCBS-TV, N.Y., range from the decline in the number of churches in N.Y., to the problems of widowed women, to that of angeling Broadway legit productions. There also will be a half-hour devoted to mixed marriages, a ski weekend, as well as episodes dealing with portraits of personalities, both big and small.

The half-hour series will be called "Eye on New York," a longtime title series held by WCBS-TV, in its documentary examination of many N.Y. problems. Term documentary for the series is considered too heavy by station brass. Good many of the subjects will be in the light category. Station, incidentally, had one of its biggest successes in the "This Is Y. A. Tittle" portrait. Profile was sold in 17 other markets, mainly via phone and inquires from other stations. It was the first WCBS-TV documentary to ride the syndication trail.

He Lobbys For Your Products

"I'm a lobbyist," says Wayne Painter, Merchandising Director of WISN-TV, Milwaukee, when asked to describe his job. "I lobby through the mail, over the phone and in person to get shelf space, displays, point of purchase material into place—anything that will tie in with a television campaign and help the sale of a product in this market."

Painter brings to his lobbying activities a background, a personality and a creative flair that serve him well. He is a graduate of the University of Illinois with a degree in journalism. He worked in television production, sales, merchandising and promotion at TV stations in Illinois and Wisconsin before joining WISN-TV in January of 1962.

He has a sales personality and displays the good salesman's easy sense of humor, quick mind and persuasive tongue in every personal contact. And he's a man with ideas when it comes to designing direct mail or other promotional pieces.

"I don't go for the straight letter or the standard jumbo post card," he declares. "In this business you have to attract attention."

Wayne Painter is another one of the talented people who make WISN-TV click. He's also someone who can go a long way to help your product click in the Milwaukee market.

4th in the NATION!
in retail sales per household*

That's Minneapolis-St. Paul, with retail sales of $4,649 per household. In this key market, KSTP-TV is the first television station serving 810,800 homes.

KSTP television 5
100,000 WATTS • NBC
MINNEAPOLIS • ST. PAUL

COLUMBIA POST-48 FEATURES FOR TV

Seasonal Greetings!

SCREEN GEMS, INC.

PILOT FILMS WANTED

Will pay good price for half-hour situation comedy, comedy mystery, light drama, or similar pilot films for non-broadcast use.

Write Box V-3546, Variety
154 W. 46th St., N. Y. 10036

BIG BIZ YENS PREMIUM DISKS

'There's Profit in Creativity,' Sez RCA's Marek in Chiding Disk Biz Cassandras

George R. Marek's answer to the record industry cassandras who've been crying about a "profitless prosperity" during the past year is "there's profit in creativity". Instead of looking on the future as "profitless prosperity", the RCA Victor veepee-general manager views the problems of the industry as affording opportunities to apply management and creative skills.

Marek concedes that the record industry biz was off in 1963 but, he says, every business has had in its problems in the past year and cries of "profitless prosperity" are doing the industry no good. "It gives the impression," says Marek, "that money cannot be made out of the record industry, which is wrong."

He adds, "It also sounds like cries coming from people who don't like what they're doing. They ought to be in another business." Marek suggests that the people who represent the industry should walk with their heads held high and move forward to reverse the "profitless" and "lowgrade" image that has colored the industry.

"There are good people in the industry," he states, "and they do a useful and clean job. It's a great mistake to keep harping on a 'profitless prosperity' instead of using ingenuity and imagination to make people's lives more joyful through records."

Marek also says that the people in the industry should take pride in their business and not be cry babies. "The industry grows," he says, "when there are exciting artists like Barbra Streisand, The Singing Nun and John Gary to attract the consumer."

According to Marek, prosperity comes to the industry through its own creativity. "There's profit to be made in the growing global market," he emphasizes, "and there's profit to be made from the development of new and exciting artists as well as new and exciting record ideas."

London Record Distribs En Route to Britain For Jan. 5-11 Sales Confab

Sir Edward Lewis, chairman of the board of Decca Ltd., London, and president of London Records, will host the firm's U.S. distributors at a sales conference in London Jan. 5-11. Every one of London Records' key markets, from Honolulu to Miami, will be represented.

Many of London Records' top U.S. personnel will also attend the conference. This contingent will be headed by D. H. Toller-Bond, exec vice president of London Records. The distributors will be given a preview of London Records' January releases which include Phase 4, opera, classics, pops and International label. They will also make a tour of Decca Ltd.'s manufacturing plants and recording studios.

Arthur Hardy, pioneer of high fidelity and "ffrr," will demonstrate new recording equipment. As part of the presentation of its new product, London Records will utilize the talents of its recording artists. Among them will be Mantovani, Ted Heath, Edmundo Ros and Johnny Keating.

AGAC Cuts Collection Fee Charge to 4½%

The American Guild of Authors & Composers is dropping its collection fee charge from 5% down to 4½% AGAC had been charging 5% of its collection take for the past five years.

The collections for 1963 came to almost $2,000,000. According to Miriam Stern, AGAC's exec secretary, about $100,000 of the take is "found money" due to AGAC's collection and auditing plan.

MGM/Verve Names Lewis Project Director

Al Lewis has been appointed director of special projects for MGM/Verve Records and its subsid labels. He'll work under the supervision of Tom White, director of administration and will handle recording budget control, cost analysis, advertising budget expenditures and billing expedition.

Lewis has been associated with Metro Goldwyn Mayer for seven years in the accounting department. For the past three years he was manager of the royalty department for MGM/Verve.

State Dept. Digs C&W for Overseas Cultural Pgm. But-

Chicago, Dec. 30.

The U.S. State Department's Office of Cultural Presentations, responding to a recent story in VARIETY (issue of Nov. 13), indicates a willingness to consider the possibility of country & western and folk music tours in the cultural exchange program.

However, the present position of that office, as stated in a letter by its director Glenn G. Wolfe, is that c&w music is now being presented commercially in various areas abroad and that there appears to be "no need for the Government to try to provide substitutes for this fine effort."

Wolfe made reference to the article which quoted Nashville-based music publisher (and past board chairman of the Country Music Assn.) Wesley Rose as saying that CMA was given a runaround in Washington when it sent representatives to propose an over-

(Continued on page 38)

LP TIEINS WILL SET '63 HIGHS

Music on LP disks, especially created for leading American companies, will set new highs in 1963 for sales stimulation, store traffic building, introduction of new products and tiein activities on a wide range of merchandising objectives.

That's the conclusion of Stanley Arnold, New York merchandising consultant who made an overall survey of the growing trend of top companies to employ records to boost their sales. In some cases big business is itself the impresario—helping to pull together the contents of the recording or having this done by a special consultant. In other instances, the entire job is left to the record company.

American companies have become more willing to sponsor music in this area because of increasing ties to showmanship through sponsoring tv and previously radio, Arnold notes.

The 75,000,000-plus phonographs in use in the country means that almost all homes of above lowest income have record players. Moreover, sponsors feel that having their album in the home means that it will be replayed many times, bringing the message indirectly to the potential purchaser.

Producing the record and being able to sell it for $1 also gives the sponsor a premium that cannot be duplicated by competitors. For in buying sponsorship, either from a recording firm or from his own production, the sponsor makes certain of his own exclusivity, Arnold adds.

Other highlights of Arnold's report:

1) Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. will this year distribute over 3,000,000 of a new special "Great Songs of Christmas, Vol. 3." The recording is being offered through 60,000 Goodyear dealers and franchise holders from coast-to-coast.

Originally created by Arnold as a special store traffic builder and given a nominal value of $3.95 while selling at $1, it is described as a "self-liquidating premium" in

(Continued on page 38)

Comer Back in Disk Biz With Knoxville Waxery

Knoxville, Dec. 30.

Jack Comer, local promoter whose credits include the "Crying in the Chapel" disclick, said here last week that he'll reenter the recording biz after Jan. 1. He sold Valley Publishing Co. some time ago and agreed not to return to the field until 1964.

Comer will headquarter his new diskery in Knoxville. Floyd Wilson, a c&w specialist, will be Comer's arranger.

Cleve. Symphony Tooters, Local 4 Burying Hatchet

Cleveland, Dec. 30.

Agreement to bury hatchet in the internecine battles between AFL-CIO Musicians Local 4 and its concert members in Cleveland Symphony, who demanded more equitable representation, was reached last week by both sides.

Resolution promising more harmony was sponsored by Gina Raffaelli, chairman of orchestra's committee, and Lee Repp, retiring prez of Local 4. Drafted by Don Duprez, union's secretary-treasurer, the resolution provides that the union executive board must implement a strike if 60% or more of the orchestra members, excluding conductors, vote to reject a contract.

If fewer than 60% of the orchestra musicians object to a contract proposal, the union will have the power to sign a new agreement. Resolution was adopted unanimously, Duprez reported.

Three lawsuits have been ignited during the long war on this problem. First rift came in June,

(Continued on page 38)

Court Clarifies Legal Ties on AFM Fiscal Reforms Voted at Convention

An order clarifying the legal restrictions imposed upon the American Federation of Musicians' fiscal reforms adopted at its convention last June was issued last week by the N. Y. Federal Court, with concurrence by the U.S. Court of Appeals.

Of 11 fiscal union laws adopted by weighted-voting procedures approved by the AFM constitution, only two are enjoined under the now modified ruling. One such item sought to legislate an increased schedule of Federation initiation fees and the other provided a $6 per annum increase in dues to be paid by members to Locals of the Federation.

By a two-to-one vote, the Appeals Court upheld Federal Judge Richard H. Levet's ruling that the weighted-membership roll call which adopted the entire fiscal resolution, did not comply with the literal language of the federal statute requiring "a majority vote of the delegates voting."

$6 Tax Unaffected

The voting procedure at the June convention, AFM counsel insisted, was an even more democratic expression, in that it represented the will of some 260,000 member musicians as expressed by the numbers-weighted voices of their elected delegates. The court's ruling does not affect the payment by Locals to the Federation of the $6 per capita obligation per member.

The Federation's position in this regard was upheld in a dissenting opinion filed by Appellate Justice Thurgood Marshall, who said, in part: "I must respectfully dissent from the opinion of my brothers . . . My disagreement is only with the conclusion that the words 'by majority vote of the delegates voting' were intended and must be construed to invalidate this common and concededly fair method of delegate voting at union conventions, insofar as it is used to approve dues increases . . . Nor does any reason readily suggest itself for barring the weighted-ballot system in connection with dues increases voted at union conventions . . ."

Analyzes Federal Statute

Justice Marshall's dissent went on to review the "legislative intent" of the federal statute, noting that "it seems to me clear that Congress intended merely to assure that dues increases could not be imposed by irresponsible or arbitrary union leaders not answerable in any way to the membership at large. It did not set out to dictate to unions a particular method for voting by delegates at national conventions, and, especially did not

(Continued on page 37)

OUT NEXT WEEK!

The

58th Anniversary Number

Of

VARIETY

Victor Grooves $59,841 Service Band Royalties To Nat'l Cultural Center

The National Cultural Center picked up $59,841 from RCA Victor last week representing the first payment of royalties from the sale of four U.S. military band recordings. A check was presented by George R. Marek, veepee-general manager of the RCA Victor Division, to Mrs. Jouette Shouse, a member of the cultural center's board of trustees in Washington.

Marek pointed out that the royalty figure was based on the first four month's sales of the albums, from their release date in May, 1963, until the end of the accounting period on Aug. 31. A further payment of royalties will be made to the Center next spring.

The four albums, military marches and patriotic songs played by the U.S. Army, Marine Corps, Navy and Air Force bands, were the first ever made by the bands for sale to the public. The project was made possible by the cooperation of Victor, the Department of Defense, the American Federation of Musicians and the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists. All composers, music publishers and arrangers waived their fees in favor of the Center.

B'way's 'Supper,' Hoffman's 'Swinger,' Susan Stein's 'Nun,' Top New LPs

JOSE FERRER-FLORENCE HENDERSON: "THE GIRL WHO CAME TO SUPPER" (Columbia). The Noel Coward score for the Broadway tuner, "The Girl Who Came To Supper," is rich in melody and sophisticated lyrics. Coward is fortunate in having Florence Henderson's melodious song styling to enhance his work as well as Jose Ferrer to make much of the words in his peculiar talk-sing fashion. The most outstanding feature of this original cast album, though, is the London medley sung by Tessie O'Shea. It's a show-stopper in the theatre and a wow on disks. Show tune collectors will run to this package for this segment alone. However, there are also such tasty items as "Here and Now," sung by Miss Henderson, and "Curt, Clear and Concise," sung by Ferrer and Roderick Cook to keep the buffs happy, too. And once again, Columbia has done a handsome packaging job.

JEANNIE HOFFMAN: "THE FOLK-TYPE SWINGER" (Capitol). Here's a nifty twist on the current folk cycle. Jeannie Hoffman is a lyric-voiced balladeer, but she brings a contemporary jazz feeling to her vocals which give them an extra edge amidst the welter of more traditional versions. Backed shorply by a swinging combo, Miss Hoffman turns up in fresh workovers of numbers like "Sing Hallelujah," "The Riddle Song," "Jamaica Farewell," "Frankie and Johnnie" and "Hush Little Baby."

SUSAN STEIN: "SONGS OF THE SINGING NUN" (Golden). Soeur Sourire, currently riding the top of the disk heap as the singing nun, gets an English language counterpart in this session which is labeled an "authorized version." The vocalist is Susan Stein, who skillfully performs English translations of the French ditties, prepared by Noel Regney. As an added feature, the lyrics to the English translations are included on the back of the LP's jacket. The package is a pleasant and entertaining one and should capture some of the coin now circulating on the Singing Nun craze. It has all the spirit and atmosphere of the original. Incidentally, she's J. C. Stein's daughter.

"THE THREEPENNY OPERA" (London). The Kurt Weill-Bertolt Brecht score for "The Threepenny Opera," which already has a good disk run, is up for another recording flurry because of the new film version produced by Kurt Ulrich in Germany. This package is the German language version of the pic's track and upcoming will be the English version of the track on RCA Victor label. The German lingo track may limit its sales potential in the U.S. but it does recapture the Weill-Brecht mood in an excellent manner and there are plenty of "Threepenny Opera" addicts around who'll want it for just that. Heading the cast on the disk are Curt Jurgens, Hildegarde Neff, Maria Korber and Konrad Wagner.

JO MAPES: "THE HOOTENANNY STAR" (Kapp). Mixing a variety of w.k. folk tunes and some lesser-known items, Jo Mapes has come up with a suitable pop-folk session. Although reminiscent of many folk artists, Miss Mapes impresses with her vocal stylings and guitar strumming. While there is little particularly distinctive about the session, it deserves attention because of the artist's forthright and dynamic approach to the now-familiar vogue.

DAVID WHITFIELD: "A MILLION STARS" (London). A singer with a fine set of pipes, easily capable of handling the more complex classical vein, David Whitfield has come up with a set of pop songs, some of which are from legit. He has a strong, clear voice which he uses to substantial advantage in delivering the tunes which include such as "Climb Every Mountain," "On the Street Where You Live" and "Maria." Whitfield, a Britisher, displays a dramatic feeling for his selections and enjoyment in his work to make this a fine vocal LP which should be appreciated by "good" music fans and programmers.

THE WOMENFOLK-THE VILLAGES: "WE GIVE A HOOT" (RCA Victor). Part of the current hootenanny cycle, this set showcases a couple of excellent folk-singing combos in a live performance at the Ice House in Pasadena, Calif. On one side, the Womenfolk, a distaff quintet, is featured in a finely executed group of half-dozen numbers including such titles as "A Hundred Miles," "Jane Jane" and "Hard Times Cotton-mill Girls." On the flip side, The Villages, a mixed quartet, deliver in bright style on such numbers as "Good News," "Run Molly," "Sing Early In The Morning" and "Kum Ba Ya." Both groups join in a rousing "Down By The Riverside."

JUDY COLLINS: "#3" (Elektra). Among folksingers, one of the finest femmes currently practicing is Judy Collins. Her Elektra waxings have each been solid examples of the art of folk styling and this LP continues the tradition with grace and spirit. With a strong, clear voice and the authority to control it with skill and savvy, Miss Collins delivers her songs with dynamics and understanding. The cover photo of the striking songstress alone should attract attention but the music on the LP is about as fine as the folk boom has produced.

"THE EXCITING VOICE OF CHARLES K. L. DAVIS" (Colpix). A dramatic song purveyor, Charles K. L. Davis has a nice voice which he uses for top emotional effect on this strong ballad session. Arrangements are by O. B. Masingill who also batoned the outing and they are lush and stringy. Davis sometimes comes on a bit too strong with the vocal dramatics but his pipe prowess is substantial and this collection of standards is brought into good musical focus by the singer. Included are tunes like "How Deep Is the Ocean," Because of You" and "Time After Time."

TIP & TINKER WITH CHARLIE SCOTT: "MOANIN' 'N' GROANIN'" (Audio Fidelity). This is a rousing session of pop and blues numbers presented with style and vigor by Tip & Tinker with Charile Scott. The material, which also includes folk stylings, is delivered with spirit and an enthusiasm that make for distinctive listening. The vocalists display an emotional verve and knowhow on such tunes as "Ghost Riders in the Sky," "I'm On My Way," "Lindy Lou" and others. The waxing will delight folk, blues and country listeners.

"THE GREAT JAZZ PIANO OF PHINEAS NEWBORN JR." (Contemporary). Displaying hip dexterity and style, Phineas Newborn Jr. has a groovy jazz set with this latest outing. The music he plays comes from the pens of some of top hipsters around today, including Bud Powell, Bobby Timmons, Duke Ellington, Thelonious Monk, Miles Davis, Sonny Rollins as well as a couple of Newborn originals. He's also backed by the swinging likes of Leroy Vinnegar, Milt Turner, Sam Jones and Louis Hayes on various selections. It all adds up to a slick jazz album.

ERIK DARLING: "TRAIN TIME" (Vanguard). Erik Darling, formerly with The Weavers and The Tarriers, has recently stepped out as a soloist in this set. A knowledgeable performer in the folk idiom, Darling compensates for his thin pipes with a mastery of the guitar and banjo and skillful use of his vocal equipment. His repertory is consistently interesting, ranging over traditional folk items and blues songs. He's particularly effective on numbers like "Charlie Green," "Guitar Blues," "Train Time," "I Love My Love" and "Long John."

LAWRENCE WELK
Has Another Hit Dot Album!
"WONDERFUL, WONDERFUL"

LONDON UPS WESEN TO N.Y. BRANCH MGR.

Phil Wesen has been set as branch manager of London Records' New York operations. Frank La Rocca was named assistant branch manager.

Wesen, who has been with the firm for the past 11 years, has been assistant branch manager for the past three years. He'll report directly to Herb Goldfarb, London's national sales manager.

In another sales assignment, Sam Trofe will now act as London's eastern division district manager with a territory running from New England to Charlotte, N.C. He'll work out of his home base in Philadelphia.

Longplay Shorts

Decca Records held simultaneous sales meetings in New York and the Coast Monday (30) to acquaint the company's divisional sales force with the label's mid-winter product and plans. Along with the new album product, the district sales force was also introduced to the addition of three new phonograph models. The homeoffice delegation to the N.Y. meet was led by Sydney N. Goldberg, Decca's veepee in charge of national sales, while the Coast contingent was headed by Claude Brennan, of the homeoffice sales force. . . . The John F. Kennedy disk memorial splurge continues: Latest to enter the race is Regina Records with an album titled "A Profile Of Courage," featuring several of the late President's speeches. The diskery will give 25% of the album's gross receipts to Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy's favorite charities. . . .

The RCA Victor recording of Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet," by Charles Munch with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been awarded France's "Prix du President de la Republique." It's the second international prize awarded to the two-record album this year, the first having been the "Grand Prix des Discophiles 1963" . . . Pianist Lee Evans, Command Records disker, guests on Joe Franklin's WOR-TV show Friday (3) . . . Masterwork Audio Products, designed and sold by Columbia Records Sales Corp., is introducing 10 new models for its 1964 merchandising campaign . . . London Records has released the original cast album of "Prince and the Pauper," children's musical currently running in New York . . . Sol Kaplan has been set to compose the score for Samuel Goldwyn Jr.'s "The Young Lovers."

Comedian London Lee's first album for Columbia, "My Mother Said To Tell Ya," will be ready for market in the early spring . . . A collaboration by Leontyne Price and the late Fritz Reiner, Artur Rubinstein's first interpretation of Mozart's 20th piano concerto and the first Mozart performance by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony are among the highlights of RCA Victor's eight-album Red Seal release for January . . . The Glad-Hamp diskery has released "East Meets West," first recording in this country by Miyoko Hoshino, Lionel Hampton's discovery.

Violinist Aaron Rosand, recently back from a tour of the Continent, will be the featured soloist with the Baltimore Symphony on Jan. 25. The orch will be under the baton of Elyakum Schapira . . . John Gary, who clicked with his debut RCA Victor album, "Catch A Rising Star," has readied his second LP, "John Gary—Encore," and the diskery is preparing to issue a Gary single as well . . . Sir Edward Lewis, British Decca topper, presented Richard Rodgers with a silver plaque for the 1,000,000 U.K. sales of the RCA soundtrack album of "South Pacific."

Top Singles Of The Week

(The 'Best Bets' of This Week's 100-Plus Releases)

THE BEATLES . . . . . I WANT TO HOLD YOUR HAND
(Capitol) . . . . . I Saw Her Standing There

The Beatles' "I Want To Hold Your Hand" (Duchess†) brings the clicko English group to the U.S. with the side that went over 1,000,000 in sales in the U.K. This "Liverpool sound" fits neatly into the rocking teen pattern that's popular here and it shapes as a Stateside winner. "I Saw Her Standing There" (Walter Hofer†) sends out some more of their highly rhythmic sounds that add up to spinning excitement.

* * *

THE DIXIEBELLES . . . . . SOUTHTOWN U. S. A.
(Sound 7 Stage) . . . . . Why Don't You Set Me Free

The Dixiebelle's "Southtown U.S.A." (Al Gallico†) follows the pattern set by their successful "Down At Papa Joe's" slice with the catchy blending of voices and beat that has all the earmarks of another click for the group. "Why Don't You Set Me Free" (Tuneville†) has an impressive rhythmic pull and a potent vocal to give it okay spinning chances.

* * *

GENE PITNEY . . . . . WHO NEEDS IT
(Musicor) . . . . . That Girl Belongs To Yesterday

Gene Pitney's "Who Needs It" (Pitfield†) mixes up folk and country styles with a forceful rhythmic drive that gives it payoff potential on all spinning levels. "That Girl Belongs To Yesterday" (Pitfield†) is a big ballad pushed across with the kind of vocal power that pulls plays.

* * *

SKEETER DAVIS
HE SAYS THE SAME THINGS TO ME
(RCA Victor) . . . How Much Can A Lonely Heart Stand

Skeeter Davis' "He Says The Same Things To Me" (Geld-Udell) will have strong appeal for the teener market because of the meaningful way this ballad message is pushed across. "How Much Can A Lonely Heart Stand" (Tree†) backs up a good beat with a nifty vocal attack to pull in some teener requests for spins.*

* * *

RON WINTERS . . . . . SNOW GIRL
(Dimension) . . . . . In The Middle of The Morning

Ron Winters' "Snow Girl" (Grand Canyon†) will heat up the turntables because of the driving beat the kids will like to jump to and build into a payoff spinning item. "In The Middle Of The Morning" (Grand Canyon†) has an okay counry-styled approach with a teen message that could attract some play.

* * *

THE SURFARIS . . . . . SCATTER SHIELD
(Decca) . . . . . I Wanna Take A Trip To The Islands

The Surfaris' "Scatter Shield" (Champion†) roars out with a driving beat that develops into a solid instrumental that's good for a strong spinning pickup. "I Wanna Take A Trip To The Islands" (Champion†) sets up some more surf music sounds with a snappy vocal and instrumental blending.

* * *

GEORGE MAHARIS . . . . . SARA DARLING
(Epic) . . . . . It's A Sin To Tell A Lie

George Maharis' "Sara Darling" (B.F. Wood) has a warm, folk-styled appeal that will catch lots of spinning action because of the winning vocal manner. "It's A Sin To Tell A Lie" (BVC*) continues the trend of bringing oldies up for teener approval with a forceful vocal and a sharp backing of voices and orch.*

* * *

BRUCE & TERRY . . . . . CUSTOM MACHINE
(Columbia) . . . . . Makaha At Midnight

Bruce & Terry's "Custom Machine" (Sea of Tunes†) is in the hot rod music groove and drives across a hot beat to keep the turntables moving at a payoff pace. "Makaha At Midnight" (Daywin†) dishes out some catchy instrumental sounds for fair spinning reaction.

* * *

SHEB WOOLEY SHE CALLED ME BABY
(MGM) . . . . . Papa's Ole Fiddle

Sheb Wooley's "She Called Me Baby" (Central Songs†) has a catch-on blues-ballad feel done in a straight and appealing approach that will surprise and attract many disk fans. "Papa's Ole Fiddle" (Channel) tells a sentimental tale with a narrative approach that makes it a bit sticky.*

* * *

THE BOYFRIENDS . . . . . LET'S FALL IN LOVE
(Kapp) . . . . . Oh Lana

The Boyfriends' "Let's Fall In Love" (Bourne) gives another oldie the new teen tempo with some interesting harmony techniques that can push it to the top of the spinning heap. "Oh Lana" (Signet-Highwood†) spells out a romantic salute to still another girl's name with some sound gimmicks that the juves may find enjoyable.*

* * *

GERRY & PACEMAKERS . . YOU'LL NEVER WALK ALONE
(Laurie) . . . . . It's All Right

Gerry & The Pacemakers' "You'll Never Walk Alone" (Harms) is another teen-sounding interpretation of the Rodgers & Hammerstein oldie that the kids seem to find inspirational and they give it plenty of play, too. "It's All Right" features a neat swinging tempo to pull some coinbox action.*

* * *

FRANK FONTAINE . . . . . R.S.V.P.
(ABC-Paramount) . . . . . Alouette, Pretty Alouette

Frank Fontaine's "R.S.V.P." (Grayson) is full of the sentimental song mood he's popularized on Jackie Gleason's CBS-TV show and it ought to go far because of it. "Alouette, Pretty Alouette" (Pamco†) takes the familiar French oldie for a happy ride with new English lyrics sung in the style of one of his tv characterizations.*

* * *

BUDDY HOLLY . . . . ROCK AROUND WITH OLLIE VEE
(Coral) . . . . . I'm Gonna Love You Too

Buddy Holly's "Rock Around With Ollie Vee" (Valley†) is a posthumous release but it has enough of a driving rocking beat to keep it alive on the turntables. "I'm Gonna Love You Too" (Nor-Va Jak†) sends out some more of his brisk rocking approach and makes the disk a good parlay for juke action. Gros.

*ASCAP. †BMI.

VARIETY SINGLE RECORD T.I.P.S.

(Tune Index of Performance & Sales)

This Wk.	Last Wk.	No. Wks. On Chart		Label
1	1	8	DOMINIQUE Singing Nun	Philips
2	2	6	THERE, I'VE SAID IT AGAIN Bobby Vinton	Epic
3	3	7	LOUIE LOUIE Kingsmen	Wand
4	4	5	POPSICLES & ICICLES Murmaids	Chatahoochee
5	5	7	YOU DON'T HAVE TO BE A BABY Caravelles	Smash
6	7	6	DRIP DROP Dion	Columbia
7	6	13	I'M LEAVING IT ALL UP TO YOU Dale & Grace	Michelle
8	9	8	SINCE I FELL FOR YOU Lenny Welch	Cadence
9	10	10	EVERYBODY Tommy Roe	ABC-Par
10	8	8	TALK BACK TREMBLING LIPS Johnny Tillotson	MGM
11	11	4	FORGET HIM Bobby Rydell	Cameo
12	13	5	MIDNIGHT MARY Joey Powers	Amy
13	12	8	LODDY LO Chubby Checker	Parkway
14	14	12	SHE'S A FOOL Leslie Gore	Mercury
15	20	5	QUICKSAND Martha & The Vandellas	Gordy
16	16	5	WIVES & LOVERS Jack Jones	Kapp
17	15	9	WONDERFUL SUMMER Robin Ward	Dot
18	17	4	KANSAS CITY Trini Lopez	Reprise
19	18	9	CAN I GET A WITNESS Marvin Gaye	Tamla
20	21	6	HAVE YOU HEARD Duprees	Coed
21	22	5	NITTY GRITTY Shirley Ellis	Congress
22	25	3	OUTER LIMITS Marketts	Warner Bros.
23	19	15	SUGAR SHACK James Gilmer	Dot
24	23	13	MARIA ELENA Los Indios Tabajaias	Victor
25	27	6	THE BOY NEXT DOOR Secrets	Philips
26	28	3	TURN AROUND Dick & Dee Dee	Warner Bros.
27	24	8	BE TRUE TO YOUR SCHOOL Beach Boys	Capitol
28	26	6	IN MY ROOM Beach Boys	Capitol
29	29	9	LITTLE RED ROOSTER Sam Cooke	Victor
30	—	1	HEY LITTLE COBRA Ripchords	Columbia
31	31	3	WHEN LOVE LIGHT SHINES Supremes	Motown
32	32	3	AS LONG AS HE KNOWS Marvelettes	Tamla
33	—	1	CHEERLEADER Paul Peterson	Colpix
34	33	2	STEWBALL Peter, Paul & Mary	Warner Bros.
35	34	5	BABY DON'T YOU WEEP Garnett Mimms	UA
36	36	3	SURFIN BIRD Trashmen	Garrett
37	35	3	PRETTY PAPER Roy Orbison	Monument
38	—	1	AS USUAL Brenda Lee	Decca
39	30	12	IT'S ALL RIGHT Impressions	ABC-Par
40	37	11	BOSSA NOVA BABY Elvis Presley	Victor
41	39	11	DOWN AT PAPA JOE'S Dixie Belles	S.S.7
42	38	10	WALKING THE DOG Rufus Thomas	Stax
43	43	4	DRAG CITY Jan & Dean	Liberty
44	41	9	LIVING A LIE Al Martino	Capitol
45	40	15	DEEP PURPLE April Stevens & Nino Tempo	Atco
46	45	4	YOU'RE GOOD FOR ME Solomon Burke	Atlantic
47	46	9	HEY LITTLE GIRL Major Lance	Okeh
48	42	9	24 HOURS FROM TULSA Gene Pitney	Musicor
49	47	11	500 MILES AWAY FROM HOME Bobby Bare	Victor
50	44	13	WASHINGTON SQUARE Village Stompers	Epic

Elvis' Gold Disk 'Christmas' LP

Elvis Presley has copped a gold record for his "Elvis' Christmas Album" on the RCA Victor label. The album, which was first released at Christmas in 1959, topped the $1,000,000 sales figure this Yule season.

It's the sixth Presley package to earn the RIAA (Record Industry Assn. of America) plaque signifying the $1,000,000-plus sales figure. The other LPs are "Elvis," "Elvis' Golden Records, Vol. 1," "G.I. Blues," "Girls! Girls! Girls!" and "Blue Hawaii."

"Blue Hawaii," Presley's all-time Victor bestseller, is close to the $3,000,000 sales figure; "G. I. Blues" is well past the $2,000,000 sales figure, and "Elvis' Golden Records, Vol. 1" is also nearing the $2,000,000 mark.

Presley's current Victor LP, "Fun In Acapulco" and "Elvis' Golden Records, Vol. 3," are now approaching the $1,000,000 sales mark.

Warner Bros. Label And Reprise Subsid Under 1 Burbank Roof Mid-Feb.

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Mike Maitland, prexy of Warner Bros. Records who recently returned from an extended European junket, revealed that Reprise Records, subsid acquired last summer, will abandon its Hollywood offices in mid-February and staff will then share same building with parent company on the Warner lot in Burbank.

Some 80% of the business Maitland conducted overseas was on behalf of Reprise. While abroad, he firmed deals with Pye for Reprise and Decca for Warner Bros. label for distributing in England. In Belgium and Holland, Artone has been set to handle Reprise, Jerry Oord for Warners.

In Paris Vogue will rep both Warners and Reprise for next three years. Still to be decided upon are distribs for the Scandinavian countries, Italy and Germany. "Thus," Maitland states, "we will have considerable enlarged our Burbank-based international department."

Although all things point to marriage of two diskeries, Maitland insists they'll retain separate identities. Reprise, having a more firmly rooted adult following than Warners label in Frank Sinatra, Sammy Davis Jr., Dean Martin and now the Trini Lopez group, will concentrate on appealing to teen market as well.

Only other big change Maitland has in mind for Reprise is reduction of its artists roster.

Ties on AFM

Continued from page 35

have any desire to foreclose national unions from giving more weight to their large locals on this question."

The dissent concluded: "The term 'majority vote of the delegates voting' is susceptible to a construction which would allow delegates' votes to be weighted in accordance with the strength of the different locals they represent. We ought to accept that construction and reverse the summary judgment herein."

In advising all U.S. Local officers of the modified ruling and its effect on local procedures, Herman Kenin, AFM president, said, in part: "I have instructed our attorneys immediately to seek redress in the Supreme Court against the injunctions remaining. The majority interpretation against weighted-voting by delegates is not alone the concern of the musicians' union, but of countless other labor organizations devoted to union democracy.

"Meanwhile, I have instructed our Local officers to comply with the act as presently interpreted. Very many of our Locals already have conformed to the voting procedures required by federal statute and we shall continue to devote our energies to carrying out the fiscal policies so responsibly ordered by our last convention—in spite of a few would-be 'union busters' who seek to harass the Federation."

VARIETY ALBUM BESTSELLERS

(A National Survey of Key Outlets)

This Wk.	Last Wk.	No. Wks. On Chart
1	1	8	THE SINGING NUN (Philips) Soeur Sourire (PCC 203)
2	2	12	PETER, PAUL & MARY (Warner Bros.) In the Wind (W 1507)
3	3	16	BARBRA STREISAND (Columbia) Volume II (CL 2054)
4	4	8	VILLAGE STOMPERS (Epic) Washington Square (LN 24078)
5	5	4	ANDY WILLIAMS (Columbia) Xmas Album (CL 2087)
6	9	13	FRANK SINATRA (Reprise) Sinatra's Sinatra (R 1010)
7	7	13	AL MARTINO (Capitol) Painted Tainted Rose (T 1975)
8	6	22	JOAN BAEZ (Vanguard) Vol. II (URS 9094)
9	8	7	LOS INDIOS TABAJAREZ (Victor) Maria Elena (LPM 2822)
10	13	10	SWINGLE SINGERS (Philips) Bach's Greatest Hits (PHM 200-097)
11	11	39	ANDY WILLIAMS (Columbia) Days of Wine & Roses (CL 2015)
12	10	51	PETER, PAUL & MARY (Warner Bros.) Moving (W 1473)
13	12	9	ROBERT GOULET (Columbia) In Person (CL 2088)
14	15	113	WEST SIDE STORY (Columbia) Soundtrack (OL 5670)
15	17	37	BARBRA STREISAND (Columbia) Barbra Streisand Album (CL 2007)
16	14	16	ELVIS PRESLEY (Victor) Golden Records, Vol. III (LPM 2765)
17	16	14	BOBBY VINTON (Epic) Blue Velvet (LN 24068)
18	18	84	PETER, PAUL & MARY (Warner Bros.) Peter, Paul & Mary (W 1449)
19	21	4	ELVIS PRESLEY (Victor) Fun in Acapulco (LSP 2756)
20	19	21	TRINI LOPEZ (Reprise) Trini Lopez at PJ'S (6093)
21	20	20	NEW CHRISTY MINSTRELS (Columbia) Ramblin' (CL 2055)
22	23	4	SMOTHERS BROS. (Mercury) Curb Your Tongue, Knave (MG 20862)
23	28	36	BYE BYE BIRDIE (Victor) Soundtrack (LOC 1081)
24	22	8	JOHN GARY (Victor) Catch a Rising Star (LPM 2745)
25	24	16	RAY CHARLES (ABC-Par) Recipe for a Soul (465)
26	27	43	JOAN BAEZ (Vanguard) Baez in Concert (VRS 9112)
27	25	6	BEACH BOYS (Capitol) Little Deuce Coupe (T 1998)
28	32	3	HENRY MANCINI (Victor) Charade (LPM 2755)
29	26	40	ROY ORBISON (Monument) Greatest Hits (MLP 8000)
30	29	12	BEACH BOYS (Capitol) Surfer Girl (T 1981)
31	—	1	THE WEEK THAT WAS (Decca) Original Sound Track (DL 9116)
32	30	40	HOW THE WEST WAS WON (MGM) Soundtrack (1E5)
33	35	8	PERCY FAITH (Columbia) Shangri-La (CL 2024)
34	37	2	ERNIE HECKSCHER (Columbia) That S. F. Beat (CL 2085)
35	31	21	ALLAN SHERMAN (Warner Bros.) My Son the Nut (WB 1501)
36	33	8	HERE'S LOVE (Columbia) Original Cast (KOL 6000)
37	39	15	JOAN BAEZ (Vanguard) Vol. I (URS 9078)
38	34	9	AL HIRT (Victor) Honey in the Horn (LPM 2733)
39	40	18	MONDO CANE (United Artists) Soundtrack (UAL 4105)
40	36	31	SMOTHERS BROS. (Mercury) Think Ethnic (MG 30777)
41	41	14	BOB DYLAN (Columbia) Freewheelin (CL 1986)
42	38	19	NANCY WILSON (Capitol) Hollywood My Way (T 1934)
43	45	3	JIMMY SMITH (Verve) Any Number Can Win (V 8552)
44	—	1	MARTY ROBBINS (Columbia) Return of the Gunfighter (CL 2072)
45	42	27	JAMES BROWN (King) James Brown Show (826)
46	43	10	CHAD MITCHELL TRIO (Mercury) Singing Our Minds (MG 20838)
47	47	44	LAWRENCE OF ARABIA (Colpix) Soundtrack (CP 514)
48	44	6	JIMMY GILMER (Dot) Sugar Shack (LP 3545)
49	46	17	SURFARIS (Dot) Wipe Out (DLP 3535)
50	48	4	TRINI LOPEZ (Reprise) More at P.J.'s (6103)

B'way's 'Supper,' Hoffman's 'Swinger,' Susan Stein's 'Nun,' Top New LPs

JOSE FERRER-FLORENCE HENDERSON: "THE GIRL WHO CAME TO SUPPER" (Columbia). The Noel Coward score for the Broadway tuner, "The Girl Who Came To Supper," is rich in melody and sophisticated lyrics. Coward is fortunate in having Florence Henderson's melodious song styling to enhance his work as well as Jose Ferrer to make much of the words in his peculiar talk-sing fashion. The most outstanding feature of this original cast album, though, is the London medley sung by Tessie O'Shea. It's a show-stopper in the theatre and a wow on disks. Show tune collectors will run to this package for this segment alone. However, there are also such tasty items as "Here and Now," sung by Miss Henderson, and "Curt, Clear and Concise," sung by Ferrer and Roderick Cook to keep the buffs happy, too. And once again, Columbia has done a handsome packaging job.

JEANNIE HOFFMAN: "THE FOLK-TYPE SWINGER" (Capitol). Here's a nifty twist on the current folk cycle. Jeannie Hoffman is a lyric-voiced balladeer, but she brings a contemporary jazz feeling to her vocals which give them an extra edge amidst the welter of more traditional versions. Backed shorply by a swinging combo, Miss Hoffman turns up in fresh workovers of numbers like "Sing Hallelujah," "The Riddle Song," "Jamaica Farewell," "Frankie and Johnnie" and "Hush Little Baby."

SUSAN STEIN: "SONGS OF THE SINGING NUN" (Golden). Soeur Sourire, currently riding the top of the disk heap as the singing nun, gets an English language counterpart in this session which is labeled an "authorized version." The vocalist is Susan Stein, who skillfully performs English translations of the French ditties, prepared by Noel Regney. As an added feature, the lyrics to the English translations are included on the back of the LP's jacket. The package is a pleasant and entertaining one and should capture some of the coin now circulating on the Singing Nun craze. It has all the spirit and atmosphere of the original. Incidentally, she's J. C. Stein's daughter.

"THE THREEPENNY OPERA" (London). The Kurt Weill-Bertolt Brecht score for "The Threepenny Opera," which already has a good disk run, is up for another recording flurry because of the new film version produced by Kurt Ulrich in Germany. This package is the German language version of the pic's track and upcoming will be the English version of the track on RCA Victor label. The German lingo track may limit its sales potential in the U.S. but it does recapture the Weill-Brecht mood in an excellent manner and there are plenty of "Threepenny Opera" addicts around who'll want it for just that. Heading the cast on the disk are Curt Jurgens, Hildegarde Neff, Maria Korber and Konrad Wagner.

JO MAPES: "THE HOOTENANNY STAR" (Kapp). Mixing a variety of w.k. folk tunes and some lesser-known items, Jo Mapes has come up with a suitable pop-folk session. Although reminiscent of many folk artists, Miss Mapes impresses with her vocal stylings and guitar strumming. While there is little particularly distinctive about the session, it deserves attention because of the artist's forthright and dynamic approach to the now-familiar vogue.

DAVID WHITFIELD: "A MILLION STARS" (London). A singer with a fine set of pipes, easily capable of handling the more complex classical vein, David Whitfield has come up with a set of pop songs, some of which are from legit. He has a strong, clear voice which he uses to substantial advantage in delivering the tunes which include such as "Climb Every Mountain," "On the Street Where You Live" and "Maria." Whitfield, a Britisher, displays a dramatic feeling for his selections and enjoyment in his work to make this a fine vocal LP which should be appreciated by "good" music fans and programmers.

THE WOMENFOLK-THE VILLAGES: "WE GIVE A HOOT" (RCA Victor). Part of the current hootenanny cycle, this set showcases a couple of excellent folk-singing combos in a live performance at the Ice House in Pasadena, Calif. On one side, the Womenfolk, a distaff quintet, is featured in a finely executed group of half-dozen numbers including such titles as "A Hundred Miles," "Jane Jane" and "Hard Times Cotton-mill Girls." On the flip side, The Villages, a mixed quartet, deliver in bright style on such numbers as "Good News," "Run Molly," "Sing Early In The Morning" and "Kum Ba Ya." Both groups join in a rousing "Down By The Riverside."

JUDY COLLINS: "#3" (Elektra). Among folksingers, one of the finest femmes currently practicing is Judy Collins. Her Elektra waxings have each been solid examples of the art of folk styling and this LP continues the tradition with grace and spirit. With a strong, clear voice and the authority to control it with skill and savvy, Miss Collins delivers her songs with dynamics and understanding. The cover photo of the striking songstress alone should attract attention but the music on the LP is about as fine as the folk boom has produced.

"THE EXCITING VOICE OF CHARLES K. L. DAVIS" (Colpix). A dramatic song purveyor, Charles K. L. Davis has a nice voice which he uses for top emotional effect on this strong ballad session. Arrangements are by O. B. Masingill who also batoned the outing and they are lush and stringy. Davis sometimes comes on a bit too strong with the vocal dramatics but his pipe prowess is substantial and this collection of standards is brought into good musical focus by the singer. Included are tunes like "How Deep Is the Ocean," Because of You" and "Time After Time."

TIP & TINKER WITH CHARLIE SCOTT: "MOANIN' 'N' GROANIN'" (Audio Fidelity). This is a rousing session of pop and blues numbers presented with style and vigor by Tip & Tinker with Charile Scott. The material, which also includes folk stylings, is delivered with spirit and an enthusiasm that make for distinctive listening. The vocalists display an emotional verve and knowhow on such tunes as "Ghost Riders in the Sky," "I'm On My Way," "Lindy Lou" and others. The waxing will delight folk, blues and country listeners.

"THE GREAT JAZZ PIANO OF PHINEAS NEWBORN JR." (Contemporary). Displaying hip dexterity and style, Phineas Newborn Jr. has a groovy jazz set with this latest outing. The music he plays comes from the pens of some of top hipsters around today, including Bud Powell, Bobby Timmons, Duke Ellington, Thelonious Monk, Miles Davis, Sonny Rollins as well as a couple of Newborn originals. He's also backed by the swinging likes of Leroy Vinnegar, Milt Turner, Sam Jones and Louis Hayes on various selections. It all adds up to a slick jazz album.

ERIK DARLING: "TRAIN TIME" (Vanguard). Erik Darling, formerly with The Weavers and The Tarriers, has recently stepped out as a soloist in this set. A knowledgeable performer in the folk idiom, Darling compensates for his thin pipes with a mastery of the guitar and banjo and skillful use of his vocal equipment. His repertory is consistently interesting, ranging over traditional folk items and blues songs. He's particularly effective on numbers like "Charlie Green," "Guitar Blues," "Train Time," "I Love My Love" and "Long John."

LAWRENCE WELK
Has Another Hit Dot Album!
"WONDERFUL, WONDERFUL"

LONDON UPS WESEN TO N.Y. BRANCH MGR.

Phil Wesen has been set as branch manager of London Records' New York operations. Frank La Rocca was named assistant branch manager.

Wesen, who has been with the firm for the past 11 years, has been assistant branch manager for the past three years. He'll report directly to Herb Goldfarb, London's national sales manager.

In another sales assignment, Sam Trofe will now act as London's eastern division district manager with a territory running from New England to Charlotte, N.C. He'll work out of his home base in Philadelphia.

Longplay Shorts

Decca Records held simultaneous sales meetings in New York and the Coast Monday (30) to acquaint the company's divisional sales force with the label's mid-winter product and plans. Along with the new album product, the district sales force was also introduced to the addition of three new phonograph models. The homeoffice delegation to the N.Y. meet was led by Sydney N. Goldberg, Decca's veepee in charge of national sales, while the Coast contingent was headed by Claude Brennan, of the homeoffice sales force . . . The John F. Kennedy disk memorial splurge continues: Latest to enter the race is Regina Records with an album titled "A Profile Of Courage," featuring several of the late President's speeches. The diskery will give 25% of the album's gross receipts to Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy's favorite charities.

The RCA Victor recording of Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet," by Charles Munch with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been awarded France's "Prix du President de la Republique." It's the second international prize awarded to the two-record album this year, the first having been the "Grand Prix des Discophiles 1963" . . . Pianist Lee Evans, Command Records disker, guests on Joe Franklin's WOR-TV show Friday (3) . . . Masterwork Audio Products, designed and sold by Columbia Records Sales Corp., is introducing 10 new models for its 1964 merchandising campaign . . . London Records has released the original cast album of "Prince and the Pauper," children's musical currently running in New York . . . Sol Kaplan has been set to compose the score for Samuel Goldwyn Jr.'s "The Young Lovers."

Comedian London Lee's first album for Columbia, "My Mother Said To Tell Ya," will be ready for market in the early spring . . . A collaboration by Leontyne Price and the late Fritz Reiner, Artur Rubinstein's first interpretation of Mozart's 20th piano concerto and the first Mozart performance by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony are among the highlights of RCA Victor's eight-album Red Seal release for January . . . The Glad-Hamp diskery has released "East Meets West," first recording in this country by Miyoko Hoshino, Lionel Hampton's discovery.

Violinist Aaron Rosand, recently back from a tour of the Continent, will be the featured soloist with the Baltimore Symphony on Jan. 25. The orch will be under the baton of Elyakum Schapira . . . John Gary, who clicked with his debut RCA Victor album, "Catch A Rising Star," has readied his second LP, "John Gary—Encore," and the diskery is preparing to issue a Gary single as well . . . Sir Edward Lewis, British Decca topper, presented Richard Rodgers with a silver plaque for the 1,000,000 U.K. sales of the RCA soundtrack album of "South Pacific."

Top Singles Of The Week

(The 'Best Bets' of This Week's 100-Plus Releases)

THE BEATLES . . . . . I WANT TO HOLD YOUR HAND
(Capitol) . . . . . I Saw Her Standing There

The Beatles' "I Want To Hold Your Hand" (Duchess†) brings the clicko English group to the U.S. with the side that went over 1,000,000 in sales in the U.K. This "Liverpool sound" fits neatly into the rocking teen pattern that's popular here and it shapes as a Stateside winner. "I Saw Her Standing There" (Walter Hofer†) sends out some more of their highly rhythmic sounds that add up to spinning excitement.

* * *

THE DIXIEBELLES . . . . . SOUTHTOWN U. S. A.
(Sound 7 Stage) . . . . . Why Don't You Set Me Free

The Dixiebelle's "Southtown U.S.A." (Al Gallico†) follows the pattern set by their successful "Down At Papa Joe's" slice with the catchy blending of voices and beat that has all the earmarks of another click for the group. "Why Don't You Set Me Free" (Tuneville†) has an impressive rhythmic pull and a potent vocal to give it okay spinning chances.

* * *

GENE PITNEY . . . . . WHO NEEDS IT
(Musicor) . . . . . That Girl Belongs To Yesterday

Gene Pitney's "Who Needs It" (Pitfield†) mixes up folk and country styles with a forceful rhythmic drive that gives it payoff potential on all spinning levels. "That Girl Belongs To Yesterday" (Pitfield†) is a big ballad pushed across with the kind of vocal power that pulls plays.

* * *

SKEETER DAVIS
HE SAYS THE SAME THINGS TO ME
(RCA Victor) . . . How Much Can A Lonely Heart Stand

Skeeter Davis' "He Says The Same Things To Me" (Geld-Udell) will have strong appeal for the teener market because of the meaningful way this ballad message is pushed across. "How Much Can A Lonely Heart Stand" (Tree†) backs up a good beat with a nifty vocal attack to pull in some teener requests for spins.*

* * *

RON WINTERS . . . . . SNOW GIRL
(Dimension) . . . . . In The Middle of The Morning

Ron Winters' "Snow Girl" (Grand Canyon†) will heat up the turntables because of the driving beat the kids will like to jump to and build into a payoff spinning item. "In The Middle Of The Morning" (Grand Canyon†) has an okay country-styled approach with a teen message that could attract some play.

* * *

THE SURFARIS . . . . . SCATTER SHIELD
(Decca) . . . . . I Wanna Take A Trip To The Islands

The Surfaris' "Scatter Shield" (Champion†) roars out with a driving beat that develops into a solid instrumental that's good for a strong spinning pickup. "I Wanna Take A Trip To The Islands" (Champion†) sets up some more surf music sounds with a snappy vocal and instrumental blending.

* * *

GEORGE MAHARIS . . . . . SARA DARLING
(Epic) . . . . . It's A Sin To Tell A Lie

George Maharis' "Sara Darling" (B.F. Wood) has a warm, folk-styled appeal that will catch lots of spinning action because of the winning vocal manner. "It's A Sin To Tell A Lie" (BVC*) continues the trend of bringing oldies up for teener approval with a forceful vocal and a sharp backing of voices and orch.*

* * *

BRUCE & TERRY . . . . . CUSTOM MACHINE
(Columbia) . . . . . Makaha At Midnight

Bruce & Terry's "Custom Machine" (Sea of Tunes†) is in the hot rod music groove and drives across a hot beat to keep the turntables moving at a payoff pace. "Makaha At Midnight" (Daywin†) dishes out some catchy instrumental sounds for fair spinning reaction.

* * *

SHEB WOOLEY . . . . . SHE CALLED ME BABY
(MGM) . . . . . Papa's Ole Fiddle

Sheb Wooley's "She Called Me Baby" (Central Songs†) has a catch-on blues-ballad feel done in a straight and appealing approach that will surprise and attract many disk fans. "Papa's Ole Fiddle" (Channel) tells a sentimental tale with a narrative approach that makes it a bit sticky.*

* * *

THE BOYFRIENDS . . . . . LET'S FALL IN LOVE
(Kapp) . . . . . Oh Lana

The Boyfriends' "Let's Fall In Love" (Bourne) gives another oldie the new teen tempo with some interesting harmony techniques that can push it to the top of the spinning heap. "Oh Lana" (Signet-Highwood†) spells out a romantic salute to still another girl's name with some sound gimmicks that the juves may find enjoyable.*

* * *

GERRY & PACEMAKERS . . YOU'LL NEVER WALK ALONE
(Laurie) . . . . . It's All Right

Gerry & The Pacemakers' "You'll Never Walk Alone" (Harms) is another teen-sounding interpretation of the Rodgers & Hammerstein oldie that the kids seem to find inspirational and they give it plenty of play, too. "It's All Right" features a neat swinging tempo to pull some coinbox action.*

* * *

FRANK FONTAINE . . . . . R.S.V.P.
(ABC-Paramount) . . . . . Alouette, Pretty Alouette

Frank Fontaine's "R.S.V.P." (Grayson) is full of the sentimental song mood he's popularized on Jackie Gleason's CBS-TV show and it ought to go far because of it. "Alouette, Pretty Alouette" (Pamco†) takes the familiar French oldie for a happy ride with new English lyrics sung in the style of one of his tv characterizations.*

* * *

BUDDY HOLLY . . . . . ROCK AROUND WITH OLLIE VEE
(Coral) . . . . . I'm Gonna Love You Too

Buddy Holly's "Rock Around With Ollie Vee" (Valley†) is a posthumous release but it has enough of a driving rocking beat to keep it alive on the turntables. "I'm Gonna Love You Too" (Nor-Va Jak†) sends out some more of his brisk rocking approach and makes the disk a good parlay for juke action. Gros.

*ASCAP. †BMI.

VARIETY SINGLE RECORD T.I.P.S.

(Tune Index of Performance & Sales)

This Wk.	Last Wk.	No. Wks. On Chart		Label
1	1	8	DOMINIQUE Singing Nun	Philips
2	2	6	THERE, I'VE SAID IT AGAIN Bobby Vinton	Epic
3	3	7	LOUIE LOUIE Kingsmen	Wand
4	4	5	POPSICLES & ICICLES Murmaids	Chatahoochee
5	5	7	YOU DON'T HAVE TO BE A BABY Caravelles	Smash
6	7	6	DRIP DROP Dion	Columbia
7	6	13	I'M LEAVING IT ALL UP TO YOU Dale & Grace	Michelle
8	9	8	SINCE I FELL FOR YOU Lenny Welch	Cadence
9	10	10	EVERYBODY Tommy Roe	ABC-Par
10	8	8	TALK BACK TREMBLING LIPS Johnny Tillotson	MGM
11	11	4	FORGET HIM Bobby Rydell	Cameo
12	13	5	MIDNIGHT MARY Joey Powers	Amy
13	12	8	LODDY LO Chubby Checker	Parkway
14	14	12	SHE'S A FOOL Leslie Gore	Mercury
15	20	5	QUICKSAND Martha & The Vandellas	Gordy
16	16	5	WIVES & LOVERS Jack Jones	Kapp
17	15	9	WONDERFUL SUMMER Robin Ward	Dot
18	17	4	KANSAS CITY Trini Lopez	Reprise
19	18	9	CAN I GET A WITNESS Marvin Gaye	Tamla
20	21	6	HAVE YOU HEARD Duprees	Coed
21	22	5	NITTY GRITTY Shirley Ellis	Congress
22	25	3	OUTER LIMITS Marketts	Warner Bros.
23	19	15	SUGAR SHACK James Gilmer	Dot
24	23	13	MARIA ELENA Los Indios Tabajaias	Victor
25	27	6	THE BOY NEXT DOOR Secrets	Philips
26	28	3	TURN AROUND Dick & Dee Dee	Warner Bros.
27	24	8	BE TRUE TO YOUR SCHOOL Beach Boys	Capitol
28	26	6	IN MY ROOM Beach Boys	Capitol
29	29	9	LITTLE RED ROOSTER Sam Cooke	Victor
30	—	1	HEY LITTLE COBRA Ripchords	Columbia
31	31	3	WHEN LOVE LIGHT SHINES Supremes	Motown
32	32	3	AS LONG AS HE KNOWS Marvelettes	Tamla
33	—	1	CHEERLEADER Paul Peterson	Colpix
34	33	2	STEWBALL Peter, Paul & Mary	Warner Bros.
35	34	5	BABY DON'T YOU WEEP Garnett Mimms	UA
36	36	3	SURFIN BIRD Trashmen	Garrett
37	35	3	PRETTY PAPER Roy Orbison	Monument
38	—	1	AS USUAL Brenda Lee	Decca
39	30	12	IT'S ALL RIGHT Impressions	ABC-Par
40	37	11	BOSSA NOVA BABY Elvis Presley	Victor
41	39	11	DOWN AT PAPA JOE'S Dixie Belles	S.S.7
42	38	10	WALKING THE DOG Rufus Thomas	Stax
43	43	4	DRAG CITY Jan & Dean	Liberty
44	41	9	LIVING A LIE Al Martino	Capitol
45	40	15	DEEP PURPLE April Stevens & Nino Tempo	Atco
46	45	4	YOU'RE GOOD FOR ME Solomon Burke	Atlantic
47	46	9	HEY LITTLE GIRL Major Lance	Okeh
48	42	9	24 HOURS FROM TULSA Gene Pitney	Musicor
49	47	11	500 MILES AWAY FROM HOME Bobby Bare	Victor
50	44	13	WASHINGTON SQUARE Village Stompers	Epic

Elvis' Gold Disk 'Christmas' LP

Elvis Presley has copped a gold record for his "Elvis' Christmas Album" on the RCA Victor label. The album, which was first released at Christmas in 1959, topped the $1,000,000 sales figure this Yule season.

It's the sixth Presley package to earn the RIAA (Record Industry Assn. of America) plaque signifying the $1,000,000-plus sales figure. The other LPs are "Elvis," "Elvis' Golden Records, Vol. 1," "G.I. Blues," "Girls! Girls! Girls!" and "Blue Hawaii."

"Blue Hawaii," Presley's all-time Victor bestseller, is close to the $3,000,000 sales figure; "G. I. Blues" is well past the $2,000,000 sales figure, and "Elvis' Golden Records, Vol. 1" is also nearing the $2,000,000 mark.

Presley's current Victor LP, "Fun In Acapulco" and "Elvis' Golden Records, Vol. 3," are now approaching the $1,000,000 sales mark.

Warner Bros. Label And Reprise Subsid Under 1 Burbank Roof Mid-Feb.

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Mike Maitland, prexy of Warner Bros. Records who recently returned from an extended European junket, revealed that Reprise Records, subsid acquired last summer, will abandon its Hollywood offices in mid-February and staff will then share same building with parent company on the Warner lot in Burbank.

Some 80% of the business Maitland conducted overseas was on behalf of Reprise. While abroad, he firmed deals with Pye for Reprise and Decca for Warner Bros. label for distributing in England. In Belgium and Holland, Artone has been set to handle Reprise, Jerry Oord for Warners.

In Paris Vogue will rep both Warners and Reprise for next three years. Still to be decided upon are distribs for the Scandinavian countries, Italy and Germany. "Thus," Maitland states, "we will have considerable enlarged our Burbank-based international department."

Although all things point to marriage of two diskeries, Maitland insists they'll retain separate identities. Reprise, having a more firmly rooted adult following than Warners label in Frank Sinatra, Sammy Davis Jr., Dean Martin and now the Trini Lopez group, will concentrate on appealing to teen market as well.

Only other big change Maitland has in mind for Reprise is reduction of its artists roster.

Ties on AFM

Continued from page 35

have any desire to foreclose national unions from giving more weight to their large locals on this question."

The dissent concluded: "The term 'majority vote of the delegates voting' is susceptible to a construction which would allow delegates' votes to be weighted in accordance with the strength of the different locals they represent. We ought to accept that construction and reverse the summary judgment herein."

In advising all U.S. Local officers of the modified ruling and its effect on local procedures, Herman Kenin, AFM president, said, in part: "I have instructed our attorneys immediately to seek redress in the Supreme Court against the injunctions remaining. The majority interpretation against weighted-voting by delegates is not alone the concern of the musicians' union, but of countless other labor organizations devoted to union democracy.

"Meanwhile, I have instructed our Local officers to comply with the act as presently interpreted. Very many of our Locals already have conformed to the voting procedures required by federal statute and we shall continue to devote our energies to carrying out the fiscal policies so responsibly ordered by our last convention—in spite of a few would-be 'union busters' who seek to harass the Federation."

VARIETY ALBUM BESTSELLERS

(A National Survey of Key Outlets)

This Wk.	Last Wk.	No. Wks. On Chart
1	1	8	THE SINGING NUN (Philips) Soeur Sourire (PCC 203)
2	2	12	PETER, PAUL & MARY (Warner Bros.) In the Wind (W 1507)
3	3	16	BARBRA STREISAND (Columbia) Volume II (CL 2054)
4	4	8	VILLAGE STOMPERS (Epic) Washington Square (LN 24078)
5	5	4	ANDY WILLIAMS (Columbia) Xmas Album (CL 2087)
6	9	13	FRANK SINATRA (Reprise) Sinatra's Sinatra (R 1010)
7	7	13	AL MARTINO (Capitol) Painted Tainted Rose (T 1975)
8	6	22	JOAN BAEZ (Vanguard) Vol. II (URS 9094)
9	8	7	LOS INDIOS TABAJAREZ (Victor) Maria Elena (LPM 2822)
10	13	10	SWINGLE SINGERS (Philips) Bach's Greatest Hits (PHM 200-097)
11	11	39	ANDY WILLIAMS (Columbia) Days of Wine & Roses (CL 2015)
12	10	51	PETER, PAUL & MARY (Warner Bros.) Moving (W 1473)
13	12	9	ROBERT GOULET (Columbia) In Person (CL 2088)
14	15	113	WEST SIDE STORY (Columbia) Soundtrack (OL 5670)
15	17	37	BARBRA STREISAND (Columbia) Barbra Streisand Album (CL 2007)
16	14	16	ELVIS PRESLEY (Victor) Golden Records, Vol. III (LPM 2765)
17	16	14	BOBBY VINTON (Epic) Blue Velvet (LN 24068)
18	18	84	PETER, PAUL & MARY (Warner Bros.) Peter, Paul & Mary (W 1449)
19	21	4	ELVIS PRESLEY (Victor) Fun in Acapulco (LSP 2756)
20	19	21	TRINI LOPEZ (Reprise) Trini Lopez at PJ'S (6093)
21	20	20	NEW CHRISTY MINSTRELS (Columbia) Ramblin' (CL 2055)
22	23	4	SMOTHERS BROS. (Mercury) Curb Your Tongue, Knave (MG 20862)
23	28	36	BYE BYE BIRDIE (Victor) Soundtrack (LOC 1081)
24	22	8	JOHN GARY (Victor) Catch a Rising Star (LPM 2745)
25	24	16	RAY CHARLES (ABC-Par) Recipe for a Soul (465)
26	27	43	JOAN BAEZ (Vanguard) Baez in Concert (VRS 9112)
27	25	6	BEACH BOYS (Capitol) Little Deuce Coupe (T 1998)
28	32	3	HENRY MANCINI (Victor) Charade (LPM 2755)
29	26	40	ROY ORBISON (Monument) Greatest Hits (MLP 8000)
30	29	12	BEACH BOYS (Capitol) Surfer Girl (T 1981)
31	—	1	THE WEEK THAT WAS (Decca) Original Sound Track (DL 9116)
32	30	40	HOW THE WEST WAS WON (MGM) Soundtrack (1E5)
33	35	8	PERCY FAITH (Columbia) Shangri-La (CL 2024)
34	37	2	ERNIE HECKSCHER (Columbia) That S. F. Beat (CL 2085)
35	31	21	ALLAN SHERMAN (Warner Bros.) My Son the Nut (WB 1501)
36	33	8	HERE'S LOVE (Columbia) Original Cast (KOL 6000)
37	39	15	JOAN BAEZ (Vanguard) Vol. I (URS 9078)
38	34	9	AL HIRT (Victor) Honey in the Horn (LPM 2733)
39	40	18	MONDO CANE (United Artists) Soundtrack (UAL 4105)
40	36	31	SMOTHERS BROS. (Mercury) Think Ethnic (MG 30777)
41	41	14	BOB DYLAN (Columbia) Freewheelin (CL 1986)
42	38	19	NANCY WILSON (Capitol) Hollywood My Way (T 1934)
43	45	3	JIMMY SMITH (Verve) Any Number Can Win (V 8552)
44	—	1	MARTY ROBBINS (Columbia) Return of the Gunfighter (CL 2072)
45	42	27	JAMES BROWN (King) James Brown Show (826)
46	43	10	CHAD MITCHELL TRIO (Mercury) Singing Our Minds (MG 20838)
47	47	44	LAWRENCE OF ARABIA (Colpix) Soundtrack (CP 514)
48	44	6	JIMMY GILMER (Dot) Sugar Shack (LP 3545)
49	46	17	SURFARIS (Dot) Wipe Out (DLP 3535)
50	48	4	TRINI LOPEZ (Reprise) More at P.J.'s (6103)

Victor Sets Snow to New Deal; MGM Gets Hank Williams Jr.; Others

Hank Snow has been signed to a new longterm deal by RCA Victor. Snow first joined Victor in Canada in 1937. In the late 1940s, Snow transferred his recording activities to the U. S. where he recorded under supervision of Steve Sholes.

In 1957, Snow's recording sessions were taken over by Chet Atkins, who has produced every Snow record to date. Nashville will remain the base of their recording activities.

MGM: Hank Williams Jr.

Hank Williams Jr. is following in his late father's footsteps. The young singer has been tagged to a disk deal by MGM Records, the label on which his father recorded up until the time of his death on New Year's Day 1953.

William Jr., who is 14 years old, will bow under the MGM banner later this month with "Long Gone Lonesome Blues," which he sang on Ed Sullivan's CBS-TV show Sunday (29). His father also recorded the tune. He's being managed by his mother, Aubrey Williams.

United Artists: Danny Meehan

Danny Meehan, one of the leading players in the upcoming Broadway tuner, "Funny Girl," has joined the United Artists roster.

Meehan's initial single effort for UA will be released shortly, followed by an album. Jack Gold will produce Meehan's disks. The original Broadway cast album of "Funny Girl," however, will be released by Capitol Records.

Epic: Dave Clark Five

Epic Records has acquired the Dave Clark Five, a new British vocal-instrumental group. In addition, EMI (Electrical & Music Industries) has given Epic the U.S. distribution rights to "Glad All Over," the group's current hit single in Britain. The tune features the new "Mersey Sound With The Liverpool Beat," which is the new musical fad in England.

With the acquisition of the Dave Clark Five, Epic currently represents three EMI artists in the U.S. The other two are Cliff Richard, from England, and Rolf Farris from Australia.

Polydor: Bert Kaempfert

Bert Kaempfert, German orch leader, has signed a longterm deal with the Polydor diskery in Hamburg covering the whole world with the exception of U. S. and Canada. Kaempfert is represented in North America by Decca.

Kaempfert will record in Hamburg and deliver the master tapes simultaneously to Polydor and Decca. He will make at least two LPs and two singles each year which both Decca and Polydor will release on the same schedule.

Columbia: Judy Roderick

Judy Roderick, 20-year old blues-folk singer, has been added to the Columbia roster.

Her first LP for Columbia is being directed by Bobby Scott, pop artists & repertoire producer. It will be released in February.

Philips: Serendipity Singers

The Serendipity Singers, a folk-pop group of seven young men and two girls, has been signed by Philips Records.

The unit got together at the U. of Colorado and scored with guest shots on ABC-TV's "Hootenanny."

Four Star: Gene Barry

Gene Barry, star of Four Star's "Burke's Law" series on ABC-TV, has signed a disk pact with Four Star Records.

Barry's initial assignment for the diskery will be to make an album.

Fritz Mahler Out As Conductor Of Hartford Symph

Hartford, Dec. 30.

Two-year controversy between conductor Fritz Mahler and the Hartford Symphony's board of directors has ended with his replacement. Taking over the batoner reins will be Arthur Winograd, conductor of the Birmingham, Ala., Symphony.

Winograd moves in when Mahler's contract expires in May. Mahler led the local symph for 11 seasons. After leaving Hartford, he plans a concert tour to guest conduct major symphony orchs in Europe, Japan and South America.

Winograd is a cellist and former conductor of the classical division of MGM Records. He formerly served on the faculty of the Julliard School of Music. He will work under a two-year contract as conductor and musical director of the symphony, starting in September.

W. German TV Maker Into LP Disk Production

Villingen, Dec. 30.

Saba Radio & Television Manufacturers is going into the record business in West Germany. The firm, called Saba Black Forest Building Organization, which has been turning out television and radio sets and record players, will extend its production to LPs as well.

Saba Radio of Switzerland, a branch of Saba International, is taking over the Kristall Record factory of Cologne, plus acquiring two-thirds of Carl Lindstroem Corp. of Cologne and one-third of Electrola Corp. of Cologne.

State Dept.

Continued from page 35

seas tour of country-western artists.

The OCP director stated that whomever it was that the CMA reps met with in the State Dept., it was not with him. And he made it clear that he would be glad to listen to their proposal and offer it to the panel of music experts who recommend the performing groups which are selected to tour abroad each year under the State Dept. aegis.

Wolfe, in his letter, was not altogether encouraging, however. He wrote, "In general, folk music presents some special difficulties in terms of fitting it into the cultural presentations program.

"Surveys of our field posts in foreign countries bring out the problems of language and song content in reaching or appealing to audiences in their areas. In many instances, even those who know English do not have the background to understand western dialect or stories in song."

Cleve. Symph

Continued from page 35

1961, when the committee appointed by members of the ensemble brought an action against Local 4 officers. They were charged with failing to represent the concert group's musicians fairly.

Longhaired orchestra men lost this case and also a second suit. A third complaint was then filed by committee seeking to prevent the union from punishing 16 of their members who were accused of leading the rebellion.

Raffaelli said he was extremely optimistic that the union's charges against the symphony men and the third lawsuit would be dropped. He predicted the adopted resolution will "provide a different and improved relationship between Local 4 and the concert orchestra, in which George Szell is conductor.

Orchestra's contract with the Musical Art's Assn. will expire next September, and negotiations for a new one will start after the first of the year. Duprez said Local 4 is seeking an increase in minimum wage of $175 per week during the 32-week winter season. It will also seek an improvement in the $105-a-week minimum pay scale for the summer season.

Big Biz Yens Premiums

Continued from page 35

that the cost is covered by the purchaser. ("As with all special premium album," Arnold notes, "the large initial order by the sponsoring manufacturer permits special arrangements with the programming artist or units.

Additionally, the sponsor does not count cost of advertising, point sale display and other promotional materials in the purchasing price. Result: The combination of high volume and small per unit costs enables sponsors to provide a premium whose retail value is three or more times the price charge, attract customers and yet not have to bear the full expense.")

2) Another indication of the popularity of premium records is a pair of albums conceived for the American Tobacco Co. The campaign for Lucky Strike cigs was, like many other premium records, tied with another major promotional effort from the manufacturer.

Since Lucky's theme was "Remember How Great Cigarettes Used To Taste . . . Luckies Still Do," Arnold conceived the idea of a recording called "Remember How Great." It featured the great ensembles of the Big Band era. The album was offered in return for 10 Lucky Strike wrappers and $1.

3) Examples of other phonograph records specially created by industrial companies run a wide range. In the automotive field, Firestone Tire & Rubber, a competitor of Goodyear, has for the last three years also sponsored Christmas LP albums. Currently A.C. Sparkplugs is advertising and promoting a special LP recording of the Osmond Bros., "We Sing You A Merry Christmas." This was developed by MGM Records as a tiein with the maker's sponsorship of the ABC-TV show, "The Travels of Jamie McPheeters."

4) Tieins with tv shows have been the basis for many special recordings. Capitol Records created a special Dinah Shore album linked with her appearnaces for Chevrolet, resulting in sales exceding 1,000,000. MGM created a special "Wizard of Oz" album based on music from its film — and issued for Procter & Gamble. Sales exceeded 100,000 copies. Decca Records produced "Edie Adams Sings" tied in with the tv show sponsored by Muriel Cigars. "Perry At His Best" was developed by RCA Victor as a tiein with the sponsorship of Como's tv show for Kraft.

5) Other food users include Dole Pineapple which sponsored "Music For The Dancing Years," a recording of top bands; "Taken From The Top," an album of current hits created for Birdseye Foods Division of General Foods. Buitoni Foods had Decca produce "Italian Sing-A-Long" and an album of Jewish folk songs. Last year Royal Crown Cola tied in with the holiday theme with an album of Christmas carols while Lipton Soup sponsored a Mary Martin "Peter Pan" album linked with the sponsorship of the Christmas showing of the tv version.

6) A number of makers have had special records created for sale only in retail stores — with sales tied in with their products. These include "Jazz From Harry James" for Kleenex; a children's song album for Poly-Bi-Sol, a children's vitamin made by Mead Johnson, and a Bobby Darin album for Scripto Pens, tied in with merchandise of which over 1,000,000 were sold.

7) In almost all of these, Arnold points out, the music comes from the recording company's existing library. More unusual is to have specifically recorded music as was done for the Goodyear album this year. The disk was produced by Columbia Records in association with Arnold & Norfolk Music. The disk features Julie Andrews, Robert Goulet, Isaac Stern, Leonard Bernstein and Eugene Ormandy conducting orchs, as well as the Norman Luboff. and Mormon Tabernacle Choirs.

The Goodyear executives requested Young & Rubicam, their ad agency, to prepare an extensive campaign. But the response was far greater than anticipated and the advertising had to be cancelled a full month before Christmas since there were no records left. The second year's pressing of nearly twice as many albums repeated the earlier success.

The HIT! OF THE WEEK

GINNY ARNELL

Sings

DUMB HEAD

K-13177

M-G-M Records

LINDA SCOTT

Sings

WHO'S BEEN SLEEPING IN MY BED

on CONGRESS RECORDS

Inspired by the Paramount Picture "WHO'S BEEN SLEEPING IN MY BED"

FAMOUS MUSIC CORPORATION

ELIGIBILITY TO ASCAP MEMBERSHIP

Applicants for membership in the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers who meet the following requirements will be accepted as members:

WRITERS: Any composer or author of a copyrighted musical composition who shall have had at least one work of his composition or writing regularly published;
PUBLISHERS: Any person, firm, corporation or partnership actively engaged in the music publishing business whose musical publications have been used or distributed on a commercial scale for at least one year, and who assumes the financial risk involved in the normal publication of musical works.

Stanley Adams
President

AMERICAN SOCIETY OF COMPOSERS, AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS

575 Madison Avenue, New York 22, N. Y.

The New Lost City Ramblers

"...among the finest contemporary folk performers . . . alive, vigorous and wholly convincing." — Downbeat

FA2396 New Lost City Ramblers, v. 1
FA2397 New Lost City Ramblers, v. 2
FA2398 New Lost City Ramblers, v. 3
FA2399 New Lost City Ramblers, v. 4
FH5263 Moonshine & Prohibition Songs
FH5264 Songs from the Depression

FOLKWAYS RECORDS

121 West 47th St., New York, N. Y.

MMMMM

WINTER FAVORITES—

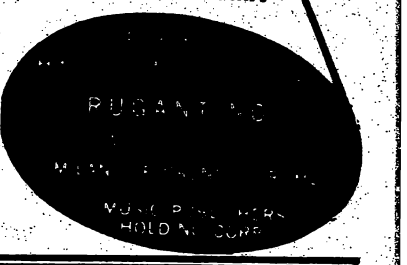
SCARLET RIBBONS

LITTLE DRUMMER BOY

SLEIGH RIDE

MILLS MUSIC, INC.
New York City

Announcing
Two Great Songs...
CIUMACHELLA &
THE LIGHTS OF ROMA



HAPPY NEW YEAR TO ALL

ASSOCIATED BOOKING CORPORATION

JOE GLASER, President

50 WEST 57 STREET, NEW YORK 19 JUdson 2-7700

CHICAGO • MIAMI • BEVERLY HILLS • LAS VEGAS • DALLAS • LONDON

Sad Saga of 34 Bunnies In a New Detroit Playboy Bunny Hutch

By FRED TEW

Detroit, Dec. 30.

Once upon a time, 34 beautiful bunnies went to live in a big city and right away got into trouble. Some people tried to shoo them away because their fur was said to be too short and because they lived only on lettuce tips. Then, some other people tried to stop Father Bunny from getting a license for the nice warren he had bought for his 34 beautiful bunnies to play in.

The bunnies were very sad and big tears rolled down their pretty cheeks. When some kind people saw the bunnies crying they said loud and clear so everybody could hear that the bunnies' fur was not too short. They said the bunnies looked exactly like bunnies are supposed to look. These kind people also said that if the bunnies wanted only lettuce tips, that was all right, too. Furthermore, these kind people said officials had no right to refuse to license the bunnies' nice warm warren which was called the Playboy Club of Detroit. So, pretty soon almost everyone said the kind people were right and it looked as if everything would be all right and the bunnies would live happily ever after, after all.

But, when the bunnies, frightened by the strange roaring and screeching sounds of a big city, arrived at their nice new, licensed warren, they coudn't get in.

It was cold outside the warren and little snowflakes were coming down and tickling their long ears. The bunnies shivered because, while their fur really wasn't too short, it wasn't really long, either. The bunnies were very sad because they knew it was nice and warm in the warren. Besides, they knew the warren had a good supply of nice crispy green lettuce tips with all the leaves nicely numbered so a bunny could count her calories and not get so fat that the fur would seem shorter than it actually was. The lettuce was pretty, too. There were pictures on the lettuce and nice little signs that looked like this $.

Un-angelic Picket

Well, there were the bunnies standing in the cold outside the nice warm warren filled with all that pretty green lettuce. They couldn't get in because pickets surrounded the warren. There were signs on the pickets. The signs said: "Local 705, Hotel & Restaurant Employees & Bartenders Union (AFL-CIO)." One of the pickets even looked like an angel but the sign said: "I'm No Angel but I Protest Women being called Bunnies." It was a curious sign all right because the Angel Picket really didn't shout like you would expect an Angel Picket to shout. The shouting was even curiouser because whoever heard of an angel shouting?

It certainly looked bad for the bunnies and their kind friends with lettuce tips. But, then, some men in blue coats with badges pinned on them came and moved the pickets a little this way and a little that way. Quickly, the 34 beautiful

(Continued on page 40)

Kahala Hilton's Informal Bow Registers 6 Guests

Honolulu, Dec. 30.

Although most major hotels here are at absolute capaciy and near-capacity through the holidays, the new Kahala Hilton opened with a grand (?) total of six guests.

First resort hotel to be built on the "far" side of Diamond Head, beyond Waikiki, won't have its formal opening until Jan. 22.

Hotel was opened without fanfare and little publiciy. Initial guest roster included baseball's Joe DiMaggio and Willard Keith, a Los Angeles director of the Hilton

W. German Cafes Would Hang Crepe On Mourning Days

Frankfurt, Dec. 30.

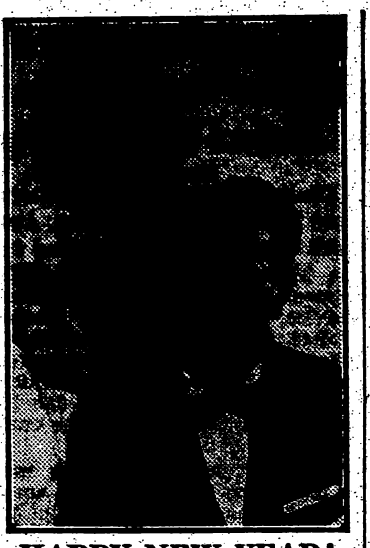
An interesting test case is being brought in a West German court to determine whether the many mourning days—on which dancing and other forms of entertainment are often banned—are legal.

Problem resulted here in November and December that had a disastrous effect on many German dance halls, restaurants, pubs and clubs. An official five days' mourning for the death of President Kennedy was followed by five days' mourning for the death of former German President Theodor Heuss.

In addition the month of November is a very difficult one for the German entertainment business with five folks' mourning days—Death Sunday, People's Mourning Day, All Soul's Day, All Holy Day, and Penitence and Prayer Day. When these days fell on Sunday, all public entertainment had to cease at midnight on Saturday, and often Saturday dances were cancelled.

Now, the Bavarian Hotel & Restaurant Assn. is bringing a test case to determine whether all these mourning days are legal. A spokesman pointed out that during the Kennedy mourning period

(Continued on page 40)



HAPPY NEW YEAR!

NELSON EDDY and GALE SHERWOOD say a 1964 Hello, before starting this year's first tour—Boston, Washington, Montreal, Toronto and Columbus. One more Australian review: "Since the last Eddy-Sherwood, Sydney season, we have not seen a better partnership at work. Neither has Chequers done such business." — Sydney Telegraph.

A.P.A., Inc., Handles

George Moro To Produce at Copa

Las Vegas, Dec. 30.

George Moro, of the Moro-Landis Dancers, is currently negotiating to produce the shows at the Copacabana, N. Y., it was learned here. Moro, who is in charge of production at the Sahara Hotel as well as Harrah's, Lake Tahoe, and the Latin Casino, Cherry Hill, N. J., will provide both the costuming and choreography. The entire production is to remain in charge of Doug Coudy, the current choreographer and iongtime producer at the Jules Podell cafe.

The deal being worked out would give the Copacabana first choice in costuming and routines. Loyouts designed for New York would have to be entirely new and not exhibited in any other spot where Moro-Landis produces. The Copa would also get more frequent changes of production under the new deal. Spot now changes its basic revue twice or three times annually; new names come in for two-to-four-week semesters.

Merchandising Shows' Act Potential Could Top Old Keith Chain: Jarwood

Once retailers and manufactures realize the efficacy of direct selling with the help of entertainers, a new show biz circuit will emerge that will provide acts with more employment than the Keith Albee chain ever did, according to Arthur Jarwood, clothing firm exec. He's now conferring with talent agencies on setting up a series of merchandising shows in various department stores.

Jarwood has shows mapped for outlets of the Gimbel chain in several cities, as well as other department stores. Having done well with one series already played, he hopes to do a series of shows several times a year in conjunction with cooperating retail outlets.

Thus far, the Jarwood shows on behalf of Raleigh clothes have been done with non-name talent. However, he envisions the time when he will be using top acts in these store engagements. Jarwood used to run the Riobamba and Famous Door niteries in New York, both of which were major operations in their day.

The use of talent is important, he said, citing figures in which fashion shows were given by firms which employed models only and not talent. He added that in these instances not only was there little traffic brought into the store despite newspaper ads and promotion but the resultant sales were virtually nil.

Jarwood asserted that if manufacturers took the cost of one large ad in a national magazine and diverted it to direct selling with shows, a new market for talent would open immediately. He pointed out that the ads are necessary to establish a national image. However, their effectiveness can be hightened by the direct pitches made through shows.

In his department store forays, Jarwood found that direct sales more than paid for promotion and show costs. In addition, the store itself benefited because of impulse buying resulting from the additional traffic.

He also pointed out that in most cases the deal is such that neither the shows nor promotion costs the store anything. Most of these costs are borne by the exhibitor. However, the store benefits greatly.

Jarwood noted that because of differences in scales of Actors Equity and the American Guild of Variety Artists he has been careful not to create revue type shows which would force the production into the more expensive Equity jurisdiction. Acts, he pointed out, particularly comedians, can still throw in lines about the product without creating special script situations.

Minn. Display at N.Y. Fair Now 'Financially Sound'

Minneapolis, Dec. 30.

With the addition of General Mills and Northwest Airlines, the Minnesota exhibit at the upcoming New York World's Fair finally is becoming "financially sound," it was disclosed last week. There had been difficulty in lining up enough exhibitors.

The exhibit's construction is moving acording to schedule. An addition to this "Minnesota polyhedron," it's said, will be a sunken outside sandwich and soft-drink area to be called "the Twins-Viking Dugout."

New Ops Acquire Vegas Tallyho In $30,000,000 Pkg.

Las Vegas, Dec. 30.

The Tallyho Hotel, newest on the Strip, has been taken over by new operators on a $30,000,000 package covering a 25-year lease. The new partnership of Edward Nealis and Charles Luftig signed the longterm lease with Kings Crown Tallyho Inn Inc., the Indiana corporation which purchased the hotel from New York industrialist Ed Lowe on Nov. 2. Lowe tried to operate the Tallyho sans casino, but gave it up as a bad experiment.

Neal Barry and Mel Walter will be associated with Nealis and Luftig in exec capacities in the new venture.

Immediate construction will begin on a casino "comparable in size and decor to anything in Las Vegas," according to J. A. Richmond of Beverly Hills, who has been retained as designer and interior decorator.

Also planned for a July 1 opening is a theatre-restaurant seating 750 persons, a lounge seating 350, an exclusive restaurant with 100-plus capacity, and a convention hall with 1,000 capacity. A 15-story high rise with 500 additional rooms is also in the blueprint stage.

Nick Podar has been named op-

(Continued on page 40)

OUT NEXT WEEK!

The

58th Anniversary Number

Of

VARIETY

Regina Fair Sez It Will Tune Out AFM Demands For More Tooters in '64

Regina, Sask., Dec. 30.

The Regina Exhibition Assn. wants the American Federation of Musicians to reduce the number of tooters usually required for the grandstand show orchestra.

Union demands will be bucked in 1964, even if the matter has to go to court, said T. H. McLeod, manager. He wants the band cut from 25 to 15, for a saving of about $800.

"In the past we have been forced to use more musicians than required, simply because the union demanded it," he said. "The size of the orchestra should be left up to the leader, rather than the union."

Other fairs in Western Canada are also expected to take issue with the AFM's standby demands.

At the recent convention of the Canadian Assn. of Exhibitions in Toronto, Godfrey P. Schmidt, a New York lawyer, was quoted as saying: "The American Federation of Musicians is bleeding Canadian fairs and pricing them out of the market."

69-Year-Old Woman Wins $54,300 Damages in Suit Filed Vs. Murray Studio

Des Moines, Dec. 30.

Polk County District Court here awarded Mrs. Agnes Syester, 69, a widow $54,300 damages against operators of the Arthur Murray Dance Studio. Of the amount awarded, $40,000 was punitive damages and $14,300 represented moneys held to have been overpaid on dancing lessons.

Mrs. Syester had sued the studio operators for $83,084.30, including $60,000 punitive damages, on allegation she was induced through fraud, deceit and misrepresentation to enroll in 4,057 hours of dance courses between Sept. 1954 and March 1960.

The plaintiff's attorney said that having "defrauded" the widow of $29,000 other fraud was devised to keep the money that had been taken from her. He was referring to another lawsuit brought by Mrs. Syester against the same studio in 1961 that was settled when the widow was refunded $6,090 and after that she resumed taking lessons.

Defendants are Nicholas P. Theiss, studio manager here, his two brothers, George B. and Forest L., also James R. and Mary L. Banta of Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., and all said to have interests in other

(Continued on page 40)

Honolulu May Become 150G Angel For Show Biz Events to Bow Its New Aud

Honolulu, Dec. 30.

City councilmen may yet set the city up as a $150,000 angel for a series of the artical and sports attractions to formally open the new municipal auditorium complex.

The "invitation" comes from a citizens' committee organized by Mayor Neal Blaisdell to mastermind plans for a 16-day premiere celebration next September.

But even that target date is dubious in view of City Council Chairman Masato Doi's pointed reminder that September will come at the height of the 1964 election campaign. "It (the dedication) might better be held after the election," said Doi, who just happens to be the incumbent mayor's probable rival in the next election.

Doi also said the "angel pitch "needs a lot of refinement" and warned that the council isn't about to ante up $150,000 "without having a lot more details on what the money will be used for."

Hugh O'Reilly, citizens' committee chairman, promised that the entertainment lineup would be "big and elaborate." He also opined that it would "be a program unique in the history of Honolulu, in both size and scope."

Names of just about every top vaude and tv star have been mentioned unofficially as possible bookings. It's figured—hopefully or otherwise—that boxoffice revenue, plus concession income, would get the city off the hook Financially. (Local show biz pros, however, recall that a star-studded special show in 1950 ended up $32,000 in the red—and it was a "benefit" show at that. And a 1961 circus venture dropped $44,000.)

Originally projected as a $3,000,000 investment, the auditorium complex finally is coming in at a cost pegged at between $8,000,000 and $10,000,000. There's a 2,200-seat theatre, an arena that can seat up to 9,000, and an exposition hall between. There's also a parking area that can handle 1,200 autos.

The drive for a modern municipal auditorium and or convention centre dates back almost 15 years. It's been marked with off-and-on squabbles and problems ever since, most notably regarding financing, choice of site, size and type of facilities and, most recently, even a name.

Premiere or not, initial bookings for the new arena and exposition hall are shaping up for April, with concert and theatre bookings to follow late in June. A road company version of "Camelot" reportedly will be one of the summer bookings. Convention bookings, which potentially may spell the difference between profit or deficit, to date are sparse.

Byron Trimble has the $18,000 a year managerial job.

Jersey Resort Mayor's Threat to Toss Out Rock Puts Ops in Irate Rolls

Atlantic City, Dec. 30.

Suburban Somers Point's new mayor Walter Stretch, who takes office New Year's Day, is set to curb seasonal rough stuff in the town's rock 'n' roll alley. That's the street where a half-dozen niteries do a booming summer biz catering to youths by booking bands and singers in the rock idiom.

The thousands of teenagers who flock to the Point during the 10-week season make the nitery ops happy but it's a long headache for municipal authorities. For each week up to 50 teeners face court charges ranging from fraudulent use of identification cards to brawling. No drinks are sold to persons under 21 in New Jersey.

Mayor-elect Stretch said that young people who misbehave have given the town a bad name. He suggested an end to rock 'n' roll and added that he wanted more formal attire in the clubs as a means of stamping out rowdyism.

Bistro operators are grim over the reform threat. Anthony Marotta, owner of the Tony Mart Cafe which the kids call "The Pit," "Twist Boulevard" and the "Princeton Walk," is prepared to fight.

On a summer night as many as 1,000 youths, most of them students, flock into Mart's. Some 20 bartenders serve drinks at seven bars. There's a $1 admission tap and Mart says his talent budget runs up to $5,000 or more per week.

Stretch said he'll call a meeting of tavern ops after he takes office and ask 'em to toss out rock 'n' roll. "This," he said, "will keep under-aged folk out of the bars."

For Mart, this is for the birds. "The only thing that draws them is rock 'n' roll," he said. "We have tried everything through the years. I have tried to wean them away from rock 'n' roll and the Twist, and such, and they say, 'what are you trying to do?' If we don't give them what they want they will go to some other spot what has their kind of music."

Tallyho, Vegas

Continued from page 39

erations advisor for the new setup.

Nealis is the former owner-operator of the Clover Club on the Sunset Strip, which he had for eight years, opening in the '30s. He produced "Johnny O'Clock" at Columbia which starred Dick Powell, and coauthored such films as "Mr. Lucky," "Boots Malone" and "Salty O'Rourke."

Luftig is the former personal manager of Red Skelton, and was producer of the Skelton vidshows. Barry was general manager of Louis Prima Enterprises. Walter is a former nitery owner.

W. German Cafes

Continued from page 39

in Germany, dances were held in the U.S. and business went on as usual in many nightclubs there. In Germany, the stores did not have to close, and one opera production in which about $250,000 was invested was given permission to open so that the city would not sustain losses.

Nightclubs, theatres and restaurants were hard hit, however. This is illegal restraint of trade, the hotel and restaurant association maintains.

During the November and December mourning periods, about 200,000 of the workers in these trades lost as much as a third of their income, it's claimed.

Vice Squad, Revenooers Put Two-Way Stretch On Hartford Citadel of Strip

Hartford, Dec. 30.

Charles Steak House here, which long has featured strippers, last week was simultaneously raided by the vice squad and had its till tapped by the Internal Revenue Service. Police arrested owner Walter Andrews and dancer Angel Dior on charges of indecent or immoral exhibitions. The IRS, which claimed nearly $4,000 was due it, took almost $1,700 out of the cash register.

Night of the double pinch was to have been the start of an amateur stripper policy. Complaint to gendarmes resulted in arrest of a pair of tyros, although only one amateur appeared on the boards. She stripped to a bathing suit.

Both wouldbe strippers pleaded no contest to charges in Hartford Circuit Court and were fined $50 each by Judge Douglas B. Wright. It's understood that both local papers, Hartford Courant and Hartford Times, refused further ads to plug the amateur strippers after complaints were received on the initial ad copy.

AGVA, Equity In Jurisdiction Tiff

Two developments last week indicate a growing tension between the American Guild of Variety Artists and Actors Equity Assn. The variety union's executive board has taken steps to abrogate its agreement with Equity on industrial shows and it's protesting its slice of shows at the N.Y. World's Fair.

As a result of the latter kick, a meeting is scheduled for Jan. 18 between both unions and World's Fair labor relations execs on status of shows to be produced for the Flushing Meadows extravaganza. Meet, to be held at the Commodore Hotel, will also be attended by other performer unions in an attempt to iron out all beefs likely to come up as a result of jurisdiction problems. The situation in this respect stems from Equity's claim to the Fair show "To Broadway with Love" to be produced for the Texas Pavilion. AGVA is protesting.

Although an agreement has been signed with Equity on industrial shows, the new AGVA administration is unhappy with the pact and has told Equity that it's stepping out. The Associated Actors and Artistes of America, the parent of the performer unions, presumably will step into the squabble.

At AGVA's recent executive meeting a resolution was passed indicating the union's dissatisfaction with the agreement signed by a previous administration in this field. The deal was made by Bobby Faye, who was recently ousted as AGVA national administrative secretary.

AGVA protested that under the formula agreed to, virtually every industrial show by a major advertiser went to Equity. The interim committee now governing AGVA also charged that under present Equity terms, only bluechip advertisers could afford these displays.

There was, however, some dissension at AGVA on this score. There were opinions expressed that the union should hike its scale in this field since the pay-scale was devised sometime ago and living costs have gone up.

Greco's 'Hootenanny'

Dallas, Dec. 30.

Jose Greco and his Spanish dancers did some rush, post-Christmas shopping here Thursday (26) and opened on schedule that night in the Statler-Hilton's Empire Room.

In appearance, but not execution, the show resembled a hootenanny. Greco performed in frontier pants and cowboy shirt, with others in the 21-member troupe decked in calico and jeans.

The company's lavish costumes were delayed en route from San Juan, Puerto Rico, and didn't arrive until Friday (27) before showtime.

Sad Saga of Bunnies

Continued from page 39

bunnies wiggled through the open spaces between the pickets and, their little white tails twitching, disappeared into their warren.

Soon, squeals of joy could be heard as the bunnies found some kind friends inside who had come to warm their warren. These kind friends were known as freeloaders. These particular freeloaders were picked because after they have loaded up on free food and something called "free booze," whatever that is, why they just have to go and tell everybody how nice and cozy the warren is and how beautiful the 34 bunnies are. They are counted on to tell everybody, except each other, of course, because they're freeloaders, to visit the warren and bring the bunnies lots of lettuce.

Hefner's Partners

Three Father Bunnies, Eugene A. Howard and Richard Underwood, of Chicago, and Robert Schiffer, of Detroit, gave some lettuce to Big Daddy Bunny Hugh Hefner who, then, let them build the new $600,000 warren. Anyway, the freeloaders liked the Living Room and the Play Room and the Playmate Bar and something called the Penthouse. But, most of all the freeloaders liked "free booze" and they told one another how nice it would be the next night when some kind people, who were not freeloaders, would come to see the bunnies in their new warren and bring with them 25 leaves of lettuce, each, which the bunnies, in turn, would give to something called the Muscular Dystrophy Assn., whatever that is. You see, freeloaders like to practice telling other freeloaders what they are going to tell everybody.

When the freeloaders came out of the warren, after bidding the 34 beautiful bunnies goodnight by kissing them and patting them and pinching them, some of the happy freeloaders found their machines had been hurt. The machines, which the freeloaders use to carry them to places where they can tell everybody everything, have something called tires which usually are nice and round—but were not—and canvas tops which usually do not have holes in them—but did.

Punctured Tires—and Patrons

So, instead of telling everybody about how nice the bunnies' new warren was, they told everybody about an Angel Picket which didn't behave like an angel at all, and they told about holes in tires and tops. Also, they told how a picket was arrested for something called "assault and battery" on a "Police Sgt."

In addition, they told about a lady who bosses the pickets who had complained loudly about the bunnies' short fur and said it was "indecent," whatever that means. This same boss lady picket also had complained about the fact that the bunnies get only lettuce tips instead of something she called a "salary," although she may have intended to say lettuce salad. This boss lady picket, the freeloaders told everyone, has offered 1000 leaves of lettuce for "information leading to the arrest and conviction of any person responsible for the vandalism."

Then, the next night, the freeloaders started telling everybody about what happened to kind people, dressed in something called fish and soup, with 25 leaves of lettuce sticking out of their pockets so the bunnies could give the lettuce to the Muscular Dystrophy Assn. There was more trouble, that's what there was.

Somebody called the Fire Marshal went to the warren and closed the door right in the face of those people in fish and soup. He said only 315 of them could go into the warren at one time. So, there were about 200 kind people standing in line outside the warren waiting to give their 25 leaves of lettuce to the bunnies. They could only go into the warren if someone came out, which didn't happen too often. So, many of the kind people had to go home without seeing the bunnies.

The 34 beautiful bunnies in their nice new warren are wondering if the freeloaders will remember them and start telling everyone to bring them lots of lettuce they can keep so they can live happily ever after the big trouble about short fur, lettuce tips, licenses, vandalism and a cross old Fire Marshal.

Yank Singers

Continued from page 1

other Yank tenor domiciled at Stuttgart, was once seen as Radames.

In addition, the Stadttheatre's roster of singers for the 1963-'64 season includes, for regular and/or guests spots, not less than eight Americans: Joan Carroll, Lucille Kailer, Dorothy Krebill, Sandra Warfield, Albert Da Costa, Andrew Foldi, Glade Peterson and Robert Thomas. Add to this stage director Lotfi Mansouri and solo dancers Virginia Zango and Jerry Burr—and you might end up with, proportionally, more Yanks working at Zurich or other European operas than possibly at some of the big houses in the homeland!

Dance Studios

Continued from page 1

Arthur Murray studios in Cedar Iowa, Omaha and Lincoln, Neb. and other cities not named.

Name-Dropping Studio

Minneapolis, Dec. 30.

Palaver dished out via tape recording by two now defunct Twin Cities dance studios quoted Sir Isaac Newton, Marcus Aurelius, Disraeli, Norman Vincent Peale and Ralph Waldo Emerson, along with some excerpts from St. Mark in the New Testament.

Testifying for the Federal prosecution, a former dance instructor and salesman for the studios, that are alleged to have conducted a "racket," identified the tape as one which he heard played for studio sales trainees. He also testified that, after being employed by the studios, he was given only 30 minutes of waltz, rhumba and fox-trot instruction before being "qualified" as a teacher of those dances.

The Government charges that the studios mulcted unmarried women and widows between the ages of 30 and 75 of sums ranging up to $6,950 each for "lifetime" dancing lessons.

One of the defendants, the studios' principal owner, is a Long Island, N.Y., resident. In its fifth week, the trial has been adjourned for two weeks because of the holidays.

MARTIN
Coral Recording Artist Wishes You All a Very HAPPY NEW YEAR
Contact: MIRIAM LOVE
Charles V. Ryan Agency
35 W. 53rd St., New York CI 5-2225

"THE COMEDIAN"
The Only Real Monthly
PROFESSIONAL GAG SERVICE
THE LATEST — THE GREATEST — THE MOST-UP-TO-DATEST
Now in its 157th issue, containing stories, one-liners, poemettes, song titles, hecklers, audience stuff, monologs, parodies, double gags, bits ideas, intros, impressions and impersonations, political, interruptions, Thoughts of the Day, Humorous Views of the News, Vignettes, etc. (20 Pages).
$25 YR.—SINGLE ISSUES $3
Foreign
$35 YR.—SINGLE ISSUES $4
No C.O.D.'s
BILLY GLASON, 200 W. 54th St.
New York City 10019, CO 5-1316

RUFE "Petticoat Junction" DAVIS
ONE MAN HOOTENANNY
Management: DAVID B. WHALEN
Beverly Wilshire Hotel, Beverly Hills, Calif.

DORIS DUPUIS
Currently Appearing
ONE FIFTH AVENUE
New York
Contact: MIRIAM LOVE
CHARLES V. RYAN AGENCY
35 W. 53rd St., New York CI 5-2225

WANTED
AUDIENCES TO WATCH FUNNY, HILARIOUS, COMEDY WAITER
ARTIE ROBERTS
PERFORM
He made these audiences happy: STEVE ALLEN, CANDID CAMERA, G.M., XEROX, I.B.M. Now let him do the same for you.
FREE Brochures and price on request.
Contact: ROBERT REXER
1674 Broadway, New York City
CI 5-3660

WILL TRAVEL? FAR EAST?
Contact
GEKKO PROMOTIONS
Booking Throughout F.E.
Shiba P.O. Box 93 Cable:
Tokyo, Japan DANSAW TOKYO

Video Invasion of Icers Continues With Shasta Telecasting Buy of 'Ice Follies'

Television interests have invaded the ice show field for the second time in recent months. The sale of "Ice Follies" to the Shasta Telecasting Co., headquartered in Fresno, was completed over the weekend. Roy & Eddie Shipstad and Oscar Johnson, who have helmed the show since its start 28 years ago, will continue to head the layout. Purchase price wasn't revealed. Shasta bought all the "Follies" stock, but the former owners have options to buy into the parent company.

Shasta Telecasting Corp. operates a telestation in Fresno and a radio station in California. Metromedia, parent of WNEW-TV and WNEW, radio station, N. Y., and others bought "Ice Capades" several months ago.

There had been reports that "Ice Follies" had been up for sale for sometime. At one point there was a denial that the femme lingerie firm, Kayser-Roth was the purchaser. At that time, illness of one of the partners was said to have been the reason for their desire to sell.

The shipstads and Johnson started their icer in 1936 and pioneered this form of entertainment as a shoestring operation. It became the most prosperous show in the business. They had the smallest overhead of all the three blades shows, and for years, they never had permanent office, and operated out of their hats.

"The Follies" sale leaves only one icer, "Holiday on Ice" with its original owner, Morris Chalfen without tv sale.

Det. Roostertail to Crow With Top Names in Jan.

Detroit, Dec. 30.

The Roostertail, one of Detroit's swankier niteries, has changed to a "big-name" entertainment policy. J. Lee Schoenith, executive v.p. of the riverside supper club, said the new policy begins Jan. 10. when comedian Jack E. Leonard starts a week-and-a-half engagement.

Other talent booked this winter includes Vic Damone, Roberta Sherwood, the Jane Russell-Connie Haines and Beryl Davis Trio, Mel Torme, Herb Shriner and Pat Suzuki. Negotiations are underway to book additional names.

BILLY GLASON'S FUN-MASTER
PROFESSIONAL COMEDY MATERIAL
For every branch of theatricals
"WE SERVICE THE STARS!"
35 Gag files $15, plus $1 postage
FOREIGN: 35 for $30
• 3 Parody Books, per Bk. ....$10 •
• 8 Blackout Books 1-2-3 Each $25 •
No. 4 for $35—No. 5 for $30
• Minstrel (white face) Budget $25 •
• "How to Master the Ceremonies" •
$3 PER COPY . . . NO C.O.D.'s
BILLY GLASON
200 W. 54th St., N.Y.C. 10019 CO 5-1316
(We TEACH M.C'ing and COMEDY)
(Let a real Professional train you)

HARVEY HOTEL from $3.50 DAY WEEKLY MONTHLY RATES

DAKOTA STATON WORKS IN OFAY B'HAM NITERY

Birmingham, Dec. 30.

Negro disker Dakota Staton spent the holidays in Birmingham. Although first booked for Dec. 27 at Club 401, Negro nitery. Later she was engaged for the Bamboo Room, an ofay spot.

A prior city ordinance against colored performers entertaining a white audience has since been struck off the books and is no longer valid.

Pacific Ocean Pk. Sale Due Soon In $2,500,000 Deal

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Deal is on for sale of Pacific Ocean Park, acknowledges owner Jack Morehart. He refuses to discuss details, stating "I cannot talk on this subject until after first of the year." However, Morehart admits that Jack Roberts, who has been a veepee and asistant general manager of POP as well as headman at the Aragon ballroom, is "one of the group with whom I had had discussions."

Roberts said he is the sole figure involved; that outright purchase price will be "around $2,500,000."

Morehart bought the amusment park five years ago after the founding partners—CBS and Santa Anita race track—each lost $5,600,000 in 18 months of operation. Roberts says his purchase deal has entered escrow "and should emerge Jan. 8." Roberts also volunteers that Neil Blaney, who has been veepee-general manager of POP for Morehart, "will not be a member of my operation."

Prior to site's development into POP, Roberts operated some rides at the Old Lick Pier. He continued to do so after POP came into being on the Lick site. Roberts also says that National General Corp.'s cotton candy concessions at park expire in April, 1965. NCC had two theatres in what is now the park, and took the concessions as part payment when CBS and the racetrack sank millions into modernizing the amusement park and area.

Vaude, Cafe Dates

New York

Diahann Carroll discharged over the weekend from Mt. Sinai Hospital after an attack of meningitis . . . Smothers Bros. pacted for Basin St. East June 8 . . . Vi Velasco set for the Village Vanguard starting Jan. 11 . . . Israeli dancer Oshra Elkayam and Japanese terper Kazuko Hirabayashi to present a joint recital at the Kaufman Concert Hall of the YMHA Jan. 9 . . . John Gary tapped for Blinstrub's, Boston, Jan. 6 . . . Vaughn Meader reports to the Crescendo, Hollywood, April 1 for two weeks . . . Damita Jo to tour Japan starting March 20.

Chicago

Janet Blair has been set for the Palmer House Feb. 15-28. Down for the same spot are Four Kovacs, Dec. 31-Jan. 31, and Pat Cooper, Feb. 1-14 . . . Vicki Carr into the Drake Hotel Feb. 4-23 . . . Caroline Richter returns to the Blackstone Hotel Jan. 13-Feb. 3, Constance Towers inked for same room May 5-16, and Lilo skedded for May 18-30 . . . Three Men From Montana slated for the Chi Playboy Jan. 27-Feb. 16 . . . Mickey Sharp plays the Miami Playboy Jan. 6-26, and the Chi club Jan. 27-Feb. 16 . . . Gaylord & Holiday signed for the Shamrock, Houston, Feb. 27 for a fortnight . . . Susan Barrett into the Embers, Indianapolis, April 2 for two weeks . . . Jane Russell, Connie Haines & Beryl Davis set for the Cork Club, Houston, Dec. 28 for two weeks, and for the Hotel Roosevelt, N.O., Jan. 16 for a pair.

Town Casino, Buff, Drops Names; Switches to Jazz

The Town Casino, Buffalo, long one of the major strongholds of cafe names in western New York, is switching to a jazz policy Jan. 1. Opener will be Miles Davis for six days to be followed by Maynard Ferguson Jan. 8. Other bookings lined up by operator Harry Altman include Count Basie Jan. 21, for two days, to be followed Jan. 23 by Dizzy Gillespie for one week. Don Menza has been pacted for the lounge.

Altman had been attempting to continue the Casino's name policy. However, he was unable to get a steady flow of headliners at prices he could afford. Altman, in the past few years, had been clobbered by the severe winters which cut off traffic not only from Buffalo but also from Toronto, which he regarded as one of his major markets.

The initial jazz bookings are frankly experimental for Altman. He's slated to stay in this groove for the remainder of the season. He'll continue with names in the Glenn Casino, Williamsville, N.Y., which he operates during the summer.

Rosemary Clooney Sues Atty. Andy Weinberger For Accounting of Funds

Rosemary Clooney filed suit in N.Y. Federal Court last week against attorney Andrew D. Weinberger, seeking an accounting of monies he allegedly withdrew from the songstress' bank accounts and either retained or invested.

Miss Clooney asserts that Weinberger had acted as her attorney from 1951 through Feb. 18, 1963. She charges that, while acting as her counsel Weinberger caused large sums to be withdrawn from her accounts which he either kept or invested in his own enterprises without accounting to her.

He was supposed to be acting as an investment counselor, according to the complaint, but Miss Clooney Claims that she was never notified as to what investments had been made on her behalf.

The singer is seeking both an accounting and the return of the monies.

$100,000 Govt. Grant Lifts Edmonton Fair Into Black

Edmonton, Alta., Dec. 30.

With the help of a $100,000 provincial government grant, the Edmonton Exhibition Assn. showed a $14,169 profit on the year's operations. Without the grant, a loss of $88,728 was indicated.

The association's surplus at the end of 1963, including $1,132,513 at the start of the year, was $1,-149,682.

Losses included $159,000 on the new Sportex building, designed for curling and commercial displays; $12,740 on the fall livestock show; $6,700 on the spring livestock show; $8,000 on operations of the Oil Kings hockey team, and $17,900 on the fall race meet.

The spring and summer race meets grossed about $600,000 and the net profit was just under $8,-000. The summer exhibition grossed about $500,000 and finished with a profit of $83,000.

Piqued Mayor

Continued from page 2

the room from time to time. It has been in use about 15 years.

Cowger said the room has been supplied "at no expense" and asked various news media to remove desks and other privately owned furnishings by Jan. 1. He noted that other governmental units in the area—Federal, county and state—do not provite space for the use of reporters. Cowger will establish a schedule of weekly news conferences. WHAS-TV news carried a segment on its Friday (20) 6:15 airing, showing reporters on sidewalk outside City Hall with typewriters on a table, shivering and typing their stories in the near-zero weather.

Fred Wiche, WHAS-TV news, one of the dispossessed reporters, gave a goodhumored, tongue-in-cheek commentary on the unusual procedure as a closeout on his local news period.

Japan Welcomes U.S. Acts, Musicians But AFM Blocks a Two-Way Street

Japanese imports of U.S. acts are on the upbeat, according to Tokyo promoter Dan Sawyer, currently in the States lining up performers. He asserted that barring any changes in the political climate between both countries American talent will continue to do big in Japan.

Sawyer is particularly on the prowl for record names as well as headliners brought out by films and television. A big disk or the presentation of a teleshow or motion picture is a key to big b.o. in the islands, he said.

He had been attempting, for example, to get Robert Stack as well as others in the "Untouchable" group. However, since Stack didn't want to participate in the venture, the entire deal had to be scrapped, even though other cast members were willing to go along.

Sawyer pointed out that periodic visits to the U.S. as well as other sources of his act supply are mandatory. Not only can he see the new developments in the act and music sectors, but he can o.o. talent already submitted. Latter is especially important since he can test the reliability of agents who have been offering the acts to him.

According to Sawyer, a rough area in Japanese-American relations is resentment at Japan's inability to send some of its native musical acts to he U.S. He declared that there is no restriction on admission of musicians to Japan, but Japanese are not admitted to the U.S. because "they replace American musicians."

He stated that resentment is especially evident when Japanese trade or cultural organization, having an exhibit in the U.S., attempt to import Nipponese musicians and their native instruments. He said this cannot be done unless the American Federation of Musicians gets standby employment. He added that incidents like these hurt the cultural relations between both countries.

Sawyer pointed out that there is no such antagonism to performers since American Guild of Variety Artists regulations stipulate only that valid employment contracts are the major criterion on which Japanese talent is admitted to the U.S.

Sawyer is a Texan who was a Honolulu policeman when he went over to Tokyo to manage a hotel for American interests. As a result of talent promotion on which he figured, he decided to remain in that field and is now one of the top importers of American as well as European performers.

Bearded, Bathless Folksters Could Ax Props, Sez Rodgers

Tokyo, Dec. 30.

Looking more like the choir boy he used to be than the pop folk singer he is today, Jimmie Rodgers says he does not believe it essential for performers of his musical persuasion to be bearded, barefoot and bathless.

"You can perform as a folk singer even in a tuxedo," Rodgers noted. "I don't go along with the idea that you have to be a purist. Most of us who are young are not really folk singers, but singers of folk songs. And I think that when you dress and carry yourself as a gentleman you are certainly in good taste.

Accompanied by a trio called The Fairmont Singers and guitar player Ralph Grasso (and offstage by his wife and Seymour Heller, his manager), Rodgers made a Far East swing filled mainly with U.S. military dates under promotion of Eddie Sereno.

While Rodgers prefers folk songs because they tell a story taken from the heritage of a country, his style and choice of material spill into the pop field. "I don't like to think commercially all the time, but you have to do some commercial things for your career," offered Rodgers, now 30.

"There are many songs I'd prefer to do, but they probably wouldn't sell five records. You have to have been in this business a good many years before you can rely on your own choice of material. I'm not old enough yet. When I've been in the business for 20 years, I won't have to sing 'Honeycomb' any more."

The head of Dot Records' folk department for about a year, Rodgers is gradually working into the production end of the business. "I like to work with other people —to collect material and write for them," he said.

As further insurance against idleness in middle-age, Rodgers is partner in two music publishing outfits and in a record production company. With associates Randy Sparks and Rod McKuen, he writes songs, sometimes in collaboration and sometimes by himself.

One-Woman Show

Colette Renard

(THEATRE MONTPARNASSE)

Paris, Dec. 26.

Colette Renard is one of the few femme singers who has enough diversity, style and drive to be able to bring off a one-woman show. She sums up what is almost classical in French singers but is always modern in her emotive force and presence.

In a brown, brocaded dress she belts out songs of the streets that are sentimental plaints or poetic acceptance of reality. But the shrugs, tremulous voice and controlled shivers of emotion give them all a force and vitality.

There is also an optimistic outlook in her pert presence. For she can also bring off oldtime Gallic blue songs with the right gaiety, insouciance and taste to make them affable instead of leering.

Well backed by a small orch batoned by Raymond Legrand, she should do four weeks of fine biz.

Mosk.

DONNA LYNN
CAPITOL RECORDING ARTIST
Newest Release
"RONNIE"
b/w
"THAT'S ME I'M THE BROTHER"
McCLENDON AGENCY TN 7-2287

RAT FINKS REJOICE
YOU HAVE A NEW HOME
"Jackie Kannon's Rat Fink Room is an idea operation for a sophisticated New York . . . Kannon oozes personality . . . Threws barbs with disarming grin to ringsiders like Ray Bolger, David Susskind, Buddy Hackett, McGuire Sisters, Robert Young, etc. . . ."
—Bill Smith, Backstage
JACKIE KANNON'S RAT FINK ROOM
Atop The Roundtable
151 East 50th St., New York, N. Y.

RICKI DUNN IS A THIEF!
Dir.: Harry Greben, 203 N. Wabash Av.
DEarborn 2-0996, Chicago, Illinois

Copacabana, N. Y.

Jerry Vale, Pat Henry, Cally Dodd, Rene Martell, Joseph Mele & Frank Marti Orchs; $6.50-$7 minimums.

Some of the calculated risks in the nitery field do not pay off as anticipated. In a room as important as the Copacabana, a performer has been known to make it on a single appearance, and any subsequent engagement is designed to confirm an earlier impression.

That seemed to be the strategy behind Jerry Vale's quick repeat at the Jules Podell hospice, and according to blueprints, the following morning should have decreed a new star on the horizon. His cause was also aided by an extremely successful Carnegie Hall appearance recently.

Vale is an able and personable singer, well schooled and disciplined with a style and a viewpoint. All these items are again evident during his recital at the Copa. He has the equipment to create mood with some excellently arranged and executed tunes.

But at show caught, he seemed intent to make good in a hurry. He failed to linger lovingly over the lyrics. There was an extreme nervousness in his demeanor and he appeared to halt what had been a remarkable career progression.

Yet Vale didn't impress as having done any permanent damage. It will be possible to restore the earlier impact, but it'll be more of an uphill batte than had been realized. He didn't destroy his potential that evening, only the immediate impetus.

Pat Henry, who had been hitting highspots with a pleasant comedy act, proceeded as per usual with skilled underplaying of some good material. His verbiage seems a bit more commercial than on previous appearances here. This seemed evident in the early part of his turn. His later remarks were confined to bits that he has been doing. He stirred the customers to good hands.

The surrounding Doug Coudy production, with the singing by Cally Dodd and Rene Martell, holds up well. Joseph Mele showbacks competently and Frank Marti provides colorful relief music. Jose.

Sahara, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Dec. 21.

Buddy Hackett, Buddy Greco, Moro-Landis Dancers (16), Louis Basil Orch (13); produced by Stan Irwin; presented by Milton Prell; $5 minimum.

The Buddys, Hackett and Greco, give an excellent balance of comedy and music to the new show in the new Congo Room.

Hackett not only has become a tv fave in the past few years—he's become a favorite on the Strip. His very funny side-of-the-mouth delivery tosses some very funny stories which are gems because they are recognizable to most in the audience. The trademark "Chinese Waiter" skit has become a classic, and gets requested at each show.

Greco, with an exciting, distinctive sound, hits a fresh peak here, and shows he's one of the top vocal personalities in the biz. His turn seemed much too short as he offered such tunes as "Most Beautiful Girl In The World," "Let There Be Love" and "Nobody Till Somebody Loves You." He also does a fine stint of keyboarding on "Tenderly."

The Moro-Landis Dancers (16) are seen in a delightful salute to "My Fair Lady" in this bill, produced by Stan Irwin. The Louis Basil orch (13) backs the bash, in until Jan. 21 when Connie Francis returns. Duke.

Ye Little Club, L. A.

Los Angeles, Dec. 18.

Patti Kim, Marc Douglas, Git Barios, Jack Smalley; two-drink minimum.

In Patti Kim and Marc Douglas, Marshall Edson has a well-balanced attraction for a fortnight at YLC, where the customers are accustomed to sampling fresh talent scrambling uphill. Neither of the two vocalists yet has that final coat of performing polish, but both have strong and well-defined attributes that set them apart.

Miss Kim, a Korean, has been in this country only six months and is making her Coast nitery debut following a hitch in Vegas, where she had a key assignment in "Flower Drum Song." Considering that she has quite a language barrier to hurdle, she does quite well with the English lyrics.

Her voice is uncommonly robust and has a fairly unique throaty quality. She loves to belt. But her work is marred by occasional stridency and a tendency to fall out of sync with her instrumental backing.

Among tunes done by Miss Kim are "S'Wonderful," "Basin Street Blues," "Over The Rainbow," "Love Look Away," "Cry Me A River," "Besame Mucho" and "Summertime," the latter two in Korean as well as English.

Douglas is very imaginative in song selection and has a rich, expressive voice. Among the not-oft-heard refrains he contribs are "Heigh Ho" from "Snow White" and several numbers ordinarily restricted to instrumental interpretation. He goes in for bunching related tunes in intricately-arranged medleys, i.e., "Let There Be Love—Let Me Love You—Let's Fall in Love," but has a tendency to overdo this gimmick.

In the absence of regular YLC pianist Paul Suter, Gil Barios holds forth commendably at the 88, with Jack Smalley his usual reliable self on the bass. Tube.

Chi Chi, Palm Springs

Palm Springs, Calif., Dec. 24.

Eleanor Powell, Rip Taylor, Bobby Winters, Bill Alexander Orch (16); $2 cover.

Eleanor Powell wasn't breathing as hard as the audience at the end of her opening tap routine in the Starlite Room of the Chi Chi. Her competent technique, perfect figure and the beautiful charm of those sweet, soft tap sounds brought the capacity house to rousing applause. A new generation is being treated to her great talent.

It's a nostalgic bit when Miss Powell remembers "Bojangles" Robinson and does his famous "step dance." A fascinating gimmick is showing, with film clips, how sound is dubbed on a tap routine for movies. While she changes into another of her becoming costumes, a series of sheet music covers flash on the curtain and top songs from her Broadway and Hollywood successes are sung.

Miss Powell's act builds and never drops. Her finale is a rouser. She talks, taps and moves fast.

Comedian Rip Taylor, who overflows into Miss Powell's act, has the ability to caricature with a gesture such names as Pearl Bailey, among others. A versatile fellow, he works smoothly and is a perfect foil for Miss Powell.

Gerry Dolan conducts the 16-piece Bill Alexander band with Steven Dweck sitting in on drums to accent Miss Powell's taps. Scul.

Savarin, Toronto

Toronto, Dec. 23.

Hi-Lites (3), Paul Grosney Quartet; $1.50 cover.

Just back from an eight-weeks' tour of Britain, France and Germany, plus a side trip of five weeks with Connie Francis to South Africa, the Hi-Lites have moved into the Savarin for a two-week stint.

Harmony trio, fresh-faced on delivery and diapason, have come a long way in showmanly experience since they played Toronto some two ears ago. Still the same threesome, they are Johnny Nodrilan, lead singer; Harry Harding, tenor; Larry Sturino, bass. All arrangements are by Earl Parnes. Act stayed on 45 minutes when caught opening night Monday (23), the first of their twice-nightly appearances.

Their walkaround to "The End of Time" is a standout on balladeering, ditto their more bouncy "Hands" number in which they get the customers joining in the handclapping. They also score in "Everybody Dance," an Israeli harvest song in fast time.

Switch in tempo and styling is "When Vaudeville Was King," complete with strawhats and sticks for a soft shoe shuffle and finishing with a hot "Bill Bailey." The Hi-Lites had no difficulty in getting over.

Paul Grosney's quartet gives excellent backing to the harmony vocalistics of the Hi-Lites, plus playing for the dance sessions. McStay.

Desert Inn, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Dec. 23.

Eddie Fisher, Elkins Sisters (3), Holly Twins, Beverly Richards, Bob Fletcher, Folliette, Paul Ggem, Arden Dancers (24), Carlton Hayes Orch (28); produced by Frank Sennes; presented by Wilbur Clark; musical arrangements, Jim Harbert; $5 minimum.

Eddie Fisher breaks the champagne on the brand new showroom here, and had these appropriate words for firstnighters: "I'm very happy to have been asked to open the new Crystal Room—the most beautiful in the world. And as I look around this room I'm glad to see Wilbur Clark didn't spend my money foolishly."

The plush room, which during production numbers can display chorines on small stages at either side of the audience, lacks the intimacy of the old room, but Fisher made up for this by doing many of his songs while strolling in all parts of it.

Among tunes are "Falling In Love With Love," "This Nearly Was Mine," "White Christmas" and a Jolson medley. Eddy Samuels is Fisher's 88er-conductor fronting the Antonio Morelli orch (28), and Sammy Goldstein is on drums. Special material was written by Eli Basse.

The Elkins Sisters (3) are shapely brunet lookers on the bill; they get gasps and appreciative applause for their tumbling-balancing routine.

Donn Arden has conceived a clever miniature musical in four scenes called "Almost Paradise" which takes advantage of all the mechanical gadgetry of the new stage—it almost equals that of the Stardust across the street.

The Holly Twins are femme singers in the hootenanny style; comely Beverly Richards and handsome Bob Fletcher, vocalist; curvy Folliette and graceful Paul Ggem, Co. dancers, all are strong plus factors giving fine balance, being featured along with the 24 gorgeous Arden Dancers.

This bill in for four weeks. Duke.

Executive, Knoxville

Knoxville, Dec. 26.

Frankie Capri, Barry McDonald Orch; $1 cover.

Comic Frankie Capri, in a return date at the Executive Club, wins the audience easily during his 55-minute stint. Much improved, compared to his previous booking here, he has developed a razor-sharp style and excellent timing.

His material, clean and fresh, gets maximum patron response via good delivery. Switching to an accordion, he does such tunes as "Granada," "Malaguena" and "Fascination" to nab lotsa palm-pounding.

Capri also vocals several numbers, self-accomped by the squeeze-box. He proves his versatility by unveiling a vibraharp, contribs some hip chatter to give the Barry McDonald Orch a breather, then goes into "September Song" and a Hamptonish rendition of "Hava Nagila." Capri, who begs off, is a natural for the better lounges. Brad.

Hootenanny, L. A.

Los Angeles, Dec. 19.

Bud & Travis, Modern Folk Quartet; $1.50 admission plus one-drink minimum.

Valleyites apparently are with the folk music craze, from the reception Charles Greene and Brian Stone are geeting with their big new club. Room was filled for Tuesday (17) opening of Bud & Travis, in their first local appearance in more than a year, supported by the Modern Folk Quartet.

B&T prove their worth with an act that has been slightly modified and a sound that shows them better than they have been in some time. Delivery is the mainstay of the two performers, who work a variety of numbers from the colorful and rhythmic Mexican swingers like "La Bomba" to softly tender "Bon Soir Dame" and intermingled comedy bits.

But they need fresh material. In opening set only one tune was new —"Golden Apples of the Sun"— and this one which they have recorded. Pair please with old favorites like the beautiful "Malaguena Salerosa" and rousing "Raspberries, Strawberries." However, they can't rely on the tried and true forever.

Performers are still highly inventive and use plenty of hip comedy pattern throughout the act. But it has been wisely cut down, giving them more class and showing their superb musicianship to better advantage.

Folk Quartet are four clean cut college types with soup bowl haircuts that make them resemble England's Beatles. They have much to offer, performing with sensitivity and taste on several nicely-arranged folk ballads with excellent vocal blend and bright flair. Boys are well staged, particularly hit well on softly balladed "A Very Good Year" and an unusual but highly musical 15th Century madrigal.

Show is in for three weeks. Dale.

Playboy, Detroit

Detroit, Dec. 28.

Jackie Gayle, Roy Petty, Matt Michaels Trio; $2.50 cover.

This elegant and newest Playboy Club, keyless because private key clubs are illegal in Michigan, and beset with licensing troubles, was previewed on schedule Friday (27) by about 500 newsmen and civic leaders. The festivities went on despite picketing by union waiters who complain that the club's bunnies work only for tips and receive no salary.

Entertainment will be featured in the Penthouse, while instrumentalists will be in the Play Room and the Living Room. The Penthouse cover is $2.50.

Initial act in the Penthouse was singer Roy Petty who gets things off to a hot, swinging and loud start with "Gonna Sit Right Down," followed by "Up a Lazy River," "What Kind of Fool Am I?" and "Bye Bye Blackbird." Petty was well received.

The swinging pace Petty set is too well matched by comedian Jackie Gayle. He attacks the audience with machinegun-like chatter that is too overpowering and self-defeating. The quips follow one another so swiftly that the audience gets the point and laughs while the next joke is being set up. Hence, about every other story falls flat merely because the audience can't keep up with the frenetic Gayle. He should watch his timing.

Matt Michaels, musical director of the new club who has moved over from the Caucus Club, and his trio provide fine backing for Petty and Gayle, both of whom obviously were improvising much of the time.

A girl singer is scheduled to join Petty and Gayle in the Penthouse in a few days. The plan is to have three acts for three weeks each in the Penthouse. Tew.

Interlude, L.A.

Los Angeles, Dec. 23.

Pat Collins; $1.50 admission.

Pat Collins' hypnosis act is largely dependent on the people she has to work with, rather than the material she has at her apparently easy call. If they are swingers, she swing and, given the unusual situations of a midnight opening on her gala return to the interlude, she fortunately got them.

Several of the very willing subjects who "slept" with Pat Collins for an hour and a half on the preem were regulars, people who have been coming back for more ever since her earlier dates at this nitery. A couple of them, by this time, are almost part of the act.

Thus, if the "hip hypnotist" also has a "regular" audience, she is going to have to work much harder to change her own pattern and suggestion ideas in order to alter the now-expected reactions of some of her subjects. She is beginning to do it.

There remains the usual "The Redcoats Are Coming" shouts of the hypnotics upon suggestion of the club's name by Miss Collins, as well as the usual laugh at a funny film, dance the hula, bumps and grinds or stripper bits. And, of course, the clincher for those who disbelieve, the rigid suspension catalyptic state of a subject between two chairs. They are all humorous or amazing and highly entertaining.

Miss Collins herself is getting even more hip. She gets very close to the blue side and stays just within the law with many of her own asides and those she gets out of the subjects. Often, the reactions are quite Freudian, sometimes they are embarrassingly poignant; most of the time they are hilarious.

Booking is indefinite. Dale.

Sands, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Dec. 21.

Joey Bishop, L.A. Dodgers (Don Drysdale, Frank Howard, Tommy Davis, Ron Perranoski, Willie Davis, Bill Skowron), Mack Pearson, Levee Singers (4), Harry Nofal, Copa Girls (12), Antonio Morelli Orch (17); produced and staged by Jack Entratter; choreography, Renne Stuart; stage direction, Harold Dobrow; $5 minimum.

Joey Bishop is back with a new set of teammates — this time six members of the Los Angeles Dodgers. The sextet from the world champ baseball team consists of Don Drysdale, Frank Howard, Tommy Davis, Ron Perranoski, Willie Davis, and Bill Skowron; Bishop strikes out the ball players one by one in his beautiful deadpan style.

Three of these nitery-type Dodgers (Drysdale, Howard, W. Davis) were here last year when Milton Berle brought six near-champs to the Desert Inn in what was a more disciplined group — but they still seem to have fun and are entertaining to an audience especially if it likes to see heroes good-naturedly put down.

Drysdale sparkplugs, and in a pleasant voice sings "Heart In San Francisco" (in the best gag of the show, Bishop brings relief pitcher Perranoski in to finish the song when Drydale's voice falters), "All The Way," and special Sammy Cahn lyrics to "High Hopes" in which he's joined by the other champs.

The Davis boys do an okay dance routine, and Tommy is effective with a solo on a German instrument similar to the Italian clavietta. Skowron plays the dunderhead, perhaps Bishop's way of kidding him for being traded to the Senators. Mack Pearson does a bit of hilarity in a Mets uniform, demanding "equal time," and reprising the ukulele routine he did here before with Bishop.

The male Levee Singers (4) balance the bill; group clicks solidly with such numbers as "Cotton Fields," "Beautiful City," "Battle Hymn of the Republic," and a "Porgy and Bess" medley. Curtainraiser is a colorful Renne Stuart production number featuring vocalist Harry Nofal and the dozen Copa Girls. Show, produced by Jack Entratter, and backed by the Antonio Morelli orch (17), is in until Jan. 6 when George Gobel opens. Duke.

Rendezvous Room, L. A.

Los Angeles, Dec. 27.

Chuck Dodds, Mimi Dillard, Jimmy Sheldon Trio; no cover, no minimum.

After successful engagements earlier in the year, Chuck Dodds and Mimi Dillard are doing an encore at the Rendezvous showcase. Both young singers have varied appeal, but the question now is where do they go from here?

Most potential is Dodds, tall, blond, handsome and vocally superb. Youngster has been seen in various local spots, from a standout bit several years ago in the El Capitan Theatre production of "Most Happy Fella" to production singer chores at the Moulin Rouge and similar stints in Las Vegas and other clubs throughout the country.

The experience has given him polish, secured his vocal capacity and trained him well. But at this point, Dodds is just a very good singer. To make the step to big time, he must now concentrate on style, individuality in arrangements and more personalized delivery.

Every song is straight, big voice and hard sell, as in rhythm punch on "Other Side of the Tracks," from "Little Me." Singer is more than capable, but should strive to put himself a cut above the general competition in the talent market.

Miss Dillard is lovely to look at and has a pleasant personality. Sepia songstress, however, hasn't found her identity as a performer. There is a big, powerful voice with definite potential, but she has never been properly trained. She pushes into vocal sounds that make her delivery a harsh yell that must be softened.

Better phrasing for lyric communication and some personalized arrangements would aid Miss Dillard well. Her most pleasing work shows on near balladed "More" and she strikes interesting, but undeveloped, idea on "Kids," from "Bye Bye Birdie." Dale.

Red Garter, N. Y.

The G-String Strugglers (6); 25c-50c admission.

Herbert Jacoby, who used to be the co-boniface at the chi-chi Blue Angel, has traveled a complete circle with his opening of The Red Garter, located on the site of the now defunct Greenwich Village jazzery, Nick's.

Jacoby seems to be taking advantage of an axiom long known to showmen—that the audience provides its own entertainment. The discovery of the banjo as a catalyst in that department is a comparatively recent development from San Francisco. The original Red Garter in that city is franchising spots throughout the country, and this is an independently operated branch of the mother cafe. Jacoby is partnered in this venture by Joel Schiavone, who has been associated with other branches of the Garter, notably in Boston.

The Red Garter's sole entertainment, aside from the customers, who seem to be willing witnesses to the efficacy of the format, is a kerplunk group comprising three banjos, a trombone, bass tuba and a washboard. This concert ensemble plays the oldies. Schiavone himself is at one of the plectrum desks. That's it.

It's probably the cheapest nitery format known, and it should get a lot of Village trade. There are some other items that go together with this musical format. The decor is in warm and passionate reds, very much like a Victorian parlor. Jacoby and Schiavone must have invaded every antique (or junk) shop in the city to buy up every ancient photo of family patriarchs. There are deer heads scattered about the room, and various other items prevalent during the era. The servitors and the musicians are in striped blazers. The entire atmosphere is rich and colorful.

The room is geared for the have-nots on a fling. What's more it's likely to be discovered that there's a lot of loot to be made in that category, and Jacoby & Co. seem to have the right format. There's an exclusion policy with a 25c and 50c (latter on weekends) admission. The beers, and a healthy stein it appears to be, are 50c; a 2-quart pitcher is $3. The signs say "good whiskies" are $1.05. There are sandwiches, hamburgers, and assorted goodies at prices that appear to be for the slim budgeteers on a night out. The waiters are young and vigorous, probably college kids from the neighborhood, who have the agility to hustle the fodder. With a seating capacity of about 300, the spot seems headed for solvency as a permanent condition.

The Red Garter is the second spot of its kind in New York. This spot was preceded by the Red Onion, in another part of town, which is a smaller version of the same. Older established niteries may soon complain of the Red menace. Jose.

Tropicana, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Dec. 21.

"Folies Bergere," Bob Williams, Les Compagnons de la Chanson (9), Les Olympiades (3), Les Charlivels (3), Palermo & Phillips, Lena pastor, Nancy Kilgas, Felicia Atkins, Corinne Vial, Allen Conroy, Monica Lind, Christian Cardin, Maria Andre, Ugo Pelliccia, Jose Dornini, Girl Dancers (42), Ray Sinatra Orch (19); conceived & directed by Michel Gyarmathy; produced by Tony Azzi; choreography, Tony Charmoli; musical arangements, Russell Garcia and Bill Reddie; $5 minimum.

The revamped "Folies Bergere" leaves the production numbers intact, changes the specialty acts, and the show continues as one of the most colorful sexy spectaculars seen on any stage anywhere.

Bob Wiliams and his wonderfully apathetic dog, Louie, have joined the festivities, and the act, a real hunk of hilarity, is wisely put in the closing slot, as it's a toughie to follow.

Three gilded musclemen in an act called Les Olympiades are effectively suspensful as they do unbelieveable pyramid balancing in slow motion.

Les Compagnons da la Chanson is one of the best vocal groups of this type. The nine male Frenchmen stirringly sing in both French and English with outstanding musical arrangements.

Les Charlivels, the fast-moving trio of musical acrobats, click both vocally and instrumentally, blending some topnotch tumbling.

Male team of Palermo & Phillips is skilled in an assortment of juggling displays. Lena Pastor is a superb songstress, and her well-trained operatic voice embellishes the production numbers.

Nancy Kilgas, a brilliant ballerina, is seen in several graceful displays; beautiful brunette Felicia Atkins is a curvy femcee; Corinne Vial is the luscious featured nude, and handsome Allen Conroy is a fine specimen of beefcake who should excite the ladies.

Frederic Apcar does a smooth job of staging the "Midnight In Paris" number; overall choreography (with 42 chorines) is imaginatively done by Tony Charmoli for producer Tony Azzi, who has faithfully followed Michel Gyarmathy's concept of the original "Folies Bergere."

This edition, backed with aplomb by the Ray Sinatra orch (19), is in for an indefinite run. Duke.

Flamingo, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Dec. 27.

Carol Lawrence, Jackie Mason, Volantes (2), Russ Black Orch (15); presented by Morris Lansburgh; produced by Mitch DeWood; lighting, Hugo Granata; $5 minimum.

Carol Lawrence lives up to advance raves about her new act, and this versatile display of singing, dancing, and pleasant patter registers as a blue chip attraction for Morris Lansburgh.

She cuts the dancing boy gimmick down to two, and in David Evans and Robert Lone has the best of that specialized fraternity—they look good, are fine performers, and are good for Miss Lawrence.

In staging this turn, expert Girl Star Guider Tony Charmoli outdoes himself; the delightful simplicity is pure class, coming across with memorable impact. Very effective is the way Miss Lawrence, on a rolling ladder, is gracefully spun around the stage by her two teammates as she sings.

She includes such numbers as "Friendly Star," "The Boy With the Blue Eyes," "Goodbye is a Lonesome Sound" (done so dramatically ringsiders could see real tears), "Jenny Jenkins," and a way, way up arrangement of "Hallelujah" which had first-nighters cheering.

With her boys, she gives the appreciative audience a basic dance lesson which erupts into festive routines of jazz, Spanish, cha-cha, hoedown and striptease. She winds with vocals on "Thank Heaven For Little Boys," and a "West Side Story" medley including "Tonight," "Something's Comin'," and "I Feel Pretty."

Richard Priborsky conducts the Russ Black orch (15) for Miss Lawrence's 42 minutes, and her special material is by Fred Ebb. Dance music was cleffed by Don Pippin, and Hugo Granata is in the light booth.

Jackie Mason, fresh from his London triumphs, is comedy star of the bill. He adds new material to some of the surefire semi-dialect stories he's offered here before, and was warmly accepted by the preem audience.

The male Volantes (2) initial things with gasp-provoking unicycle and juggling feats, in this room which is still without a chorus line.

Jack Carter and Julie London open Jan. 24. Duke.

Kaliph, Tel Aviv

Tel Aviv, Dec. 22.

Isanka, Adolpho Leon & Ballet d'Espana (5), Gerald Kester, The Voice & Instrument Quartet; Torquato Orch (4); $2.50-$3.50 admission.

This night club is the first in Israel to install two orchestras for continuous dancing. For an admission fee of $2.50-$3.50 the customers, mainly Israelis although many bring along visitors and tourist trade, is offered a bill of diverse numbers.

Isanka, a thirdrate stripper, does her routine tease-dances but without the stripping, which is outlawed. The Ballet d'Espana, with Adolpho Leon and five members, offer two scenes from Spain and some Spanish singing. Gerald Kester sings French favorites and "The Voice & Instrument" quartet, local musicians, share the dancefloor with Torquato, a four-piece combination of Italian youngsters, with style but lacking precision and verve. Rapo.

Cocoanut Grove, L. A.

Los Angeles, Dec. 28.

Gordon & Sheila MacRae; Meredith & Evelyn MacRae, Craig Smith, Mike Storm, Freddy Martin Orch (19); $3-$3.50 cover.

Biz here last few months had been as bleak as that of a bargain basement post-Christmas. Santa and his gifts of patronage arrived two days after the Yule when Gordon & Sheila MacRae opened a two-and-half-week stand.

The best man-wife act now playing nitery time has become a fixture at the Grove over five years. Booked in at least annually, they have never failed to generate customers and obviously to build their own following. This outing will be no exception and, as always, these "real pros" bring much new material each appearance here in their hometown, much of it spiced by colloquialisms.

Heart and highpoint of the long turn are the baritone's songalogs, but his wife's brisk, biting lampoons nudge him for honors, and he is growing ever more adept at satiric impersonations himself. His Dean Martin, Bo Belinsky and Frankie Fontaine takeoffs score and a climax is reached when MacRae costumes as Skelton, his mate as Lucille Ball and they romp through a bit ending with meringue pie (for real) in her face. They never veer from their characterizations throughout.

Mrs. MacRae's needle is jabbed deepest into Liz Taylor, rather gasp-provocative. Her Carol Channing, Judy Garland and Peggy Lee are quick and pointed, and for virtuosity her best is a Barbra Streisand bit that concludes with Miss Streisand-papering Allan Sherman.

MacRae's top-received songs are his showtune evergreens.

To bridge stagewaits for costuming, four youngsters — the MacRaes' daughters Meredith and Evelyn and two guitar-strumming youths, Craig Smith and Mike Storm — dish bits and madrigal and folktuning, with "If I Had a Hammer" pounded across best. Miriam Nelson's staging of act is excellent, as is most of the material written by Shirley Henry, Harry Crane and Jack Lloyd. Harry Frohman conducts.

Opening Friday (27) night, before near-SRO turnout, act ran overlong at 72 minutes. To tighten, the "Chase Manhattan" bit could be dispensed with, as it is a time and energy consuming routine with less punch-per-minute than other bits. Its excision also would eliminate quite a wardrobe and staging problem.

Freddy Martin is back on the grandstand and consequently "Mr. Grove" is back in the groove. This is a 25th anni for the batoneer, who in toto had spent more than a decade in this spot. He has a three-generation following, and it manifests itself. This time Martin is using a five-fiddle, bass, accordion ensemble to spell his orch 'tween shows and also to sit in with regular crew in backstopping show.

String group is led by Eddie Bergman, who has been stroking a gypsy fiddle around L.A. for lo! these many years. In all, stunt adds much novelty; looks like it, too, will become a fixture.

Next: Johnny Mathis, Jan. 16. Was.

Chez Paree, Chi

Chicago, Dec. 27.

Kay Stevens, Yonely, Jimmy Nuzzo Orch; $2.50-$3.50 cover.

The Chez Paree went dark for the two dismal cafe weeks before Christmas and reopened in time to get an early start on the New Years Eve trade and catch the early birds in for one of Chi's biggest annual conventions — the furniture show. They're among the free-spendingest conveners to meet in Chi, and many a club has staved off creditors by asking them to wait until the furniture men arrive.

While all of the cabarets will benefit from the home furnishings confab, the Chez Paree will undoubtedly carve out one of the largest shares because, despite its three-year absence, the name still stands for the nitery bigtime in Chi.

The current bill will not disappoint the spenders. Kay Stevens is in the long brash and brassy tradition of the Chez Paree when it was on Fairbanks Court, and Yonely is a nonpareil panto artist and guaranteed laughgetter.

This booking has great significance for Miss Stevens, who cut her show biz eyeteeth in the neighborhood clubs out near the steel mills on Chi's southern city limits. Like the storybook show biz troupers, she caught on in the Las Vegas and Lake Tahoe lounges a few years ago, picked up a couple of good film jobs, and has become a regular guest on the tv variety shows.

Miss Stevens is a tall and amply proportioned redhead with a stage air summed up in her closing number—"I Ain't Down Yet." Her comedic style is broad and her singing needs little mechanical amplification.

Her turn is a mixture of rubber-faced mugging, stops-out song belting, and a line of impertinent chatter. She mixes them all up in such numbers as "Getting To Know You," "A Good Man Nowadays," "Some of These Days" and a medley of "Wish I Could Shimmy" and "Eagle Rock."

Yonely is beginning to talk more than in recent local outings, but his stock in trade is pantomime, and he can play emotions across his face as though he were playing an instrument. His basic routine centres on his troubles and eventual triumphs with an array of miniature musical instruments, among them a tiny fiddle, trumpet and accordion.

His closer is a couple of tunes on the piano using large rubber balls instead of his fingers, and aside from the novelty, they are more than passable piano solos by any standard. Mor.

Slate Bros., L. A.

Los Angeles, Dec. 26.

Don Rickles, Eileen Barton, Herb Dell Trio; $2.50 cover, two-drink minimum.

Still battling for the same worthy cause—the lampoon of bigotry—via the same ferocious comedy style, Don Rickles has returned to his original base of bigtime operations for a three-week stand supported by vocalist Eileen Barton. It should be a profitable booking for los hermanos Slate.

Rickles' quick wit, masterful timing and rapidfire delivery spark a slambang turn in which he needles prejudice by characterizing, in the most distorted manner, the compleat bigot. Along the way, no race, creed or ringside celebrity is safe from his shafts and barbs. On opening night, Frankie Avalon goodnaturedly bore the brunt of Rickles' attack.

Miss Barton, remarkably youthful to be the vet she is, uncorks a dependable voice and plenty of zeal and showmanship. She scores especiallly on a batch of showtunes such as "I Wish I Were In Love Again," "Let's Face The Music And Dance," and an obscure Irving Berlin tune, "You're Laughing At Me," which the cute canary warbles soulfully with the technical augmentation of an echo chamber gimmick.

Although Miss Barton manages an adept vocal impression and physical impersonation, a somewhat less than inspired climax of her act is the Frank Sinatra takeoff, "The Gentleman Is A Champ," especially its maudlin final chorus.

Herb Dell Trio skillfully backstops both acts. Tube.

Deauville, Miami B'ch

Miami Beach, Dec. 27.

Sammy Davis Jr., Inga & Rolf, Les Rhode Orch; $5-$10 minimum.

Return of Sammy Davis Jr. to this biggery's 650-seater, the Casanova Room, marked a booming season start for prexy Morris Lansburgh. First night was a virtual sellout at both performances; succeeding nights were in the near no-tables status via advance reservations. So much so, that Davis is being moved into 1,500-capacity Napoleon Room for New Year's eve.

Davis doesn't let them down. He's as full of drive and dynamic delivery as ever and seems to have reached smooth perfection in every move that stamps the authoritative topliner. There's plenty of new material in his book; the reprises on click recordings and inserts of new arrangements.

(Continued on page 44)

'Casino de Paris,' In Vegas Dunes Bow, Colorfully Carbons the Paris Original

The Dunes has a dandy in its bid to rival the pioneering Stardust French spectaculars, and the subsequent Tropicana Parisian sex circuses, which have been highly successful for those hotels. This entry is called "Casino de Paris," and it's a colorful adaptation of the perennial show of that name.

The Vegas edition was conceived, produced, and directed by Frederic Apcar with masterful flair. Opening night reaction assures a long run. Seemingly it's a yank variation on the Paris original.

Line Renaud, the longrunning star of the original 'Casino de Paris' revue, repeats her success

Dunes, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Dec. 27.

"Casino de Paris," starring Line Renaud; with Cinq Peres (5), Carsonys (3), Great Pusztai Troupe (7), Rudas Acrobatic Dancers (10), Brix Twins, Marya Linero, Ailsa Winton, Michel Zapla, Ralph Young, Tony Sandler, Michele Frascoli, Rosalyn Roy, Valda Godwin, Gary McCurdy, Jean Louis Bert, Girl Dancers (16), Boy Dancers (8), Nudes (12), Bill Reddie Orch (22; produced and directed by Frederic Apcar; music for Mme. Renaud by Louis Gaste; costumes, Jose Luis Vinas; lyrics, Pat Jacob; musical score, Bill Reddie; settings and lighting, Sean Kenny; Production by special agreement with Henri Varna, Owner and Director, 'Casino de Paris,' Paris; presented by M. A. Riddle; $5 minimum.

here; she's personably distinctive with her vocals, her sparkplugging of adoring male dancers, and her wandering into the audience. She has soloed in the posh hostelries in the U.S. before, so has good concept of Yank values.

Mechanical star of the show is an amazing "octuramic" stage, so called because its octopus-like arms contain revolving stages on several levels to spread performers in many directions. Apcar makes the most of John Newson's gadget, using it often for fascinating effect.

Also deserving top billing are the orb-dazzling Jose Luis Vinas costumes.

The Cinq Peres, vocal comedians who make their music with calliope-type sounds, end their very funny turn with an old but in this case exciting device—they sit in a small car onstage in front of a movie screen which makes the audience feel as if it's on a wild automobile ride.

The Carsonys (3) are handsome males skilled in finger, head, and cane balancing; the male Hungarian "Great Pusztai Troupe" (7) also is suspenseful with its acrobatics.

The Rudas acrobatic dancers (10) are shapely femme tumblers who score in a frantic flipflop romp and again as wild can-can terpers; lead nude is the beautiful fantastically proportioned Marya Linero; Ailsa Winton and Michel Zapla do a provocative nude dance; the Brix Twins are musclemen who are adept at balancing; Jean Louis Bert is excellent as the lead male dancer in the can-can number; Ralph Young and Tony Sandler are outstanding on production vocals in numbers also populated by the lovely Michele Frascoli and Rosalyn Roy.

"Casino de Paris" has everything expected of a show of this type: novelty acts punctuated by dancing girls (16), dancing boys (8), nudes (12), and overwhelming pageantry backed by the orch (22) of talented composer-conductor Bill Reddie, who wrote the vivid score. Duke.

Omar Khayam, Tel Aviv

Tel Aviv, Dec. 22.

Rosita, Larry Welk & Trio; admission $3.

Tiny Spanish singer Rosita, accompanying her singing on the guitar, is bursting with temperament and brings a new fire to the romantic atmosphere of the arty Omar Khayam nitery. Having appeared in London's Victoria Palace, at a "command performance," and recording for Philips, Rosita gives even the popular numbers a folkloristic touch. She replaced Israeli singer Yaffa Yarkoni.

South African singer Larry Welk joins an efficient ten-trio in dance tunes and blues & rhythm numbers. Rapo.

CURRENT BILLS

WEEK OF JANUARY 1

NEW YORK CITY

MUSIC HALL — Rockettes, Corps de Ballet, Raymond Paige Symphony Orc., "The Nativity."

AUSTRALIA

MELBOURNE (Tivoli Theatre) — Van Loewe, Don McManus, Jennifer Hurley, Ted Muller.

SYDNEY (Tivoli)—Penny Nicholls, Bob Andrews, The D'Angolys, The 2 Pirates, The Balcombes, Eddie Mendoza, Eric Whitley, Jeff Hudson, Harry Currie, Keith Leggett, Jackie Griffiths, Maureen Wilson, Wendy Faulkener.

BRITAIN

BRIGHTON HIPPODROME — Charlie Cairoll, Freddie Frinton, Billy Dainty, Nico Ferry, Henry Lytton, Astar Blair, Dolby Sainton, The Derek Taverner Singers.

NEW THEATRE, CARDIFF—Nat Jackley, Ken Roberts, Susan Lane, Dailey & Wayne, Diana Day, Barry Kent, Roy Jefferies, Michael Kilgarriff, Derek Taverner Singers.

COVENTRY THEATRE—Arthur Askey, Mike & Bernie Winters, Mark Wynter, Anton Dolin, Manetti Twins, Patricia Kilgarriff, Terry Callahan, Frank Lawless, John Pearn, Derek Taverner Singers. Singers.

THE ALHAMBRA, BRADFORD—Reg Varney, Freddie Sales, Joe Church, Terry Fearis, Sandra Michaels, Ernest Bale, Bronwen Williams, Morlidor Trio, Derek Taverner Singers, Laidler Sunbeams.

BIRMINGHAM HIPPODROME — The Three Monarchs, George Moon, Pamela Charles, Ken Jonnart, Stanley Platts, Dorothy Dampier, Herbert Hare, Caroline Haig, Mougli, Bryn Bartlett, Les Henry, Eric Yorke, The Betty Fox Babes, Bill Shepherd Singers, The Hippodrome Dancers.

LIVERPOOL EMPIRE — Norman Wisdom, Morton Fraser's Harmonica Gang, Eddie Leslie, Billy Whittaker, Patricia Stark, Patricia Lambert, Terry Kendall, Harold Holness, Mary Redfern, Jack Escott, Dennis Castle, Daphne Lungaro, Johnny Winter, The Leon Bartell Dancers, The Derek Taverner Singers, The Empire Boys.

MORECAMBE WINTER GARDENS — "Dick Whittington & His Cat"

NOTTINGHAM THEATRE ROYAL — Pat Lancaster, Sonny Jenks, Tudor Evans, Janette Miller, Cox Twins, Munks Twins, Humphrey Kent, Nicholas Brent, Lynda Reynolds, Pat Lonsdale, George Barnes, Arch Taylor, The Royal Dancers, Bill Shepherd Singers, The Royal Babes.

VICTORIA PALACE — The George Mitchell Minstrels, John Boulter, Tony Mercer and Dai Francis, Leslie Crowther, Margo Henderson, George Chisholm & The Jazzers, Schaller Brothers, The T. V. Toppers, Pat Ellis.

LONDON PALLADIUM — Barbara Evans, The Baker Twins, Anna Dawson, Eric Flynn, Vicki Mitchell, Elizabeth Belm, David Davenport, Andrew Laurence, Michael Hawkins, Geoffrey Wincott, Reed de Rouen, Sidney Vivian, Tom Gill, Jack Francois, The Bill Shepherd Singers, James Ottaway, Joss Clewes, Barry Shawzin.

BRISTOL HIPPODROME—Eddie Molloy, Erica Yorke, Elizabeth Alys, Betty Emery, Nicholas Smith, James Hinson, The Bristol Babes, The Hippodrome Dancers, The Derek Taverner Singers.

Cabaret Bills

NEW YORK CITY

AFRICAN ROOM — Tad Truesdale, Ritchie Haven 3, Johnny Barracuda.

BARBERRY ROOM—Conrad Monjoy.

BASIN ST. EAST—Keely Smith, Count Basie.

BITTER END—Spider John Koerner.

BON SOIR—Karen Chandler, Three Flames, Gene Bayles.

BLUE ANGEL—Dave Astor, Rosa Morena, Woody Jones, Reyneaux.

CHARDAS—Millie Fling, Bela Babai Orc., Elemar Horvath, Tibor Rakosay, Dick Marta, Janos Hozzsu.

CHATEAU MADRID—Los Chavales de Espana, Senor Wences, Emilio Reyes Orc., Carbia Orc.

COPACABANA—Jerry Vale, Pat Henry, Cally Dodd, Rene Martell, Joseph Mele Orc., Frank Marti Orc.

CRYSTAL ROOM—Larry Storch, Jay Lawrence.

EMBERS—Jonah Jones.

GRINZING — Kalman Banyak, Henry Butz.

HAWAIIAN ROOM — Dee Marquez, Keolu Beamer, Auletta Orc.

HOTEL AMERICANA—Pearl Bailey, Lester Lanin Orc., Al Conte Trio.

HOTEL ASTOR—Eddie Lane Orc.

HOTEL NEW YORKER—Alfredo Munar, Milt Saunders Orc.

HOTEL PARK SHERATON — Irving Fields 3.

HOTEL PLAZA—Juliet Prowse, Emil Coleman Orc., Mark Monte Orc. Plaza-9 Room: Julius Monk, Carol Morley, Gerry Matthews, Rex Robbins, Lovelady Powell, Susan Browning, Gordon Connell, William Roy, Robert Colston.

HOTEL ST. REGIS—Peter Duchin Orc, Nancy Mannino, Quintero Orc, Walter Kay, Jani Sarkozi.

HOTEL SAVOY-HILTON—Arturo Arturos Orc.

INTERNATIONAL — George White's Scandals, Mike Durso Orc.

LATIN QUARTER—Novelites, Bobby Breen, Szony & Francois, Marion Conrad, Jeanne Michelle, Jo Lombardo Orc., Sammy Bidner Orc.

LIBORIO—Olga Guillot, Candido, Elena Del Cueto, Gloria Ochoa & Nestor, Herman Le Batard Orc., Pancho Cardenas Orc.

LIVING ROOM — Johnny Desmond, Danny Davis, Elenora Pivan.

NO. 1 FIFTH AVENUE—Hankinson & De Maio.

RAT FINK ROOM—Jackie Kannon, Ken Colman, Marge Dodson, Norm Geller 3.

RED GARTER—G-String Strugglers.

RED ONION—Banjokers.

SAHBRA—"Hora Hootenany" Menasha Bancrai Orc., Gabri Ders., Margolit Ankory, Dr. Sheva Biron & Ezra Zahavi, Leo Fuld.

SQUARE EAST—"When The Owl Screams," Bob Dishy, Severn Darden, Dick Schall, Dana Elcar, Barbara Harris.

THE MOST—Joe Mooney, Carol Sloane, Jorge Morel.

TOWN & COUNTRY—Allen & Rossi, Brascia & Tyler, Muri Leighton, Ned Harvey's Orchestra, Rodriguez Orc.

UPSTAIRS-DOWNSTAIRS—"Twice Over Nightly," Alexander, MacIntyre Dixon, Richard Libertini, Mary Louise Wilson.

VIENNESE LANTERN—Yaffa Yarkoni, Ernest Schoen Orc.

VILLAGE BARN—Ivy Marker, Roy Calhoune, Jim Ray James, Astronotes.

VILLAGE GATE—Leon Bibb, Modern Folk Quartet, Roland Kirk Quartet.

VILLAGE VANGUARD—Herbie Mann Orc.

CHICAGO

BLUE ANGEL—"International Calypso Revue," Mitsou, Maurishka, The Calypsonians, Al D'lacey Orc.

CONRAD HILTON — "Ladies First" George Carl & Arlene, Gus Augspurg & His Jungle Wonders, Manuel Del Toro, Marei Langenbein, Ernie McLean & Caroline Paul, Boulevar-Dears (5) & Boulevar-Dons (5), Jimmy Palmer Orc.

HOTEL CONTINENTAL—Eileen Barton, Franz Benteler Orc.

CRYSTAL PALACE—Amanda Ambrose.

DEL PRADO HOTEL—"Hits of Broadway" revue.

DRAKE HOTEL—Earl Wrightson & Lois Hunt, Jimmy Blade Orc.

EDGEWATER BEACH — Juan Carlos Copes Revue, Don Davis Orc.

GATE OF HORN—Village Stompers, Ron Eliran.

LONDON HOUSE—Ramsey Lewis Trio, Jose Bethancourt Trio, Larry Novak Trio.

MISTER KELLY'S—George Kirby, Claiborne Cary, Marty Rubenstein Trio, John Frigo Trio.

PALMER HOUSE—Xavier Cugat & Abbe Lane, Ben Arden Orc.

PLAYBOY—Sonny Sands, Wayne Roland, Jackie Carol, Russ Arno, Judy Curtis, Brothers Cain.

SECOND CITY—"13 Minotaurs," Ann Elder, Sally Hart, Avery Schreiber, John Brent, Jack Burns, Del Close, Omar Shapli, David Steinberg, Gene Kadish, Bill Mathieu

SHERATON BLACKSTONE—Ray Shaw & Joe Costa, Frank York Orc.

LOS ANGELES

COCONUT GROVE—Gordon & Sheila MacRae.

CRESCENDO—Judy Henske, Mike Clifford, Lou Alexander.

DINO'S—Jack Elton, Carol Brent, Steve LaFever.

ICE HOUSE—Don Paulin, Rene Herodia, The Villagers.

INTERLUDE—Pat Collins

JERRY LEWIS—Lionel Ames.

MELODY ROOM—Rita Moss.

PURPLE ONION—Jimmy Witherspoon, Hampton Hawes, Teddy Edwards.

SLATE BROS. — Don Rickles, Eileen Burton.

STATLER HOTEL—George Liberace

TOWN HOUSE—Red Nichols & Five Pennies.

TROUBADOR—Sonny Terry, Brownie McGee, Hoyt Axton.

YE LITTLE CLUB—Marc Douglas, Patty Kim.

MIAMI-MIAMI BEACH

AMERICANA—"Ecstacy on Ice."

BALMORAL—London Lee, Brown & Dann, Gaslight Singers, Turtles.

CARILLON—"Ooh La La," Barry Sis., Lynda Gloria, Jerry Newby, Pierre Jacques, Line (12), Jacques Donnet Orc., Bill Jordan & Lee Coby, Sammy Morris, McCormick's 3.

CASABLANCA—Buck Buckley, Mario & Flora, Bob Regent Orc.

CASTAWAYS—Ring-A-Ding Six, Peridots, Preacher Rollo Orc., M. B. Symphony Orc.

DEAUVILLE—Sammy Davis Jr., Inga & Rolf, Les Rhode Orc.

DIPLOMAT—Jack Jones, Berri Blair, Van Smith Orc.

DORAL BEACH—Damita Jo, Allegro 4, Stan Hayman & Johnny Music, Mal Malkin Orc., Chester Nennett Dancers.

EDEN ROC—Belle Barth, Morry King, Sonny Kendis Orc., Monroe Kasse Orc.

FONTAINEBLEAU—"Vive Les Girls."

MURRAY FRANKLIN'S — Murray Franklin, Paula Page, Guy Rennie, Pepe Miller, Eddie Bernard, Dick Havilland.

THUNDERBIRD—Richie Bros., Berj Vaughn 4, Jimmy Holmes, Phyllis Branch.

LAS VEGAS

BOURBON STREET—Lyn Keath.

CASTAWAYS—Woody Herman Orc., Don Sherman, Rene Roberts, Lounge: Don Randi Trio.

DESERT INN—Eddie Fisher, Lounge: Buddy Lester, Ben Blue, Mafalda Trio.

DUNES—Frederic Apcar's "Casino de Paris." Lounge: Rusty Warren, "Vive Les Girls." Sultan's Table: Arturo Romero Strings (11), Jacques Foti.

FLAMINGO—Carol Lawrence, Jackie Mason, Russ Black Orc. Lounge: Harry James, Billy Eckstine, Nita Cruz, Bob Sims.

FREMONT—Joe King Zanlacs, 4 Fables [illegible] Bill Britton.

GOLDEN NUGGET—Judy Lynn, Cut Ups, Herb Remington, Tommy Strange.

HACIENDA—"Les Poupees de Paris," Grover Shore Trio, Johnny Olenn, Four Tunes, Kay Houston.

MINT—"Hong Kong Scandals."

NEVADA—"Harem Nights," Royal Tahitians, Singers Three.

RIVIERA—Tony Martin, Cyd Charisse, Half Bros., Jack Cathcart Orc. Lounge: Shecky Greene, Bobby Sherwood, Phyllis Dorne.

SAHARA — Buddy Hackett, Buddy Greco, Louis Basil Orc. Lounge: Louis Prima, Gia Maione, Sam Butera, Witnesses, Characters, George Rock.

SANDS—Joey Bishop, L.A. Dodgers, Antonio Morelli. Lounge: Sonny King, Vido Musso, Yacoubian Co., Dave Burton, Ernie Stewart.

SHOWBOAT—Rusty Isabel, Johnny Paul.

SILVER SLIPPER—Bo Belinsky, Taffy O'Neill, Donna Theodore, Sparky Kave, Danny Jacobs, Eddie Innes, Viennas, Slipperettes, Geo Redman Orc. Lounge: Fantastics, Beverly Marshal, Skeets Minton, Johnny La Monte.

STARDUST — "Lido de Paris." Eddie O'Neal Orc. Lounge: Novelites, Bernard Bros., Nalani Kele, Esquivel, Andrini Bros.

THUNDERBIRD—Dick Shawn, Patricia Marand, Eileen Rogers, Pat Finley, Victor Rogers, Benny Baker in "Anything Goes" and "High Button Shoes," Nat Brandwynne Orc. Lounge: Billy Daniels, Dukes of Dixieland, Buddy Rich, Big Beats, Kitty Kover.

RENO-TAHOE

GOLDEN—Davis & Reese, Paris Playmates Revue, John Carleton Orc.

HAROLDS — New Christy Minstrels, Francis Brunn, Steiner Bros., Don Conn Orc.

HARRAH'S (Reno) — Tommy Dorsey Orc., Braman & Leonard, Judy Lynn, Tony Lovello, Red Coty.

HARRAH'S (Tahoe)—Jack Benny, Lettermen, Moro-Landis Dancers, Leighton Noble Orc. Lounge: Earl Grant, Jack Ross, Marksmen, Jimmy Wakely, Victorians.

HOLIDAY—Sue Thompson, Coronados, Requiros, Charles Gould.

MAPES—Freddie Bell and Bellboys with Robert Linn, Frankie Fanelli.

NEVADA LODGE (Tahoe) — Collins Kids, Hits And a Miss, Robert Paul and Maria Novotna.

NEW CHINA CLUB—Skip O'Connell.

RIVERSIDE—Jimmy Dorsey Orc., Riverside Varieties, Carlton MacBeth Orc., Travelers 3.

NUGGET (Sparks)—Mills Bros., Jack Carter, George Arnold Singers and Dancers, Foster Edwards Orc.

WAGON WHEEL (Tahoe)—Glenn Miller Orc., Country Gentlemen, Maaka Nuas Hawaiian Revue, Johnny Hamlin Quintet, Senators, Orrin Tucker Orc., Ron Rose.

House Review

Fox, Brooklyn

Brooklyn, Dec. 26.

Murray (the "K") Kaufman, Lloyd Price, Miracles, Wayne Newton, Mary Wells, Martha & The Vandellas, Duprees, Tommy Hunt, Jay & The Americans, Betty Harris, Ruby & The Romantics, Tommy Roe Little Anthony & The Imperials, Dale & Grace, Vibrations, Lloyd Price Band (13) conducted by Earl Warren and "Gun Hawk" (AA); $2.50 admission.

Despite the fact that rock 'n' roll is held in low intellectual repute by highbrows and harassed mothers of teenagers, it spells rich cabbage in the bank and decidedly snazzy showmanship for all concerned, especially as seasonal holiday stage fare.

Sufficient proof of this is to be seen at the rousing exhibition Murray Kaufman, better known among his radio followers as Murray the "K," is staging in the borough of Brooklyn, frequently dubbed Gotham's bedroom. Judging by the bursting melodics in the environs of downtown Brooklyn, the borough is no longer a sprawling babycarriage centre but one vast vortex of beehived hairdo teenagers clutching rock 'n' roll platters and shrieking their admiration for the talent on display in the darkened auditorium of the Fabian's Brooklyn Fox.

The WINS (N.Y.) platterspinner has another moneymaker in this Christmas holiday show. Booked for an eight-day run with four or five shows daily, depending on biz, it is estimated the house will gross in the region of $130,000, a handsome figure, to be sure, but not quite as high as Kaufman's total record of $180,000 which he racked up the last Labor Day week engagement at the Brooklyn house. The Christmas Day teeoff show, however, drew record attendance with $19,800 for four shows.

This is probably Kaufman's most polished and professionally produced show in the history of such productions at the Brooklyn house. Additionally, there's abundant entertainment for the audience with a good deal of it contributed by Kaufman's own patter.

Standouts in the nearly 90-minute performance include The Miracles, a show-stopping Negro vocal group with a stalwart list of recordings to their credit; Tommy Hunt, considered by Kaufman one of the coming headliners of 1964, who churns the audience into a shrieking army of admirers with his version of "Human"; Little Anthony & The Imperials, gifted singers and agile dancers with superb lighting effect to back them up.

Clicking, too, with the younger set are Betty Harris with her snaky rendition of "Cry to Me"; Tommy Roe, who has the audience with him all the time he socks out "Everybody"; Martha & The Vandellas who score with their interpretation of "Quicksand," and The Vibrations, whose vocalizing and dancing footwork bring the house down with enormous applause.

Adding impetus to the show attendance is the free giveaway before noon daily of Murray "the K's" Golden Gasser album to every patron. But once the youngsters are in the house they're viewing a fast-paced holiday offering under the aegis of a smooth and winning host. What's ahead for the Kaufman package appears even more promising. Negotiations are under way to play it on the Loew's Circuit plus a series of concerts in New Haven, Hartford and other areas which dig this brand of entertainment. As played at the Fox, Murray "the K" has himself a singing swinging soiree with beaucoup bread at the b.o.

Rans.

New Acts

UKIE SHERIN
Comedy, Songs
53 Mins.
Art Leonard's, Phoenix

Ukie Sherin has been rattling around the Hollywood bistro beat for years but this little baldpated character has yet to be booked, printed and mugged in New Acts.

As a longtime observer of the nitery scene, this Mr. Magooish looking funster has developed an undeniable onstage poise and an inexhaustible bag of gags.

His chatter, as a standup or prattling away at the upright, doesn't belt or overwhelm the tablers but he elects to feed 'em a potpourri of unlikely, outlandish one-liners and situations and lets the yocks fall where they may. He has an uncanny talent of sensing the mood of the payees and letting their reactions set the pace of the show. Credit him with succeeding more than he fails. He can be nostalgic or waspish with equal ease.

Shelly Kaston, house booker for the Playboy chain, caught his preem and promptly inked him for a series of PC gigs. His peculiar brand of humor should suit Hefner's Ivy League auditors just fine. Sherin is OK for large rooms but better suited for tight little offbeat saloons populated by the hip "inside" set. O'Haf.

BARBARA LEIGH
Songs
20 Mins.
Society, London

Barbara Leigh, an Australian blonde, is making quite a name for herself on the local nitery circuit. She is a personable performer, establishes an easy rapport with the diners and has fashioned a neat routine, which makes a pleasant post-prandial diversion.

There is ample evidence that Miss Leigh has taken pains in prepping an act suited to her talents, which is adaptable to the needs of the room in which she is appearing. She has a lively set of pipes, and makes excellent use of an echo effect for a couple of her number, to provide a contrast in delivery.

After a conventional, but suitable, opener, she segues into "Fill My Heart With Song," has change of pace in "I Believe in You," and a good offbeater in "High Society." Appropriately, the songfest includes an Australian folk number, which has comedy overtones, and puts the seal on a promising act. Myro.

DAVE FRYE
Comedy
25 Mins.
Living Room, N.Y.

Although Dave Frye has been around for some time, he is a stranger to the New Act files. Frye is a capable comic, albeit in need of material at this point, and also faced with the requirement of sharpening his act in several spots.

Frye has a keen ear and voice for impressions. He mimics not only with vocal fidelity, but gets characterizations down excellently. He has a fairly good script to provide a continuity, but the format under which he works makes for a lot of repetition and overtime. The same items could be presented more simply and with it more effectively. Frye needs a bit of bluepencilling to bring out the maximum effectiveness of his script and also a greater awareness of the overall time for his act. Jose.

SYLVIA DE SAYLES
Songs
25 Mins.
Living Room, N.Y.

Sylvia De Sayles has been operating in the Carib area for sometime and this is her first local cafe presentation. Miss De Sayles has a warm and ingratiating manner with a song. She can be dramatic and yet state matters fairly simply. The Negro songstress seems to have a good potential for many media.

Miss De Sayles, in showing her versatile modes of presentation, sometimes seems to work against her best interests, since she tends to diffuse her impact. However, her top effectiveness is merely a matter of organization. She has looks and basic ability that should give her an extremely wide scope. Jose.

RICH LITTLE Impressions
40 Mins.
Gatineau Club, Hull, Que.

"Sixty characters in search of a writer"—to paraphrase Pirandello—pretty well describes the act of this good-looking young Ottawa performer, who's just had his first U.S. date. He actually does 72 characters and got called to do them all, for 90 minutes, by the Thanksgiving crowd at Guy Lombardo's Port o' Call near Tierra Verde, Fla., where he was in for two weeks with Joan Fairfax & Her All Girl Orchestra. (Latter are in till Jan. 2, when Lombardo returns from tour, then probably go to Puerto Rico).

Most nightclub audiences, though, demand meaty or freshly funny material—not just impressions, uncanny though many of his are. Little, who's been doing them for six years (two of them on radio, plus d.j.ing), undoubtedly has a high talent—but not for writing; and his present writers serve him very spottily. Nonetheless, he's had an LP "My Fellow Canadians" that sold well in eastern Canada, and has a new one "Scrooge and the Stars" just out, on which he does 24 voices.

When caught, his excellent carbons were Vaughan Monroe, Louis Jourdain (in "Gigi"), Howard Keel (in "7 Brides for 7 Brothers"), Gary Cooper, James Stewart ("Let's get out of here so I can go home and have some of mom's apple pie!"), Fred MacMurray ("I'm suffering from Flubberitis"), Hitchcock, Peck, Benny, Raymond Burr ("Perry Mason"), James Mason, Walter Brennan, Ed Sullivan ("The entire population of Canada—where are you seated? Will you stand up, please?") and his longtime ace, former Canadian Prime Minister John Diefenbaker.

When Rich Little, who works sans custumes, noses or props, gets a sharp-etching writer, he'll really go places. In fact, he's just been signed for the Judy Garland tv show—called in by its Canadian writing team Frank Peppiatt and John Aylesworth, who will doubtless sharpen up his material. They'd auditioned him for a now defunct show last winter. He goes to Hollywood Jan. 5 to prepare for taping Jan. 10. He's also booked into Toronto's posh Royal York Hotel's Imperial Room, cobilled with Margaret Whiting. Both will be backed by Moxie Whitney Orch. Little sings a split opener-closer quite adequately. Gard.

JOAN LONG
Songs
35 Mins.
Executive Club, Knoxville

Fashionable dresser with a pert walk-on, Joan Long opens strong with "Show Business" followed by "Coming Up Roses." Ethel Merman-type belter has good intonation, displays a broad smile and relaxes her audience. Other numbers include excerpts from "Oliver" and "Stop The World." She closes with torchy version of "Man That Got Away." Good for large or intimate niteries. Brad.

Night Club Reviews

Continued from page 43

Deauville, Miami B'ch

There also a plentiful bag of lightly purveyed topical lines to garner appreciative chuckles.

Davis hits the heel-and-toe segment sharp and sure, in his sans-orch tap-estry, and eases into an upbeat vocal set that sets them to mitting long before he hits final note. The fast gunslinger demo bit is a sure pleaser, to top matters. Another topper is his standard quickie impressions bit; on for over an hour, they kept pounding for more.

Inga & Rolf are well chosen warmer-uppers. Handsome pair are ace terpers, from American rhythmic ideas to the class continental patterns that weave in lifts, gasp-raising drops and split slides. Femme is an eyecatcher with it; they offer to solid returns.

Les Rhode and his orch back in top manner, with Davis' own trio of aides adding to the impact. Jack Carter and Julie London are due Jan. 5 for a 10-day stay. Lary.

PIX SAG HYPO TO GERMAN LEGIT

J. J. (Jake) Shubert, 86, Dies in N.Y.; Last of Founders of Theatre Firm

Jacob J. Shubert, the last of the three brothers who founded the Shubert theatre empire in New York and nationally, died last Thursday (26) at 86 of a cerebral hemorrhage in his top-floor apartment in the Sardi Building in the heart of Broadway's legit district. He had been ailing for virtually a year.

He died 10 years and one day after the death of his brother, Lee. Their older brother Sam, who was responsible for bringing the family into show business, was killed in a train wreck in 1905. Of the three brothers, J. J., as the recently-deceased Shubert was known, was the only one to have had a child—a son, John, who died during a trip to Florida in November, 1962. It is said J. J. never knew of John's passing.

Thus, there are no direct second generation descendants of the Shubert brothers to take over the theatrical dynasty now being managed by Lawrence Shubert Lawrence Jr., a nephew. His father, Lawrence Shubert Lawrence Sr., manager of Shubert theatre in Philadelphia, is the son of the Shuberts' sister, Fannie, who is also mother of Milton Shubert. The family included another sister Dora. Sam had never married and Lee was wed late in life.

J. J. whose Sardi apartment was across the street from the flagship Shubert Theatre and the alley that bears the family name, was the youngest brother. He had been inactive for several years with complete operation of the Shubert enterprises having been taken over by his son during the late 1950's.

Two days before J. J.'s death,

(Continued on page 49)

See Improved Russo-Israeli Cultural Pact

Tel Aviv, Dec. 30.

A certain "thaw," evident recently in the cultural relations between Russia and Israel, manifested itself this week both in actual visits and promised ventures. Violinist Valerie Klimov, accompanied by pianist Wladimir Yampolsky, came for a series of recitals and concerts with the Kol Israel Broadcasting orchestra. Yampolsky, permanent accompanist of David Oistrakh, also participated in concert, accompanying Klimov for four encores demanded by the enthusiastic gala concert audience.

Bogatir & Ory, local impresarios in charge of intercultural relations with Eastern Europe, having pioneered efforts in this direction, flew to Europe to complete arrangements for the forthcoming tour, scheduled for a Dec. 31 opening of the famous Berioska Dance Group, second only to the famed Moyseyev Dancers.

Victor Gregorovitch Komisarzevsky, wellknown Russian-Jewish theatre director, on visit to Israel with a group invited by the local Israel-Russia friendship league, seemed extremely emotional over the fact that the Habimah, Israel's national theatre, lives as a glowing memorial to the great artists of the Russian theatre, and to Stanislavsky and Vachtangov (who directed the famous "Dybbuk"). He said the known Russian theatre director, Youri Zabatsky, had promised the management of the Habimah to come and direct a play in Tel Aviv some time in late 1964, after the group returns from its U. S. tour. "Zabatsky, a pupil of Vachtangov, would be continuing the fruitful relations between the Habimah veterans, started at the Moscow Art Theatre more than 45 years ago, and continued under Vachtangov's tuition," said Komisarzevsky.

Coax the Muse in Boston

Boston, Dec. 30.

Boston Ballet, formerly the Boston Civic Ballet, is one of eight companies to receive a grant from the Ford Foundation. It gets $144,000, on a matched-dollar basis.

Money is to enable Virginia Wheeler, director, in the development of a permanent professional company with four new productions in each of the next three seasons. Performances of the Boston Ballet have for the past three years been given largely in connection with the cuffo Boston Arts Festival.

Below and Beyond Broadway's 'Ice'; So What's Next?

The office of N.Y. State Attorney General Louis J. Lefkowitz ended its questioning last Friday (27) of 90 boxoffice employees who had been subpoenaed the previous week in connection with Lefkowitz's probe of business irregularities in legit. Most of those quizzed, a spokesman for the Attorney General said, invoked the Fifth Amendment and refused to testify.

The investigation is continuing with subpoenas issued to individuals in the theatre not involved in the sale of tickets. Meanwhile, the office of N.Y. District Attorney Frank Hogan, which is studying the possibility of seeking criminal indictments by a grand jury in the area of ticket scalping, has subpoenaed the books and records of unidentified companies that buy Broadway tickets regularly from brokers. (Known to include banks.)

The Attorney General, who has civil jurisdiction, has turned over evidence of scalping to the D.A.

250 STAGE PLAYS NEW IN YEAR

The well-documented sag in the German film industry has had a positive effect on other segments of the entertainment scene in that country. This per William Dieterle, director of over 80 Hollywood films who returned to Germany four years ago when assignments began to slacken in Hollywood.

Back in the States again, Dieterle reports that the dubbing industry is flourishing in Germany because local audiences are so hungry for outside product. Actors there "make a fortune" dubbing tv and feature films, he said, some making upwards of $25,000 a year on dubbing alone. Only U.S., Italo and French pictures do any real biz there, Dieterle noted because native product is "so bad that nobody goes to see it."

Legit is flourishing in Germany. There are about 250 playhouses all over the country. Hence over 250 preems there of plays from all over the world last year. These included 45 German, 45 French and 30 American scripts. And, to top it off, most theatres run on a SRO basis 10 months or more.

The situation with the film industry is a big contributor to this boom, Dieterle opined. The best native actors and directors are in the theatre while those good picture actors and directors who develop leave the country to work elsewhere. A revival of the German film biz has been tried over and over, he noted, but the industry still remains in the same old hands "who have no idea of what's going on," Dieterle said.

Television quality is quite good there, the director testified. Much originates out of the country, however. But "it's very hard to get professionals when you start a picture over there," Dieterle said, because the reputation of the German product is so bad. "The people would rather see old westerns than many of these mediocre quickies," he pointed out.

As a result, the director found

(Continued on page 52)

Lee Shubert Estate Faces U. S. Tax Claims and Erosion at 6% Interest

The U.S. Government is suing the estate of the late Lee Shubert for $15,705,387 in taxes, according to U.S. Attorney Robert M. Morgenthau. In an action filed Dec. 24 in N. Y. Federal Court, the Government estimates that the still unsettled estate of the late Shubert, who died at the age of 78 Christmas day, 1953, is worth more than $25,000,000.

Major assets, the complaint states include one-half interest in the theatrical partnership of Lee and his brother J. J. Shubert, who died last Thursday (26) at the age of 86 (but said to be older). Estate the action claims, also includes $162,500 in life insurance and personal property worth $18,289. According to Asst. U. S. Attorney Harvey R. Blau, the late Lee Shubert's will left $350,000 to his wife and $700,000 to relatives, friends and employees.

The bulk of the estate, Blau says, was left in trust with the ultimate beneficiary the Sam S. Shubert Foundation, a philanthropic entity established by Lee and J. J. in memory of their older brother and long-ago partner. Half the interest from the bulk, Blau explained goes to the foundation with the other half split equally among Mrs. Sylvia Wolf Golde, a niece; and two nephews, Lawrence Shubert Lawrence Sr. and Milton Shubert. They, the complaint states, together with William Klein, described as friend and counsel, were named as trustees and executors of the will.

Lawrence Shubert Lawrence Sr. manages Shubert theatres in Philadelphia. His son, Lawrence Shubert Lawrence Jr., is the manager of the Shubert enterprises, having

(Continued on page 49)

French Troupe Adds Two

Paris, Dec. 30.

Maria Mauban and Genevieve Page have been given temporary leaves from the Theatre National Populaire company to join the Madeleine Reynaud-Jean Louis Barrault troupe on its forthcoming trip to the U.S.

Company opens in New York at the City Center late in February, with a three month tour to follow.

Irish Equity Bids Dublin Theatre Adopt Repertory

Dublin, Dec. 30.

Irish Actors Equity has proposed a plan for the Gate Theatre to have a permanent repertory company and school of acting, as when the late Lord Longford operated the theatre. It's also suggested that small local theatre, the Eblana, should have a permanent company specializing in the production of contemporary plays, and that the Queen's, temporarily the home of the Abbey company, should be preserved as a Shakespearean theatre.

The Gate is controlled by a company of which Lady Longford is chairman, and is leased on a rental basis. The Eblana is owned by the national transport company and rented as a theatre weekdays, when bookings are obtainable, and used as an art cinema Sundays. The Queen's was a vaude house before being leased to the Abbey. It will revert to its owners, the Rank Organization, when the Abbey company moves to its new theatre late next year.

Equity, concerned about actor employment, hopes to persuade Irish industries, currently on a sponsorship jag for public relations, to subsidize the theatre.

Obtain Warrant For the Arrest Of Mrs. Thrasher

Philadelphia, Dec. 30.

A warrant for the arrest of Mrs. Ethelyn R. Thrasher, former managing director of the John B. Kelly Playhouse in the Park, has been obtained by District Attorney James C. Crumlish Jr. Mrs. Thrasher is charged with forgery, obtaining money under false pretenses, embezzlement and fraudulent conversion. The ousted Playhouse director is in Florida, but her attorney agreed to surrender her for a hearing after Jan. 1.

The charges stem from a recent report made by City Controller Alexander Hemphill, following his investigation of the theatre's financial management. The criminal accusations list four specific items. Mrs. Thrasher is alleged to have bought letterheads for her private company, Thrasher Productions, and billed the city $125 for them. She also allegedly billed the city $210 for cleaning costumes for "Romanoff and Juliet," a Thrasher production.

The director is accused of having had the Playhouse pay Walter Slezak, star of "Romanoff and Juliet," $1,000 more than he was entitled to receive for his performance here. The city also allegedly paid the bills and rental charges for the New York office of Thrasher productions, in an amount as yet unstated.

The filing of the criminal charges climaxes a long series of accusations and denials made by Hemphill and Mrs. Thrasher. Hemphill insisted Thrasher Productions was clear of conflict of interest and a violation of the managing director's contract. The accused's explanation was that stars insisted on more than one week's work to go out on the summer circuit, and that by guaranteeing them the extra engagements she was able to attract names and bolster the Playhouse season.

In November, the Fairmount

(Continued on page 49)

OUT NEXT WEEK!

The

58th Anniversary Number

Of

VARIETY

Shows Out of Town

What Makes Sammy Run?

Philadelphia, Dec. 27.

Joseph Cates presentation of musical comedy in two acts (16 scenes), with book by Budd and Stuart Schulberg, music and lyrics by Ervin Drake, based on the novel by Budd Schulberg. Staged by Arthur Storch; musical staging, Matt Mattox; settings and lighting, Herbert Senn and Helen Pond; costumes, Noel Taylor; vocal arrangements and musical direction, Lehman Engel; orchestrations, Don Walker; dance music arrangements, Arnold Goland; production supervision, Robert Weiner. Stars Steve Lawrence, Sally Ann Howes, Robert Alda; features Bernice Massi, Barry Newman, Victor Kilian, Richard France, Arny Freeman, George Coe, Graciela Daniele, Mace Barrett, Walter Klavun. Opened Dec. 26, '63, at the Erlanger Theatre, Philadelphia.

Van Dorn ..... Arny Freeman
Al Manheim ..... Robert Alda
Osborn ..... John Dorrin
Sammy Glick ..... Steve Lawrence
Bartender ..... Ralph Vucci
Julian Blumberg ..... George Coe
Rita Rio ..... Graciela Daniele
Tracy Clrak ..... Richard France
Lucky De Fazio ..... John Dorrin
Shiek Dugan ..... Barry Newman
Technical Advisor ..... Bob Mayer
Sidney Fineman ..... Victor Kilian
Kit Sargent ..... Sally Ann Howes
H. L. Harrington ..... Walter Klavun
Laurette Harrington ..... Bernice Massi
Seymour Glick ..... Mace Barrett

Singing Ensemble: Lillian Bosinoff, Natalie Costa, Judith Hastings, Jamie Simmons, Darrell Askey, John Dorrin, Richard Terry, Ralph Vucci.

Dancing Ensemble: Diaan Ainslee, Nancy Carnegie, Barbara Gine, Lavina Hamilton, Bella Shalom, Maralyn Thoma, Jean Blanchard, Marco Gomez, Buck Heller, Nat Horne, Jack Kresy.

Swing Couple: Lynn Gremmler, Douglas Spingler.

Musical numbers: "The New Boy," "A New Pair of Shoes," "You Help Me," "Sweetie," "Hometown," "Bachelor Girl," "Monsoon," "Lites — Camera — Platitude," "I See Something," "Maybe Some Other Time," "You Can Trust Me," "A Room Without Windows," "Kiss Me No Kisses," "I Feel Humble," "Something to Live For," "Paint a Rainbow," "You're No Good," "Something to Live For" (reprise), "The Friendliest Thing," "Wedding of the Year," "Some Days Everything Goes Wrong."

The sweet smell of success hovers over 'What Makes Sammy Run?" the hard-hitting, well decorated, fine moving musical comedy which Budd Schulberg, in collaboration with his brother, Stuart, has made from his time-tested novel.

The assets are many, the negatives few. The script efficiently tells its sage of the hero-heel, a recent contribution to musical comedy literature, and in the role of this colossal jerk, Steve Lawrence is brash, funny, animated and in spite of the role, oddly sympathetic.

It is well known that he can sell a song. He and his coworkers have good ones in the score provided by Ervin Drake, who is his own and clever lyricist. A reasonable prediction is that a lot will be heard from "A Room Without Windows" (in fact, that one seems to be getting a pre-Broadway airing of considerable proportions), and "Something to Live For," and while they are indigenous to the show, "I Feel Humble" and "You're No Good" are off-beat numbers which might be raised out of context.

Joseph Cates has provided a production which is opulant without being oppressive as it relates the story of Sammy Glick's progress from shoeless copy boy on a New York daily to Hollywood tycoon.

With Matt Mattox as choreographer, the large chorus performs an eye-catching number called "Monsoon" which relates how Sammy had changed Somerset Maugham's "Rain" into a new version where the Rev. Davidson becomes a female missionary and Sadie Thompson is metamorphisized into a fugitive gangster. Graciela Daniele and Richard France brilliantly dance the leading roles and the chorus, as in all its chores, is vivid and exciting.

Lawrence, of course, is not alone in furnishing the story line and songs. Robert Alda scores as the drama editor who made his mistake in giving Samy his first pair of "freebies." Sammy immediately sells them for the shoes which, figuratively, he uses to trample down all his later associates. Alda plays with distinction and his voice re-echoes the quality of his "Guys and Dolls" appearance.

Sally Ann Howes has a vibrant soprano and a sense of humor. Beatrice Massi plays a Hollywood daughter of the mighty who cuts Sammy down to size. Victor Killan has a good spot as the associate producer sent to his doom by Sammy, and Walter Klavin is effective as the overall cinema boss.

The flexible settings are provided by Herb Senn and Helen Pond, and whether in a New York bar, Graumen's Chinese or a studio set, they have the authentic touch. The whole show is wrapped up efficiently by directors Arthur Storch. If slightly long on its opening night, the musical seems to have no great problems in editing. Gagh.

Conversations in the Dark

Philadelphia, Dec. 24.

Theatre Guild Productions, Inc., presentation of drama in three acts, by William Hanley. Staged by Dan Petrie; settings and lighting, Ming Cho Lee; costumes, Michael Travis; associate producer, Don Herbert. Stars Jack Warden, Sandra Church; features Jon Cypher, Barabar Barrie. Opened Dec. 23, '63, at the Walnut St. Theatre, Philadelphia.

Eddie Harmon ..... Jack Warden
Maude ..... Sandra Church
Ray Phillips ..... Jon Cypher
Claire ..... Barbara Barrie

William Hanley, previously represented off-Broadway by a brace of short plays on one bill, "Mrs. Dally Has a Lover," and "Whisper in My Good Ear," is shooting "Conversations in the Dark" toward the big time. Philadelphia audience generally seemed in the down-thumbs mood for his story of marital infidelity.

Hanley's bed parade is serious instead of the usual farce attack, and some of his characters and philosophy might conceivably frighten Tennessee Williams.

"Conversations" is a four character play with Sandra Church, Jack Warden, Jon Cypher and Barbara Barrie as the interchangeable (almost) mates. They work hard in the also interchangeable apartments fluidly constructed by Ming Cho Lee and seem to obey the offhand direction of Daniel Petrie. But whether they make much sense or achieve sympathy will be the problem of the producing Theatre Guild.

Warden plays a prizewinning novelist, twice divorced, who believes that his marriage with a New York bistro folksinger will solve his emotional problems and result in the offspring which will leave him some sense of perpetuation. He is fervent on this subject because he knows that a bad ticker will soon end his life.

For reasons not too firmly established; his wife has been spending all of her spare time in bed with a successful Shakespearean actor. Miss Church plays the folksinger, John Cypher portrays the actor and Barbara Burrie enacts the latter's pregnant wife.

The cast works diligently, and to playwright Hanley's credit, he doesn't smirk about their predicaments. There is something a bit unrealistic however, in the way he takes an erotic pattern as a sampling of life. Gagh.

Bits of London

London, Dec. 30.

Bernard Miles has decided to quit acting and devote his full time to administration at the Mermaid Theatre, which he founded in the City of London a few years back. In the past two years, he has given over 500 performances at the Mermaid and also in the West End, but has found that the dual operation of management and acting has been too time demanding.

As part of the British Council's promotion for Shakespeare's quartercentenary celebrations, Ralph Richardson and Barbara Jefford are to tour South America and Enrope in "The Merchant of Venice" and "A Midsummer Night's Dream." The tour is being presented by Tennent Productions, and will open in Brighton early in February, and then go on to Mexico City, Caracas, Santiago and Buenos Aires before coming back to Europe for engagements in Lisbon.

Diane Elliott has joined the cast of "Boeing-Boeing," at the Apollo Theatre, succeeding Carole Shelley, who withdrew to take over the title part in "Mary, Mary," at the Globe, as replacement for Maggie Smith. The latter left the Jean Kerr comedy to join the British National Theatre company, her first assignment being a featured part in a revival of "The Recruiting Officer."

Michael Redgrave is president of the Questors Theatre, in the London suburb of Ealing, which is due to open next April with a production of "Brand," by Henrik Ibsen.

Off-Broadway Shows

(Figures denote opening dates)

Blacks, St. Marks (3-4-61).
Boys Syracuse, Theatre 4 (4-15-63).
Brig, Midway (12-19-63).
Brontes, Phoenix (12-20-63).
Corruption, Village South (10-8-63).
Fantasticks, Sullivan St. (5-3-60).
Ginger Man, Orpheum (11-21-63).
Immoralist, Bouwerie Lane (11-7-63).
In White America, Sher. Sq. (10-31-63).
Maids, 1 Sher. Sq. (11-14-63).
Pinter Plays, Pocket (11-26-62).
Riverwind, Actors Playhouse (12-12-62).
Six Characters, Martinique (3-8-63).
Streets of N. Y., Maidman (10-29-63).
Telemachus Clay, Writers (11-15-63).
Theatre of Peretz, Gate (11-5-63); suspends Jan. 6-13.
Trojan Woman, Circle in Sq. (12-23-63).
Trumpets of Lord, Astor Pl. (12-21-63).

CLOSED

Burning, York (12-3-63); closed last Sunday night (29) after 31 performances.

SCHEDULED OPENINGS

Play-Lover, Cherry Lane (1-4-64).
Pimpernel, Gramercy (1-6-64).
Betty-Sponge, East End (1-6-64).
Mail Train, New Bowery (1-10-64).
Cabin in Sky, Players (1-13-64).
Athenian Touch, Jan Hus (1-14-64).
House of Negro, East End (1-14-64).
Too Much Johnson, Phoenix (1-15-64).
Lovely Light Mayfair (1-20-64).
Riverside Drive, de Lys (1-22-64).
Once in a Lifetime, York (1-27-64).
Caretaker, Players (1-30-64).
Amorous Flea, E. 75th St. (2-5-64).
Jo, Orpheum (2-6-64).
Salad Mad Cafe, Wash. Sq. (3-9-64).

Show on B'way

Double Dublin

Josephine Forrestal Productions, Inc., presentation of revue in two acts (17 numbers), with material by the cast. Supervision, Gus Schirmer Jr.; musical direction, Baldwin Bergersen; setting and lighting, Helen Pond and Herbert Senn; musical number editor, David Nillo. Features John Molloy, Noel Sheridan, Deirdre O'Callaghan, Patricia Brogan. Opened Dec. 26, '63, at the Little Theatre, N. Y.; $5.75 top weeknights, $6.90 Friday-Saturday nights.

Cast: John Molloy, Noel Sheridan, Deirdre O'Callaghan, Patricia Brogan.

There's nothing much wrong with "Double Dublin" except that it's out of place. This inoffensive little revue from Dublin's Gate Theatre may have seemed novel and quaint and charming on its home grounds, but opening last Thursday night (26) at the Little Theatre, on the bustling, unheeding island of Manhattan, it's merely inadequate.

Mrs. Josephine Forrestal, widow of Secretary of Defense James V. Forrestal, has imported the show, a sort of Gaelic, amateurish version of "Beyond the Fringe." The motives of everyone, even the misguided producer, are unquestionably beyond reproach. But "Double Dublin" would be more suitable as a private entertainment, or possibly for one-night bookings in small-capacity college theatres, than for the exacting tastes of sophisticated metropolitan audiences.

The cast of two men and two girls includes a pair of character drolls, John Molloy and Noel Sheridan, plus a singer, Deirdre O'Callaghan, and a dancer, Patricia Brogan. Neither the comics nor their material, which is their own, are original, strong or sharp enough for major league presentation.

Although the girls are attractive and appealing, they are ordinary performers. Baldwin Bergersen has arranged the native Irish music and plays the piano accompaniments, and Miss O'Callaghan also supplies her own harp accompaniment.

There are, at a liberal estimate, a maximum of half a dozen mild chuckles during the evening, and one moderately touching sketch by Mollow about an old fish gutter and packer who has just lost his job after 54 years, and is trying to bolster his courage at a pub.

Mostly, however, the reaction to "Double Dublin" is merely an impulse toward kindness. After all, these agreeable-seeming people haven't harmed anyone, and their predicament merits sympathy.

(Closed last Saturday night (28), after four performances.) Hobe.

Scheduled B'way Preems

Milk Train, Atkinson (1-1-64).
Chinese, Royale (1-2-64).
Hello, Dolly, St. James (1-16-64).
Dylan, Plymouth (1-18-64).
After Fall, ANTA-Wash. Sq. (1-23-64).
Habimah, Little Theatre (2-1-64).
What Makes Sammy, 54th St. (2-4-64).
Abraham Cochrane, Hudson (2-5-64).
Rugantino, Hellinger (2-8-64).
Fair Game, Lyceum (2-10-64).
Passion Josef, Barrymore (2-11-64).
Foxy, Ziegfeld (2-15-64).
Marco, ANTA-Wash Sq. (2-20-64).
Funny Girl, Winter Garden (2-27-64).
Charlie, ANTA-Wash. Sq. (3-12-64).
High Spirits, Alvin (3-31-64).
Hamlet, Lunt-Fontanne (4-2-64).
Royal Shakespeare, State (5-18-64).
Girl to Remember, Hellinger (5-26-64).
King and I, State (7-6-64).
Merry Widow, State (8-17-64).

Shows Abroad

Man in the Moon

London, Dec. 24.

Leslie A. Macdonnell presentation of a musical (21 numbers), with songs by Tom Springfield, Max Diamond and John Taylor, and book by Charlie Drake, Lew Schwartz, John Waterhouse and Phil Park. Based on a story by Jack Davies and Robert Nesbitt; production numbers and special material, Burt Rhodes, Phil Park. Staged by Robert Nesbitt; choreography, Michael Charnley; costumes, R. St. John Roper; decor, Tod Kingman and Roger Andrews; orchestra conductor, Billy Ternent. Opened Dec. 23, '63, at the Palladium, London; $3.15 top.

Editor ..... Michael Hawkins
Sally ..... Anna Dawson
Lord Whitcomb ..... Geoffrey Wincott
Assistant Editor ..... Peter Vernon
Charlie Cribb ..... Charlie Drake
Prime Minister ..... Andrew Laurence
Air Marshall ..... David Davenport
American General ..... Reed de Rouen
Russian General ..... Barry Shawzin
Chinese General ..... Joss Clewes
Prow. Jensen ..... James Ottaway
Air Force Policeman ..... Sidney Vivian
Air Force Doctor ..... Tom Gill
EUSPAC Orderlies ..... Jack Francols, Peter Dare, Sonny Willis, Peter Vernon, Gordon Sterne
Press Photographers ..... Gordan Sterne, John Leachman
Radio Commentator ..... Gordon Sterne
Diana ..... Barbara Evans
Heavenly Twins ..... Susan and Jenniffer Baker
Satellites ..... Vicki Mitchell, Elizabeth Belm
Argon ..... Eric Flynn
Commander of Martian Invasion Forces ..... David Davenport

Dancers: Ann Becher, Sadie Colclough, Mary Clubb, Jane Darling, Margaret Frost, Sandra Frost, Sarah Flemington, Ingrid Gregoriceva, Janet Kinson, Ann Roberts, Elaine Skelton, Valerie Sanders, Rosemary Smith, Margaret Veiler, Jenny Walton. Lorenzo Bianco, John Frost, Peter Fletcher, Bernard Jamieson, Russell Leachman, Kenneth Melville, Jerry Manley, Eric Wilson, John Walsh.

Singers: John Adrain, Ken Fraser, John Gordon, John Harvey, Lewis Henry, Gee Kenny, Peter Puves, David Rowley, Jean Collins, Anne Lester, Jennifer Maynard, Jacquie Stillwell, Jenny Wren, Delia Wicks.

Guardians: Peter Burroughs, Robert Curtis, Johnnie Lummiss, Angelo Muscat, Viv Pascoe, Tommy Reynolds, Willie Shearer, Albert Wilkinson.

Musical Numbers: World Headlines Theme, "This Is It," "What a Headline, What a Story," "Wonder Man," "Man Into Space," "You Can Do It," "Salute to Charlie Cribb," "So This Is the Moon," "My Love Has Flown Away," "Centre of the Moon Ballet," "Heavenly Twins," "First Lady," "The Lunar Cabaret," "Give Us the Lunar Sound," "In Our Pleasure Dome Tonight," "That's Kissing," "Plutonomic Rhythm," "The Dominant Sex," "Have You Heard About Love," "Teleportation Chant," "The Boston Crab."

Making a break from convention, the Palladium is presenting a "space age musical" in place of the more traditional pantomime. However, it has been staged by Robert Nesbitt, so Palladium regulars are in for a lavish spectacle, with emphasis on visual appeal. There is also the marquee draw of Charlie Drake for both children and adults.

"Man in the Moon" is set in 1990, when a lunar invasion is threatening the earth. Drake, as a strip cartoonist with a gift for predicting events a day ahead, is despatched to the moon to negotiate peace. That is a futuristic peg for Nesbitt to stage a succession of lavish production numbers. Effective use is made of film to show the flight from earth through the stratosphere and return.

Although Drake is a resourceful comedian, the book gives him scant opportunity, but he romps through the part with ease and good humor. There is a minimum of wit and invention to the book, with the emphasis on eyefilling splendor.

The cast is competent enough, with pleasant performances from Barbara Evans as the first lady of the moon, Susan and Jennifer Baker as heavenly twins, and Anna Dawson as the tenuous romantic interest. Apart from the star, the top male roles are suitably filled by Eric Flynn, Geoffrey Wincott and Andrew Laurence as the Prime Minister.

The dance numbers are lively enough, and there are several good tunes among the 20-odd song numbers, notably "That's Kissing," "Heavenly Twins" and "Boston Crab." Myro.

La Voyante

(The Fortune Teller)

Paris, Dec. 12

B. L. Deutsch presentation of two-act (five scenes) comedy-drama by Andre Roussin. Staged by Jacques Mauclair; set, Georges Wakhevitch. Stars Elvire Popesco; features, Jeanne Fusier-Gir, Jean Deschamps, Raymone, Madeleine Cheminat. Opened Dec. 2, '63, at the Theatre Madeleine, Paris; $3.50 top.

Karma ..... Elivre Popesco
Rosa ..... Jeanne Fusier-Gir
Pelletier ..... Jean Deschamps
Yerma ..... Raymone
Biscotte ..... Madeleine Cheminat

Andre Roussin, who has generally done better with light comedies than serious plays is making another try in the latter category with this uneven comedy-drama about a fortune teller and the reality or illusion of clairvoyance. It is a modest prospect for popular success in Paris and is negligible for export.

Elivre Popesco gives an impressively larger-than-life portrayal of the title character, and she and the author should have boxoffice draw, but "La Voyante" probably won't be one of Roussin's successful works.

The Comedy of Errors

London, Dec. 12.

Royal Shakespeare Co. revival of a two-act comedy by William Shakespeare. Staged by Clifford Williams, assisted by Sandy Black; decor and lighting, John Wyckham and Clifford Williams; costumes, Anthony Powell; music, Peter Wishart. Features Alec McCowen, Ian Richardson, Diana Rigg. Opened Dec. 11, '63, at the Aldwych Theatre, London; $3.50 top.

Solinus ..... Donald Sinden
Aegeon ..... John Welsh
Antipholus of Ephesus ..... Ian Richardson
Antipholus of Syracuse ..... Alec McCowen
Dromio of Epheus ..... Clifford Rose
Dromio of Syracuse ..... Barry MacGregor
Balthazar ..... Michael Murray
Angelo ..... Ken Wynne
Merchants ..... Philip Brack, John Hussey
Pinch ..... Martin Jenkins
Assistant ..... Derek Smith
Officer ..... John Corvin
Messenger ..... Ronald Falk
Gaoler ..... Martin Jenkins
Aemilia ..... Madoline Thomas
Adriana ..... Diana Rigg
Luciana ..... Janet Suzman
Luce ..... Caroline Maud
Courtezan ..... Susan Engel

Others: Barbara Barnett, Shaun Curry, Valerie Cutts, James Falkland, Peter Geddis, Brian Harrison, Marshall Jones, Tim Wylton, Robert Jenkins, Philippa Urquhart.

Prior to a foreign tour for the Shakespeare centenary celebrations in 1964, the Royal Shakespeare has revived this buoyant production for a three-week Christmas engagement at its London headquarters. It has already clicked at Stratford-upon-Avon and last year at the Aldwych.

The production will tour with the Paul Scofield-Peter Brock edition of "King Lear," first behind the Iron Curtain and then to the U.S. Both presentations are excellent achievements and a fine advertisement for Peter Hall's undersubsidized project.

There are some cast changes from last season, but the impeccable ensemble work has not suffered. Alec McCowen as the Syracusan Antipholus, in this extravagant comedy of mistaken identity, still gives the standout performance, ringing the changes with finesse on an expression of incredulous surprise.

As his lookalike, the other Antipholus, Ian Richardson makes a vehement foil, and Diana Rigg repeats her success as the fluttering wife who finds herself with a couple of husbands. Among the newcomers in an excellent company, Donald Sinden, Ken Wynne and Derek Smith score freely.

Clifford Williams' gay and inventive staging provides the right tone of poised artificiality, and the revival promises SRO business for its seasonal session at the Aldwych. Otta.

Touring Shows

(Figures cover Dec. 30-Jan. 11)

Beyond the Fringe, (2d Co.)—Shubert Cincy (Dec. 30-Jan. 11).
Black Nativity—Civic, Chi (Dec. 30-Jan. 11).
Boys From Syracuse—Split-week (Jan. 8-11).
Camelot—Opera House, Chi (Dec. 30-Jan. 11).
Camelot (bus-truck)—Oriental, Milwaukee (Dec. 30-Jan. 11).
Conversations in the Dark (tryout)—Walnut, Philly (Dec. 30-Jan. 11).
Dylan (tryout)—O'Keefe, Toronto (Dec. 30-Jan. 11).
Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum (2d Co.)—Forrest, Philly (Dec. 30-Jan. 11).
Foxy (tryout)—Hanna, Cleve. (Jan. 6-11).
Hello, Dolly (tryout)—National, Wash. (Dec. 30-Jan. 11).
Hollow Crown—Split-weeks (Dec. 30-Jan. 11).
How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying (2d Co.)—Shubert, Chi (Dec. 30-Jan. 11).
How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying (3d Co.)—Municipal Auditorium, Oklahoma City (Dec. 31-Jan. 4); Municipal Theatre, Tulsa (Jan. 6-11).
Man for All Seasons—Colonial, Boston (Dec. 30-Jan. 11).
Man for All Seasons (bus-truck)—Split-weeks (Dec. 30-Jan. 11).
National Repertory Theatre — Wilbur, Boston (Dec. 30-Jan. 11).
Never Too Late (2d Co.)—Blackstone, Chi (Dec. 30-Jan. 4); Academy, Mpls. (Jan. 6-11).
No Strings—Curran, S. F. (Dec. 30-Jan. 4 closes).
Pajama Tops—Split-Weeks (Dec. 30-Jan. 11).
Seidman and Son—Auditorium, Denver (Dec. 30-Jan. 4); Hartford, L. A. (Jan. 7-11).
Stop the World—I Want to Get Off (2d Co.)—Split-weeks (Dec. 30-Jan. 4, closes).
Thousand Clowns—Fisher, Det. (Dec. (Dec. 30-Jan. 11).
Thousand Clowns (bus-truck) — Split-weeks (Dec. 30-Jan. 11).
What Makes Sammy Run? (tryout)—Erlanger, Philly (Dec. 30-Jan. 11).
Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?—Geary, S. F. (Dec. 30-Jan. 4); Auditorium, Denver (Jan. 6-11).

B'way Gets Needed Yule B.O. Hypo; 'Girl' 69G, 'How To' 63G, 'Oliver' 60G, 'Albatross' $22,610, 'Marathon' 16G

Santa Claus made it to Broadway last week, and most shows rebounded from the drastic decline of the previous fortnight. Receipts rocketed as much as $30,144 for "Oliver." However, the SRO list was again limited to "Barefoot in the Park." The top-grosser remained "The Girl Who Came to Supper," but the take for the tuner was still substantially below its $97,000 potential capacity mark.

The top straight play-grosser was "Luther," which registered an impressive climb. There were six closings last Saturday (28), as detailed below and in a separate story. "Spoon River" remains the only Broadway show thus far scheduled to close next Saturday (4).

Estimates for Last Week

Keys: C (Comedy), D (Drama), CD (Comedy-Drama), R (Revue), MC (Musical-Comedy), MD (Musical-Drama), O (Opera), OP (Operetta), Rep. (Repertory), DR (Dramatic Reading).

Other parenthetic designations refer, respectively, to weeks played, number of performances through last Saturday; top prices (where two prices are given, the higher is for Friday-Saturday nights and the lower for weeknights), number of seats, capacity gross and stars. Price includes 10% Federal and 5% repealed City tax (diverted to an industry-wide pension and welfare fund), but grosses are net; i.e., exclusive of taxes.

Asterisk denotes show had cut-rate tickets in circulation.

Grosses normally have been reduced by commissions where theatre parties are mentioned.

Ballad of the Sad Cafe, Beck (D) (9th wk; 67 p) ($6.90-$7.50; 1,280; $50,898) (Coleen Dewhurst, William Prince). Previous week, $16,944.

Last week, $24,746.

Barefoot in the Park, Biltmore (C) (10th wk; 75 p) ($6.90-$7.50; 994; $38,692) (Elizabeth Ashley, Robert Redford, Mildred Natwick, Kurt Kasznar). Previous week, $38,424.

Last week, $38,638 with Play of the Month Guild patronage.

Beyond the Fringe, Golden (R) (62d wk; 491 p) ($7.50; 799; $34,874). Previous week, $9,098.

Last week, $21,114.

Case of Libel, Longacre (D) (12th wk; 90 p) ($6.90-$7.50; 1,101; $40,986) (Van Heflin, Sidney Blackmer, Larry Gates). Previous week, $15,426.

Last week, $21,187.

Chips With Everything, Plymouth (D) (13th wk; 101 p) ($6.90-$7.50; 1,084; $43,865). Previous week, $10,802. Moves next Tuesday (6) to the Booth Theatre.

Last week, $21,317.

Enter Laughing, Miller's (C) (42d wk; 331 p) ($6.90-$7.50; 940; $30,200) (Vivian Blaine, Alan Mowbray, Irving Jacobson, Alan Arkin). Previous week, $9,347.

Last week, $23,320.

Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum, Alvin (MC) (86th wk; 685 p) ($8.60-$9.40; 1,334; $65,096). (Zero Mostel). Previous week, $26,723.

Last week, $53,088.

Girl Who Came to Supper, Broadway (MC) (3d wk; 25 p) ($9.90; 1,785; $97,000) (Jose Ferrer, Florence Henderson). Previous week, $66,466 with parties.

Last week, $69,231, with parties.

Here's Love, Shubert (MC) (13th wk; 98 p) ($9.60; 1,453; $71,205). Previous week, $50,923 with parties.

Last week, $60,681 with parties.

How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying, 46th St. (MC) (116th wk; 919 p) ($9.60; 1,342; $66,615). Previous week, $43,599.

Last week, $62,946.

Luther, St. James (D) (14th wk; 107 p) ($6.90-$7.50; 1,609; $61,095) (Albert Finney, Kenneth J. Warren, John Moffat, Peter Bull, Glyn Owen, Frank Shelley). Previous week, $42,002. Has to vacate theatre Jan. 11 and may move to the Lunt-Fontanne Theatre.

Last week, $57,203.

Marathon '33, ANTA (D) (1st wk; 8 p) ($6.90-$7.50; 1,174; $45,650) (Julie Harris).

Opened Dec. 22 to two affirmative reviews (Chapman, News; Nadel, World-Telegram), two qualified approvals (McClain, Journal-American; Watts, Post) and two negative notices (Kerr, Herald Tribune; Taubman, Times).

Last week, $16,095 for eight performances.

Mary, Mary Hayes (C) (147th wk; 1,170 p) ($6.90-$7.50; 1,164; $43,380) (Patricia Smith, Murray Hamilton, Michael Evans). Previous week, $6,208.

Last week, $16,934.

Never Too Late, Playhouse (C) (57th wk; 453 p) ($6.90- $7.50; 994; $37,000) (Paul Ford, Maureen O'Sullivan, Orson Bean). Previous week, $28,396.

Last week, $34,535.

Nobody Loves An Albatross, Lyceum (C) (2d wk; 12 p) ($6.90-$7.50; 995; $33,000) (Robert Preston). Previous week, $14,121 for four performances and three previews.

Last week, $22,610.

Oliver, Imperial (MD) (51st wk; 407 p) ($9.30; 1,450; $71,977) (Clive Revill, Georgia Brown). Previous week, $30,032.

Last week, $60,176.

One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest, Cort (D) (7th wk; 50 p) ($6.90-$7.50; 1,100; $41,482) (Kirk Douglas). Previous week, $12,539.

Last week, $16,693.

110 in the Shade, Broadhurst (MC) (10th wk; 74 p) ($8.60-$9.40; $58,000) (Robert Horton, Inga Swenson, Stephen Douglass). Previous week, $51,211 with parties.

Last week, $55,207 with parties.

Private Ear and Public Eye, Morosco (D) (12th wk; 91 p) ($6.90-$7.50; 1,009; $41,827) (Geraldine McEwan, Barry Foster, Brian Bedford, Moray Watson). Previous week, $11,208.

Last week, $17,895.

She Loves Me, O'Neill (MC) (36th wk; 285 p) ($8.60; 1,047; $53,700) (Barbara Cook, Daniel Massey, Barbara Baxley). Previous week, $19,867.

Last week, $36,099.

Spoon River, Belasco (DR) (13th wk; 103 p) ($6.90-$7.50; 1,008; $34,277) (Betty Garrett, Robert Elston, Joyce Van Patten, Charles Aidman). Previous week, $15,162 with Play of the Month Guild patronage. Closes next Saturday (4).

Last week, $22,353 with Play of the Month Guild patronage.

Stop the World—I Want To Get Off, Ambassador (MC) (65th wk; 515 p) ($8.60; 1,121; $51,795) (Joel Grey). Previous week, $14,104.

Last week, $28,114.

Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? Rose (D) (64th wk; 504 p) ($6.90-$7.50; 1,162; $46,485) (Uta Hagen, Arthur Hill, Ben Piazza) (matinee company costars Haila Stoddard, Donald Davis). Previous week, $14,467. Mercedes McCambridge succeeds Miss Hagen Jan. 13 and Davis takes over for Hill next Monday (6). when he and Miss Stoddard will play matinee and evening performances for the week. Davis will then appear opposite Miss McCambridge and Miss Stoddard will resume matinee performances only Jan. 13 with Henderson Forsythe as male lead.

Last week, $27,538.

CLOSED LAST WEEK

Double Dublin, Little (R) (1st wk; 4 p) ($5.75-$6.90; 603; $23,900) (John Molloy, Noel Sheridan).

Opened last Thursday night (26) to a unanimous thumb-down (Chapman, News; McClain, Journal-American; Nadel, World-Telegram; Kerr, Herald Tribune; Taubman, Times; Watts, Post).

Last week, $2,142 for four performances and three previews. Closed Saturday (28) at an estimated $45,000 loss.

Irregular Verb to Love, Barrymore (C) (15th wk; 115 p) ($6.90-$7.50; 1,079; $44,124) (Claudette Colbert, Cyril Ritchard). Previous week, $7,811.

Last week, $13,796. Closed Saturday (28) an estimated $35,000 loss on a $70,000 investment.

Jennie, Majestic (MC) (11th wk; 82 p) $9.60; 1,655; $91,714) (Mary Martin). Previous week, $59,445 with parties.

Last week, $47,102 with parties. Closed Saturday (28) at an estimated loss of, at least, its entire $550,000 investment (including 10% overcall).

Love and Kisses, Music Box (C) (2d wk; 13 p) ($6.90-$7.50; 1,010; $40,000) (Larry Parks, Mary Fickett). Previous week, $9,970 for five performances and two previews.

Last week, $4,960. Closed Saturday (28) at an estimated loss of, at least, its entire $100,000 investment.

Man and Boy, Atkinson (D) (7th wk; 54 p) ($6.90-$7.50; 1,088; $44,430) (Charles Boyer). Previous week, $11,181 with parties.

Last week, $7,544. Closed Saturday (28) at an estimated loss of its entire $72,000 investment (including 20% overcall), plus about $30,000 over that figure.

Rehearsal, Royale (D) (14th wk; 110 p) ($6.90-$7.50; 1,050; $43,908) (Keith Michell, Coral Browne, Alan Badel, Adrienne Cori, Jennifer Hilary). Previous week, $11,675.

Last week, $25,931. Closed Saturday (28) at an estimated $35,000 loss on a $75,000 investment.

Opening This Week

Milk Train Doesn't Stop Here Anymore, Atkinson (D) ($6.90-$7.50; $1.088; $44,300) (Tallulah Bankhead, Tab Hunter, Ruth Ford). David Merrick presentation of revised version of play by Tennessee Williams; opens tonight (Wed.). Last week, $25,585 with Theatre Guild-American Theatre Society subscription, Ford's, Baltimore.

Chinese Prime Minister, Royale (D) ($6.90-$7.50; 1,050; $43,908) (Margaret Leighton, Alan Webb, John Williams). Roger L. Stevens presentation of play by Enid Bagnold; opens tonight (Wed.). Last week, $5,962, Colonial, Boston.

Other Theatres

Booth, 54th St., Hellinger, Hudson, Lunt-Fontanne, Winter Garden, Ziegfeld.

John Counsell's Unique Saga of Theatre Royal

London, Dec. 30.

To the legit-minded visitor to Britain the Theatre Royal, Windsor, is as much a "must" as Windsor Castle. It represents the top league of "out of town" theatres, the Royal Family's "local," a playhouse that has obstinately survived the financial rollercoaster of 25 years and over 1,000 productions.

In "Counsell's Opinion" (Barrie & Rockliff; $3.50) John Counsell tells the story of this theatre which has been a life's dream and spur first visualized in, of all places, Belgrade. Just down from university, he was acting as tutor to a British minister's son when he first had the dream. He knew he could earn a precarious living as an actor but it was the administration side of running a theatre that gave him a kick. Sign of his dedication is that he got a job for two years in a dull business establishment simply to get the hang of the figures-and-ledger side of running a business.

That patient dedication has colored all his activities in putting the Royal on the map. His well written, civilized book frankly outlines his mistakes and is an almost harrowing yarn of early frustrations and financial disappointments. It's a story of dedicated perseverance, self-sacrifice and guts. If ever a man hitched his wagon to a wobbly star, and after years, is enjoying the sight of that star shining bright and constant it is Counsell.

His wife, Mary Kerridge, can truly be said to have been his inspiration. When things were so black that even he thought he was crazy to push ahead he realized that the only chance to put this talented thesp on the map was to provide a theatre for her to work in. So he kept at it. Now he and Miss Kerridge and their twin actress-daughters are the family backbone of the theatre.

Counsell, in witty, urbane style, has many show biz yarns to spin and also some fascinating glimpses of his army career. He was no hero, but somehow found himself ghosting Eisenhower's dispatches and even drafting the instrument of German surrender. That event is no more remarkable than how he doggedly steered the Theatre Royal, Windsor, from the palest of blueprints to success. Rich.

'Sammy' 30G (5), 'Conversations' 15G, 'Forum' $37,599 for Six, All in Philly; 'Milk' 25½G, Balto; 'Chinese' 6G, Hub

The road got three new entries last week, all debuting in Philadelphia. Two were the Broadway-bound tryouts of "Conversations in the Dark" and "What Makes Sammy Run?" The other was the touring edition of "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum." Business was slow for "Conversations," and okay for "Sammy" and "Forum."

Musicals in the big money last week were "Camelot" and "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying," both in Chicago, as well as "Dolly" in Washington.

Estimates for Last Week

Parenthetic designations for out-of-town shows are the same as for Broadway, except that hyphenated T with show classification indicates tryout, RS indicates road show and BT indicates bus-and-truck production. Also, prices on touring shows include 10% Federal tax and local tax, if any, but as or Broadway grosses are net; i.e., exclusive of taxes. Engagements are for single week unless otherwise noted.

Where subscription is mentioned, the gross is the net after the deductions of commissions. Grosses for split weeks are projected when shows play guaranteed dates.

BALTIMORE

Milk Train Dosn't Stop Here Anymore, Ford's (D-T) ($5.43; 1,819; $52,231) (Tallulah Bankhead, Tab Hunter, Ruth Ford). Previous week, $7,436 for five performances, Playhouse, Wilmington.

Last week, $25,585 with Theatre Guild-American Theatre Society subscription.

BOSTON

Chinese Prime Minister, Colonial (D-T) (2d wk) ($5.40-$6; 1,685; $55,085) (Margaret Leighton, Alan Webb, John Williams). Previous week, $9,846.

Last week, $5,962.

National Repertory Theatre, Wilbur (Rep-RS) (2d wk) ($5.50-$6; 1,241; $40,601) (Eva Le Gallienne, Farley Granger, Denholm Elliott, Anne Meacham). Previous week, about $10,000 for repertory of "The Seagull," "Ring Round the Moon" and "The Crucible."

Last week, around $14,000 for same repertory.

CHICAGO

Black Nativity, Civic (MD-RS) (4th wk) ($5.50-$6; 904; $27,500). Previous week, $11,925.

Last week, $17,469.

Camelot, Opera House (MC-RS) (4th wk) ($6-$6.75; 3,600; $120,000) (Kathryn Grayson, Louis Hayward, Arthur Treacher). Previous week, $64,783 with TG-ATS subscription.

Last week, $84,182 with TG-ATS subscription.

How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying, Shubert (MC-RS) (7th wk) ($5.95-$6.95; 2,100; $74,000). Previous week, $59,494.

Last week, $64,761.

Never Too Late, Blackstone (C-RS) (8th wk) ($5-$5.50; 1,447; $42,000) (William Bendix, Nancy Caroll, Will Hutchins). Previous week, $6,729.

Last week, $8,812.

Seidman and Son, Studebaker (C-RS) (4th wk) ($5.50-$6; 1,200; $35,000) (Sam Levene). Previous week, $22,573 with TG-ATS subscription.

Last week, $28,010 with TG-ATS subscription.

DETROIT

Thousand Clowns, Fisher (C-RS) (2d wk) ($4.85-$5.50; 1,606; $39,000) (Dane Clark, Margaret O'Brien). Previous week, $25,241 with Fisher Playgoer subscription.

Last week, $24,216 with Fisher Playgoer subscription.

INDIANAPOLIS

Thousand Clowns, Clowes (C-BT) (John Ireland). Previous week, unreported.

Last week, about $11,000 for four performances.

KANSAS CITY

Stop the World—I Want to Get Off, Music Hall (MC-RS) (Kenneth Nelson, Lesley Stewart). Previous week, unreported.

Last week, $15,353 for five performances. Closes next Saturday (4) in Louisville.

NEW ORLEANS

Man for All Seasons, Civic (D-BT) (Robert Harris, Jeff Morrow, Robert Donley, Dick O'Neil). Previous week, unreported.

Last week, $8,974 for four performances.

PHILADELPHIA

Conversations In the Dark, Walnut (D-T) (1st wk) ($4.80-$5.40; 1,349; $41,000) (Jack Warden, Sandra Church).

Opened tryout here Dec. 23 to three pans (Murdock, Inquirer; Schier, Bulletin; unidentified, News).

Last week, $15,045 with TG-ATS subscription.

Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum, Forrest (C-RS) (1st wk) ($6.60; 1,760; $65,000).

Opened tour here last Wednesday night (25) to two endorsements (Murdock, Inquirer; O'Brien, News) and one pan (Schier, Bulletin).

Last week, $37,599 with TG-ATS subscription for six performances.

What Makes Sammy Run? Erlanger (MC-T) (1st wk) ($6.60-$7.50; 1,894; $64,000).

Opened last Thursday night (26) to two favorable reviews (Murdock, Inquirer; O'Brien, News) and one negative notice (Schier, Bulletin).

Last week, about $30,000 for five performances.

PITTSBURGH

Beyond the Fringe, Nixon (R-RS) ($5-$5.50; 1,760; $48,000). Previous week, $22,029, Forrest, Philadelphia.

Opened here Dec. 23 to two raves (Fanning, Post-Gazette; Monahan, Press).

Last week, $19,422 with TG-ATS subscription.

SAN FRANCISCO

No Strings, Curan (MC-RS) (5th wk) ($6.50-$7.05; 1,758; $60,000) (Howard Keel, Barbara McNair). Previous week, $23,208.

Last week, $22,380. Closes here next Saturday (4).

Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? Geary (D-RS) (3d wk) ($5.95-$6.60; 1,483; $48,500) (Nancy Kelly, Sheppard Strudwick) (matinee company costars Michaele Myers, Kendall Clark). Previous week, $26,874 with TG-ATS subscription.

Last week,$21,354.

TORONTO

Dylan, O'Keefe (D-T) (1st wk) ($5.50; 3,211; $58,757) (Alec Guinness). Previous week, $56,361 for nine performances, Shubert, New Haven.

Opened here last Wednesday night (25), but caught the following eve (Thurs.) by critics who gave it three qualified approvals (Cohen, Star; Evans, Telegram; Whittaker, Globe & Mail).

Last week, $43,130 for six performances with TG-ATS and O'Keefe subscription.

WASHINGTON

Hello, Dolly, National (MC-T) (2d wk) ($5.50-$7.90; 1,673; $62,502) (Carol Channing). Previous week, $46,067 for six performances with TG-ATS subscription.

Last week, $62,252 with TG-ATS subscription.

WILMINGTON

Man for All Seasons, Playhouse (D-RS) ($5.50; 1.251: $25,000) (William Roderick, Bruce Gordon). Previous week, $30,527 with TG-ATS subscription, Ford's, Baltimore.

Last week, about $22,300 for five performances with TG-ATS subscription.

SPLIT WEEK

How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying (MC-RS-3d Co.). Previous week, $35,096, Civic New Orleans.

Last week, $49,664 for eight performances split between Civic, New Orleans, and Auditorium, Houston.

UNREPORTED

(Included below are productions with guaranteed dates on which grosses cannot be accurately figured).

Camelot (MC-BT) (Biff McGuire, Jeannie Carson, Melville Cooper), split-week.

Pajama Tops (C-RS) (June Wilkinson, Richard Vath), Auditorium, Ft. Worth.

Deplore Quest of Bargain In Actors

Equity of U.S. and Equity of Britain Issue a Joint Statement on Imports of Talent

Actors Equity and British Equity issued a joint statement last week condemning the importation of actors or productions from other countries "on grounds of cheapness." The statement followed a meeting in London of representatives of the two unions to discuss their mutual problems, particularly the present disproportion between the number of British actors and productions appearing on Broadway and the number of American performers appearing on the West End.

Broadway producers have long been accused by Actors Equity of importing foreign actors because they could be obtained for less money than would have to be paid American performers. This has been denied by producers. The argument doesn't apply in the area of minimum salaries for big stars, but is understood to be centered more in the category of featured players.

However, not only did the talks in London result in the issuance of a statement, but British Equity has also raised the minimum salary for its members who appear on Broadway to $200 weekly. Heretofore the regular Actors Equity minimum applied to British actors brought over for Main Stem productions. In the case of shows originating in London and imported for New York outings, the minimum for the British actors on Broadway has corresponded with the regular road minimum for members of Actors Equity which is now $151.75 weekly.

The new minimum does not apply to performers now working in Broadway shows under earlier contracts. The British actors' minimum for performing at home is $39.20 a week.

That's Car Biz!

Frank Carrington, managing director of the Paper Mill Playhouse, Millburn, N.J., recently turned in his car of some 10 years for a '64 model. Although the old vehicle had gone virtually unscratched in about 150,000 miles of driving, the new one was damaged beyond repair in a collision after being in the producer's possession one day.

At the time of the accident, Carrington had not yet secured collision insurance. He had never bothered to take out such a policy on his previous car.

EX-EDMONTON CRITIC PANS PAPER'S POLICY

Edmonton, Alta., Dec. 30.

A former drama critic of the Edmonton Journal, Dr. J. W. Bilsland, accused the paper of weakness and complained of its "innocuous mouthings" when he addressed a meeting of the Humanities Association and the Philosophical Society on the University of Alberta campus.

He and The Journal parted ways recently over reviewing policies.

Suggesting that the newspaper was susceptible to pressures from outside groups, he said, "The Journal apparently has two sets of standards—one that allows a reviewer to say what he believes, and the other that applies when someone rises up in anger at what has been written."

Dr. Bilsland said differences between himself and The Journal arose over a review of an Edmonton Light Opera production. He said his review had been "seriously altered" and he refused to allow it to run under his byline.

Commenting on Dr. Bilsland's statements, managing editor Andrew Snaddon said the review was rejected by editors as being too harsh.

He had telephoned Dr. Bilsland, telling him he felt the criticism could not be wholly justified. Certain modifications were suggested, although, in the opinion of the managing editor, the tone remained the same. Dr. Bilsland was asked if he wanted the article to appear under his name because it had become the opinion of The Journal. Dr. Bilsland said he would rather it did not, and the newspaper acceded to his request.

Shakespeare in a Tent To Debut in Australia

Melbourne, Dec. 30.

The Australian Elizabethan Theatre Trust will present a revival of "Henry V" at the Adelaide Festival of Arts next March, using a tent similar to that used originally at the Stratford (Ont.) Shakespearean Festival. This three-quarter stage production will be new to Aussie audiences.

The staging will be by Tom Brown, who worked with Tyrone Guthrie and Michael Langham in the inaugural seasons of the Canadian festival. The title part will be played by 22-year-old John Bell, a highly regarded Sydney actor.

Young New Management Dares Four 'Messiahs' On Single Holiday Weekend

By TRUDY GOTH

Four versions of Handel's "Messiah," extant since 1742, were heard over the holiday weekend in a commendable enterprise of two young music impresari, Jay K. Hoffman and George Schutz. First of the lot was a honorable attempt to reconstruct the work as it was given when it was premiered in Dublin's Neal Music Hall (1742). Organizers may have gone a little too far in pedantry because if there was one factor which stood in the way of the deserved success: Philharmonic Hall is more than twice the size of the Dublin Hall and without going into acoustical details, it is a highly modern building with all sorts of devices unknown and non-existent 221 years ago. "The Dublin version" calls for a small chorus of 26 (only 20 were used at Philharmonic Hall). There were six soloists, including a counter-tenor and the excellent Festival Chorus who sang pleasingly but a certain grandeur was missing. It was a pity that the prescribed boys' chorus had to be replaced by female voices.

Of the soloists, Sara Endich and Yvonne Cianella, sopranos, Beverly Wolff mezzo, John Ferrante counter-tenor, Charles Bressler tenor, Donald Gramm bass-baritone, this last one did the best work of the evening but all soloists were well coached and except for a few rough spots here and there everyone was satisfactory. Conductor Dunn has not only done a lot of valuable work with his scores but also presented his large and youthful audience with some excellent music making.

Meantime, "four Messiah weekend" experiment, unprecedented in the music history of New York City is a challenge to concert managements, traditionally scared of the holiday period.

PLAN AREA THEATRE FOR BURLINGAME, CAL.

Herb Rogers, longtime summer theatre operator in the Chicago area, plans erecting a 2,500-seat theatre-in-the-round in Burlingame, Cal., for an opening next Sept. 15. The spot, adjacent to the Hyatt House Hotel, is to be called the Music Fair.

Plans call for 24 weeks' operation, including a 12-week fall season of six musicals running two weeks each and a 12-week spring season of straight plays and concerts. Stars are to be used in the offerings.

Construction of the Music Fair, a two-story building, is to start in mid-January. Besides the regular legit presentations, there'll be kiddie programs, as well as a school for dance, voice and dramatic instruction.

Next June, Rogers will begin his 17th season as producer of the Tenthouse Theatre, Highland Park, Ill. He reveals that $65,000 was poured into additional improvements at that showcase last summer, bringing the total outlay to $750,000 thus far on the 40-acre setup. The Burlingame enterprise will comprise 10 acres and will cost $1,000,000, Rodgers estimates.

New York University's PROF.
JOHN McCABE
when not chairmaning the Department of Dramatic Arts recalls from his background in practical show biz
Some Wise Words On John Barrymore another interesting Feature in the 58th Anniversary Number
of
VARIETY
Plus other statistical and data-filled charts and articles

Rome, Most Conservative Opera in Italy, Lines Up Array of Innovations

Rome, Dec. 30.

Rome Opera House is perhaps the most conservative of all the many lyric drama establishments in Italy. But the new artistic director, Sergio Bogianvkino, may be leading it to slightly broadened criteria, per his repertory as revealed for next season.

Opening night will see a "Falstaff," staged and designed by Franco Zeffirelli and conducted by Carlo Maria Guilini. Three works of 20th century composers will have new productions this season: Alban Berg's "Wozzek" (conductor Fernando Previtali), Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex" and Luigi Dallapiccola's "The Prisoner." Latter has chalked up more than 100 performances in opera but has never been heard in Rome.

A world premiere will be given of Virgilio Mortari's "The Contract." Rossini's "Otello" will be exhumed after 80 years of oblivion. "Boris Godunov" will be heard in its original version instead of the commonly used by Rimski-Korsakov and will be conducted as well as staged by Lovre von Matacic. There will be a "Fidelio" (in German) conducted by Lorin Maazel and a "Meistersinger" (in Italian) with Tyllio Serafin. "I Puritani" will be brought from Palermo in the Zeffirelli production and "Nozze" will be staged by Luchino Visconti under Guilini's baton.

ROMAN LEGIT PERKING; NAPLES WILL RELIGHT

Rome, Dec. 30.

Though it's probably not an actual boom, legit boxoffice returns to managerial faces recently. In in Rome have been bringing smiles fact, business here is rivalling the profitable situation in Milan, where "Rugantino" and "My Fair Lady" are cleaning up.

For the first time in years, several new legit presentations are running along at a $1,600 nightly average, very big for here. Several musical productions have even topped that figure.

While the musical, "Tommaso D'Amalfi," continues to lead, straight plays such as "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" and "In Memory of a Lady Friend" are also pulling good returns, and "The Devil and the Lord" is doing well in its post-Roman tour.

Anticipated newcomers include a new staging of "Hamlet" by Franco Zeffirelli, with Giorgio Albertazzi and Anna Proclemer in key roles, the "Compagnia dei Nuovi Giovani," with Carla Gravina, Ilaria Occhini, Corrado Pani and Gian Maria Volonte, making its local debut, and a revival of the old Garinei-Giovannini musical comedy, "Goodnight, Bettina," with Walter Chiari.

Things are not as rosy, however, in Naples, where local legit theatres are only now reopening after several dark months. Critics and legit fans began circulating petitions, and back-to-theatres movement has now grown so that it's succeeded in getting several Italian companies to book the city for short engagements at pop prices early in December for an unofficial "festival" season. Theatres involved are the previously-shuttered Mediterraneo, Mercadante, San Ferdinando and Politeama.

An Israeli production of "Chips With Everything" is scheduled for a mid-January opening at the Cameri Theatre, Tel Aviv, under the production auspices of Oded Kotler.

Off-Broadway Reviews

The Trojan Women

Circle in the Square-Theodore Mann presentation of a drama in one act by Euripides, translated by Edith Hamilton. Staged by Michael Cacoyannis; music, Jean Prodromides; costumes, Theoni V. Aldredge; lighting, Jules Fisher; choreography, Mr. Cacoyannis; chorus master, Erin Martin. Opened Dec. 23, '63, at the Circle in the Square, N.Y.C.; $4.35 top weeknights, $4.95 weekends.

Cast: Mildred Dunnock, Joyce Ebert, Carrie Nye, Jane White, Alan Mixon, Robert Mandan, Chris Man, Michael Walker, Kay Chevalier, Carolyn Coates, Elaine Kerr, Karen Ludwig, Erin Martin, Linda Martin, Dixie Marquis, Dimitra Steris, Maria Tucci, Alan Rachins, James O'Hanlon.

Greek director Michael Cacoyannis has staged a gripping, powerful revival of "The Trojan Women," Euripides' tragedy about the grief-stricken women of conquered Troy. It ranks as the most distinguished production of the off-Broadway season, and should have a healthy run at the Circle in the Square.

Cacoyannis, who directed the recent film version of "Electra," has his actors move with an effective combination of graceful fluidity and sharp, jarring movements that serve to punctuate the action. There is also great vocal variety in the performance, with the speaking tones ranging from barely audible whispers to tormented shrieks, both seemingly right and not excessive. The sinister music of Jean Prodomides and the lighting by Jules Fisher add immeasurably to the production's burning intensity.

As Hecuba, the Trojan queen, Mildred Dunnock gives a performance of depth and power. At times she seems lacking in larger-than-life regality, but she conveys fully the sorrow of a woman who has lost her country, her husband, and her sons, and faces an ignominious life of slavery. Matching her is Joyce Ebert, who is superb as Andromache, widow of Hector and mother of a young boy murdered during the course of the play. Proud, anguished, devoid of hope, Miss Ebert's portrayal is almost unbearably passionate and convincing.

Carrie Nye skillfully presents the two aspects of Cassandra; first crazed and unbridled grief, and then cold vengefulness. Alan Mixon is fine as a Greek soldier who must carry out orders that he does not condone, and Robert Mandran is good as Menelaus, Although Jane White is properly sensuous as Helen, she strikes an unexpectedly comic note in her performance, and does not seem as well cast as the others.

The chorus of nine actresses is expertly handled by Cacoyannis, and is effective both visually and vocally. All told, this 2,400-year old drama is more meaningful, more immediate, and more compelling than anything off-Broadway has offered in months.

Kenn.

The Burning

Edwin Wilson presentation of a drama in three acts, by Wallace Hamilton; associate producer, Hyman Silverman. Staged by Stephen Aaron; sets and lighting, Robin Wagner; costumes, Patricia Quinn Stuart. Opened Dec. 3, '63, at the York Theatre, N.Y.; $3.95 top weeknights, $4.50 weekends.

Cast: Clint Atkinson, Kristina Callahan, Marry Cass, Bill Daprato, Jonathan Frid, Ed Gasper, Jerome Guardino, Clifton James, Jean Le Bouvier, Jeno Mate, Michael McGuire, Richard Nicholls, Alan Oppenheimer, Arland Schubert, Guy Sorel, Maurice Whitener, Walter Smith.

Although "The Burning" deals with the events leading up to the execution of a colony of lepers in 14th century France, its theme is timeless: the murder of scapegoats by those motivated by fear and expediency.

The churchmen, nobles and peasants who demand the burning of the lepers in Wallace Hamilton's play do so for various reasons. Some act out of personal greed, lust, or desire for revenge. One church official hopes to use the incident as a catalyst to gain support for a Crusade. The townspeople, suffering from high taxes, famine and typhoid, blame the lepers out of terror and unhappiness.

An interesting aspect is that the lepers themselves are not entirely innocent. Isolated from society, and regarded with hate and suspicion, they strike back by becoming the demons that they have been treated.

Hamilton is thus dealing with valid, intriguing subjects, and there are highly dramatic moments in his play. But it is clear from the beginning that the lepers will be burned, and instead of building in tension, the work becomes repetitious and diffuse as it proceeds.

Nor does the casting help. A key weakness is Jerome Guardino, who fails to do justice to the crucial role of a monk in charge of the leper colony. Guy Sorel as the bishop, and Clifton James and Alan Oppenheimer as lepers are fine, but the rest of the acting is spotty.

Director Stephen Aaron has devised imaginative staging, and his groupings are visually impressive. Robin Wagner's sets and lighting are excellent, and Patricia Quinn Stuart's costumes are right. But despite its provocative content, "The Burning" does not live up to its potential. Kenn.

Trumpets of the Lord

Theodore Mann, in association with Will B. Sandler, presentation of a musical adaptation by Vinnette Carroll of "God's Trombone," a series of sermons by James Weldon Johnson. Staged by Donald McKayle; musical director, Howard Roberts; sets, Ed Wittstein; lighting, Nicola Cernovich, assisted by Alfred Coffey; costumes, Normand Maxon; associated producer, Jay Stanwyck. Opened Dec. 21, '63, at the Astor Place Playhouse, N.Y.C.; $4 top weeknights, $4.50 weekends.

Cast: Cicely Tyson, Al Freeman Jr., Theresa Merritt, Lex Monson, Earl Baker, Elizabeth Brown, Bill Glover, Bernice Hall, William Stewart.

A sort of dramatic musical revue in the form of a gospel meeting, "Trumpets of the Lord" is rousing, reverent, and thoroughly enjoyable.

Arranged by Vinnette Carroll, the presentation is built around sermons by James Weldon Johnson. They are effectively delivered by Al Freeman Jr., Lex Monson, and especially Cicely Tyson, telling the histories of Adam, Eve and Noah with verve and humor, and the story of the Crucifixion with enormous skill and sincerity.

The gospel music is performed irresistably by six fine singers led by Theresa Merritt, whose lovely voice is accompanied by a warm, ingratiating personality.

"Trumpets of the Lord" is a short presentation, lasting only about an hour and a quarter. But it sends its audience away happy.

Kenn.

Candida

Equity Library Theatre revival of a comedy-drama in three acts, by George Bernard Shaw. Staged by Irving Vincent; scenery, Bob De Mora; lighting, Winifred Sensiba; costumes, Sydney Milliken. Opened Dec. 7, '63, at the Master Theatre, N.Y.C.; admission by donation.

Cast: Terese Hayden, James Evering, Jon Cedar, Ruth Preller, Stephen Gray, Garnett Smith.

"Candida" does not rank as one of ELT's better productions, but it is fortunate in having Terese Hayden in the title role. She seems more mature than the 33-year old heroine described by Shaw, but she conveys the character's self-assurance, wisdom and warmth. It's an accomplished, winning portrayal, particularly effective in the final act.

The rest of the acting is uneven. Jon Cedar is, on the whole, an adequate Morell, but James Evering is unsuccessful in the tricky role of Marchbanks. There is none of the poet in his performance, which is frenetic but unconvincing. Irving Vincent's staging, has good moments, but compounds rather than alleviating the weakness of Evering's performance.

Stephen Gary as Burgess and Garnett Smith as the curate are acceptable, but Ruth Preller is erratic as the typist. The setting of a cluttered Victorian study designed by Bob De Mora, is first-rate. Winifred Sensiba's lighting is fine, and Sydney Milliken's costumes are suitable. Kenn.

The Play of Herod

(Cloisters, N.Y.)

Museum of Art, staged two French, 12th century biblical musical dramas, presented as one play in the wonderfully authentic Spanish Chapel of the Cloisters, a most apt setting. Show, a sellout at $7 ($5 to members) played six night and two matinee performances, Dec. 9 to 14.

Employing the New York Pro Musica, Noah Greenberg, director; the boy's choir of the Church of the Transfiguration (The Little Church Around the Corner); 21 singers; and five musicians (including an early bagpipe), the production was a reverent, full-throated recreation of the story of

(Continued on page 52)

The Boys From Syracuse

There have been other boys from Syracuse who made good in the big city, but among the most distinguished were Sam S. Lee and Jacob J., whose Shubert dynasty was destined to buck and break the "syndicate' (Klaw & Erlanger) and who, in turn, were charged by the Government, under the Clayton antitrust act, with tactics of similar power and repression in later years. The Government won. Parenthetically, two other boys from Syracuse of parallel contemporaneous genre were J. Robert Rubin, destined to become top legal counsel and a top exec of the original Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in the era where the trademarked lion was roaring in fullest financial and cinematic power; and the other was Sime Silverman, albeit born in Cortland, New York, who came by the way of Syracuse to found VARIETY.

The last of the Shubert triumvirate, who died last week at 86, was virtually incommunicado in the last year or two, because of age and infirmity. It is said he had never been apprised that his son, John, died a year ago on a train to Florida of a heart attack.

Sam, the oldest, died in a train wreck in 1905 and Lee died in 1953. Ten years later the Government sued the latter, seeking over $15,000,000 in inheritance taxes from a claimed $25,000,000 estate, which presumes that the Messrs. Lee & J. J. Shubert holdings are valued at over $50,000,000. (Again, intratrade estimate placed it at between $15,-$30,000,000).

A year ago, the Shubert destinies rested with a second generation successor. With the untimely death of John, the son of J. J., at 54, the dynasty's future now rests with Lawrence Shubert Lawrence Jr., a nephew. In effect he has been in command for over a year, and prior to that had been groomed by John—both are of the same age—so that he is thoroughly au courant with family aims and public obligation.

LSL Jr., sensitive to his obligations as a fiduciary manager, has been "handling himself well," as the intratrade slogan goes. He has evidenced an inclination for projecting a new "image" in legit theatre-and-public relations, on the level where it most counts—ticket sales and ticket selling service. The Shubert Alley "central boxoffice" was a notable step. The hookup with Macy's for ticket outlets isanother. This by no means insures getting two-on-the-aisle, down-front for any hit show on any desired night, but it's step in the right direction.

There have been even more vivid manifestations in theatre facelifting, front and back; a direct contact with the local operations in the farflung Shubert empire, from Boston to Philly, Chi and Cincy. John Shubert didn't fly; he took trains, and thus didn't get around as much as the airborne Lawrence Shubert Lawrence Jr. Latter has exchanged first-hand ideas, complaints and observations with local Shubert reps.

With the passing of J. J., who occupied the top-floor apartment in the Sardi Bldg. at 234 West 44th St., facing New York's Shubert Alley, is recorded a milestone in the saga of three resourceful and enterprising show biz giants. Lee favored the penthouse apartment in the Shubert Theatre Bldg., which faces the Sardi Bldg. (actually, this too is a Shubert property but gets its name from the adjacent restaurant landmark) and J. J.'s son, John, would bivouac in the nearby Hotel Astor if he chose not to head north to his West 54th St. apartment. Lawrence Shubert Lawrence Jr. is a boy from Philadelphia—not Syracuse—where he was born, and he too has a penchant for pitching his nocturnal tent near the theatres that comprise the Shubert empire. Between the passing of "Uncle Jake," and the litigation against Mr. Lee's estate, LSL Jr. would appear destined to "mind the store" even more.

J. J. (Jake) Shubert Dies

Continued from page 45

the Government had filed suit in N. Y. Federal Court for $15,705,387 against brother Lee for estate taxes. There are also other suits involving Lee's estate. The worth of the Lee-J. J. partnership according to the Government is $50,000,000. J. J. Shubert had contended the partnership was worth between $7,000,000 and $15,000,000.

What effect J. J.'s death will have on the Shubert organization remains to be seen.

J. J. was the last of the brothers, born to Syracuse peddler David Shubert, to move from that city to New York. As a youngster, he teamed with his older brothers in the operation of a Syracuse stock company. They subsequently expanded to four theatres in Syracuse and others in upstate cities. They were all under 21 during this phase of their activities.

In 1900, Sam moved to New York and managed the Herald Square Theatre. Lee followed and then J. J., who had stayed behind to manage the upstate business. They soon began acquiring theatres in New York and out-of-town. This eventually placed them in conflict with the Marc Klaw-A. L. Erlanger "syndicate" which in 1905, managed 1,250 of the 5,000 legitimate theatres in 3,500 communities throughout the country. The fight between the Shuberts and Klaw & Erlanger continued into the 1920s with the exception of a two-year truce from 1907-1909.

The Shuberts eventually gained supremacy and subsequently were criticised for the same power policies they had accused K & E of practicing. When Sam died in 1905 he left his interests to Lee and J. J. and his sisters, Dora and Fannie. Lee and J. J. bought out their sisters' interest during the '20s.

More The Producer

J. J. had greater interest in producing shows than his brother. He did not share Lee's zest for working around the clock and, unlike "Mr. Lee", he shied away from newspapermen. The both objected to the influence of the drama critics and, on several occasions, barred reviewers from their theatres. Their occasional attempts to keep out even those newspapermen who bought their own tickets ended in 1941 when the Legislature passed a bill protecting the right of anyone to buy a ticket.

The Shubert operettas of the '20s, of which "The Student Prince" and "Blossom Time" were the most notable, are believed to have stemmed from J. J.'s interest in such presentations. J. J. also toured Europe extensively during the '20s scouting plays, musicals and talent. He said that he made the trips rather than Lee because "I am more dynamic and Continental than Mr. Lee."

Although the Shuberts were Jewish, J. J., who received the most formal education of the three brothers, attended a Roman Catholic parochial school but that was a geographic and economic exigency according to a Shubert spokesman. For years he and Lee did not speak to each other, but despite this they kept a firm managerial front. While J. J. maintained offices in his apartment in the Shubert-owned Sardi Building, the only tenant in residence, Lee had his office atop the Shubert Theatre and lived on Central Park West.

The Shuberts, although tough business men, were said to have saved many shows on Broadway and the road from collapse by coming through with needed capital. J. J. is understood to have been the chief backer of the late Florenz Ziegfeld. The Shuberts still own a piece of the title, "Ziegfeld Follies."

Besides having owned or controlled about 50% of the legit houses in the country at one time, the Shuberts were believed to have been involved in the production of more than 500 plays and musicals.

In 1956, the Shubert org agreed to a consent decree action, following a Government antitrust suit, to reduce the number of its theatres. Today, the Shubert chain consists of 17 houses in New York, two each in Chicago, Philadelphia and Cincinnati and one in Boston. The Shuberts also own 50% of the Music Box with Irving Berlin.

J. J. is survived by his second wife and two grandchildren.

Worries Allayed; 'Woolf' Will Play At Clowes Hall

Indianapolis, Dec. 30.

This city's new major legit theatre, Clowes Memorial Hall for the Performing Arts, apparently has weathered its first artistic crisis, a battle over proposed censorship of "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" Travis Selmier, general manager of the two-month-old, $3,500,000 theatre, today said, "Feelings of uneasiness over the show have subsided, as far as I know."

Selmier flew back from New York for an emergency meeting with Dr. Alexander E. Jones, president of Butler Univ., where the theatre is located, and two or three members of the Butler board of trustees to "put out a brush fire that had started over the play," Selmier said. One Butler trustee objected to "adulterous and profane words" he understood were in the Edward Albee drama. None of the objecting trustees is believed to have seen the play which, coincidentally, is set in the home of a small college faculty member.

The Nancy Kelly-Shepperd Strudwick touring company of "Woolf" is scheduled to give four performances Jan. 23-25 at Clowes Hall. Selmier said drastic measures were discussed to satisfy objections to the play. It is believed these included deletion of lines considered offensive, or cancellation of the play.

Selmier said he believes he successfully dissuaded objectors after presenting a list of other major cities where the play is being performed and citing the fact that it has been recorded in its entirety on a Columbia Records album. Those concerned have now agreed that an act of censorship would not be beneficial for Clowes Hall at this time, Selmier said.

"Woolf" will be the seventh touring dramatic production to play here. "Brecht on Brecht," "Mary, Mary" and "A Man for All Seasons" have been performed at Clowes since its opening Oct. 18. "A Thousand Clowns," "Stop the World, I Want to Get Off" and "Beyond the Fringe" are scheduled between now and the "Woolf" playdates.

Clowes Hall, built primarily from funds donated by the family of the late Indianapolis drug firm executive, Dr. G. H. A. Clowes, is under jurisdiction of the Butler board of trustees. Following the conference on proposed censorship, Selmier went back to New York, where he had been attending meetings of the International Assn. of Concert Managers and the Assn. of College & University Concert Managers. He returned to Indianapolis, where he found plans for the "Woolf" production proceeding normally, he said.

George L. Morrison will direct "Any Wednesday."

Upsurge for West German Authors As Local Groups Do Native Plays

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt, Dec. 30.

West German dramatists long held back by the post-war trend to present American, French and British plays, are finally coming into their own. They have attained a new peak this year, with 62 German premieres of works by native authors, as against about 100 premieres of works of foreign authors.

While most of the new German plays set for the 1963-64 stage season deal with current topics and wrestle with contemporary themes, about a third of the imports are avant garde, mostly from American, British and French playwrights. So it should be a big year for the German theatres.

Authors like Rolf Hochhuth, whose "The Deputy" was probably the most controversial drama anywhere this season; Karl Wittlinger, whose "Do You Know the Milky Way?" had many productions here and abroad, and Martin Walser, whose "Oaks and Angora" was a big item in Germany last year, will all be represented by new plays. The German stage, which has been criticized for not dealing with local themes which might focus world interest, is showing more vitality. There are also more export possibilities for the German playwrights.

Hochhuth's untitled new drama, of unrevealed subject and theme, will have its premiere at Erwin Piscator's Berlin Folks Stage, which also did "The Deputy." Meanwhile, the latter play is to be done on at least 20 German stages, so local audiences throughout the country can judge the merit of the protests and the work itself.

Walser's "Herr Knott, Larger Than Life Size" will get its initial performance at the Stuttgart City Theatre, and the same stage will premiere Dieter Waldmann's new drama, "Atlantis." Several German playwrights will have two new plays apiece in production this winter. Hans Michelsen will have "Lappschiess" premiering in Frankfurt and "Holiday One and Two" at Freiburg.

Erwin Sylvanus' play, "Loew," opens at Goettingen and "On the Edge of the Desert" at the Berlin Vaganten Theatre. Wittlinger's amusing comedy with a cast of three, "Two Men for Breakfast" gets its start in Mannheim, and his "Soul Search" opens in Frankfurt.

"The Unbearable," by K. Wuensche, opening in Darmstadt, and Fritz Kortner's "The Double Speech," at Munich's Kammerspiele, are among the new entries. The first play by young German dramatist Gert Hoffmann, "The Mayor," has been translated into English and will get its German premiere with the Stroux Theatre in Duesseldorf. Another newcomer, Peter Weiss, has his "Night with Guests" premiering in the Schiller-theatre in Berlin.

The problem of East and West is tackled by Dieter Meischner in "Morning Prayer," which will have its premiere in Mannheim. Daniel Christoff's one-acters, "Exile Reign" and "Return to Elba," will be done at Celle and Kassel.

Herbert Asmodi, author of last year's "Cannibals," is doing a comedy called "Black Wash," and Peter Hack, the enfant terrible of the East Berlin Theater, will be represented for the first time in the Cologne Schauspielhaus with his adaptation of the classic "Peace," by Aristophanes.

Germany's smallest theatre, the 13-year-old Luigi Malipiero, in Sommerhausen on the Main, with seats for only 54, will offer Strindberg's "The Hollander," Albert Camus' "The Trap" and a miniature musical, based on a Goethe drama. Of the foreign avant-gardists, Eugene Ionesco is way out in the lead with his "The King Dies" set for 25 German stages this season, following its Duesseldorf premiere. Also, his "Delirium for Two" gets its German premiere in Bochum.

The leading British avant-gardist is Arnold Wesker, whose "Next Year in Jerusalem" premieres in Wuppertal and his "The Kitchen" opens in the City Stage of Cologne. Over 15 German stages will offer the British play, "The Song of the Hermits," by James Saunders (done in London and New York as "Next Time I'll Sing to You"—Ed.) The most represented American playwright is Edward Albee, whose "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" will be done in seven houses this winter.

Other American dramatists slated for German premieres are Jack Gelber, David Perry, Jack Richardson, Forbes Brambles, Arthur L. Kopit, with avant-garde productions coming in from Italy and Poland as well.

According to the latest word, West German city, state and federal grants to the theatre going will total a new high of $60,000,000 this year, an increase of $5,000,000 over last year.

Lee Shubert Tax

Continued from page 45

succeeded J. J.'s son, John, who Florida in November, 1962.

The action by the Government is designed to protect its interest in the estate taxes indefinitely. Under the Internal Revenue Code, there is a 10-year statute of limitations on the collections of estate taxes. The 10-year period was up last Wednesday (25). If a judgment is handed down in favor of the Government, its interest in the estate will be perpetuated. When the Lee Shubert estate is settled and the taxes are paid, the Government will include 6% annual interest. Estate (inheritance) taxes are assessed by the Government when a person dies leaving more than $60,000.

Another action pending is a suit in U. S. Tax Court challenging a determination by the Government that the estate has a tax deficiency of $8,920,527. In 1954, The Treasury Dept. accepted an estimate by the executors that the estate taxes due the Government totaled $2,997,810. Blau said, the executors then paid a little more than $1,000,000 to the Government. In 1958, the Government notified the executors they still owed $2,109,525, including interest.

Later in '58, the Government informed the executors of a deficiency in the estate taxes totaling $8,920,527. This is the figure challenged in the suit still pending in U. S. Tax Court. Last Dec. 20, the Treasury Dept. filed a jeopardy assessment in N. Y. Federal Court against the estate for $13,595,861, representing the deficiency amount, plus interest of $4,675,334.

The executors have also brought an action for an accounting of the Shubert partnership in N. Y. Supreme Court. They and the Government claim the partnership is worth $50,000,000 as opposed to J. J.'s contention that it was worth between $7,000,000 and $15,000,000.

The Internal Revenue Service decided on the $15,705,887 figure for estate taxes after a lengthy study and audit of the Shubert holdings which consist of 17 in New York, two in Chicago, two in Philadelphia, two in Cincinnati and one in Boston. The Shubert organization also has an interest in another Broadway theatre.

Mrs. Thrasher

Continued from page 45

Park Commission, which operates the Playhouse, terminated Mrs. Thrasher's $14,000-a-year contract. The District Attorney said that he had Hemphill's report reviewed and had recommended the criminal action. In addition, City Solicitor Edward G. Bauer is looking into the "civil phases" of the case.

Hemphill originally charged that the $1,000 was paid to Slezak and returned to Mrs. Thrasher as a "kickback." The actor denied that, and the City Controller later admitted he was wrong. Hemphill insisted, however, that Mrs. Thrasher cheated the city in the deal, although the star was innocently involved.

Since Mrs. Thrasher's contract was not renewed, a free-for-all has developed in attempts of local groups to obtain management of the Kelly Playhouse for the 1964 season. William Goldman, independent film exhibitor, legit theatre owner and educational tv executive, is understood to have an inside track for the spot, and his appointment may be confirmed at the next meeting of the Fairmount Park Commission next Monday (6).

CASTING NEWS

Following are available parts in upcoming Broadway, off-Broadway, and touring shows, as well as ballet, films, industrial and television shows. All information has been obtained directly by the VARIETY Casting Department by telephone calls, and has been rechecked as of noon yesterday (Tues.).

The available roles will be repeated weekly until filled, and additions to the list will be made only when information is secured from responsible parties. The intention is to service performers with leads provided by the managements of the shows involved rather than to run a wild goose marathon. This information is published without charge.

Parenthetical designations are as follows: (C) Comedy, (D) Drama, (MC) Musical Comedy, (MD) Musical Drama, (R) Revue, (Rep) Repertory, (DR) Dramatic Reading, (DB) Double Bill.

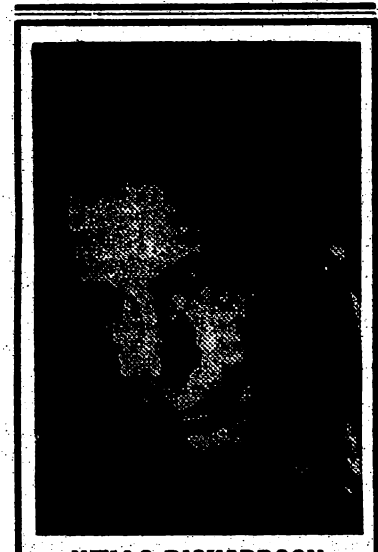
Legit

BROADWAY

"Abraham Cochrane" (D). Producers, Walter Fried & Helen Jacobson (119 W. 57th St., N.Y.). Available parts: femme, young parlor maid; male, middle-aged, femme, late 20s-early 30s, attractive. Mail photos and resumes c/o above address. Do not phone or visit.

"Baker Street" (M). Producer, Alexander H. Cohen (c/o Casting Consultants, 444 Madison Ave., N.Y.). Available parts: femme lead, 26-36, glamorous, intelligent, soprano, must sing well; male, middle-age, Dr. Watson; male, villain, Professor Moriarty; male, 26-36, handsome, light baritone or tenor; boys, 8-17, sing and dance, be able to do cockney accent. Mail photos and resumes c/o above address.

"Easy Does It." (C). Producers, Laurence Feldman & Jack Rollins (c/o Laurence Henry Company, 1545 Broadway, N.Y.). Available parts: femme lead, 30, attractive, flippant sense of humor; male, 30, zany, uninhibited writer; male, 35, alcoholic artist; male, 23, bright college grad; femme, 20, pretty, bright; femme, 25-30, office busy-body, comic; male; 28, pompous, efficient P.R. man; male, 55, blustering boss; male, 35, authoritative but nice army officer; male, type, no sense of humor; femmes, 40-60, comedy members of women's breakfast club. Mail photos and resumes to Michael Parver (c/o above address). Do not phone or visit.



WELLS RICHARDSON
The unresolved chord among Broadway actors.
An UNRESOLVED CHORD —not a LOST!

BILLY DE WOLFE
Co-Starring in
"HOW TO SUCCEED IN BUSINESS WITHOUT REALLY TRYING"
Shaftesbury Theatre
London W.C.2. England

OFF-BROADWAY

"Burlesque Goes Legit" (R). Producers, John Yorke & Joseph I. Levine (111 W. 57th St., N. Y.). Audition this Thurs. and Fri. at 11 a.m. for Agva—open call femme dancers who sing, male comics; male flash acts; showgirls; Oriental belly dancer, at Variety Arts Studio (225 W. 46th St., N. Y.).

"Jo" (M). Producer, Victoria Crandall (162 W. 54th St., N.Y.). Available parts: lead male, 20s, singer-dancer; male, 25-30, lyric baritone, tutor type; femme, 20s, beautiful, dark-haired, lyric soprano; mezzo, 35-40, lovely; character man, 40-45; character woman, 40-50. Mail photos & resumes c/o above address.

"Lady Be Good" (MC). Producers, Keith Holzman, Robert Kreis & Richard Pohlers (161 W. 54th St., N. Y.). Available parts: male, juvenile Astaire type; male leading man 20-30, singer; male, 30-40, comedia must sing; male, middle-aged; femme, 20s, must sing and dance; femme dancer-singer; chorus boys, girls, 20s. Mail photo and resume to Jack Levin c/o above address. Do not phone or visit.

"Plain and Fancy" (MC). Producer, Equity Library Theatre (226 W. 47th St., N.Y.). All roles open. Sign up for reading Dec. 23-Jan. 6, on the ninth floor c/o above address.

"The Salad of the Mad Cafe" (R). Producers, Fred Martin, Ned Hendrickson & Danny Logan (145 Bleeker St., N. Y.). Available parts: Negro femme, young, singer-comedienne; male actor-singer; femme, singer-dancer-actress. Mail photo and resume to Danny Logan c/o above address. Do not phone or visit.

STOCK

Coconut Grove Playhouse (3500 Main Highway, Miami, Fla.). Accepting photos and resumes through agents only, for winter season of star package productions. Mail to Kip Cohen (234 W. 44th St., N.Y.).

TOURING

"In One Bed (And Out the Other)" (F). Producers, Zev Bufman & Stan Seiden (234 W. 44th St., N.Y.). Available parts: Male, 25-30; femme, 36-39, attractive; male, 40, a philanderer; femme, 25, seductive, attractive; femme, 20, sexy;! femme, 55-59, comic character actress. All actors should have background in playing farce. Mail photo& resume to Kip Cohen, suite 900 c/o above address. Do not phone or visit.

Television

"Camera Three" (educational-dramatic series). Producer, CBS (524 W. 57th St., N. Y.; JU 6-6000); casting director, Paula Hindlin. Accepting photos and resumes of general male and female dramatic talent, c/o above address. No duplicates.

"Lamp Unto My Feet" (religious-dramatic series). Producer, CBS (524 W. 57th St., N. Y.; JU 6-6000); casting director, Paula Hindlin. Accepting photos and resumes of general male and female dramatic talent, c/o above address. No duplicates.

Films

"The Sound of Music" (MC). Producer, 20th Century-Fox, (c/o casting Consultants, 444 Madison Ave., N.Y.). Available parts: boys, 4, 7, 9 and 13; girls,11 and 14; girl, 16, pretty, vivacious, wholesome, must sing and dance well; boy 17, handsome, must sing, dance and act well; male, late 30s or early 40s, attractive, strong, personable, romantic. All children who apply must be Germanic, Nordic, or Anglo-Savon in appearance (no latin types at all). Must have good English or continental stage diction, no New Yorkese speech acceptable. Musical training would be of value, but not essential. Mail photos and resumes to Michael Shurtleff, Casting Consultants, Room 703 c/o above address.

Ballet

Radio City Music Hall Ballet. Director, Marc Platt (c/o Radio City Music Hall, Rockefeller Center, N.Y.) Open call auditions for femme ballet dancers will be held Tuesdays at 2:30 p.m. at the Music Hall stage entrance (44 W. 51st St., N.Y.).

PARIS BALLET FEST HANDS OUT PRIZES

Paris, Dec. 30.

Awards for the First Paris Ballet Festival, which took place at the Theatre Des Champs-Elysees, have been handed out. Only four regular companies and one special ballet were concerned. Golden Star for the best company went to the Budapest Opera Ballet from Hungary.

"Best ballet" was "Miss Julie" given by the Finnish Opera Ballet from Helsinki with "best music" nod to the late Bela Bartok's "Magnificent Mandarin" by the Budapest Ballet. "Best choreographer" was Joseph Lazzini of the Marseilles Opera Ballet which also copped the "decorator" award for Bernard Dayde.

"Best dancers" were both Russian with defector Rudolf Nureyev ("Swan Lake," Royal Ballet) and Galina Samsova, lead in "Cinderella" of Raymondo De Larrain.

City of Paris also handed out prizes for Dame Margot Fonteyn of the Royal Ballet. Dance critics singled out Svetlana Beriosova and Christopher Guebel of the Royal Ballet and choreographer Lazzino of the Opera Ballet of Marseilles as well as its lead dancer Michel Bruel.

Joe Bulloff's B.O. Click In Israeli 'Pakistan'

Tel Aviv, Dec. 30.

Joseph Bulloff, Jewish-American star of stage and screen, scored a personal triumph here last week in Peter Weber's "Man from Pakistan."

Bulloff, supported by a large cast of locally recruited Jewish actors, has directed this expensive production and is booked solid to February. Though the play didn't rate highly with the critics and the supporting cast has a mediocre quality common to most Yiddish-speaking productions in Israel, Bulloff's performance is magnetic and the play is likely to make even more money than his productions of "Death of a Salesman" (1961) and "Chekov's Stories" (last year). The New York actor plans to stay here till spring.

Joan Littlewood's 'Henry' As Edinburgh Feature

Edinburgh, Dec. 30.

The London Theatre Workshop's revival of "Henry IV," directed by Joan Littlewood, will be a highlight of the Shakespeare Quatercentenary celebrations at the 1964 International Festival here next Aug. 16-Sept. 5. The drama will be staged at the Assembly Hall for the whole Festival period.

Other Shakespeare features will include extensive representation in music programs, while the massive Waverly Market auditorium will house a Shakespeare Exhibition from Stratford-on-Avon. The Orchestra Nation of the R.T.F., Paris, under the baton of Charles Munch, will give the Festival's opening concert Aug. 16 with a performance of Berlioz' "Grande Messe des Morts," with the French Radio Chorus.

Arranagements are in hand for the Pittsburgh Symphony Orch to give the closing concerts of the Festival under its conductor, William Steinbeg. Three weeks of opera will be presented in the King's Theatre by the Opera of the National Theatre, Prague.

Legit Bits

The Broadway production of "Chips With Everything" will launch a Thursday night post-performance series of symposia titled, "The Theatre as a Forum for Ideas" with a Jan. 9 question-and-answer program to be conducted at the Booth Theatre by the play's author, Arnold Wesker, who's scheduled to arrive Jan. 8 in New York from London.

Oliver Rea, managing director of the Minnesota Theatre Co. and member of the Advisory Committee on the Arts of the U.S. State Dept., has completed a tour of European theatrical centers.

"The Salad of the Mad Cafe," a revue with sketches, music and lyrics by Danny Logan, is being produced by Fred Martin and Ned Hendrickson for a March 9 opening at the Washington Square Theatre, N.Y. Logan will also direct.

Michael Dunn, of "The Ballad of the Sad Cafe," has completed television appearances on "Dialogue" and "Camera Three" and is scheduled for a Feb. 7 outing on "The Jack Paar Show."

"Will the Mail Train Run Tonight?" a new tuner with music by Alyn Heim and book and lyrics by Malcolm La Prade, is being produced and staged by Jon Baisch for a Jan. 10 opening at the New Bowery Theatre, N.Y. Lynn Fippinger is choreographer and the sets, costumes and lighting are being designed, respectively, by Gene Czernicki, Joe Crosby and Joseph Kreisel. Heim will serve as musical director.

Harry Zimmerman is doing the orchestrations for "High Spirits" and the dance music is being arranged by William Goldenberg.

Jackie Warner will tour Australia and New Zealand as lead in "Stop the World—I Want to Get Off," which opens Feb. 6 in Melbourne, Australia.

Gordon Davidson directed the production of "The Tender Trap," now at the Paper Mill Playhouse, Millburn, N.J.

"Riverside Drive," the collective title of a double-bill of John Donavan's "Damn You Scarlet O'Hara" and "All My Pretty Little Ones," both starring Miriam Hopkins and Donald Woods," is being produced by Stan Raiff and directed by Douglas Seale for a Jan. 22 opening at the Theatre de Lys, N.Y. Leo Kerz is set designer.

Domingo A. Rodriguez is costume designer for "The Passion of Josef D" and "Abraham Cochrane."

Alfred Fischer, who rejoined the staff of Hurok Attractions Inc., last October as manager for the Moscow Chamber Orchestra, is now back with Bonard Productions as company manager for the Royal Shakespeare Theatre production of "The Hollow Crown," which began a 17-week U.S. tour last Monday (30) at the McCarter Theatre, Princeton.

William Ritman and Fred Voelpel are the designers, respectively, of the sets and costumes for the off-Broadway double-bill of "Play" and "The Lover."

The cast for the Boston production of "The Boys From Syracuse," directed and choreographed by Neal Kenyon for presentation at the Charles Playhouse there, is headed by Bes-Arlene, William K. Covington, Fred Gockel, Thom Molinaro, Richard Kinter, Travis Hudson, Joanna Lester, Sally Lee and Bernard F. Wurger.

"The Flyers," by Irvin Stock, will be given Thursday-Saturday performances this week and next at the Theatre Shack, North Arlington, N.J.

Morris Carnovsky will appear as Shylock in his own interpretation of "The Merchant of Venice" next Feb. 26-March 7 at the Oberlin (O.) College.

Deirdre Cartier is assistant designer to Beni Montresor for the Lincoln Center production of "Marco Millions."

"What's Good About the Theatre," a panel discussion sponsored by the Arts Chapter of the American Jewish Congress, is scheduled to be held the afternoon of Jan. 16 at the Stephen Wise Congress House, N.Y. Theodore Bikel will be panel president and Harold Rome chairman. Panelists will be Stella Adler, Herb Gardner, Sidney Kingsley and Harold S. Prince.

A symposium on drama for children is to be conducted Jan. 11 at the Juilliard School of Music, N.Y., under the sponsorship of the Advisory Council for Children's Theatre, the Wiltwyck School for Boys and the Children's Theatre Conference, Region 14.

St. P. Civic Opera Skeds The MacRaes for 'Bells'

St. Paul, Dec. 30.

The St. Paul Civic Opera Co. will have Gordon and Sheila MacRea as musical comedy guest stars next April 30-May 10 for one of its current season offerings, "Bells Are Ringing." The couple's previous Twin Cities' appearances have been at the Minneapolis Hotel Radisson Flame Room supper club, when it had a regular big name floor show policy.

Other musical comedy guest stars will be John Raitt in "The Pajama Game," Jan. 2-12, and Martha Raye in "Wildcat," Feb. 10-March 1. As usual, the company is also offering grand operas with guest stars.

London Shows

(Figures denote opening dates)

Angels Fear Tread, St. Martins (6-6-63).
At Drop Hat, Haymarket (10-2-63).
Bed Sitting Room, Comedy (3-20-63).
Beyond Fringe, Fortune (5-10-61).
Boeing-Boeing, Apollo (2-20-63).
Boys Syracuse, Drury Lane (11-8-63).
Cindy-Ella, Arts (12-23-63).
Difference of Opinion, Garrick (11-21-63).
Diplomats, Westminster (12-31-63).
D'Oyly Carte, Savoy (12-16-63).
Funny Thing Happened, Strand (10-3-63).
Gentle Jack, Queen's (11-28-63).
Ginger Man, Royal Court (11-20-63).
Half a Sixpence, Cambridge (3-21-63).
Happy Days, Theatre Royal (12-9-63).
How to Succeed, Shaftesbury (3-28-63).
John Borkman, Duchess (12-4-63).
Man in the Moon, Palladium (12-23-63).
Mary, Mary, Queens (2-27-63).
Masters, Piccadilly (5-9-63).
Minstrels, Vic. Palace (5-25-62).
Mousetrap, Ambassador (11-25-52).
Never Too Late, Prince Wales (9-24-63).
No Strings, Her Majesty's (12-30-63).
Oh, What Lovely, Wyndham's (3-19-63).
Oliver, New (6-30-60).
One for the Pot, Whitehall (8-2-61).
Out of Crocodile, Phoenix (10-29-63).
Pickwick, Saville (7-4-63).
Portrait of Murder, Vaudeville (10-24-63).
Private Lives, Duke York's (7-3-63).
Repertory, Aldwych (12-15-60).
Repertory, National Theatre (10-22-63).
Severed Head, Criterion (6-27-63).
Six Characters, May Fair (6-17-63).
Six of One, Adelphi (9-26-63).
Sound of Music, Palace (3-18-61).
Treasure Island, Mermaid (12-18-63).
Wings of the Dove, Lyric (12-3-63).

SCHEDULED OPENINGS

Poor Bites, Duke York's (1-6-64).

Australian Shows

(Week Ending Dec. 28)

ADELAIDE
Camelot, Her Majesty's.

BRISBANE
King and I, Her Majesty's.

MELBOURNE
Ages of Man, Comedy.
Breakfast With Julia, St. Martin's.
Fiedermous
How to Succeed, Her Majesty's.
Wizard of Oz, Tivoli.

SYDNEY
Five Finger Exercise, Independent.
Mary, Mary, Royal
Merry Widow, Her Majesty's.
Minstrels, Tivoli.
Once Upon a Surface, Palace.
Physicists, Ensemble.
Private Ear, Public Eye, Phillip.
Sound of Music, Elizabethan.

GAMBIT
an international drama quarterly
#3 • Winter 63/4
New American Drama Issue
THE WINDOWS OF HEAVEN a dark comedy by
Shimon Wincelberg
based on A Cat in the Ghetto by Rechmil Bryks also
THE WORKOUT
by Albert Bermel
Sample Copy $1.25 ($4.50 yr.) GAMBIT
57 Cookridge Drive, Leeds 16, England

WANTED
COMEDY WRITER
to adapt story for Broadway Musical. Substantial advance and Guild royalties paid—List Credits.
Write Box V-3549, VARIETY
154 W. 46th St., New York, N.Y. 10036

WANT SUMMER THEATRE
Rent or Sale . . . 300 to 500 Seats
RESIDENT EQUITY COMPANY
ROY FRANKLYN
29 West 65th Street, New York
Phone: SC 4-9051

Shubert Alley Shorts

Anita Gillette, who starred in the recent London musical, "Princess Pocahontas," is touring Europe with her research doctor-husband and small son, but will return Jan. 17 to New York on the Leonardo da Vinci . . . "The Ballad of the Sad Cafe," Edward Albee's dramatization of the Carson McCullers novella, has been published by Houghton Mifflin & Atheneum (hard cover, $4.50; paperback, $1.75) . . . The Academy Theatre, a local stock group of Atlanta, is conducting a season ticket sales drive, with the idea of qualifying for a foundation grant.

Everybody, including audiences, actors, directors, critics and the author himself, is in for a tough time if Arthur Miller's new play, "After the Fall," is as incomprehensible and pretentious as he makes it seem in his "Soliloquy" interview in the current issue (January) of Show magazine.

Stuart Burge, a London legit-tv director, will stage the Stratford (Ont.) Shakespearean Festival revival of "Richard II," due to open next June 15, with William Hutt in the title part. Michael Langham, festival artistic director, will stage "King Lear," with John Colicos in the name role, and "The Country Wife," while Jean Gascon will direct "The Amateur Gentleman," with Douglas Rain as the lead.

"Mother Courage and Her Children," Eric Bentley's adaptation of the Bertolt Brecht drama, has been published by Samuel French in a paperback edition, at $1.25 . . . The Princeton Triangle Club will present its new show, "Funny Side Up," next Friday-Saturday (3-4) at the 54th Street Theatre, N.Y. The musical will then tour.

Legit Cast Additions

BROADWAY

Fair Game For Lovers: Alan Alda, Sylvia Gassel, Pegeen Lawrence.

Funny Girl: Kay Medford, Buzz Miller, George Reader, Roger de Koven, Joseph Maculay, Prudence Adams, Joan Cory, Diane Coupe, Lanie Kazan, Diana Nielsen, Rosemary Yellen.

High Spirits: Carol Arthur, Adrienne Angel, Kathy Preston, Jackie Cronin, Syndee Balaber, Jerry Craig, Joe McGrath, Margaret Hall, Judy Haskell, Sybil Scotford, Gene Castle, Ronnie Walken.

Anyone Can Whistle: Harry Guardino.

What Makes Sammy Run?: Arny Freeman, Walter Klavun, Barry Newman, Graciela Daniele.

Cafe Crown: Joseph Schildkraut.

Kelly: Roy Castle.

One in a Row: Al Lewis, Pat Harrington Jr.

Abraham Cochrane: Bill Travers, Ann Harding, Nancy Wickwire.

Foxy: Julienne Marie, Larry Blyden, Suanne Shirley, Joan Waller, Marlena Lustik, Carlos Bas, Robert H. Harris, Gerald Hiken, Edward Greenhalgh, Edie Cowan, Ellin Halpin, Rosemary Jelincic, Shellie Farrell, Joan Lowe, Karen Kristen.

Hamlet: George Rose, George Voskovec, William Redfield, Clement Fowler.

Passion of Josef D: Elizabeth Hubbard, Betty Walker, Alvin Epstein, Simm Landres, Jon Silo.

OFF-BROADWAY

Play-Lover (double-bill): Frances Sternhagen.

In White America: John Wardwell (succeeded James Greene).

Pinter Plays: Hugh Franklin (return).

Athenian Touch: William Martel, Kenneth Mars, Nancy Tribush.

Cabin in the Sky: Rosetta Le Noire.

Funny House of a Negro: Billie Allen.

Corruption in the Palace of Justice: Dianne Turley (succeeded Maria Tucci).

Ginger Man: Rae Allen (succeeded Marian Seldes).

Pimpernel: David Daniels, Joan Kenley, Jeanne Devine, Jane Lillig, William Lipsen, John Cunningham.

Play-Lover (double-bill): James Patterson, Hilda Brawner.

Riverwind: Barbara Cole (succeeded Joleen Fodor).

Too Much Johnson: Nancy Berg.

ROAD

Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum: Paul Hartman.

MISCELLANEOUS

Marco Millions (Lincoln Center Repertory): Virginia Kaye, Paul Mann, David J. Stewart, Michael Strong, Joseph Wiseman, James Greene.

Drop Development Plan For Edinburgh's Lyceum

Edinburgh, Dec. 30.

A $4,000,000 plan to redevelop the present Lyceum Theatre site and provide a new live theatre for Edinburgh has fallen through. An agreement between the city authorities and business tycoon Meyer Oppenheim has been withdrawn.

All the property in the site belongs to the city, except the Lyceum Theatre, which Oppenheim bought from Howard & Wyndham, Ltd., for about $300,000. If he should turn it over to the city, they will be obliged to buy it for the same price, under the terms of an agreement. Oppenheim was negotiating to include a luxury hotel in the development, but no agreement was reached, and without a hotel, the scheme might not be practical.

Three years ago the cost of a new theatre on the site was estimated at $2,100,000. In the interval, building costs have risen sharply, and it is now figured that the plan would have been uneconomic. The cost of demolition alone was expected to be about $150,000.

The Lyceum Theatre here dates back to 1883. The opening night show had Henry Irving and Ellen Terry in "Much Ado About Nothing." The site had previously been used by Cooke's Circus.

Jack Seidman Finds 'Ice' Sickening

President of Legit Economics Group Deplores Rationalization of Ticket Graft

By ABEL GREEN

"It is sickening," "nauseating," "the theatre will be better off" etc. are some of the opinions expressed by J. S. (Jack) Seidman, head of the international CPA firm of Seidman & Seidman, who is president of a Committee on the Economics of the American Theatre, and who has been among those consulted by N. Y. Attorney General Louis J. Lefkowitz and the assistant d.a. David Clurman in charge of the probe on theatre "ice."

Excoriating the "ice-picking union," as he calls the boxoffice treasurers, and the theatreowners and producers who are party to or privy of the hot "ice," Seidman scoffs at those defenders of the status quo that "no lower East Side housewife has her bread taken away by this," or that "no underprivileged resident of Harlem suffers because some tycoon wants choice seats to a hit show on sudden notice."

Seidman and his committee agree that these people do not suffer but that he, as an investor, the performers, the authors, the very longevity of the American theatre—a fading albeit still "fabulous invalid"—do suffer.

This is no argument about the poor or underprivileged. This probe concerns deceit and chicanery, a bottling-up of the flow of ticket sales which, when consummated, yield profits into the million—and not a cent of which rebounds to cast, author, or angels.

"We want to know who gets that money and why? It's as simple as that," says Seidman, who has been powwowing with attorney-author Morris L. Ernst, another vehement foe of "ice."

The Committee on the Economics of the American Theatre includes such diverse interests as producers Roger L. Stevens, Robert L. Whitehead and Fred Coe; attorney Bertram L. Mayers (Fitelson &), theatre architect Victor Gruen, scenic designer Henry Horner; stagemanager Samuel (Biff) Liff, currently in Tel Aviv helping to stage the Israeli production of "My Fair Lady"; Thomas Fichandler, of the Arena Stage in Washington; space utilization expert Maria Bergson, who is studying how to utilize empty theatres on non-matinee days, for other economic yields (meetings, conventions, etc.).

The late John Shubert also was on the committee but he resigned.

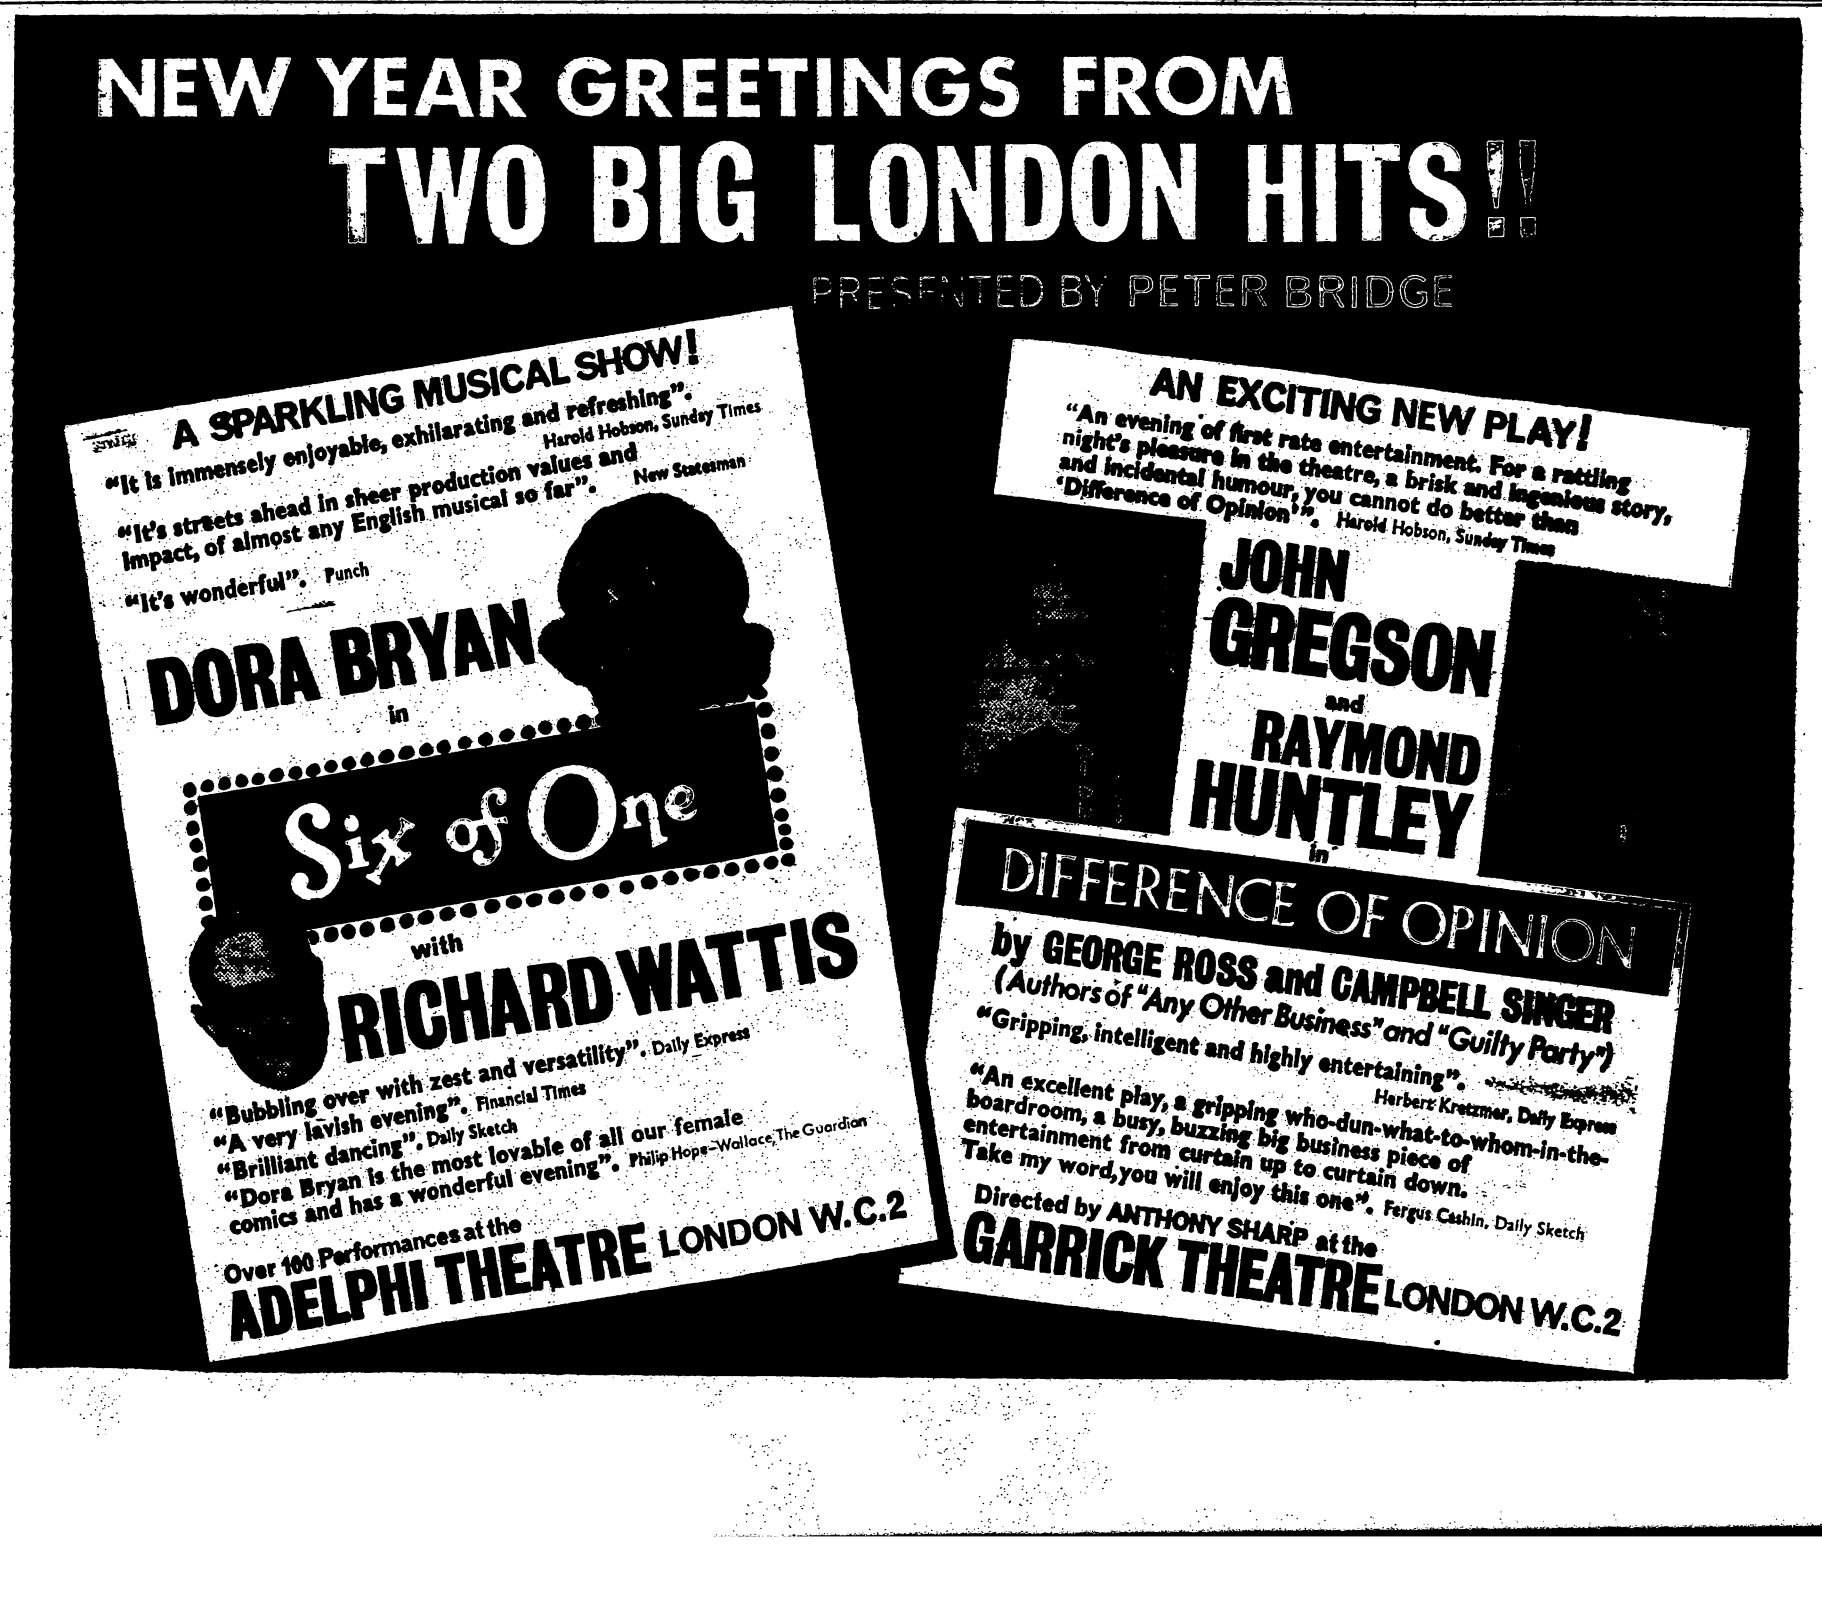
It is agreed that two bills will be introduced and their proponents are careful not to make them overly strong, either to appease the do-gooders, or to get them scuttled via political pigeonhole. One of the two statutes will be aimed at "ice," and the other to regulate "internal operations in theatrical ventures," i.e. specifically referring to kickbacks, inflated "overhead" and other charges, and the like.

The State Legislature, meeting soon after the New Year, will take such action.

Maddocks Going to Hub; Chapin as Monitor Crick

Melvin Maddocks, New York legit-film critic for the Christian Science Monitor, is returning to the home office in Boston to become book editor. He will be succeeded on the New York assignment by Louis Chapin, the daily's music critic.

No date has been set for the shift, as Maddocks must sell the Larchmont (N.Y.) home he purchased last year when he moved from Boston to take over the daily's reviewing assignment from John Beaufort. The latter was promoted to head the Monitor office in London.



Literati

Hershfield's Parlay

Cartoonist-author Harry Hershfield has two Ballantine books upcoming, one in paperback, and both slated for next spring.

The "best jokes and stories" compliation (no official title yet) is the paperback. "The Harry Hershfield Album" will be the hardcover book, his personal galaxy of photographs with Presidents, politicos, industrialists, show biz and other greats ("and ingrates," he adds), from all walks of life. His commentaries thereunder will constitute an al fresco autobiography because the septugenarian humorist has himself photographed with "more presidents, chiefs of state, governors, mayors and political leaders, and other notables than anybody," he believes.

Blake Ehrlich's Furniture

The phone rang in the VARIETY Boston office, and a femme voice with a German accent said, "Could you please tell me where I can find Blake Ehrlich?" (Ehrlich is the ex-Boston Traveler colmunist, "Man About Boston").

"Last we heard, he's in Paris writing another book, but, by the way, why do you ask us?" said the Boston VARIETY rep.

"Well, VARIETY knows everything!" said the caller. Then she explained. Now an importer of Danish furniture, she was neighbor of Hazel Guild, VARIETY correspondent in Germany. Ehrlich ordered and paid for some Danish furniture. The furniture has arrived, but she couldn't locate Ehrlich, and her first thought was to call VARIETY.

So to Ehrlich in Paris, they'd like to give you your furniture or your money back.

'The Bedside Playboy'

Playboy editor-publisher Hugh M. Hefner has edited an anthology titled "The Bedside Playboy" (is there any other in Playboy's projection?) which is a kingsize collection of the best pieces from that mag.

Its contributors are a who's who of the current commercial byliners, excerpted, of course, from past issues, and the book is well organized into fiction, cartoons, humor, suspense, sci-fi, articles, interviews, nostalgia and even think pieces—again, guess on what subject most of 'em think?

For sure, no bore and an attractive prop in anybody's pad, both sexes and in both stages of attachment or otherwise. Mag's new Playboy Press publishes at $5.95. Easy reading and chiefly with accent on fun and complete diversion. Abel.

Mark Collins' Balto Post

Mark F. Collins has been named publisher of Hearst's Baltimore News-Post & American succeeding Fred I. Archibald who retires Jan. 1. Collins is presently asst. publisher and ad director of the Boston Record American-Sunday Advertiser.

Col. Archibald joined Hearst in 1934 as ad director and asst. publisher, later becoming publisher of the Omaha Bee-News and the Albany Times-Union until taking the helm in 1953 of the Balto sheet. He's a director of Hearst Consolidated Publications and Hearst Pub. Co.

O'Brady's Tell-All

French actor-author-puppeteer-linguist etc. Frederic O'Brady, an unlikely Gallic name indeed, made doubly confusing by the fact he was born and brought up in Hungary, is having his memoirs, "All Told," brought out by Simon & Schuster soon. O'Brady is not unknown to Americans—he was one of the stars of the U.S. company of "La Plume de Ma Tante" and Ed Sullivan once flew him over from Paris just for his two-minute puppeteering specialty.

New Yorker staffer Lillian Ross' "Reporting," also due via S&S, is a collection of seven pieces from the magazine including the widely discussed "Portrait of Hemingway" (Ernest, of course) and "Picture," story of the filming of "The Red Badge of Courage."

"Earl Wilson's New York" by the N.Y. Post syndicated columnist is an April S&S item, one of several guidebooks in the hopper by Gotham columnists in anticipation of the N.Y. World's Fair influx.

Budlong's Shift

John Budlong's shift to New American Library as executive veepee augurs a beefing up of that paperback-hardcover firm, now part of the expanding L.A. Times-Mirror communications combine which recently finalized acquisition of World Pub. Co.

Budlong was long v.p. and g.m. of the tradebook department of McGraw-Hill.

Jack Johnson & Marg. Mitchell

Finis Farr segues from a biog of great Negro pugilist Jack Johnson to an authorized biography on Margaret Mitchell, author of "Gone With The Wind." Morrow will publish latter.

"Black Champion: The Life and Times of Jack Johnson" is the full title of the Scribner's book due April 15 which will be excerpted (the Jim Jeffries segment) in the February American Heritage. Book snowballed originally from a two-parter in Sports Illustrated three years ago.

Ottawa's 'Obscene' Raids

Police raids on one of Ottawa's largest news stores and on a Hull, Que., outfit, Capital News Distributors Inc, resulted in summonses. Cops seized 401 paperbacks and mags and 247 calendars. Both charges name "obscene literature" — first in years here (although until two years ago Playboy was not available in any Ottawa store —and still isn't anywhere in Quebec province — and Cavalier is still the only other "girlie" mag sold in the Canadian capital).

Only material named as to be used in court: Caper Annual mag and "Male Bride" paperback. Both are published in eastern U. S.

Italo 'TV Lexicon'

Guido Guarda's "TV Lexicon '63" (TV Lexicon International Ltr., Rome) is a vast and valuable survey of the national (Italian) and international video scene which should soon become a must item on video exec desks. It'll be a yearly publication, with '64 item expected in spring, timed to Italy's 10th anniversary of television programming. Tome lists internationally known video outfits and organizations, events, facts, figures, personalities, addresses, etc. and is adso richly illustrated.

Volume boasts 650 pages and sells for 5,000 lire (about $8) in Italy. Hawk.

Maidenburg's Post

Ben Maidenburg, executive editor of the Akron (O.) Beacon Journal, has been given the additional responsibilities of publisher and chief executive officer by John S. Knight, president and editor of the Beacon-Journal Publishing Co. Kenneth L. Milburn, formerly business manager, was named general manager, a post vacant since 1952.

Charles E. Clark, formerly auditor, succeeds Milburn as business manager. Sam S. McKeel, personnel manager of the Charlotte (N.C.) Observer, another Knight paper, becomes assistant to the publisher at Akron, a newly-created post, and will move to Akron on Jan. 1.

Earl Senft's New Berth

Time Inc.'s diversification into hardbook publication, following acquisition of the 78-year-old Silver Burdett Co., will gather momentum now that Craig T. Senft has been named president and chief executive officer. He succeeds Earl E. Welch who becomes vice-chairman of the board of SB.

Senft, who is also president of the American Textbook Publishers Institute, resigned as executive veepee of Holt, Rinehart & Winston to join Silver Burdett.

CHATTER

Bob Millar new film critic of Glasgow Evening Times, indie evening sheet in West Scotland, replacing Tom S. Goldie, who quit to find new life in newspaperdom in Australia.

German Language News Distributors Inc. authorized to conduct a publishing, printing, machinery and supplies business, with offices in New York.

Washington Post staffer Marie Smith, longtime friend of both the President and Ladybird, rushing an authorized biography of the new First Lady for Random House publication in January. Miss Smith was chosen "best woman writer" in Washington by the Sons' & Daughters' Foundation Inc. last year.

American Heritage and the Air Transport Assn. are collaborating on a new air travel mag to be launched in January 1965 on a giveaway basis to in-flight passengers, and with a minimum circulation guarantee of 1,000,000.

$1600 CONTEST for WRITERS
OF UNPUBLISHED MANUSCRIPTS.
Send for contest rules and free Brochure on publishing your book. In case of tie, duplicate prizes awarded. Dept. VA
Pageant Press, 101 Fifth Ave. N. Y. 3

Publishing Stocks

(As of Dec. 30 closing)

Allyn & Bacon (OC)	22	—1¼
American Book (AS)	43¼	+ ⅝
Amer. Book Strat. (AS)	5⅝	+ ¾
American Heritage (OC)	7⅞	— ⅞
Book of Month (N.Y.)	16¾	— ⅜
Conde Nast (N.Y.)	12¼	— ¼
Cowles (OC)	12	— ¾
Crowell Collier (N.Y)	18¼	— ¼
Curtis Pub. (N.Y.)	7½	— ⅝
Esquire Inc. (AS)	8⅜	+ ¼
Ginn & Co. (N.Y.)	28¾	+ ½
Groilier (OC)	49½	— ¼
Grosset & Dunlap (OC)	8⅜	— ⅜
Harcourt Brace (N.Y.)	32¾	+ ¼
Hayden Pub. (OC)	3
Hearst (OC)	26½
Holt R & W (N.Y.)	23¾
LA Times-Mirror (OC)	33
Macfadden Bartell (AS)	5⅛	— ⅛
McCall-New (N.Y.)	21½
McGraw-Hill (N.Y.)	29	— ⅝
Meredith Pub. Co.	27	+ ½
Nat'l Per. Pub. (OC)	10
New Yorker (OC)	108
Pocket Books (OC)	4⅜
Popular Library (OC)	2¼	— ¼
Prentice Hall (AS)	29⅛	—2⅜
Random House (N.Y.)	9⅝	+ ¼
Scott Foresman (OC)	25⅝	+ ⅛
H. W. Sams (OC)	29½	—2¼
Time Inc. (OC)	89¾	— ¼
Universal Pub. Co. (OC)	4¾
Western Pub. Co. (OC)	20⅝	+ ⅛
World Pub.	17⅛

OC—Over the Counter.
NY—N.Y. Stock Exchange.
AS—American Stock Exchange.
(Supplied by Bache & Co.)

Ingmar Bergman

Continued from page 2

mands our respect and therefore we must only insist on cutting three scenes, which to the wide public might seem plainly pornographic.'

Israel boasts of the widest cinema audience, but many of its newcomers, constituting a major part of cinema patrons, come from retarded countries whose artistic standards result from primitive backgrounds. They are liable to misinterpret such hold scenes and be easily incited by them rather then regard them as the culmination of a philosophical thesis.

Cinema critics and other public figures, in the fields of letters and the arts, seem to be divided in their reaction to "The Silence." consider it a barbaric act to cut Some consider it a barbaric act to cut the film, while others claim that the censor is entitled (and should) consider audience mentality, before deciding, but ban completely and not encourage cuts.

Town Wants a Cut

Continued from page 2

device of his own. He has issued a manifesto in which he promises that on the day in which the Taorminesi must pay their town income tax a representative of his will be present ready to foot the bill for one and all! "Unfair" says the Mayor "the town income tax only amounts to $62,000 yearly. We want much more than that from Signor Guarnaschelli. In any case it's illegal for an outsider to step in and pay our citizens' taxes."

There the matter stands.

Dance Reviews

Meditation
(N.Y. City Ballet)

George Balanchine veers toward mood choreography in this one, and therein lies the short (12-minute) work's interest. What Balanchine does is news to the buffs, an indication of posible policy at the nation's main temple of terpsichore. Through the decades the Russian-born ballet-master has ripped away story, scenery, and the typical values of romantic ballet in favor of his own concepts of music translated into fabulous if sometimes cold movement. "Meditation" to Tschaikowsky is a part-return to "emotion."

Partly because it is so exquisitely danced and mimed by Jacques d'Amboise and Suzanne Farrell, the latter ranked in the second-size program type until now, the Balanchine evocation of "feeling" will be a highlight of the present, and final, season at City Center prior to the company moving in the spring to Lincoln Center's new State Theatre. Actually it is a triumph of staging and performance over extremely thin substance.

It is far from clear what Balanchine is attempting to say. There is a sad young man and a comforting young woman. He's poetical in black. She is incandescent in white with long hair to her waist. They go into a variety of clinches. They move about, move toward each other, away from each other and in the end just break off. It's a dream without continuity, a bit. Even so, a mere choreographic muttering when so delicately executed commands an artistic respect. Less well done, "Meditation" would be a bore. Land.

Paul Taylor Dance Co.
(LITTLE, N.Y.)

Modern dance is one performing art in which skills and ideas continue to grow. A sterling example is the manner in which the Paul Taylor small troupe is enlarging its repertoire, dexterity and appreciative following. Seen at Hunter College Playhouse in November, 1962, Taylor's troupe displayed a gift for effective humor all too rare in serious hoofology. In a five-night stand at the Little Theatre, the company presented another witty premiere in "Party Mix," as well as the local opening of "Scudorama," a more cosmic puzzle with bodies.

Third item was the year-old "Aureole," a romantic modern-classic piece in which the contemporary dance idiom blended surprisingly well with the music of Handel, including a happy interlude when Elizabeth Walton broke out into a hip-swinging routine. Taylor evoked echoes of William Blake in his share of this one. "Party Mix" was set to "Sonata For Two Pianos" by Alexei Haieff, with costumes by Nancy Azara and frequently displayed the two-level dance action which Taylor is introducing very effectively. Foreground is a solo or duo movement while behind a group moves in counter-point, or, sometimes, harmony. One amusing aspect of "Party Mix" was the virtual playing of "musical knees."

"Scudorama" with music by C. Jackson and decor by Alex Katz, was obscure but intriguing, using beach towels and cloudlets, plaid jackets and frenetic movements to tell a story which could be taking place in a snake pit, on a seashore, or twenty feet under. Beattie de Jong, tres lissome, was spectacular in a red union suit. Two other girl dancers, pillars of strength, are Sharon Kinney and Renee Kimball.

Taylor, who really stars as both dancer and choreographer, was well matched by the other featured male, Dan Wagoner, whose jumping jesticulations grow more facile with each appearance. Company of six was augmented by Twyla Tharp and Daniel Williams. Theatre 1964, Richard Barr and Clinton Wilder produced. Thomas Skelton lit the production and displayed his usual talent for working well with a small group and limited equipment. Leve.

Cinderella
(Theatre Champs-Elysees Paris)
Paris, Dec. 8.

Raymundo De Larrain, nephew of the late Marquis De Cenvas, who took over the Marquis' ballet company before its dissolution, has now formed a pickup company exclusively for the representation of Serge Prokofiev's "Cinderella." It is an eyefilling show that is uneven in terping but has enough spectacle to make it a good holiday entry.

Its mixture of pantomime, fairy tale and tasteful settings and costuming should have it a treat for moppets and it should keep adults entertained if dance buffs may not be entirely convinced. There are some fine dancers involved and some excellent moments. But, on the whole, the uneven corps de ballet and emphasis on spectacle weakens dance form, as such.

Larrain has conceived the costumes and sets and co-directed with Russo-origined choreographer.

Galina Samsova, of the Kiev Ballet in Russia, makes a fragile Cinderella of sensitivity and beauty. Her elevations, dramatic elan and romantic allure are the highlight of the affair. Hungarian dancer Victor Rona has clean jumps and style and excellent lifts. But he is somewhat cold and lacks the necessary romantic projection as Prince. Mosk.

Off-B'way Reviews

Continued from page 48

The Play of Herod

King Herod and the slaying of the Innocents. Bows can be taken by Producer Lincoln Kirstein, stage director Nikos Psacharopoulos and Rouben Ter-Arutunian, who designed the costumes and setting, and Mme. Barbara Karinska, who made the spectacular costumes, which had to stand the test of being examined close-up by the aisle-sitters during entrances and exits.

Sheila Schonbrun, as the mother of a slain child, Ray De Voll, a fine baritone as The Archangel, and Arthur Burrows, doubling as Joseph and Second King were standouts in an all-good cast. Leve.

Crime and Crime

Cynthia Baer revival of a drama in four acts (eight scenes), by August Strindberg, translated by Elizabeth Sprigge. Staged by Tom Brennan; scenery, Peter Wingate; costumes, Henry Heymann; lighting, Ken Kothe; stage manager, Frank Geraci. Opened Dec. 16, '63, at the Cricket Theatre, N. Y.; $2.50 top.

Cast: Donald Hotton, Olympia Dukakis, Louis Zorich, Donald Marye, Monica Lovett, John Braden, Ann Hennessey, Jacqueline Bartone, Van Dexter, Laurie Kenney, Ken Kothe, Myron Mitchell, David Tabor.

Written by Strindberg in 1899, "Crime and Crime" is a grim comedy about guilt and conscience. It is staged at the Cricket Theatre without style or pace, and the result is a leaden, tiresome evening.

As a Parisian playwright accused unjustly of the murder of his illegitimate daughter, Donald Hotton is monotonous and ineffective. Olympia Dukakis, as the woman who brings about his downfall, is given to excessive posturing, and never brings the character to life.

Most successful of the cast is Louis Zorich, who is convincing as a painter. The translation, by Elizabeth Sprigge, sounds stilted and the play itself seems hopelessly out of date. Kenn.

German Legit

Continued from page 45

himself working mostly in legit and tv during his four years in Germany. He directed tv shows in Berlin and Frankfort and did legit in Berlin, Frankfort, Switzerland, Saltzborg and elsewhere. He also made a couple of pictures in Italy and Berlin. But legit, where he started in Germany before coming to the U.S. and getting into picture direction, now fascinates him again and he is trying to line up a project for Broadway at present.

He's also looking into possible picture assignments and is now on the Coast. During his Hollywood career, Dieterle did many pix for Hal Wallis and about 60 for Warners. Among his credits are such as "Louis Pasteur," "Emil Zola," "Rope of Sand," "Love Letters," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and many others. Now he'd like to make some more and mix some stage work in as well.

Broadway

Trudy Goth visiting her mother in Florence, Italy, for a month.

Trans-Lux prez Richard Brandt elected chairman, and retired educator David I. Kaplan president of the University Settlement, a social services institution on the lower east side for the past 78 years.

Ed and Pegeen Fitzgerald still waiting for the insurance company to make good on the car they use to weekend at their Kent, Conn., "log cabin," which fell into a ditch off the icy road two weeks ago.

Yesteryear vauders will recall bigtime agent Walter Plimmer but may not know that his son has been the Rev. Walter Plimmer Jr. for many years, now attached to St. Ann's Church, Ashforth, Ariz.

Film Hits International Ltd. has been formed to conduct a motion pictures and amusement business in New York. Capital stock is 200 shares, no par value. O'Brien, Driscoll & Raftery filing attorneys at Albany.

Ethel Merman, 55, and Ernest Borgnine, 46, have announced their wedding plans for next June when the actor's divorce from Katy Jurado becomes final. Songstress has been married three times before, he twice before.

Col. Serge Obolensky, his contract with the Zeckendorf Hotels expiring, returns to the St. Regis, once owned by his brother-in-law, the late Vincent Astor, as general host. The posh 5th and 55th hostelry is now owned by Mexican hotelier Cesar Balsa.

Paul Taylor Dance Co. performed Sunday (29) at Pageant of Fashion & Arts dinner at Waldorf-Astoria. Other talent: Helen Hayes, Cyril Ritchard, Beatrice Lillie, Bob and Ray, Inga Swenson, Douglas Seale, Bobby Short, Robert Redfird, Elizabeth Ashley.

Doubletalker Al Kelly to be honored at a testimonial breakfast at the Forest Hills (L. I.) Jewish Center Jan. 19 by the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies. Event is in recognition of Kelly's appearances for virtually every kind of charity extant.

The 240-ft. sign atop the Bond Bldg. on Broadway may be relighted as result of negotiations by Douglas Leigh Inc. This dazzler, said to be the largest spectacular featuring a waterfall through which 50,000 gallons of water cascaded per minute, has been dark for a number of years.

Florrie (Flo) Mills, or Kelly, also said to be known as Mrs. John Hancock, being sought by M. O. Carter, 1963 Union Ave., Memphis, Tenn., in connection with a small legacy from her aunt. Miss Mills (said to have moved upstate N.Y. as Mrs. Hancock) was connected with the backstage staff at the old Roxy Theatre on Broadway.

Comedienne Cynda Glenn had a close call from being mugged on upper Broadway Christmas eve shortly before midnight as she was surrounded with "we want that mink coat, if you ain't got no money" and was saved only by an alert cabdriver who backed up, told her to hop in, and admonished her that only recently three muggings took place on that corner.

A headwaiter in the midtown sector, known for his "taking" ways, is the target of his own boss' criticism that "he sends out Christmas cards early, to his clients, meaning our clients, and then if he doesn't hear from them he sends out another marked 'second notice'." This is almost kidding-on-the-square and the genial maitre d' laughs at himself—but he seemingly also laughs on the way to the bank.

N.Y. State Attorney General Louis J. Lefkowitz, in ordering dissolution of the Renaissance of Italian Youth Foundation, which sponsored an annual $50-a-ticket "Night In Venice" charity ball, put the spotlight on Count (Lanfranco) Rasponi's pubrelations organization, among others, supposedly benefiting more than the prescribed 15% that is the usual ceiling for promoters' expenses. Rasponi Associates went out of business last June.

Fawcett Publications' senior editor William C. Lengel, who is also a playwright and novelist, was moved to write "Our Hymn" while at a midnight mass, and Eda Jameson and the late Fred Hillebrand set it to music. The author's cousin, Eunice Wuerz-Boyd, sang its first public performance at Westminster Presbyterian Church, Sacramento, Cal. Playwright-novelist Lengel has been convalescing the past several months in his apartment at The Lambs where he has long resided.

Boston

By Guy Livingston
(508 Little Bldg.; 542-5095)

"Man For All Seasons" set for four-weeker at the Colonial.

Jose Greco coming in for one nighter at Symphony Hall on Jan. 10.

Ice Capades in for 10-day stand at Boston Garden, holding through Jan. 5.

Ben Sack has "Pink Panther" for his New Year's eve show at Music Hall.

Bobbi Baker into the Frolic, Revere for New Year's show in a two-weeker.

Hotel Touraine opening its Surrey Room for New Year's Eve, first time in three years.

Sack Theatres bought "Fall of the Roman Empire," "Becket" and "My Fair Lady" for 1964 showings in Hub.

Boston will be one of the cities earmarked for the "Zulu" campaign roadshow that Joe Levine is putting together.

Lillian Libman, press agent for "A Man For All Seasons," here in advance for show's Colonial stay Dec. 30-Jan. 25.

"Funny Girl," based on early life of Fanny Brice, has its first tryout performance at the Shubert Theatre here Jan. 13.

Herb Voland playing the lead in Ionesco's "Rhineoceros" at Charles Playhouse is doubling as Santa Claus in Jordan Marsh department store.

Julian Rifkin, prexy TONE, said $26,000 will be raised by the exhib org in New England to help California Crusade for Free TV in its fight against pay tv.

Entrants in the New England regional auditions for the Met Opera must complete their applications by Jan. 17, and send forms to local sponsor, Junior League of Boston, Inc. Auditions will be held Feb. 8-9 in Jordan Hall.

Eva Le Gallienne, in town with her National Repertory Theatre Co. at the Wilbur for four weeks, has the same corner suite at Hotel Touraine she's had while in Hub for every one of her stage roles over the years.

Hub leaders planning musical memorial tribute to John Fitzgerald Kennedy on Jan. 19 in Holy Cross cathedral, with Cardinal Cushing presiding and thousands of voices from glee clubs and choirs led by Boston Symphony.

Paris

By Gene Moskowitz
(80 Ave. Neuilly, Sab 0712)

New Russian style eat-treat cabaret opening via Les Balladins Russes.

John Ford's 1935 comedy, "The Whole Town's Talking" (Col) into an arty for a firstrun revival.

Alban Berg's "Wozzeck" was SRO at the Opera for its eight performances with German singers.

Walt Disney's "Pinocchio" and "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" reissued for the holiday trade.

Grand Prix Du Cinema, given by critics and technicians, went to Francois Letterier's color pic based on a Jean Giono book, "Un Roi Sans Divertissement" (A King Sans Distractions).

British pic director Clive Donner in to ogle The Eagles, a British rock group, he launched in his pic, "Some People." Besides being a fan, he is also discussing another pic deal with them.

The controversial play about Pope Pius XII and the murder of the Jews by the Nazis during the last war, "The Deputy," of Rolf Hochhuth, was not given Dec. 24 and 25 due to its subject.

Special hidden striptease sections, where a patron puts 5 francs ($1) in a slot and gets to see one, are to be inaugurated in several Pigalle boites. They will be used before and after the regular show.

Public protests were in force via letters to the state-run tele setup in recutting a vidpic version of Sean O'Casey's "The Plow and the Stars" into two shows given on alternate days. It was felt it watered down the play.

London

(HYde Park 4561/2/3)

Film director Anthony Asquith seriously injured in a car crash.

The Variety Club's annual ball set for Feb. 22 at the Dorchester.

Chester Morris in town to film an "Espionage" episode for Associated Television.

Alma Cogan opens a cabaret season at the Talk of the Town next Monday (6).

Jack Williamson, AB-Pathe's chief electrician, retired after 12 years with the company.

Lew Grade, Associated Television's managing director, hosting a press lunch at the Dorchester Jan. 2.

Associated-Rediffusion tossing a New Year's Eve parts as a tie-up with a special of their "Ready, Steady, Go" program.

Larry Adler writing his first score for a tv play, Bernard Kops' "Stray Cats and Empty Bottles," which will be shown by BBC-TV early in the New Year.

The Everyman in Hampstead, one of London's first artie picture theatres, celebrated its 30th anni last week with a revival of Rene Clair's "Le Million," with which it started operation 1933.

Brooklyn, U.S.A.

By Jo Ranson

Geoffrey Holder will be guest artist at Brooklyn Philharmonic ball Jan. 18.

Helen Gahagan Douglas popped up in the borough to make an appeal for UJA.

Nobuko Shimazaki danced for Brooklyn Museum Community Committee benefit luncheon. Proceeds to Grace Bachrach Memorial Fund.

Parent Assembly No. 1 of Society of American Magicians will stage '64 edition of its "Magic, Mirth and Mystery" at Academy of Music on March 21.

Celeste Holm cited by Adelphi Academy as outstanding graduate along with her grandfather. Edmund G. Jewett, Adelphi's oldest living ex-faculty member.

Judge Charles Solomon, who died recently, left four daughters, one of them Mildred Clinton, widely known in radio-tv and legit spheres as actress with string of credits.

Kingsway Theatre, in Flatbush, recently cooperated with merchants by permitting youngsters between 8 and 12 for free Saturday morning admish while parents shopped.

Equity Library Theatre will do "Candida" at Brooklyn Academy of Music Dec. 27; "Cyrano de Bergerac," Jan. 31 and "Plain and Fancy," March 6. Most recent offering was "Kismet."

Orchestra U.S.A. is booked for four Friday evening concerts at Brooklyn Academy of Music starting Jan. 3. Also booked for two concerts are Jose Greco & Spanish Dancers; National Ballet of Canada and Van Cliburn.

Prepping for World's Fair trade, boro prexy Abe Stark is sprucing up the county, rehabilitating Grand Army Plaza and seeking funds to put an eternal light on Soldiers & Sailors Monument in Grand Army Plaza in memory of President Kennedy.

Dorchester Marquees racked up two achievements recently: company's 40th production and beginning of 20th season. Many of the group are pros with Prof. Melvin White of Brooklyn College Dept. of Speech & Theatre as one of the directors.

Boro Prexy Stark kudoed Jackie Gleason, Phil Foster and Sam Levenson, quondam residents, for assists in the making of Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce film illustrating advantages of living, working and starting a business in Brooklyn.

Newly created Brooklyn Hall of Fame, under auspices of the Better Brooklyn Committee, has admitted Danny Kaye and Gil Hodges, manager of the Washington Senators. The two were among 11 cited for contributions to civic betterment.

Jean Dalrymple and Thelma Ritter were speakers at luncheon of the Women's League for the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Miss Dalrymple recounted President Kennedy's love of the theatre; Miss Ritter spoke of Brooklyn's cultural contribution.

Frank Pine, who heads Conquest Record Co., has moved his offices and recording studios to upper stories of Hotel Margaret on Brooklyn Heights. Pine is also inventor of bomb detection device used by N. Y. City P. D. and other U.S. police forces.

Brooklyn Republican rebel from 21st A.D., Samuel Abrahams, helped spark ticket scalping and "ice" probe by Attorney General Louis J. Lefkowitz. Unhappy encounter with Manhattan ticket-broker prompted Abrahams to complain to Lefkowitz.

Mell Lazarus, creator of "Miss Peach," widely syndicated cartoon strip and author of "The Boss Is Crazy, Too," which David Merrick is turning into a Broadway play, is making his home in Manhattan Beach. Lazarus is former James Madison High attendee.

New Verrazano Bridge, linking Brooklyn and Staten Island, has produced flock of restaurants, grog houses, motels named after the Italian navigator. Latest is the new Casa Verrazano Restaurant in Bay Ridge under aegis of Anthony Napoli. Meantime there is talk of renaming it the J. F. Kennedy Bridge.

Second attempt will be made Jan. 22 to dispose of bankrupt Hotel St. George with its more than 2,000 rooms. Court denied rumors hotel would close. Trustees are confident that buyer would appear in sufficient time to refurbish hotel for World's Fair biz. Meanwhile, Norman H. Free stays on as manager; Charles Richman as p.a.

Rep. Edna Kelly is pushing for a Brooklyn Philharmonia concert tour of Europe under auspices of State Dept.'s cultural exchange program. Siegfried Landau is music director of the only professional symphony since early 1900s to reach its 10th birthday in Brooklyn. During '63-'64 season guest artists will include Igor Gorin, Leonard Rose, Margaret Tynes, Morley Meredith, Norman Kelley and Margaret Roggero.

Vancouver

By Sam Shaw
(FA 5-3693)

Advance on Dec. 30-Jan. 4 run of "Sound of Music" close to $30,000.

Canada's pro footballer Willie Fleming now a Saturday night deejay for CFUN radio.

Road company of "How To Succeed" due on Feb. 11 for 5-day Famous Artists' stand.

Mavor Moore's satirical revue, "Spring Thaw," to open a six months cross-Canada tour here Jan. 21.

CNR-owned Hotel Vancouver to be operated by Hilton hotel chain via new manager Tom McGlavery. Big facelift contemplated.

Vancouver actor Ted Greenhalgh signed to repeat his Dawson City role in "Foxy" when the David Merrick musicomedy opens in N.Y. in February.

Pat Nagle relocated here from Montreal as staff writer for Weekend magazine. Ditto Ruth Worth for Toronto Globe & Mail, replacing Ted Bolwell.

Edgar Bergen due in for upcoming episode of Canamac Productions' "Littlest Hobo" tv series, currently shooting at local Hollyburn Film Studios.

Rita and Henri Le Goff carbon copied their dispossessed Toronto eatery La Colombe, lock, stock and art collection. All the new location lacks is former Bohemian neighbors and a liquor license.

Philadelphia

By Jerry Gaghan
(319 North 18th St., LOcust 4-4848)

Bob Marcucci's Chancellor Records closing its Philly office and moving to New York.

Herb Gillis, former Paramount branch manager here, named sales maager for U.S. and Canada, for the company's new spectacular, "Fall of Roman Empire."

Ken Packer, manager of the World, arty house, named production director of the Phila. Drama Guild's "Juno and the Paycock" at Playhouse (Jan. 30-Feb. 8).

Bandleader Al Small to play the Arthur Murray Festivals. He worked the initial dance at the Bellevue-Stratford (Nov. 2) and is skedded for the party at Ivystone in New Jersey (Jan. 6).

The Philadelphia Orchestra, under Eugene Ormandy, will be in residence for 10 days in August (13-23), at the second Long Island Festival of the Arts, performing seven open-air concerts.

Hollywood

Stephen Boyd became American citizen.

Milton R. Rackmil in from Gotham on periodic trek.

Paul Kohners and daughter Susan in Madrid for holidays.

Shanin Hale returned from east for Red Skelton's Jan. 21 teleshow.

Ted Haworth appointed art director for upcoming 36th Annual Oscar Derby.

John Lavery appointed exec director for Tent 25, Variety Club of Southern Calif.

Cliff Robertson to Brazil as guest of Brazilian goverment to rep American pix industry.

Julie London prepping new nitery act to break in at Miami's Americana Hotel Jan. 10.

Booby Vee, Liberty Records singer, starts fourweek concert tour of Europe on Feb. 28.

Warren Low, film editor associated with Hal Wallis for 30 years, repacted to new multiple-pix contract.

Victor and Rita Young Music Foundation presented 200 scores, manuscripts and trophies of late composer to Brandeis U.

Lew Ritter, ex-vaudevillian-turned-haberdasher, returns to showbiz via series of tv commercials for Rainier Brewing Co.

Van Johnson takes his nitery act to Australia for extended tour starting Feb. 3, following date at Queen Elizabeth Hotel, Montreal.

France Nuyen, Barry Sullivan and Keenan Wynn to visit 30 cities individually to bally their 20th-Fox release, "Man in Middle."

Gene Kelly makes threeweek January tour of French-speaking African countries as American specialist grantee for U.S. State Dept.

Chicago

(DElaware 7-4984)

Gregory Peck due in next week to make press rounds for "Captain Newman, M.D."

"Eve: Story of a Lonely Girl," a short produced locally by Michael Kutza Jr., getting its first commercial exposure currently at Town Theatre.

Big holiday competition at nabe and outlying theatres is selected (12) theatre firstrun opening of "Move Over Darling" and saturation booking of "Who's Minding The Store."

Chicago's American legit critic Roger Dettmer had a change of heart about "How to Succeed" at the Shubert. After seeing it a second time, he said: "It is much funnier than I gave it credit for being . . ."

On the sick list are vet agent Paul Marr, who slipped while on his annual Yule rounds to orphanages and veterans' hospitals and hurt his back, and Universal Pictures regional sales manager Pete Rosian, who is recouping from minor surgery in Cleveland.

Sydney

By Eric Gerrick
(Film House, Sydney)

Ames Bros. okay at Chequers nightclub, Sydney.

Terrific biz for the "Black & White Minstrel Show" at Tivoli, Sydney, for Tivoli loop.

Sir John Gielgug wound up a smash solo run at Royal, Sydney, for J. C. Williamson, Ltd.

"Camelot" a solid hit in Adelaide for J. C. Williamson Ltd. Moves into Melbourne next February.

Eric Rutledge retired as 20th-Fox managing director in New Zealand after a term of 26 years.

"Bye Bye Birdie" (Col) clicked a record 10 weeks at 2,600-seat State, Sydney, on four-a-day for Greater Union Theatres.

J. C. Williamson Ltd. brings "Mary, Mary" to Royal, Sydney. Britishers Derek Farr and Muriel Pavlow are starred.

Colin Campbell, longtime chief film censor here, bows out next February. Campbell will later take over post of Appeal Censor.

"Cleopatra" (20th) away to a solid start at Mayfair, Sydney, on two-a-day for Hoyts.' Majority of local pix reviewers were unkind to it.

Aussie straw hat biz holding very solidly with "The Physicists," "Winslow Boy," "Rashmon," "Peter Pan" and "Hansel and Gretel."

"Lawrence of Arabia" (Col) continues powerful on two-a-day for Greater Union Theatres at the Barclay, Sydney. It's passed its sixth week.

N.Y. Pix Need Room to Boom

Continued from page 1

activity this year was experienced by the Fox Movietone Studios. Over on the 10th Ave. stages, studio manager Joe Wills reports that while Movietone was only about 50% occupied in 1962, it was "close to 100% occupied" in 1963.

Other Product

Accounting for this activity were three features: Ely Landau's just-completed "The Pawnbroker," Max Youngstein's "Fail-Safe," "Gone Are The Days" (Purlie Victorious), and the wrap-up of David Susskind's "All The Way Home." In addition, the studios were occupied at various times in the production of several tv pilots, including the one for "East Side, West Side," which moved up to the Biograph Studios in the Bronx when the series went into production.

Movietone, which has one of the largest stages in the east, has also been doing odd jobs for the parent company (testing players for upcoming 20th Coast productions), though it doesn't seem likely that 20th, which has a mammouth studio facility on the Coast, will detour any of its feature activity to N.Y. In prospect for 1964 are several tv pilots, with "several" features also possible—including Youngstein's projected film version of John Updike's "Rabbit Run."

Myerberg Debut

The New York area's newest studios—the Michael Myerberg Studios at Roosevelt Field, L.I., which opened this summer—were occupied most of the summer and fall by the Pan Arts production of "The World of Henry Orient," Peter Sellers starrer. But, additionally, space was used briefly by Robert Rossen for some studio work on his "Lilith," and just at year end they wound production on the CBS-TV pilot, "Kibbee Hates Fitch."

A Myerberg spokesman reports that four features are a possibility for 1964, not including Myerberg's long-planned production of the anti-Leadshrinker ananymous biog, "The Frog Pond," which he has plans to do under a precedent-setting arrangement calling for union participation at producer level.

The Production Center on Manhattan's West Side, was the scene of studio work early in 1963 on Dore Schary's "Act One," and, since July, has been fully occupied with the Patty Duke television series. Earlier features shot at the Production Center include another Patty Duke starrer, "The Miracle Worker," as well as "Long Day's Journey Into Night."

Hi Brown's 80%

Center head Hi Brown reports that his studios were about 80% occupied during 1963, approximately the same as in 1962. Prospects for getting several pilots in 1964 are good, and he, for one, feels they are almost as good to have on the stages as features—that much dough is spent on them.

Out on Long Island, the Hempstead Studios, owned by the young indie firm of Seneca Productions, was occupied this year by the production of three indie features—Janus' "The Troublemaker," "Sandy Howard's "Diary of A Bachelor" and Bob Gurney Jr.'s "The Parisienne and The Prude." Seneca itself had christened the studios in 1962 with their own production of "The Light Fanastic," which Joe Levine has on his upcoming release sked.

In addition, the Trans-Lux series of 10-minute tv shows, "Mack and Myer for Hire," has been going on a continuous basis at the Hempstead plant.

While the Hempstead Studios have been busy in the past year, Seneca exec Bob Gaffney doesn't expect any boom in N.Y. feature production to make N.Y. studio managers rich. "Feature production here goes in fits and starts," and for the forseeable future, N.Y. activity will be mostly confined to the shoestring, avant-garde stuff which eschews studio work.

The Biltmore Studios on Manhattan's lower Second Ave., the scene of the production of a number of lowbudget features some years back (Street of Sinners," "Four Boys and A Gun," etc.), has in recent years been almost entirely tied up with tv filming. It completed four years of "Naked City" in June and has now just wound a CBS-TV pilot starring Robert Horton ("Mark Dolphin"). Earlier it was set for a Screen Gems pilot, starring Zero Mostel, though this was cancelled after sets were built when the star took an aversion to the script.

Biltmore's Lew Klotz says he's been almost 100% occupied for the last two years. Future looks good, he thinks, because of all the activity on pilots, most of which will continue to base in New York if they go into actual production, since their stories require a good deal of location shooting around Big Town.

The Edison Studios in the Bronx have been about 30% occupied in the past year, mostly with tv commercials, but it has its eye on one of several series for 1964.

The Biograph Studios in the Bronx, which have a long history of feature production (most recently, "Odd Against Tomorrow," "The Fugitive Kind," etc.), is currently occupied with "East Side, West Side." Also tv-occupied are the Pathe and Filways studios, with "The Defenders" and "The Nurses."

900G Legit Flops (6)

Continued from page 1

Kitty Black adaptation of a play by Jean Anouilh, registered a 14-week run at the Royale. The British import costarred Keith Michell, Coral Browne, Alan Badel, Adrienne Cori and Jennifer Hilary.

"Verb, this season's first new entry on Broadway, is figured to have dropped around $35,000 on a $70,000 investment. The London original by Hugh and Margaret Williams, was produced for Broadway by Alfred de Ligare Jr. with Claudette Colbert and Cyril Ritchard as costars. It was at the Barrymore for a total of 15 weeks.

"Kisses" closed after only two weeks at the Music Box at an estimated loss of, at least, its entire $100,000 investment. The comedy by Anita Rowe Block was produced by Dore Schary, with Walter Reilly, and costarred Larry Parks and Mary Fickett.

"Dublin," an Irish revue costarring John Molloy and Noel Sheridan, is figured to have run through about $45,000. The show folded after four regular performances at the Little Theatre, N.Y. The revue was imported by Josephine Forrestal, widow of James Forrestal, the first Secretary of Defense.

Vegas Lounge Acts

Continued from page 1

Vegas Strip, before the lounge gimmick was introduced, there was no minimum charge in the main showrooms. But as big show room budgets kept increasing a minimum charge became necessary—at first $2 per, but as the cost of shows increased the minimum rose to $5 for most hotels.

During the past five years hotels have been expanding, with most striving for at least 1,000 rooms. At least 50 new motels have been built during that time, but there have been no new showrooms added, making it more and more difficult to obtain reservations in regular showrooms. Thus, lounge biz increased because of the tourist demand for entertainment as an annex to gambling.

Casino Hypo

The proximity of lounges to the casino makes lounges a most important phase of casino operation.

Competition in this field compels hotels to reach out for bigger and better lounge attractions; at first $5,000 to $7,500 weekly budgets were considered extravagant by casino bosses, but in many instances those figures have doubled and tripled, with the introduction to lounges of names such as Billy Daniels, Ella Fitzgerald, Louis Prima, Billy Eckstine, Harry James, Shecky Greene, Lionel Hampton, Frances Faye, Jerry Colonna, Guy Lombardo, Ben Blue and Ted Lewis.

Budgets climbed due to competition to the present time when some hotels budget lounge entertainment as high as $25,000 per week.

Casinos are adjusted to carrying the monetary loss of diningrooms, but are developing grey hairs absorbing the lounge losses. Most of the remodeled lounges have a seating capacity of 300 to 350, with another 30 to 40 seated at the bar.

Three shows nightly is average for the star attraction in a lounge, with second acts doing four. Lounge entertainment begins around 6 p.m., continuous without a break until 6 a.m. Thus the turnover can be at least four or five times instead of the two times in main showrooms. Popular prices prevail, with most lounges serving only beverages. Food is served only on special occasions.

Average income of lounges seating 300 to 400, with a turnover of four to five times for each seat, could be approximately $20,000 weekly. A $2 minimum would increase the lounge revenue approximately 25%, and a $3 minimum 35%.

The question remains: Should the casinos absorb the lounge losses and keep biz at a peak level, or should a modest minimum be charged which would help the lounge break even but possibly reduce the volume of casino traffic?

Lounge entertainment started at the Last Frontier in 1952 by Eddie Fox, who is now entertainment chief at the Silver Slipper. The Mary Kaye Trio packed the Gay 90s lounge, followed by Frances Faye, George Shearing, Gene Krupa, and many others, all at a price level, according to Fox, of about 25% those current.

Each lounge (11 on the Strip; seven downtown) averages four entertainment units, which means there are about 72 acts working nightly in Las Vegas.

Most lounges have lost the intimate touch and have been transformed into secondary showrooms—another reason why the hotel operators are eyeing them for a minimum charge policy.

'No B-Girls'

Continued from page 1

"All clubs in my jurisdiction, to the best and complete knowledge of this office, do not employ B-girls. Working conditions are in accordance with AGVA contracts and minimum basic agreements. All clubs have separate facilities for both male and female members and have a maid in attendance at all times."

In Miami Beach, manager Jerry Baker declared, "Please be advised that as far as this office is concerned, there is no B-girl activity in this territory now or since the investigation committee in Washington."

The strangest answer to the query came from the Cleveland AGVA rep, "I don't know what you mean by B-girls. I do have two clubs that book nothing but girls and bellydancers. The working conditions are okay. The dressing-rooms are comfortable. I have had no complaints from our members within the last five or six years."

New Orleans' Raids

New Orleans, another B-girl stronghold, related through manager Leon Cornman, "Please be advised that during the past year the district attorney and the superintendent of police in this city have been raiding the clubs religiously and have made numerous arrests under this city's no-mingling ordinance passed by the city council during the past year. This ordinance does not allow an exotic entertainer to speak to a customer, let alone have a drink with one; therefore to the best of my knowledge, there has been little or no mixing on these clubs for the past several months."

More denials of B-girl activity came from the top AGVA reps in Washington, Las Vegas, San Francisco, Atlanta, Minneapolis, Buffalo, Portland, Toronto, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Los Angeles.

The AGVA branch managers in Montreal admitted to one spot using these girls. Sarasota also found one of these joints. Denver stated there were two or three. One of the frankest answers came from Pat Marvanelli (Boston) who not only admitted the existence of such rooms that require the entertainers to mix so that customers buy drinks, but mentioned the rooms by name, in Boston as well as other towns in his jurisdiction. He told of his efforts to combat this evil.

Another frank answer came from Chuck Williams, of St. Louis, who told of the progress being made to eliminate B-girls, and police citations in connection with the clubs under suspicion.

Woods, as head of the Interim Committee, says he will continue to work toward elimination of B-girls from the union, and has inserted a prohibition on mixing in the new contract forms currently being printed and a similar prohibition in contracts with all talent agencies.

$100-Mil. TV Comedy

Continued from page 1

off) at 9:30? That, too, is under serious consideration.

And, should "Hillbillies" go Sundays, what about the new Parke Levy comedy series or the Phil Ford-Mimi Hines series out of Four Star for Sundays 9:30? This too, is getting some prime consideration.

And since Danny Thomas is going out of the Monday at 9 period next season, what do you do to maintain the Nielsen supremacy of that Monday comedy bloc? The answer to this one is the possibility of Lucille Ball, far from going off the air entirely, expanding to a full hour, 8:30 to 9:30. This is something more than idle gossip, with Miss Ball's rep, Don Sharpe, currently in N.Y. negotiating with CBS-TV anent the possible extension of the comedienne's Monday night half-hour series to the 60-minute route.

Miss Ball, also prexy of Desilu, was to have notified General Foods about a renewal by Dec. 15, with GF for obvious rating reasons anxious to continue its bankrolling. However, she hasn't yet given them an answer and it's believed this is due to the negotiations currently underway in N.Y.

Thus, should Miss Ball go an hour, the Monday night lineup will read: "To Tell the Truth," "I've Got A Secret," Lucy Show, Andy Griffith. And with "East Side West Side" building on the Nielsens and getting a new facade, it's a good prospect for a '64-'65 renewal at the Monday 10-11 entry.

At any rate, Aubrey and Dann find their hands full resolving Sunday, Monday, Tuesday (with Jack Benny departing), Wednesday, Thursday ("Rawhide" going) and a whole new Friday schedule. There's too much at stake to treat it lightly.

AFM-Disk Pact

Continued from page 1

the sale of their product, the tootlers won in wages and in fringe benefits approximately a 20% increase, Kenin said, over the previous contract which expired Dec. 31.

The new agreement, subject to formal ratification by nearly 2,000 recording instrumentalist, arrangers, orchestrators and copyists, would become retroactive to Jan. 1 upon certification of an affirmative member poll to be conducted by the Honest Ballot Assn. Secret ballots returnable on or before Jan. 21 will be mailed sometime this week.

The contract was negotiated by the international exec board of the Federation, its counsel, and a score or more of spokesman for the disk industry. Rank and file tootlers were also in attendance during the negotiations.

European Reaction

Continued from page 2

leged lack of accuracy in U.S. films, the majority felt an unrealistically favorable presentation of the American standard of living was portrayed.

Except in France, the Europeans polled placed Yank films in first or second place on their viewing preference list. The French ranked Italian imports above U.S. films.

A "heavy majority" of British, German and Italian viewers found Yank picture enjoyable while the French were evenly divided in their opinions.

No Bullet

Continued from page 1

versions already have been placed around the world and dubbed versions in 29 foreign languages are being prepared for distribution shortly.

"The President" is intended for commercial motion picture theatres, television and, in less developed areas, mobile units.

Also for distribution via USAI is a half-hour documentary for television on President Johnson, titled "Let Us Continue." This is going in 102 language prints.

MARRIAGES

Lorna Stevens to Johnny Hart, Coventry, Eng., recently. He is an illusionist; she is his assistant.

Bernadine Becker to George Butler, St. Petersburg, Fla., Dec. 21. Bride is publicity director for WSUN-TV-AM; he's program director of WTCX-FM, St. Petersburg.

Rochelle Karger to Fred Kaplan, New York, Dec. 24. He's film traffic controller at ABC-TV.

Dorothy Tutin to Derek Waring, London, Dec. 23. Bride is an actress; he's an actor.

Gloria Vanderbilt to Wyatt Cooper, Dec. 24, Arlington, Va. It's the fourth marriage for the heriess and the first for the screen and tv writer. She was divorced from director Sidney Lumet four months ago (his marriage to Gail Jones, daughter of singer Lena Horne, on Nov. 23 was confirmed last week), and her first and second husbands were Pasquale (Pat) di Cicco and maestro Leopold Stokowski.

Claude Bettina Leston to Ivor David Balding, New York, Dec. 28. He's coproducer of the off-Broadway production of "The Ginger Man" and managing director of The Establishment Theatre Co.

Robyn Baker to Richard F. Flatt, Dallas, Dec. 21. Bride is an actress and legit staffer at the Dallas Theatre Center.

Judy Keirn to Brian Davies, Dec. 27, Kew Gardens, N. Y. Bride is a dancer, last in "No Strings"; Davies is juvenile lead in "A Funny Thing Happened" etc.

BIRTHS

Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Michael, daughter, Santa Monica, Cal., Dec. 20. Mother is daughter of tv producer-packager Parke Levy.

Mr. and Mrs. Dan Bagott, daughter, Hollywood, Dec. 21. Father is a CBS-TV publicist.

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth McKellar, daughter, Glasgow, Dec. 22. Father is a disk and tv singer.

Mr. and Mrs. Curt Mercer, daughter, Hollywood, Dec. 15. Father's an actor.

Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Adler, daughter, London, Dec. 22. Father is head of NBC International in London; mother is a former tv producer.

Mr. and Mrs. Burton Litwin, son, New York, Dec. 27. Mother is the daughter of Nat Lefkowitz, William Morris Agency treasurer.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard W. Marek, son, Dec. 19, New York. He's book editor of McCall's and son of George R. Marek, v.p. and g.m. of RCA Victor.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh McPhillips, daughter, Suffern, N. Y., Dec. 21. Father is associate director with NBC-TV Public Affairs Dept.

Mr. and Mrs. John Mosedale, son, New York, Dec. 24. Father is CBS sports department writer.

Olsen & Johnson

Continued from page 1

century. Also included is every edition of VARIETY and the New York Clipper; all the New York dramatic reviews for almost a century, files of Punch (London), dating back to the early 1800s, all the (old) Life magazines from 1883; all the O&J, "Ziegfeld Follies" and "Passing Shows" (Shuberts) scripts; and of course their own "Hellzapoppin" and vaude, radio, film, tv scripts; all of "Madison's Budgets" (vaude joke anthologies), most of Will Rogers routines, virtually all of the early minstrel shows.

Miss O'Dare calls it a "fabulous" collection, citing the fact that before Olsen & Johnson's 35-40 years of collecting, James Madison's "Budgets" go back 40 years before them.

On a personal note, Bill Lear (who is married to Ole Olsen's daughter by previous marriage), manufacturer of the Lear Jet, was the first to fly a private plane into Russia only a few years ago; has won the Collier Trophy, the Horatio Alger Award and the like. This segues into Miss O'Dare's personal romance with William A. Sippreil, executive veepee of the Lear Jet Corp., whom she will marry in Miami on Jan. 27 and will reside in Wichita, Kas., after a Mexican honeymoon.

In inventorying the O&J theatre collection, the present intention is to donate it to some fitting repository "preferably in Hollywood for the use of people and writers in the theatre. We also hung up all the O&J citations and many photographs a lot of work, but a labor of love."

OBITUARIES

JACOB J. SHUBERT

Jacob J. Shubert, 86, the last of the three brothers who founded the Shubert theatre enterprises in New York and in the hinterlands, died Dec. 26 in New York of a cerebral hemorrhage.

Details in Legit.

PAUL HINDEMITH

Paul Hindemith, 68, one of the top modern composers, died Dec. 28 in Frankfurt. He had been suffering from a circulatory ailment for some time. His works had been performed by leading symphonic orchestras throughout the world.

His best known compositions are "Mathis der Maler," "Harmony of the World," "Pittsburgh Symphony" and "For Those We Love." Latter is a requiem based on the poems of Walt Whitman. His music was banned by the Nazis in 1939. He presumed that it was because of its modernistic nature. He was not Jewish but his wife was. German-born Hindemith became a naturalized citizen of the United States in 1946.

Survived by his wife.

NAT COHN

Nathan J. Cohn, 63, Columbia Pictures sales executive and younger brother of the late cofounders of Col, Harry and Jack Cohn, died Dec. 25 in Palm Springs where he had been vacationing. Company offices around the world closed during the funeral services.

Nathan Cohn was born in Buffalo, N. Y., and entered the film industry in the booking department of Loew's Theatres. He subsequently engaged in distribution on a states right basis and later, in 1928, went to Col as New York district manager.

His wife, the former Sara Feinblum, died last May.

FRANK L. WHITBECK

Frank L. Whitbeck, 81, who started his show biz career as a circus barker at age of 16 and for many years was Metro studio ad director and trailer dept. head, died of a heart attack Dec. 23 in Hollywood.

During his nearly 60 years in all aspects of show biz, he could never forget his early days with the elephants. While regarded as dean of southern California publicists in his later years, he personally thought of himself as an elephant man. He once owned three of the pachyderms and decorated his desk with dozens of ivory carvings of the beasts.

Through his early years Whitbeck worked with circuses, carnivals, repertory theatres, vaudeville (as advance man for George Sidney pere) and even tubthumped for such personalities as pianist Ignace Jan Paderewski.

His first contact with motion pix came in 1913 when he became a manager for the Poli circuit in Worcester, Mass. During this period he also sold Louis B. Mayer, then an exhib in Haverhill, Mass., the first film the Hollywood tycoon to be showed in his theatre. This provided a running friendly feud between the two during his many years at Metro.

Whitbeck was brought to Metro by the late Irving Thalberg, then production chief, in 1934 as studio ad director and trailer dept. head, a post he held until his retirement in 1957. He was the voice heard in hundreds of Metro trailers and one of his best-remembered brainstorms was the "Garbo Talks!" line.

He received the Publicists Guild's first "Tom Tom" award in 1953 and, a few years ago, coauthored "This Was Hollywood" with Beth Day. Even after retirement, he returned to Metro to work on "Jumbo" because of the circus background.

His wife survives.

HENRY FINK

Henry Fink, coauthor of "The Curse of an Aching Heart" which averaged him at least $1,200 per annum from ASCAP—and sometimes more when some disk "revival" spurred performances—died in Mexico City on Christmas eve of a heart attack. He was 75 and a longtime resident in that country where he owned and operated a small Cuernavaca tourist hotel, the Shangri-La until recently.

During the period when ex-New York's Mayor William F. O'Dwyer was the U.S. Ambassador to Mexico, Fink and he were an unofficial and official welcoming tandem for visiting Americans, and especially so if from show biz or the press. Ambassador O'Dwyer was a firm friend of the songwriter who, when he suffered his first heart attack several years ago, generated interest at the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers which took care of Fink's basic hospital bills etc.

Fink, who belied his 75 years, brought a Broadway veneer below the Rio Grande but was close to the people because, like O'Dwyer, he learned the language and remained off the American "reservation". His hostelry was patronized as much by locals as Yank tourists who preferred the sea level Cuernavaca to the high altitude capital city.

Fink was one of the genres of "singing waiters", a la Irving Berlin, Jimmy Durante, Eddie Cantor et al. who gravitated to Broadway as songsmiths or star entertainers. During the Prohibition era he was a fixture at one bistro on West 52d St. for almost a decade. It was while plugging songs that he and the late Al Piantadosi coauthored "The Curse of an Aching Heart" which has remained an evergreen lachrymose ballad for a third-of-a-century.

Fink's daughter, Shirley (Mrs. Samuel Gruber), who sang in vaudeville as "Alice Dawn", came in from her Detroit home to handle the funeral arrangements as prescribed by him at a Long Island cemetery. Her husband, incidentally, owns the famed London Chop House and Caucus Club, both in Detroit. She is a niece of the yesteryear famed Paul and Sam Salvin nitery and restaurant operators in pre-Prohibition New York.

GORGEOUS GEORGE

George Raymond Wagner, 48, the blond and marcelled professional wrestler billed as Gorgeous George, died of a heart attack Dec. 25 in Los Angeles. He drew yoohoos, handkerchief waving and boxoffice during the early days of tv when wrestling was a major audience lure.

Gorgeous George, twice married, which the fans didn't know about, out a flamboyant figure in the ring. His entrance was preceded by an attendant who sprayed perfume. He walked on a satin carpet, and the organ filled the auditorium with the strains of Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance."

Despite the fact that he was a mediocre athlete, he earned $70,000 annually with this act until his retirement from the ring. He was a taproom operator toward the end. The Los Angeles City Council passed a resolution honoring him as an entertainer and adjourned in his honor Friday (27).

When tv was in its infancy and "rassling" still a nascent "sport" on the image orthicon, a visiting VARIETY man was invited to dinner "only on Wednesday" by a top film producer because "I want you to see the best actor in Hollywood."

To "see" was the video gimmick, because Gorgeous George was doing his stuff on Wednesdays then over the air and had captured the film colony's imagination with his flair for showmanship, bombast and ballyhooey—all the ingredients of a natural born Barnum, which is what quickly enriched GG.

He ultimately changed his name legally to Gorgeous George, which soon passed into the common language for any number of colloquialisms.

NETTIE HELLMAN

Mrs. Nettie Hellman, 78, who with her late husband Harry was a pioneer Albany exhibitor, died Dec. 27 in that city at the home of her son, Neil. The Hellmans first operated the Fairyland, a nickelodeon in downtown Albany and later ran the Royal in the same area.

The family's theatre holdings expanded through the years. Neil Hellman now owns The Hellman in Albany (built in memory of his father), two Philadelphia drive-ins and two ozoners in Trenton, among other properties.

The Hellmans' other child, the late Tea Hellman Little, was married to pianist Little Jack Little. Also surviving are two granddaughters, one of whom Mrs. Alan V. Iselin, is the wife of the president of Iselin Theatres.

CHERRY HARDY

Cherry Hardy, 74, British character actress who appeared on the international stage for more than a half century, died Dec. 23 in New York. She made her debut at the age of 15. Later she was seen in such plays as "The Garden of Allah," "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" and "The Fool," among other works.

Miss Hardy, who extensively toured the British Empire and the Orient in a variety of plays, came to the U.S. in 1935 under the aegis of Gilbert Miller to portray the Duchess of Sutherland in a Broadway production of "Victoria Regina." She later had the same part on the road.

In London's West End, Miss Hardy was cast in "Firebird," "Reunion in Vienna" and "The Apple Cart." Her Broadway credits, aside from "Victoria Regina," included "Make Way for Lucia," "Anne of England" and "The Druid Circle."

PARRY JONES

Parry Jones, 72, a Welsh operatic tenor who was considered one of Britain's top singers, died Dec. 26 in London. He was principal tenor at the Covent Garden opera house, London, until 1955 when he shifted to its managerial staff.

Jones, who studied at the Royal College of Music, made his European debut in 1914. He sang at New York's Metropolitan Opera in 1913 and toured the U. S. the following year. In 1915, he became a member of the D'Oyly carte Opera.

He was noted for his extensive repertoire which included not only operas but songs and oratorios in more than four languages. An original member of the British National Opera Company, Jones also sang with the Carl Rosa company as well as in major opera houses of the world.

VIDA HOPE

Vida Hope, 43, actress and stage director, died in an auto accident Dec. 23, in Chelmsford, Eng. Although best known for her work as director of "The Boy Friend," which she staged in London and New York, she had an acting career in the West End dating back to 1939, when she appeared in Herbert Farjeon's "Little Revue."

Miss Hope later played an Old Vic season, appearing in "Peer Gynt" and Tobacco Road." One of her best known roles was in "Women of Twilight," which she also repeated in the film version.

After her success with "The Boy Friend," she subsequently directed "The Punch Revue," Sandy Wilson's "Valmouth" and "Big Soft Nellie."

Survived by her husband, film director Derek Twist.

WILLIAM HELLER

William (Bill) Heller, 50, Pittsburgh nitery operator, died of a heart attack Dec. 18 in Los Angeles. With his brothers Jackie and Sol, he ran many cafes in Pitt. Most notable of his nightclubs was the Carousel, Pitt's top supper club during the late 1940s and the early 1950s.

Heller also operated the Yacht Club which sank in the Monongahela River just before World War II. His brother, Jackie, is a w.k. entertainer now working in Las Vegas. Bill was enroute to visit Jackie when he was stricken while visiting his other brother, Sol.

Surviving, in addition to his brothers, are his wife; a daughter, son and three sisters.

WILBUR C. STOUFFER

Wilbur Claiborne Stouffer, 71, managing editor of the Roanoke (Va.) World-News for 34 years before retiring in 1961, died Dec. 13 in Roanoke. He was best known as writer of the paper's "Observant Citizen" column in which he frequently expressed his fondness for musicals and other theatrical productions.

Stouffer, a founder of the Associated Press Managing Editors Assn., taught journalism for a time at Washington & Lee U. and was a former president of the Roanoke Little Theatre League.

Survived by two sisters. His wife, the former Anne Cannon, of the Cannon textile family, died in 1961.

ROBERT STEVENS

Robert Stevens, 83, onetime actor and director who had worked in both stock and films, died Dec. 19 in Lauderdale-by-the-Sea, Fla. Prior to his retirement in 1953, he directed the Community Players in Rochester, N.Y., for 28 years.

A member of a noted theatre family, Stevens was a cousin of Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske, his father was Julia Marlowe's personal manager and actress Emily Stevens was his sister. After studying at the American Academy of Dramatic Arts, he appeared in various stock companies.

Around 1918 Stevens became an assistant director at Metro. But he later went to Broadway to stage several plays including "The Bat."

His wife survives.

ROBERT B. CHOATE

Robert B. Choate, 65, board chairman of the Boston Herald-Traveler Corp., died of a heart ailment Dec. 21 in Boston. He had been the Herald's Washington correspondent and its managing editor, was named publisher in 1940, and became president in 1950.

Choate, also president of the newspaper owned tv station, WHDH-TV, relinquished the position of president of the corporation last October and was elected board chairman. Although he virtually dropped control of the newspapers, he retained his position as WHDH, WHDH-TV president.

Surviving are his wife, son and three daughters.

ROBERT M. GEIS

Robert M. Geis, 51, director of the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation, died of a heart attack Dec. 25 in Columbus. He was host on all radio programs of the Ohio Farm Bureau, with most of his shows broadcast via WRFD, Columbus-Worthington.

Geis also produced programs for many Ohio radio and television stations. In addition, he owned the Columbus radio production firm, M-J Productions.

His wife and two sons survive.

PERRY FERGUSON

Perry Ferguson, 62, longtime art director whose credits included such films as "Best Years of Our Lives," "Citizen Kane" and "Bill of Divorcement," died after surgery in Hollywood Dec. 27. In recent years he had been with Warner Bros. in its tv dept. Among his other credits were "The Outlaw," "Pride of the Yankees," "Up in Arms" and "Gunga Din."

His wife, two sons and two daughters survive.

IMRE VECSEY

Imre (Emery) Vecsey, 70, advertising manager of Cleveland's Hungarian-language newspaper Szabadsag (Liberty), died Dec. 23 in that city. He was the brother of the late Armand Vecsey, violinist-conductor, long a fixture at the old Ritz-Carlton Hotel in New York, with his orchestra.

The newspaperman Vecsey was at one time an operatic baritone.

HELENE V. B. WURLITZER

Mrs. Helene V. B. Wurlitzer, 89, art patroness and musician, died Dec. 23 at Taos, N. M.

The widow of Howard E. Wurlitzer of the music instrument manufacturing family, she moved to the art colony of Taos in the 1940s and was active in the Wurlizer Foundation. It was established to help writers, painters and musicians.

EDNA W. SAUNDERS

Mrs. Edna W. Saunders, 83, retired impresario, died Dec. 21 in Houston. She began her show biz career in 1918 and in later years presented top concert artists, ballet and folk dance companies as well as name bands and musical revues in Houston.

Surviving are a brother, a niece and four nephews.

ERNEST L. BLYSTONE

Ernest L. Blystone, 76, who gained fame by writing the Lord's Prayer on a grain of rice, died Dec. 17 in Ardara, Pa.

Blystone, known as "Blye The Rice Writer," appeared at the Chicago World's Fair in 1933, the California Exposition in 1936 and the New York World's Fair in 1939.

JOHN B. TAYLOR

John Bellamy Taylor, 88, retired General Electric Co. research engineer who pioneered in talking motion pictures, died Dec. 20 in Schenectady, N.Y. He was also credited with fabricating the first portable radio.

Surviving are three sons, daughter, three brothers and two sisters.

DOUGLAS E. RAPP

Douglas E. Rapp, 28, staff announcer with WOSU-TV, Columbus, O., was killed Dec. 21 in that city when the motorcycle he was riding hit the rear of an Ohio State U. police cruiser.

He suffered a skull fracture and multiple head injuries.

WILLIAM S. DARLING

William S. Darling, 81, supervising art director at 20th-Fox prior to his retirement in 1958, died Dec. 15 in Laguna Beach, Cal. One of the veterans of the industry, he won an Academy Oscar for his work in "Cavalcade" in 1933.

ROLAND RAY

Roland Ray, 69, film makeup artist for 30 years, died of cancer Dec. 23 in Hollywood. He had worked at majority of major studios during his career.

Surviving is his wife, Gertrude, hair stylist at KTTV.

HARRY A. SPEAR

Harry A. Spear, 56, chief projectionist at Samuel Goldwyn Studios for over 30 years, died Dec. 21 in Hollywood.

Wife and daughter survive.

Richard F. Cullen Jr., 55, onetime vocalist who appeared in the Broadway production of "Rio Rita," died of a heart attack recently in San Antonio. His wife, father, two brothers and two sisters survive.

IN LOVING MEMORY
OF
HARRY and ALBERT
VON TILZER
THE FAMILY

In Memory of
JACOB J. SHUBERT
December 26, 1963
Negro Actors Guild of America

JACOB J. SHUBERT
was among the distinguished professional theatre people whose support has nurtured the growth of the New Dramatists Committee. The past and future work of young playwright members will be listed among the living tributes to his memory.
The New Dramatists Committee

CHERRY HARDY
Services were held at
"The Universal" Chapel
East 52nd St. and Lexington Ave.
Saturday, Dec. 28th, 12 Noon
Contributions may be made in her memory to the Actors' Fund.

EDDIE, WELCOME TO THE CRYSTAL ROOM

Designed for great evenings, sparkling with new excitement, serving outstanding food, memorable wines; —for these brilliant nights we are delighted to introduce what we believe to be the ultimate in theater-dining room elegance.

Created for the finest theatrical talent, the Crystal Room's particular pleasure is presenting Eddie Fisher in the premiere program. Other outstanding artists engaged for our stage are Milton Berle, Phil Harris and Katrina Valente, Danny Kaye, Andy Williams, Jimmy Durante, and the McGuire Sisters.

Wilbur Clark's
DESERT INN
Las Vegas, Nevada

On December 28th the third show was reserved for the benefit of the DAMON RUNYON CANCER FUND.

58th ANNIVERSARY EDITION

VARIETY

Published Weekly at 154 West 46th Street, New York, N. Y. 10036, by Variety, Inc. Annual subscription, $15. Single copies, 35 cents.
Second Class Postage Paid at New York, N.Y.

© COPYRIGHT, 1964, BY VARIETY, INC., ALL RIGHTS RESERVED

VOL. 233 No. 7 NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 8, 1964 PRICE 35 CENTS

JAN 8 1964

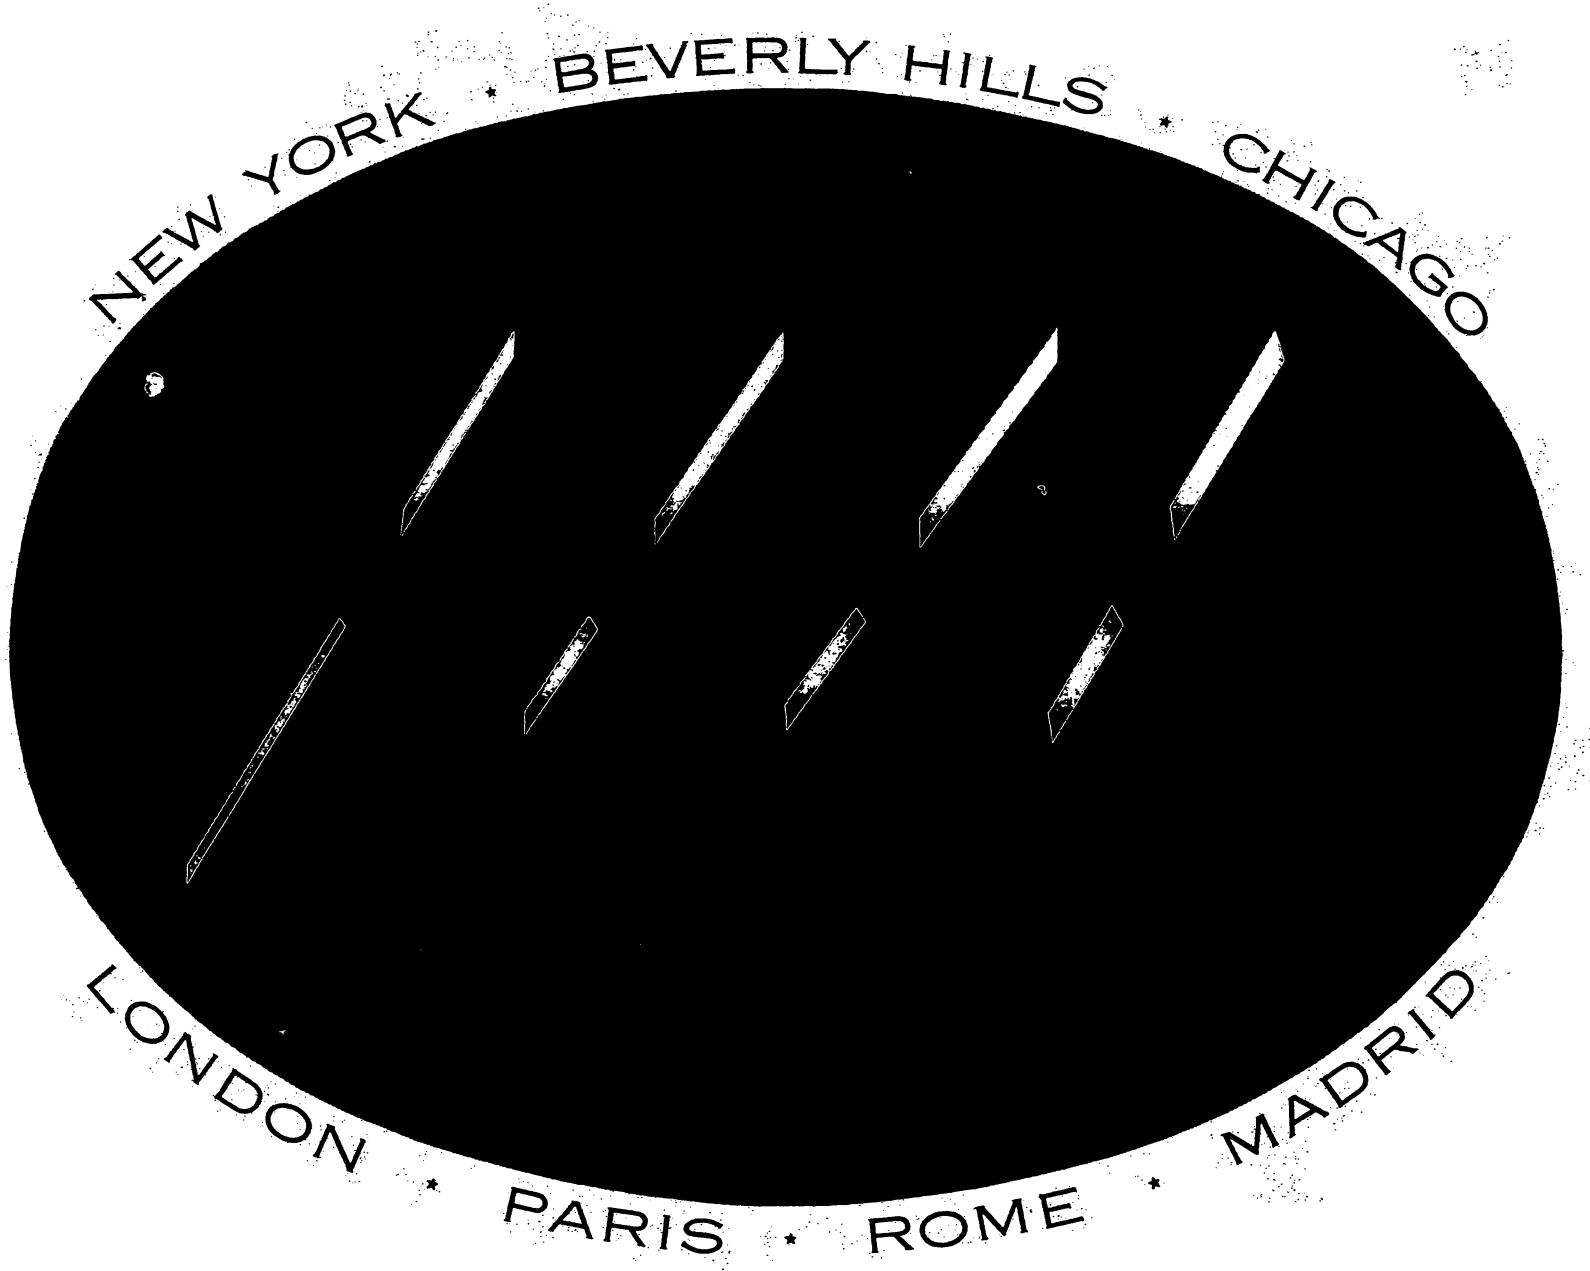
RCA Victor developed and perfected Color TV. Today, more people own performance-proved RCA Victor TV than any other kind . . . black-and-white or color.

RCA The Most Trusted Name in Television

Tmk(s)®

See the RCA Color TV Center at the World's Fair

SINCE 1898 . . . THE AGENCY OF THE SHOW WORLD
DEDICATED TO THE PRINCIPLE OF CREATIVE MANAGEMENT



WILLIAM MORRIS AGENCY, INC.

FILMS | VIDEO | TV FILMS | RADIO | MUSIC | STAGE

VARIETY

Vol. 233 No. 7 NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 8, 1964 PRICE 35 CENTS

A YEAR OF TRAGEDY & TRIFLES

As in U.S., Those Who Bop With Pops Or Do Comedy Vault to Fame in UK

By ROGER WATKINS

London.

What was once a very far stretch, the mileage between the amateur talent competition and top professional billing, has been short-circuited a dozen or so times in the past couple of years around here as in the U.S. These days, it's a case of a busdriver, a milkman or an undergraduate one minute, and a hit waxer or a West End headliner the next. Success in British show business, it's proved, can now be attained in one gigantic step.

Particularly instrumental in opening show business doors to beginners and immediately elevating them to the pinnacle of their profession is the music industry. Geared to the sale of records, the British music men who prowl the pop arena are catering in the main for kids who, undoubtedly, are the largest pop record buyers. And it's a facet of the business that the fickle, undiscriminating youngsters are as likely to pick up a disk by a newcomer as they are an established artist.

Thus the British disk best selling chart by older show biz standards, reads like amateur night in Dixie with local names like Gerry & the Pacemakers, Brian Poole & The Tremeloes, The Searchers, The Fourmost Johnny Kidd & The Pirates and so on, and on.

New names accorded star-status upon their first click disk prob-

(Continued on page 94)

Historic Note

Writing of New York City, which then had a population of 30,000, Isaac Weld, in "Travels Through the States of North America in 1795, 1796 and 1797" said:

"The theatre is of wood, and a most miserable edifice it is; but a new one is now building on a grand scale, which it is thought, will be as much too large for the town as the other is too small."

Germany's Too Frank Press

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt.

"Why I Left My Wife—and Am Now Living With a 26-Year-Old Singer."

That was the headline, and subcap, on a story in a leading West German newspaper recently.

The story that followed was a frank interview with one of the top television masters of ceremonies in West Germany and Austria. He openly discussed leaving his wife ("She doesn't understand me"—apparently an ailment just as chronic in the Bavarian backwoods as it is in Beverly Canyon).

The man (he'd better be nameless in the American paper, because we're pretty cautious) went on to tell that he's now living with the 26-year-old singer who is on his show, and hopes to make it legal one day.

Not even "Confidential" in its heyday of horror could have come up with an "exclusive" interview like this.

But it's part of the daily reading matter handed to the masses

(Continued on page 65)

Cleric Raps Religioso Epics; Finds More Truth In Secular-Themed Pix

By REV. MALCOLM BOYD

Detroit.

Over the past 10 years, I have been a movie reviewer for a brace of religious publications — The Episcopalian, the official national monthly magazine of the Episcopal Church, and the monthly United Church Herald, official journal of the United Church of Christ.

It is an ironical factor of my work as a religious film reviewer that many films which are self-labeled as "religious" are actually blasphemous, and that many films widely attacked as "immoral" are in fact, decidedly religious.

For example, "The Ten Commandments" and "King of Kings" were decidedly irreligious motion pictures; the only tie either film had to religion was in exploiting explicitly religious subject matter. On the other hand, "La Dolce Vita" possessed an authentic religious dimension.

Certainly, there are some films with explicit religious subjects which are authentic religious films. Among there I would cite "Martin Luther" and "The Hoodlum Priest."

However, the fundamental religious messages of our contemporary mass media culture are to be

(Continued on page 63)

RED CHINA SHOWS PIX IN 200,000 'THEATRES'

Paris.

Red Chinese officials visiting Paris give out data which suggests that that Asiatic land has 200,000 places where films may be viewed. This number is not unlikely for a country whose population is pushing toward a billion. Not clear is what percentage of the viewing sites are hardtop theatres, as known to the west, and what portion are mobile projection tents and rural makeshifts.

The Communists report that they operate 33 production studios. It is declared that since the present regime some 500 features have been made. Meanwhile three cinema schools have 60,000 "creators and workers" readying for the future in Peking, Shanghai and Chunking.

'63 REPLETE WITH HISTORIC PEAKS

By ABEL GREEN

This was the year that an assassin with a mail-order rifle plunged the world into mourning on Nov. 22, 1963.

Up until then the Negroes' civil rights movement, with President Kennedy's blessing and cooperation, had made its best forward strides in 100 years. And television was its greatest ally in bringing the struggle into the homes and the minds and the hearts of America.

In a recapitulation such as this there must perforce be high drama alongside the frivolous and the trivial. It all makes for show business. During 1963 there were:

Gospel and "Freedom songs" (tied to the civil rights' drive) linked with hootenannies and folksongs.

An Internal Revenue Dept. crackdown on "expense account entertainment" hitting theatres, niteries, hotels and peripheral services.

A 114-day newspaper blackout in New York, a body blow to show biz and the general economy of Gotham.

America had "Miss Germany" and Bobby Baker's pecadilloes as

(Continued on page 56)

U.S. PIX COS.' 162 PUTS 1963 UP OVER '62

By THOMAS M. PRYOR

Hollywood.

While U.S. film-producing companies, including indies with no continuing distributor ties, showed more activity in 1963 than the year before, the big splurge that had been talked about didn't come up to expectations. Total of 162 features, not all made in Hollywood by any means, went before the cameras during the calendar year. This was a boost of 24 over '62, according to VARIETY's production scoreboard.

The feast or famine pattern of filming continues to plague studio production planners. MGM and Warner Bros., for instance, had idle stages early in the year, but later became so crowded it was necessary for MGM to rent space

(Continued on page 65)

Early Press Time

The 58th Anniversary Number went to press several days ahead of the normal Tuesday deadline, due to the size of the paper.

As result, certain news departments are combined and certain other departments are omitted for this week only.

'64 N.Y. Fair's 70,000,000 Admissions Question: Moses Vs. Showmanship

By ALFRED STERN

Not long ago, I went out to Flushing Meadows one night to inspect the progress of one of the five World's Fair projects which my firm is designing. Our vehicle was waved onto the site by a corpulent Pinkerton guard who signaled our admission with a hand containing a Dixie cup which I don't think contained a soft drink. During the 1939 World's Fair, Grover Whalen had a platoon of mounted, six foot or taller, uniformed American Indians who wore Anzac campaign hats and carried blue-and-orange Uhlan-tipped guidons. That, in essence, is the difference between the two Fairs. Whelan understood showmanship in the grand manner, and knew that, obviously, a Fair must be a fabulous, never-never land. People can and do see Pinkerton guards in Muncie, Indiana, but Whalen's dragoons established an atmosphere of pomp and circumstance which contributed to the color and appeal of what was unquestionably a great international exposition in every sense of the word.

Robert Moses has truthfully stated that the 1939-1940 Fair was a financial failure as a corporate entity. It did indeed pay back only one-third of a dollar to its bondholders, but many of its bondholders were major exhibitors and concessionaires, and if Child's lost money on their bonds, they made it up on their frankfurters. Be-

(Continued on page 65)

Updated Turkish Delight

Istanbul.

Turkish bellydancers are supposedly far more numerous in the U.S. than in Turkey these days, but if the ones who migrated were to return they would probably have a hard time competing with striptease acts, both native and imported. Most Istanbul night clubs rely strictly on undressers to draw.

Hilton Hotel's Roof Club presents bellydancing as a "local color" treat for its tourist clientele.

When 'Fanny Hill' Was Low Browse

By JO RANSON

When our enlightened courts ruled that certain books were not obscene, a good deal of the small smuggling thrill was removed from the psychology of American travelers returning from European holidays. Once regarded as a courageous soul, cast in the mold of a fighter for intellectual freedom and the right to read, the banned book smuggler is rapidly becoming a legend.

The question uppermost today is: what's left to smuggle? When the ban was on such titles as James Joyce's "Ulysses," D. H. Lawrence's "Lady Chatterley's Lover," John Cleland's "Fanny Hill," Henry Miller's "Tropic of Cancer" and Frank Harris' "My Life and Loves," were naturals on the literary underground.

New York Customs inspectors had a knowning eye. When, for example, a pretty school teacher disembarked they instinctively knew if she was or was not a carrier of titillating torrid text.

This observer recalls an incident shortly before Henry Miller re-

(Continued on page 94)

NEW TERPS A TWIST ON OLD HOOFOLOGY

By VINCENT LOPEZ

Whether primitive, spontaneous or sophisticated, modern or old-fashioned, the dance has always conveyed a meaning.

Some of the new dances I see performed at the Hotel Taft Grill and at some of our outside parties, Gully, Alley Cat, Twist, Continental, Bristol Stomp, Pony, Monkey, Chicken and the Slosh. The juniors are having a wonderful time but they do not realize they are going back 100 years and doing a modernized minuet, gavotte, mazurka or schottische—it's group dancing they go for as their seniors did in the old days.

The trend today for the juniors

(Continued on page 65)

TV Networks Tune Up For The Big Story Of '64 (The Elections)

By HERM SCHOENFELD

The Big Story of 1964—the Presidential primaries, the nominating conventions, the campaigns and the counting of the votes—is already in sharp focus for the most intensive television coverage since the medium cut its teeth on the 1948 Truman-Dewey race.

This year, for the first time, the battle for the White House spot will be given a fullscale three-net work coverage. While CBS and NBC have quadriennally committed all their news battalions to the fray, this will be the first year that ABC-TV will be visible as a contender for bigtime status in the arena of tv journalism.

The scaffolding for the tv networks' coverage of the Presidential race has been firmly established over the past half-year; only the concrete events themselves remain to be filled in. It's estimated that about 1,500 fulltime staffers will be used by the three networks during the year on the Presidential story, with many thousands of stringers more to be employed on election night as each webs jockey to get to the screen firstest with the mostest.

Advance calculations about the Presidential conventions were con-

(Continued on page 63)

'Tune Detective' Recalls Einstein As a Musician and Humanitarian

By SIGMUND SPAETH

In all my "50 years with music" I never met anyone quite like Dr. Albert Einstein. Being completely ignorant of science in any form, and a very bad mathematician besides, I was obviously unable to communicate with him in his own field. It was a common interest in music that brought us together and led to a number of meetings and some significant results.

Einstein was a more than adequate amateur performer on both the violin and the piano, and had actually composed some little pieces in his youth, with the added ability to improvise at the keyboard in the style of various creative musicians. A fellow-feeling in this direction made for a certain unexpected congeniality the very first time we met.

The occasion was a welcoming party given by Charlie Brown, the Mayor of Princeton, soon after Einstein's arrival in the university town. I was invited partly because I could speak German (having taught the language some years earlier as a member of Woodrow Wilson's faculty) and might even act as an interpreter if necessary, but perhaps also because of a few musical specialties which in those days I was ready to produce at a moment's notice. The chief conspirator in this plot was Whitney Darrow, a Princeton classmate of Mayor Brown, long active in the publishing firm of Charles Scribner's Sons.

The evening was a great success, without ever actually requiring the services of an interpreter. Dr. Einstein talked with everybody in a

(Continued on page 70)

S.A. Bans 'So. Pacific'

Durban.

South African producer Des Morley was told by the authorities that the musical's "plea for the mixing of the races" made "South Pacific" unsuitable locally.

Instead, London producer Gilbert Vernon, who was to have staged the Rodgers & Hammerstein hit show, will produce another R&H musical, "The Sound of Music."

EDITH PIAF

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Paris.

Edith Piaf died in October. Now a fiction film in Hollywood and a documentary film here are being prepared on her life. Her recent disks have sold better than they did in her heyday. But it looks like she still took something with her. The fact is that "The Sparrow" was and is irreplaceable.

That tiny frail body was inhabited by a big voice. It welled out of her very being. Her songs were usually laments, plaints, anguished statements. Backing them and through them coursed a hard-headed resiliency and ability to cope and get something out of life. It was all summed up in a refusal to regret anything. And apparently she never did.

Her many loves were part of life force. She always gave more than she got. There was a coterie around her always. But she needed them, she needed laughter and people in spite of her fiery songs of limited love, the brutalities of time, the fragility of sentiment and the terrible things that love could bring for its few pleasures and tenuous happiness.

Thus she was in the tradition of

(Continued on page 92)

Discotheques Run 'Til Dawn In Paris

Paris.

The predominant type of Paris night club still is the "discotheque" that offers dance music on records and is open all night.

Of course Paris generally is still a night appeal town to tourists. Plenty of oo-la-la, nudey and offbeat high and low brow asspots. Perhaps 150 establishments operate.

Twist and its variations, like the Madison, Hully Gully, Surf etc., still keep them gyrating in most of the record spinning spots if many now intersperse slow bits and even tangos. New Jimmy's, run by Twist Instigator Regine, is still popular as are Saint Hilare, King Club, L'Etoile, Key Club, Frede's Le Carroll's, Saint Peres, Princesse Club, Caramel, La Licorne and others.

All are technically private mem-

(Continued on page 92)

Greetings across the seas and into five Continents.

Seasonal Best Wishes to my friends all over the world.

PAUL ANKA

LBJ White House Entertainment To Maintain Pattern

By LES CARPENTER

Washington.

President and Mrs. Johnson are certain to maintain the Kennedy tradition of using the White House as a showcase for the finest in American performing arts. The Johnsons, who have tastes and an interest in all the arts, may institute several new things:

—The First Lady herself may introduce all performers at White House functions. She has always acted as mistress of ceremonies, showing a considerable knowledge of music and the theatre, when there were performances at her home while her husband was vice-president.

—Under active consideration is the introduction of an entertainment program at the larger White

(Continued on page 92)

A Greater Responsibility

Out of pestilence and war, out of holocaust and bestiality, history has proved time and again that good ultimately emerges until the next time when man's inhumanity to man once again causes the world to backslide, and thus, it is hoped, that out of the shock of 1963 will emerge a better America. Almost perforce that also means a better world.

Show business which mirrors life, and life which is often reflected in a nation's artistic mores, will likewise emerge in a healthier image in the next few thousand days of our years. We hope!

There can be no gainsaying that the American image has been tarnished as never in recent years. For all its profligate spending for the commonweal and global do-goodism, cultural exchange goes out the window when assassins and kidnappers and hot "ice" and "sick" theatricalism so sharply eclipse the affirmative values.

There are so many positive contributions that the international exchange of thoughts, ideas, talents, arts, letters and amusements can project through the magic of global television for instantaneous appraisal that there is a new obligation by all concerned to seek that higher plateau.

This should not rule out the uniquely enterprising impresarios whose opportunistic happenstance may still yield that fast economic return. The fast buck and the frivolous are not to be equated with the greater obligation. The pyramiding tragedies that befell the country have already written an historic footnote to the lively arts in USA 1963 under JFK.

On a hard-core show biz perspective there is evidence of a revitalized Hollywood; a stronger Broadway legit season; a responsibility in the electronic form of home programming perhaps best signalized by the dedicated job done by broadcasting in the coverage of the President Kennedy tragedy.

If these responsibilities are written in the stars or in mundane travail, they must be sighted on a newer level. Show business has shown the way throughout the first 60 years of the 20th century with compassion and distinction. The variety stage perhaps pioneered it by eschewing racially sensitive stereotypes. The motion picture held up the horrors of war, despotism, crime and social shortcomings to mass comprehension. Radio and television went into it in further depth with skilled documentarian techniques that vied with spot-news coverage and with equally distinguished results. The stage has always been a bellwether in open-forum exposition of the mores. Show biz has never been lacking for enterprise, creativity and ingenuity to meet any broad national challenge.

To paraphrase JFK's classic comment, it's not a case of what our country can do for culture and the lively arts but what Show Business can do for our country.

The By-Liners In This Issue

Gerald Adler	106	Capt. Billy Bryant	248	Herbert G. Luft	14
Fred Allen	223	Art Buchwald	8	Gerald Lieberman	31
Ned Alvord	253	Eugene Burr	253	Vincent Lopez	3
Cleveland Amory	6	John Byram	36	Emil W. Maass	168
Odie Anderson	226	Joaquina Caballol	169	Leslie A. Macdonnell	4
Jules Archer	11	Eddie Cantor	10	Jean Madeira	249
Lord Archibald	14	Bruce Carroll	111	Mannie Manheim	103
Norman Baer	113	Bennett A. Cerf	10	Helene Marafino	228
Robert Baral	252	Milbourne Christopher	228	George Marton	23
Bob Barratt	194	Saul Colin	15	Eric Maschwitz	119
Jack Benny	99	Tony Conway	227	Harvey Matofsky	8
Edward L. Bernays	30	Hubert W. David	196	Arthur Mayer	16
Claude Binyon	5	Frank De Koya	11	Prof. John McCabe	253
Jim Bishop	9	Stanton Delaplane	6	Jack McPhaul	32
Rev. Malcolm Boyd	3	Bill Doll	228	Noel Meadow	30
Edwin Bronner	252	Jack Douglas	16	Norton Mockridge	254
Beth Brown	32	Robert Downing	246	Art Moger	45
Joseph Mill Brown	31	John Duclos	117	Sydney Newman	110
John Brownlee	40	Philip Dunning	246	George S. Oppenheimer	253
		Vernon Duke	23	Barney Oldfield	31
		Hans Ehrmann	168	Norrie Paramor	194
		Ken Englund	111	Varner Paulsen	196
		Morris L. Ernst	30	Harriet F. Pilpel	31
		N. V. Egwar	166	Gerald Pratley	26
		John E. Fitzgerald	5	Aaron Pines	13
		Frederic Fleisber	7	Harry Puck	227
		Harold Flender	13	Don Quinn	41
		George Freedley	255	Halsey Raines	169
		Jerry Franken	45	Milton M. Raison	123
		Lewis Funke	250	Richard Rodgers	249
		Roland Gammon	9	Azaria Rapaport	166
		Ira Gershwin	198	John Roeburt	25
		Prof. Robert Gessner	44	Sidney Rose	246
		L. Wolfe Gilbert	195	Sydney Rosenfeld	254
		Harry Golden	7	Harold Rosenthal	9
		Max Gordon	250	Stanley Rothenberg	15
		Sheilah Graham	5	Bob Russell	71
		Ashbel Green	12	Ray Russell	26
		Stanley Green	195	Norman B. Rydge	168
		Harold M. Goldblatt	24	David Schoenbrun	99
		Werner Haas	30, 248	Al Schwartz	98
		Babette Hall	53	J. S. Seidman	40
		Leslie T. Harris	121	Bernard Simon	248
		George W. Hayden	117	Bernard Sobel	255
		Peter Lind Hayes	24	Louis Sobol	23
		Sonny Hayes	121	Sigmund Spaeth	4
		Stockton Helffrich	115	Samuel Stark	251-255
		Harry Hershfield	12	Alfred Stern	3
		Ralph D. Hetzel	10	Robert Stolz	251
		Hans Holzer	194	Dorothy Stickney	249
		William Houlton	246	Al Sillman	24
		Charles Isaacs	97	June Taylor	115
		Crane Jackson	41	Dimitri Tiomkin	32
		Laurence M. Janifer	23	Henry Tobias	224
		Frank Kane	45	Edna Amadon Toney	246
		Hal Kanter	8	Roger Watkins	194
		Sam Kurtzman	96	Herman G. Weinberg	9
		Meyer Levin	41	Max Wilk	96
		Evelyn Levison	166	Walter Winchell	12
		James L. Limbacher	15	William Woolfolk	36
		Emile Littler	253	Maurice Zolotow	195

Global Dearth Of Top Attractions

By LESLIE A. MACDONNELL

(Moss Empires)

London.

"Is there a future for vaudeville in Britain?" The answer is no, but this requires some qualification.

Vaudeville or as we call it variety, or prior to that music hall, is no longer with us. Of course, one could always argue that if one of the top stars wanted to go out and pick up some easy money all they have to do is surround them-

(Continued on page 70)

1/8

VARIETY

Subscription Order Form

Enclosed find check for $.....

Please send VARIETY for ☐ One Year ☐ Two Years ☐ Three Years

To .....
(Please Print Name)

Street .....

City..... Zone.... State.....

Regular Subscription Rates

One Year—$15.00 Two Years—$28.00

Three Years—$39.00

Canada and Foreign—$1 Additional Per Year

VARIETY Inc.

154 West 46th Street New York, N. Y. 10036

VARIETY

Trade Mark Registered

FOUNDED 1905
By SIME SILVERMAN

Published Weekly by VARIETY, INC.
Syd Silverman, President
154 W. 46th St., New York, N.Y. 10036
JUdson 2-2700

Hollywood, Calif., 90028
6404 Sunset Boulevard
HOllywood 9-1141

Washington, D.C., 20004
784 National Press Building
STerling 3-5445

Chicago, Ill., 60611
400 No. Michigan Ave.
DELaware 7-4984

London S.W.1
49 St. James's Street, Piccadilly
HYde Park 4561-2-3

SUBSCRIPTION
Annual $15 Foreign $16
Single Copies 35 Cents

ABEL GREEN, Editor

Vol. 233 120 No. 7

Foreign	166
Legit	246
Music	194
Obits	274
Pictures	5
Radio	96
Television	96
Vaude	223

DAILY VARIETY
(Published in Hollywood by Daily Variety, Ltd.)
$20 a Year $25 Foreign

WHERE'S THE AUDIENCE GONE?

HOLLYWOOD IS WHERE I FIND IT

By SHEILAH GRAHAM

Hollywood.

Even in Hollywood, Hollywood doesn't spell Hollywood any more. In fact it never really has. With exception of Paramount and the old RKO Studio, Hollywood meant MGM in Culver City, Warner Bros. in Burbank, Universal in Universal City and Republic in North Hollywood. But in the last decade, Hollywood has gone further afield. The word Hollywood has meant wherever pictures by American companies were made anywhere in the world. And especially in the last five years, filmmakers have used the actual locales to tell their celluloid stories.

Sheilah Graham

For several reasons, which are too well known for me to go into beyond the reminder that stars such as William Holden, Yul Brynner, Jack Palance, Elizabeth Taylor found it beneficial from a tax point of view to headquarter their companies in Switzerland, or that Hollywood companies found it useful to take advantage of the Eady plan in England, or that some directors simply preferred the excitement of making films away from Hollywood. Or that with the advent of one television set per home, or less and less attendance at the film houses, or the popularity of the naughty, foreign, so-called "art" picture. Whatever the reasons, the bleak facts for the geographical area called Hollywood is that for a time it lost its place as the filmmaking centre of the world.

If the pictures don't come to you, you have to go to the pictures. In the fall of 1954 I was having a glorious message on a hard table at The Finlandia Baths on The Strip. While the Finnish lady was pounding off the inches, what I had to do hit me with full force in the noggin. There were about 15 films in production in Europe. Maybe five in Hollywood. I left for London, Paris and Rome within the week. I had never been to Rome before. I was amazed at the vitality in the film industry there, the excitement on the Via Venito, the procession of stars and bit players, the eager hungry hangers-on. I hadn't seen this in Hollywood since before Milton Berle was named Mr. Television. Since that time I have made at least two long trips a year to London, Paris, Rome, Madrid, Athens, Israel, Ireland, Yugoslavia etc. I have been told and I am inclined to agree that some of my best columns have been written on location in these countries. Not only because there was more doing over there, but the enthusiasm was infectious.

For example I interviewed for my column and for the news pages of my newspapers, Ingrid Bergman. She was staying at the Raphael Hotel in Paris with her then husband Roberto Rossellini and her three very small children. I had my children with me, and we all ment in the bar of the hotel—that for a start would not have been possible in Hollywood. I had been in her corner during the trouble with Dr. Lindstrom, but that was not why she was glad to see me. She had started or was about to start "Anastasia." She was pleased to talk to me for the simple fact that she wanted some career publicity in America. She did not want to be forgotten as an actress, and she talked freely, about her career, and with some not too much prodding, about her private life. She liked my children and I found the twins enchanting. Result —several good columns.

It was almost a joke with Charlton Heston and me, that we always found time to get together in Europe, but rarely saw each other in Hollywood. He was making that last picture with Gary Cooper in London. I saw them both on the set, and away from my own desk and household responsibilities, I too had more time to spend on the sets. And taking my time, not rushing the questions all at once, I collected dozens of good items and a strong interview to boot. I have followed Heston to Rome ("Ben Hur" and "The Pigeon That Took Rome,") and to Madrid ("55 Days At Peking") where I also had long talks with David Niven. In fact we flew in to Madrid together from Nice where I had gone to see Janis Paige, Russ Tamblyn, Connie Francis. And Charles Boyer, Hope Lange and Glenn Ford who were starring for Marty Poll in "L Is A Ball."

The informal atmosphere was good for us all, for my column, and their publicity.

Ava Gardner Frixample

Ava Gardner has been almost impossible to interview in Hollywood for the last 10 years. Chiefly because she is rarely there. But even when she is, it's pretty difficult. In Madrid she was going to be difficult, although she had been very accessible while making a picture a few years ago in London. We had chatted as two women who had known each other in Hollywood and there was some nostalgia as she asked me questions about the old place. But in Madrid, she had made her first two millions so why should she bother. Nick Ray, director, brought me on the set and I chatted with Miss Gardner. The point is, he did this because I had come a long way to see her in his picture. It is somewhat of a magic key—"She has come all the way from Hollywood to see you."

I was listed as a "character" in "The Cleopatra Papers" by publicists Jack Brodsky and Nat Weiss. I was in Rome so often while they made this epic that some natives must have thought I had a part in the picture. No, I didn't get to see Elizabeth Taylor although I knew of nearly everything she was up to. But I did get the first interview with Richard Burton on the subject of whether he was going to divorce Sybil and marry Liz.

It would take a book to list all the stories and all the people and pictures under European datelines. I spent hours with William Holden on the set in London when he was playing a missionary to China. And in Paris during his "Paris When It Sizzles" with Audrey Hepburn. I have gone up the mountain to Burgenstock, overlooking Lucerne, to see her and Mel Ferrer. And chatted with King Vidor in Rome while he directed them in "War and Peace." I haven't seen Anthony Quinn in Hollywood for years, but I had tea with him in his beautiful New York home. I have watched him come through the mud and water in "Guns Of Navarone"—on a London soundstage where the water almost drowned David Niven. I am always bumping into Cary Grant in London and Paris, ditto Robert Mitchum. We had a noisy lunch in a pub last summer near the MGM studio outside of London, and Mitchum with some beer in his innards is a very talkative fellow. Hugh O'Brian, well I see him in New York, London or Paris. But somehow never in Hollywood. The same for Deborah Kerr and Gregory Peck. I didn't even see them in Hollywood when they were costarring at 20th in my autobiography, "Beloved Infidel." But that was deliberate. I though it might take them self-conscious. But they were both making different pictures in London and we met in the cafe, and they both apologized about how bad "Beloved Infidel" was. Somehow this could not have happened in Hollywood.

So now they say that production is coming back to Hollywood. I hope they are right because to be truthful, I am a bit weary of so much travelling to find Hollywood. I believe there will be more production in Hollywood, but you can't beat the wide open spaces of the world to give a film the feeling of realtiy. So I won't pack away my travelling clothes yet. I will wait and see.

MORE 'FREEDOM' OR MORE TALENT?

By JOHN E. FITZGERALD

(The author writes on Entertainment for the national Catholic weekly, Our Sunday Visitor, and is a recipient of the Directors Guild of America's Best Critic Award.)

Hollywood.

They tell us that every so often, especially at the beginning of a New Year, it's a good thing to pause a bit and look around.

Those who have, have seen that some of our audience is missing.

Somehow the Bijou looks emptier than ever. Something's the matter. But what?

Let me hasten to admit I haven't got all the answers. I do know that many who have seemed to have them have been proven wrong time and again. I'm a critic and therefore outside of the industry rather than a part of it. Yet any critic worth his salt and celluloid is concerned with its well being. Most critics have a deep love for the motion picture —honest! Otherwise they'd be out picking up better money writing deodorant ads.

Just as a filmmaker should know "how" to get a certain effect, a critic should know "whether" the effect was gotten—as they say, you don't have to know how to lay an egg in order to judge an omelet.

And too many of our films lately have laid great big eggs at the boxoffice.

Not knowing the answers, let me ask some questions. The main

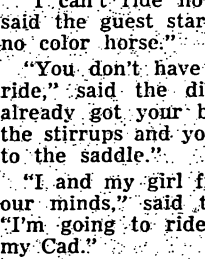
(Continued on page 70)

Prod. Today Calls for a Stout Heart And Bankroll to Match—In WB's Case This Comes to $80,000,000: J. L. Warner

By JACK L. WARNER

Burbank.

As the world moves into a new calendar year and the motion picturet industry opens up a new chapter in its ever-changing history, my view of the immediate horizons of the picture business are, as I've always believed, unlimited.



Jack L. Warner

This business is too big, too significant and closely identified with the entertainment habits of everyone, to have any other thoughts of its future.

For more than 50 years motion pictures have thrived and flourished and played a vigorous role in history. They have kept pace with the ideas, tastes and interests of the world, and I might add that they have made a sizeable contribution to its happiness.

There will always be a market for films. There will always be keen competitive factors to deal with. But in the making of motion pictures there will also always be an outlet for great talent in writing, directing, acting and photography, and the means of gainful employment for many craftsmen, all adding up to a rewarding future.

Motion picture making, and its allied branches, certainly constitute a business in every sense of the word. To remain a lusty participant in this business, a man must have a love for it, a drive to make pictures and a determination to make good ones. All of this must be temperea by intelligence, prudence and economic acumen.

The filmmaker also has to be a man willing to make decisions, trust in its own judgment and follow it through. It is not an enterprise for anyone who does not possess a stout heart. Rather, it is for the kind of foresighted executive who functions best in a democracy, who wants to do business on an important scale and who, in so doing, is able to put people to work, get money in circulation, and then reap the rewards.

The industry has been a success because of the judgments of such men—and not because of those who are willing to sit back and wait to see what happens next. It is up to the motion picture executive to put that "next" thing into action right now.

Radio and television didn't stop the progress of filmmaking and there's nothing in the forseeable future that will be able to stop it. Audiences want to see what only we are able to give them.

We have just completed at Warner Bros. the motion picture production of "My Fair Lady" at a cost of $17,000,000, which is the most expensive venture in our studio history. We know it is a great property and an extraordinary motion picture, and we believe it will have an unprecedented $100,000,000 gross.

We do not intend to make very many $17,000,000 pictures, because there are not very many properties like "My Fair Lady," and there also must be a saturation limit in grosses. Some pictures can be made on a respectably low budget. A film may cost $1,000,000 and gross five, or cost $5,000,000 and gross 15. Sometimes, of course, it is difficult or impossible to determine what the gross potential of a picture is; if we could figure every gross to the penny, there are some pictures which would never be made.

The Vital Prod. Line

I have great faith in the existence of studios as the heart of the motion picture industry. They will continue to operate and to be the major force in film-making. It is the studios which have the executives who want to be in the business, who want to make films and who are continuously looking for better properties and new talent and who are willing to do all this for the improvement of their product.

In addition to "My Fair Lady," Warner Bros. has a great backlog of films, probably the most powerful in studio history. We have made these pictures and this investment in talent and resources because we know that they will be profitable, and will give the public the kind of entertainment it is looking for.

For the 1963-64 season, and into 1965, Warner Bros. has spent $80,000,000 on its product. This is a big gamble, but one we know will pay off.

With that figure, and those pictures, in mind, I can only say of that old adage—put your money where your mouth is. Warner Bros. has done exactly that.

I AND MY GIRL FRIEND

By CLAUDE BINYON

Hollywood.

He was to be the guest star in the "Stranger In Town" segment of the "Good Girl of the Badlands" television series, and he arrived on location in a cream-colored Cadillac with red upholstery to match his cardigan. It was 48 minutes past the scheduled start of shooting but the director forced a smile as he rose from his chair to greet him.

"Hi," said the director, "We were afraid you got lost."

"No," said the guest star. "I and my girl friend slept late."

"Oh," said the director.

"On account of we were up late going over the—whatchmacallit—"

"Script" suggested the director.

"Yeah," said the guest star, "Script. She's a real good reader, my girl friend is. She can flip through a newspaper like she was dealing cards."

"She sounds wonderful," said the director.

"She's better than nothing," said the guest star. "Anyway, she's read a hunk of the—"

"Script," said the director.

"Yeah," said the guest star. "She'd read a hunk of it out loud, then I'd memorize the hunk."

"Fine," said the director. "Now, if you'll go over to that house trailer and get into your—"

"The only trouble is," said the guest star, "when I got it all memorized I sounded just like my girl friend."

"You did?" said the director, hanging onto his smile.

"I still do," said the guest star. Then he grinned reassuringly, "But only when I act."

The director looked at his assistant, who turned away. "We'll tackle that problem when we get to it," said the director finally. "Now, if you'll just get into your wardrobe—"

"That's another thing," said the guest star.

"What's another thing?"

"That oldtime cowboy outfit I'm supposed to wear. I and my girl friend talked about that. She said to me, 'Honey, everybody knows who you are, and they know you never been any oldtime cowboy.' I saw she had a point there and I said, 'Yeah, why don't I wear what I'm wearing now?' and she laughed.

The director exhaled in relief. "Smart girl," he said.

"I brought along a grey cardigan if you don't like this red one," said the guest star.

"Look," said the director, "the year is supposed to be 1850 — and if you expect to come riding into town dressed like that, on a white horse—"

"I can't ride no white horse," said the guest star. "I can't ride no color horse."

"You don't have to be able to ride," said the director. "We've already got your boots nailed to the stirrups and your pants glued to the saddle."

"I and my girl friend made up our minds," said the guest star. "I'm going to ride into town in my Cad."

"But I said the year is 1850," said the director.

"All right," said the guest star, "get me an 1850 Cad. And while you're at it I need a baby calf."

"For what?"

"To ride beside me in the front seat. You see, there was this steer that had this baby calf and died, and I found it when I was riding into town."

The director's mouth hung open. "What script is that from?"

"I and my girl friend wrote it into this one," said the guest star. "So that right away everybody will know I'm a good guy. We also wrote in a scene where I sing and dance—you know, from my night club act. And another scene where I'm shaving. I and my girl friend decided people like to watch me shaving."

A car screeched to a stop nearby, and the producer stepped from it and approached the director grimly. "Why aren't you shooting?" he demanded.

The director looked at the producer for a long moment. "I've just had a talk with our guest star," he said. "You gave him to me—and now I give him back to you. And I don't give a damn if the Rams couldn't have won the pennant without him."

Eduardo Puzon, leading Philippine importer and distributor back from Rome, Munich, Berlin, Paris and London. A frequent traveller he has attended Cannes, Berlin, San Sebastian and Cork festivals.

Mencken's Updated 'American Language' Traces Much of the 'Variety' Slanguage

By ABEL GREEN

In the one-volume abridged edition of "The American Language" by H. L. Mencken—The Fourth Edition and the Two Supplements of the Classic Study of American English, abridged, with Annotations and New Material, by Raven I. McDavid Jr., with the assistance of David W. Maurer (Alfred A. Knopf Inc., $12.95; 1963) — there are 14 references to VARIETY. There are 15 references to Time. Winchell, another arch-exponent of American speech, has 11 references.

For aficionados of VARIETY semantics, the first reference that Mencken makes goes like this:

"During the 1930s the flood of Americanisms pouring in through the talkies and the comic strips was reinforced by a fashion, among English columnists, for imitating Walter Winchell, and, among other journalists, for borrowing the jargons of VARIETY and Time. . . ."

Mencken then continues, "The American journalist of today has forgotten the banal cliches of the Horace Greeley era, and devotes himself joyously to embellishing and glorifying the national vulgate. Charles A. Dana's bright young men of the old N. Y. Sun showed the way, but the thing has gone a great deal further, and the journalists of tomorrow may be indistinguishable from the barbaric (but thoroughly American) jargon of VARIETY and Time."

Further in his book Mencken writes ". . . two weeklies VARIETY and Time. Each has developed a dialect all its own, and both are heavily imitated. Their vocabulary and syntax are so bizarre that they have attracted much attention from students of the national language and the literature of the subject is already formidable."

It was the fame of its phrasing and word-coinage which drew much of the attention outsiders have given VARIETY. One of the earliest essays was Hugh Kent's piece in the American Mercury of December, 1926 (VARIETY, pp. 462-6). After the death of this paper's founder, Sime Silverman, Dayton Stoddard told the outlines of the VARIETY story in a biography, "Lord Broadway" (1941). Then there was the Saturday Review article of Bennett Cerf on April 17, 1943, titled "The Story of VARIETY."

A word first introduced in the 1920s by Sime Silverman to describe himself and staff was "mugg." This was partly Sime's reaction to the discovery of his paper by the intelligentsia. He was not a man to put on "front" or allow others to do it for him. Though "mugg" is now banned in the Style Sheet of this publication, having been run into the ground, it had for a long time a special charm for outsiders, if not for all staffers. Esquire for September, 1960 carried an article by Abel Green entitled "The VARIETY Mugg." The same writer had, earlier, expanded on muggishness in the Anni Edition of Jan. 6, 1960. The word-coinage aspect was developed by Robert Pollak in the Hyde Park Herald of Chicago on Feb. 3, 1960 under the caption, "VARIETY Has Influenced American Language."

But to revert to and pick up the thread of comment from H. L Mencken:

> VARIETY bangs away at the language in an innocent, hearty and insatiable manner. It invents and uses a great variety of back formations, e.g., pix for moving pictures, preem for premiere and sked for schedule; and it launches many new and tortured blends, e.g., filmusical (a movie with music), and bold compounds, e.g., chinfest (a conference), pic parlor, cowshed (a summer theatre), cliffhanger (a serial melodrama) and oats opera (a Western film). It puts old and new suffixes to use in a free and spacious manner, e.g., hoofologist (a dancer), flopperoo (a failure), socko and clicko (a success), nitery (a night club), peelery (a burlesque show), payola (bribery), ghostitis, oldie, cinemaestro, microphonist, blurbist and lackage; it makes verbs of nouns, e.g., to author, and it converts all the other parts of speech into nouns, e.g., rave (an enthusiastic review), deluxer, personaling (making personal appearances), tie-in, pink (a sexy picture), clicky (a picture making money), brushoff, and vocal (a song). It also borrows freely from the argots of sports, of the circus, of hobos, and of criminals, e.g., to beef (to complain), eightball (a failure), G ($1,000), to gander (to go sightseeing), handle (a title), spieler (an announcer) and on the lam, VARIETY's headlines are done in such a jargon that only the initiated can fathom them. One of the most famous, "Hicks Nix Stick Pix," attracted attention in faraway Egypt. Its meaning, it turned out, was that bucolic movie audiences did not like pictures with rustic settings.
>
> The jargon of Time is measurably less interesting than that of VARIETY, mainly because most of its neologisms are more or less obvious blends, e.g., shamateur, cinemactress, franchisler, bookritic and powerphobe, but also because its assaults upon orthodox syntax are carried on under cover of a pretension to information and even learning. Among its gifts to American English are the heavy use of attributive nouns, sometimes in the possessive case, e.g., Hearsteditor Jones, Harvardman Brown and Columbia's Nicholas Murray Butler, and the suppression of the definite article, e.g., "Report was circulated today," etc. It also likes to begin sentences with adjectives, and it deals heavily in compounds of the Homeric variety, e.g., hot-eyed, moon-placid, legacy-stalking and Yankee-shrewd. Some of these idiosynerasies

(Continued on page 52)

The best things in air travel are on TWA

Sparkling wine, a connoisseur's menu, and a fine first-run movie. What more could you ask for when you're going places? You get them all... at no extra charge . . . when you're a TWA First Class Royal Ambassador. In fact, only TWA treats you so royally on nonstop coast-to-coast and overseas flights to ten of Europe's favorite cities. Live it up next time you travel. Call your travel agent or Trans World Airlines.

Nationwide Worldwide depend on TWA

'The Pace (Frank) Was Hard (Darlene) But the Experience Was Golden (Harry)'

By CLEVELAND AMORY

Some years ago, after the late unpleasantness with his latter Majesty, George III, a small group of pioneer Americans realized that though we had plenty of Kings (Alan, Alexander, Dennis, Martin Luther), at least one Queen (Ellery), a Prince (Harold), a number of Dukes (Angier Biddle, Doris, Patty), and even a couple of Kaisers (Edgar, Henry J.) and a Caesar (Sid), we had no real Crown (except Henry). We had, it is true, a "Social Register." But with Society on the Wayne (David, John) it has lost what Little (Clarence Cook) Tone (Franchot) it once had.

We also had a "Who's Who," but although this was more Mature (Victor), still it wasn't a real Boone (Pat, Richard) if for no other reason than because show people were Feuer (Cy) and far between. Also, it was less a book of individuals than one which basically Hughes (Emmett, Howard, Langston) to the idea of Rank (J. Arthur).

Cleveland Amory is editor of new Celeb Register, "An Irreverent Compendium of American Quotable Notables" (Harper & Row, $22.50).

So, with a Stout (Rex) Hart (Philip), we determined to turn over a brand new Leaf (Munro) and do the job Wright (Cobina, Martha, Teresa). And if at first our merry Chase (Barrie, Ilka, Lucia, Stuart) seemed a long Day's (Doris, Dennis, Laraine) journey into Knight (Frances, Goodwin, John), Daly (John, Richard), as the work went on and Page Geraldine, Patti) after Paige (Janis, Satchel) was completed, our enthusiasm grew Wilder (Billy, Thornton) and we were able to Garner (Erroll, James, John Nance) quite a Hall (Joseph, Joyce, Juahita, Leonard). Knorr (Nathan) did we stop the Hunt (H. L., Lamar) until we were sure we had Kenopf (Alfred A.).

We realize, of course, that some oldtimers were Fonda (Henry, Jane, Peter) of the first "Celebrity Register" and thought it was Nizer (Louis). Also, many reviewers didn't give us very high Marx (Groucho, Harpo, Louis) for the fact that we refused to gild the Lillies (Beatrice, Doris, John) and no matter what the Powers (Bertram, Francis Gary, J.F., Shorty), let the chips fall where they May (Elaine, Morton, Mrs. Marjorie Meriweather Post Close Hutton Davies).

Let's be Frank (Gerold). We were brought up Short (Bobby), and there was a Storm (Gale) of protest. Some people got Cross (Milton), even in a Huff (Sam), others decided to Pannitt (Merrill) and still others were Green (Abel, Adolph, Martyn, Paul, Theodore Francis) with envy because they couldn't see the Woods (Natalie, Peggie, Sidney) for the Trees (Marietta). But we refused to Welch (Leo, Robert) on our original idea and in the end, everything came out oKaye (Danny, Nora, Sammy).

The book is Long (Augustus, Edward, Oren, Russell), and there are more celebs in the North (Jay, John Ringling, Sheree) than there are Sothern (Ann) but we kept on the March (Fredric, Hal) and refused to stay our Penn (Arthur, Irving). And, if we'll Grant (Cary, Kathy) that we're not always Friendly (Fred), the fact is we're not always Meany (George, Tom). And, though we played Fast (Howard) and Luce (Clare Boothe, Henry) with name and fame, let us Remarque (Erich Maria) that this does not mean they all have feet of clay (Cassius, Lucius). Rather, it just means that everyone has chinks in his Armour (Richard, Tommy) and everything in this world isn't all Black (Eugene, Hugo, James, William) or White (Byron, E.B., Josh, Miles, Nancy, Paul Dudley, Robert, Theodore, Thomas, William L., William S.)

Anyone who Reeds (Donna, Elliott, John, Ogden) between the Lyons (Herb, Sue, Leonard, Ruth) will see that if we didn't produce the Dean (Arthur, Dizzy, Jimmy, Martha, William) of all reference books, we did at least come close to bringing Holm (Celeste) the Bacon (Mrs. Robert Low). We had to Baer ("Bugs") with some disappointments and everything didn't come up Roses (Billy, Reginald), particularly the Price (George, Leontyne, Roger, Vincent, $22.50). But with a book like this, because of the Raft (George) of pictures, you'd hardly expect to get it Scott (Hazel, Hugh, Martha, Randolph, Winfield Townley, Zachary) free. But we Hope (Bob) no one will Dunne (Irene) you to buy it, and all we can say is we had no intention of trying to Robb (Inez) you. We just hope it's a book you can afFord (Benson, Corey, Mrs. Edsel, Gerald, Glenn, Henry II, John, Paul, Ruth, Tennessee Ernie, Walter Ruhl, Whitey, William Clay). In any case be our Guest (Mrs. Winston). Take your Pick (Albert, Jr.). We hope you have a Ball (George, Lucille).

LAST STAND

By STAN DELAPLANE

San Francisco.

Off to the neighborhood movies last starry night. (You don't get the first-run shows at the neighborhoods. But you can park.)

It was a two-movie affair—one with a lot of advertising and budget behind it. The other apparently was forced on the exhibitor in order to get the first one.

Anyway, the first one turned out to be a big problem-picture: Can two people be happy though bugged by circumstances and high IQs? (Yes, they can. But they go through seven kinds of Hades and 90 minutes getting there.)

The second turned out to be an Indian picture.

And the minute the cavalry Lieutenant declared, "If Yellow Bear is on the warpath, we are in for trouble!" Right then, I knew I had come to the right show.

Indian pictures are shot on a low budget—Indians do not talk much in pictures. They shade their eyes and look off into the horizon.

It costs a great deal when extras talk. But since Indians are not required to talk, Indian pictures are made quite reasonably.

I forget what they cost. But a Hollywood pressagent once told me:

"DeMille could have made 'The Ten Commandments' for half the price if he could have used Indians."

The Indians in this picture did not do much talking. Only Yellow Bear. (And he did not look very Indian to me, either. Have you noticed how the Indian lead never looks like an Indian?)

Yellow Bear said:

"Paleface talk with forked tongue. Kill buffalo."

For this reason, Yellow Bear led his men against the fort—it turned out he had not dry-gulched the wagon train, however. That was a rascally whisky peddler who tried to blame it on Yellow Bear.

Anyway, it was exciting. And if it had not been for the U.S. Cavalry and the Colonel's blue-eyed, pinheaded daughter, the West would never have been won.

The best thing about Indian movies (and why don't they ever get an Oscar?)—the best thing is they require no thought.

They do not require any thought on my part. Except when it is the best time to go out and get popcorn. The best time, in my opinion, is when the Colonel's dopey daughter is telling off the Lieutenant.

"I could never marry a coward!" (I think the coward would be lucky. The Lieutenant is not a coward. But he has no luck. He marries the girl.)

This is the best time to go out and get popcorn.

The time when you should not go out is when the Indians are riding down the hill, whooping and shooting. (An Indian is not paid for whoops—that has been decided between the movie producers and the Screen Actors Guild. Whooping is not talking.)

It was a fine picture. Indian pictures have not changed a bit since I was a boy. Except we did not have sound pictures. We had an organ player in the pit. When the Indians were riding, he played exciting music. When the love stuff with the girl and the Lieutenant came up, he played romantic music.

In the end, the Lieutenant got the girl. (She found he was not a coward. And she apologized. "How could I have thought it of you!" How could she think was what I thought.)

Yellow Bear was killed dramatically. Before he died, he put a big Indian shiv in the rascally peddler.

The West was won. All for 90c in the popcorn rows.

The first picture they could have kept in the can. I should pay 90c to see somebody else's troubles with their IQ? High or low.

LIVELY OLD GUYS AND GALS

Negro Clamor For Screen Breaks Not Fulfilled In Hollywood

By THOMAS M. PRYOR

Hollywood.

It just doesn't seem to be in the cards for Hollywood to pull through any year without at least one major crisis. Last year was no exception. The big explosion was the demand by Negroes for more representative employment in film studios, together with more factual representation on motion picture and tv screens of the image of the Negro in the American way of life.

On both counts some progress was admittedly made, according to reps for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Congress of Racial Equality. That neither organization is as satisfied by the results thus far as had been hoped for when the campaign was mounted is no secret, and indications are that renewed pressure will be applied shortly.

The more realistic representatives of the Negro recognized from the start that meaningful integration of film studios could not happen overnight, that a substantial period of time would be required to train Negroes for technical jobs and that, as a consequence, progress in this area would be slow. Initial major obstacle was the beating down of resistance by studio locals of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, accompanied with the cooperation of certain local union leaders and Charles Boren, exec veepee of the Assn. of Motion Picture Producers.

Desire of the Negro to figure more importantly on the screen found immediate and wide support from producers. Here again pictures already in work could not in all cases be changed over night, but there were many instances of roles in feature and telefilms being switched to Negroes. Principal complaint in this respect was that, aside from limited representation, the Negro too often was cast primarily in menial roles. As time goes by it will become increasingly apparent that both pix and vidfilms will reflect the image of the Negro more accurately in such walks of life as doctor, lawyer, policeman, office worker, clergyman, banker, social worker, etc.

SWIMMING IN THE SUBURBS

By HARRY GOLDEN

In the rich suburbs the folks have begun building private swimming pools. These aren't any backyard affairs, lined with plastic. These are T-shaped, 40-by-60-foot jobs with two diving boards. But the folks aren't always getting what they're paying for. Here's an authentic case history.

One night, after a couple of highballs, one suburbanite says to his neighbor, "Wouldn't it be nice if we could get some of our friends together and build a private swimming pool? Cost us about $3,000 and we wouldn't need more than 12 families. And the kids wouldn't have to travel all the way to that municipal pool."

Done, quick as a wink. What's better as a status symbol than a private swimming pool? (And a solution to a problem that had been worrying these good people since that Negro dentist and his four kids moved into the neighborhood). The articles of incorporation are drawn up and there are just 12 families. A few families who believed they were part of the inner set aggrieved because they weren't asked. There's a little tension over the highballs for a couple of weeks, but this tension is relieved because the pool doesn't cost $3,000. No siree, what with the inflated realty value and whatnot, the swimming pool comes to about $6,900. So those aggrieved families are hustled into the corporation pretty fast; in fact, they're even pressured to get in some of their friends who belong to another inner circle. The pool has grown now from 12 families to 24, but it's still pretty exclusive in that everyone has the same attitudes. And what is most important, they are of the same color—pale.

The Legalistics

The foundation's been dug and the pipes are laid. The workmen are about to pour the cement when a commissioner from the Zoning Board shows up and addresses himself to the first highball drinker.

It seems a swimming pool is an "attractive nuisance" and if any kid other than the child of a member falls in and drowns, the corporation will be held liable. So the Zoning Board of the town has decreed some time before that all swimming pools be surrounded by a 10-foot-high wire-mesh fence. That fence is going to cost about $900 plus another $300 for labor and, what with costs on the pool running a bit high to get it finished in time for the summer, the number of the corporation grows to 30 families. Of course, 30 families of the right background and manners are not easy to find, and the highball folks now go out searching for all sorts of odds and ends, and now that Syrian architect who has seven kids (and an extra $400) is dragged into the circle, too.

The fence is posted, the pool is readied, and the first day of summer dawns. But now who should come plodding up the road but an assistant to the Health Commissioner. It seems there's a State law that demands a certified lifeguard preside over every swimming pool. These certified lifeguards don't cost any $30 a week either. But the corporation locates a Harvard sophomore, home for the summer, at the bargain price of $55. But that's another four families. Plus the fact that the pool must be drained every three days in accordance with local health laws, which means another three families. Now the only one not a member of this private swimming pool is the Negro dentist; (even the two Jewish families are in).

But the kids splash and play and romp in their exclusive swimming pool and the wives watch and play canasta and the only fly in the ointment is that the municipal pool isn't exclusive. It doesn't cost anything.

Ah, it's not all honey to be a middle-classnik in mid-20th century America. The private swimming-pool becomes the public one, and the big free municipal swimming pool serves one Negro dentist, his wife and four children and a retired white Presbyterian clergyman, his wife and three grandchildren and the 11 of them all splash in the big, free municipal pool, laughing like hell.

Puff Texas Showman

San Antonio.

An appreciation dinner is to be tendered here on Jan. 9 to Texas' Lt. Gov. Preston Smith, who is a theatre owner, at the San Antonio Country Club. The dinner will be sponsored by the San Anthonio Medical Assn. biz friends of Smith and by the local Chamber of Commerce.

It is in recognition of legislative work for the city, especially Smith's efforts on behalf of locating a new medical school here.

BRITAIN BREEDS HARDY TROUPERS

By DICK RICHARDS

London.

Show Business, the business there is none like, is characterized by the remarkable longevity of many of its great personalities. One thinks right off of Maurice Chevalier going strong at 76. One remembers the immaculate poise of Marlene Dietrich at the recent Royal Variety Performance here in London and of the non-stop Sophie Tucker.

No matter how numerous the teenage singers, made by album smashes, nor the Lolitas of the film studios, talent with maturity added is something the greatest youths cannot, generally speaking, touch. Coolidge was president when Jimmy Durante began his reign in international show biz. And so on.

But British amusements may, relative to size, sport more spry oldtimers than can be found elsewhere, granted the tenure at the Comedie Francaise in Paris and the marvels of endurance manifest in America by Ruth St. Denis, Ted Shawn, and Ed Wynn.

Or mention Finlay Currie, 86-year-old top character actor, with a show biz career stretching back to 1898. He never stops working ("It keeps me fit") has one eager question when asked to play a part. "I hope there's a location?" He loves to fly places.

Foresighted

When being cast as an old eccentric in a recent film Currie asked if he could play the part with his gray hair long. Puzzled, the producer gladly okayed the idea, but asked, "Why?" "Well," replied Currie, "there are several Biblical films coming up in the next year or so and I want to be ready, if they think of me!" That, at 86!

But Currie is not the oldest active male actor in the top league. Sir Lewis Cassonu, nudging 88, takes that bow and he and his 81-year-old wife, Dame Sybil Thorndike, can between them chalk up over 120 pears of nonstop show biz experience. Only recently they, with another oldtimer, Norah Delaney, hae been on an arduos tour of the sticks with "Queen B." Another sprightly 80-year-old is Charles Heslop, that stylish comedian who, also only recently, called it a career but his girl wife, 73-year-old Dorothy Ward, still ex-

(Continued on page 70)

Italo Total Of 150 Films for '63

By ROBERT F. HAWKINS

Rome.

Italian feature film production for 1963 should wind up in the vicinity of 150 items when final statistics are totted up.

The official total for the January-through-October stretch is 213 pix (vs. 238 for same period in 1962 and 200 for 1961), but industry officials point out that about 90 of these features are either shot entirely abroad (where they count in quotas of countries contributing major finance towards them), or are medium-length pix made especially for moppets or are lowbudget feature documentaries.

Industry topper (and ANICA prexy) Eitel Monaco for one feels figure of 130-140 features per year, under present conditions, is still excessive, but stresses that it's a long shot from the oft-quoted 200-250 totals cited to demonstrate "inflation" of Italian pic production.

Due both to traditional dependence on real-life settings, and to related economy, are significant totals of occupation at Italian pic studios during past year; they range with one major exception from a low of 10% to a high of 35%.

Rush to Profile Bergman Artistry But Swede's Private Life Shaded

By FREDERIC FLEISHER

Stockholm.

Fritiof Billquist. Ingmar Bergman; teaterman och filmskapare. Stockholm: Natur och Kultur, 1960. 279 pp. 22 Swedish crowns unbound.

Jorn Donner. Djavulens ansikte. Stockholm: Aldus/Bonniers, 1962. 8.50 Swedish crowns paperback.

Marianne Hook. Ingmar Bergman. Stockholm: Wahlstrom & Widstrand, 1962. 26.50 Swedish crowns unbound.

Vilgot Sjoman. L 136: Dagbok med Ingmar Bergman. Stockholm: P. A. Norstedt & Soner, 1963. 32 Swedish crowns unbound.

During the past two and a half years the above four books about Ingmar Bergman have been released in Sweden. Although they all deal primarily with one man, they differ considerably from each other. The almost total concentration on Bergman, the film maker, is regrettable as Bergman has worked more in the theatre than in films. Many Swedish critics consider him a better stage director than a film maker. Though this is largely a question of preference, but there is an undeniable and important interaction between Bergman in the theatre and on the screen. He has not only written plays, but his films have been profoundly influenced by his stage productions. For example, his productions of "The Merry Widow" and "Six Characters in Search of an Author" are clearly reflected in "Smiles of a Summer Night."

Author Fritiof Billquist, an actor by profession, was obviously rushed by a desire (his publisher's, his own or both) to release the first Swedish book on Bergman. Not a critical study, Billquist had apparently planned a biography but Bergman's reputation grew too quickly. Billquist's source material consisted mostly of a number of articles, essays and stories that Bergman had published, statements Bergman had made in interviews and opinions that had been voiced by film and drama critics and the like.

On the whole, Billquist was unable to integrate the material. Often when quoting Bergman and others Billquist often did not reveal his sources. Consequently, a reader who is not familiar with the printed material available frequently gains an incorrect conception from Billquist's volume. It would have probably been more useful if Billquist's had not been rushed. When tracing Bergman's early years in the theatre and films, Billquist interviewed several people who were well acquainted with this stage of Bergman's development. But when discussing the more mature Bergman he relied heavily on lengthy quotes from drama and film reviews.

Next in line was Jorn Donner, a 31-year old Swedo-Finnish novelist and critic who recently made his first feature "A Sunday in September." Donner's approach was almost scholarly. Using the technique of a literary critic, Donner traced major themes in Bergman's films. He discussed the views of Swedish and foreign critics and analyzed different versions of some of Bergman's scripts. He was also careful to always mention his sources in footnotes.

Guards Privacy

Donner made no mention of Bergman's life or personality and called him "B" throughout the volume. This total separation of the man's films from the man and his life was not entirely justified. Without question Ingmar Bergman has always been a very subjective artist and knowledge of the man throws revealing light on his works.

In his volume, entitled "Djavulens ansikte" (The Devil's Face), Donner discussed each Bergman film in more or less chronological order. He followed the changes in theme, mood and technique from film to film. He also tried to describe aspects that he regarded to be truly Swedish in the films and define Bergman's position in the creative world of Sweden.

In its line, I feel that Donner's book is undoubtedly the best study of Bergman's films available. Indiana U. Press expects to release an English translation of the book in the near future.

Bergman's films represent only a part of his life and creative activity. Marianne Hook, a critic, has seen Bergman's film as a mirror of his personality, life and problems. She mentions many theories and generalizes a good deal without developing her views. Her book is entertaining but lacks depth.

The most recent Swedish book to deal with Bergman is by Vilgot Sjoman, Swedish critic and novelist who has written several film scripts and wrote and directed "The Mistress" early this year. "L 136" can be translated "Feature No. 136," which designated Bergman's "The Winter Light."

Before Sjoman was allowed to direct his first film, "The Mistress," which was produced by Bergman and is the only film he has produced, he worked as the assistant director on "The Winter Light." Sjoman was also given permission to keep a diary of the development of the film from before Bergman started to write the script to when the film opened in Stockholm. Simultaneously, Sjoman was permitted to use his apprenticeship to make a series of tv films that covered the same material as the diary. Consequently "L 136" can be regarded as an authorized study of Bergman.

Sjoman's Spotlight

Sjoman's diary focuses attention on "The Winter Light" and is divided into three sections: (1) manuscript, (2) shooting and (3) editing and ends with the first showing of film, the critics' reactions and Bergman's reactions. n this way Sjoman conveys a great deal of insight into Ingmar Bergman's personality, the way he works, his opinions on the theatre and films, his relations to his cast, the technical staff and others and numerous other subjects that have been barely discussed in books and articles about Bergman.

Through numerous examples Sjoman shows how Bergman feels compelled to stick to a rigid schedule. He writes his scripts within a specified period, he works daily, he gets up early, eats carefully, has given up smoking and hardly touches liquor and goes to bed early; he takes part in a minimum of social activities; he finds traveling psychologically painful and never enjoys visiting foreign places.

The pleasure Bergman gets out of shocking his audience was also revealed when Sjoman was making the tv film about Bergman the screenplay writer. Bergman placed a little Asiatic goddess with large, obscene buttocks — he normally uses the figure as a paperweight—on the manuscript when it was being filmed.

Sjoman also relates how Bergman's father, a retired Lutheran clergyman, read the screenplay and understood the message and how much this meant to Ingmar. While shooting parts of "The Winter Light" in the province of Delarna in central Sweden — Bergman spent part of his childhood with his grandparents in Delarna and shot several of his films there — Ulla Isaksson, who scripted "Brink of Life" and "The Virgin Spring," visited the troupe. During the evenings Bergman told a few of his recent dreams in which his mother and his wife were combined into one person.

Vilgot Sjoman's diary conveys information about various aspects of Ingmar Bergman. The volume is not an analysis of Bergman's works, but it provides a great deal of material about the man and the way he works. "L 136" is the most exciting and fascinating book about Ingmar Bergman available.

The Snooper Papers: A Public Correspondence

By HARVEY MATOFSKY

(Following are excerpts from an exchange of correspondence, memos and cables between pressagents Joe Simon and Paul Schuster compiled during the filming of "The Snooper." Simon handled the unit location publicity while Schuster served as publicity anchor man in the New York homeoffice. Joe and Paul's behind-the-scenes account of what really went on will be released next week in book form in lieu of the picture.)

June 10.

* * *

Dear Joe,

Have we got tsurus! Our publishers are screaming their heads off. They want the book to come out next month with a big ad campaign, bigger EVEN than the picture, but so far they say there isn't enough scandal to fill one Dorothy Kilgallen column. Can't you make your letters a bit more spicy? Help! Love,

* * *

June 15.

Dear Paul,

What can I do when everybody sleeps with their own wives? The only hanky-panky going on is between the script girl and the second assistant director and the worst part is that they're both not even married! Believe me, Paul, it's murderous, we got nothing but bloody saints on the picture! Anyway, I'll keep my eyes and ears open for something hot.

What happened at the emergency board meeting? There's a rumor going round that they may shelve the picture. Does that mean we have to give back the publisher's advance? Love, Joe.

* * *

June 19.

Dear Joe,

It's a flipping madhouse! The new board met yesterday and after seeing the rushes and your expense reports asked for a proxy vote to stop production on the picture. You've never seen such chaos. The Wall St. splinter faction is demanding resignations left and right. They already fired the entire kitchen staff of the executive diningroom. Right now management is holding a secret proxy meeting in the executive men's room. Love,

PS. After seeing this afternoon's headlines on the proxy fight our publishers gave us another advance. Paul.

June 23.

* * *

Dear Paul,

That's marvelous about the proxy fight and we can work it into the book. But if they kill the picture there may not be any book. Cable me. Love, Joe.

June 26.

DEAR JOE YOU ASKED FOR A CABLE STOP HERE IT IS STOP LOVE PAUL

June 27.

DEAR PAUL I MEANT A LONG CRISIS CABLE FOR THE BOOK STUPID LOVE JOE

June 28.

Dear Joe,

Sorry about the cable business but our publishers want us to cut down on expenses until the book is out. You know our original agreement was that they would pick up all postage, phone and cable charges up to $10,000, and we are dangerously close to going over budget. Incidentally, did I leave my green jacket in your car? I can't find it anywhere and it's driving me bugs. Love, Paul.

* * *

July 1.

Dear Paul,

I think you left your green jacket at my mother's house. Call her and then send me two cables, one saying that you found the green jacket and the other about what really happened. Love, Joe.

* * *

July 3.

DEAR JOE I FOUND THE GREEN JACKET LOVE PAUL

* * *

July 5.

Dear Paul,

We struck paydirt!

AP called me today to ask if the rumor about the script girl and the second assistant director is true. The papers have been full of it and they wanted a confirmation or denial.

I immediately called a press conference. The script girl using language I never heard a script or any other kind of girl for that matter use before (and remember I took ROTC at Harvard). She absolutely refused to talk to the "flipping, flapping, flopping press"—to use her own words. She said it was none of their blinking blanking business.

Her boyfriend, the first assistant cutter, turned up looking absolutely ruined, like he'd been run through his own movieola six or seven times. He read a prepared statement to the press that as far as he is concerned he and the script girl were still going steady. But you could see it was all over. The poor guy never knew what hit him.

Everyone felt sorry for him, he was such a good cutter. The way this thing is shaping up, do you think you might ask our publishers for another advance? Love, Joe.

* * *

July 8.

Dear Joe

Congratulations!

The N. Y. Times ran the script girl story on its front page for three days running with a lead editorial on the third day headed—get this—"So What's Going On?" The tabloids wouldn't touch it but who cares. After all, "Snooper" is a class picture and we're hitting our audience right between the eyes.

But the big question is, do we still have a picture? Management is still holding out for completion of the picture trying desperately to convince the Wall St. boys that the script girl will never marry the second assistant director, or at least not until the picture is released. But they may want it in writing, which she will never consent to since she will never admit she can't write for fear of losing her script girl status. Our publishers are going crazy again. They say if the picture isn't finished they will sue us. I didn't happen to leave my raincoat in your house? Love, Paul.

* * *

July 11.

Dear Paul,

Was that your raincoat? I thought it was a little big on me. I'll return it to you when I get back. Love, Joe.

(At this point Simon returned to New York to give Schuster his raincoat and Schuster was transferred to the unit location.)

* * *

July 15.

Dear Paul,

The board met today and it's official. They will definitely shelve the picture and release the publicity campaign instead. That means we can still publish our book! Love, Joe.

* * *

July 18.

DEAR JOE BUT IS IT ETHICAL TO PUBLISH BOOK WITH NO PICTURE LOVE PAUL

* * *

July 18.

DEAR PAUL ETHICS SHMETHICS LOVE JOE

What This Town Really Needs

By HAL KANTER

Hollywood.

It is high time you tried to help the community—and the community industry—anent a growing evil and perhaps curtail if not completely demolish that evil. Therefore, a few paragraphs about the Testimonial Dinner.

It seldom happens in Detroit, Topeka, Dallas or Philadelphia but in Los Angeles hardly a week goes by that some professional writer with a flair for a neatly-turned phrase isn't petitioned by an actor or producer to prepare humorous after-dinner remarks which the petitioner can then toss off as his own at a tribal rite.

There are, alas, few after-dinner wits who can rise when introduced and instantly amuse a collection of showfolks gathered to pay homage to one of their own.

Therefore, the writer is pressed into service to provide the sparkling moments; he is rewarded only with the satisfaction that comes from reading his best jokes quoted in the trade press the following day. His anonymity is preserved by the colossal conceit of the speaker who usually goes to great and guileful pains in passing off the material as his own.

There are, of course, ghost writers in all major cities who are paid to provide stirring material fo captains of industy and politicians. But it is a generally accepted fact that politicians and businessmen are too busy to write their own speeches. In the theatre, however, everyone assumes that actors and producers have ample time on their hands. Moreover, they are so glib they can rise to any challenge with epigramatic brilliance. Even though you may know an actor intimately enough to be surprised if he can ad lib "help!" when caught in a burning building, you still expect him to equal the toastmaster's carefully planned, brilliant introduction at a testimonial dinner to a pioneer propertymaster.

A Special Lobby

So many such affairs are being held in this town there is a growing suspicion that the banquet managers of local hotels are lobbying for bigger and more frequent testimonial dinners. They have been joined in their subtle movement by meat wholesalers, liquor distributors and pastry shops specializing in fancy fattening desserts, all of whom do business with various fraternal organizations boasting their own kitchens, diningrooms and faulty sound systems.

The plaque-makers of the town have equally vested interests in the testimonial dinner business. Their enthusiasm is shared, no doubt, by the Plasterers' Institute. ("Be sure to knock on the wall—insist on genuine lath and plaster!")

When the honored guest reels home from his banquet, his plaque clutched under his damp armpit, he props it up in the livingroom. The next day he has to hang it on a wall. And invariably, in attempting to do so, he knocks several small holes in the plaster, causing ugly scars which have to be repaired.

The plasterers, plaque-makers, bakers, butchers, bartenders and liquor distributors are joined in their efforts to promote testimonials by the printers who supply not only the tickets to these affairs but also the programs.

((Charles J. Hiftmer, a Simi Valley bibliomaniac, is the smug owner of the world's largest collection of testimonial banquet programs, dating back to a papyrus indicating a Greek called Jesselus introduced the hemlock-bearer at a party given for Socrates, and as recent a program as the ad-studded brochure for the Whittier Knights of Columbus Man Of The Year Award Banquet honoring Louella Parsons' Leg Man.)

It Grows 'n' Grows

The growth of the testimonial banquet seems inevitable, with so many segments of our commercial life involved in its proliferation, therefore one voice crying out against the practice is unlikely to have much effect. But it does appear alarming—to everyone except Dedrick's Tuxedo Rental and Sy Devore's Tuxedo Outright Sales—when one stops to ponder the ultimate day when nobody will eat dinner at home, when children will see their parents only as they flash out of the house to make it to the Grand Ballroom in time for cocktails with the Guest of Honor.

Perhaps the only efficacious step toward containing if not stamping out the spreading practice would be to have ghost writers stop ghosting. Left to their own devices, the after-dinner speakers of our commuity may well bore their audiences into complete retreat, never to emerge in evening clothes for the purpose of honoring anyone who—through survival alone—has reached the head table as Guest of Honor.

What this community really needs is more fathers and mothers having dinner with their kids, at the kitchen table, like real Americans. Move over, Darling; Daddy's home.

Save Lincoln Center

By ART BUCHWALD

The way they build and tear down buildings in New York City, I've decided it's not too early to start a Save Lincoln Center Committee. I know this venerable hall is almost a year old, but there is still a lot of life left in her, and as Chairman of the Committee, I think it would be a mistake to demolish the building in favor of a parking lot, a Hilton Hotel, or a new Pennsylvania Station. Sure you say, we've got to make way for progress, but there are still some traditions left in New York, and the Lincoln Center Philharmonic Hall is one of them.

Art Buchwald

The Lincoln Center is a worldwide symbol of culture. It's true people have sat in the seats and musicians have sat on the stage, but is that any reason to tear it down? Just because a building has been used once is no reason to decide it's served its function and that we must now make way for something new.

Plans are now underway by the Committee to hold a rally at Carnegie Hall to "Save Lincoln Center."

The Committee is going to ask everyone who was at Lincoln Center on opening night to show up in formal clothes to protest with placards and petitions. The Police and Firemen's bands will play for the benefit, and the money raised will go not only to carry on the fight, but also to redecorate the hall and refurbish the seats.

A Save Lincoln Center ball is now in the works and Lawrence Welk will conduct the hit show tunes of Leonard Bernstein. My wife, who is in charge of the Women's Auxiliary, has already scheduled three teas to raise funds for a new facade which will bring the outside of the building up to date with the rest of the architecture in the neighborhood.

Acoustically speaking, the Lincoln Center's Philharmonic Hall is still excellent and the passage of time has only improved the wonderful sounds that emanate from the rafters. If you had to duplicate the acoustics for a new hall, it would cost at least $2,000,000.

Unfortunately, as soon as it was announced that a Save Lincoln Center Committee had been formed, a counter-organization was started which wants to move Lincoln Center to Las Vegas, the cultural capital of the United States. Las Vegas feels that if it had had the Lincoln Center, it would have gotten the Floyd Patterson-Sonny Liston fight.

A lot of people may say I'm unnecessarily worried, and that Lincoln Center may still be with us next year. That may be so, but on opening night I saw William Zeckendorf and his son in front of the hall with surveying tools, and everybody in New York knows what that means.

Anyone for Acoustics?

Ever since the Lincoln Center Philharmonic Hall opened there has been a lot of talk about acoustics. America has suddenly become acoustics-conscious and it's a wonderful thing to see.

I was hoping to interview the acoustics engineer at Lincoln Center, but unfortunately he was not available on opening night. So I had to settle for another acoustics expert, Mr. Sam Reverberation, who is famous for doing the acoustics at the Yankee Stadium and the 42d St. station of the 8th Ave. Subway.

I caught Mr. Reverberation during intermission at the Philharmonic Hall, and, while he had nothing to do with the acoustics at the hall, he was perfectly willing to talk about them.

"Sir," I said, "I would like to get your opinion of the acoustics at this wonderful hall."

He cupped his ear and said, "Eh?"

"I SAID I WOULD LIKE TO GET YOUR OPINION OF THE ACOUSTCS."

"Acrostics, don't do acrostics, young fellow. I guess I should. It would take my mind off acoustics."

"Mr. Reverberation, do you think using hexagonal gold clouds in a hall is a sound practice?"

"Yup, I once used a round mattress. Absorbed everything. Unfortunately it didn't look so good hanging from the ceiling."

"There is a rumor, sir, that there is a deficiency in the cello tone."

"Yes, that's good. Many of us engineers use Jello as a material. It wiggles a little, but it does keep out the sound, and the colors are nice."

"They also said there were some dead spots in the hall."

"What a shame," he said, "I'm sorry about that, but we all have to go sometime."

"Sir, how do you feel about the sounds from the rostrum."

"No, sir, we rarely do a rest room. We're only concerned with the hall itself. That's where they want to spend the money. We will do a rest room if they ask us, but we have to charge extra."

"Do you feel that there is an echo in the hall?"

"Just say it once, young feller. I heard you the first time."

"What about the criticism that there is a definite lack of bass?"

"Yup, we always lacquer the base. It gives the hall a nice Oriental effect."

"Can wrong acoustics cause aggravated hearing?"

"What in the devil does marinated herring have to do with what we're talking about? Are you sure you're a newspaperman?"

"No sir, that isn't what I mean."

"Oh sure, you meet a lot of mean newspapermen in this business. But you meet some nice ones, too."

"Based on the experience of halls such as this, do you have any advice for hi-fi bugs?"

"No, sir. Termite control takes care of the bugs. We don't even start our work until they're finished."

"To be a sound engineer, do you have to have a special background?"

"Yes, but you can also use Fiberglas and wool."

"Just one more question, sir. The horn is sounding for me to return to my seat."

He looked at me and said, "What horn?"

"This is the question, sir. Do you approve of lowering the panels by motorized winch?"

"That story was a complete lie," he said indignantly. "She was a nice girl and besides she was walking."

HOW RELIGIOUS IS SHOW BIZ?

Coffee, Brandy and Cigars

By HERMAN G. WEINBERG

"Humor is the only test of gravity and gravity of humor, for a subject which will not bear raillery is suspicious and a jest which will not bear serious examination is false wit."

—Leontinus

We Carping Mortals

Andre Maurois, one of the 40 Immortals of the French Academy, once rebelled at the biologic injustice that allows a carp to live 300 years while Byron and Mozart died at 35.

* * *

Consider the child poetess, Margaret Fleming (known as "Pet Marjory") (born 1803, died 1811) and who was a dear friend during her eight brief and brilliant years of Sir Walter Scott. A great lifter of low spirits was Pet Marjory. According to the English Dictionary of National Biography, Pet Marjory showed "extraordinary precocity." Her reading matter included Shakespeare, Swift, Newton and Ossian. She wrote diaries and poems. Apparently, she showed none of the morbid tendencies associated with prodigies; on the contrary, her work reveals vivacity and humor—and human limitations: "I am now going to tell you the horrible and wretched plaege that my multiplication gives me; you can't conceive it. The most devlish thing is 8 times 8 and 7 times 7; it is what nature itself can't endure." Robert Louis Stevenson believed her to be "one of the noblest works of God" said Harvey Breit, to whom I am indebted for this item. So must we, after reading her epitaph on three young turkeys and their mother (who is the "she" in the third line of the poem):

A direful death indeed they had,
That would put any parent mad;
But she was more than usual calm,
She did not give a single dam.

* * *

'Garbo Laughs'

Short Memory: Never underestimate the power of high-pressure publicity. "Garbo laughs!" was the banner under which Lubitsch's "Ninotchka" was released, with everybody forgetting that six years

(Continued on page 67)

MANY ATTEST TO DEEP FAITH

By ROLAND GAMMON

For the past three years I have crisscrossed America asking, "What is faith and what part has it played in your life?" I have talked with educators, entertainers, churchmen and business leaders, with philosophers, poets, stage players and the Space Age's new peerage, the Astronauts, with opera stars at New York's Met, Olympic champions at Los Angeles' Coloseum, nuclear physicists at Los Alamos, New Mexico's atomic Forbidden City.

Roland Gammon

The assorted answers, reviewed and written into my new book, "Faith Is A Star" (Dutton), present a surprisingly unanimous opinion: religious belief has proved the root and flower of their life achievement.

What they have to tell us in an alienated age is simply and significantly this: God is. God cares. God can be known. To them, as to heroic men and women everywhere, religion is still the chief fact with regard to men and nations.

True, Tin Pan Alley recently gave us "Songs For The John". Television City still produces such idiot corn as "The Beverly Hillbillies", and Broadway such Freudian claptrap as "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest". And, of course, Hollywood turns out its quota of fluff.

It Cost Us JFK

In a crisis era, when the fat-dripping apathy of the many is more than matched by the venom-fed violence of the few, affirmations of faith by the nation's leaders are not only heartening but necessary. Indeed, in a time of maximum prosperity and peril—when

(Continued on page 44)

Sports Writer On When & How H'wood 'Discovered' Baseball

By HAROLD ROSENTHAL

"Damn Yankees" was the biggest moneymaking baseball picture ever, but there have been several others which have turned a neat buck. The Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig movies left no one crying but the tender-hearted audiences.

Ray Milland once portrayed a professor-turned-pitcher, via a magical fluid which caused the ball to dipsydoodle away from a bat, all to the pleasing sound of a boxoffice jingling. That was a dandy called, "It Happens Every Spring," and it keeps coming back on tv.

Actors invariably like to work in baseball pictures and when the gravel-voiced Bill Frawley used to put on a uniform sometimes they had to cut it off him. And baseball talk! One night in L.A. I watched Bill talk Messrs. Ralph Houk and Roy Hamey, of the Yankees, into near-insensibility while the management of the Tail of the Cock made 20 different moves toward closing.

Frawley had a piece of the old Hollywood Stars in the Pacific Coast League before it was engulphed by the wave of mayor-league baseball which hit California in '58. Presumably there were loss writeoffs for all the movie people, and there was plenty of noise and excitement, too.

The Hollywood club played in a rat's nest known as Gilmore Stadium. If memory serves it was once a Pirate farm and Branch Rickey, then the poobah in Pittsburgh, had his sunburnt fiefs fooling around in the "uniforms of the future"—hard protective caps and short pants exposing the knees. Very good for sliding into second.

"It Happens Every Spring" had already made its score when we reached Hollywood in '51 with the touring Yankees. That was the year Del Webb, having made his first 10 or 15 million as a builder, had decided some of his West Coast chums should have an admiring look at his championship Yankers. He and Dan Topping were partners, having bought out the mercurial Larry MacPhail four years earlier.

So Webb convinced Horace Stoneham of the Giants it would be a great idea to trade training sites (Phoenix for St. Pete) for one year. Stoneham loathed Florida but Webb got his wish, and the Yankees paraded up and down the Pacific Coast the week prior to Easter making nothing but money.

Yanks' Big B. O.

Vivid is the recollection of the Sunday afternoon in Wrigley Field when the Yankees played the Cubs' farm club in Los Angeles and drew 25,000. The next day the Browns and Pirates came into the same park and drew 791.

While the Yankees were in Hollywood that memorable weekend, every member of the movie colony seemed to dig out an old glove, bat, or a set of favorite statistics — everyone except Milland. Frawley had an explanation.

"Ballplayer?" he roared, meaning Milland. "Do you know he never even saw a ball game until he made that picture with the goddam ball

(Continued on page 52)

Tom Brandon Into Shorts Production

Tom Brandon, who originally went into distribution as a means of becoming a producer and then became profitably sidetracked, is now on the point of realizing his original aim.

He's just completed production on a 14-minute animated short, "The Great Rights," which tells what would happen if there were no Bill of Rights, and is making plans for two more, one detailing the importance of the ballot, both to the minority as well as majority and the other stressing the need for national planning for conversion to a peacetime economy and upcoming automation.

Exec is by no means abandoning his Brandon Films distribery, which is particularly active in the 16m field as well as 35m. However, having tried production, he intends to continue, if at all financially possible.

The economics of short film production being what they are, does Brandon really expect to make a profit? He answers that he certainly expects to break even. "Great Rights" cost $43,500 in "out of pocket expenses," with deferments conditioned on how the film goes into release.

Originally conceived to go out as part of the film industry's contribution to the national observance of Bill of Rights day (Dec. 15), the pic was finished too late for that. However, he hopes to obtain industry endorsement for the film—via COMPO—and with this pledge of cooperation in its showing, interest one or two national foundations in underwriting its cost. If not, he wouldn't be adverse to having it distributed by a major. There's also been some interest expressed in the film on the part of the U.S. Information Agency execs, who are due to see the film this week in Washington.

Brandon originally became interested in the "Rights" project in his job as chairman of the Independent Film Importers & Distributors of America's freedom of the screen committee. His first idea was to interest the entire film industry in a national campaign which would alert the public to its Constitutional rights, some of which are being continuously violated via screen censorship. Eventually, when it was apparent that he might have to wait years for outside financing, he went ahead with the short on his own.

Among the things which spurred

(Continued on page 44)

London Casinos Continue Boom

London.

The pattern of the swelegant West End gaming rooms hasn't much changed during the year, though one or two of the rooms, such as Rico Dajou's Casanova Club, Irving Allen's Playboy Club and ex-bandleader Bert Ambrose's joint, have failed to run the course. But, at the several clubs still running gaming rooms, the chips still flutter remorsely and many thousands of dollars change hands during the evening's action.

There has been no change in the basic rule that the casinos may not profit by the actual gambling, but only by what they charge the well-to-do for the privilege of sitting down to lose their money. And so proprietors of such rooms become increasingly wary of giving credit to players and in ensuring that their patrons don't get out of their spending depth. The recent case in which Harry Claff, exmanager of the London Palladium, was jailed for embezzlement caused considerable concern among the top brass gambling maestros. For it was clearly established the main cause of Claff's downfall was his craze for playing the tables and his unsuccessful attempts to recoup. It is not the sort of publicity welcomed by the owners, some of whom are still slightly baffled that they are actually operating within the law and are possibly wondering when the whole money-lined balloon will blow up.

Among the top London gaming rooms are Leo Ponte's River Club, Harry Meadows' 21 Room, Cockford's and Quents. But the craze has been spreading like a rash. One of the latest of scores to open its doors in the sticks is near Liverpool and, in this instance, "The Mersey Sound" is that of chips being pushed on to tables and the soft voice of the croupiers tempting the customers. Run by Tony Ponte, son of the manager of the London River Club, there are plenty of no limit tables. But it is thought that the hard-headed Lancashire folk will take their pleasures just as seriously, but a shade less expensively, than in the West End.

Millinocket's Fire Loss

Millinocket, Me.

Fire knocked out this northern Maine community's only film theatre and there's no immediate indication when it would be repaired or reopened.

The fire in the Millinocket Opera House started in partitions near the projection booth and spread quickly through the walls.

DAVID HORNE INTO AIP O'SEAS SALES POST

David Horne, exec veep and general manager of Titra Sound Studios in New York, is to succeed Samuel L. Seidelman as veep in charge of foreign distribution for American International Pictures. Latter's resignation recently was sans explanation.

Horne, who has been largely responsible for Titra's growth in recent years, has had extensive experience in the distribution field with such companies as Warner Bros., RKO Radio, Film Classics and Monogram (Allied Artists), where he was assistant treasurer and director (1944-48). Just prior to joining Titra in 1956, he was a foreign film distrib.

THE LAST OF THE STAR REPORTERS

By JIM BISHOP

He was always late. There was an aura of excitement and hurry about Red Dolan, but the clock kept calling him a liar. He was due six mornings a week at 10 and, if Harvey Deuell was alert to the creaking boards in the floor of The News office on Park Place, he would look up from the city editor's desk at five minutes after 11 in time to see Frank Dolan, tall and hatless, the red hair in tight waves behind the big ears, sweeping around the bend with a tan worumba coat open and flapping behind him like the cape of a king fleeing for his life.

Jim Bishop

Threats were valueless. Deuell knew that Dolan could get a job on any other newspaper. Dolan knew it. He was earning $200 a week in an era when a good reporter got $40. Red's series on rumrunners in the late 1920s started a congressional investigation. He was hardly a litterateur, but he knew how to make a tabloid story sing.

There was another asset in Dolan's favor. He shone in the face of competition. The bigger a story, the more reporters covering it, the harder Red worked and the more incisive the story he wrote. He was not above purloining photos on a dresser, diaries from a desk, and letters from a night table. He believed that the press was bigger than the Police Dept., bigger than the mayor or the governor.

Once, when he was driving to the scene of a major crime, Red Dolan was stopped by a police captain. "Let me through," Red said, flashing his police card, "or I'll tell Harvey Deuell on you." It is doubtful that the captain knew that Mr. Deuell was the city editor of The News, or would have been impressed had he known, but Dolan got through.

He was a good man in the days of good men. On his own paper, he competed with Martin Sommers, Mark Hellinger, Irene Kuhn, John O'Donnell, Nick Kenny, Jack Miley, Doris Fleeson, Paul Gallico, Tom Cassidy and a bright cub named Jimmy Cannon. Dolan was confident to the edge of idiocy. Besides his chronic lateness, he drank on the job, consorted in the El Fay Club, the Palais D'Or, the Paradise and Barney Gallant's, and took his time when he had none.

Deuell, a stout man who ran his staff with an admixture of camaraderie and discipline, reached a point where he had to have a High Noon showdown with Red Dolan, or surrender. He called him in one morning in late 1929 and told him that, from now on, Red was covering Ship News. That is, from now on until Red learned to be on time.

Teed-Off

Dolan had a fist-pounding, eye-squinting laugh. "Ship news?" he roared. "That's for kids, Harvey; 30 buck kids." Deuell looked up from under the green-shaded light over his desk. "You heard me," he said. Harry Nichols looked up and listened from the other side of the city desk. Gene McHugh, nightside editor, had stopped in for his weekly salary. He stopped to listen.

Red began to argue. It was a logical theme. He realized that he had been late for years. For this he was sorry. Not just orally sorry; truly sorry. It would not happen again. But ship news? "A guy goes down to the Barge Office at The Battery every morning at what?—five o'clock?—and gets on a cutter and freezes to death going down the bay to meet an ocean liner full of movie stars. Is that it? Where's the story? Who cares what Milton Sills has to say about taxes? Or John Gilbert . . ."

Deuell went back to work. "You're on ship news until further notice," he said. Red looked around for witnesses. "You know what you're saying, Harvey? To make that goddam cutter, I'm going to have to sit up all night." Deuell paragraphed some copy. "Miss it," he said, "and you're fired." There was no appeal.

Late that night, the Mutual Commisseration Society of Misunderstood Reporters met in a speakeasy. They drank to Red. And Red drank to himself. There was some postmortem advice, all of it bad. The only thing that was genuine was the ice in the glass.

At five a.m. a Coast Guardsman in a pea jacket was singling up the lines on a cutter when a taxi pulled up, and Red Dolan got out. He was not drunk. He had the first twinges

(Continued on page 67)

Show Biz Closeups In Sharp Focus

By EDDIE CANTOR

Hollywood.

When Eddie Fisher was courting Debbie Reynolds, he commissioned the young Italian painter, Gari, to do a portrait of Debbie made up as a clown for the Thalians, an organization dedicated to the aid of mentally retarded children to which she devotes much of her time. Eddie specified to the painter that he would like to be seen shadowed in the background. How prophetic that was.

Eddie Cantor

By the time the painting was finished, Eddie had split up with Debbie and was going with Elizabeth Taylor. Custody of the painting went to me, a gift of both Eddie and Debbie. I gave it a prominent place on the living room wall and a couple of weeks later, one of my daughters yelled to me, "Here come Miss Taylor and Eddie Fisher—take the picture off the wall. I yanked it down and hustled it into the hall clothes closet. After they left, I put it back on the wall.

A few days later, Debbie came to visit me with her two children. Once again the painting was grabbed off the wall and hidden in the closet. Since Debbie and Eddie are both friends of mine and frequent visitors, I found myself playing hide-and-seek with that painting most of the time. As a matter of fact, it's been in the closet more than on the wall. Come to think of it, it's been in the closet more than most of the clothes.

Before Eddie was married, he was playing at the London Palladium and the then-unmarried Princess Margaret asked Eddie to entertain at a benefit performance. The next day, his picture, talking to Princess Margaret, was in all the newspapers. One woman in Philadelphia, Eddie's home town, rushed in to show Eddie's mother the picture, saying, "You can't tell—maybe these two will get married. How would you like a Princess for a daughter-in-law?" Eddie's mother shrugged, "Say, if my Eddie likes her, I wouldn't stand in the way."

Bert Williams

W. C. Fields, no mean pantomimist himself, once said, "Bert Williams is the funniest man I ever saw—the saddest man I ever knew." He was also the most sensitive. The problems of his people weighed heavily on him. Even in happy moments, and we had many together, I sensed a deep strain of melancholy in him. Once in awhile, it slipped out. The poignancy of those rare remarks stayed with me always.

One New Year's Eve, after the show, most of the cast headed for parties. Bert and I had arranged to see the New Year in together at the hotel where he was permitted to live provided he used the back elevator. I was to pick up a turkey we had ordered from a nearby restaurant. As we started out the stagedoor, I said, "See you at the hotel, okay?"

"Okay," Bert replied, "I'm on my way to the back elevator." This was the first hint of bitterness I'd ever heard from my turn-thine-other-cheek friend. Painfully aware that no words could help his hurt, I said nothing. We stood for a moment in understanding silence. Then Bert added, "It wouldn't be so bad, Eddie, if I didn't still hear the applause ringing in my ears."

On one occasion his philosophical humor and showmanship turned the tables on a bartender in a southern city. After a matinee, Bert walked into a bar and ordered a drink.

"Right," said the bartender, "but it will cost you $50." Without batting an eye, Williams took three $100 bills from his pocket and laid them on the bar. "I'll take six," he said.

Ben Bernie

Long before Dorothy Lamour ran an elevator in Marshall Fields' Department Store, the old maestro, Ben Bernie, was the talk of the Windy City with his fine, entertaining band at the College Inn. Everybody loved Ben Bernie and he had the best show in town, because all the actors would drop by and, unable to resist that Bernie personality, would get out on the floor and try to outdo each other.

Ben never got tired of visiting Maxwell Street which was the equivalent of Delancy Street on the East Side of New York. They have the same crowded tenements, sidewalk pitchmen, pushcarts, delicatessen and clothing stores. As I was passing one of these clothing stores one day with Ben, the proprietor (always alert for a customer) grabbed Bernie by the lapel and said, "Come inside—let me sell you a wonderful suit." Ben took the cigar out of his mouth and gently told him, "I don't need a suit—I've got at least 10 suits at home." The man said, "Ten suits! Bring 'em in—I'll make you a partner."

Bea And Fanny

Every time Beatrice Lillie came to California, she lived at the home of Fanny Brice. When Bea was playing in the Los Angeles Theatre, she would get home at midnight. Fanny Brice, Bea Lillie and I would have a snack and laugh ourselves sick till the early hours of the morning. Once, when dawn was breaking, a pigeon flew onto the windowsill. Bea rapped on the window and said to the pigeon, "Any messages for me?" I think even the pigeon laughed.

One of the world's greatest dancers was Bill "Bojangles" Robinson. I met him one day when Fred Astaire was rehearsing a dance number for an RKO picture. "Bojangles" said, not enviously, but very seriously, "When I see that man dance, I want to turn in my tap shoes and take out a card in the 'Bootblack's Union.'"

In 1928, a play called, "The Nervous Wreck," was a big hit. It was turned into a musical which we named "Whoopee" and in which I starred for Ziegfeld. It was the story of a hypochondriac and the Great Ziegfeld was asked by his friends if I could be legitimate enough to play the role. Ziegfeld replied, "Of course he can. He's been rehearsing the part for many years." It was true. In those days I was taking so many pills they couldn't operate on me for fear I'd roll off the table.

I shall never forget the opening night in Pittsburgh. After the performance, in Ziegfeld's suite, we had a buffet supper. Gus Kahn, who wrote the lyrics of the show, made me sit down and he brought me a plate of cold cuts, a bottle of beer and a stool for my legs. "Why all this attention?" I questioned. Gus replied, "Listen Cantor, you may be a star to Ziegfeld, but to me you're my bread and butter—what time tomorrow do you want me to massage you?"

George Jessel

I was present at the first marriage of George Jessel and also at the marriage of his fourth and last wife. At least I hope it's his last! He's had enough rice thrown at his brides to feed all of China, India, and have enough left over to make a rice pudding big enough for all of America! Somebody once said, "To know Jessel is to love him." To which Jack Benny retorted, "To know Jessel is to marry him."

And speaking of Jessel reminds me of Bob Hope, our Ambassador with portfolio of gags, good humor and laughter. After one of Hope's jaunts overseas, Jessel was bragging that he, Jessel, did as much travelling as Bob. "Take my schedule this week," he said, "Tomorrow night I speak at an affair in Boston, the next night I'm guest of honor at a dinner in Chicago, then I go to Dallas to raise some money, and the following day I'm in Miami for the opening of a dog track."

"To speak or to run?" asked Bob.

When my grandson, Brian, was a little fellow, my daughter, Janet (his mother) admonished him for something, but Brian stubbornly refused to listen. Exasperated, she slapped him across the cheek. Brian, who seldom has a hand raised to him, grabbed his cheek and yelled, "It hurts—it hurts!" Janet said, "You're holding the wrong cheek—I hit the other one." Brian, still holding his cheek, said, "I know, but you hit so hard it went right through."

Fanny Brice—Again

As I look back at the years we both worked for Ziegfeld, I cannot recall Fanny Brice ever being upset or jittery. She had no nerves, not even on opening night. For example, one opening night in Atlantic City, she was almost late for her entrance. The assistant stage manager kept yelling, "Miss Brice, you're on—you're on!" Where was Fanny? Selling one of her hats to a showgirl in a dressingroom. You could hear Fanny's voice out in the hall, "Gladys, this hat is you—it is just YOU."

By this time, the assistant stage manager was frantic. "Miss Brice, come on!" he yelled, "The 'Indian' number—they're waiting!" Casually, Fanny came out of the dressingroom and went on stage and was her usual big hit. When she came off, the showgirl, Gladys, embraced her. "Wonderful, Fanny, wonderful!"

"That's what I've been telling you, Gladys," said Fanny, "For $20 you couldn't get a better hat anywhere!

Groucho

Groucho Marx is one of my closest friends and I was pleased to run into him a few years ago in a Beverly Hills supermarket where we were both shopping. He told me that with the new house he had just bought, he had also gotten himself a wonderful new cook. "Sunday," he enthused, "the dinner we're going to have will make the feasts of the early Romans look like army K rations. We've got a turkey that will take two men to lift and what that cook does with the stuffing is out of this world. There will be three kinds of her special gravies, sweet potatoes that look like a Rembrandt painting and taste like nectar from the Gods. Of course, we'll also have Ivonnaise potatoes—the way she makes 'em, you just gotta have them with every meal. And talk about a way with cranberries—the Pilgrims should have had it so good! And just when you think you can't eat another bite, in will come her piece-de-resistance—chocolate pudding with nuts that will keep you smacking your lips for weeks after. Would you like that for Sunday, Eddie?" Drooling, I said, "I'd love it—by the way, what's your new address?" Groucho sneered, "Don't you wish you knew, you big ham?!"

Peck's Nifty

During World War II, I had a particularly memorable Christmas. Gregory Peck, Jinx Falkenburg and I went to Birmingham Hospital to entertain the veterans. We clowned, we sang, we danced, and gave out gifts.

Peck said to me, "Think of it, Eddie, the boys all recognize me!" I laughed. "Everybody recognizes you, Greg." He said, "Oh, no—last week at a famous restaurant in New York, the maitre d's said, 'I'm sorry, all the tables are reserved'."

"But Greg," I said, "You should have told him who you were." Peck answered, "Eddie, if I have to tell 'em who I am, then I ain't."

Funny Things Happen on the Way To the Lecture Platform

By BENNETT CERF

The current season is the best in decades for the lecturing circuit, and old campaigners like John Mason Brown, Emily Kimbrough, Norman Cousins, Maggie Higgins, Kitty Hart, Alistair Cooke, Hedda Hopper and not-so-humble flaneur once more are happily buttering up their egos, fattening their wallets, publicizing their new books, and proving conclusively, furthermore, that though television exposure may hurt the boxoffice draw of a star in a big motion picture, it certainly hypos the gate for a speaker at university forums and ladies' club townhalls.

Bennett Cerf

I myself am allowed by my wife and business associates to deliver a maximum of 30 lectures a year, but because the Lee Keedick Bureau handles my speaking activities so adroitly, I am able to squeeze almost all of them into four weeks: two in the spring, and two in the fall—always getting back to New York, too, for Sunday night on "What's My Line?" Recently, for instance, I squeezed eight lectures into five consecutive days: single appearances on Monday and Friday; doubleheaders on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. The cities I visited were as far apart as Philadelphia and Thief River Falls, Minn.

Needless to say, split-second schedules result in some agonizing moments of delay in airports and hotel lobbies. I've arrived in some cities just in time to rush out on the platform and gasp, "I just happened to be in the neighborhood . . ."

Once I arrived in a driving snowstorm in a northwestern college town, two hours late, and famished. The head of the English department at the University where I was booked was hopping up and down with anxiety. "The audience is getting impatient," he cried. "I've got a police escort to rush us to the campus." He nearly fainted when I told him I must get some food inside me before I could give my all on the platform. Across the road from the tiny airport was a dimly-lit diner—one of those old railroad-car jobs. With the chairman pulling angrily on my coattails, I charged into this diner and demanded something—anything hot that was ready. The very fat lady behind the counter (the only human in sight, in fact) looked at me in disbelief and said, "Aren't you that fellow I see on 'What's My Line?'" I said I was, whereupon she exclaimed, "What the hell are you doing in a dump like this?"

'My Delivery Is Improving'

One day later, on that same trip, my lecture to 1,000 ladies in Seattle was halted abruptly when a darling young woman in the rear of the orchestra started having a baby there and then. It was a bouncing boy—born right in the lobby. When a modicum of order had been restored, I spoiled everything by remarking, "Evidently my delivery is improving." Soon thereafter it became apparent that that particular audience could no longer concentrate on changing trends in America of either literature or humor—and I raced the girls for the club bar. I finished last.

Deeply distressing to aging male speakers are the inevitable teenagers who come to the platform at the end of the program to report with a smirk, "You used to take my mother out when she was a debutante." Something even worse, however, happened to me recently when I spoke at a finishing school up the Hudson. A monstrous little girl appeared from nowhere to whisper in my ear, "You once were a beau of my grandmother." Worse still, she was absolutely correct.

Fortunately, no one was watching at the time I was able to flatten her with a sharp and accurate kick on the shin—but I swore then I would never talk in public to an audience of young people again—a resolve I kept until the very next time somebody invited me!

THE TIME IS RIGHT

By RALPH HETZEL

(Acting Head and Executive Vice President, Motion Picture Association of America)

In this 58th year of VARIETY's gay and fruitful life, a good question for us in the motion picture business to ponder is what we are, rather than where we are.

We already have a pretty good idea of where we are. We are in the middle of deep and stirring changes. We are testing new ways of doing business. We are seeking out new markets. We are opening up new perspectives in picture making. We are, even, I for one think, starting on a new upward trend in our business indices.

While we consider where we are in the usual industry terms, we ought to consider what we are in the light of the times. We're reminded every day that these are times of explosion—nuclear, population, and political. This also is the period of another kind of explosion—cultural explosion. We can find evidence of it wherever we turn, from Washington to Wenatchee.

This is a symbol of a new kind of attitude toward culture in our frontier country. It stands well in the White House and in Congress, too. Senators and representatives make speeches treating culture as a natural resource. They propose spending millions of dollars to promote the visual and performing arts, and few scoff.

We hear not only of a National Cultural Center but of community projects all over the country. The late President Kennedy formed an advisory council on the arts and state after state established a similar council, appropriat ing money to support cultural activities—and few dissented. President Johnson has pledged to continue the program.

The air is thick with cultural fallout, and no one complains. Especially not the motion picture. This is a mighty comfortable environment for the film, as homey as an easy chair by the fireplace.

Since the film's birth as a popular art nearly 70 years ago, it has been a powerful and pervasive cultural force. And without making much of a fuss about it. Its main purpose always has been to entertain and enlighten. In fulfilling this purpose, it has evolved into a distinct cultural medium that encompasses the globe.

Maturing Medium

The last decade has witnessed a new and exciting stage of the motion picture's evolution. In maturing, the film has recognized the need to reach for more than a common denominator. It has wisely made up its mind to reach and serve a selective audience. The result has been unimagined diversity.

Some pictures are produced for sheer fun, some for pure adventure, some for historical content, some for a view of what makes man tick, some for dramatic—or amusing—comment on the age in which we dwell.

We're doing things that weren't possible in the days when Hollywood was imprisoned by fixed notions about audience demand and by fear of invention. In its liberation, of course, the film has been exposed to criticism of one form or another. That's only natural. Diversity in action is certain to stir diversity in reaction. No medium can thrive on conformity. Diversity and selectivity are inherent in any art.

STAGE FRIGHT: AND ITS CURE

John F. Royal On Italo Pix (1926)

Vet showman John F. Royal, who segued from the old Keith-Albee organization to v.p. of NBC, was going through his files and came across a letter, dated June 19, 1926, written to late John J. Murdock, then g.m. of the circuit:

"About 14 years ago the Italian people made a great start in the production of pictures. You will remember their "Quo Vadis," which was really a great production. Later they followed with "Caberia," which scenically was splendid, but its drama was years ahead of the time.

"After a few years, economic conditions in Italy, and our rapid advance in the picture field, rather smothered the Italian effort. Today Mussolini is one of the world's biggest figures. He is crazy about moving pictures. Italy has every asset and qualification to produce pictures. They have cheap labor, they have all necessary scenery, and with American methods put into that country, (with the help of Mussolini) I am certain that great things could be done along this line.

"There are no good pictures being produced in Europe today to any great extent, and I am willing to wager that, with the influence of Mussolini's energy, and American methods, Italy would soon be turning great pictures at lower production costs than any country in the world.

"The Producers Distributing Co. might at least wish to look into this matter. John F. Royal."

Some Things The Stars Forgot

[But I Didn't]

By JULES ARCHER

I was 12 at the time and my pal Louie, the tailor's son, had to take some suits backstage to the RKO Fordham, where Clayton, Jackson & Durante were headlinging in person. Louie invited me along to see the "crazies," so I marched at his side when he brought the suits into the star dressingroom. We found Durante sitting there talking to his two partners. When he saw us, he suddenly jumped to his feet and clutched his head.

"What!" he shouted, stalking back and forth, "T'ree-fifty fer der dry-cleanin'! Why, it's preposserous! It's outragifying'! I never hoid anyting so lucadrous in my whole life! T'ree-fifty fer der dry-cleanin'! Why, sonny, yer father must be nuts! Tell him he can't get away with dat! Not on Durante!"

Neither Louie nor I had said a word, of course, and as a matter of fact the cleaning bill only amounted to 85c. But the wonderful Durante continued to put on a private performance for two giggling 12-year-old kids for fully five minutes before he broke into a chuckle and said, "All right, gimme da suits, ya little monsters." And he gave Louie a dollar tip.

* * *

It was about 1936, I think, and I was a self-important young 21-year-old ascending the backstage steps of the Winter Garden to interview Mitzie Mayfair who was appearing in a musical I've forgotten for a magazine I've forgotten. On the way up the narrow iron stairs a slim lady squeezed by me on her way down. I recognized Bea Lillie, the star of the show.

Her eyes met mine, held for a moment, and then she arched her brows to their highest elevation. As though in an eloquent comment on the grazing of our bodies as we passed, she pursed her lips and said meaningfully, "Woooowooo!" Then she brushed serenly by, leaving me to ponder this Lady Peel reaction to casual passion aroused by strangers who pass in the night. It almost ruined me for Mitzi Mayfair.

A year later I was interviewing Fanny Brice at the Winter Garden where she was appearing in the Follies, when a man's voice in the street below yelled up, "Hey, Fanny, stick your head out the window!" She shrugged at me and grinned, "For a minute I was afraid he was saying, 'Hey, Head, stick your fanny out the window!'" She leaned out the window and I heard the man call up, "How about those seats for tonight?"

"So, sure, dollink!" she yelled down in her stage dialect. "Esk at de boxoffice—dey veel be in your name. T'row Fanny ah great beeg smile, dollink!"

"Go to hell!"

She came back to me grinning mischievously.

"He just got a new upper plate," she explained.

* * *

I interviewed Margaret Sullivan after some reviews had slammed "Stage Door" when she opened in the play at the Music Box. I invited her to reply to the critics through the magazine I was writing for. But Miss Sullivan, who until that moment had me persuaded that she was the sweet, wistful, starry-eyed type she always portrayed, replied in words as sharp as a polished diamond:

"I am quite young in the theatre, Mr. Archer, and I have a long career ahead of me. It would be exceptionally short sighted of me to say anything to antagonize any New York critics!"

* * *

Like In The A&P

When I went to interview Helen Hayes backstage at the Broadburst, I was warned to be very dignifide with an important star like that. But I think Miss Hayes heard my youthful knees knocking when I entered her dressingroom. Sitting me down opposite her as she cold-creamed off her makeup, she began kidding around and laughing with me as though we'd been old friends for years. Afterwards, when my mother asked me what the grand lady of the theatre was like, I said, "Just like the woman who stands behind you at the check-out line at the A. & P."

My mother grew mad. "I ask you a serious question," she

(Continued on page 53)

A FILM ACTOR'S RETROSPECTION

By FRANK DE KOVA

Hollywood.

Acting, to many, is a flight from reality into fancy. For me it has been just the opposite.

I began life, professionally speaking, as a teacher of Latin languages, specializing in Spanish. It was my escape and land of fancy: a world in which I envisioned the teacher as a shaper of lives for the future; a universe whose gods were Erasmus, Pastalozzi and Dewey—a dream that sustained me after my graduation from CCNY and Columbia for years in the Great Depression.

For five years I struggled to keep body and soul together for me and my family, my BA and MA degrees notably handicapping me. There were the bitter nights and mornings loading and unloading on the New York waterfront in the dead of winter as I "shaped-up" each midnight for a day's work, the firing of huge boilers in apartment hotels (once I almost blew up a building) and shipping out on banana boats going to Central America. I sold vacuum cleaners, coal, magazines and I shovelled snow. There were harsh periods of unemployment, lines and lines of men outside factories and plants waiting and hoping for one job-opening only—and eviction notices. Yet the vision of my dream never diminished. I slept little and studied hard for the day I would teach. It came finally.

The Enemy

From earliest childhood, I had suffered from a deep-rooted feeling of inferiority. It made no sense, I had told myself over and over. I had won scholastic awards in high school and college—yet there it was still plaguing me. In my public-speaking course, I had resorted to the device of memorizing my speeches verbatim, speaking in a daze without even seeing the class before me. In high school, I had even experienced difficulty entering the co-op store to buy a book. In elementary school, I had not been able to raise my hand for permission to leave the room—with disastrous results. As a salesman at meetings, I had had Ideas

(Continued on page 48)

Switzerland: State of Quandary; No Relief for Ailing Filmmakers

By GEORGE MEZOEFI

Zurich.

Switzerland is an improbable contender among major film-producing nations. Still, some Swiss films of the past have gained international recognition. One mentions "The Last Chance," "The Search," "Heidi" or, more recently, "It Happened in Broad Daylight." In the home market Swiss product almost invariably was profitable in former years due to careful selection of locally slanted themes. Modest budgets clearly related to boxoffice potential.

But in 1962, Praesens-Film A.G. Zurich, Switzerland's oldest production company founded and managed by Lazar Wechsler, ended up with a loss of SFrs. 630,885 ($147,000). And in 1963, an alltime low of two Swiss pictures was produced (one by Praesens, the other by Gloriafilm A.G. Zurich which operates as a joint venture with Praesens). Both were flops. Gloriafilm's "Im Parterre links" (Ground Floor, Left Door), a domestic comedy-drama about "little people" was judged too run-of-the-mill and simplified and also took a severe beating from the local press. The other, Praesens' "Sittlichkeitsverbrecher" (The Sex Criminal), was a sincere attempt at a topical problem within four episodes based on actual police files. But its artistic shortcomings and somewhat lacklustre treatment prevented it from becoming a winner.

In addition to these two purely local ventures, Praesens took part in two co-productions with Germany and Spain. One, made with Fono-Film Hamburg and directed by Ladislao Vajda, distributed by Columbia in Germany, was first tagged "Das Feuerschiff" (The Fire Ship) and later changed to "Der Ueberfall" (The Raid). Despite good critical reaction, boxoffice response was very poor both here and in Germany. The other, also directed by Vajda as a German-Spanish-Swiss co-production, "Ein fast anstaendiges Maedchen" (An Almost Nice Girl), starred Swiss actress Lilo Pulver and was filmed at the Chamartin Studios in Madrid. It, too, did not exactly cause the cash register to soar up to any great heights.

The big question Swiss producers are now asking themselves, is: Where do we go from here? The general outlook seems bleak at present. And lack of financial cooperation from the Swiss government, at least in the eyes of producers, does not help to cheer things up. Praesens, for example, is unhappy with the meagre subsidy of SFrs. 100,000 ($23,000) it was allocated by the government within stipulations of the new federal film law which is supposed to further the production of politically or culturally valuable Swiss films via financial support in the form of "premiums" to already produced pictures falling into that category. Since Praesens had no [illegible] which were eligible for such a premium, they merely received the money as a sort of goodwill gesture, whilst Gloriafilm got nothing at all.

Max Dora, production head of Gloriafilm as well as a Praesens exec, is very high on a possible upsurge of tv film production in Switzerland which, in his opinion, may even pump new blood into lagging production here. However, it depends to a large degree on the building of a new film studio, in the talking stage for years and practically ready for construction, with the ground, near Zurich, being made available gratis by the city of Zurich. Most delicate problem in this question (and, in fact, its only snag) is the financing. It is hoped to form an administrative company guaranteeing the studio's financial maintenance.

Roy Thomson, Flanders, Hugh Carleton Greene On Queen's '64 Honors List

London.

Canadian-born publisher Roy Thomson headed the Queen's 1964 honor list with a barony for his public service.

Michael Flanders, the wheelchaired (polio), bearded half of the Flanders & (Donald) Swann comedy team, was named to the Order of the British Empire, and other OBE nominations included art critic Eric Newton, author-editor John Lehmann and balletdancer David Blair.

Hugh Carleton Greene, director general of the BBC, was named a Knight Commander of St. Michael and St. George. Another publisher honored was John H. Newsom, who was knighted, and 70-year-old poet-critic Prof. Ivor A. Richards was made a Companion of Honor.

Honoring Flanders, sans Swann, has its analogy in Sir Arthur Sullivan being knighted in 1883 and it wasn't until 1907 that Sir William S. Gilbert was knighted, and then following public outcry at the alleged slight.

Baron Roy Thomson publishes 108 newspapers in England, Canada and the U. S., controls Scottish Television Ltd., and 12 other tv properties in six countries, 95 miscellaneous publishing firms, seven book companies including Thomas Nelson & Sons Ltd., and 11 printing companies in five countries. He recently formed the Thomson foundation to aid African students.

Jerry on a Sealy

San Antonio.

Five Household Furniture Stores are offering two free tickets to see Jerry Lewis in "Who's Minding the Store?" currently at the Texas Theatre with the purchase of each Sealy mattress or box spring. Four tickets are being offered with purchase of a Sealy mattress and box spring combination.

Lewis is seen in the pic selling Sealy bedding.

Thanks to the Disc Jockeys all over America for their cooperation on my Warner Bros. album
"SEPTEMBER SONG"

WILLIAM MORRIS AGENCY Jimmy Personal Management: BOB BRAUN

Theatrical Clubs—Havens Of Unique Character

By HARRY HERSHFIELD

Some years ago one of New York's theatrical clubs was in danger of bankruptcy. A hurried meeting was called of the full membership. The cold, agonizing appraisal was made. That they were in danger of losing the clubhouse. They decided to raise, as an emergency, the dues to $500 a year. With that, an actor jumped up and said that he objected to owing so much.

Harry Hershfield

Theatrical clubs are not made up solely of actors. So aptly exemplified, by the president of another club, making his plea. He told of their financial plight, how the actor-members were facing starvation and no roof over their heads, if the club closed. There was so much travail in his voice, so much sorrow to the situation, that they all broke down and cried like children. All but one fellow. He didn't cry. They turned to him and said: "Don't you think its sad?" Yes, he replied, "it's sad—but I'm not a member here!"

Theatrical clubs reflect show business itself. Built on sentiment, tradition and a courage that few hardheaded economists would endorse. But somehow, as the British do, they "muddle through." To the actor, why should his social, leisure hours be any less precarious, than the profession he's in?

Just as there's no business like show business, there are no clubs like theatrical clubs. And they have a purpose, so undefineable to the prosaic, routine human. And that is its charm, to the layman, who not only uses every influence to get into a theatrical club, but becomes at times, its backbone, financially. To mix with the great and near-great of the theatre is the elexir of the layman's new life. He invites and is willing to pay heavy for the friends he takes to the club's functions. It's like being "backstage," with those he only saw and heard back of the footlights. This reflected-glory makes him more of a "ham," than any actor will ever be.

Know samaritan laymen who have paid for actors' admissions to prohibitive costly banquets so that, before long, the layman is initiated in the lingo of the profession. And no one can become a more "show-wise" nuisance, than one who begins to mix with actors, producers, authors and composers. Both gain, however, in the long run. The layman, forgetting his own, not so glamorous work, and the actor often getting some good economic advice, if he should strike a good role. But the lay-member may run into a disappointment, here and there. A gag, years ago, about a certain vaudevillian, always hanging around the front of the Palace Theatre. A businessman friend of his once decided to talk to him, "Why don't you get a job in another profession. Save some of your money, then invest it. After you've made a good amount, you won't have to work anymore!" "Listen," replied the hoofer, "why should I go to all that trouble when I'm not working now."

Our subject is the "theatrical club." In the main, in America, it is narrowed down to three. In alphabetical order, Friars, Lambs and Players. Unadulterated theatrical clubs, originally designed for male members. In late years, because of financial reasons, women are allowed through the sacred portals, for dinner only, and an occasional event when the ladies' presence give it the needed tone and charm.

The 'New' Show Biz

There are many other organizations in America, that are allied in a way, with the theatre. Putting on their own shows, either using native talent or professional—the latter, gaining much revenue from these theatre-minded organizations. Public events, these days, do not depend on their speakers, to make the evening a success. Many a performer makes more money, pro rata, for the one shot than he does per week in the theatre. Many of our stars sit around the clubhouse waiting for phone calls — getting a more lucrative assignment from one booking to a public event than from some producer of a show. If it's for a banquet, the performer not only is getting a big fee, but is put on the dais and gets more attention than Mr. T. Coddington Blivitz, the guest of honor. It's a new kind of show-business. To the star, what difference does it make where he performs, so long as he has his audience and their money—which has been added to the price of the banquet ticket.

Big fees, for public appearances got their real big start via Will Rogers, George M. Cohan, Willie Collier, Eddie Cantor and George Jessel — later came Milton Berle, Maurice Chevalier, now Alan King, Sam Levinson, Jackie Mason, Red Buttons, Jan Murray and a host of other stars.

How different from the days of yore, in theatrical clubs. Was said about some actors: "They sit around and spend, in summer, the money they didn't make in winter."

There has always been a "theatrical" club of some kind. It was automatic. The performer had to "perform" even after his performance. On the stage, he is "make-believe." Sooner or later, he must become himself. He is himself more when sitting around with other actors.

The line of demarcation is sometime painfully slim, between being the "actor" and being the actor at rest. He will, at anytime, gladly give up the "rest," to become the "performer" again, even if it isn't on the stage.

Lackaye's Nifty

The theatrical club is ideal for the ego. Yet, we love it in him, so long as he doesn't hog the scene and not allow others to display their egos. The balances assert themselves, in the hallowed theatrical clubs.

The braggart is soon put in his place by the shades of the great of the past, who strode those very halls. They still tell the yarn of Wilton Lackaye, returning to the club after his triumphal premiere of "The Pit." Nobody wanted to interfere with his earned, first glass. Up to him rushed a fresh embryo and cried: "Lackaye, how did it feel to hear all that applause tonight?" "You'll never know—you'll never know, I'm afraid."

Now, the physical appraisal of a theatrical club—what does it offer? Warmth of design throughout. Spacious diningroom, with occasional impromptu entertainment, that is, performers entertaining each other, being the highest form of appreciation. Billiard hall, the stars playing the neargreats. The main hall, where banquets are held and serves as rest and readingroom, for those having the mood and time to lounge. This is the only room where "quiet" is demanded—to the unhappiness of some, just "off the road" and impatient to tell all. The writing rooms, the Council Hall and at the very bottom, the barbershop—and the exciting cardroom. And at the very top, for those who have the strength to get up there, the gym and steam baths. But most performers follow Walt Disney's theory, when he announced: "When I get the desire to exercise, I lay down till the desire passes."

The symbol of the theatrical club, is the working-theatre, set beautifully, in the building. Fitted and as practical as the best on Broadway. The theatre is used for the club's entertainments and also given over to "tryouts" of new plays. For the actor, the whole setup is Paradise. Nothing to be desired, but a good season, in or out of town, so he can pay his dues and continue to belong to something that is like no other. For the head of the organization, they prefer and do have someone of the theatre. Its purpose and hue must never be lost.

The Green Room Of Yore

In the old days the theatres themselves had a room put aside for the actor to go to after the performance, called the "Green Room." Have attended such rooms, especially on a Saturday night, seeing such as Caruso, Otis Skinner, Ethel Barrymore, Lowell Sherman, Fanny Brice, Florenz Ziegfeld, Helen Hayes, Ed Wynn, Weber & Fields —and so into the 4th of July. The hour of home going was late, for in those days, every star was obliged to do his bit. Yours truly, at one Green Room shindig, sang in a quartet with Caruso—he was pretty good, too!

In this present world of chaos, these theatrical clubs are an oasis for those who are called on, beyond the call of duty, to lighten the burdens and woes of the afflicted, in every corner of the globe.

The actor: Of all wage-earners, his is the most precarious. Yet, he wouldn't give up his hourly challenge for all the security in the world. The most insecure performer still must have the limelight and carries on—he knows what the rich, retired, sad actor has learned—that money talks, but doesn't applaud. May the theatrical clubs build to bigger and better comforts. May they never be allowed to falter. If the actor gives us a little heaven, then allow him his little haven.

Cocteau On Critics

Paris.

Recent death of Jean Cocteau brings back his criticism of critics, as reported in the George Antheil book, "Bad Boy of Music."

"Let us suppose," he said, "that our critic is an excellent critic of, say, chairs. He knows all about a good chair, how it should be constructed, how well it looks, how well it rests the human body. In fact, he gets to be a very eminent critic of chairs, an international authority. Soon, however, he forgets that he is just a good critic of chairs and prints on his visiting cards: 'John Smith, Critic.'

"In this capacity he now examines a lamp. He looks it all over, examines the electric fixtures, fingers the texture of the shade, considers deeply. Then he goes back to his newspaper office and writes for all the world to read: "'The lamp of Bill Brown is not a good lamp. You cannot sit on it.'"

First Came the Word—But A Theme Song's Better

By ASHBEL GREEN

The other day a friend of mine received the good news —his first novel was accepted by a publisher. An editor took him to lunch at 21, and complimented the author on his unusual plot and depth of characterization. There was only one problem.

"You'll have to change the title," the editor said.

The author was surprised. "I thought that 'Vengeance Is Yours' was a pretty good title. It certainly expresses the story line."

"I agree," said the editor, "but times have changed. We believe your book has great motion picture possibilities. Really great. But the people in Hollywood won't touch a title like that any more."

"Why not?" said my friend, who had no difficulty imagining 'Vengeance Is Yours' running the length of a CinemaScope screen.

"Because it won't make a good song," said the editor. "And that's the key to the pictures they're putting out these days."

"A song? asked the writer incredulously.

"Sure. Hollywood makes movies for the drive-ins these days and title songs sell the tickets. Kids go to the drive-ins, you don't think they watch what's on the screen? They got better ideas. So they're listening to the movies. You get a song like 'Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing' or 'Three Coins in the Fountain,' you don't need any more. 'Tender Is the Night,' they sat around with that property for years until someone came up with a good title song. You want to know why War and Peace was a bust at the boxoffice? I'll give them credit. They tried to write a title song, but you can imagine the lyries, so no one would sing it. Look at the trouble they have with O'Hara's novels. Try writing a song called "Ten North Frederick" or "Butterfield 8."

"Why doesn't Hollywood change the titles of the books they buy?" asked my friend, by now weak, and remembering that he had just heard a song called '55 Days at Peking.'"

"It's the banks. They lend money to the producers. They like the idea of a pre-sold package, a title people remember because it was a bestseller. But the package isn't pre-sold unless the producer keeps the title. I know darn well the producers wanted to change 'The Old Man and the Sea' (who would they get to sing that, Walter Huston?), but they couldn't, so it was one of the biggest bombs that ever came out of Hollywood. It doesn't matter who the author is, today you have to have a potential hit song in the title of your novel. Can you imagine Vic Damone singing 'Vengeance Is Yours?' You get the idea"

"I need a new title?"

"Right. Something like 'I Never Knew Anyone Like You.' But keep it in the spirit of the book."

Broadway Arithmetic

By WALTER WINCHELL

The jingle-jangle of the theatre's golden melody is fascinating. It combines the investment attraction of Wall Street, the gambling hazards of Las Vegas plus a touch of Alice-in-Wonderland. Every business has a certain amount of imponderables—the theatre has more vagaries than most. For example, CBS invested $300,000 in "My Fair Lady" before the show's stars or director were hired. The investment was made after a network exec heard only a few of the musical's tunes. The score was filled with gilt-edge notes. Eventually the original cast album of "My Fair Lady" made CBS $20,000,000 richer. The foregoing helps explain why the Big Three networks are now major investors in Broadway songndanzas.

The commercial aspects of the theatre are basically exercises in uncertainty. Countless shows which eventually became goldmines originally had difficulty in attracting backers. To mention a few: "Oklahoma!" "West Side Story," "Once In a Lifetime," "Grand Hotel" and "Life With Father." It required five agonizing years for the producer of "Life With Father" to raise the production cost which was a mere $35.000. That was in the pre-inflation era, of course . . . Last season's top comedy click "Never Too Late" was spurned by exactly 20 producers. It took 6 years to reach Broadway.

There is no surefire method of picking winners in the theatre. The most astute and experienced people have their troubles. MGM once backed three straight flops produced by Max Gordon and Sam Harris. After the run of sour luck the studio refused to put up coin for the next Harris show—a mint titled "The Man Who Came to Dinner" . . . Many of Broadway's rich angles turned down an opportunity to invest in "The Pajama Game." The show received the bulk of its investment from San Francisco's Louis Lurie, the tycoon—who didn't even bother to read the script.

The harsh realities of the Broadway marketplace frequently clash with artistic aspirations. Artistry requires money and money needs artistry—but the alliance is an uneasy one. It has been graphically exemplified by Tennessee Williams' anguished cry: "Broadway is a big business they tell me. That's why I hate it and can't stand it. I think you work much better when there isn't all that money involved. On Broadway someone's always shouting at you: 'For God's sake, cut here, cut there, make it shorter. Don't you know that if the play goes beyond a certain minute you'll have to pay the stagehands double?'"

Despite Mr. Williams' distress the B'way theatre made him rich.

Producer Herman Levin's history offers a prime example of theatrical roulette. He had trouble attracting coin for "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," until he prevailed upon Josh Logan, Leland Hayward and Rodgers and Hammerstein to invest $5,000 each. After that news appeared in the papers Mr. Levin sat at the phone taking orders from backers. He raised the rest of the money in one day . . . He made money with "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," lost it all on another show, then hit bingo as the producer of "My Fair Lady." This season he will produce "The Girl Who Came to Supper." Mr. Levin recently stated: "We went through hell to raise the money for this show. A couple of years ago I'd have raised the money in a week."

Good fortune is a vital element in bankrolling shows—but so is daring. David Merrick once walked into the office of producer Herman Shumlin unannounced and offered to put $5,000 into "The Male Animal." As a result, he profited $20,000 and became Shumlin's general manager—which was his springboard to becoming the most successful contemporary producer . . . Mr. Merrick's success formula is quite simple: "What I do is strictly my own taste. If I like something I put it on. And I'll do anything to sell my plays."

What makes a producer? Josh Logan once put it this way: "Just to be called a producer, it is not absolutely necessary to have taste or talent or good judgment. A producer need only be a rich man, or the son of a rich man, or the husband of a rich woman, or the confident of a rich woman, or the beloved of a rich man. A producer can be anyone who can raise enough money for a show. There are, however, a number of real honest-to-goodness, fulltime producers, men who are able businessmen and strong bargainers. For them there is little glory and great risk in producing Broadway shows, but they are hooked. They love the theatre."

Love for the theatre is almost compulsive for some producers—despite the hazards and the headaches. One of the more successful producers is Roger Stevens, who is a multi-millionaire realtor. Nevertheless, he toils harder in the theatre than he does in real estate . . . Several seasons ago Mr. Stevens devoted more than two years getting "Time Remembered" into production. After many months of negotiations he managed to sign Helen Hayes and Susan Strasberg. Both imposed a condition, however. They would have to approve the actor chosen for the male lead.

Mr. Stevens later noted: "So here I am with two big stars and no place to go unless I can find a third one acceptable to both of them. I tell you that you have to be crazy to be a producer. Anybody who can make $50,000 a year in this business could make ten times as much in any other."

The Broadway theatre is a big business—it grossed over $43,000,000 last season. Ironically, the theatre generates over $100,000,000 in business for others without sharing the profits: Restaurants and hotels. It is also the source for the millions grossed in the recording business and the film industry . . . The major reason why the arithmetic of Broadway doesn't always add up is this: The price of tickets has gone up about 50% in the last 10 years, but production costs have zoomed nearly four hundred percent. That fact makes the theatre a tough gamble . . . But the theatre continues to exist because of its ability to transform money into rainbow-reflections, lovely fragments of sound, brilliant illusions, beauty and bright, bright dreams. The profit is represented in terms of tears and laughter.

PASS THE MENU

By HAROLD FLENDER

Have you noticed that one of the surest ways to win friends and influence people is not by breaking bread with them, but rather, by breaking bread with no one, including yourself; in other words, by going on a fast?

For example, whenever Mahatma Gandhi wanted something from the British during those days when India was a colony, he practically always got what he wanted by fasting. The Zionists on the broken-down ship Exodus defeated the entire British Navy not with guns, but by going on hunger strike.

And look what's been happening in our country. On Oct. 26, 1963, a Jesuit Priest, Fr. Morton Hill, obviously no relation to Fanny, announced that he was going on a hunger strike to protest the open sale in New York City of what he considered obscene literature. Almost immediately, Rabbi Julius Newman of New York announced that he, too, would fast to support Fr. Hill's anti-obscenity campaign. On the heels of the rabbi's declaration, came the announcement from Ralph Ginzburg, publisher and editor of Eros, a magazine that has been banned for obscenity, that to show his opposition to Fr. Hill and Rabbi Newman, he was going on a fast to protest "the obscenity panic that is plaguing our city and the country."

As always happens, there was an immediate reaction from all sorts of people envincing sympathy for the fasters. A sympathetic bookseller decided to help all three fasters pass the time by reading. He sent a copy of Henry Miller's "Tropic of Cancer" to the priest, Frank Harris' "My Life and Loves" to the rabbi, and "The Autobiography of Queen Victoria" to Mr. Ginzburg. Sandy Koufax, impartial to the two warring camps, but somehow affected by the idea of not eating, issued a press release stating that each time the Dodgers played here in the city, he would, as a tribute to all three men, throw nothing but fast balls.

Mayor Wagner, who, it is reported, has a heck of a time getting his own children to eat even when it is not Yom Kippur or some other formal fasting occasion, is reported worried as to possible dire consequences to the city's markets should the fasting craze really catch on and begin to spread. Consequently, at a huge banquet last night, he promised to rid the city of all lewd literature, even if he had to buy it all himself for his own library, provided the three major principals took a bite to eat. Complying with the Mayor's request, Rabbi Newman broke his fast with an Irish stew at Gilhooley's, Fr. Hill had matzoh ball soup at Lou Siegel's, and Mr. Ginzburg took a bite out of the Mayor.

Filipinos' 150 Features in 1963

Of Imports, Those From Taiwan and Hong Kong Largest — U.S. Product No. 3

By AARON PINES

Manila.

Undeterred by rising production expenses and other unfavorable circumstances Filipino showmen continue to turn out lots of features with Spanish or native dialect soundtracks. As of the end of 1963 there are some 45 Filipino producing companies extant. Favoring improvement of the home film industry are various legislative enactments. Tax relief has certainly helped.

Filipino showmen have taken the position that they need government help but unlike other countries they seem free of the fixed ideas that the way to help native production is to smite the American product which continues the main source of supply to Filipino film theatres.

A notable change here is stricted censorship. This is aimed at le sexy stuff but also the sadistic rowdyism so dear to many of the American producers in recent years. Significantly, Filipino censorship is now extending from theatre screens to filmed and taped entertainments on television. Video is not yet a major rival to boxoffice but it's here.

More than 150 Filipino features were completed during 1963. This does not count a number of others in production but unfinished as 1964 rolled in. Trend was to low-budget action. Domestic releases totaled 127. Coproduction were "No Man Is An Island" (Tamaraw Studios, Manila, and Gold Coast Productions, Hollywood), "Holiday In Bali" (Sampaguita Pictures, Manila and P. T. Persari Film Organization, Indonesia) and "No Way Out" (Tamaraw Studios, Manila, and Chun Kook Yung Bae Motion Picture Corp., Korea).

Top 10 Tagalog dialect features (per Weekly Graphic, based on 10-day gross returns, in pesos, at six selected theatres) were led by Sampaguita's "The Big Broadcast", Tagalog-Ilang-Ilang's "Suicide Commandoes".

Native Investments

Average Tagalog dialect productions cost ranges from 75,000 pesos and up for b&w pix, 150,000 pesos or more for color. Check indicates that about 25% of Filipino production was exported, with earnings estimated at some 18% more than previous year. Though there is increasing interest in exports though language barrier, dubbing and subtitling costs present a pretty formidable barrier. Government has plans to help, but noth ing implemented as yet.

Arriva Productions' "Noli Me Tangere" was named best picture of year by Filipino Academy of Movie Arts and Sciences. Sampaguita's "The Big Broadcast" was selected as Best Choreographed Picture at 1962 Asian Film Festival.

Re Imports

Some 472 foreign features were released, with 156 coming from Taiwan and Hong Kong for the biggest foreign community in the Philippines—the Chinese. Of remainder, 55% were U.S., 15% Italian, 10% U.K., 10% French, 8% Japanese, 2% West German. Most pix are screened in original versions. Customs duty on 35mm feature imports is 20 centavos per linear meter; 50 centavos for 70mm.

There are no unremitted earnings since lifting of controls by present administration. Rise is the exchange rate has lifted price of imports 40-45% over those ruling in days of import control. Top 10 imported attractions were "King of Kings" (MGM), "Come September" (U), "Guns of Navarone" (Columbia), "Blue Hawaii" (Paramount), "Barabbas" (Columbia), "The Longest Day" (20th Fox), "Splendor In The Grass" (WB), "Hey, Let's Twist" (Rank).

An increase of 34 theatres brought the 35mm total to 676. In addition, there are five houses playing 70mm product. Of the 35mm total, 20% play both domestic and imported features, about 45% play imports only, and approximately 35% play only domestic product. Year saw eight theatres close, five of total being destroyed when fire swept through the provinces.

Average admission tax here is 28% with 10-day runs the usual practice, though exceptional boxoffice receipts can later this practice.

PENELOPE HOUSTON IN DIGEST OF POST-'46 PIX

"The Contemporary Cinema," a Pelican original priced at $1.25 and written by Penelope Houston, editor of the British Film Institute's quarterly journal, "Sight and Sound" is a really good book on films. Miss Houston, who is often wordy and long-winded in "Sight and Sound," has achieved an admirable style and easy flow of words in her book. She communicates her interest, enthusiasm and knowledge in warm, intelligent, perceptive and analytic comments, taking the reader on an absorbing journey over the years in the cinema since 1946.

In a clever division of material, the 13 chapters deal with all the important and significant developments and changes not only artistically but socially, politically and commercially. The British, French, Italian, Japanese and Soviet product are dealt with in most satisfying treatments and Hollywood is fully considered with fairness and affection. Not only does the author describe the important pictures, big and small, but she also tells us of their makers and relates them to the background of their time.

To handle so much material with such deceptive ease and imagination is no mean feat. Miss Houston is never malicious nor pretentious and has made familiar and often tiresome issues seem new and interesting again. A newcomer to film appreciation could not find a better and more comprehensive book from which to learn of his subject.

Book ends with a handy checklist of the work of over a hundred directors by John Gillett, and is illustrated with 30 pages of stills.

Prat.

THE 'OTHERWISE' LINES— AND HOW TO USE THEM

By HARRY PURVIS

Want to write a screenplay of your very own? Stuck for some good dramatic dialog? Why not try using some of our OTHERWISE LINES?

Every successful screen scripter agrees that for sheer drama you cannot beat the OTHERWISE LINES. Write today and get your share of the profits to be made in this lucrative literary field!

Following are some of the choice items we now have in stock:

"This young lady needs a complete rest—away from everything. OTHERWISE—I WILL NOT BE RESPONSIBLE FOR WHAT HAPPENS!"

"Your leader — I demand to know the name of your leader. Tell me this—and you go free. OTHERWISE—YOU WILL NOT LEAVE THIS PLACE ALIVE!"

"Sign this paving contract, and the letters are yours, Senator Lilliwhyte. OTHERWISE — I'LL SMEAR YOUR NAME FROM ONE END OF THIS TOWN TO THE OTHER!"

"Promise not to struggle, my dear, and I'll untie you. OTHERWISE—I LEAVE YOU TO THE TENDER MERCIES OF GRUSSO HERE."

"Do as the brave American says, Prince Michael, and you may yet regain your throne. OTHERWISE —YOUR UNCLE RUDOLPH WILL NOT REST UNTIL YOU ARE DEAD."

"We must put a stop to this here shootin' and killin' once and for all. OTHERWISE — TOMBSTONE WILL NOT TAKE ITS PLACE AMONG THE GREAT CITIES OF THE NATION!"

"Marry me, and the boy goes free. OTHERWISE — HE DIES WITH THE REST OF THE TRAITORS!"

"Times are changing, Tim. We've got to change with them. OTHERWISE — THIS OLD WORLD OF OURS IS DOOMED."

"Behave yourself, and we'll get along fine, Miss Manderley. OTHERWISE — YOU WILL JOIN THE OTHERS — UNDER THE FLOOR!"

"The girl knows nothing about all this, Larson. Let her go—and I'll show you the location of the mine. OTHERWISE — THE SECRET DIES WITH ME!"

"We gotta' beat Dawson into town. OTHERWISE—HE'LL BEAT OUT MISS BETTY FOR THE STAGE-LINE FRANCHISE."

"Come, Come, Mr. Russell—I must have a decision soon. OTHERWISE — I SHALL BE FORCED TO MAKE A DEAL WITH YOUR ENEMIES."

Keeping Up With 'Jones' and Kramer

United Artists Totals Its All-Time Best Holiday Fortnight

This was the fortnight that really was at United Artists. The Christmas-New Year's period saw various boxoffice contenders turning in the best total for this like period in company records. Just about all distribs had happy holidays; but, to repeat, UA's history is a long one and the recent past was the best. Stanley Kramer's "It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World," in Cinerama and in laughs, was a right mood piece for the consumers. And "Tom Jones," the British import starring Albert Finney, came to be the hardest (to get) ticket in a Manhattan eastside location and the sleeper of the year. The N. Y. Critics and the National Board of Review called it best of 1963.

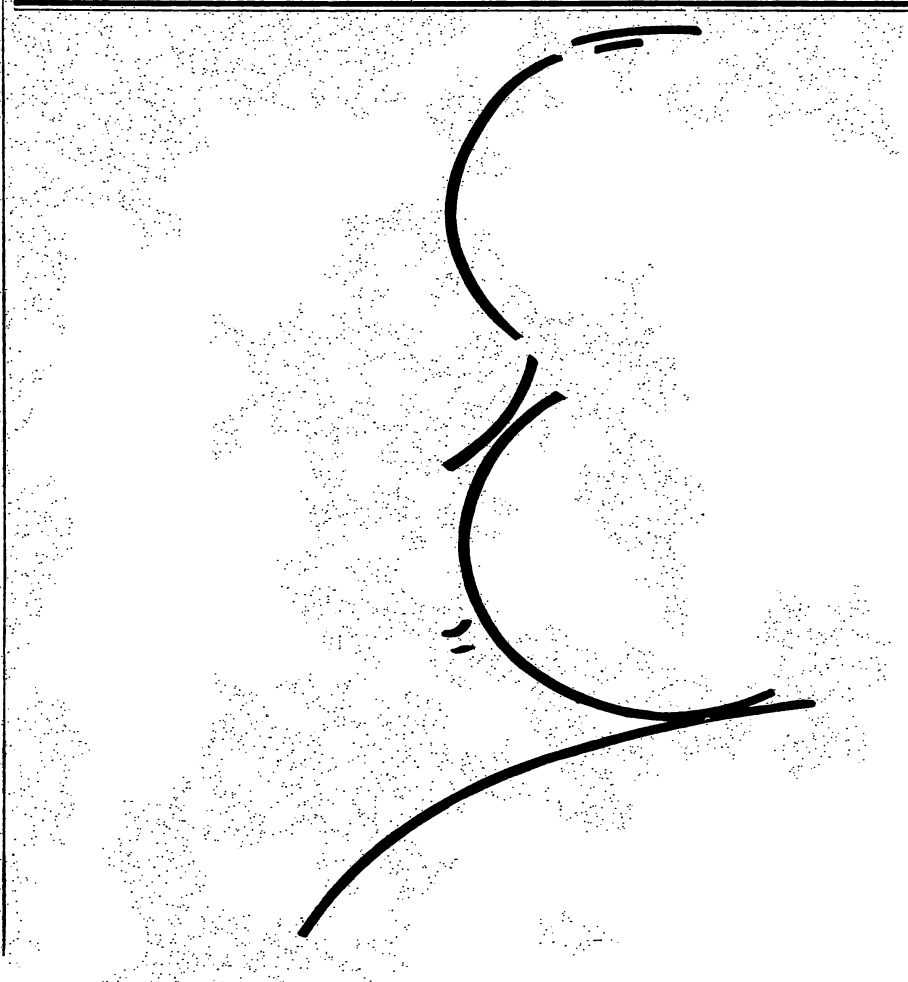
"Mad World" broke the all-time house record in 14 of the domestic theatres where it is current on a reserved-seat basis. Following are some one-week grosses comparing the "Mad World" new highs with previous records.

City	Theatre	Old Record	"Mad World"
Chicago	McVickers	$30,970	$33,430
Montreal	Imperial	$18,194	$24,529
San Fran.	Orpheum	$44,244	$44,893
Atlanta	Martin	$12,316	$15,225
New Orleans	Martin	$12,834	$18,853
Phila.	Boyd	$23,779	$34,948
Cincinnati	Capitol	$15,184	$17,354
Pittsburgh	Warner	$16,013	$21,226
Cleveland	Palace	$15,738	$22,696
Houston	Windsor	$14,081	$14,081
Kansas City	Empire	$14,972	$19,964
Miami	Sheridan	$17,009	$26,366
Portland	Hollywood	$12,895	$23,575
N. Y.	New Warner	—	$70,790

The New Warner was overhauled for the Kramer production and consequently no comparisons are possible.

"Tom Jones" in its 12th week at N. Y.'s Cinema One raked in $42,015, which was $4,000 over the previous house record, and making it the historical top grosser at any eastside house. Some other "Jones" one-week figures: Mike Todd Theatre, Chicago, $26,350; Beacon Hill, Boston, $24,066; Ontario Theatre, Washington, $31,193; Hyland Theatre, Toronto, $24,374;—and so on. These tallies do not include the New Year's Day business.

"Kings of the Sun," "McLintock" and "Lilies of the Field" further contributed to the UA impact. "Kings," for example, grossed $206,439 over the two-week period in a 28-theatre day-dating exposure in Los Angeles.



'Nix Westerns'—Smith; Too Inflated: Gotta Load 'Em With Multiple Stars

Hollywood.

"I'll never make another western."

So says producer Bernard Smith who is following his star-heavy b.o. click "How the West Was Won" with the similarly cast "Cheyenne Autumn," now before the Warner Bros.' cameras, John Ford directing.

Smith's remark may be attributed to either (1) producer declaration "I have other things I want to do" or (2) the costs involved in such pix seem to be inflated beyond market value.

To put over a western today, Smith deems every dollar and name in the $14,000,000, 14-star "West" and $6,000,000, 10-star "Autumn" necessary. Echoing others, Smith avers that TV has usurped all of the western audience, save those who will be lured away from home and hearth by the multi-starred epic.

Deferred Playoffs Posing Major Threat To Indie British Producers

By LORD ARCHIBALD
(Chairman, Federation of British Film Makers)

London.

VARIETY has given me a provocative but stimulating subject "Can the Independent Film Producer Survive?" Naturally I can only seek an answer within the experience, present condition and future prospects of the British film industry.

Lord Archibald

My quick reaction is to say "Why not? He always has survived and why shouldn't he continue to do so?" But this is too facile. Conditions may arise under which the independent producer could not possibly survive. Have such conditions arisen or are they likely to do so? Again, I emphasise I can only look at the British scene.

There has probably never been a time when conditions in our industry were changing so swiftly. Anything which I write today may, therefore, be outmoded almost momentarily.

But, despite these provisos or qualifications, I would say, bluntly, that the British independent producer has never faced a more difficult time than the present. The danger signs have been appearing for quite a long time. In April of this year, and even earlier, members of this Federation were reporting that films which they had delivered were being held up for release dates nine to 12 months ahead.

Before examining the causes let us look at why it is serious. If a producer delivers a film this month and the distributor cannot get a release for a year what happens? First of all increased interest charges. If his film has cost say, £300,000 and he has borrowed at 6% then his costs are increased by £18,000 for which there is nothing on the screen. Second, if his borrowing has a condition that repayment must be made within, say, 18 months of delivery then the locusts have eaten 12 months, earnings in the remaining six months are very unlikely to enable repayment to be made, so the producer is in big trouble. Third, if repayment of borrowings is held up in this way the producer has little or no chance of arranging further loans so his new production activities are indefinitely postponed. Fourth, if the producer has made a film designed to meet the mood of the public this year he is faced with the distinct possibility that it may well be out of tune with the public mood a year from now.

The Rule of Two

What is the cause of this delay in release? It is generally accepted that the product available for the cinemas in the United Kingdom (mainly American and British) is sufficient for $2\frac{1}{2}$ releases but not enough for three. But there are only two worthwhile releases—the Rank and ABC circuits. The third release—at one stage called the National release— is practically worthless and regarded by producers and distributors as the kiss of death. So the two major circuits are offered, between them, some 25% more new films than they can absorb and if account is taken of re-issues and Continental films they are probably offered about 40% more. The result is, of course, a log jam and, as I said earlier, a producer delivering a film to-day may have to wait for a year for a major release. How many films are on the shelf in this way is difficult to define precisely. This is an industry of a secretive nature and lacking in statistics. But there are enough films on the shelf to make responsible and experienced independent producers decide to discontinue production. Younger producers have the decision made for them—they just cannot get finance. Newcomers haven't a chance.

Until the log jam is broken it is likely that British film production will be restricted to films financed by Rank, ABC and American companies—no real native independent production.

What is the remedy? A third circuit comparable with the two existing circuits? Not necessarily. A good but flexible third circuit, taking some 26 new films a year (some of them perhaps for more than a week), some move-overs, some re-issues and some Continental films, is one suggestion. But much more important is the evolution of a generally more flexible release pattern under which every usable film is offered to the public and its bookings and running time are determined by its public acceptability.

Independent film production—in every film producing country—is a necessity if the industry is to maintain its vitality. One has only to look at the successful films in recent years to realize how many of them have come from independent producers.

So the question before us should not be "Can Independent Producers Survive?" but "How can we establish conditions under which independent producers survive?" as their survival is essential to the survival of our industry."

To Which 'Variety' Adds

By HAROLD MYERS

London.

There is, of course, an historical background to the present situation. It dates back to the time a few years back when John Davis revealed his "rationalization" plan for the Rank Organization's exhibiting interests. At that time the group was operating two circuits, the Odeon and Gaumont-British. Because of a scarcity of top flight product, coupled with declining admissions, he welded one major releasing group, now known simply as the Rank circuit. Other theatres formed the nucleus of what became known as the national release. In theory, three circuits remained, but with one essential difference. Producers were not overly happy with the earning potential of the third release and became involved in a scramble for playdates on either of the two majors.

In the course of the years, that situation has been aggravated. More theatres have gone dark and fewer cash customers are around, and that appears to be a continuing trend. At the time when rationalization was first suggested, Davis forecast that paid admissions would drop to 600,000,000 a year. Today, the total is just about half that estimate, and it seems as if there is some way to go before bottom is reached and the figures begin to level out.

In that period of contracted admissions, however, production has remained moderately stable, and statutory Quota has remained constant at 30%. Elementary mathematics show that an average of 35 features a year is adequate for the two circuits to fulfill their Quota obligations, though in actuality, both have devoted more playing time for British films than legally obliged. That notwithstanding, the fact remains that with production running at the rate of between 60 and 70 first features annually, there are more British pix around than either of the circuits can absorb, and completed films have been piling up waiting for the chance of national exposure.

The repercussions have inevitably been widespread. Independent production is, as British Lion chairman David Kingsley recently remarked, grinding to a halt.

Inevitably, in such a crisis situation, there are divergent views on the best possible solution. The Federation of British Film Makers, which includes many of the indies in membership, has come out boldly with a demand that the Quota level should be raised immediately by special legislation to 50%. That, it is suggested, would pave the way for more playing time for the backlogged pictures and provide the incentive that the independents need if they are to continue in business. Other producers, in opposing this viewpoint, argue that legislation will not solve any problem. What is needed, they say, is more pictures of boxoffice calibre which would help to reverse the downward trend in admissions. It is impossible, they argue, to promote legslation to compel the public to go to picture theatres, and an increased Quota in itself would solve nothing.

Dreyer: Danish Dean

He Has Never Compromised With His Own Criteria—Mocked Nazis in War

By HERBERT G. LUFT

On a trip to Denmark, I visited Carl Theodore Dreyer, now 74. First I called the Dagmar, a film house which Dreyer owns and operates. He asked me to tea in his home on Dalgas Boulevard, in the outskirts of town, where I was received by his still youthful-appearing wife and his daughter. His only son is a journalist by profession, as Dreyer himself had been in the beginning.

I was surprised by the simplicity of the private surroundings of a man whose bold imagination has given us "Passion of Joan of Arc" and "The Day of Wrath." Dreyer is a gentle man with sensitive eyes, of much stronger physique than I had remembered from an earlier meeting. He seemed to be fresher and more relaxed than he had been in 1955 when he just completed "Ordet" (The Word), a trying film dealing with highly metaphysical issues.

Friends had told me that it wouldn't be easy to converse freely with Dreyer. Yet, I found him affable and a raconteur of considerable charm. He chatted for hours about his work, to a great deal about his productions in Germany and France 30 and 40 years ago.

He discussed with me his contemplated picture about Jesus, which he has been eager to put before the cameras since the end of World War II, in order to create better understanding between Christians and Jews, an idea which has much in common with current efforts of the Ecumenical Council at Rome to put the crucifixion in a new light.

A stickler for authenticity, he went to Israel to study at the locale of Holy Scripture. He taught himself Hebrew—proudly showing me a series of exercises in his own handwriting. About 13 years ago, he came to the U.S. on a visit to to research on ancient Biblical texts at New York's Public Library. His now completed, 400-page-script uses no other sources than the Gospels.

In Dreyer's "Jesus" scenario, Palestine of antiquity is a country occupied by foreign aggressors, as was Denmark under the Nazi. The Zealots of Biblical days are the resistance fighters, the well-fed Pharisees believe in a status quo, while the upper-class Sadducees have become Roman collaborators While George Stevens' "The Greatest Story Ever Told," for United Artists, depicts the life of Christ from his birth, the Dreyer version would introduce him in his prime. His Saviour is portrayed as politically inactive, a mild-mannered Rabbi forced into leadership by the oppressed.

Once before, in "Leaves from Satan's Book," which Dreyer made 43 years ago for Nordisk of Copenhagen (a company founded in 1906 and still in family hands), he unraveled the tragedy of Golgotha on the screen. The theme of passive endurance runs through all of his work. Himself a Lutheran, he depicted Jews as innocent victims in "Die Gezeichneten" (The Marked Ones) of 1921 dealing with a pogrom in Czarist Russia.

Worked Many Places

Dreyer has made films in such production centres as Copenhagen, Stockholm, Oslo, Berlin, Paris and London.

In 1912, he broke into the cinema as a sub-title writer for Nordisk. Six years later, he was assigned to do the screen treatment for Berta von Suttern's "Die Waffen Nieder" (Down With the Arms!), strongly phrased appeal to abolish war.

In 1920, Dreyer bowed as film director with "Praesidenten" (The president), a rather conventional, moralizing story by the Austrian author Karl Emil Franzos. This picture hardly suggested Dreyer's talents.

"Leaves from Satan's Book," a cavalcade of struggles for freedom, followed — with Karina Bell making her screen debut in the historical spectacle which has a kinship to Griffith's 1916 "Intolerance." Under the spell of the Swedish masters, Dreyer went to Svensk Filmindustri of Stockholm to make the tragi-comic, "The Parson's Widow," mostly on location in Norway, using authentic backgrounds and non-actors.

In Berlin in 1921, Dreyer directed for Primus Films "Die Gezeichneten" from the novel by Aage Madelung, for which he used as his cast, members of the Moscow Art Theater, with Richard Boleslawsky (later a Hollywood film director) and Wladimir Gaidorow (later a star of silents in Germany). Back in Copenhagen that year, Dreyer made "Once Upon a Time," a slight comedy, significant only because he already used the human countenance as the main objective of his camera. Then came "Michael" made in Berlin for Erich Pommer's Decla-Bioskop Films. Based on the novel by Hermann Bang, the picture was heralded as one of the earliest examples of intimate cinema art. A slim, boyish Walter Slezak portrayed the title role, appearing with Nora Gregor and Benjamin Christensen, a Danish matinee idol destined to become a Hollywood film director. The Pommer release, photographed by Karl Freund and Rudolph Mate (both of them later successful in the U.S.), opened in Germany in 1924.

"Jeanne d'Arc" started in October of 1926 and was not completed before spring of 1928 The picture has unity of style, locale and time, centering around Joan's last day on earth, May 20, 1429.

Merciless Judges

In "Jeanne d'Arc," Dreyer's camera encompassed the tragedy in low-angle shots, with a humble and innocent Joan looking up at the merciless faces of her judges as if trying to read God's answer from their lips.

It took Dreyer four years to follow with "Vampyr," a less ambitious film, also made in France. The blood-curdling story (from a novelette by Sheridan le Fahu) shows a relationship to Edgar Allen Poe and Franz Kafka. "Vampyr," unsuccessful at the box office, was Dreyer's first sound picture. It starred in the title role Julian West, pseudonym for Baron Nicolas de Gunsburg who also financed the picture. Sybille Schmitz, a Reinhardt graduate, made her debut in the Dreyer picture. After the war, she became a dope addict and committed suicide Easter 1955.

No Compromiser

Dreyer remained silent for ten years. Next to the late Robert Flaherty he seems one of the few who ever refused to compromise. Dreyer did collaborate with John Grierson in London on documentary shorts but took no screen credit. He returned to Copenhagen and once more became, "Tommen," the court reporter.

Then came the invasion of Denmark.

Mogens Skot-Hansen was appointed head of the Danish Government film department. Under his guidance, Danish camera crews photographed history in the making right under the eyes of the enemy. On the pretext of recording domestic events, details from the underground struggle were preserved on celluloid. Skot-Hansen entrusted Dreyer the cultural document, "Good Mothers" which showed on the screen measures undertaken by the authorities to protect the health of both married and unwed mothers and their offspring.

In 1942, Palladium for which Dreyer had made "The Fall of a Tyrant" 17 years earlier, invited him to direct "Anne Pedersdotter" from the play by Wiers Jensen. Skot-Hansen and Poul Knudsen joined with him on the screen treatment which finally was labeled, "Vredens Dag" (The Day of Wrath). In essence, the picture shows the gradually punishment of all those guilty of burning witches. Intolerance is mercilessly branded and justice meted out seemingly by natural causes. Without the German conquerors realizing it, "The Day of Wrath" became an indictment of Nazi oppression.

Under Nazi Eyes

"Day of Wrath" opened in Copenhagen in November of 1934 at a time the invaders had lost their patience with the unyielding Danes. It was the moment when Hitler had ordered arrest and subsequent extermination of all Jews. Denmark, alone among the conquered nations, refused to surrender her minority group. While the king was under house arrest and the country without government, the Danish Jews were smuggled out across the frozen waters of the Ore Sound to the Southern tip of Sweden. At the very same time, Dreyer became the center of a dispute over aesthetics in the cinema.

Towards the end of World War II, when his position in Denmark became unbearable, Dreyer fled to Sweden, where he made a film for Svensk Filmindustri of Stockholm, "Two People," a two-character play from the Swiss work "Attentat" (Assassination) by W. O. Somin which is hardly known in this country but suggests the tragedy which befell the United State on Nov. 22 last at Dallas.

Dreyer returned to his home country after war's end to delve into the history with his work in Danish documentary films. "The Village Church" (1947) gives us an impression of Danish country churches.

In 1954, Dreyer went to Jutland to shoot on location, "Ordet," based on a play by Kay Munk, the Danish pastor and poet murdered by the Nazis during the occupation. "Ordet" is a manifestation of the unfaltering human spirit. The author believed that if faith were strong and pure enough it could in itself achieve a miracle. Dreyer told me that he wanted to clarify with his movie the struggle between the death-seeking fanaticism of "Indre Mission" (a religious sect in Denmark) and the gladness of life-affirming Christianity as represented by "Grundvigianism," a basic tendency within the Danish Protestant Church. Unlike Dreyer's broad historical films, the scope of this modern drama is more succinct, a surface ripple of tension between two families. Yet, underneath, "Ordet" breathes the same compassion shown by made a series of documentaries, among them "Noget om Norden," which means Something about the North. All of these films were made for Dansk Kultur-film, a subsidiary of the government. In the meantime, Dreyer has been toying with the idea of making an epic feature dealing with the saga of Eric the Red, who led a Viking expedition to America a thousand years ago to settle in Greenland.

Separately, for more than a decade, Drever has been deeply concerned about the picture dealing with the life of Christ. He planned to shoot the film in Israel where he expected to recruit his actors, except for the Romans for which he planned to use Italians. In Dreyer's "Jesus," the dialogue will be spoken in the actual languages of antiquity; i.e., the Israelites speak Hebrew; the Romans, Latin; and the Greeks, their own ancient tongue. Dreyer devised an English-language narration to make his point clear, throughout.

He hopes to add "Jesus" to his list, though financing the project seems dim, with Samuel Bronston's "King of Kings" so recent and George Stevens' "The Greatest Story Ever Told" so imminent.

FOREVER FAITHFUL FILM FANS

World Copyright Protection

By STANLEY ROTHENBERG

Peculiarities of worldwide control over exploitation of literary, dramatic and musical creations, are of special interest to creators and disseminators of international bent. National concern over recent news items reporting the influx to the United States of Taiwan-printed copies in English of copyrighted American bestsellers is certainly one of the proofs thereof.

For an American to obtain maximum copyright protection throughout the world (not including Russia and certain other countries and not extending to others because of their overly-burdensome conditions), it is necessary to comply with the requirements of the US. Copyright Act, the Berne Convention, the Universal Copyright Convention and the Buenos Aires Convention. Insofar as English-language books are concerned, the terms of the United States Copyright Act can be fulfilled by: (1) first publication in the United States with notice of copyright, (2) first publication abroad followed by an ad interim registration within six months and manufacture in the U.S. within five years, or (3) in the case of foreigners who are nationals of Universal Copyright Convention countries, first publication anywhere with the appropriate notice of copyright.

The conditions of the Universal Copyright Convention (of which the U.S. is an original member) are duly observed if the first (and subsequent) publication bears the appropriate copyright notice, namely, "Copyright 1963 David Joshua" which also serves as a United States copyright notice. By adding the words, "All rights reserved," we insure obtaining rights under the Buenos Aires Convention, to which the United States and most of the Latin American republics adhere. Thus, a single publication may suffice to enable an American to obtain copyright under the U.S. Copyright Act, the Universal Copyright Convention and the Buenos Aires Convention.

The present membership of the two conventions is as follows:

UNIVERSAL COPYRIGHT CONVENTION

Andorra	Ghana	Monaco
Argentina	Greece	Nicaragua
Austria	Haiti	Nigeria
Belgium	Holy See	Norway
Brazil	Iceland	Pakistan
Cambodia	India	Panama
Canada	Ireland	Paraguay
Chile	Israel	Peru
Costa Rica	Italy	Philippines (in question)
Cuba	Japan	Portugal
Czechoslovakia	Laos	Spain
Denmark	Lebanon	Sweden
Ecuador	Liberia	Switzerland
Finland	Liechtenstein	United Kingdom
France	Luxembourg	U.S.A.
German Federal Republic	Mexico

BUENOS AIRES CONVENTION

Argentina	Dominican Republic	Nicaragua
Bolivia	Ecuador	Paraguay
Brazil	Guatemala	Peru
Chile	Haiti	United States
Colombia	Honduras	Uruguay
Costa Rica

The Berne Convention, of which the United States is not a member, presents problems because published works are protected under Berne only if first published in a Berne country. If the author is a national of a Berne country, his unpublished work has Berne copyright from its inception, but it will terminate upon first publication if it occurs outside a Berne country.

The non-Berne author does not possess copyright in his unpublished work under the Berne Convention; he obtains copyright under Berne by a first publication in a Berne country. A "first publication" includes a "simultaneous publication." Generally, the simultaneous publication for Americans consists of simply placing copies of the book on sale in a Berne country, such as Canada or Great Britain, concurrently with the real publication (i.e., editing, printing, etc.) occurring in the U.S.

The Berne countries which do not adhere to the Universal Copyright Convention (or to the Buenos Aires Convention) are as follows:

Australia	Morocco	Siam
Bulgaria	Netherlands	Syria
German Democratic Republic (East Germany)	New Zealand	Tunisia
	Philippines (UCC membership in question)	Turkey
Hungary	Poland	Union of South Africa
Indonesia	Roumania	Yugoslavia

In the case of United States copyright for foreign-language books, if the author is of foreign origin, that is, being neither a national nor a resident of the United States nor a national of a country with which we do not maintain reciprocal copyright relations, copyright may be obtained by publication anywhere so long as the required notice of copyright is utilized. In order to obtain copyright if the author is not of foreign origin, the first publication of the work must take place in the United States (with the copyright notice).

To illustrate the foregoing distinction, consider an English and an American novelist working side-by-side in French on the Left Bank. Each publishes his work in French, in Paris, with the appropriate copyright notice. The Englishman obtains United States copyright. The American forever forfeits his right to obtain protection under United States law.

If, however, the American publishes in the English language, the ad interim copyright is available to him. Despite the need to encourage lingual versatility and in the face of our dire shortage of talented translators, we maintain such an illogical anachronism in our law.

Even the ad interim copyright situation is not a healthy one. Failure to republish an edition within five years after the first publication abroad, which new edition must be printed and bound in the United States, will result in the book falling into the United States public domain.

Music publishing, motion pictures and other copyright industries, are not subject to similar tariff-type restrictions so that the need for ad interim registration, republication in the United States and U.S. manufacture of foreign-language works by Americans, is not present in the case of copyrightable works which are not books or periodicals. Thus, anyone entitled to U.S. copyright may manufacture his music, motion pictures, works of art, etc., anywhere in the world without the financial, artistic and other practical problems with which publishers and authors of books, periodicals and contributions to periodicals are confronted.

The copyright law desperately needs revision. Duty, as well as self-interest, must compel each member of the community of international entertainment and communication to lend his support to the current general revision program of the Register of Copyrights.

FILM SOCIETIES TRULY LOVE PIX

By JAMES L. LIMBACHER
(President, American Federation of Film Societies)

Dearborn, Mich.

There has been an enormous flow of prose about the film industry's "lost audience" since the advent of television.

But the lost audience—composed of those people of all ages who are really interested in the motion picture as a medium of artistic expression as well as just entertainment—has not, as many filmmakers seem to think, retreated to its living room under the spell of the "idiot box." Rather, it has done something which Hollywood finds difficult to fathom. Much of the lost audience has formed and presently attends local film societies.

Societies meet in a public library, at a college, a local theatre on an "off" night, an art or historical museum, in churches and synagogues, community halls or private homes. The place is secondary. The significant fact is that people all over the United States are seeing and enjoying motion pictures in new ways and in new surroundings.

Just what is a film society and why are they mushrooming everywhere? Certainly it is more than just an organized group of film fans who get together to look at films. It is dedicated to not only viewing the film, but to discussing, studying and appreciating the art of the film as well.

The commercial distributors may ask, "Who needs them?" or some put it this way: "There's enough competition these days without film societies taking away more of our business." What d'stributors fail to grasp is that film societies are their business. A film society creates dedicated and serious moviegoers whose enjoyment and appreciation of films is enhanced and honed to a fine edge by being exposed to the finest films of the past as well as the present.

Such enthusiasts are the intelligent movie audience of today. It is they who support the good Hollywood films, the offbeat "new wave" from Europe and the unusual short films which ordinarily "die" in conventional theatres.

Deeply Devoted

We who are directly involved in the film society movement through the American Federation of Film Societies know this fiercely loyal segment of the filmgoing audience intimately. We work with them on national, regional and local levels and are constantly amazed at the catholicity of their tastes and the depth of their love of good movies.

This love manifests itself in many forms of film societies. These groups may have their idiosyncracies, their varied tastes, their snobberies, their lunatic fringe—but get them all together and their common interest in films is a joy to behold.

Various Enthusiasms

Some societies show only film classics from foreign countries and off-beat American films; others concentrate on Hollywood films of the 1930's; still others wouldn't think of showing a sound film, but prefer to view films from the "golden age" of silence.

Many groups study various phases of the film. One may have a series devoted to the western, the screwball comedy or the social problem film. Others may pinpoint a series of films made by Greta Garbo or trace the historical significance of the films of Alfred Hitchcock.

But although program content may vary, the interest and enthusiasm does not. The dyed-in-the-wool film society member finds the stimulus of his viewing group an incentive to go to the movies more often (even though he becomes more selective) and many times he finds that movies are truly "better than ever."

Because Hollywood has seldom catered to the more spe-

(Continued on page 52)

Berlin Film Festival Chief's Formula For Restoring Glamor to Pic Fetes: Adequate Coin, Top Pix, Lotsa Stars

By HANS HOEHN

Berlin.

There is talk that the film festivals are getting duller and duller. The 1963 Berlin Film Festival was "particularly dull" in the eyes of quite a few reporters. What can be done? Is the star cult gone? What about the starlets who once "enriched" the picture fetes? VARIETY's local rep, this writer, talked with Dr. Alfred Bauer, the chief of the annual Berlin Film Festival, on this subject.

Bauer declared, "I think that a film festival must have four essentials to be a success," he said. And he named them:

1. Adequate festival budget
2. Quality films to show
3. Stars of global status
4. Good festival staff

It is necessary to meet both the commercial interest and the artistic emphasis. Otherwise there is critical sniping, downgrading, dismissal by wisecrack.

Bauer argues the 1963 fest presented relatively meritorious features. Many agreed, considering Berlin's average superior to Cannes's average for 1963. But admittedly too few screen personalities showed up here. This induced a certain boredom in the "boulevard", or gossip-loving, press who were prominent in spreading the whisper of "dullness".

Bauer doubts that the presence of a galaxy of stars is more vital than the quality of the product shown, though stars have an immediacy of impact, on the reasoning that people best love the personal angles.

At the present time it has to be conceded that stars are seldom beholden to a given studio or releases, as used to be true. Certainly in Hollywood, and pretty much also in Europe, the established star consults his or her own convenience or preference. The big salaried, demand players see no reason to inconvenience themselves journeying to festivals, unless they happen to be financially interested in an upcoming film which hopes to cop a festival prize.

Abstract logic of the stars' debt to the industry over-all run into the shoulder shrug. There are no Luis B. Mayers around nowadays Louis B. Mayers around nowadays to snap the whip to compel personal appearances.

Bauer commented, "I think film festivals shouldn't concentrate on art alone. The good commercial film should have a legitimate place. This type of film should not be condemned. For the sake of the industry, it should participate in festivals. Perhaps special selective committee should split the entries into two categories of films: One for the art-slanted films, the other one for the commercial films."

"We just have to be realistic," Bauer continued. "The general public is also interested in knowing and watching what's shown at festivals, no matter which one. There's no denying the fact that the general public has little, if any, interest in avantgarde films. Actually the public is often shocked at what they see on festival screens. It should be a must to give also the 'normal' film an authentic right to participate in festivals. I say this despite the fact that I am ardent film lover and a lover of film art."

Bauer expresses a special dislike for war films. "I think that war films should be kept out of festivals. And, of course, no politics and no political films at festivals. That's a matter of course. With regard to war films, I would even skip such a good film as 'Bridge on The River Kwai' if there's another good non-war picture available."

Then this: No denying that there is too much sadism, too much violence, too much depression in features unreeled at festivals. He deplored "too much perversion". He said, "We had a Greek film at our last festival. This film has three scenes which showed sexual intercourse in more or less an unbelievably open form. We asked the director to cut the three scenes. He did, after all. It helped the film. Otherwise it would have been a truly pornographic film. But I ask: Why do they do such type of films? And the trouble is that the critics—or at least many critics—raise hell when they learn that a film was cut. They ride attacks against such 'censorships' . . ."

Int'l Fest Of Theatre Schools

By SAUL COLIN
(Director, Senior Dramatic Workshop at Carnegie Hall)

With the advent of the Stanislavsky teachings—the so-called "method" has become prevalent in many of the theatre schools throughout the world and has established Lee Strasberg as the "uncrowned pope" of the new trend in the U.S.A. But the others—method or non-method teachers—have all very individual approaches, who like any famed maestro give different readings to the same symphony.

Nevertheless in music, or dance, or art, in training as well as in performing, there are certain established common denominators. In the training of an actor there is not yet such a "common denominator" because the young alphabet of the Stanislavisky system is barely 30 years old, while music for instance has been "written" for many centuries. In art the "laws" have been set down before the Italian Renaissance, and in dance we have for instance the Petipa choreographic coordinations for nearly a century.

If the leaders of the important clave, exchange views and establish the common ground on which training will be uniformized, but not imitated, the performing results would be enhanced by this.

The World's Fair, directly, as well as several of the sumptious pavillions will act as hosts to the Paris Conservatoire, England's Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, Berlin's Max Reinhardt School, Russia's Moscow Art Theatre School; to the Helsinki, Tokyo, Rome, Madrid, etc. existing Theatre Schools. Of course, the Actor's Studio, the Lincoln Center and other American organizations will help to organize and participate effectively.

UNESCO will coordinate, and the State Dept. Cultural Division will have an overall say and a sort of United Nations of Theatre Schools will be born.

In June or July 1964 a three- or four-week International Congress & Festival of Theatre Schools will become a reality.

King Okays Takeover Glasgow Playhouse Co.

Glasgow.

Sir Alexander King, cinemagnate, has given the nod to a takeover bid for his company, which controls the important La Scala and Embassy cinemas here.

After huddles with Scottish and European Finance Ltd., he sent a letter to shareholders advising them to accept a compromise offer. New offer is worth between $945,000 and $1,110,000, depending on the price of the Embassy. Sir Alexander stressed the takeover would not mean the immediate closure of either the Embassy or La Scala.

How to Tie Up With a Rogue

By FRANK SCULLY

Announcement of a legal publication of the life and desultory loves of Frank Harris, which circulated among bookleggers for 40 years in a four-volume set that cost at least $40, brings up the inquiry as to how the likes of me would ever get into a literary partnership with the likes of him.

Sir Francis Scully

The answer is simplicity itself. I was trying to help two people and I had to help him on the way to helping them. In the middle years of my life I seemed to have become an agent, a sort of catalytic agent, not a 10 percenter. It never occurred to me that helping people had such a value that if you helped 10 people you could make as much money as one of them did if you acted as their agent, and took your commissions.

On this occasion I speak of I was convalescing from one of the many operations which had blighted my life. I had had some surgery in the Queen Victoria Hospital in Nice, France, and had repaired to a French pension where I had a lovely room with a balcony which afforded a small view of the Mediterranean sea.

John Maxwell, at that time president of British International Pictures, a company I had defamed by calling them British Interurban Pictures, and A. E. Dupont, a great German director who had directed "Variety," were on a holiday at Monte Carlo, and on learning of my plight asked how I would like a visit from them. Not to be outdone, I invited them for luncheon and it was served under a big yellow umbrella on the balcony where I was in residence at the time.

During the luncheon we got to talking about the difficulty of their breaking into the foreign market with the kind of pictures they were making at the time. I suggested that they try some themes which would not get them automatically rebuffed and when they wanted to know what kind of themes I said, "Well something like the loves of Shakespeare."

I went on to tell how there were certain records which showed he had been engaged to a girl in Stratford and apparently a few days later must have been hurried into a gunshot wedding with another girl named Ann Hathaway, who was thataway. Six months later their first child was born and Shakespeare, a kid of 18, was already starting life with two strikes on him.

His migration to London and subsequent falling in love with Lady Mary Fitton would just about make the picture, I thought. They wondered where they could get such material and I told them, "Why Frank Harris has a play called 'The Loves of Shakespeare'."

That wasn't the exact title, but I was already trying to protect an author whose own career had seemed to make him a pirate of letters and was generally regarded as without scruples.

They asked if I could possibly negotiate for them to get the play and I said, "Sure."

Thus I walked myself into having to meet the old roue who at that time lived in what he described as poverty, but which I thought was splendor, at Cimiez, above Nice.

Nellie Harris

When I was well enough I journeyed up to his place and was met by Nellie Harris, once a beautiful redhead who had the delicate air of one who walked on eggs and held a chiffon handkerchief to her nostrils lest she breathe air instead of perfume.

Harris at the time was about 73, described by those who couldn't have liked him very much as dressed like a racetrack tout. When he heard I had come to help him sell something he was cordiality at its warmest. His voice which could have filled the Metropolitan, was still unimpaired but obviously he was losing a memory which had been once the talk of London.

I got him $1,000 on an option for "Shakespeare and His Love," which was the actual title of the slender play. It had precious little on which to build a movie of medieval romance, being composed completely of lines taken from Shakespeare's plays, a nice literary mosaic but, like most mosaics, rather static.

From this moment on Harris hung on to me as if I were a member of the House of Morgan. I was invited to lunch with him almost daily and he served beautiful luncheons, or a least Nellie did. Almost immediately after luncheon he fell asleep and about two hours later was raring to take a taxi ride around the hills of Nice. He didn't smoke, but he drank plenty, handled it well, and siphoned out the contents of his stomach every morning about 1 a.m. Thus he could start the next day clean.

He forced on me his "Life and Loves" and I enjoyed reading the parts which apparently everybody else had skipped, because the sex sections seemed to me pretty crude and, if true, pretty sad. But there were parts of his life which I found fascinating.

Even today, after 30 years, I could sit down and write 25,000 words of that life without having to look up a note. I wondered if we couldn't rescue from this combination of bilge and high adventure a book about his days as a cowboy in the southwest.

He leaped at the idea and I worked out a thing called "My Reminiscences as a Cowboy." I took three years of his life in the southwest and telescoped them into one year. One herd was partly lost to Indians. Another herd was partly enriched by theft from Mexican ranches and a third herd was burned in the Chicago fire.

I telescoped these adventures to have the herd stolen from Mexico, driven to Chicago and there burned up in the fire. This made a nice moral tale and the book went quite well.

I didn't know how to write a contract so I asked well-known writers how to do it and was told that first of all I must have a time clause. I put one in for five years and thus after five years bilked myself and my heirs out of any returns on the Cowboy contribution to western culture. It was subsequently made into a picture, starring Glenn Ford and Jack Lemmon, and grossed $8,000,000. This convinced me that the first thing writers should learn how to write is a contract.

After this success I suffered further physical reverses and ended more dead than alive with the amputation of my right leg six inches below the hip socket.

During the long convalescence from this catastrophe, Harris kept visiting and hoping I could well enough to put life into some more of his old labors. Out of these conversations came the Bernard Shaw biography which was published simultaneously in New York by Simon & Schuster and in London by Victor Gollancz. It sold 21,000 copies the first day in London and was a Book of the Month choice in New York.

In the final manuscript I had written 98% and Harris 2%. Shaw came in and cut back my part by adding 22% of his own prose, still leaving me 76%, or enough to get credit as the author under current screen writer rules. I never did get this but I dedicated the book to myself. Altogether I netted $1,400 out of this one.

While I was working on the final proofs in the American Hospital in Paris, Harris died in Nice. His widow, overwhelmed with a sense of lost honor, hoped I would do everything to deny I had anything to do with the writing of the book. In time she pursued me all the way to London on this mission, but for once in my life I refused to play the role of a chump.

In the light of the flood of sex trash which has all but swamped the American mind in the days since Harris was an undercover author in the field, I am curious to see how the republication of his life and loves will go. The old volumes, which were printed in Germany, three of them in hard cover and the fourth a shocking pink paperback, must be a collector's item by now. I don't have them. They were lifted from my shelves long ago and have never been missed.

I remember that one of the unresolved feuds between Shaw and Harris was that Shaw told Harris Mrs. Shaw had burned the books. "If my wife had burned any of your books," Harris said, "I wouldn't have told you."

Another of his disappointments was that he made a deal with a Chicago vendor to pay him $50,000 for 10,000 copies if Harris inserted some nude photographs. As the whole procedure became illegal the vendor pocketed the profits and never sent Harris a dime.

What I remember of his non-amorous adventures in Ireland, America, Germany, London, Africa and France are well worth republishing. They were the best parts of a scholarly voyageur.

All that remained of the oversexed character when I first met him was his bottom-pinching. By then it had become a reflex action and women were not particularly shocked. Most of them had shopped in the Galleria of Milan where this sort of thing is considered a reflection on your womanhood if you're not pinched.

Harris told me he regretted having published his "Life and Loves" during his lifetime. I can't see much of a reading public of his boudoir bouts the second time around, but Grove thinks 1,000 pages of the stuff, all in one volume, will be right up there with "Lady Chatterly's Lover," "The Tropics of Cancer and Capricorn," the "Diary of Fanny Hills," and "Memoirs of a Woman of Pleasure" (by Christine Keeler?) and is charging $12.50 a vol.

D. H. Lawrence, Henry Miller, Ernest Hemingway and such lusty stallions I fear have left Harris standing like a tired old gelding at the starting gate. Still, being what taste is these days, you never can tell.

Harris loved Literature with a capital L. Too bad he loved lust the same way.

MIRACLES ON MARS

[January 1, 1970]

By ARTHUR L. MAYER

One of the astronauts who participated in the sensational flight to Mars happens fortunately to be a movie buff. While his confreres were doing research on local potent alcoholic beverages and the peculiarly advantageous feminine anatomy, he spent all his time investigating motion pictures. Some of the industry practices are so strikingly at variance from terrestrial procedures that they will surely be of interest to VARIETY readers:

1) Every producing-distributing company is required by law to operate theatres in key locations. These theatres are authorized to play only their own pictures and those of affliated independents and not those of competitors. In this fashion there is assured an adequate supply of pictures to keep all theatres in operation as well as a steady flow of product calculated to satisfy even Martian Eddie Hyman.

2) Censorship by states or municipalities is unknown. On the other hand, the industry through its national organization, the Mars Movie Meshpocha, is well aware that censorship can only permanently be prevented by the exercise of responsibility and self-control. Producers, distributors, exhibitors and talent Guilds, all of whom are members of the association, cooperate to see that no pictures are made available to children which have been classified as suitable for adults only by a committee of outstanding educators, clergymen and scientists.

3) The association also limits the amount of flat remuneration that can be paid to any actor, director or author. All creative personnel, however, share in a percentage of the profits and under the beneficent Martian system at least four pictures out of five show a profit. Liberal pensions are also set aside annually for all picturemakers after their productive years are over.

4) For every picture shot in foreign countries every producing-distributing company must produce at least four pictures in its home studio. (This requirement was put through by the Martian equivalent of Dick Walsh, who was as a consequence elected president of his union for life.)

5) All pictures must be sold in blocks so that along with major boxoffice attractions some experimental pictures with new themes, new performers and new directors will be produced and shown by exhibitors.

6) Every union must admit annually and every company must employ a limited number of talented young people who have taken required courses in picture production, distribution and promotion.

In Quiet Desperation

By JACK DOUGLAS

This morning while I was getting ready for bed, I suddenly started thinking of the old days on Staten Island where I was born. I started to wonder whatever happened to those people—you know—my mother and father. I haven't seen them around for a long time. Not that it really matters. They never got along, anyway. Mother was a women and Dad was a man. Those things never work out.

Tully Doykes was our next door neighbor on Staten Island. He was arrested for operating a froggery in his basement. Our neighborhood wasn't zoned for froggeries. It was zoned for rabbitries and chickitries and turkitries and chinchillatries, but because of the necessary dampness, froggeries were out.

During his trial, Tully was represented by Jerry Giesler, Clarence Darrow and Samuel Liebowitz, who helped him get off with a $3 fine, but through some ironic twist of fate, Jerry, Clarence, and Sam were sentenced to 20 years each.

After the ordeal of the courtroom, Tully heaved a sigh of relief, then took the train to Boston and murdered his wife because during his trial, he'd heard rumors of his wife messing around with Titus Fenn, who at that time was an apprentice village idiot (he had three years to go until he got his charter).

It's very hard to keep a secret in Boston, and pretty soon Tully was again on trial—this time for murder.

The jury, consisting of three men, eight women and a talking dog (in New England everyone is given a chance to have his say) acquitted Tully on the grounds of justifiable whimsy (which is an old New England law that says if you knocked off your wife without prejudice aforethought, you may be excused because what else is there to do on a Sunday afternoon in Boston?).

'BLOOD ON MY PENCIL BOX'

I was very much in the dark about this universal question, love. Until recently I thought that a courtesan was a shot you got for arthritis. Honest to garde, I did. Incidentally, the title of this column has nothing to do with the content. It just happens that at the age of three I was sent to a progressive kindergarten where the children were allowed to do anything they wished so that they would never in later life feel that they had been repressed I killed my teacher with my pencil box, which was ironic—I mean even having a pencil box because I hadn't yet learned to write. Only kill. I tell all about this in my latest literary effort, "The Golden Book of Bus Accidents."

Victor Hugo said: "Life is a flower of which love is the honey" which makes a helluva lot of sense, if you don't think about it.

Of lust, the poet Milton (I don't know whether that was is first or his last name) said: "Capricious, wanton, bold and brutal lust is meanly selfish; when resisted, cruel; and, like the blast of pestilential winds, taints the sweet bloom of nature's fairest forms," and with this example of his genius, even if you don't like his philosophy, you've got to admire his punctuation.

India was first contacted by the British in the year 1599, when the East India Co. established a trading post at Calcutta.

Love in India includes the practice of suttee, which is the custom where the wife tosses herself on the burning ghat (a fire) alongside the body of her deceased husband, thus creating a plethora of orphans' picnics.

Love in England is underplayed. Everything is done by the Post. Not very throlling but it does give one more time for gardening.

Love in Sicily is controlled mostly by vendettas. Whoever's left gets married.

Love is really about the same all over the world, or as the social director on a sinking cruise ship once said: "Women and children first, and thank heavens I had the good sense to bring along this evening gown."

'HAPPINESS IS A THING CALLED HASHEESH'

"Hasheesh is a drug made from the leaves and stalks of Indian hemp, chewed or smoked in the Orient for its intoxicating and narcotic effects."

So much for Words To Live By.

This morning while I was having my ears pierced (to take some of the weight off my lobes), I started to think about a slogan for Verve Vodka. This was tough, because Verve Vodka was the most un-popular vodka in the country. And for a very good reason. Somebody had once found a flea in a Verve Vodka martini! The bartender had tried to pass it off as an olive with legs, but the customer wouldn't buy it.

Not only had the flea episode given a tremendous boost to the unpopularity of Verve Vodka, but Harvard (a college) had been experimenting with it (presumably in the laboratory) came to the conclusion that Verve had a tendency to loosen your teeth. Verve brought suit against Harvard and finally got it to admit the Verve did not cause rickets, fungus or pregnancy in the male. This didn't help Verve's cause very much, but it got Bobby Baker off the front page for a couple of days.

So this was my problem. How to make Verve Vodka as popular as mother's milk or Moxie. It was too much for me. I gave up and went to a drive-in movie (an excellent way to kill a morning).

While I think of it, don't send any more money to the Navajos. They're not buying sheep at all. They're buying arms. Last week we lost three Greyhound buses in Arizona and two in Utah. The poor passengers thought it was a rest stop until they all wound up looking like Yul Brynner.

Let's stamp out these Indian uprisings once and for all! Send your check to the "America For The Americans, Fund," Box 802, Tijuana, Mexico. (Not a penny deducted for expenses).

there's "PRIZE" MONEY for everyone!

Opening Xmas day, "THE PRIZE" has racked up these sensational 5-day grosses!

Atlanta, Grand . . . . .
$14,289

Austin, Cinema . . . . .
$8,800

Birmingham, Ritz . . . .
$6,075

Charlotte, Plaza . . . .
$4,088

Detroit, Adams . . . .
$14,739

Indianapolis, Palace . . .
$7,330

Kansas City, Roxy . . . .
$11,216

L.A., Beverly-Warner . . .
$21,342

Memphis, State . . . . .
$5,535

Minneapolis, World . . .
$6,697

Philadelphia, Arcadia . .
$15,651

Raleigh, Village . . . . .
$5,530

San Antonio, Woodlawn .
$7,600

Wash., D.C., Embassy . .
$10,094

M·G·M IS ON THE MOVE!

"Sunday in New York"

The movie with so much exposure* it's almost indecent.

*Advertising exposure, that is!

LOOK · SAT. EVE. POST · McCALL'S · REDBOOK · COSMOPOLITAN · GLAMOUR
MADEMOISELLE · MODERN SCREEN · SCREEN STORIES · PHOTOPLAY

A bold, blushing, outrageously funny new movie!

Dedicated to the proposition that every girl gets ...sooner or later!

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer presents A Seven Arts Production

"Sunday in New York"

STARRING CLIFF Robertson * JANE Fonda * ROD Taylor

CO STARRING ROBERT Culp * JO Morrow * JIM Backus

MUSIC BY PETER NERO SCREENPLAY BY NORMAN KRASNA PRODUCED BY EVERETT FREEMAN DIRECTED BY PETER TEWKSBURY

IN METROCOLOR

SEE IT SOON AT YOUR FAVORITE MOTION PICTURE THEATRE

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Seven Arts are dedicated to making this one the big one for February.

And we're kicking it off with an ad campaign that will reach a total readership equivalent to 1 out of every 2 Americans.

Here's where our ad is running and when it hits the newsstands:

MODERN SCREEN, JAN. 2
SCREEN STORIES, JAN 2
PHOTOPLAY, JAN. 8
COSMOPOLITAN, JAN. 20
GLAMOUR, JAN. 20
REDBOOK, JAN. 21
McCALL'S, JAN. 23
LOOK, JAN. 28
MADEMOISELLE, JAN. 29
SAT. EVE. POST, FEB. 4

It all adds up to over 100,000,000 readers.

M·G·M IS ON THE MOVE!

UNPRECEDENTED
UNBEATABLE FOR UNPARALLELED
UNSURPASSABLE UNFORGETTABLE

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER presents
A LAWRENCE WEINGARTEN Production

THE UNSINKABLE

Starring DEBBIE REYNOLDS

Co-starring ED BEGLEY · JACK KRUSCHEN · HERMIONE BADDELEY

GET SET FOR A RED HOT 4th OF JULY WITH THE BIGGEST, ENTERTAINMENT!

THE 4th OF JULY!
vitality, beauty, color!
story, stars, scope!
songs, music, dances!

It'll be 'man overboard!'
—women and children, too
—for the bubbliest movie of the summer season.
Debbie Reynolds is
'Molly' to the life—
irrepressible,
irresistible.
Harve Presnell
reaches stardom
with a splash.
And the whole cast joins in the fun with bounce and vitality.
All this plus a gold-mine of wonderful songs by Meredith 'Music Man' Willson.

MOLLY BROWN

HARVE PRESNELL

Based on the Musical Play "THE UNSINKABLE MOLLY BROWN"
Music and Lyrics by MEREDITH WILLSON
Book by RICHARD MORRIS

Screen Play by · HELEN DEUTSCH · Directed by CHARLES WALTERS · Associate Producer ROGER EDENS · IN PANAVISION® AND METROCOLOR

BOUNCIEST ATTRACTION OF THE YEAR! M-G-M IS ON THE MOVE!

The world will never be the same come February*

*That's when "A Global Affair" goes into release

Recipe for Success

By GEORGE MARTON

Paris.

From the Carpathians to the shores of the Pacific lie the vast stretches of our Occidental world. The common culture and civilization of this world, from Artistotle to Henry James and from Phidias to Renoir, or from Plautus to Goethe, are well established. One flies from New York to London in less than seven hours and from Paris to Frankfurt in one hour and discovers about the same number of hamburger havens on the Champs-Elysees as on 7th Avenue.

As the theatre is an integral part of this Western culture, it must be obvious that the common foundation of our daily mental intake will necessarily also homogenize with the reaction of the public in London, New York, Paris and Berlin. But like most truisms this one is not altogether true, especially today. The spectacular flops on Broadway of such very successful European plays as, for instance, Roussin's "Nina", Frisch's "Andorra" or Marcel Achard's "Patate" may or may not be due to some special reasons. What is less clear is the reason for the enormous success of some of those plays which failed in their country of origin.

"Irma La Douce, a typical French, spicy and fresh musical, is a much bigger hit in America than it ever was in Paris. Last season's biggest success in Paris was Norman Krasna's "Sunday in New York" which failed to make the grade on Broadway, and the first real hit of the current Paris season is the English play, "Good Night, Mrs. Puffin," by Lovegrove, which is grossing about $14,000 a week and which enjoyed only a moderate success in London. Marc Camoletti's "Boeing-Boeing," a nice but far from enormous success in Paris, is in its third year in London. "The Miracle Worker," a real success in New York, had a moderate run in Paris and is a total flop in Berlin. "Mary, Mary," one of the charming and scintillating comedies of our time, is, as everybody knows, a sensationally successful play in New York and a somewhat lesser hit in London. Here in Paris, it received harsh words from the critics who panned it almost unanimously but it is doing nice business.

Of course, you might say that the title, "Sunday in New York," has no novelty for Broadway while "Dimanche a New York" and "Sonntag in New York," are greatly tempting to audiences in Paris and Berlin. "Rattle of a Simple Man," appeared to be a natural for Broadway, after its London success, and much less of a bet for Paris where very few Frenchmen are virgins at the age of 35. So, it flopped on Broadway and is a "sleeper" in Paris.

Cradle of 'Avante Garde'

Paris, the city of Ionesco and Beckett, is regarded as the home of the "avante garde" play. To give you an idea of how difficult it is to generalize in our profession, I will quote to you the critique by the leading drama critic of "Figaro," Jean Jacques Gauthier, of the English play, "Sergeant Musgrave's Dance," by John Arden, which opened at the Theatre de L'Athenee last October in a production which was staged and directed by Peter Brook:

"'Living Theatre' they say. Well, too bad. I am absolutely allergic to this form of life and to this kind of theatre. I will never get used to boredom. I will not become an addict of this pacific-poetic-politico-religious phraseology. I will not admire this kind of incoherence which the violence and the frenetic behavior of nightmarish characters cannot disguise. In the presence of certain plays of today—appreciated perhaps (for how long though?) by the public—I have the feeling that they were conceived under the influence of some drugs and written under the intoxication of strange fumes. It is possible that they cater to the taste of an era which seems to encourage boring, sinister, lugubrious shows without loving them to the point of filling some special theatres.

"For me, the theatre will remain a festive ceremony, a thing of beauty, a noble enterprise, a means of relaxation, an entertainment, a consecration and a music, a joy. I cannot take pleasure nor feel happy at a show which does not awaken in me the slightest emotion. I am looking for the story, I am looking for characters. The story does not exist, and the characters are puppets, they are theories. I am looking for harmony. What I find is ugliness and horror. I am trying to find peace and what I find is artificial tension. I search for the world, for the universe, for a milieu. I discover nothing but extremes which do not match. And if they tell me that this is 'poetry' I must answer that I don't recognize it. I find poetry in Shakespeare, Racine, Claudel. Why is it that Mr. John Arden's poetry escapes me completely?"

Do not try to find a common denominator for the reasons of success or failure. The usual excuses such as good or bad productions, or good or bad adaptations are not good enough. Although these elements may have something to do with the fate of plays in various countries, they do not constitute the final answer or solution. This being "show business" and not the steel or automobile business, it will always be unpredictable and heterogenous. Let's keep it that way. The great majority of people may prefer to eat hamburgers wherever they go, but hurrah for the minority which still likes to eat corned beef in New York, bouillabaisse in Paris and sauerbraten in Berlin.

Hit plays are very expensive to purchase for foreign consumption, and, as you see, a local success is no insurance for successful runs outside of their country of origin. My advice to play-brokers is simply this: Buy flops, adapt them well and produce them magnificently, and you are bound to make money.

But, don't get me wrong—we are always in the market for the next hit play!

A Posy To Hollywood

By VERNON DUKE

Hollywood.

The stock phrase used to be "Gone Hollywood." Now it's "Hollywood is gone." Not another of those treatises on the "Fall of Hollywood?" I can hear the reader scream. Fear not, cliche-hater; this is nothing of the kind.

I have always wondered why the bucolic village was openly blasted and secretly admired as a hellish conglomerate of Babylon, Galata and Marseilles with phony Riviera trimmings and unphony dollars by the bushel. To tell an easterner or a northern Californian, to whom anyone from "down south," or south of Santa Barbara, is an overdressed peasant, that Hollywood is not L.A., only a very small part of it, is to waste one's breath. Everything is blamed on poor Hollywood—ostentation, vulgarity, cultural deficiency, the area's unnatural growth, and, of course, the disgustingly triumphant Dodgers. In actual fact, if it's ostentation and vulgarity you're after, repair to Beverly Hills, while culture—of sorts—does flourish in Hollywood's many small "arty" playhouses and artier galleries; true, Greater L.A. is absorbing thousands of new settlers daily, but Hollywood is visibly shrinking. The Dodgers operate in Chavez Ravine and bear no Hollywoodsy charteristics.

When asked about my present whereabouts, I say "Palisades," hoping, coward that I am, to bring forth a whiff of New Jersey, instead of the unfashionable Pacific. My Pacific Palisades is flanked by sanctimonious Santa Monica and calodorous Malibu, noted for its surfers, but to the uninitiated it's still Hollywood and I'm stuck with it.

Every so often I go to Hollywood (proper is right) in search of atmosphere. There is something positively bucolic about the place. The Sunset Strip is stripped of stars and starlets. The Hollywood Hotel, where octogenarians in rockingchairs patiently awaited an autograph from a silent screen idol, not having read the obituary notice, has finally been put to rest. Gone is the Garden of Allah with its Fitzgeraldian phantoms; you can't get a game at 'The Players' or a dame at Lucey's. But the fruit and the flowers are for real, as are the fresh and sassy high-school

(Continued on page 67)

Writers Waste Their Lives Chasing That 'One, Right, Perfect Sentence'

By LAURENCE M. JANIFER

"William tired himself today, searching for an epithet for the cuckoo."

That line, from Dorothy Wordsworth's journal, provides me with a handy opening to discuss one of the most common errors I know among writers. William Wordsworth, spending the day in finding one word with which to describe a bird, sounds very much like a few writers I know, whose mothers were apparently frightened by Flaubert at an early age, and who therefore spend hours, days or even weeks looking for the "one right word," the "one right sentence," the "perfect scene," and so on and so on, world without end, amen.

Now, I am not recommending the happy, slapdash method of some other contemporaries, in which virtually any word, any sentence, any scene will do: this is otherwise known as automatic writing, and should be left to the spiritualists.

But there is a middle ground, you know. There would have to be.

Writing, after all, is communication. If you are not communicating you belong in another field of work: writing is the practice of conveying to an unknown (but, we hope, sizable number of other people the ideas, the theories, the people and places that exist in your own head. And, like all communication, it ought to be as easy as breathing.

Of course, it isn't: neither is any other form of communication. Talking, for instance: there are people who stutter, and even among the normally wordy there are those who can fascinate and those who can only, dully, endlessly, bore. The difference there comes in two packages, one of which is labelled Talent while the other is labelled Practice.

There is very little to be said about the first package. If you have it, you have it, and if you don't I know of no injections, pills or layings-on of hands to give it to you.

But there is a good deal to be said about package No. 2. You'll note that people who are good talkers are usually people who have spent a lot of time talking, and doing it to a wide variety of different people—friends, neighbors, relatives, acquaintances and even audiences. They've learned (very possibly without ever knowing it consciously) how to emphasize a sentence, how to pause, how to take command of a conversation and how (and when) to let go of that command.

There are two things they do not do. One is to rehearse their talk beforehand. They're not giving speeches: they're chatting, conversing, cutting up reputations or shooting at the moon with one theory or another. They are being spontaneous: because they know how to be, they can afford to be.

The other thing they do not do is agonize over the quality of their words, or their sentences, or their subjects. In talk, there isn't time: open your mouth and let fly, and that's about it.

The perceptive will have noticed that I have been building an analogy here. I think it's a good analogy, and I know perfectly well that it works.

The rule is: be spontaneous. Write it down. Think before you do so, consider your scene, your characters, your point. Then write, with about the same spontaneity with which you talk.

Then—at least 24 hours later—revise. Revision is meant to clean up idiot repetitions, to impress a final shape on the piece, to brush matters up and put on a nice, final gloss. It isn't meant to reshape the whole piece or to rethink it. It is impossible to think while writing. Writing alone will take up all the room.

There's your compromise.

And it can result—believe me—in some pretty good work.

For instance . . .

"Hamlet" by William, Shakespeare (writing time: three weeks). "The Messiah," an oratorio by G. F. Handel (writing time: about the same)—and if it isn't literature, I had to put it in, if only because it takes the average copyist longer than that to copy the entire score! "The Pickwick Papers" by Charles Dickens (written just as fast as the serial publisher required). Look at the record Anthony Trollope—250 words every quarter of an hour, two hours a day, seven days a week over 30 years and more. It adds up to better than 65 novels, plus an autobiography, three travel books, some volumes of short stories—oh, and a fulltime job for the Post Office for most of that time, and the editorship of a magazine for some of the rest of it. Not to mention a family . . .

"When I eats corn," the countryman says, "I eats it, I don't fiddle with it."

Let's stop the fiddling, okay?

The method I'm recommending is, in the main, the one I've used for some years. It has been varied here and there—for one thing, some pieces require more than one revision. This is a decision to be taken with great care, and always while remembering the old proverb that it takes two men to paint a picture: one to do the painting and the other to hit the first one over the head with a hammer when the painting is done. The problem of over-polishing is a little like that.

Then again, the exigencies of a working writer's life may call for a situation where you're allowed no rewrites at all.

In that case, your training for speed and accuracy is going to come in handy. The resultant piece may not be your absolute best, but it's going to be a lot better than the one-right word boys will ever believe.

I average, for instance, six novels a year. Frankly, I'd like to average four, but if I had less than that to do I think I'd go noisily nuts: three months is about the right time for a good novel.

And, of course, I'd have a little time for short pieces, like this one. I've clocked myself on it. Start to finish (including one brief hunt for a cigaret), it's taken me forty minutes. No rewrite.

The H'wood Idea of Couture

By LOUIS SOBOL

It's no state secret that my wife and I make periodic trips to Hollywood but I will let you in on a fact—my loyal travelling companion has about decided she doesn't know the first thing about the protocol of dress in the film capital. Let us consider her plight.

She was invited to a luncheon. She dug a neat little suit out of the trunk, patted her coiffure, adjusted her lip rouge and off she went blithely. She returned completely mortified. Everyone, she panted woefully, wore elaborate dresses and hats. She had guessed and dressed completely wrong.

A few afternoons later we were invited to a late afternoon cocktail brawl. The little woman spent two hours preparing herself for this one. Her dress wasn't Dior—but it was a mighty comfortable copy. Her classic little hat had feathers standing up, dripping down, taking it easy on the bias. She draped a precious little fur neck piece around her shoulders.

I really felt sorry for the girl at that party. Everyone else seemed to have gotten together just before and arranged to appear in suits or print dresses. The situation was slightly relieved, fortunately, when Cobina Wright arrived a bit late wearing a flossy lid—but she explained she had only a few seconds to spare—she was off to a dinner party.

Well, next on the agenda a few nights later came a dinner party to which we had been invited. The hostess took pains to advise it was completely informal. "Just a little get-together," she explained, "No chi chi—no fuss. Just play cards afterwards."

come over. The boys are going to slip on any old thing, dearie, and

My bride had just the dress for an occasion like this—something simple and girlish, that came a little below the knees. There was a small black hat with a suspicion of a veil to complete the outfit.

Shall I go on—divulge the melancholy details. Our first hint that this was just another case of our dedrop interpretation of the dress code hit us smack in the kisser when Dinah Shore followed us in, encased in a stunning, revealing evening gown that my wife guessed must have set her back more than $1,000. The rest is much too horrible. Every doll in that party wore something just a bit more gorgeous and expensive than the other. Dinner gowns and evening gowns—I can't tell the difference—all I know is most of them were sleeveless and cut away in front and in back. I have never been able to determine just where the line of demarcation is between the evening and dinner gown.

The trusting little woman settled down in a chair glumly and refused to leave it. "Informal, my eye," she kept muttering.

"Were you speaking to me?" asked Rouben Mamoulian.

"I was speaking to myself," said my ever loyal helpmate, scowling over at me.

Can't Win

The next party was at the Beverly Hills hotel. "Informal," purred the hostess over the phone. Well, we were a bit wise now—Saturday night, Beverly Hills Hotel—a birthday party to boot. No one had to tell us.

Out came the modest little dinner gown—taken to the Coast for just such an occasion. That afternoon my wife visited the beauty parlor. The hairdo, after she left the place — was something to frame. Not that I'm prejudiced—but really she could have stepped right out of a fashion mag's pages.

"How do I look?" she inquired hopefully.

"Baby, you're a killer," I assured her.

The party was scheduled for 7:30 sharp. By this time, we were wise also to these "Be prompt" admonitions. We arrived at 8 plus a few minutes. Everyone was already seated—hungry—impatient. "O, I'm so glad you finally came," said the hostess, sweetly. "We were so worried something had happened. All right folks, now we can serve."

Of course, that made us feel just wonderful—like congratulating a bride's parents only to learn she had been jilted at the church. We sat down at our designated places quickly. We tackled the hors d'oeuvres. Then we looked up and around—as if at a signal.

Well, you've guessed it. It was the darndest, most informal party in all Hollywood. Some of the gals wore hats — some didn't. Some wore suits, some wore short street dresses. No evening gowns. No dinner dresses. The hostess had said "informal"—and by the living daylight it was informal.

Everyone later remarked encouragingly what a nice dress Mrs. S. had on. So did I, on the way home. But my wife never uttered a sound. Just sat there in the car, looking stonily ahead.

The following night we were invited to another party. "Formal" was the word.

We stayed home and played gin rummy.

Spoon-Feeding That Racial Satire; Hammers Nurse 'Gone Are the Days'; So Far Washington Hard to Get

By EDDIE KALISH

"Gone Are the Days," the film version of Ossie Davis Broadway satire on the racial situation in the south, "Purlie Victorious," is still being booked around the country and may open in New York where the distributor is based, was discovered.

Pic was sold as being "back to God" and around the 22 years of Bible-selling. When Hammers first screened it, they were said to be aghast at the [illegible] and the [illegible] to [illegible] "Purlie" parodies. In [illegible] the picture was sold as a [illegible] to the Negro audience, with [illegible] as the selling point. Hammers [illegible] $225,000 for the film, also picked up the distrib. rights.

After the New York experience, the Hammers [illegible] screened this pic as to the "no" of the film especially considering the fact that it still had no distributor. The pic cost $225,000 and it is estimated that rentals of $400,000 will be needed for the project to break even. That doesn't sound like much but it represents a real problem all the same to the Hammers. They figure that the lack of a distrib is the biggest factor since a picture like "Raisin in the Sun," which Columbia handled, managed to gross $1,250,000 although it needed $2,600,000 to break even. Cost $1,240,000.

"Days" recently played at the Charles Theatre, Baltimore, and did fair biz. Last Wednesday it opened at the Regent Theatre in that city, marking the first time the picture has played a Negro situation. The Negro press has been strongly behind the opening and results are expected to be solid. On Jan. 16, "Days" will open at the Gallo Theatre, New Orleans, a Negro house. On the same day it will open in Houston, day-dating in an ofay and Negro location. On Dec. 26 it began a run at the Town Art House, a white theatre in Norfolk. The Hammers have been handling all the booking themselves.

Big hopes, however, are currently being pinned on Chicago where the film opens Jan. 24 at the Surf Theatre. It will also open there at the Maryland Theatre, a Balaban & Katz house which is supposedly the biggest Negro-audience situation in the country, the city having a Negro population of around 1,000,000. After Chicago, B&K will play the pic in Evanston, Ill., which has Northwestern University to draw from. For the Chicago dates, Davis and his actress-wife Ruby Dee, they both star in the play, will be there Jan. 10 to do [illegible] newspaper promo work. [illegible] have been done lots of [illegible] work locally and [illegible] much in demand [illegible] appearances and [illegible] all of this could be a factor.

The Hammers are still eyeing the Washington, D.C. market but all exhibs there turned the film down so far. They are planning a screening for local mgrs by the Variety Motion Picture Assn. of Washington in the hope of stirring up some interest and also to get Washington support for the pic [illegible] showing abroad, if that ever comes to pass. There are some problems connected with overseas distribution such as Italy's dubbing requirement. It is felt that the pic here can't really be dubbed and come off properly whereas with titles it could possibly work. There are no definite plans for overseas as yet, anyway.

It all adds up to an intricate problem as there continues to be resistance displayed to the booking of the picture and by audiences once the film is playing. The problems of booking without a distributor are themselves complex. In the end, all the Hammers want to do is get their money back for the film but even that much seems in jeopardy as theatremen and audiences alike don't seem to dig satire about a problem so glaringly unfunny.

N.Y. ASSISTANTS MOVE INTO DIRECTORS GUILD

Hollywood.

Merger of Assistant Directors local 161 in N.Y. with Directors Guild of America has been okayed by membership of latter, after having previously been approved by the International Alliance and membership of local 161.

Although DGA bylaws provide a 60-day period for voting on such proposals, the necessary majority was attained in an unprecedented three weeks from the date of submission.

Milton Felsen, proxy-biz manager of local 161, and his staff will move to DGA's N.Y. hq immediately. Script clerks, now a part of 161, will remain with the IA for the present, and will be serviced by Felsen.

'Cleopatra' Subsid Quietly Dissolves

Albany.

Cleopatra Enterprises, Inc. formed several years ago by 20th-Fox in order to cash in on "Cleopatra" merchandising, has quietly gone out of business without ever having been active, according to dissolution papers filed in Albany.

20th sources say their merchandising efforts were stymied by the legal difficulties surrounding their attempt to trademark the "Cleo" name, which, of course, has been in the public domain for something over 2,000 years.

Negotiations for the use of star Elizabeth Taylor's face and name in conjunction with the projected "Cleo" merchandising of, among other things, cosmetics, jewelry, clothes, etc., also were never successfully concluded.

SOME SALOONS VERY UNLITERARY

Despite What You Keep Reading

By PETER LIND HAYES

I'm a stubborn man and not the type of man that will take seven rejection slips lying down. I have received seven rejection slips from the New Yorker Magazine, but each week I find myself diligently reading every word they print. The reason for my diligence is quite obvious. I'm trying to absorb the "style," trying to find out what sort of "stuff" they really want.

I've read several stories and each of these stories takes place in a bar. New Yorker authors apparently listen very well and then competently report what they hear in a saloon. I decided to try his approach.

I drove to New York one night last week and parked my car on 3d Ave. and 47th St. I had assumed that New Yorker authors' bars are somewhere in the vicinity. Casually I strolled downtown, stopping now and then to "audition" a number of small joints until I came to a place I had heard of from another New Yorker author who overhears things in bars. I decided to "find my story" here. I propped myself against the bar and ordered a "bite of Scotch." The bartender smiled knowingly I thought, and then proceeded to tell me about the original Thurber drawings on the wall over the booths. My heart beat a little faster . . . the original Thurber drawings! This was a sign. I would surely find a story here that would make the New Yorker.

I had another "bite of Scotch and sat waiting for somebody to start talking. On my left, two stools away, sat a big, bristling marine. "This may be it," I mused. I nodded in his direction and he mumbled something I didn't quite catch. I leaned forward and said, "Beg pardon?" He leaned forward and said, "I said, who in the hell are you looking at?" I was offended by his attitude and frightened by his face so I moved to the other end of the bar and had another "bite of Scotch.

Presently a rather attractive middle-aged woman in a cloth coat sat next to me. "Hasn't it been a nice day?" I asked. "Uh-huh" she replied. "Are you a New Yorker?" I inquired. "Nah-uh," she answered. I was about to track her further when suddenly she stood up and said, "Look Doc, my husband's the relief bartender here; he gets off in five minutes and I stopped by to walk him home. Now why don't you be a nice guy and not start no beefs."

I apologized and ordered another "bite" of Scotch.

By this time I was well "bitten" by the Scotch and was beginning to feel a little sick. I paid my bill and gulped down that last drink. I barely made 3rd Ave. The walk to the car steadied me a little but I became unsteady again when I saw the $15 parking ticket attached to the windshield wiper.

On the way back to New Rochelle I sideswiped a stone embankment on Bruckner Blvd. and caved in both fenders on the left side of my car. The bill for repairs came to $78 and that with the $15 parking ticket comes to $93 which is exactly what I would like to be paid for this story. New Yorker writers have strong stomachs.

POST MORTEMS OF 1963

¶ Rhymes Out of the B'way Nursery
¶ For Variety's 58th Anniversary

By AL STILLMAN

That Black Friday in November
Was a day we'll long remember.

B'way had a season of Fits and Starts;
Lahr and Caesar played 13 parts.
"Tovarich" boasted a Mammoth Cast:
"The Milk Train" didn't run too fast.

Lemon and Remick drank their way
Thru a black-and-white[1] movie about A.A.,
Which could have been titled, one supposes,
"The Days of Wine and Four Roses."

A Willing Witness called Valachi
Sang, but not like Pagliacci.
Telephone execs were smiling
While we did that extra dialing.
The New Yorker Mag., our most urbane
Weekly, again adored "arcane."[2]

The New York Hilton, an immense
Hotel, named suites for Famous Gents.
The Dock Strike recalled—at least to me—
The Great Banana Shortage of '23.[3]

We had no Ochs, no Scripps, no Hearst,
No Flynn, no Whitney, till April First,
So for 16 weeks my wife was able
To see me at the breakfast table.
The strike caused earnings to diminish
And ended in a "photo" finish.
New Yorkers now must shell out dimes
To read The Tribune and The Times.

The eversmiling Mona Lisa
Landed here without a visa.

Said a couple of Latin Presidents
Who were shown the palace door:
"I reigned last night and the night before
"But I ain't gonna reign no more."

Hardly as different as night and day:
"Go Away Little Girl" and "Love Look Away."
This year's greatest wheeler-dealer
Was, of course, Miss Christine Keeler.

The Mets—not what you'd call a stellar
Club—retreated to the cellar.
The Dodgers' crusher was a honey,
The owners lost a lot of money.
Pepitone made quite an error;
The Yanks' new boss is Yogi Berra.
Fans did all they could to harass—
You have guessed it—Roger Maris.

Rockefeller threw cold water
On the chances of Goldwater.

"The Ballad of the Sad Cafe"
Was more of a mish-mash than a play;
And I got very little joy
From anything in "Man and Boy."

Ready cash I had in plenty,
Had, that is, until March 20;[4]
Then I was broke, as I remember,
Till the seventh of December.[5]

Some countries.—England, most of all,
Thought it should be spelled De Gall.
Mary McCarthy in Harper's Mag.
Termed J. D. Salinger a drag.[6]
David Merrick and Walter Kerr
Didn't agree on "Oliver."
A wonderful picture.—no if, no maybe a-
Bout it, was "Lawrence of Arabia."

The Mirror faded from the streets;
The Herald-Trib took over keats.[7]
Tony Bennett yearned for 'Frisco.
My favorite cracker's still Nabisco.[8]
"Dominique" was a Number One
Platter by the Swingin' Nun.
In a world so deficient in Fun and Cheer,
We should have had more Ogden Nash this year.

All I could sit thru was a third
Of "To Kill a Mockingbird,"
But I thought Gabin in "Monkey in Winter"
More fun than a fillum with Mary Miles Minter.
A tasty morsel of the past—
"Dinner at Eight" with its all-star cast—
Was coupled with (my eyes grow misty)
Greta Garbo in "Anna Christie."

Dan Parker now adorns The Journal.
"Tom Jones"—the movie—was supernal.
I gave Como lots of credit
For "I Love You And Don't You Forget It."[10]
We had some revivals with Theda Bara,
A Thanksgiving present from John O'Hara,
And I can't remember anything more,
So Happy 1964!

[1] If that's the word.
[2] Pun intended.
[3] Last year it was "logorrhea" also.
[4] The year the song was introduced.
[5] When the Big A opened.
[6] When it closed.
[7] Or words to that effect.
[8] No connection with the bard, except, perhaps for their mutual interest in Pegasus.
[9] It really is, but I also needed a rhyme.

Wants $1.25 Min. To Start April 1

Albany.

Motion picture theatres in New York State could possibly face the payment of a $1.25-per-hour minimum wage on April 1 next, instead of Oct. 15. Exhibitors are presently required, like other businesses operated within the State, to pay employees a minimum of $1.15. The earlier hike to $1.25 is implied in a possible legislative change to that end.

Joint Legislative Committee on Industrial and Labor Conditions was to meet in New York Monday (30) for the purpose of considering such a plan. Assemblyman Anthony P. Savarese Jr., Committee chairman and a Queens County Republican, pointed out that under a recent statute the Federal minimum advanced to $1.25 hourly "for many workers, last October. We should equalize these wage floors now. Wage economists assure us this raise can be accomplished six months earlier with negligible effect on the New York employment rate. This being the case, the Legislature should act promptly when it meets in January, to give this benefit to low-paid workers as soon as possible."

Assemblyman Savarese estimated that "advancing" the minimum scale by six months would mean earnings of "over $100 more for many thousands of employees in the coming year."

Right of Privacy For Performers Still a Gray Area

By HAROLD M. GOLDBLATT

A matter of considerable interest and increasing importance in all branches of the amusement field is the question of their so-called Right of Privacy. For upwards of 50 years there has been a statute in New York, known as the Civil Rights Law, which provides that any person whose name, portrait or picture is used within this state for advertising purposes or for the purposes of trade without his written consent first obtained may sue to enjoin such use and also recover damages by reason of such use. There is a similar law in many other states.

While the language of the statute appears to be perfectly clear, in many cases when action was brought for use of name or portrait in what was apparently advertising purposes the N.Y. State courts have ruled that there was no violation of the statute. In most of these cases, the judges themselves disagreed; the minority holding that the use of the person's name or picture was a violation of the statute.

In a very recent case, an action was brought on behalf of a young film star against a company making cameras, which used her name and picture in a book published by the company advertising its camera. Her picture and name were used in the advertisement in four photographs showing her using one of the cameras with wording to indicate that the pictures were taken by her while making a motion picture.

The Court however held that this was a merely incidental use and not for the purpose of advertising or trade and not prohibited under the Civil Rights Law.

In another recent case, Shirley Booth, recognized as a star of the stage, screen and television, brought an action under the Civil Rights Law against a magazine publisher for using her name and picture in connection with a number of advertisements advertising the magazine. While vacationing at a resort in the West Indies, her picture was taken by a photographer for the magazine which ran a story about the resort, and her picture was given a prominent place in the magazine story. Thereafter, the magazine used her pic-

(Continued on page 71)

'Big' Dutch Film Year

By HANS SAALTINK

Amsterdam.

Dutch film industry was quite active this year and presented no less than five films, two of which were full-length documentaries. At least one feature film, Fons Rademakers' "Als Twee Druppels Water" (The Spitting Image), was a success, and meant the launching of a new production outfit, Cineurope Film Productions.

Another new production group, Pan Film, had a bad start with "Bicycling to the Moon," that was taken off the program after one week and never made a tour of the provinces, due to the bad reviews. John Kerporaal's "De Vergeten Medeminnaar" (The Forgotten Rival), a N.F.M. production had so-so reviews but at least in the end will break even.

The two documentaries did better. Gerard Rutten, responsible for many Dutch feature films between 1950 and 1957, returned with a documentary "Wederzijds" (Mutual) on Queen Wilhelmina and her times, placed against a background of European contemporary history .The film did well at the boxoffice. At Christmas Bert Haanstra's "Jan En Alleman," a documentary, shot with the candid camera, was released. Haanstra worked nearly two years on this production, about behaviour of the Dutchman unobserved.

Distributor Paul Kijzer set up a production company, Caesar Films, which initial production was a co-production with Italy and France. Caesar Films provided the sketch, set in Amsterdam and directed by Roman Polanski, for "The Biggest Swindles In The World," nourishing of five segments totally. Kijzer and Polanski may again cooperate in 1964 on "Cherchez la femme."

1964 Remains Vague

Not many productions have yet been disclosed for 1964. The only certainty, because it was shot in 1963, is "Mensen Van Morgen" (Tomorrow's Citizens), a Sapphire production directed by Kees Brusse along the lines of Bertrand Blier's "Hitler, Connais Bas," interviews of young people about their life and ideas. Film was hushed up, because producer Rudi Meyer, also handling Haanstra's film, did not want to confuse the public with publicity on his two films that have much in common. Of the three feature films released in 1962, Korporaal's "Rufifi In Amsterdam" broke even in 1963, while Paul Rotha's "The Overval" (Resistance), released in December 1962, was a great success and was seen by more than a million Dutchmen.

Feature films are subsidized by the Dutch Production Fund, set up by the Dutch Cinema League and the government, short films are subsidized by the government only. In the field of shorts nothing world-startling happened. The ace directors in this field, Bert Haanstra and Herman van der Horst, did not have any releases in 1963, which made the scene very tame. Most Dutch films, sent to film festivals, are government-sponsored, but it is characteristic for the situation that the one documentary that was awarded at a major film festival, Charles Huguenot van der Linden's "Bouwspelement," that won the Golden Bear at the Berlin Film Festival, was made without any government subsidy.

Newsreel Blow

While films, long and short ones, are subsidized to the tune of millions (of Dutch guilders) annually, it was a shock to everyone when production company Polygoon-Profilti announced it had to stop the production of the weekly newsreels, of Dutch and world events. Polygoon-Profilti were working with a loss, and in the past demands for government subsidies had been turned down, so that the newsreel threatened to close down on January 1, 1964, when contracts expired. Polygoon-Profilti has no monopoly on newsreels; besides the Dutch newsreels, there are also Dutch versions of the Gaumont British newsreels and of Fox Movietone News, that has always some Dutch items incorporated. The market for the Polygoon-Profilti newsreels became too small, as many cinema exhibitors took just foreign news, due to the long programs that warranted against having a newsreel program of 20 or more minutes—with the length of feature films, a newsreel of a few items, running 15 minutes at most, is all that can be squeezed in.

The position and function of the newsreel in the cinema is also changing as most of its function is taken over by the daily newsreel on television. The number of television sets is still progressing, and can be seen as a competition to the cinemas. There are now more than 2,500,000 sets in use. But for the fact that there is still a decline in cinema attendance, this can also be gathered from the fact that it is specially the road show that makes money. In 1962, 19 blockbusters took in 20% of the annual income, while nearly 400 other films had to share the remaining 80%. In 1963 it was specially films like "Barabbas" (Col), "55 Days At Peking" (Hafbo), "Lawrence Of Arabia" (Col), "The Longest Day" (20th-Fox), "Cleopatra" (20th-Fox), that meant business. "Cleopatra" in four weeks took in $100,000, which is a record. "West Side Story" (UA Nova) broke a record—it played for 93 consecutive weeks at one cinema, the Du Midi Cinema in Amsterdam, and thus held up other 70mm feature film releases. To cash in on the two performances daily vogue, Warner Bros. released the just over two hours "Whatever Happened With Baby Jane" as a roadshow.

Of smaller feature films it is specially Eddie Constantine, Caterina Valente, and Steve Reeves films that have a certain faithful audience. Latest Constantine pic, "You Do It, Cutie," provoked the old-fashioned and dear sight of people queueing to get in. Another import, from Italy, "Mondo Sexy," also made people come to the cinema, as did Jacopetti's "Mondo Cane."

Dutch Cinema League keeps lobbying for an abolishment of the entertainment tax, or at least a reduction to 20%, and once in a while a cinema owner goes on strike, by closing the house, to put force behind his demands. Television receives financial support from the government and no tax is imposed on television but for a standard fee, paid by the viewer, of $7.50 annually. Dutch television has only one channel, but when a second channel will be opened, this could become a blow to Dutch exhibitors, who will have hardly any protection from the competition.

Since 1947, Dutch attendance has been dwindling. In 1947 it was 10% down from 1946, and by 1951 it was down to a low 71% (63,000,000 tickets sold). From 1960-1962 cinemas lost 5 million visitors, and in 1962 only 47,875,000 people went to the cinema, paying $20,650,000.

TIME & PLACE CLUE TO FILM CENSORING

By JOHN ROEBURT

(Author of the following perspective on forbidden films, as variously evaluated through the last 40 years, is a veteran of fiction and nonfiction works. His most recent credit is "The Wicked and the Banned."—Ed)

Restricting Codes and Commandments governing motion pictures blossomed as the realization grew that films shown publicly and freely were a potent social mechanism in creating and promoting beliefs, intellectual interests, behavior patterns and new attitudes. Films were recognized as persuasion more subtle and effective that other communication media (Books, Art, etc).

Extremes of antagonism toward the nascent motion picture industry was best synthesized in the January, 1926, utterance of one Earl Barnes in the magazine "Educational Screen." Barnes said, "Any person brought up on the psychology of the movie world is unfit for life. The lower minds go to the movies, and the longer they go, the lower they will be."

Barnes was over-acting to a Jazz Age diet of cheaply-confected films sporting such provocative titles as: "Her Purchase Price," "Why Men Forget," "Forbidden Fruit," "The 14th Lover." It was a time when jerrybuilt Hollywood society itself provided certain verisimilitudes to the Biblical Sodom and Gomorrah, a time when a $7,000-a-week comedian was explaining a rape death to the Court, a time when a party-giving Hollywood director, as a practical joke and for the fun of it, filled a sugar bowl with cocaine . . . when a United States Senator, stung by Hollywood license, could say with warrant: "Hollywood is a Sodom of debauchery, alcoholism, wickedness, free love. Its elite are former butcher boys, bartenders, sopers, swampers, bums off the road."

Man's Erotic Side

Film censors have immemorially shown an obsessive concern over the depiction of the sexual nature of man—attacks on erotic realism run as a scarlet thread through cinema's whole history. Films were seen as able to uniquely represent, or misrepresent, the inner combustions of sexual Man, his saved-up and hoarded (and sublimated) fantasies and desires, the secret and open revolt against taboos and doctrinaire standards of conduct and taste. And most dangerously: the popular film could and frequently did support Krafft-Ebing's thesis that love is nothing ethereal or seraphic, but of this earth.

In 1928, a scene was cut from the film "Docks of New York" in which a stevedore in a bedroom counts out some money while glancing down at a sleeping woman. In 1963, brickbats are thrown by pressure groups at constituted censors for giving seals of approval to "Irma La Douce," a comedy about Paris prostitutes and their business managers.

Sexy Match-Sticks

Novelist Aldous Huxley once pontificated: "In most modern countries, the only state-supported orthodoxy is a sexual orthodoxy. There is a powerful religion, or rather pseudo-religion of sacred purity." When a minor movie of the 20s, "Win That Girl," lost a scene to censors in which burning matches bent and contorted to represent man and woman in embrace, the censor-baiting lawyer Morris Ernst fumed that "the censor pictures a world of ladies and gentlemen damned by 'Elsie Dinsmore' and sired by 'Lord Fauntleroy.'"

The same Ernst, offended by the censor-cut of a boy-girl clinch from an early Joan Crawford film ("Our Dancing Daughters"); put the abridgement of artistic freedom into historical perspective with these words: "This is on a par with Anthony Comstock's wild frenzy at seeing a dressmaker's bust-form in a shop window."

The Hollywood Code has been liberalized to a degree inconceivable in the days of Will Hays. Designed primarily to screen out smut, unpunished crime and blatant sex, the Code today accepts social problems as drug addiction ("Man with a Golden Arm"), allowed a married marine to seduce nubile Deborah Kerr ("The Proud and the Profane"), at least hinted at the fact of homosexuality ("Tea and Sympathy").

'Virginity' As Jest

One catalyst in the liberalization of the Film Code was Otto Preminger and his Code-defying 1953 production and release of "The Moon Is Blue." The film portrayed a young girl (Debbie Reynolds) who teased and tempted men while withholding from sexual union. The Hollywood Breen office rejection of the film story was based on the proposition that a girl's virginity was not a proper subject for comedy. (Part of the trouble was Catholic sensitivity to quips involving virginity, this touching the Blessed Virgin.—Ed.).

In the summer of 1961, United Artists asked for and got a seal of approval for "The Moon Is Blue." The about-face of the Code Authority was due to many factors—Cause can be variously assigned to the decline in strength and leadership of the major studios and the rise of the independent and maverick producers, changing American folkways and mores and the absolute character of certain strictures in the Code, the rising quality of foreign films (De Sica, Fellini, Rosselini, Bergman) shown in American art houses, the competition of television and the comparatively greater freedom of the younger rival medium.

On the legal front, film forbiddance and censorship generally sustained a defeat in the reknowned "Miracle" case when the United States Supreme Court decried New York State censorship and denial of a license to the film "as a violation of our federal constitutional guarantees of free speech and free communication" (the film had been rejected as "sacrilegious" by the New York Censor Board.)

The U.S. Supreme Court slap at New York State censorship, however, provided no permanent cure. In 1961, the same censorship board forced the elimination of a valid and artistically brilliant scene in Ingmar Bergman's powerful film "The Virgin Spring" on the grounds that the scene was "obscene and pornographic." (Elsewhere, as in Massachusetts, the excised scene was restored to the picture.) The scene in dispute was a starkly real enactment of the ruffian-rape of an innocent and trusting girl by two brigands who accost her in a wood.

A backward look at yesteryear's forbidden or censored films proves the new and spectacular freedom from censor restraint enjoyed by such modern-day sin-and-sex-charged entries as "Hud" (libertinism), "The Stripper" (exhibitionism), "The L-Shaped Room" (unwed pregnancy). In 1933, in the screen version of Nobel Prize winner William Faulkner's novel "Sanctuary," adult perversion was switched to *in*adult rape at the behest of the censor. The question of nudity as Art or Smut was resolved as the latter when the 1926 film "Sorrows of Satan" (starring Ricardo Cortez and Adolph Menjou) ran into determined censor and church opposition . Ten years earlier, in pre-Code 1916, Annette Kellerman, the Esther Williams of her day, appeared in "A Daughter of the Gods" clad only in the long tresses that was Eve's own garb.

Howard Hughes' "The Outlaw" (1941) found censors and some public folk astir over Jane Russell's cleavage. The film, finally given a seal of approval after a marathon brouhaha, was audaciously advertised by Hughes with displays of Miss Russell's protuberances and the challenge "How would you like to tussle with Russell?"

Time Brings Change

Yesterday's censors hacked away at such (studio-announced) "adult" pictures as "The Barker" (the censors order: "Cut out scene showing man removing woman's clothing from his berth; eliminate scene of boy and girl in orchard where girl is shown lying on ground"), "Street of Sin" (the censor ordered a long scene deleted in which actor Emil Janning's looks amorously at a Salvation Army girl), "The Man Who Laughs" (the Victor Hugo classic lost "all scenes of men looking through keyholes," and "all seductive scenes between the Duchess and Jester"), "Sunrise" (the censors ordered excision of scene in the F. W. Murnau classic of "Woman wriggling and dancing and man embracing her"), "The Racket" (of the numerous cuts ordered, one was "all views of clergymen at crook's funeral services").

Forbiddance of films and/or demands that cuts be made and scenes deleted happens mainly today on local and state levels, with the so-called "Adult" foreign film the chief target of censors. The imported movie, with their generally unabashed sex-life centered themes are, by implicit compact between censor, distributor and exhibitor, confined to the strict limits of the nation's art-theatres—the family theatres are out of bounds. (The Italian-made film "Boccaccio '70" suffered censorship citation and complaint and boycott pressures in city-after-city when it dared out of the segregation of art houses and into major theatre circuits).

The Hidden 'Tone'

Not long ago, in Memphis, a local Vice Squad viewed and judged the French movie "I Spit On Your Grave." They later "raided" the projection room and seized the film negative. ("I Spit On Your Grave" carried a race relations theme with subthreads of nudity and love candor.

Jules Dassin's prize film "Never On Sunday," a tongue-in-cheek fable about the business world of a prostitute, ran into censor trouble in cities of Georgia and Texas. In New Orleans, Northern Indiana and Chicago, there are phone services through which callers can get a recorded moral evaluation of current motion pictures. The evaluations, collected and collated from miscellaneous sources, have—as of this writing—found wholly or partly objectionable such films as "Baby Jane," "Two for the Seesaw," "Taste of Honey," "Gypsy," "War Lovers," "Sodom and Gomorrah," "And God Created Woman." In the Unqualified Approval category are "Count of Monte Cristo," "Brothers Grimm," "Merrill's Marauders."

The florescence of the "Adult" film has been hailed by some and damned by others. To a number of censors and critics currently, the word "adult" is a plain euphemism for "dirty." In a recent published complaint, the New York Herald Tribune writer and critic John Crosby fretted that "most adult pictures aren't fit for grown-ups, let alone childen." Crosby, a man of generally liberal persuasion, decried the film "Walk on the Wild Side" as "perfectly dreadful, rampantly sexual, a really dirty movie," saw "Cape Fear" as "the most sordid, vicious and utterly depraved movie I have ever seen," found the rape scene in "The Virgin Spring" as "horrifyingly explicit, with the murder sickeningly gruesome," bewailed the trend to perversions in movies, finger-pointing the lesbianism in "The Children's Hour," male homosexuality in "The Victim," child molestation in "The Mark," nymphomania in "The Chapman Report," cannibalism in "Suddenly Last Summer."

Anti-censorship ranks have ever been divided between those who demand an abolition of all censorship and that group willing to accept a measure of suppression for "Decency's" sake. In championing the former attitude, the late columnist-social critic Heywood Broun declared he would not be too violently passionate against a censorship carried on by a small clique composed of the wisest persons in the world. Said the waggish Broun: "I would not be wholly incensed to receive only such films as were licensed by Havelock Ellis and John Dewey."

Which brings the issues of film censorship into the same focus as that of the book censor. The question becomes, inevitably:

Who are the Censors? And: How competent are they, let alone wise, to be the guardians of public morals?

Fishy Tail

London.

A popular form of show business 70 years ago in Great Britain were the travelling variety and play companies, better known as "Penny Gaffs," gaff being a cockney slang word for theatre. London taxidrivers still refer to Shaftesbury Ave. as "Gaff Street."

These mobile theatres of the past were created on waste ground and they presented a different show each evening. One enterprising show had a fish bar at the side of their gaff. Being short of staff, whenever they had a fish frying night they'd arrange for one of the cast to die during the first act, and then nip smartly around to the bar and get the batter frying for the hungry homegoing audience.

Audience soon got wise; when they witnessed an actor dying during the first act they'd whisper one to another, "They're frying tonight."

On Scripting In H'wood: Solo For Two Voices

By RAY RUSSELL

Hollywood.

Scene: one of the smaller Beverly Hills homes. Quiet Piranesi and Toyokuni prints on the walls; on the mantlepiece, a miniature reproduction of a Restoration English stage, flanked by two white antique poodles in Staffordshire porcelain. Roughly 500 LP albums, chiefly classical, are stacked raggedly in a corner of the living room. One entire bookcase is devoted to theatrical lore and criticism, plays, and books on cinema. The other bookcases—aside from multiple copies of books written by the master of the house—seem dominated by dictionaries and encyclopedias, as well as by a set of tall, slender, beautifully-bound volumes which, upon closer inspection, are revealed to be merely mimeographed screenplays also written by the master of the house. Enter RAY RUSSELL, a bearded, sun-darkened man in his thirties and of formidable girth. He is followed by another bearded man in his thirties who is not, however, sun-darkened, and whose girth is far from formidable—in fact, his pallor and emaciation grimly suggest that he has been shut away in a dungeon for a long, long time. His suspiciously anagrammatic name is ALGER ETO, and he now plugs in a tape recorder as Russell speaks:

RAY RUSSELL: Isn't this a rather unorthodox way to conduct an interview?

ALGER ETO: Edmund Wilson does it. I'm told Hemingway did, too, on occasion.

RR (pleased): Do you equate me with those giants?

AE (evasively): Listen, who's interviewing who?

RR: Okay, okay. Fire the first question.

AE: Here goes. Will you give us, in a sentence, a personal impression of your career as Executive Editor of Playboy during its formative first seven years? By the way, how come you left the magazine?

RR: That's two questions, but one answer will cover both: I think of my time with Playboy as a delightful detour from the main highway of my life, writing.

AE (conspiratorially): Off the record, there's a question I want to ask you about those Playmates . . .

RR: Everybody asks that question.

AE: But what's the answer?

RR: The answer is Yes. Now can we talk about me for a change?

AE: Sure. What is the major difference between being an editor and being a writer?

RR: The difference being being a user and being a maker.

AE: Are your hours better now?

RR: Worse! But they're mine.

AE: What, if any, are the drawbacks in switching from editor to writer?

RR: Well . . . offhand, the only one I can think of is that I'm no longer listed in "Who's Who in Commerce and Industry," which is unfair because I'm just as commercial and industrious as ever

AE: But you are listed in "Contemporary Authors," and I want to ask you about something it quotes you as saying: "The writer must draw, consciously or otherwise, from his own deepest and most personal experience. Thus, although my play, 'Bimini,' is ostensibly about Ponce de Leon, it is really about me; and although my novel, 'The Case Against Satan,' is about a Roman Catholic priest, it, too, is about me." Aside from seeming a bit self-centered, isn't there a falsification involved there? How can you paint truthful portraits of such characters if they are really you? What do you have in common with a celibate man of God or a 15th Century Spanish conquistador?

RR: Humanity. That's all that's necessary.

AE: Why did you move from Chicago to Southern California?

RR: Chicago has become a city of two seasons—hellish summer followed immediately by hellish winter. No spring, no fall.

AE: In the past few months, the Hollywood gossip columns have linked you with both Tuesday Weld and Jayne Mansfield, you gay dog. Tell me—

RR: What's to tell? Miss Weld has a yen for the leading femme role in my novel, and the Mansfield item was simply a mistake. Linked, schminked.

AE: To the charge that you have "gone Hollywood, how do you plead?

RR: Guilty. I attend opening nights at the Huntington Hartford Theatre, drive a white convertible, am on a low calorie diet, and have even been known to sign autograph books for people who've mistaken me for Peter Ustinov.

AE: What name do you sign?

RR: Sebastian Cabot.

AE: I see you have a lot of dictionaries here. Are you that unsure of yourself?

RR: On the contrary. I write down the word that sounds best—no matter what it means—then I look through one dictionary after another until I find one that agrees with me.

AE: What influence do reviews have upon you—especially adverse reviews?

RR: I don't like the adverse ones, of course, but then I didn't get too many of those on my first novel; in fact, most of the dissenting critics didn't review the book so much as they reviewed my previous connection with Playboy, a journal of which they obviously disapproved. For instance, one reviewer said—in her first paragraph, mind you—"There are all the elements of a boxoffice smash in this novel if Hollywood retitles it 'I Was Satan's Teen-Age Temptress.' Ray Russell is a former editor of Playboy. His past association with that magazine shows." Another review was headlined 'Bunny or Beelzebub?' and referred to Playboy in the very first sentence! Further on, in describing the young girl character, the reviewer said, "One can almost see Playboy bunny ears sprouting from Satan's lovely head." Such reviews are not reviews at all—they are springboards for the irresponsible launching of personal peeves that have nothing whatever to do with the book being reviewed.

AE: What about the rave reviews? How do they affect you?

RR: Like fine champagne—they can make a guy feel very, very good, but watch out for that big head in the morning. You simply must not believe the raves, lest you turn into a strutting case of advanced egomania. Just listen to this, for example—it's a short adjectival digest of glowing words from my novel's positive reviews, culled from about 30 American and British magazines and newspapers: "Spellbinding, Significant, Controversial, Brilliant [the 34 others cut by VARIETY—Ed.] If I really believed all that, I'd become so puffed with pride that I wouldn't be able to write a decent page—all self-criticism would vanish; I would look upon every word as Holy Writ, sacrosanct and unchangeable; and that would be the end of me. The only way to read reviews is with a large shaker of salt close at hand—don't take the bad ones to heart, and don't let the good ones go to your head.

AE: Are you what is called a serious writer, in the sense of committed, dedicated, engaged?

RR: I cop the Fifth Amendment on that one. But I will say that the trouble with too many serious, committed, dedicated, engaged writers is that they are serious about seriousness, committed to commitment, dedicated to dedication, engaged with the romantic idea of engagement. It's very much like falling in love with love, which, as the song lyric rightly says, is falling for make-believe.

AE: Then let me put it another way. How would you rate yourself among your contemporaries?

RR: When I write something I consider mediocre, I'm consoled by the certain knowledge that my worst is better than the best of two-thirds of my contemporaries.

AE: Isn't that terribly conceited?

RR: No, because there's a dispiriting corollary—the equally certain knowledge that my best is worse than the worst of the other third.

AE: Artists, including writers, are traditionally reputed to be extremely egocentric people, whose works, even when considered masterful, are often created out of intensely selfish motives. Any comment?

RR: How's this—the road to Heaven is paved with bad intentions.

AE: I'll accept that. Now then, it says here in my research that, in the three years you've been full-timing it as a writer, you've had two books published (a novel and a collection) plus a pile of short stuff in magazines; that you've written half a dozen feature films, three of them from your own stories, and one of these an award-winner at some Italian film festival; that four properties of yours—the novel, a play, a novella, and an original screenplay—have been optioned for films or stage; and that right now you're 25,000 words into a second novel. Is it true that this second novel of yours will be about Hollywood?

RR: Yes.

AE: I was afraid of that. Mr. Russell, haven't there been enough novels about Hollywood? What could this one possibly contribute?

RR: Well, besides funds to my pocketbook, it might contribute something that, for a change, doesn't fall automatically into one or another of The Only Recognized Slots Of Reaction To Hollywood.

AE: What are those Slots?

RR: The first one, and I guess the most common, is the Nathanael West Slot. According to this, the town is grotesque and giddy, a narcotic nightmare, a surrealist's kaleidoscope, a mad, frenzied, wild, unreal swirl of phantasmagoria.

AE: Well, isn't it?

RR: Sure it is. And so is Fargo, North Dakota. The second Slot is polarically opposed. This one stoutly avers that the town is just like any other productive heavy-industry town, say Detroit. The best answer to this Slot is a joke, old but still good. You know the one. About the famous director who goes back to visit the dear hearts and gentle people of his native Iowa, and while there, is asked if it's really true what they hear about Hollywood—the mad carryings-on, the weird people, etc. No, no, not at all, the big director says. That's all a lot of nonsense. We're hard-working folks, with the same problems as you folks. Take me, for instance. I get up early, have breakfast, go down to the studio, work hard all day with a short break for lunch, then at the end of the day I come home tired, eat dinner, and read the paper. It's like I was saying to my wife just the other day—"George," I said . . .

AE: Are there other stereotyped Slots of reaction to Hollywood?

RR: Plenty. There's the All Black view—the town, according to this Slot, is a sinkhole of depravity and artistic prostitution, populated by cynics, hacks, perverts, tyrannical tycoons, and vicious, backbiting climbers. No redeeming features at all. Then there's the Guinea Pig Slot—detached, analytical, antiseptic, sociological. Charts and graphs Masses of data. Statistics. No judgments, but lots of guarded deductions.

AE: And your Hollywood novel will try to avoid falling into any of those Slots, you say. Let me ask you, then: what will your approach be?

RR: That's hard to answer, but I'll put it this way . . . one of my books, when it was published a couple of years ago, received a review that said (in effect; I'm quoting from memory), "Some writers see life through the grimy window of realism, others through the microscope of clinical analysis, others through rose-colored glasses. Ray Russell sees it as reflected in a fun-house mirror." I think that's the way I see Hollywood—which may seem, at first blush, like simply another way of describing the Nathanael West or Grotesque Slot, but I do believe it is different. I see this as a hard-working town with many gifted people—but with unique, integral distortions and inversions. If it's larger than life, then it's also smaller than life. The smiles are broader here and the frowns deeper; but also—most everybody is sound asleep by midnight.

AE: In your judgment, is there a kind of person peculiarly suited to working in the film industry?

RR: There's a kind of person peculiarly not suited. And here's the way to find out. Go to the intersection of Vine & Selma. On the northeast corner, there's a bank. On the bank is a plaque, a very small plaque, only so big, that says: "Birthplace of Motion Pictures. The First Feature-Length Motion Picture Made in America 'The Squaw Man,' Filmed on This Site by Cecil B. DeMille, Samuel Goldwyn, Jesse L. Lasky, December, 1913." If you can stand there and read that plaque without feeling the faintest swelling of your heart, the tiniest twinge of excitement along your spine, then you don't belong in films.

AE: One more question, and do try to be brief—what ideal movies do you wish could be made?

RR: I thought you'd never ask. Having seen what he did with "Macbeth," I think Kurosawa should do an "Oedipus Rex" starring Toshiro Mifune. I wish the Russians would do a big, splendrous, uncut, color film verion of Prokofiev's opera, "War and Peace"—it's a magnificent score, an enormous canvas. I wish, instead of the "Cleopatra" that was made, they would have simply filmed Shakespeare's "Antony and Cleopatra"—it's a perfect film script just as it stands, with short half-page scenes "intercutting" between Rome and Egypt; cinematic writing centuries before movies were invented. I'd like to see Lee J. Cobb in Brecht's "Galileo," Ralph Richardson in a filmed "King Lear," Richard Burton as Lord Byron . . . hey, you're not leaving already, are you? Don't you want to ask me what advice I have for other chaps planning a career in Hollywood?

AE: You've already told us—go to the corner of Vine & Selma. But I will ask you what advice you have for other magazine editors trembling on the brink of the cold plunge into writing

RR: The same advice my father gave me when I was at that juncture. He unearthed a marvelous quotation from Emerson—

AE: "Give your heart a holiday from caution."

RR: You guessed it! But how—

AE (vanishing like a thread of smoke): Don't forget. He's my father, too.

Word Assassins

By GERALD PRATLEY

Toronto.

We are told that this is the age of the common man, but need we be quite so common in the use of our language? On all sides we are surrounded by lies and illiteracy, most of it perpetrated by men who are not themselves illiterate in the true sense of the word. They are simply careless and lazy, and ever anxious to appear as part of the herd by playing down to it in the language which they think the herd wants to hear.

In his humorous book, "The Scuttle Under the Bonnet," screenwriter Leonard Spigelgass mentions how he dislikes the term "property" which studios use when they refer to scripts and stories they have purchased . It's a horrible way to use the word and it renders something living and exciting into a flat, commercial asset.

But the columnists who write about the world of entertainment have used other words in fearful ways. It seldom occurs to them they are mis-using these words.

Some of the words and phrases I object to are not all mis-used. They are simply, to my way of thinking, distasteful; but this I well know, is a matter of taste. "Vehicle" is used when reference is made to a film or a story . . . "it wasn't a good vehicle for the star" and you wonder if they're referring to the latest Rolls or Tennessee Williams. I have seen certain things described as having "triggered" a re-action or a series of events in the news. "Trigger" means releasing a catch or a spring, or refers to the catch releasing the hammer of a gun. "Geared to" is a now a favorite expression. "A film is geared to the talents of so-and-so"; but gear means part of machinery and nothing more.

I read the other day that talks between two film producers had been "Firmed-up" what ever that means. People talking about what they have done refer to incidents as "the bit" or "this thing" which exasperates me. I dislike the use of the word "wallop" to describe a film's dramatic impact, which is just as bad as saying that "it hits you between the eyes." These terms have come about I imagine because so many so-called film reviewers were once on the sports desk. I also dislike emotional stimulation being referred to as "having a kick." If you're kicked it comes from a foot of man or beast or the recoil of a gun.

Pleasant things are now coyly referred to as "goodies." I find many columnists approving of something by saying "I'll go for that." Well, I won't.

As you know there is no such thing anymore as a successful play or film; it's always a "hit play" or "another hit" for someone; but his is no longer enough. It's "a smash hit" and as this has become too much trouble to say we now have just "a smash." Novels are no longer just novels: movies are invariably adapted from "best-selling novels," though few were that.

An amusing film is never just "amusing" of course. It is never just a comedy; it's "the comedy wow of the year." I always feel like gagging when I hear a joke or funny situation referred to as a "gag," and I feel positively unwell when laughs are called "yaks" and "yuks."

But by far the most objectionable use of a word in recent years is "import" when attached to an actor from abroad. This really makes me angry. It's bad enough that foreign films and plays are called "imports," but to apply it to people is callous and unthinking. The dictionary says that import means "merchandise brought into a country from abroad." Since when were human beings considered merchandise in our society? Or are actors not thought of as human beings? This situation has become so ridiculous that I read in a television column recently that a certain actor was "imported from Vancouver" to appear in a Toronto show!

Also objectionable when referring to the human element is the word, "customer." Are we in the fish market? People who go into shops are customers, but when they go to a film, a play or a concert they are patrons who become part of the audience.

What were your "thinking processes" when you made "Freud," an interviewer asked John Huston. Unthinkingly he replied, "my thinking processes were . . ." If you asked me they should all be processed right back to school.

Columbia's Biggest Year!

Celebrating 40 Years
Of Service To The Industry!

Columbia Sets The Pace For Great Entertainment
With The Most Creative Talents
In The World Of Motion Pictures!

NOW in RELEASE

The Story of A Young American And His Rise To Prince of The Church

THE CARDINAL

AN OTTO PREMINGER FILM

THE CARDINAL STARRING TOM TRYON, ROMY SCHNEIDER, CAROL LYNLEY, JILL HAWORTH, RAF VALLONE, JOHN SAXON, JOSEF MEINRAD, BURGESS MEREDITH, OSSIE DAVIS, DOROTHY GISH, TULLIO CARMINATI, MAGGIE McNAMARA, BILL HAYES, CECIL KELLAWAY AND JOHN HUSTON AS GLENNON Also: Bobby (Morse) and his Adora-Belles
SCREENPLAY BY ROBERT DOZIER. BASED ON THE INTERNATIONAL BEST SELLER BY HENRY MORTON ROBINSON.
MUSIC BY JEROME MOROSS. PRODUCTION DESIGNED BY LYLE WHEELER. PHOTOGRAPHED BY LEON SHAMROY IN TECHNICOLOR® AND PANAVISON®. PRODUCED & DIRECTED BY OTTO PREMINGER. A Columbia Release.

for February

DYNAMITE!
FROM THE MAN WHO FIRED
"THE GUNS OF NAVARONE!"

CARL FOREMAN'S THE VICTORS

starring VINCENT EDWARDS · ALBERT FINNEY · GEORGE HAMILTON · MELINA MERCOURI · JEANNE MOREAU · GEORGE PEPPARD · MAURICE RONET · ROSANNA SCHIAFFINO · ROMY SCHNEIDER · ELKE SOMMER · ELI WALLACH · and MICHAEL CALLAN as ELDRIDGE · co-starring PETER FONDA · JAMES MITCHUM · SENTA BERGER · and JOEL FLATEAU

From the book by ALEXANDER BARON · Music by SOL KAPLAN · Written, Produced and Directed by CARL FOREMAN · A HIGHROAD PRODUCTION · PANAVISION® · A COLUMBIA PICTURES RELEASE

Peter Sellers · George C. Scott in Stanley Kubrick's

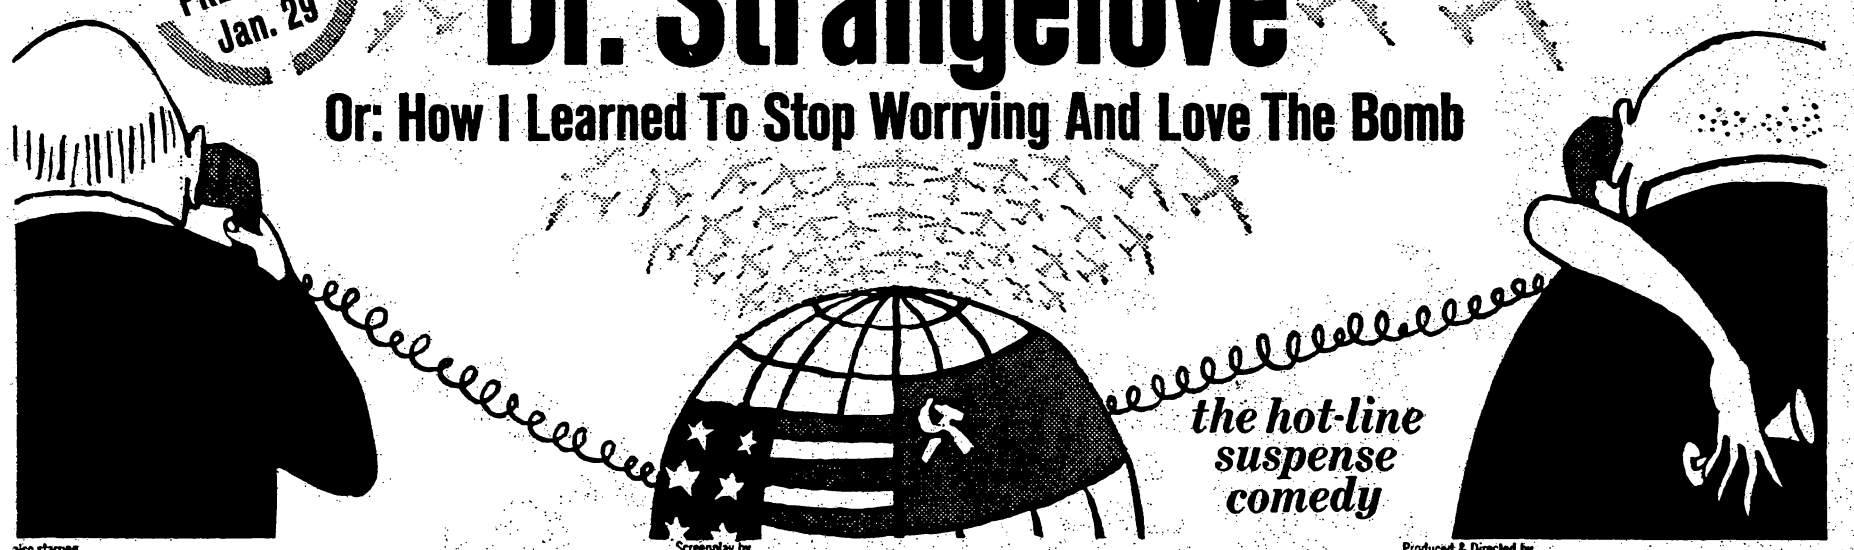
WORLD PREMIERES Jan. 29

Dr. Strangelove

Or: How I Learned To Stop Worrying And Love The Bomb



the hot-line suspense comedy

also starring Sterling Hayden · Keenan Wynn · Slim Pickens and introducing Tracy Reed (as Miss Foreign Affairs)

Screenplay by Stanley Kubrick, Peter George & Terry Southern

Based on the book "Red Alert" by Peter George Produced & Directed by Stanley Kubrick A Columbia Pictures Release

WARREN BEATTY
JEAN SEBERG
in
ROBERT ROSSEN'S

NOW EDITING

Lilith

co-starring
PETER FONDA • KIM HUNTER with ANNE MEACHAM • JAMES PATTERSON • ROBERT REILLY • Screenplay by ROBERT ROSSEN • Based upon the novel by J. R. SALAMANCA • Produced and Directed by ROBERT ROSSEN • A CENTAUR PRODUCTION • A COLUMBIA PICTURES RELEASE

A NEW PEAK IN SCREEN ADVENTURE!

COLUMBIA PICTURES presents a FRED ZINNEMANN production
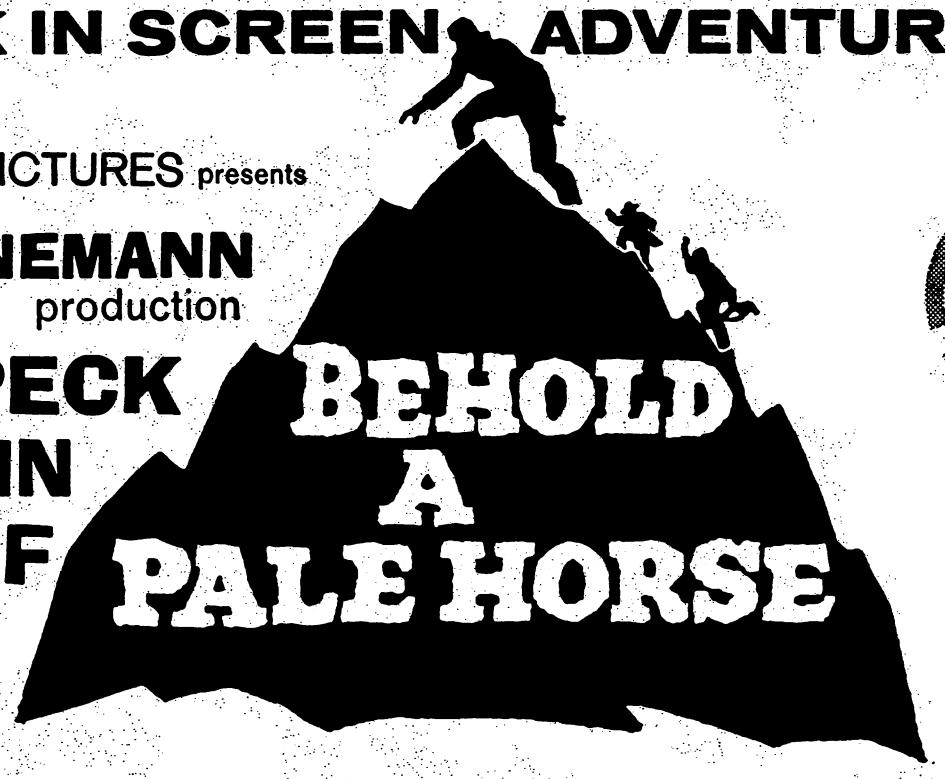
starring
GREGORY PECK
ANTHONY QUINN
OMAR SHARIF

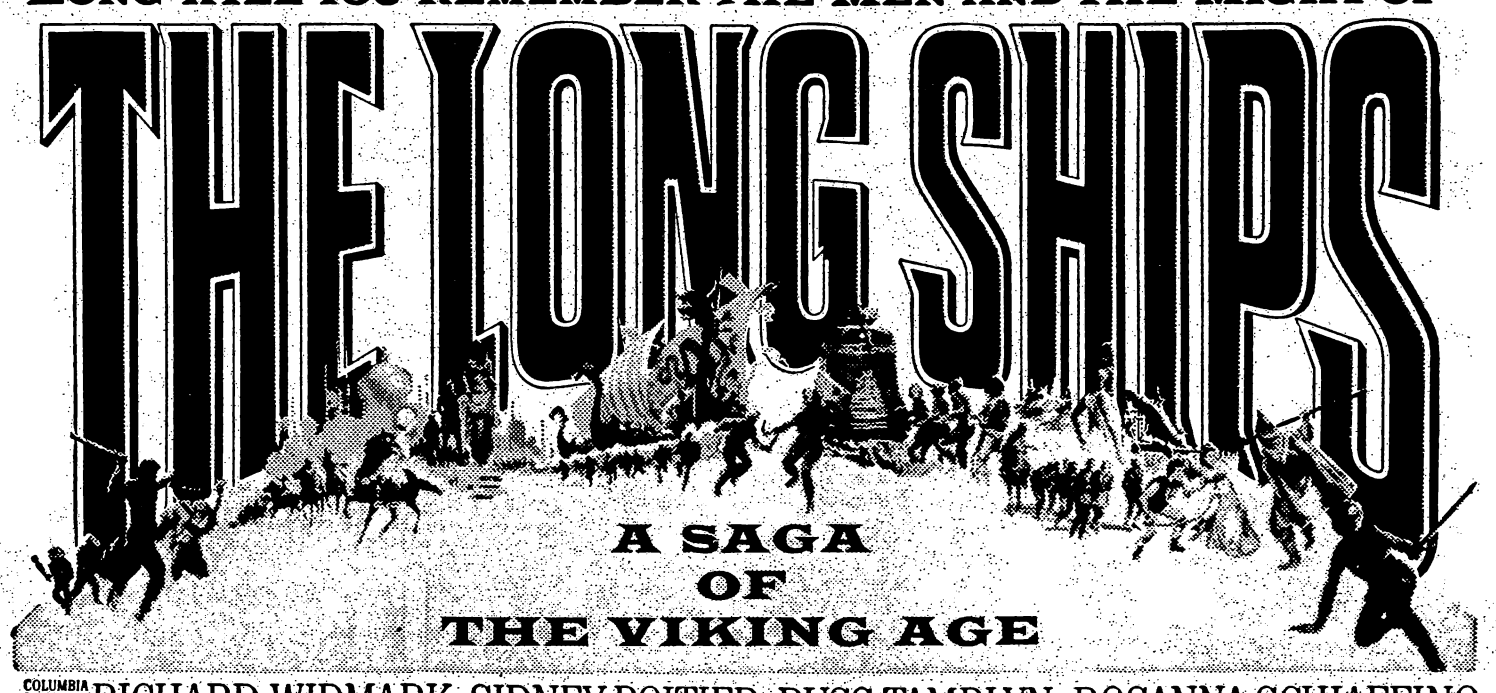


NOW EDITING

Screenplay by JP MILLER • Based on a novel by EMERIC PRESSBURGER • Associate Producer ALEXANDER TRAUNER • Produced and Directed by FRED ZINNEMANN

LONG WILL YOU REMEMBER THE MEN AND THE MIGHT OF

THE LONG SHIPS



SUMMER of '64

COLUMBIA PICTURES PRESENTS RICHARD WIDMARK / SIDNEY POITIER / RUSS TAMBLYN / ROSANNA SCHIAFFINO / OSCAR HOMOLKA
"THE LONG SHIPS" CO-STARRING Edward Judd / Lionel Jeffries / Beba Loncar / Berkely Mather and Beverley Cross
SCREENPLAY BY
Based on the novel by Frans Bengtsson / Produced by Irving Allen / Directed by Jack Cardiff / A WARWICK-AVALA PRODUCTION / TECHNICOLOR® / TECHNIRAMA®

Or, As Jimmy Walker Once Phrased It, Nobody's Ever Been Ruined By A Book

By MORRIS L. ERNST

(This digested foreword by American author, attorney and Civil Libertarian was written for the American edition of Alec Craig's "Suppressed Books: A History of the Conception of Literary Obscenity," and is reprinted by permission of World Pub. Co. The book was published in Great Britain by George Allen & Urwin Ltd. under the title "The Banned Books of England and Other Countries").

The concept of censorship is a sophisticated one and, of course, applies rather exclusively to those few cultures where literacy has taken hold. When man chipped on stone tablets, those few who could read were naturally undisturbed by their own corruption. Even today I have never met a human being who felt he could be corrupted by any concept—blasphemous, seditious, or obscene. The censorious are worried only about the souls of others than themselves.

Mans original fear, in terms of control of the market place of thought, as distinguished from tribal folkways, was no doubt directed exclusively at what we now call blasphemy. But as the power of the clerics declined and a new instrument of man called the State was created, blasphemy tended to evaporate and the fear of seditious utterances arose as a peril to the power of the Crown. In more recent days, as the world became somewhat literate and people could communicate with each other sufficiently to elect their own rulers, democracy was born and the crime of sedition was temporarily reduced. But since man seemingly must always be afraid of something, a new terror, known as obscenity, was created with peculiar speed and wide impact. In those continents where millions have as yet not risen to the point of enjoying a written language and where the literate are few in number, the concept of obscenity has not even been created.

In this [Alec Craig's] volume one can learn the absurdity of man's fears with respect to sexual titillation in print or picture. After touching on the early bookish history of man in various parts of the globe, with examples of censorship—such as the suppression in China of writings of Confucius — the author carries us along through the great battles in England around the middle of the 19th century, when literacy became so prevalent that the superior people became intent upon censoring the reading of the newly literate.

This volume is concerned not only with our Anglo-Saxon culture in England, but also with the parallels carried on on this side of the Atlantic. For anyone concerned with censorship in the United States, this volume raises endless queries — natural queries since, through a historical coincidence, the psychotic rampages of Anthony Comstock coincided with new legislation in England which was trying to define the contours of the obscene. And toward the end of this inquiry into the mad fears of the obscene, we can discern the intriguing nuances in attempted definitions of the "lewd," "indecent," "lascivious," "obscene," and "prurient" in England as well as in our own republic.

In England under recent legislation, as interpreted in the "Lady Chatterly" case, we are impressed with the British approach, namely, that the literary quality of a writing may be used as one attribute to justify sexual material which might fall under any one of the above synonyms — and hence be deemed capable of corrupting either part or all of the human race.

Must Save the Dames

In our republic, I suggest that we are going toward a more scientific approach in our endeavor to find the obscene or even the pornographic. When we read about the present status of the law and about prosecutions in England, we can all be mindful of the fact that at long last we are gaining knowledge from scientific laboratories. For about a century, critics, juries, and judges have based their approaches on the thesis that "It's all right for us men but we must save the women," and only recently with somewhat of a shock have we learned from many scientific studies and polls that women are not interested in the obscene. Moreover, science has recently pronounced that the censorious have attacked the wrong material in the market place—assuming, of course, that any material is probably corrupting. We now know that if there be any influence at all on children, it flows not from fiction, which has been the subject of most of the assaults, but from nonfiction and, more particularly, from the daily press which is brought into the home to be read by children as the Truth and understood to be Life itself.

Since we in the United States are now approaching a pivotal junction in this legal-intellectual maze, this volume, if widely read not only by lawyers and judges but by all folk, can be an effective instrument to tidy up the law of censorship. It might even educate us to a more adult approach to the mystery of life. Man will and should always have a great interest in the beginning and the end of everything of birth and death. Birth connotes sex and death is not remote from sadism. I suggest that whenever man tries to suppress an interest in the beginning, an undue accent is laid on the end. Some day science may prove a causal relationship between reading and behavior, but Alec Craig's volume negates even a clue in that direction. Hence his volume must worry and disturb all readers in our culture, particularly those who feel much of our television and daily press perverts the dignity of the people of our republic by laying undue emphasis on the tawdry treatment of birth (sex) and death (sadism).

The Publicist!

By NOEL MEADOW

If he's intelligent, discreet, resourceful, imaginative, seasoned—sometimes even modest—he molds his client's good ideas into something of value and has the courage and/or conscience to veto the others.

A press agent is different from the public relations counsel in at least two respects—he has fewer phones and more "flexible" fees. He shapes whimsey, subdues brainstorm.

If a conscientious professional he has a goal beyond money.

Though a drumbeater he must recognize when the drum's sound is more irritating than attractive. A one-man band, he usually provides his own arrangements.

A publicist needs both broad, imaginative sweep and a stickler's obsess on for petty detail. A tireless, energetic worker, let him conceal his ulcer.

A born publicist is a man always on the go—though already real gone.

He doesn't like to tamper with truth—though he will volunteer to guide it in its expression when duty demands.

Some Literary Definitions

By WERNER S. HAAS

FREELANCER . . a writer still living on an allowance from home.

CARRIAGE TRADE , , , the neighborhood hock-shop that'll give the highest prices for your typwriter.

PUBLISHER . . . a middle-aged, good looking man who couldn't quite finish law-school, and whose wealthy parents selected the best of all possible tax-loss situations.

READER . . . He would be a publisher but he's poor.

PULP FICTION . . . Your "Great American Novel" sold outright by your agent and published under a pseudonym, "in case you ever write anything good."

SHOOTING SCRIPT . . . a bid for front money.

SCENARIO . . . a shooting script typed on better quality paper.

SCREENPLAY . . . one-third of a shooting script.

SCREEN CREDIT . . . something you may get if your agent also represents the star.

SHORT STORY . . an incident about the Irish, published in The New Yorker.

PROMISING PLAYWRIGHT .author of a play the critics didn't understand.

ANGRY YOUNG PLAYWRIGHT author of a play who doesn't understand the critics.

OFF BROADWAY . . . a chance to be bored for $4.80 for people who can't afford to be bored for $6.90.

Breakfast With Coolidge

Excerpt From Publicist's Upcoming Memoirs, 'In My Opinion'—Cal, Jolie & Dolly Sisters at White House

By EDWARD L. BERNAYS

I had breakfast with President Calvin Coolidge in the White House a few weeks before Election Day, in 1924, and was impressed by the potency high office conferred on the man who held it.

Rhinelander Waldo, a tall pleasant and well dressed scion of a distinguished Connecticut family who had made a good record as Police Commissioner under New York's Mayor Gaynor, was indirectly responsible for my White House visit. Waldo was a Democrat, campaigning for Coolidge's election. He supported Coolidge, it was rumored, because he wanted to be Governor of the Philippines; another rumor said he would be offered the Republican nomination for the governorship of New York if he helped Coolidge get elected; while another had his wife the power behind his outspoken support of the Republican candidate. I don't know what the truth was (Waldo never discussed the matter with me) and his deadpan face hid his thoughts and feelings.

Whatever the real motives, Waldo retained us to help promote his Non-Partisan League for Coolidge. We mailed mats to 1,000 newspapers, showing an elephant and a donkey, a photograph of Col. Waldo between them and the caption said he was a Democrat and headed the Non-Partisan League for Coolidge. Then we sent a large mailing to find Democratic leaders who would support planks in Coolidge's platform on the bases of their vocational interest. Support came from Democrats for Coolidge's planks on rehabilitation, welfare, efficient transportation at low rates, a reasonable return on property, a high protective tariff, and immigration and naturalization.

Waldo thought our campaign was moving along satisfactorily. Our efforts got his name in the papers in support of Coolidge. And then he asked me to suggest newsworthy pilgrimages to the White House to demonstrate Democratic and nonpartisan support of Coolidge. He wanted in these pilgrimages to demonstrate to the country that Coolidge had a warm sympathetic personality, I suppose, to counter Alice Longworth Roosevelt's remarks flying through the country that Coolidge had been "weaned on a pickle." The newspapers had carried stories of a public reprimand Coolidge gave to a Secret Service man who took Mrs. Coolidge for a walk through the woods. America was buzzing with gossip about the cold and austere New Englander, jealous of his wife's innocent walk through the forest. That impression of austerity must also be blanketed.

Literati to Show Biz

First I thought of taking some well-known lady novelists to the White House, then I thought a group of mothers who might take breakfast with the President at one of the famous Coolidge White House morning meal convocations. Then a more newsworthy idea came to me—why not take a group of actors and actresses to the White House for breakfast? In 1924 this was unorthodox, for a slightly disreputable air still clung to stage people. On the other hand, they symbolized humanness, warmth, extroversion, and camaraderie—just the impression we were trying to create about Coolidge. I wasn't surprised when Waldo informed me that C. Bascom Slemp, the knowledgeable secretary of the President, had set up a breakfast date for us at the White House. The President himself, a keen political, undoubtedly recognized the implications of such a visit.

Now it was up to me to arrange this non-partisan pilgrimage to Washington in support of Coolidge. I had a powerful magnet, of course, to enlist crusaders, the lure of publicity. News of any actor or actress breakfasting with President Coolidge at the White House would hit the front pages of the country.

I sought out Al Jolson, who quickly rounded up the party. It included John Drew, Raymond Hitchcock, Charlotte Greenwood, Ed Wynn, Francine Larrimore, Justine Johnstone, the Dolly Sisters, Brennan and Rogers, Buddy de Sylva, Gerald Griffin, Arnold Daly, Cleo Mayfield, Montagu Love, William Griffen, Hal Forde, Leslie Chambers, and Jed Prouty. We took the midnight Pennsylvania train for Washington immediately after the curtain fell on Broadway.

I was in charge of transportation and had a ticklish time insuring protocol on lower and upper berths. That could not be taken lightly, for I had seen ventures fail when such arrangements did not satisfy the sense of importance of the participants. In the morning, at Washington's Union Station, the Cadillacs I ordered waited for us and we went out to them to be on time for breakfast at the White House. I had a list with me to account for all the members of the party. My checking revealed that the Dolly Sisters, whom I had seen on the train the night before, were missing. I rushed back to the train to look for them and finally found them sitting on stools at the station's Savarin breakfast bar eating hearty breakfasts.

"Look, I said in a tone of shock and surprise, "you can't keep the President of the United States waiting for you. You come along."

"Oh go on," they said blandly, "who's he? A farmer. We don't start working on nothin' until we have our coffee."

I could do nothing to budge them. These young women took their egos and their democracy literally. Forty of us waited while they finished their coffee, toast, cereal and bacon and eggs.

President and Mrs. Coolidge met us at the door of the White House. "I have met you all across the footlights," Mrs. Coolidge said graciously, "but it's not the same as greeting you here."

I lined up our party for a handshaking ceremony with the President. Since no one from the White House appeared to introduce us to the Chief Executive, I stepped up and assumed that function. Each actor and actress in the line gave me his name and I repeated it to the President. At the conclusion of this informal ceremony, Coolidge turned to me quietly and said pleasantly, "Your name, please."

"Oh, Mr. President, that's not important," I said. "I'm only the publicity man for the party."

"Not unimportant either," the President replied, deadpan, "the publicity man—your name?"

I gave it to him. He smiled a thin smile and I recognized he was an instinctive politician.

President Coolidge led the procession into the state dining room for breakfast, escorting the tall comedienne Charlotte Greenwood. Mrs. Coolidge took the arms of Col. Waldo and Al Jolson.

The breakfast with its coffee, fruit, toast, griddle cakes and sausages, lasted for more than an hour. Raymond Hitchcock entertained the company with a discussion of economics. Waldo and Charlotte Greenwood flanked Coolidge and Jolson and Hitchcock sat beside Mrs. Coolidge. Next to me sat Major Solbert, the President's military attache, a handsome young man later with the Eastman Kodak Co. He was trying hard to make his pidgin French interesting to the young woman on his right. He addressed her with deference as if he was talking to a great French actress, and I heard pointed questions as "Etes vous Francaise?" and "Est-ce-que vous aimez l'Amerique?" I could not identify her offhand, but she didn't seem to respond enthusiastically to his attempt at conversation. She answered only in French monosyllables. On our return trip to New York, I saw her again, this time manicuring the nails of one of the Dolly Sisters in the Pullman. I was surprised that the actress should double as a manicurist and asked for her name. She was the Dolly Sisters' maid. I pointed out to them that invitations to the White House had been issued only to actors and actresses.

"Ain't she as good as that New England farmer?" Rozika Dolly said.

The President enjoyed himself throughout breakfast. After breakfast, we adjourned to the White House lawn, where Al Jolson sang his song, "Keep Coolidge":

The race is now begun
And Coolidge is the one,
The one to fill the Presidential chair.
Without a lot of fuss
He did a lot for us.
So let's reciprocate and keep him there.

Refrain

Keep Coolidge! Keep Coolidge!
And have no fears
For four more years!
Keep Coolidge! Keep Coolidge!

For he will right our wrongs!
He's never asleep;
Still water runs deep.
So Keep Coolidge! Keep Coolidge!
He's right where he belongs!

Mrs. Coolidge and the guests joined in the refrain. Everyone was enjoying the festivities when Slemp, the President's secretary, whispered to me, "Mr. Bernays, will you tell the President that the Cabinet is waiting for him? See if you can get him to come."

I relayed the message to the President, who left the gay party with an expression of regret.

Our breakfast party was front page news throughout the country. The N. Y. Times reported: "Actors Eat Cakes With the Coolidges . . . President Nearly Laughs . . . Guests Crack 'Dignified' Jokes, Sing Songs and Pledge Support to Coolidge" The N. Y. Herald Tribune headline read: "President Receives Theatrical Republican League, Led by John Drew, Al Jolson, Raymond Hitchcock," but it omitted the nonpartisan reference and mention of Col. Waldo.

I do not imply cause and effect by adding that Coolidge was elected, but Waldo did not become Governor of the Philippines.

My abiding memory of the breakfast is the difference between the impact of the man Coolidge on me and the impact of his position. I felt awed in the presence of the chief executive, the President. But Mr. Coolidge left me cold.

FWC MANAGEMENT SHIFTS

Los Angeles.

In a series of managerial shifts in three local Fox West Coast houses, Lou Grimm swings from the Village Westwood Theatre to La Reina Theatre, Sherman Oaks, succeeding Al Bamossy, who moves to the Fox Wilshire, replacing Lou Silverstein, resigned.

Paul Flowers, formerly manager of Loyola before being assigned to FWC home office for six months, takes over at Village Westwood.

Some $64,000 Questions In Show Biz Legalistics For '64

By HARRIET F. PILPEL

Nineteen hundred and sixty-four is apt to see many of us in the entertainment and literary fields facing up to some basic legal questions which sooner or later have got to be resolved. Let's take a quick look at some of these.

(1) Will 1964 see the enactment of a new copyright law reform? Your guess is as good as anyone's on this. 1964 should— most likely will—see the introduction of a bill proposing a new copyright law. All that has gone before in the way of learned studies, drafts, debates and meetings on the part of the U.S. Copyright Office and among members of the Copyright Bar will be prelude to such a new overall bill. Chief among the issues to be covered—and resolved—is of course, the question of the term of copyright. Should it be as now, a 28-year original period and a renewal period of another 28 years, or should it be a longer single term—like, say, 75 years —or should it be, as seems to be generally preferred among copyright aficionados, a term equal to the author's life plus 50 years?

If the term is extended at all, we will also have to come to grips with a subsidiary but perhaps equally important issue which has seen the creators of copyright ranged against the users for some time, namely, shouldn't rights revert to a creator after a given period of time in any event or certainly if he isn't sharing in the exploitation of his work—as, for example, when he has transferred the motion picture rights in a book once for a lump sum and umpteen years later the movie company is making the fourth movie based on the book without ever having paid the author anything on any of them after the first? No doubt photocopying will be another hotly disputed question, involving as it does the unlikely alignment of librarians on the one side and the bulk of authors and publishers on the other.

And, of course, there are the perennial "hot potatoes" —the jukebox exception, the manufacturing clause requiring the works of American authors to be first printed in the United States, and the liability of the "innocent infringer," the bookseller, for example, or the phonograph record concessionnaire who has no way of knowing that he is selling "bad" merchandise.

And many, many others—all of them to be resolved if a new copyright law is to be enacted.

(2) Libel. Here we are witnessing a trend and it may turn out to be an alarming one. In the old days—even just a few years ago—a libel judgment was considered a big one if it reached six figures, e.g., the now famous judgment Quentin Reynolds obtained against Westbrook Pegler—$175,000. More recently, however, like in the last two years, some libel awards have run into the millions, for example, the Wally Butts case. And in Alabama, lible judgments are being sought by local officials against the N.Y. Times totaling several million dollars.

It is impossible to overstate the importance of this trend, if that's what it is. One misstatement and an author may spend the rest of his life trying to pay off a libel judgment. Clearly, there is need for substantial libel judgments as a deterrent to reckless speech. Equally clearly, however, unless some more ground rules are laid down, our press will be increasingly fearful of printing anything that may offend anyone. An aspect of this problem is before the U. S. Supreme Court in one of the Alabama libel cases against the N. Y. Times where the judgment—in that case alone— was for $500,000 plus 10%. 1964 may—should—involve some clarification of this problem before the exercise of our freedom of the press becomes the most hazardous business in the country.

Equally clearly, however, unless some more ground rules are laid down, our press will be increasingly fearful of printing anything that may offend anyone. An aspect of this problem is before the U.S. Supreme Court in one of the Alabama libel cases against the N.Y. Times where the judgment—in that case alone—was for $500,000 plus 10%. 1964 may—should—involve some clarification of this problem before the exercise of our freedom of the press becomes the most hazardous business in the country.

(3) Privacy. Here, too, we may be witnessing a trend that we may well view with alarm. And it ties in with the libel problem discussed above in that the privacy trend—again if it is a trend—makes publishing a really dangerous occupation. For there are intimations in recent cases to the effect that a violation of privacy may be involved even in a factual narrative unless the facts recounted are "current" news.

In a way, this view is even more threatening to freedom of the press than the very large libel verdicts. At least truth is a defense to a libel action, while if a remark is held to be a privacy violation the fact that it is true is irrelevant. If truthful statements about living people not for advertising or commercial purposes can be held actionable violations of the right of privacy unless the matter is one of immediate news interest, we may as well say farewell to contemporary biography, history, and virtually all other writings concerning living people who don't happen at that moment to be in the news.

Surely this can't be—it isn't yet. We should all of us in 1964 seek out and publicize any holdings of any courts that seem to look in this direction. Bear in mind, too, that the present state of the law is such that not only are authors, publishers, producers, etcetera, directly connected with a libel or privacy breach liable but so, as in the case of copyright, are booksellers, networks, exhibitors, etc., who quite literally may know nothing about the offensive material at all—not even its existence. This has been held objectionable in the obscenity field. Maybe it ought to be in these other fields as well.

(4) Obscenity. 1964 ought to see some interesting developments here. The U.S. Supreme Court has a "Tropic of Cancer" case before it which it may or may not decide —and as of this moment "Fanny Hill," that indomitable survivor of many censorship wars, is making her way through the New York courts, having won a signal victory and been pronounced not obscene in the first round in the N.Y. Supreme Court. The test of obscenity continues to be whether a work "appeals to the prurient" and/or has "any redeeming social importance" and or is "hard core pornography":—whatever any of those words mean.

Here, however, as elsewhere, actions speak louder than words—and generally speaking the courts are holding not obscene works which would probably not have passed muster even a few years ago. The Supreme Courts of the States of Massachusetts, Wisconsin and California have held "Tropic of Cancer" not obscene. While it is true that the highest court in New York, the N.Y. Court of Appeals, has disagreed and held the book obscene, the vote was 4-to-3 because one of the judges voted in such a way as to make a U.S. Supreme Court test possible. Onward and upward, and in the direction of freer speech, seems to sum up developments—and apparent trends—in the obscenity field.

* * *

We could go on and on but we won't. Just as an informed electorate is apt to get better laws and better officials, so an informed public should be heard on issues like these which, though they may seem technical, vitally affect the functioning of the literary and entertainment worlds—all the way from dollars and cents to freedom of the press.

Seek not "for whom the bell tolls" when a bad decision is handed down impinging on books, plays, movies, tv or the like—for, no matter who the parties, that bell tolls for us as active participants in the literary and entertainment marketplace, as well as for us as members of the public that constitutes the U.S.A.

Shrunken Head Market—Circa '63

By COL. BARNEY OLDFIELD

Quito, Ecuador.

There's a new wrinkle here in the shrunken head market.

The Jibaro Indians, back in the remote villages of Payo, Tena, and Macas have had to adjust to changing times, synthetics and the law. But they're doing it.

The Jibaros used to take care of their enemies by lopping off their noggins, then boiling them in a secret formula (evidently as carefully kept as the one in Atlanta for Coca-Cola) of rotting woods, water, and wads of strange leaves. After about eight days of this treatment, the old enemy was reduced to a size easy to mount on jungle mantles, to serve there as warning and even evidence that getting in the way of a Jibaro is apt to produce small return.

Some months ago, the Jibaros were swept up in the aftermath of the sick joke vogue, and their workmanship became a tourist target for extensive purchases in shopping centres like airports and hotels.

Either they were running out of enemies, or they were getting harder to catch, or possibly they were becoming slightly conscious of a strange thing on the other side of the mountain called "the law of the land" which frowned on this.

The Jibaros then began making synthetics. First, they modeled a small head of wood, and then they wrapped it in a new goatskin, boiled it for about four days, then gave it a hank of hair from a horse's mane or tail. The result was a remarkable spittin' image of the real thing, molded with tender, loving (?) care.

Most of the shops selling the goatskin synthetics say the customers consist largely of two main types.

One is the drunk, who gets that way before coming to the airport or because his plane is late, and he sends them back home to his boss. The other is the girl who left home in a huff, with a mad on at the boy friend. Invariably, they send the same accompanying note with the head: "It should happen to you!"

Now that the shrunken pighead has come into the market, it can be sent to either party without a note and make its point. And the Jibaros are happy to to be working on live subject matter once more.

THEATRE AND THE ARTS

By GERALD LIEBERMAN

The first encore was given to a Roman actor named Livius Andronicus. Andronicus was called back to repeat his speeches so often that he hired a boy to declaim for him, while he supplied the gestures. He called it an act of self-defense. He was also the first ham.

The first hiss took place in 1680, a dark year for the theater. There is no prior record of an audience being sufficiently stirred by the effort of player or playwright to emit sound by vibrating the tongue between the lips. The author thus immortalized was Fontenelle, and the play was "Aspar," suitably termed a tragedy. Prior to this happening, audiences were content merely to fall asleep—much as they do today.

The first English comedy was "Gammer Gurton's Needle," produced in the 16th century. It deals with the tribulations of an old hag who loses her needle while darning the seat of the main character's pants. There are no other needles in the village, and the catastrophe carries through five acts, during which time the needle is lodged on the person of the main character in a spot more tender than the heart.

In the field of art the art of rejection is, for the most part, artless. The performing arts has its "Don't call us, we'll call you"—an unimaginative cliche and a notch below the writing field's "The editors have read your manuscript and find it unsuitable to our present needs."

George M. Cohan once received a substandard play accompanied by a beautiful letter in the hand of the playwright. To soften the letdown, Cohan sent the following wire: "We have read your letter and your play and are giving serious consideration to producing your letter."

Oriental propriety, however, demands a warmer approach. And so, early in the century, the following standard rejection form was used by a Chinese editor:

"Illustrious brother of the sun and moon, look upon the slave who rolls at thy feet, who kisses the earth before thee, and demands of thy charity permission to speak and live. We have read the manuscript with delight. By the bones of our ancestors we swear that never before have we encountered such a masterpiece. Should we print it His Majesty the emperor would order us to take it as a criterion and never again print anything which was not equal to it. As that would not be possible before 10,000 years, all trembling we return this manuscript and beg thee 10,000 pardons. See my head at thy feet, and I am the slave of thy servant. The Editor."

HELLO, YOUNG YAHOOS —WHEREVER YOU ARE

(The Love Song of Our Time)

By JOSEPH MILL BROWN

San Francisco.

Since developing a persistent heartburn from too much coffee, I've gotten out of touch with today's world of folk-music. While I'm not sure Jack Paar was wrong when he opined that there may be more folk-singers than folk-listeners, still it grieves me to think I am once more missing the boat.

I am, for instance, the type that has difficulty in remembering the companion line to such simple songs as "Michael, Row the Boat Ashore." (It happens to be "Hallel-oo-oo-yuh"). For the last four months I've ben suffering a hangnail on my guitar-picking finger, and altogether the future looks none too good. I'm back at my old habit of being late, as usual, but by now I've given up caring. After all, I'm still in the midst of learning the cha-cha.

Moving out here to California, when everyone else is moving to Switzerland, is another manifestation of my remarkable talent at catching up with obsolescence. As the apogee of artistic faith, however, Hollywood is a neat place for sitting and observing at how far down the ladder we've all lately descended. (Although the cultural garbage that awaits the status-seeker in London, and Paris and Rome, is capable of bringing up nausea in a three-day-old corpse.)

I have a feeling that the mediocrity in our own cultural sewers is due to this passion we seem to have for pandering to our society of youths—both undergrown and overgrown. David Susskind once set about matching up cities with personalities that have become identifying symbols. "If New York is Garbo," he asked, "wouldn't you say Los Angeles is Sandra Dee?"

This one may be like what Oscar Wilde had in mind when he considered statements containing "the half truth that is expected of the best aphorisms." Still, when I was growing up (a redblooded American kid being chased through poolhalls and back alleys by shocked parents and light-footed truant officers) the world seemed a more magical place than it does today. I think it's because the faces and heroes show business served up to us were of a caliber that caught the imagination. They were new, and then they became old, but they were timeless personalities because they were born and nurtured with taste and imagination.

All that propaganda about Young America wanting to grow up to be another Babe Ruth, or Jack Dempsey, or Joe Louis was of course a fraud, perpetrated by the Anthropological Establishment of the day in order to pigeonhole the morals of the time. The truth is, everyone wanted to be Fred Astaire, who never had a job and always spent his time chasing Ginger Rogers all over town while wearing a full-dress suit in broad daylight.

Today, no kid wants to be Fred Astaire because no kid is really young anymore. We have finally found a generation of young men that would rather take a flying trip to the moon than be a poolroom hustler or burlesque comedian. Which is one reason why we all may soon be stuck with the company of moon dwellers, but never blessed with the presence of Margie Hart.

What has happened to us all is that the entertainment-makers have gone after the juvenile dollar primarily, ignoring the even larger dollar in the button-down pants pockets.

I think we need a change—away from juvenile insipidity and back to the adult idea. The public doesn't scorn the new and vital, no matter what the rating agencies tell their corporate clients. Give it quality as a staple, and quality is what it'll appreciate and patronize.

In television, for instance, there seems to be the impregnable idea that humor is healthy only when sterile, and sick if it's not. This ignores the romantic, yet realistic, sophistication in the vehicles of pre-World War I Europa, especially as exemplified by Ferenc Molnar and Ernst Lubitsch and Peter Altenberg. (And by the famous Budapest club with its even more renowned reminder, "Members may not bring their mistresses as guests unless they are the wives of other members.")

It's indicative of the television phantasmagoria that life among the Ozzie Nelsons can be considered a more exhilarating affair than life in the household of, say the Oscar Levants. The idea of hillbillies in Beverly Hills is supposed to send the customers rolling on their wall-to-wall carpets, but no one can see anything joyous about the Gabors in Bel Air, doing—as Levant once said of Zsa-Zsa—"social work among the rich."

The trouble is, show business starts out every September with new balloons filled with nothing more than hope, sent into the air by optimists, a type once characterized by French playwright Tristan Bernard as someone who falls out of a sixth story window and, as he passes the third floor, mutters, "Well, no broken bones yet."

Maybe what we need instead is a little pessimistic genius, the kind that springs from imagination and courage. It's not really scarce, at all. "There is a thin line between genius and insanity," Oscar Levant once said, "and I have erased it." Where Levant has accomplished, lesser talents can at least try.

So, Love, let us all be true to one another. For the world which seems to lie before us like a land of dreams, will be neither various, nor beautiful, nor new, unless we stop pandering to the low and the base in the upcoming generation which, supposedly, carries our future and our hopes. Unless we raise the levels of taste and imagination, we all may as well head back to the La Brea Tar Pits.

Most audiences may not remember that Jimmy Stewart's rise to fame stems from one of the most dashing lines ever to be spoken on the motion picture screen. It was in, of all things, the old Nelson Eddy-Jeanette MacDonald musical, "Rose-Marie."

Stewart played the heroine's brother, an outlaw. At the end, he is taken by the Royal Mounties and handcuffed. As they go riding off into the sunset, Jimmy asks his captors what they think his fate will be. The answer is that he will probably be hanged for murder.

He thinks that one over, and then smiles. "Well," he murmurs cheerfully, in keeping with the MGM policy of the happy ending, "at least it'll be something different."

Accent On Maturity: There's No Short Cut To Experience

By DIMITRI TIOMKIN

Hollywood.

Today the accent seems to be on youth, whether it's politics or pictures.

As an acknowledged authority on accents, I'd like to say that this is all an illusion. Maturity is more important than ever to Hollywood film production, if you'll pardon my slight accent.

Let me illustrate from my own experience. When I arrived in New York from Europe, I was filled with dreams of America. I wept at the sight of the Statue of Liberty. I gaped at the drugstore sodafountains, the hot dog and the sidewalk shoeshine stands.

Then I walked along Broadway at night and stared up at the flashing lights. I visited Carnegie Hall, and marvelled at the long lines waiting to hear Paul Whiteman and his orchestra. I met friends from the Conservatory of Music in the old country.

Aha! These old friends did not appear so old any more. They had hair of red, brown, black and blonde. I had never seen such gay colors of hair on many of them. I had never seen any hair on a few of them.

So I discovered that my friends wore hairpieces to conceal their age. Being young—that was essential! Particularly was this necessary in order to obtain even a small measure of employment in bands! But because the youth was an illusion in many cases, success depended on talent. The talent depended on experience. The experience depended on maturity.

Even an accent can be a sign of maturity. An accent denotes experience in another culture. I found it that way when I arrived in Hollywood. So a few characters joked about my accent, and I was in good company. They joked about Sam Goldwyn and Ratoff and Curtiz too.

So today Hollywood is sometimes afraid of becoming too "old" in its leaders. But it can't help speaking in an accent of the past. Is this bad? Let me tell you that the industry always needs new faces, young talents — but could not exist if the youngsters could not call on the accumulated wisdom and know-how of the old-timers.

To me, an accent always was an advantage. At first a novelty, something new. Maybe like youth it helped open the doors. Like a hairpiece! Now — today — they listen to me because I have become an "old pro," have won a few Oscars and been nominated for many more in the musical field.

If I had depended on the novelty of an accent, the novelty would have worn thin. Like a worn-out tire. Then, poof!

Do I make my point? New talent and energy are needed to keep motion pictures alive, to keep the creative torch alight. But new talent is created through the efforts of mature guidance.

Always, The Sages

This is true in government too, of course. Where would the newcomers to national and world politics be without the sage advice of Bernard Baruch, Hoover, Truman, Eisenhower, Churchill, DeGaulle, Adenauer? And another elder statesman speaks with quite an accent from the capital of the new state of Israel!

Profundity . . . bah! I hate it. I can't even pronounce it. But I can't avoid it in arriving at a simple conclusion. Hollywood is no different from Washington, London or Moscow, for that matter, in depending on the sagacity and leadership of maturity.

The world of the arts, philosophies and sciences contributes greatly to the specialized medium of motion pictures. "For whom the bell tolls," does that get at the heart of the matter?

Any part of the entertainment world I talk about is all parts of the world. So I get profound again. With an accent yet, only this time it is the accent of experience. Start with the writer. The writer of words, the writer of music. They speak different languages but they say the same things.

Young writers sometimes get "instant maturity." I use an old advertising gimmick-phrase, yes? But they get the instant-power by absorbing the techniques of the old ones like Hemingway and Faulkner.

Where would Tennessee Williams have been as a revolutionary young dramatist, if it hadn't been for the matured Eugene O'Neill and Ibsen even?

Who do we call on for material and guidance when the chips are down on the green cloth? Not on the avant-garde youth-poet, if we're looking for a poet and a historian. On Carl Sandburg, naturally. Even if he talks with an American accent hard for Brooklynites and Southerners to understand.

Sandburg — who in his young days must have leaned on the strength of Walt Whitman, a man with a white hairpiece, nature-grown on his chin . . . or maybe on the sagacious philosopher Ralph Waldo Emerson. (I talk with an accent. But I don't listen with one.)

So you keep going back to find maturity always proving itself. In the writings of giants like Dickens, Hugo, France, Dumas, Twain, and the classicists before them.

I am wandering? What is wandering? So the films haven't depended on material produced by such men? What screenwriter is original? Even Shakespeare lifted material from public domain.

As For Music

Motion picture music — finally we get to my own backyard—what musician could get by today without the legacies left by Wagner, Verdi, Sibelius, and you name your other favorite old men of music.

Where would the young film tunesmiths be without the "backbone" created over the years by the creations of Jerome Kern, Victor Herbert, and Irving Berlin?

Pardon my accent on profundity again, but I would like to answer the critics' evaluation of the so-called "new wave" of cinema art originating in Europe and the Orient. Who would discount the talents of moviemakers emerging from production centres elsewhere in the world?

But having long been in "active service" in motion pictures, I can observe that Hollywood remains the world film capital.

So why is this so? Because Hollywood is old enough to throw away its hairpiece. Hollywood can talk with a cosmopolitan accent. It can produce enough topnotch feature pictures to satisfy world audiences. Year in and year out. From generation to generation. This is so.

The "new wave" is for the minute, maybe the hour. Hollywood is for yesterday, today and tomorrow. Hollywood keeps coming on in the stretch.

This is so because of the great producers, directors, and studio executives who built and keep sustaining the Hollywood film industry.

Any gains in the cinema arts abroad are a direct result of the pioneering of other generations of Hollywood moviemakers. Could there be an Ingmar Bergman today if there never had been a D. W. Griffith? No.

Actors

In the field of acting, some early day techniques appear amusing today. But those performers were creating acting methods for an entirely new entertainment medium. Today's refined techniques were founded through the silent film experiments. The players who look so great today owe much to yesteryear's Chaplin, Garbo, Lon Chaney et al.

So we get back to the "backbone" idea. Who are today's actors of a stature to give solid prestige and lasting quality to films? I could nominate a score of men and women.

In direction, maturity again pays off. At the boxoffice and in artistic success. It will be many years before we can balance new directors against time-proven abilities of John Ford, Alfred Hitchcock, George Stevens, William Wyler, Billy Wilder — for it will take years for newcomers to build comparable screen credits.

So we come to the crowing phase of our discussion of the film industry's maturing process—the actual production phase, still dominated by the presence of continued influence of veteran titans. Who need recount their accomplishments? Without the past wisdom of some of them and the present mature direction of the others, Hollywood would not exist today.

I think—no, I am convinced—that one of our main concerns now should be to perpetuate the film know-how accumulated by the journeymen, the veterans, of our art-industry of motion pictures.

Talented youngsters of today will become mature leaders of tomorrow. But we have to keep a "chain of command" going. We must communicate experience from one generation to another.

A BOOK IS BORN

By BETH BROWN

The birth of a book is like having a baby.

The seed for the idea is planted first. Soon the sense of quickening tells you that the child is on its way. The months of weary waiting follow. Then comes the time of labor.

It may be a hard pregnancy or an easy one, a short one or a long one. Complications may set in. Maybe the baby is born deformed. It may be dead. Then again, it may arrive, vibrant with life, kicking its little legs into a new world, raring to ride on a blaze of glory and confident it will be welcome, happy, successful and rich.

My novel "Riverside Drive" was optioned for a play. In four months I expected to be wearing a white sable car coat in a white Thunderbird. However, there was a delay. The producer demanded changes in Act. 3. The star demanded changes in Act. 2. The director asked for changes in Act 1. Then the backer came along and did a major surgery on my play.

Some 14 months later, I was on rewrite No. 10, aching all over with writer's cramp in my effort to please every taste. Then the option ran out. I went back to my first draft, I found a new producer who didn't want a single word changed until all of the backing was up.

One day, I walked into his office. He was busy telephoning an angel. It seemed that the angel had plenty of moola and my producer was plenty polite. He listened respectfully. Now and then, he managed a yes, no, no, yes, yes, no, yes. Finally, after 20 minutes of one-sided yes-manship, my producer managed to cut in with the classic line: "Are you investing in the show?"

The answer was no. Whereupon, the producer made the classic retort: "Then I'm not interested in your opinion!"

That taught me a lesson. When you accept a free opinion, be sure there's a certified check attached!

Advice To The Book-Lorn

I had an appointment with Robert Greene, VIP at Winston.

I had an idea for a new kind of dog book—an encyclopedia for the masses, not the classes, with everything in it from how to choose a dog to how to cremate our four-legged brother. (It's against the law to bury your pooch in your own backyard.)

"Everybody's Dog Book" was a natural not only for bookstore sale but also for premium tieups. Between its covers was such wisdom as how to travel with a dog; 1,001 dog names; a cookbook for dogs," how to be his lawyer and draw up your dog's will—either leaving his all to you or all your money to him.

However, at the moment, the great American Dog Book was only in the idea stage. All I had was the title as I slithered through the crowded cocktail room lively with 5 o'clock lushes. Mr. Greene had brought his sales manager with him. (Take a piece of parenthetic advice from me. If you want to close a deal, never let your principal bring along a third party.)

Mr. Greene was very cordial. I figured I was in. Then the sales manager horned in. The firm didn't want a book. They didn't want a dog book. They were overstocked on authors. They didn't even want — quite incredibly — Beth Brown.

How about another drink? No, thanks. Too bad the book business was too bad.

I let them talk but I didn't listen. I was very, very, very busy. My fingers were on that piece of paper in my pocket. "Everybody's Dog Book." That's what it said. That's what I heard. That's what I saw.

Maybe I was practicing voodoo. Anyway, before we parted, I had a greenlight from Mr. Greene for "Everybody's Dog Book."

Good times or bad, it sold a lot of copies in hardback. It is now enjoying a paperback showcasing with a fancy cover and a Collier imprint.

That taught me another lesson. Anything you can conceive—you can achieve!

Let It Rain

Then I met "The Rainmaker." This guy was part Indian, part Hollywood cowboy, part Beverly Hills millionaire crooner—and—He Could Make Rain! Well, why not make a book about him? I did.

I called it "Lady Hobo" because there was a gal in it who hoboed from Brooklyn to Sunset Blvd. at the head of a hobo parade. I also carved up a murder, an army of crop pickers, a smalltime carnival, a nurse, a babe in arms and the Boulder Dam. I gave the book the works.

Of course, my theme was all about the Rainmaker who challenged the millionaire waterlords and their monopoly on what came down for free. The hard-hit ranchers had called on him to make it rain and save their farms and fortunes. My hero made it rain. The deluge was delivered. I didn't spare the ink. What's more, my hero refused to make it stop raining until the water monopoly was outlawed and water-for-free was the word.

What a story! What a movie it would make. I could see the line at Radio City Music Hall. In my opinion, "Lady Hobo" was a masterpiece and I brought the book to Hollywood, figuring I had a top picture sale for sure. Hollywood was not so sure.

One year later, New York City was fighting a drought. Sheepishly, the city fathers of the great metropolis announced they were hiring a professional rainmaker. That started the vogue of rainmaking songs and yarns which have not been turned off to date. Somebody else's "Rainmaker" appeared on Broadway. Next thing I knew, I walked into a billpost advertising "A Hatful of Rain."

Another lesson. I had given premature birth to a book. Yep! "Lady Hobo," was born ahead of the times. Hollywood was not ready then.

Small Epilog

Writing a book is a lonely business. So is doing a show, playing a part, beating a drum, making a record. You're strictly on your own — and that's being plenty lonely. But if ever it gets you down, bo, look at the signpost up in the sky. A poet wrote in the stars:

Solitude is to the soul
What space is to the growing tree.

When Chi Was a Crossroad & Glamor Converged On Dearborn Station

By JACK McPHAUL

Chicago.

As a newsgatherer VARIETY is 18 years my senior. It's possible that on this joint anniversary—VARIETY's 58th and my 40th—we may part company in the ways of observance.

VARIETY may elect to peer dynamically into the future. My choice—inspired by the recollection of a lovely young queen forlornly without court—is a retreat down the slopes of yesteryear. Beckoning to me are the days of my youth when radio too was young; the silent movies were in their golden era and, appropriate to my own pursuits, show business and its people were a daily notation on the city desk assignment sheet.

Memories were stirred recently by a charming countenance in the reception room of the Chicago Sun-Times. Its owner has been seen in tv plays and the movies. Sitting alone, save for a bored pressagent, she awaited her turn to be received by a columnist.

I was tempted to tell her regretfully, "My dear, you're 40 years too late. In the 1920s you wouldn't have needed to come to us; we would have gone to you."

On Mr. Hearst's Chicago morning paper, the now long gone Herald-Examiner, I had the movie star-at-the-depot beat. I was part of a corps of some six reporters representing as many papers. Today the lad on the Washington beat hurries away from a Presidential press conference to catch himself on vid tape propounding a 200-word question to JFK. We, too, could gratify the ham in man. Those of us who went down to the Santa Fe tracks to meet the Chief could boast that we had heard Alice Joyce speak. It was a time of simple pleasures.

And Also Monte Blue

The papers were not snobbish. Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Clara Bow, John Gilbert, Rudolph Valentino drew the press brigade full strength, but too there was always a respectable turnout for somewhat less glittering names meaningless now to the Frankie Avalon set. Our readers were not denied the knowledge in Page 3 quotes, Page 1 even if the Q. & A. was especially piquant, that Chicago had been graced briefly by the presence of the sisters Gish and Talmadge, Renee Adoree, Alma Rubens, Ricardo Cortez, Kenneth Harlan, Monte Blue, Bessie Love, Marie Prevost, Lois Wilson, Mae Marsh, Leatrice Joy, Milton Sills, J. Walter Kerrigan, Julia Faye. Just a sampling that of the bewitching and the debonair who gave us three hours of their time.

They came in from Hollywood on the Chief (or was it the Super-Chief even then?) at 9 a.m. and left for the east at noon on the 20th Century. I don't know how warm was the embrace at Grand Central but we of the Second City, conscious of our readers' wideeyed enchantment with all things Hollywood, dug eagerly into their hearts and minds and noted carefully what they wore and murmured.

An investment by Mr. Hearst added another rose to the welcoming garland. He acquired radio station WEBH, afterward KYW, which had its studio in the Edgewater Beach Hotel. A secondary studio was established in the Hearst Bldg. It was my job to assure the stars that their morning would not be complete without a radio chat.

The programming was informal. Arriving at the Hearst studio with an actress named Gertrude Olmstead I signaled Barney McCarville, the announcer, that a new program was ready for the air. Barney was reading into the microphone a chapter from a novel. Every day he read a chapter. He stuck a book mark in the novel and interviewed Miss Olmstead. We departed and he returned to his novel.

Barney had been a copyboy on

(Continued on page 53)

Buys Gem, Will Reopen

Quitman, Tex.

Theo Miller has sold his Gem Theatre here to R. I. Lowe, who has been operating a theatre in South Houston. Miller had shuttered the Gem about five years ago due to ill health after operating it for more than 15 years.

Lowe will move here with his family and will reopen the Gem after renovation.

MORE IN '64!

FROM

JOSEPH E. LEVINE AND EMBASSY PICTURES!

Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow

ZULU

Three Penny Opera

The Empty Canvas

FEDERICO FELLINI'S 8½

a Ghost at Noon

ONLY ONE NEW YORK

CASANOVA

A HOUSE IS NOT A HOME

IMPERIAL WOMAN

The Major and the Private

The Adventurers

the Easy Life

SANDS OF KALAHARI

CRAZY DESIRE

DWARFING THE MIGHTIEST!

Joseph E. Levine presents

Starring

Stanley Baker · Jack Hawkins · Ulla Jacobsson · James Booth · Michael Caine

Foreword Spoken by Richard Burton

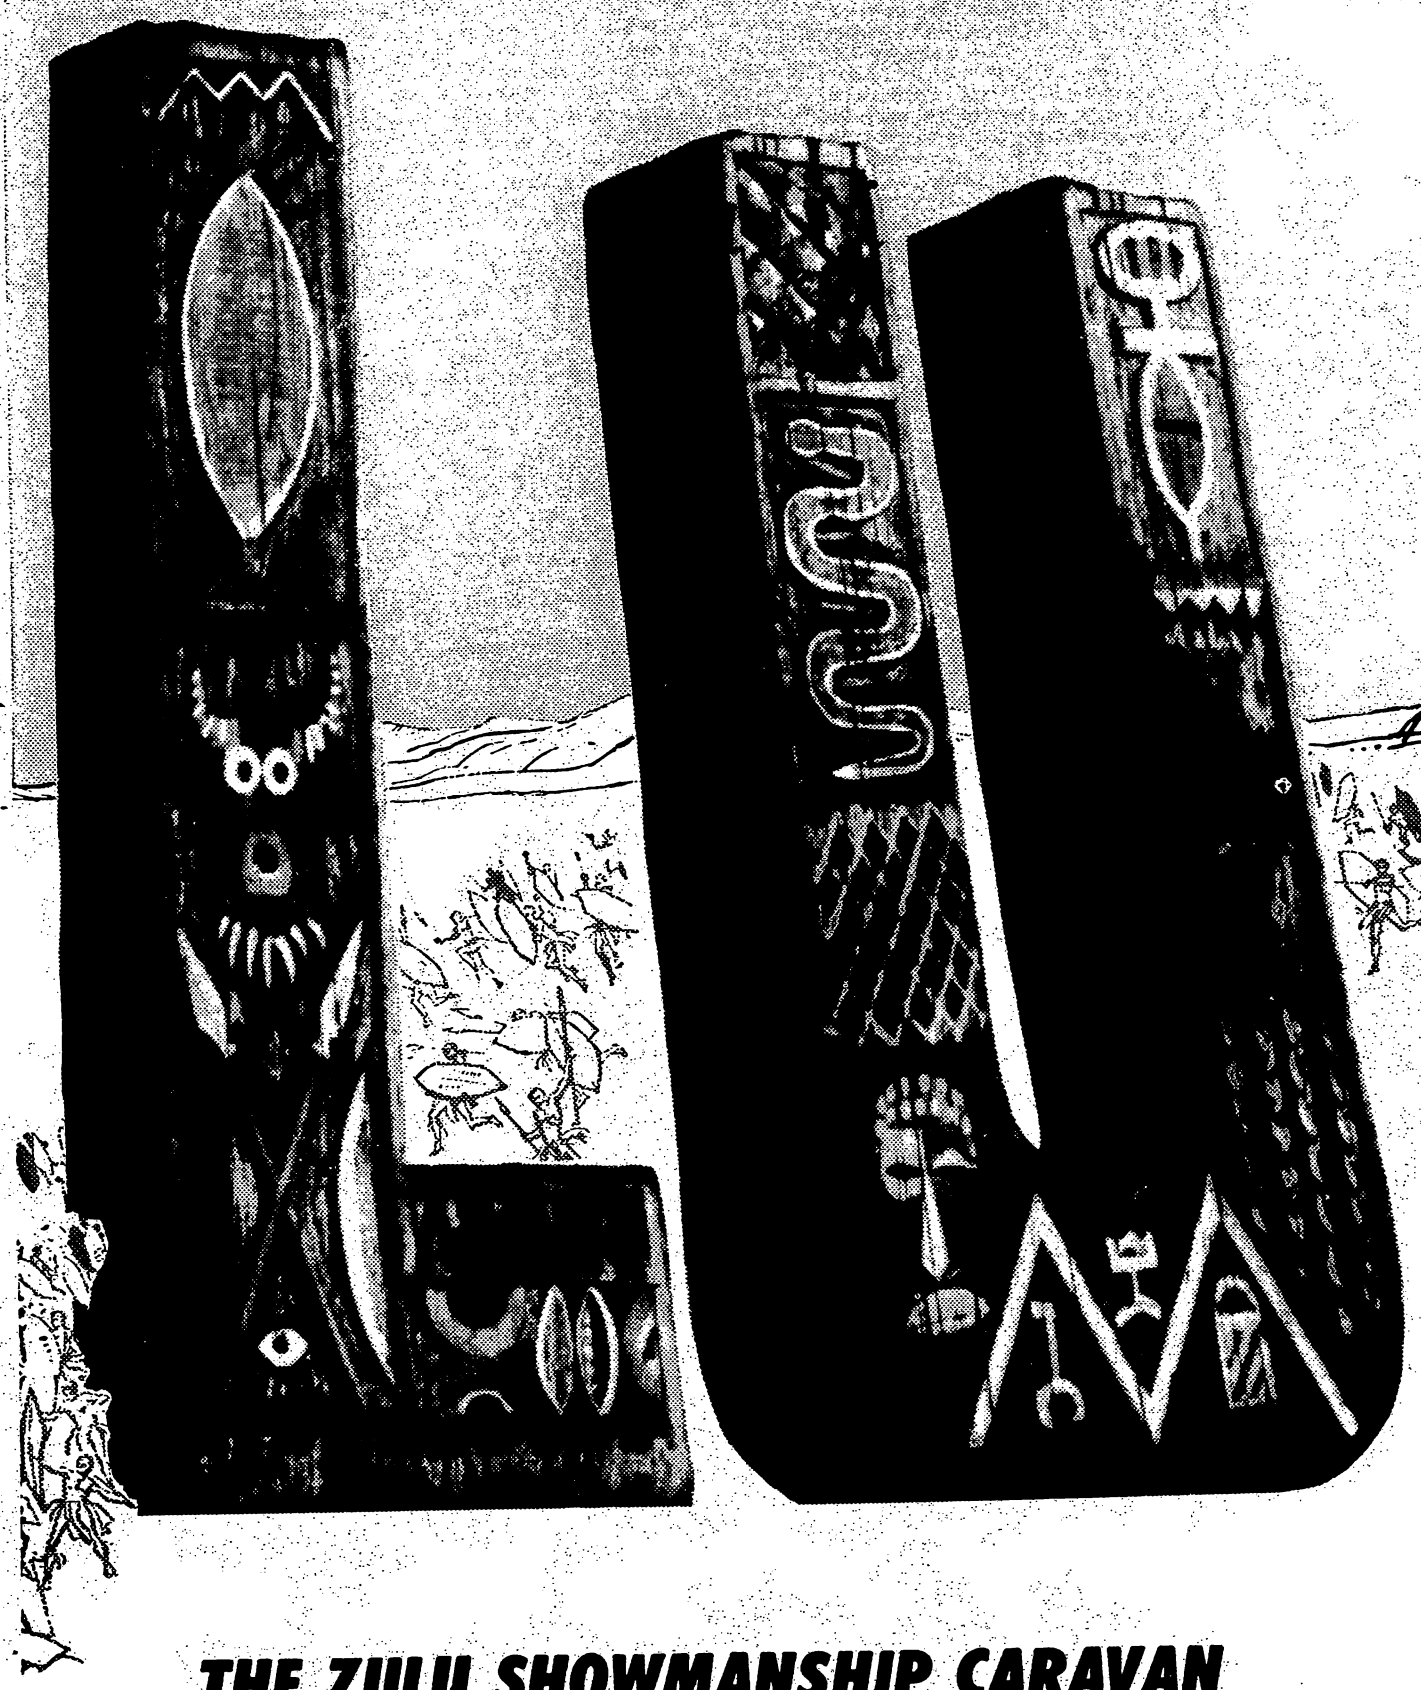
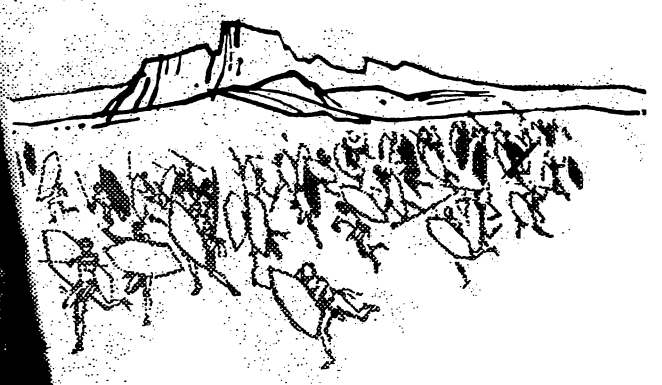
Screenplay by John Prebble and Cy Endfield · Suggested by an Article Written by John Prebble · Directed by Cy Endfield · A Diamond Films Ltd. Production · An Embassy Pictures Release ·

TOWERING OVER THE GREATEST!





A Stanley Baker–
Cy Endfield Production

TECHNICOLOR®
TECHNIRAMA®

THE ZULU SHOWMANSHIP CARAVAN IS THUNDERING ACROSS THE COUNTRY!

NEW YORK – DECEMBER 16 • CHICAGO – DECEMBER 17
SAN FRANCISCO – JANUARY 6 • LOS ANGELES – JANUARY 7
DALLAS – JANUARY 8 • ATLANTA – JANUARY 9 • KANSAS CITY – JANUARY 10

BOOK IT NOW FROM EMBASSY!

Recall On Broadway That Was

When Five Young Men of Manhattan Chronicled the Gay White Way (And Later, the European) Show Biz Scene

By JOHN BYRAM

How it got its name and even how it came into being no one seems to know positively. Richard Watts Jr., the learned drama critic of the N.Y. Evening Post, believes that it was Howard Barnes who dubbed our little group of serious eaters, drinkers and opinion-voicers, The Mugs Marching & Chowder Club. Another school of thought holds that it was Don Skene who may have christened the organization.

The Mugs were five, and five we remained. We neither added to nor subtracted from our original membership, although certain privileged characters were permitted to regard themselves as "honorary" members and there were several young ladies who, by special dispensation, enjoyed the status of favored appendages.

Besides Watts and Barnes, who were then—the time was 1928-29—associated with the drama and motion picture departments of the N.Y. Herald Tribune, and Skene, a sports writer on that paper who specialized in boxing, the other members of the quintet were John K. Hutchens, now an editor of the Book-of-the-Month Club, and myself. Hutchens and I then were drama editors of the N.Y. Times, a newspaper which, except for the Sunday drama section, was somewhat more staid in character than it is today. Also smaller in circulation and bulk, although it had realized its position as the most powerful paper in New York.

We Mugs were all in our early or mid-20s, three of us were reasonably fancy free, and, though not overpaid, we all had jobs to which a certain glamor attached. At most times New York seemed to be our oyster. Was it any wonder, then, that we regarded the dashing sports reporter-character of Katherine Brush's novel, "Young Man of Manhattan," published circa 1930, as leading a fairly dull life?

In the 1920s the theatre was far more active than it is at present, particularly the Broadway stage. Between 260 and 270 new shows tested their skill and luck in New York each season, and there were around 70 playhouses. The result was that the second-string critics' positions which Watts, Barnes, Hutchens and I filled, in addition to our editorial and reportorial duties—reviewed almost as many new productions in the course of a season as did the top critics did.

Somewhere, somehow, as result of dreary evenings in the theatre The Mugs was born among Watts and Barnes, as deputies for Percy Hammond; and Hutchens and I as Brooks Atkinson's beadles. Skene, who usually accompanied Watts or Barnes to the openings when not occupied with a slugfest at Madison Square Garden or another of the local arenas or stadia, was in at the birth. He was a welcome and witty member.

Legit, No 'Invalid' Then!

Our theatregoing was all dismal in such now forgotten playhouses as Wallack's, the Nora Bayes, the Mayfair, the Princess, the Comedy and Daly's 63d St. Periodically the booking schedule would bring two or three fairly important openings on the same evening, sometimes more. Once, in a Christmas week, there were 11 openings on the same night. When a conflict of major premieres occurred we second-stringers got a break. Thus it was that Watts and I reviewed "Show Boat" for our respective journals while Hammond and Atkinson went to Philip Barry's "Paris Bound." Thus it was that we went to the star-studded revival of "Trelawney of the 'Wells,'" while the Messrs. Hammond and Atkinson were otherwise engaged. There was a host of other consequential plays that either flourished or withered after receiving the critical consideration of Watts, Hutchens and me, to say nothing of Alison Smith, John Chapman, Ward Morehouse, Finley Peter Dunne Jr., Stephen Rathbun, Wilella Waldorf, and Katherine Zimmerman, other second flight critics who did not have the good fortune to be Mugs.

We occupied choice fauteils, even at the biggest hits, and were fawned upon by press agents and managers, the first of whom had their eyes upon stories in the Sunday drama sections. "Catching up" it was called, and it was a necessary and pleasant part of our jobs.

Famed Theatre Landmarks

In retrospect, there were still many legitimate theatres on Broadway—the Knickerbocker, at 38th St., the Moorish structure that housed the Casino at 39th, the lovely Empire at 40th, the George M. Cohan, between 42d and 43d, the Gaiety, at 46th St., the Broadway-facing Globe (now the Lunt-Fontanne) on the north side of 46th St., the Central at 47th St., and, further uptown, the Winter Garden, the cathedral-like (now tv) Hammerstein and the Broadway.

It was the era of the Wrigley tropical fish that, in the '30s, graced the then new Criterion film house across from the Astor? Before that, there had been a chewing gum man atop the Shanley Bldg. where the Paramount Bldg. now stands and a kitten and the silk thread electric sign facing the old Times flatiron.

Skene's value as a member of the Mugs was early demonstrated. He provided the headquarters for our raffish organization, being the only one of us who actually lived in the Times Square district. Since the Paramount Hotel in West 46th Street was not too far from the Garden, Stillman's Gym and other 8th Ave. rendezvous of the pugilistic profession, he had established a beachead there. It was at the Paramount Hotel—our Skene Manor—that we forgathered once a week before sallying forth to carry out the Marching & Chowder aspects of the group's full title. Meeting time was around 12 o'clock, usually on Tuesday. The hour was selected because, being morning newspapermen, we slept late; the day because there were apt to be more openings on Monday nights than Tuesday and also because later in the week we were occupied with getting out the Sunday drama sections. Tuesday, generally speaking, was the best day to relax. We tried to get to our offices to pick up the day's activities by 4 p.m., and generally we made it.

Skene was a quiet, unassuming chap, but witty when he got going. Hailing originally from Oregon, he had traveled a bit and had worked on the Paris edition of the Chicago Tribune, which gave him a certain cachet among us. Several years later, not too long before his death, he wrote "The Red Tiger," a novel satirizing boxing. While Skene himself was not the most colorful appearing of characters—he was slight, ash blondish, with steely blue eyes and a baggard face built around high cheek bones— he filtered the colorful lingo of sports, Broadway and the demi-world in which he moved through a refining process that was peculiarly his own. Out of it came a line of highly individual conversation that those who knew him well always recall, just as they will recall his innate sweetness and gentleness.

Resisting A Shubert Opening

One night he was invited to the gala opening of a new musical show, the kind which draws swarms of curiosity seekers and keeps the efficient mounted police—"Whalen's Cossacks," we called them then — busy. Waiting for Watts, Skene got caught up in the crowd. When a perspiring mountie kept ordering it back, Skene with difficulty maintained his place in the vanguard. After all, he was an invited guest, but his companion had his ticket. It became a test of will between Skene and the Cossack. Finally he was taken to the West 47th St. police station, which was full of his pals, and from which he was returned in time to see most of the show. His brush with the law, his championship of the rights of man, eventually became one of Skene's proudest boasts.

"I was arrested," he said, "for resisting a Shubert opening."

The only woman to be made an honorary member of the Mugs was Alison Smith, a brilliant and perceptive critic, who was the assistant on the Morning World. Alison came to a number of our meetings, gamely drank the gin and added such a touch of feminine refinement to our tables at Voisin's and the Marguery that the maitres d'hotel greeted us with unwanted cordiality.

An Hibernian Evening

Sometimes Mugs' tempers grew warm. Watts was the most Hibernian. Once when St. Patrick's Day fell on a Tuesday meeting day, we decided that a fitting celebration was in order, as opposition to the parade on 5th Ave. Accordingly, arrangements were made with Duffy's Tavern to roast a suckling pig and provide the necessary quantities of Irish whiskey. J. Brooks Atkinson — he later dropped the "J"—as stalwart a non-wearer of the green as ever sat in judgment on a performance of the Irish Players, was invited to be our guest of honor.

On the preceding evening the Theatre Guild had produced an anti-war play from the German, "Miracle at Verdun," which had been highly acclaimed at its pre-

(Continued on page 48)

German 'Crimis' 50 Years Old

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt.

It's just 50 years since the first West German detective story — dubbed "crimi" here—was turned out. And it still looks as if the best way to be sure of recouping the investment for a German crimi is "The Secret Villa," based upon an idea by German actor Ernst Reicher, coproduced with German director Joe May.

Centering around detective Stuart Webbs, a sort of early German Dick Tracy, Reicher created the figure that went on to boxoffice fame in 50 followups as the series expanded. Biggest German money-maker of the lot, and one of the most successful of the World War I era, was "The Armored Vault."

When the profitable producing pair of May & Ernest Reicher split about 1915, latter continued with the Stuart Webbs series and May branched out with a competing detective, Joe Deebs, played by German character actor Harry Liedtke.

About 50% of all the pictures turned out by the German film industry during the period of World War I were detective stories. But along about 1919, the colorful figure of the rough and ready detective fell into disrepute and was replaced by the intellectual type of crime-solver who relied more on his deductive powers and less on his revolver.

Criminal comedies were the next development, and then the German scripters, apparently tired of their homegrown heroes, turned to Artur Conan Doyle, Edgar Wallace and Agatha Christie for inspiration. The authors have been filmized more in West Germany than they have in their native lands, with no less than 14 Edgar Wallace pix made in Germany.

Now the television producers have turned to the crimis of late. The competing First German TV Network and Second Network concurred in one feature of their continuing rivalry — the shows that captured the highest percentage of viewers on both of the "contrasting" nets were criminal films.

First Net's most popular series of all time was "The Scarf Murders," by British author Francis Durbridge, and the most appealing series on the less-than-a-year-old Second Net was "The Roehrbach Case," dramatization in three parts of a recent actual German murder case.

Current production schedule of films for the German cinemas, too, shows that the crimis as a class probably outnumber any other home-made category of pictures. High in the running are that 14th filmization of an Edgar Wallace theme, "The Indian Handkerchief," "Masked Ball at Scotland Yard," "Murder by Fog," and a remake of that evil "Jack the Ripper."

MAKING IT THE HARD WAY

The Practicability of Lowering Your Literati Sights to Commercial Realities

By WILLIAM WOOLFOLK

The way is hard. The way is steep and narrow and full of thorns, the destination unsure, and there are no comfort stations.

If you want to succeed in what misguided people call the arts, you have to stop looking for shortcuts, for conveyances, for downhill slopes. When you set your feet on this rocky climb, it is uphill all the way. There is only one resolve that will see you through: aim high. This advice won't keep you from falling on your face but it's your only chance to get where you're going.

Those who write for the little lit'rary magazines, or even the little poetry journals, don't need this advice. These people (I was one of them, lo, many years) are aiming high. Their eyes are fixed on the topmost peaks of Parnassus—Shakespeare, Dante, Cervantes. I know too well how they feel. At that period, in moments of self-doubt (24 hours a day, waking and sleeping) I reconciled myself to falling short of Shakespeare, Dante, et al, down around, say, Balzac, Dickens, Shaw and sometimes in moments of true despair, I would resign myself to a lower niche in the Hall of Immortality, along with Hemingway, Conrad, Stevenson.

In the meantime, in common with other aspiring young literary people, I kept turning out my socially conscious ballads, charming tales for the young, fugues for seven flageolets, and stories and plays in Joycean dialects or Esperanto.

Sooner or later, reality came tumbling in—like an avalanche. I discovered, as so many others have, that occasional $10 checks from "experimental literary magazines" would not keep me in velvetsmoking jackets and meerschaum pipes. I discovered that the usual payment for poetry is in subscriptions and that my complimentary subscriptions were beginning to exceed my probable lifetime, not to mention the lifetime of the poetry journals themselves.

At this point I made a separate peace with the world of commerce. I sold out.

But, with commercial success, there returned an old and ingrained prejudice in favor of better things—an attempt to capture at least some life in my creative net. I no longer aim at Shakespeare, Dante or Cervantes, because I know, in a way no beginner can possibly know, the rare and unique gifts necessary to produce such work. (Besides, could they tell it in 51 minutes with time out for four commercials?)

Immorality, Or?

We all yearn to find a place among the immortals, to impress the world with our uniqueness, our inward glory. But too many of us fail to learn the basic hard fundamentals of how to express what we are and what we feel. We mumble our eloquence. We make what Thomas Wolfe called "great goat cries"—in goat language. The number of intellectually gifted goats is few. We have to learn to talk to people, people who want intelligibility from their entertainment, even some insight into the difficult business of how to live a life.

There is a quotation which I have only a slippery hold on, which runs like this: He who aims his arrow at the sun will shoot higher than he who aims but at a bush.

How high do we want to aim?

The answer is, hopefully, clear: to do your best with the powers you have. These may prove to be feeble enough but the world is short of Samsons. Put your frail shoulder to the wheel within an accepted commercial framework, in the novel, tv, Broadway, mass circulation magazines. You might move more weight than you think. Having learned to write for these media, you may be able to elevate the standards, to put into whatever you do some part of yourself.

This is the time for someone to ask: What do you know about it? Who are you?

I am a nearly anonymous author. I have written poetry for poetry journals, literary short stories for little magazines, slick magazine articles and stories, three suspense novels. I spent, or wasted, almost 10 years in trying to win a foothold in the magazine publishing business. When my foot slipped, I had to go back to freelance writing.

It was then I had to ask myself what kind of writing I wanted to do. Was I ready to stand back to back with Tolstoy and measure myself against the giants? Or must I return to the crass commercial level? Friends in tv were telling me how green those pastures were, once you got a foot in the doorway. But did I want to write for tv? Again, the writer's dilemma.

Today I am writing for tv. I've written a number of scripts for the leading dramatic shows on the air, and I have found, almost without exception, that the men who run these shows are as anxious to produce a quality—even a literary—product as any little-magazine litterateurs. The reason they don't do it very often is that there just aren't enough people around who can give it to them. Since the days of ancient Carthage, there never has been. There is an abundance of genius—usually misunderstood—but there is a criminal shortage of talent.

The Mike Todd Novel

I've also written a novel—"My Name Is Morgan" (published by Doubleday, later a selection of the Literary Guild and the Dollar Book Club, and shortly to be published in paperback by Pocket Books—adv.). Although with my miraculous sense of timing it came out during the newspaper strike and was therefore never reviewed by the influential news media, the book has been a success.

And the writing of that novel perhaps illustrates something of what I mean.

I had written suspense paperbacks and knew I could do that, so there was nothing to be gained

(Continued on page 48)

JFK LED YANK VIPs WHO CAME TO BERLIN

Berlin.

An American, the late President John F. Kennedy, was the most prominent and popular visitor with Berliners in 1963. Americans head the lists of tourists coming to what's often called "the world's most interesting city" or "the city where the East meets the West" or even "Washington's pet city." In 1963, W-Berlin saw an unusually large contingent of American theatrical personalities and ensembles. Here they are, tactfully arranged in alphabetical order (and pardon if this or that has been left out):

Franz Allers, Louis Armstrong, George Balanchine, Lex Barker, Barry Sisters, Count Basie, Pat Boone, Nancy Cooke, Eddie Constantine, Chubby Checker, Joan Crawford, Joan Carell ("Miss World"), Sammy Davis, Gloria Davy, Joey Dee, & Starlighters, William Dieterle, Walt Disney, William Dooley, Duke Ellington, Jose Ferrer, Ella Fitzgerald, Sean Flynn, Hugo Fregonese, Rudolf Friml, Andor Foldes, Jakob Gimpel, Paulette Goddard, Goldie & The Gingerbreds, Harlem Globetrotters, Tippi Hedren, Paul Hindemith, "Holiday On Ice," John Huston, Vera Kalman, Lewis Kerner, King Sisters, Susan Kohner, Stanley Kramer, Evelyn Lear, Lotte Lenya, Anato Litvak, Harold Lloyd, Frederick Loewe, Guy Madison, Karl Malden, Don McNeill, Jayne Mansfield, Shirley MacLaine, Seymour Mayer, Darious Milhaud, William Milie, Thelonius Monk, Grete Mosheim, Nicholas Nabocov, Paul Taylor Dance Co., Joe Pasternak, Anthony Perkins, Peter, Paul & Mary, Oscar Peterson Trio, Dick Price, Juliet Prowse, Sidney Poitier, Milton R. Rackmil, Erich Maria Remarque, Nicholas Reisini, Gottfried Reinhardt, Martin Ritt, Sonny Rollins, Roger Sessions, Sam Spiegel, John Steinbeck, Peter Tewsbury, Robert Trehy, Astrid Varney, Josef von Sternberg, Peter van Eyck, Ernst Verebes, Gustav Wally, Colette Warren, Bill Wilder, Carl Zuckmayer.

YEAR 'CLEO' ROCKED THE BARGE

ALL-TIME TOP FILM GROSSERS

[OVER $4,000,000, U.S.-CANADA RENTALS]

The great, all-time, rental-earning motion pictures in the domestic (U.S.-Canada) market are listed below in the yearly correction and updating of the data long an exclusive VARIETY feature in the Anniversary Edition.

VARIETY'S: All-Time Grossers include only films which have touched, or passed, $4,000,000. Similiarly, in the other related annual compilation, the Yearly Tops, the standard of qualification is taken as at least $1,000,000. These two fixed rules should be borne in mind. Readers sometimes look in vain for certain titles they regard as "great films" but which have not met the revenue minima as established for the purpose of giving these compilations a realistic character.

Students of the silent film era invariably take notice of the absence from this All-Time Grossers list of D. W. Griffith's epic of 1915, "Birth of A Nation." A further explanation on this deliberate omission: nobody knows what "Birth" grossed. It may well have exceeded $50,000,000. If so, Griffith rather than Selznick would rate the laurel for the number one superblockbuster boxoffice picture. However, in the absence of any verification, VARIETY has chosen from the beginning not to include the Griffith work.

Gone With the Wind (Selznick-MGM) (1939)	$41,200,000
Ben-Hur (MGM) (1959)	38,000,000
10 Commandments (DeMille-Par) (1957)	34,200,000
Around World in 80 Days (Todd-AO-UA) (1957)	22,000,000
West Side Story (Mirisch-7 Arts-UA) (1961)	19,000,000
The Robe (Ross-20th) (1953)	17,500,000
How West Was Won (Cinerama-MGM) (1962)	17,000,000
South Pacific (Magna-20th) (1958)	16,300,000
Cleopatra (Wanger-20th) (1963)	15,700,000*
Longest Day (Zanuck-20th) (1963)	15,250,000
Bridge on River Kwai (Spiegel-Col) (1958)	15,000,000
Lawrence of Arabia (Spiegel-Lean-Col) (1963)	15,000,000
Spartacus (Bryna-U) (1961)	14,000,000
Greatest Show on Earth (DeMille-Par) (1952)	12,800,000
Guns of Navarone (Foreman-Col) (1961)	12,500,000
This Is Cinerama (C'rama) (1952)	12,500,000
From Here to Eternity (Col) (1953)	12,200,000
Giant (Stevens-Ginsberg-WB) (1956)	12,000,000
White Christmas (Dolan-Berlin-Par) (1954)	12,000,000
El Cid (Bronston-AA) (1962)	12,000,000
Samson and Deliah (DeMille-Par) (1950)	11,500,000
Duel in the Sun (Selznick-SRO) (1947)	11,300,000
Best Years of Our Lives (Goldwyn-RKO) (1947)	11,300,000
Peyton Place (Wald-20th) (1958)	11,000,000
Irma La Douce (Wilder-Mirisch-UA) 1963)	11,000,000
Quo Vadis (MGM) (1952)	10,500,000
Sayonara (Goetz-WB) (1958)	10,500,000
Snow White (Disney-RKO) (1937)	10,300,000
Cinerama Holiday (C'rama) (1955)	10,000,000
Mutiny on the Bounty (MGM) (1962)	9,800,000
Shaggy Dog (Disney-BV) (1959)	9,600,000
Operation Petticoat (Granart-U) (1960)	9,500,000
The Apartment (Mirisch-Wilder-UA) (1960)	9,300,000
Parent Trap (Disney-BV) (1961)	9,300,000
Seven Wonders of World (C'rama) (1956)	9,300,000
Absent-Minded Professor (Disney-BV) (1961)	9,000,000
Psycho (Hitchcock-Par) (1960)	9,000,000
Auntie Mame (WB) (1959)	9,000,000
Exodus (Preminger-UA) (1960)	8,700,000
Caine Mutiny (Kramer-Col) (1954)	8,700,000
King and I (20th) (1956)	8,500,000
Mr. Roberts (Hayward-WB) (1955)	8,500,000
This Is the Army (WB) (1943)	8,500,000
Lover Come Back (Schapiro-Melcher-U) (1962)	8,500,000
Touch of Mink (Schapiro-Melcher-U) (1962)	8,500,000
Guys and Dolls (Goldwyn-MGM) (1956)	8,000,000
King of Kings (Bronston-MGM) (1961)	8,000,000
Battle Cry (WB) (1955)	8,000,000
Bells of St. Mary's (McCarey-RKO) (1948)	8,000,000
Jolson Story (Col) (1947)	8,000,000
Lady and the Tramp (Disney-BV) (1955)	8,000,000
Shane (Stevens-Par) (1953)	8,000,000
20,000 Leagues (Disney-BV) (1955)	8,000,000
Music Man (Da Costa-WB) (1962)	8,000,000
Swiss Family Robinson (Disney-BV) (1960)	7,900,000
Cat on Tin Roof (Avon-MGM) (1958)	7,900,000
Pinocchio (Disney-RKO-BV)	7,900,000
Pillow Talk (Arwin-U) (1959)	7,500,000
Some Like It Hot (Mirisch-UA)	7,725,000
Glenn Miller Story (U) (1954)	7,600,000
Come September (Arthur-U) (1961)	7,500,000
Trapeze (HHL-UA) (1956)	7,500,000
VIP's (de Grunwald-MGM) (1963)	7,500,000
Kill Mockingbird (Pakula-Mulligan-U) (1963)	7,500,000
Son of Flubber (Disney-BV) (1963)	7,400,000
World of Suzie Wong (Stark-Par) (1961)	7,300,000
How Marry Millionaire (20th) (1953)	7,300,000
McLintock (Wayne-UA) (1963)	7,250,000
No Time for Sergeants (WB) (1958)	7,200,000
Peter Pan (Disney-RKO-BV) (1953)	7,200,000
Alamo (Batjac-UA) (1960)	7,200,000
Not As a Stranger (Kramer-UA) (1955)	7,100,000
David and Bathsheba (20th) (1951)	7,100,000
For Whom Bell Tolls (Par) (1943)	7,100,000
Oklahoma (Magna) (1957)	7,100,000
Hatari (Hawks-Par) (1962)	7,000,000
Gigi (MGM) (1957)	6,750,000
Cinderella (Disney-RKO-BV) (1950)	6,600,000
Search for Paradise (C'rama) (1953)	6,500,000
High Society (MGM) (1956)	6,500,000
I'll Cry Tomorrow (MGM) (1956)	6,500,000
Country Girl (Perlberg-Seaton-Par) (1955)	6,500,000
Going My Way (McCarey-Par) (1954)	6,500,000
Snows of Kilimanjaro (20th) (1952)	6,500,000
Imitation of Life (Hunter-U) (1959)	6,500,000
Brothers Grimm (Cinerama-MGM) (1963)	6,500,000
Suddenly Last Summer (Spiegel-Col) (1960)	6,375,000

(Continued on page 69)

& 'BOUNTY' HIT STORMY SEAS

By GENE ARNEEL

The year 1963 brought the American film industry familiar trials and tribulations, both boxoffice agony and ecstasy. The board of directors at Metro all but declared Tahiti a disaster area because of "Mutiny on the Bounty." At 20th-Fox, the watch was on the Nile; would the barge "Cleopatra" make the black?

Seldom have two pictures in a single year posed such questions for their respective companies. Metro's full year loss of over $17,000,000 was largely attributable to "Bounty." Rentals to date are estimated at $7,700,000, with a total of $9,800,000 anticipated for the full first time around the domestic market. This is a strikingly poor showing—in short, agony—for a production whose production cost was $19,000,000.

Many an agonizing hour for many people was primed by "Cleo," which represented a negative investment of $40,000,000 and required perhaps $60,000,000 to break even. But now the distress signals have been removed. Domestic rentals so far of $15,700,000 have been guaranteed and "Cleo" has opened in only 55 situations. There's no predicting just how much the paramour of Caesar and Anthony will win or lose, but clearly it's not to be the disaster earlier feared.

Actually, "Cleo" emerges as the No. One boxoffice picture of 1963, considering the vast, if specifically undeterminable future potential, but is listed and asterisked under "How the West Was Won," the Cinerama-MGM Americana epic. The latter has a total of $17,000,000 quite definitely in view.

"West" has had an added plus going for it, in that it is dual-versioned geared to play the dimensionalized screens of the C'rama firstrun theatres, and then standard widescreen conventional houses. Same obtains with "Wonderful World of Brothers Grimm," which is no slouch at $6,500,000.

Ecstasy was the mood engendered by Darryl F. Zanuck monumental World War II reproduction, "The Longest Day," which was quick to

(Continued on page 69)

French Canadians Discover France; Part of Cultural Feuding In Quebec; Resent Anglo-Yank Power 'n' Snubs

By CHARLES LAZARUS

Montreal.

No question that virtually all of show biz hereabouts has undergone a dramatic change, in the past 12 months, as result of the wave of French-Canadian nationalism sweeping through Quebec.

The wave reached a crest during the past year, and touched on everything from nitery bills with the use of strictly Francaise entertainers showing an impressive jump, to the field of labor relations which saw the dazzling opening festival of Place des Arts, the new concert hall, cancelled because of a jurisdictional dispute between a "French" and "English" union — Union des Artistes and Actors' Equity, respectively.

In between there have been uproars because of the hiring of Silas Edman, ex-New York Philharmonic, as the administrator of Place des Arts, instead of a French-Canadian; and because of plans by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp., to turn its Toronto radio station CJBC into a French-language outlet.

The crux of the situation lies in the basic attempt by the French-Canadians, who make up 75 to 80% of Quebec's population, to eliminate—from the province—what is felt to be an economic and cultural domination by English-speaking Canada.

It's a unique and peculiar state of affairs because, while the French-Canadian is the majority in Quebec, he is the minority in Canada where he numbers only 25% of the total population of some 20,000,000.

Complicating this situation in terms of culture, of which showbiz is an integral component, are two factors:

(1.) The unquestionable influence of U.S. entertainment via the stage, niteries, screen and video on Canadian tastes—a fact which has been a rough, tough bone for Canadians at large and members of the Canadian Parliament to swallow in recent years.

(2.) the increasing use of French entertainment (i.e. from France) as a weapon to fight the Anglo-Saxon cultural influences—whether from above or below the border—in Quebec.

Actors Equity as Heavy

Of all that has happened in recent months, however, the intra-union scrap over who should boss what at Place des Arts—and in fact, other incidents even before the concert hall opened in September—is perhaps the best example of the not-so-quiet revolution which has been attracting attention from all over the world.

It all started, apparently innocently enough, when the Union des Artistes said that it was having a tough time making a deal with the Place des Arts management. The latter claimed that union problems were outside its province—the pun intentional—since they were, in effect, merely rental agents and should deal with the promoters of the various events.

As it turned out, this was merely conversation; the real truth, the UDA revealed in subsequent statements, was that since Actors Equity had jurisdiction in "English" Canada—outside Quebec—then the "French" union should have jurisdiction in "French" Canada's most notable and impressive cultural achievement to date.

So bitter was the battle, that the festival was called off, and at this point, the decision is no decision:

Face-Saver

Both sides agreed to let the concert hall open, and obviously in a face-saving gesture, went along with a six-month armistice, supposedly to see how things would work out.

This too, however, is just so much conversation, since, as everyone who is close to the general nationalistic and showbiz picture knows, things will get worse before they get better for a very simple reason:

If the responsible nationalist leaders are to keep the movement from being taken over by the zealots and fanatics—those who want Quebec to separate from Canada—then they must give in to certain moods and emotions on the

(Continued on page 69)

Top Rental Films of 1963

Here, again, is the VARIETY Anni special edition checklist on the Boxoffice Bests—the top feature films of 1963 in terms of domestic (United States and Canada) rentals accruing to the distributors. To repeat the standard explanation from earlier years: some pictures go into release too late in the year and cannot be computed; for example, some of the October-December features of 1963 are on the market too briefly for inclusion now. So they must wait for next year.

By the same token there were certain pictures from late 1962 which were not included in last year's roster and are now picked up.

Feature	Origin	Date Out	Rentals To Date	Anticipation
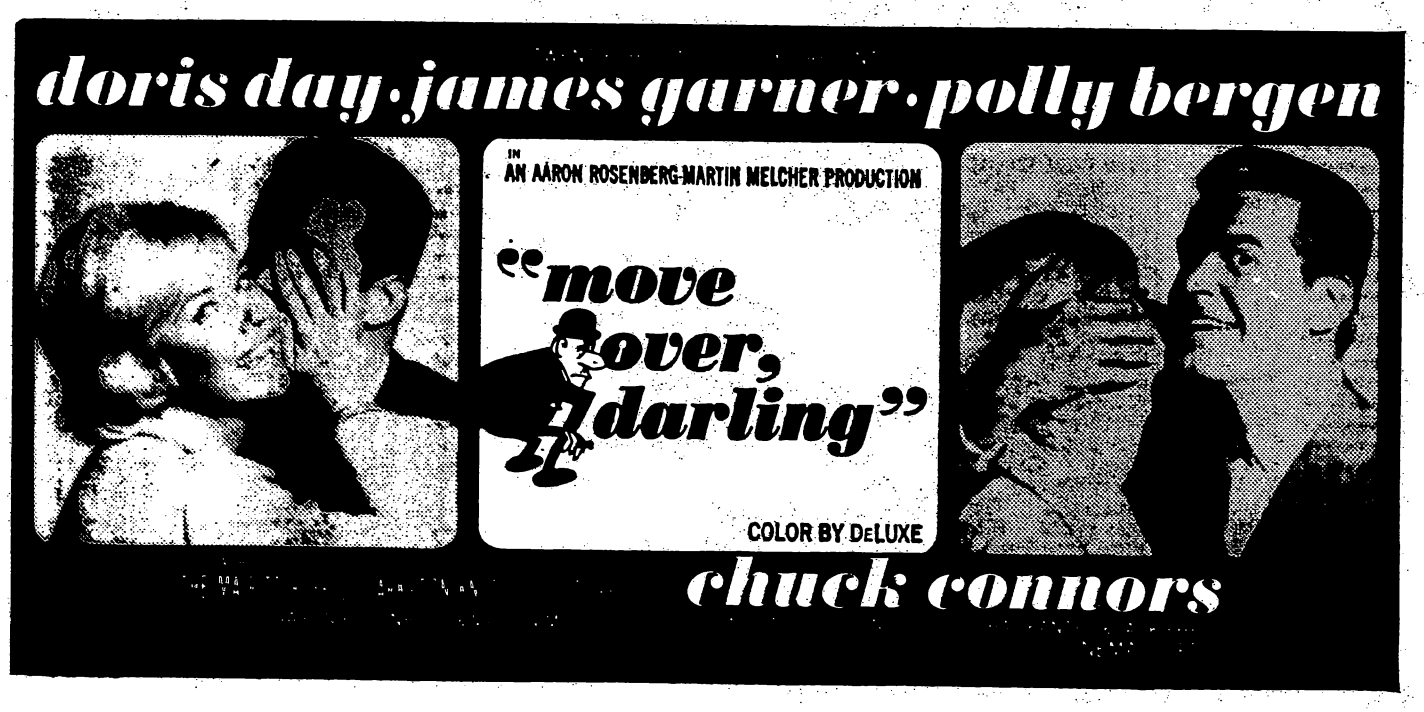
How West Was Won	(Cinerama-MGM)	(Nov., '62)	$ 8,000,000	$17,000,000
Cleopatra	(Wanger-20th-Fox)		15,700,000*	(Undeterminable)
Longest Day	(Zanuck-20th-Fox)	(Oct., '62)	12,750,000	15,250,000
Lawrence of Arabia	(Spiegel-Lean-Col)	(Jan., '63)	9,000,000	15,000,000
Irma La Douce	(Wilder-Mirisch-UA)	(July)	9,250,000	11,000,000
Mutiny on Bounty	(MGM)	(Dec., '62)	7,700,000	9,800,000
V.I.P.'s	(de Grunwald-MGM)	(Sept.)	4,000,000	7,500,000
Kill Mockingbird	(Pakula-Mulligan-U)	(March)	6,700,000	7,500,000
Son of Flubber	(Disney-BV)	(Feb.)	6,900,000	7,400,000
McLintock	(Wayne-UA)	(Nov.)	1,200,000	7,250,000
Brothers Grimm	(Cinerama-MGM)	(Aug.)	4,500,000	6,500,000
Come Blow Your Horn	(Yorkin-Lear-Par)	(June)	5,450,000	6,000,000
Thrill of It All	(Hunter-U)	(Aug.)	4,150,000	6,000,000
Bye Bye Birdie	(Kohlmar-Sidney-Col)	(June)	5,600,000	6,000,000
Gypsy	(LeRoy-WB)	(Jan.)	5,400,000	6,000,000
Great Escape	(Mirisch-UA)	(July)	4,600,000	5,100,000
Castaways	(Disney-BV)		4,700,000	5,000,000
The Birds	(Hitchcock-U)	(April)	4,600,000	5,000,000
Yum Yum Tree	(Brisson-Col)	(Nov.)	3,700,000	5,000,000
55 Days at Peking	(Bronston-AA)	(May)	3,900,000	5,000,000
Diamond Head	(Bresler-Col)	(Jan.)	4,300,000	4,500,000
Spencer's Mountain	(Daves-WB)	(July)	4,000,000	4,500,000
Summer Magic	(Disney-BV)	(July)	3,500,000	4,350,000
Hud	(Ritt-Ravetch-Par)	(May)	3,900,000	4,000,000
Days of Wine Roses	(Manulis-WB)	(Feb.)	3,800,000	4,000,000
Nutty Professor	(Lewis-Par)	(July)	3,300,000	3,500,000
Ugly American	(England-U)	(April)	2,900,000	3,500,000
PT 109	(Foy-WB)	(July)	2,700,000	3,500,000
8½	(Fellini-Embassy)	(June)	1,140,000	3,500,000

(Continued on page 71)

GO! WITH THE BIG ONES FROM 20TH CENTURY-FOX

Available for selected engagements to participate in the 20th Anniversary of D-Day, June 6, 1964!



GO! IN '64 WITH

Man In The Middle starring ROBERT MITCHUM, FRANCE NUYEN, BARRY SULLIVAN. Guest star TREVOR HOWARD. Also starring Keenan Wynn, Sam Wanamaker, Alexander Knox. Produced by Walter Seltzer. Directed by Guy Hamilton. Screenplay by Keith Waterhouse and Willis Hall. From a novel by Howard Fast. Music by Lionel Bart. A Talbot-Pennebaker Production. CinemaScope.

Shock Treatment starring STUART WHITMAN, CAROL LYNLEY, RODDY McDOWALL and LAUREN BACALL. Produced by Aaron Rosenberg. Directed by Denis Sanders. Screenplay by Sydney Boehm. CinemaScope.

The Third Secret starring STEPHEN BOYD. Guest stars JACK HAWKINS, RICHARD ATTENBOROUGH, DIANE CILENTO. Also starring PAMELA FRANKLIN. Produced from his screenplay by Robert L. Joseph. Directed by Charles Crichton. CinemaScope.

What A Way To Go! starring SHIRLEY MacLAINE in love with PAUL NEWMAN, ROBERT MITCHUM, DEAN MARTIN, GENE KELLY, BOB CUMMINGS and DICK VAN DYKE. A J. Lee Thompson production. Produced by Arthur P. Jacobs. Directed by J. Lee Thompson. Screenplay by Betty Comden and Adolph Green. Based on a story by Gwen Davis. Choreography by Gene Kelly. CinemaScope. Color by DeLuxe.

The Visit starring INGRID BERGMAN and ANTHONY QUINN. Co-starring Paolo Stoppa, Claude Dauphin, Irina Demich, Hans Christian Blech. Associate Producers Julien Derode and Anthony Quinn. Directed by Bernhard Wicki. Screenplay by Ben Barzman. CinemaScope.

AND THESE ROADSHOW ATTRACTIONS GOING INTO PRODUCTION IN '64!

Rodgers and Hammerstein's
THE SOUND OF MUSIC starring JULIE ANDREWS. To be produced and directed by Robert Wise. Associate producer Saul Chaplin. Screenplay by Ernest Lehman. 70MM. Color by DeLuxe.

THE AGONY AND THE ECSTASY starring CHARLTON HESTON. Screenplay by Philip Dunne. 70MM. Color by DeLuxe.

JUSTINE to be produced from a screenplay by Ben Barzman. 70MM. Color by DeLuxe.

THE DAY CUSTER FELL to be produced by David Weisbart from a screenplay by Elliot Arnold. 70MM. Color by DeLuxe.

THOSE MAGNIFICENT MEN IN THEIR FLYING MACHINES to be directed by Ken Annakin from a screenplay by Jack Davies. 70MM. Color by DeLuxe.

THE SAND PEBBLES to be produced and directed by Robert Wise from a screenplay by Robert Anderson.

America's 'Cultural' Explosion

100 New Art and Entertainment Centres on Drawing Boards—More Buildings and More Applicants—But 'It Takes More Than Concrete'

By JOHN BROWNLEE
(Director, Manhattan School of Music)

In large and small communities across the nation, entertainment is taking on a concrete meaning. Inspired by the New York Lincoln Center idea of housing all the performing arts in a single complex, civic groups are amassing funds for similar centers in their own cities and towns. The blueprinted buildings, and those already finished, are naturally on a much smaller scale, but the aggregate cost of the 100 new art and entertainment centers will come to some $500,000,000.

John Brownlee

The vista of more and more community halls, accoustically (we hope) right for stage productions and concerts, is of course, a pleasant one for members of the entertainment field. So, too, are reports of the vigor with which social and civic leaders are building larger subscription audiences for music, drama and ballet.

With so many projects under way to increase auditoriums and audiences, as director of a talent institution—the Manhattan School of Music—I naturally think of our responsibility in the performing arts to help prepare entertainers to take advantage of these new outlets and opportunities. When I hear of millions being spent for the auditoriums of tomorrow, I think of the corresponding millions needed for training the artists of tomorrow, to make those auditoriums come alive.

After a long career as singer at the Metropolitan and other opera houses I took the directorship of a school five years ago. I have since realized that I have been doubly fortunate, because my second career as educator has come at a time when throughout the country local governments, big business and the public are showing an unprecedented interest in cultural complexes.

Symposium

Indicative of this heightening awareness of the importance of the arts our recent symposium on "The Quality of Life in This Technological Age," in which industrial tycoons, statesmen and sociologists agreed that support of the arts by business, government and the public is imperative to this nation's growth as a world power. Held in November at New York's Hilton Hotel, and sponsored by my school, the all-day panel was chaired by C. D. Jackson, publisher of Life magazine.

"Business and the Arts" was the title of the talk by Devereux C. Josephs, board member of the N.Y. Life Insurance Co. He noted that business has found association with the arts to be profitable from a promotional standpoint. Linking the image of a company to art, he explained, enhances that company and its products with an aura of quality and elegance. It is for this reason that corporations support concerts, symphonies and operas.

Another business-arts relationship, he added, is business' support of cultural centres and their performing constituents because of a sense of social responsibility, rather than immediate economic advantage. This, said Josephs, is a new and admirable concept of 'corporate citizenship."

In 1941, he pointed out, the nation's total corporate contributions of $58,000,000 were confined to hospitals, charitable agencies, and only such education as was related to the respective corporations' training needs. In 1961, on the other hand, corporations gave public contributions of more than $102,000,000 for education, and a large portion of that sum was unrestricted as to fields of endeavor.

"Where education has led the way," Josephs continued, "let's hope general support of cultural enrichment will follow."

The symposium's keynote speaker was August Heckscher, director of the 20th Century Fund for economic and social research, and a former Special Consultant on the Arts to the late President John F. Kennedy. He discussed "The Central Role of the Arts."

Americans, said he, "live in a brilliant society, alive with creative impulses, rich in individual geniuses." He noted, however, that the forte of our technological society "is in the realm of distribution and dissemination, not in the realm where truths have their origins and their beginnings." He cited art training resources as a vital realm or origin, saying:

"How often we have neglected these schools, suposing that somehow the trained musicians would emerge readymade as we needed them, or else assuming that our liberal arts colleges could carry a burden beyond their means and also, I believe, beyond their proper role. The training of theatre producers and playwrights and stage designers—all this has been left quite haphazardly to fate."

Predictions

Heckscher stated that in view of Washington's increasing interest in the arts, he foresees the creation of a Governmental organization budgeted to further music, theatre, dance, painting, writing, just as the National Science Foundation contributes to technological study, teaching and research, to the tune of more than $182,000,000 per year.

State and municipal governments, big business— all are avowing interest in furthering the arts, but their wheels in this direction move slowly. Entertainment and culture are not, after all, the prime responsibilities of Government or business. Immediate action for the performers of tomorrow must come from the cultural community itself.

From my own experience as a young singing student in my native town of Geelong, Australia—suddenly given an opportunity to study in Paris—I know what it means to today's fledgings to come to New York, the world's new mecca for the performing arts. Readers of VARIETY are certainly aware of the value that comes to young artists when, in the formative stages of their careers, they are able to see and hear the greats in their own fields in a metropolis such as New York.

Every year at our institution, qualified applicants are turned down because classes are filled to capacity. This, however, will soon be corrected. Thanks to generous contributions from foundations and private donors, our school plans to purchase and renovate the Juilliard School's larger bulding, when the latter moves to its new home in Lincoln Center. Of the $8,500,000 needed for our expansion of facilities, staff, and scholarship grants, already $2,750,000 has been pledged.

The contributions, ranging in individual amount from $25,000 to $800,000, have come from the Mary Borden Memorial Fund, the Avalon Foundation, the Charles E. Merrill Trust, and Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Jr. and others.

Such support already makes itself felt in the world of the performing arts. It will also make a vital contribution to the performers of tomorrow.

Kid's Half-Price Logic

St. Paul.

Pioneer Press amusementeer Bill Diehl reports a youngster at a local showhouse ticket window who could produce only half of the ticket price.

When the cashier shook her head, the kid pleaded "sell me a ticket, please, and I'll keep one eye shut during the show."

THE PLOT TO KILL THE PLOT

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Nobody may flatly speak for the taste of future generations but long acquaintance with the genus Americanus may justify expression of doubt that Yanks in numbers are going to welcome the exile of plot, the rubout of characterization and the substitution of private language for ordinarily intelligible statement. This is a way of implying a hopeless chasm between certain European directors and the U. S. film market. Such men may have a small success, a limited international acceptance because they achieve, as a temporary novelty, what may be called the entertainment of bafflement. They create a kind of parlor game for the intelligentsia. They stir debate. What do they mean, or do they mean to have no meaning? It's rather like some of the non-objective paintings, the white square askew on off-white background, about which the in-group can wax superior.

Michaelangelo Antonioni wrote in 1958, "One does not work for the public," a startling assertion from a maker of films. He, however, hastens to add that "the public is there all the same, and they are the ones who are watching. I know very well that I ought to push myself to make less difficult films, but I am afraid that I might lose my sincerity."

The Italian is not alone in puzzling viewers this side. He is one of a coterie, based mostly in Paris and Rome, who seem preoccupied not with what they wish to say, but rather how they attempt to say it. Interestingly, Ingmar Bergman of Stockholm writes of Antonioni of Rome: "I am truly impressed by the uncompromising self-confession to which Antonioni is so deeply committed. Within the film industry (which must be considered a "heavy" industry), Antonioni's contribution is both new and fresh and of an enduring value. What seems strange to me, however, is his limited interest in his actors, in their instruction and guidance."

A nice point that last. What is the function of a director? To direct the actors, tell the story, divert the people or have his psychoanalysis on the screen? The great confessional film to date, of course, is Federico Fellini's "8½" in which a director confesses for some three hours that he cannot make up his mind what to do next. The resultant film, though often cinematically brilliant, seems somehow a shameful self-indulgence. Grant him his genius of a sort. Still it is a long advertisement: director gone dry, seeks replenishment. Or, the autobiography of the emptied vessel, or, the fig-tree parable of Scripture.

These are strange, if sometimes stimulating, exercises which come across the ocean. The refusal to tell a story, and, rather more exasperating, to finish it, goes by the name of "avant-garde." Actually there is nothing new about these new waves. They have been striking their pretentious poses for three generations at least. Nor is the simple American mind long in detecting that many of these "avant-garde" directors are not truly free agents. They are vow-bound to various isms, including atheism. Their choice of scene, material, emphases and moral is "loaded."

How loaded some of the European films are becomes clear at this or that film festival where a portion of the audience reveals itself an organized claque under caucus discipline. There was more than a hint of same apparent last fall in Philharmonic Hall when a documentary about Paris and other items proved real pinko.

So between esoteric directors with a distaste for story and others with axes to grind, the American audience is divided. Certainly there are rich strains of humanity, humor and technical innovation in a lot of the imports. But the market for novelty is always a limited one, prone to quick surfeit. We revert to Shakespeare, whose 400th birthday is soon to be marked—"the play's the thing." Not the director's own soliloquy.

A Broadway Angel Sings Out

By J. S. SEIDMAN
(C.P.A., of Seidman & Seidman)

Money can be made backing shows, in spite of the dismal averages. I immodestly offer myself as Exhibit A. Others can undoubtedly sport even better arithmetic than mine.

But money is not made playing the averages. It takes special doing. Furthermore, the averages themselves can be improved—with special doing. For the latter, show business must be ready to look further than its nose.

These are sweeping statements. Now to support them. First, a bit of not so dry statistics. The Federal Reserve Bank of Philadelphia reports that in the last 10 years more than three out of four Broadway shows failed. Breaking this down a bit, two out of three musicals bit the dust, and four out of five straight shows flopped. This is pretty rough. How can the gamble be improved?

If investment in an ordinary business were under consideration, three basic factors would be carefully weighted — product, costs, management. These same three also apply to the theatre, though the words are a little more colorful. In show business the triumvirate is: the play, the nut, the producer.

As for the play, it is still the thing. Many plays die financially because they don't come to life theatrically. Script reading is an art in itself, and very few laymen master it. Assume, however, that a potential backer concludes that the play is bad or doubtful. Cardinal rule No. 1, in my book, is not to rely on superb acting or directing to carry the show across the line. The adverse odds are just too high for this sort of dice rolling. Rather, performance and direction should be looked to, only, to take a good play and make a great one out of it.

Suppose the play passes muster. Next at bat is the arithmetic. What economic good is an artistic or audience success and a financial flop? A hopeless nut makes the backer a hopeless nut. To stay out of the financial boobyhatch, production and operating budgets should be studied. If the show can't make out at 75% of capacity, the financial road ahead has extra peril.

And then comes the producer—the president of the company, so to speak. Here, the trick is to link up with someone who has, in combination, the experience, taste, and integrity to put on the best possible play theatrically in the best possible way arithmetically. As George Gobel used to say on TV, you don't hardly never see none of those no more.

Attention to these three things—the show, the nut, and the producer—can make a careful play backer a financial frontrunner. It can certainly help him do better than the averages. Now, how about improving the averages themselves? That's up to the theatre as a whole. If the theatre doesn't act as a whole, it will wind up in a hole.

Charm Your Customers

What to do? Several things cry out for attention. One is a market survey on what it takes to woo, win, and hold audiences. A good deal can be learned about courtesy and the handling of customers, from the airlines and filling stations. Customers must not be kicked around or treated as bores. Market surveys are continuously used by industry to determine customer attitudes and desires. It is high time that the theatre jumped aboard.

Ticket handling, distribution, and pricing also need a new look. They need especially a forthright purging. Today they contstitute a major roadblock in the theatre's progress.

It is also high time the theatre caught up with automation. Obviously this doesn't mean substituting computers for actors. But it does mean putting electronics to use for many of the physical activities frontstage and backstage connected with a show.

Old-Hat Ticket Selling

Take the whole area of ticket reservation procedures. In the airlines, a person can go to a counter in New York and ask for a flight from Chicago to New Orleans for a fixed date, say three weeks ahead. The individual behind the counter presses a button and in seconds the flight is confirmed or not. If the particular flight is sold out, the next available one is offered. There are no uncertainties. The passenger knows promptly what's what.

Shouldn't the theatre give attention to something like that? One of the stubborn deterrents to theatre attendance at present is the rigamarole that goes with advance booking of tickets, especially for out-of-towners, and the time gap in learning if seats are available, when, and where.

Another point. Cost reduction helps any organization. It is especially vital to the theatre. The largest single slug out of the box-office receipts today is for theatre rent. Yet the actual use made of the theatre premises is no more than three hours a day (six on matinee day). What limited productivity for fertile space!

Look at some of the occupancy possibilities in-between times: stockholder's meetings, sales conventions, lectures. All these can be done "in one"; that is, in the front part of the stage, and therefore without disturbing the sets for the play. The net revenue from such amplified use of theatre space can mean not only sharp cost reductions, but it may also result in some audience from the added users.

Finally, the financial setup of play production is thwarting. Today each play is the beginning and end by itself. There is no tomorrow beyond the tomorrow of the particular play. This approach stultifies longrange thinking. It limits or negates research and development. It certainly interferes with getting the best personnel. The play-by-play approach is a stray-by-stray aproach. A going, continuing enterprise is the way to a going, continuing theatre.

The Angels

Now let's get back to the backers. Would there were some way in which they could solidify their ranks and exert their combined strength for the advancement of the theatre. However, the backers' ranks are highly volatile. So many backers go at it once over lightly, or shoot their wad once and for all, that there are mighty few hardy perennials. Too bad. I think a backers' "union" could help strengthen the financial foundation of the theatre, and pave the path of progress.

We can now return to the point made at the beginning. Play backing approached with care can add health to the theatre and wealth to the backer. If angels run wild, they expose themselves and their wings to a clipping penalty. As in all other things, heaven will help the angels when the angels help themselves.

Actual Eichmann Trial In Franco-Israeli Film

Tel Aviv.

Actual scenes from the Eichmann Trial, held last year in Jerusalem, would be incorporated into a new Franco-Israeli film production scheduled for mid-February 1964 in Israel, starring French actor Serge Regianni. French finances and Israel's A.A.A. Film Producers are cooperating in this venture, telling the story of people separated during World War II, united in Israel during the trial, living anew the horrors of the past—and ready to start anew as a result.

French producer M. Barault, director Philip Artquist, and cameraman George Pesis have previously collaborated on "Queen of Cards," which won first prize at the French short subject festival this summer. Pesis had already photographed some shorts in Israel, including the popular "Cesarea" for Israel's tourist office.

The encounter of comrades, separated after the war, part of them remaining in Europe and the others migrating to Israel and building a new identity for themselves there, occurs when witnesses are summoned for the Eichmann trial in Jerusalem. Of the four major parts, the three men will be French stars, and the part of the girl is reserved for a local name. All supporting parts would also be cast locally.

Israelis' Brand of Nite Life

By MEYER LEVIN

Tel Aviv.

If any nation has a right to a little relaxation, it's Israel, and after three generations of pioneering, wars, terrorism, pogroms, genocide, the survivors and the sabras are living it up. All along the coast nightspots, camps and recreation areas have sprung up, with every beach and every port from Ashkalon to Achziv vying to become the beachhead for the new pleasure-coast of the Mediterranean.

It takes only the top of an ancient Roman column, a few Ali-Baba jars dug out of the Negev, and a vine-covered trellis to establish the proper relaxed atmosphere. Broiled fish and shashlick on the coals. Stone benches and tables. An accordion, a guitar, a halil. Girls, in blowy short dresses arriving on the backs of scooters. And Israel's cote d' allure may well replace the Cote d'Azur. No gambling, of course, except for the official Israel lottery. But Israeli wine ranks among the pleasant drinking wines of the world, due to the foresight of Baron Edmond de Rothschild in establishing the Rishon and the Zichron Yaacob cellars in the 1830s, with expert French vintners. And Israel beer is light and heady.

For those who want their relaxation the way the Israelis take it, there are already a number of unpresumptuous but lively spots within easy drive from Tel Aviv or Haifa. Actually, of course, the whole of Israel is little more than a coastline with a thin hinterland, but this coastline is a continuous stretch of perfect sandy beach, perhaps the best beachline on the Mediterranean for bathing, sailing and water-skiing.

At midpoint between the two cities is a little river, the Alexander, and at the mouth of the river is an open-air pavilion where the scooter-crowd, joined by the new Sabra Sports Car crowd and a few tourists, cavort of a Friday night. A dance band, a master of ceremonies who tells jokes about Ben Gurion, Ben Bella, and Khruhschev, a changing series of folksingers, with grilled fish and beer. Put-putts and rowboats on the river. Stretches of beach for wandering romantics. This is the place most tourists don't see, and the nearest to the local idea of a good time, for the Israelis are not (yet) ultra-sophisticated in their taste for entertainment; sick jokes and psychotic comics wouldn't be understood here, though good healthy satire is appreciated.

Ten minutes north of the Alexander river is one of the nicest and most beautiful dinner-with-music places in the whole world, the restaurant amidst the Caesaria ruins. The place is open to tourists who march through the digs in the daytime, while their guides click off the levels of occupations, Roman, Crusaders, Turks, etc. But at night, with the vast enclosure of broken walls and the ancient pier attended by its minaret, all discreetly illuminated, the semi-outdoor restaurant, with only a pianist, or at most a trio providing an accompaniment for the lapping waves, exerts a magical charm.

French Influences

The food, at a modest price, is French in inspiration and the cuisine is the best in Israel. This may not be saying a great deal, since Israel is anything but famous for cooking. However, Caesaria, being non-kosher (perhaps in respect to the Roman founders of the town) has a wider range of seafood and sauces than may be found in the kosher-bound large hotels.

Israel's brand-new autobahn has all but reached Caesaria, and within a year or two will extend along the entire coast. This brings any spot in the small country within an evening's drive.

Continuing northward, there is the artist's colony of Ain Hod, perched on a hill overlooking the sea, with a cafe-restaurant where weekend revels attract and cause traffic james. The atmosphere is Greenwich Village Soho - Montparnasse, and the entertainment is the place itself.

Haifa has a few ordinary nightclubs of the sort found in any metropolis, plus the Dan Carmel Hotel, plus a few sailor's dives. But across the bay, on the ancient ramparts of Acre, there has blossomed another of Israel's new evening resorts. The entertainment is pretty much in the average international vein, but the view is spectacular. Downstairs is an art gallery.

Northward still, comes Achziv, the nest built by the Club Mediterranee of Paris. But the Club's beach area nestles against an ancient village which is being rebuilt, and just before the entrance is another barefoot-folksinger nightspot with lots of beatnik atmosphere.

Turning inland, one comes to Safed, where there's another art colony—Israel has a half-dozen provincetowns—and wherever you have an art colony, there's a cafe with informal entertainment. Safed's has just opened, too.

Circling down to the Sea of Galilee, you hit Tiberius, and just before the town is the 206 Club for water skiiers and those who sit and watch, and drink. Sometimes they listen to a singer imported from France. At other times, recorded music.

Right inside the black basalt walls of Tiberius is the (so help us) art gallery of sculptor Phillips, whose garden is a weird compound in which the welded relicts of ancient Singer sewing machines compete for attention with Canaanite grinding-stones. Phillips wields a guitar as well as a chisel, and he has almost finished building a cellar-type-dive in an excavation behind his gallery, to add to the string of Israel niteries.

That's for the north.

Riviera Overtones

Starting south from that beachhead by the Alexander River, there's the diamond-rich town of Nathanyah (Israel is the world's second in diamond-cutting, and Nathanyah is where this all started). Nathanyah, too, has lately announced its intention of becoming the Riviera of the Jewish state, and allocated some tens of millions of (Israeli) pounds for the construction of pleasure-domes, a marina, and all the necessary distractions (except slot-machines). Right now, it boasts a conventional nightclub, mostly for summer-resorters and holiday crowds.

Twenty minutes south is Tel Aviv-Jaffa. Oddly enough, the seething little city of Tel Aviv has never developed much in the way of entertainment, outside of the conventional round of theatres and cinemas. There is the Adria, a downstairs girl-show place where wives are hardly made uncomfortable; there is the Theatre Club, a downstairs satire-spot; and there is the Dan Hotel Club's "Faces of Israel," a pleasant, expertly done little show in English for tourists, based mostly on skits of the leading local comedy-writer, Ephraim Kishon (who has a play due on Broadway).

Center of nightclub life is ancient Jaffa, with the dim-lit Omar Khayam, also operated by an artist, who lives upstairs. Entertainment runs to middle-size and even big names from the European circle, plus the best of local singers, like Hillel & Aviva, who are well known for their American tours.

Hillel & Aviva also have their own place, at the peak of the hill, simply known as The Club. The entire hilltop area is being developed as a kind of Montmartre of the Mediterreanean; already three impressive restaurant-dance-and-theatre clubs flank the central square. While two boast no entertainment novelties, the third, the famous Al Hamam, houses the brightest show in Israel, and attracts the real sabra crowd. Run by the writer, Dan Ben Amotz and his musical collaborator, Havim Hefer, both of whom are local culture-heroes, and spectacularly situated in an old Turkish bath, the Hamam is the only place in Israel that makes an effort at producing entertainment that comes from here.

After Jaffa, there's Bat Yam, a fast-developing spot with a jazzy cubistic city hall that looks like it could be turned overnight into a casino. Bat Yam has a few niteries, and big plans. Marina included. (Latest Israel craze is boating).

Then comes Beersheba with its notorious Last Chance bar, a surrealist place that depends on atmosphere and an occasional burst of drums. And finally, there's the End of the World nightclub in a black-walled flat in Eilat.

But the best show of all in Israel is on the night of Simhas Torah—the Joy of the Torah—when all the orthodox, the hasidim in their white stockings, shiny black coats and fur-rimmed hats, the Bokharians in the safron silk robes, the Yemenites, the Persian Jews, all open their synagogues, and dance in ecstatic circles, swinging their Torah scrolls on high. This year, on the special second night to which the holiday may be extended for visitors from abroad, the Simhas Torah celebrations were brought out into the streets in Jerusalem, Tel Aviv, and in the Hasidic villages. Strange mixtures of ritualistic hasidic dances, with the hora of the pioneer halutsim, with sudden solo and duo spurts of free-style swing from the younger generations. Only men take part in the dancing, but on this night the orthodox women are allowed to come out of the synagogue balconies to clap hands and watch. Far into the night the ecstatic chanting could be heard. The rest of the year, the singing and dancing in Israel is for fun.

Lives of Actors As How-to Guides For Beginners

By CRANE JACKSON

Ever since I started making a little money in the acting business, I began to realize the truth of all that has been told me as a fledging performer by articles, biographies, books I've read about the industry. Not being able to talk to the leaders personally, I've garnered much of what they had to say from the printed page, including the traders and, especially, biographies.

Crane Jackson

I learned that changing a face slap into a back slap is the goal. I learned that rudeness, apathy, injustice characterize the overcrowded profession of acting.

I learned that Clark Gable flunked three screen tests and that Darryl Zanuck thought his ears were too big for a great star; that Bette Davis was judged a "no talent" by Eva LeGalliene; that Fred Astaire's first screen appearance dejected him and the powers-that-be; that Jack Lemmon "acted" as a contestant on a quiz program because he was ripped open by critics when on television; that Lucille Ball's acting teacher told her to forget about the theatre as a career; that Alec Guinness was forced to live on beans because the enthroned geniuses thought he lacked promise; that Joan Crawford was thought to be a hoofer and nothing more, and on infinitum.

While the published autobiographies have hit the bestseller lists and have satisfied the multitude of fandom, I have used them much as the West Point cadet might study past battles.

Shelley Winters' comments about actors hanging around a theatrical bar waiting for their break put fire under me to seek out work. Ditto Bette Davis' comments in her book, "The theatre is tough. Any artist who doesn't know that the greatest reward is his own satisfaction in work should choose an easier way of life. To the beginner I would say, 'Learn the rules, conquer the techniques, and then throw yourself into a part and let go'." I might add, here, that you need a job, but that's after we do the rest. However, only with a job do we know if we've learned the rules and conquered the techniques. I have my doubts about ever conquering techniques. The more I learn about acting, the less I know about it. Or possibly, my

(Continued on page 49)

That Certain Everything

By DON QUINN

Hollywood.

A clutch of us senior citizens were sitting around somebody's kidney-shaped pool on a recent evening, working hard at getting pool-shaped kidneys. The steaks had been tender, the night was fragrant with star jasmine and the women were inside the house, choosing up snides. Conversationally, we had disposed of the upcoming election, the next World Series and had awarded the Oscars.

Don Quinn

We had started discussing whether a Birch bark was worse than a Birch bite when somebody remarked that so-and-so, a newcomer to pictures, had that "star quality." It became the Subject of the Evening.

As is normal in such casual discussions, some prissy semanticist demanded a definition of "star quality." It was like asking what is electricity, of which "star quality" is probably a form. No one knew, and everyone guessed. "Animal magnetism," "super-charged personality," "vital spark" and "glandular communication" were all offered and partially accepted, along with other definitions.

It was generally agreed that "star quality" transcended talent, no matter how great. And that talent, natural or acquired, plus that indefinable "it" or "oomph" had to have one other component —sex. That something which leads a male moth through three miles of foggy bramble to a female moth swinging her purse on a street corner.

With the welfare of the entertainment industry in mind, we mutually agreed that this sine qua non of star appeal be kept as much as possible from the Chicago Board of Censors. The Board, in Chicago, is largely, probably very largely, made up of cops' wives, to whom "His" and "Her" towels no doubt are vulgarly suggestive. If this notorious gaggle of fingerpointers should ever be told that the word "star" connoted sex, their husbands would have to wear crosses instead of stars and every astronomy class in town would shut down to protect the children.

If you'll pardon this unpremeditated sortie against censors, and their briefcases full of erotica, I now return to the story line, such as it is.

The star quality, and to hell with the quotes, is a scarcity product and it therefore commands a large markup. Lucky is the producer who signs a star before the star realizes he's a star. Before he starts getting a piece of the action, story approval, and threads by Sy Devore.

When our little group, the ladies back with us, started naming the individuals who had the s.q., it seemed less of a scarcity product. There were so many legitimately entitled to the star label.

At this point a touch of melancholy swept us when we realized how many great stars we had lost in the past few years. Cooper, Colman, Gable and Powell among them. I have, in 25 years of Hollywood living, lost most of my awe and reverence for stars, but for these four I still have it. Cooper I did not know well, but he would have been an outstanding star if he had done only one thing—making "High Noon" an hour to remember.

Dick Powell I knew better. He was a man who answered letters and returned phone calls, which alone made him unique in Hollywood. When he was doing his "Richard Diamond" radio show, during the lunch break, or a "take 10" period, he would go from chair to chair where the musicians had laid their instruments, and play almost all of them. He played almost all the instruments in his professional life, too. Singer, actor, producer, writer, musician and gentleman. R.I.P.

Gable was our neighbor in Encino, and an occasional member of a little band of non-profit poker players (the stakes were small, the laughs were large) which included Herbert Marshall, Tuffy (Abner of "Lum 'n Abner") Goff, Nat Wolff. Ronald Colman and a few other congenial souls on a basis of availability. Gable, I think, had that electric whatever-it-is to the greatest degree of all the stars I know.

He was an automobile buff, and one day in a garage, I felt someone looking at me across an 80-foot room. It was "Pa." I think it was Hedda Hopper who said he could stop the action on a soundstage by appearing in the doorway.

The late beloved Nat Wolff, agent, writer, producer and roulette player, who was married to Edna Best, the English actress, once met Gable in a nightclub. Gable, then married to Sylvia Ashley, was gussied up in black tie.

Wolff said, "How did they ever get you into the penguin outfit?"

Whereupon The King said. "You ought to know, dad. You married an English broad yourself."

Wherever he is, I hope they have enough fishing rods, good cars, guns, horses and full houses. That would be Gable's heaven anywhere.

Colman I was fortunate enough to know best of all. I worked very closely with him for five years. To film audiences everywhere he typified the ideal Englishman, although he was really a Scot, of the Clan Fraser. He had, as I had, a rather truncated formal educaton, but he had almost total recall for everything he had read, and he had read prodigiously.

He had beautiful manners and a pawky sort of wit. One day on the set of "The Halls of Ivy," with 95-degree heat and dripping humidity, he was required to do a scene in front of a practical fireplace, with a roaring fire in it. When the director, Norman McCleod, said "Cut, print it!" the doors were flung open, the fans turned on and everyone dashed for the not-so-great outdoors. All but Colman. He maintained his dreamy pose in front of the fireplace and said,

"There was a young man from Tyre,
Who stood with his back to the fire.
When they said, 'Aren't you hot?'
He said, 'I am not;
I am John Winterbottom, Esquire.'"

Then he, too, joined the exodus.

They've gone and will not be forgotten as long as people talk about stars. But new ones emerge and the starshine never diminishes.

And whoever they are or wherever they come from, one question will recur.

"What, exactly, is the star quality?"

And the answer will be like Paddy's famous flea, in elusiveness:

"You put your finger on him and he isn't there."

SHORTS EXERCISE LURE TO FACULTY & STUDES

Durham, N.C.

Quality short subjects are proving an important draw here at the Rialto, artie house that depends heavily on students and faculty from Duke University, the U. of North Carolina and North Carolina College.

According to Rialto manager Maggi Dent, such shorts as Continental Distributing's French import, "The Dream of Wild Horses," can turn out to be almost as important as patron lures as features. "Dream" is now on its second engagement at the Rialto and so far has been seen by over 7,518 patrons. Next most popular short to be screened here is another French import, "Play Ball." The works of N.Y. filmmaker Ernie Pintoff also have had a great reception.

Miss Dent reports that the Rialto marked the end of its first year of operations Nov. 13 by moving into the black. She credits the top grosses on Columbia's "The L-Shaped Room" and the record-breaking grosses on Continental's "Lord of the Flies" for having wiped out much of the red ink incurred in opening the house, and increased by Durham's turbulent weeks of racial crisis earlier in the year.

There is a moment – a long moment – when

"LOVE WITH THE PROPER STRANGER

This one may emerge as the biggest sleeper hit since Marty and Casablanca. It was made by the same pair who created To Kill A Mockingbird, Director Robert Mulligan and Producer Alan J. Pakula, and stars Natalie Wood and Steve McQueen, who both reveal the kind of talent for instant communication which film fans have come to expect only from art films. They take a painful situation (Natalie is pregnant, and Steve is the kind of guy who doesn't want to get married), and they manage to be both achingly human and agonizingly funny without ever being dirty. Take the kids, they might never elsewhere discover the facts of life so gently."

—LIFE MAGAZINE

everything is risked with the proper stranger.

IN A PAKULA-MULLIGAN PRODUCTION

Love WITH THE PROPER STRANGER

Written by ARNOLD SCHULMAN

Co-starring
EDIE ADAMS

Also co-starring HERSCHEL BERNARDI and introducing TOM BOSLEY

Produced by · ALAN J. PAKULA · Directed by · ROBERT MULLIGAN · Music— ELMER BERNSTEIN · A PARAMOUNT RELEASE

From Broadway Columnist To The Acropolis Beat

By CONNIE SOLOYANIS
(Ex-Aide to Danton Walker & Hy Gardner)

Athens.

We got a letter the other day from a friend who asked, "How can you live in a place like Athens after you had such a swinging life in New York?" Well, we've had similar inquiries, albeit not so pointed.

After you've dwelled and earned your bread, butter and caviar in New York for a couple of decades, everyone assumes it is most difficult for you to adjust to living anywhere else, such as, say Athens.

It's not really difficult; you just have to accept certain basic differences in your daily life.

Where you live is the first. Instead of a three-and-a-half room cooped-up apartment in Woodside, with airconditioning to further seal you off from the world, you settle for a five-and-a-half room top floor (we don't use the word penthouse in Athens), with a veranda which can hold a standup party of at least 150 comfortably. And with the illuminated Acropolis and majestic Mount Lycabettus, topped by its Christmas cake church, as a backdrop, instead of the next door tenement or the subway or a brick wall as your scenery.

You learn to speak a bit more slowly and distinctly, losing that hurried and harried New York half-swallowed yak, for some of the inhabitants have trouble understanding you. Only here, you discover, people tell you they don't understand instead of trying to guess what you said.

After getting the blue carpet treatment at Stork, Copa, Persian Room and the Four Seasons, you adjust to being charged extra for use of ketchup in a neighborhood tavern. (It appears the Greeks are most practical and outspoken. You insult the chef by using ketchup on his artistic offerings and the management retaliates by insulting your wallet.)

On those nights you feel like stepping out, you dine, dance and drink atop the better hotels of the city, with a brilliant moon and real stars overhead, or in cooler months you take in the other top spots, and are constantly amazed at the relatively small tabs you get. You dine out at least five nights a week, and usually with a different set of friends each night.

You adjust to having a U.S. Embassy or USIS pressman on a rare occasion buy you a beer as opposed to having a special invitation to join the White House Correspondents Dinner. You get to have a chat with Yuri Gagarin and learn that several members of the Russian Embassy fall all over themselves to be friendly.

After the mountain of loot that used to come your way working with a Broadway column, you adjust to a year where the loot diminishes to one barbecued chicken (from popular Bob & Bill's barbecued chicken spot just off Omonia Square), two orange sodas, one pack of butts, two luncheons and a handful of cocktails. This, of course, considering you are now a columnist for the English language newspaper, the Athens News.

You also adjust to the fact that you can't get a good Bloody Mary, even if you pay for it, or a scorpion, unless you make them yourself. But then you find V-8 and Vegemato juice, either an essential of a good Bloody Mary are only available to the PX brigade. So, you accept ouzakie, which is cheaper and gains the same ultimate effect, only quicker.

Les Femmes

Instead of lamping a lineup of 20 gorgeous hunks of protoplasm at the Latin Quarter, you settle for a chorus of four at the Kastro, which offers beautiful gams, too.

You also get used to having women eye you up and down—but only when they are sitting in sidewalk cafes, nightclubs, the subway, and in the public streets. Never on the hoof.

You occasionally ride the subway line that has only 20 stations in a straight line, and adjust to not getting lost. The worst you can do is go in the exact opposite direction than is your intention.

You adjust to the driving habits of the people. But do you really? Greeks aren't really the world's worst drivers, they just seem to be. There must be worse, perhaps in Sinkiang. But you have a wonderful conversation bit ready for the steady stream of visitors from the States.

Said steady stream of visitors all echo the same thought: "How do you do it? And do you think I could possibly do it?"

Instead of weekends at the Concord Hotel or at Montauk, you settle for two-day cruises of the Greek Isands, where you swim at a different one each time out.

Then, just for variety's sake, you take a five-day cruise, so you can swim at completely different islands.

And, you also adjust to a stretch of 28 days on fabulous Vouliagmeni Beach, just outside Athens, with the yachts of Onassis, Goulandris, Niarchos, Potamianos and other Greek shipping tycoons serving as a backdrop for your dip in the warm Aegean.

You adjust to overcoats not being necessary in winter. Of course, despite the fairly mild weather, you do have another adjustment. Does your wife like furs? They are a good bargain here—at least 50% cheaper than in New York—so you have to adjust to the "tremendous savings" cast your way.

With the siesta bit in vogue (everything closes down from about 1:30 p.m. through to 5:30 p.m.), a daily dip in the nearby beaches is in order. And in the cooler months, you adjust to restricting yourself to only speedboating during siesta hours.

The big question is actually, if after this, can you adjust to returning to New York and its life?

Religion & Show Biz

Continued from page 9

our protean young President, who shone like an American Apollo to the whole family of man, can be destroyed in a twink by a craven sniper—100,000,000 Americans must rediscover resources of the spirit.

When General David Sarnoff, board chairman of RCA, received me in his 53d floor office, he observed, "Never were religion and science more compatible than today. Everywhere in science, we can behold the handiwork of a Supreme Architect of the universe. My own views echo the Danish scientist, Hans Oersted, who wrote, 'The universe is a manifestation of an infinite reason and the laws of nature are the thoughts of God.'"

Our great gospel singer, Mahalia Jackson, who saw me after her Lincoln Memorial concert commemorating the 100th Anniversary of the Emancipation Proclamation, spoke with the same bounce with which she sang: "Making a joyful noise unto the Lord, that's me! I'd like to tell everyone that God's got the whole world in His hand. I'd like to tell everyone that God can take nothing and make something out of it. Anything you want to be, anything you want to do, God is able to lift you up. But you have to have one thing—a made-up mind. You don't straddle the fence serving God; you must put your all on the altar and let God abide."

Disney's Creed

Hollywood's showman, Walt Disney, spoke of faith and world tensions as we walked the sprawling sound stages of his Burbank studios. "I am personally thankful that my Congregational parents taught me reliance on Divine inspiration, for it has helped me repeatedly in meeting the trials and stresses of life. Of course, every person has his own ideas of the act of praying for God's guidance. My own concept is that prayer is not a plea for special favors nor a quick cure for wrongs knowingly committed. A prayer, it seems to me—and I have tested this in experiences ranging from the threat of bankruptcy to a moral concern for the form and content of our films—implies a promise as well as a request; prayer, at the highest level, is not only a supplication for strength, but also becomes an affirmation of life and a reverent praise of God."

Baseball's Bobby Richardson, "suiting up" before the Big Game in Yankee Stadium, quietly confessed: "My purpose in life is to please God, to know Him, to serve Him, to walk with Him in daily life. I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, and I have not been since I accepted Him as my savior 12 years ago." Ninety-year-old William E. Hocking, Harvard's ruddy-cheeked "dean" of American philosophers, emphasized with knee-slapping vigor: "All of us are constant seekers for our own meaning. No one can be unaware of the touch of admonition or of summons, in which—whether or not he uses the word God—he finds his lonely lifeline taking on the added dimensions of companionship, of duty and of destiny."

Clare Boothe Luce, looking across Arizona's lone and level sands toward the shadowed Sierras, answered my question with a question: "How does one describe the coming of faith or tell the precise moment when the heart melts into love for God? I only know the totality of Christian thought is that God is love. And to argue successfully for the love of God, one must be a lover—joyous, selfless and simple of heart."

Says Roy Rogers

Roy Rogers spoke eloquently of the power of the holy spirit in his own life since he and his wife Dale started to go to church again 15 years ago. "I've had to study God's Word and I've had to pray," he remarks, "but in recent years God has made our lives amazingly rich and rewarding. It has been a wonderful thing to be able to apply the teachings of Jesus Christ even in the entertainment industry. In this regard, one group Dale and I especially love to work with is the Hollywood Christian Group. Here, along with Connie Haines, Jane Russell, Coleen Towsend, Tim and Velma Spencer, we hold inspirational meetings, try to interest both friends and strangers in deepening their faith and, above all, encourage them to go out and choose a church in which to serve."

Said tv star Steve Allen, "The nation is in the throes of a moral collapse in an age crying for the light and guidance of Judaic-Christian wisdom." And quoting Bud Collier, "The best way I know to get a person's or a nation's life focused on God is to put it to the test. How do you do this? First, make a demand upon God. He will be pleased, for throughout the Bible we're invited to do this. In Malachi we find, 'Prove Me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it,' and in Hebrews, 'Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace that we may obtain mercy and find strength to help in time of need.'"

Met Opera basso Jerome Hines, returning abroad the S. S. United States from a concert tour of the Soviet Union, said at interview's end: "For 10 years now since I found God, my singing career has been a way of carrying His Word. Christ is the morning star of my life. Each day my life is a spiritual battlefield in which I strive to let God be glorified. Any philosophy that leaves out the living Christ here and now is totally inadequate."

Public Ignorance About Film Biz is Deplored

Minneapolis.

President Ray Vanderhaar of North Central Allied (NCA), this area's national Allied States unit, is calling upon the entire film industry, as well as his members, to go further out in efforts to solve what he considers to be a continuing serious problem arising from "public misunderstanding and distrust" of the industry as a result of frequent attacks on some of its phases.

Vanderhaar pleads for a much firmer and more effective stand against its "oppressors." He urges that it "open its doors" via improved publicity methods so that the public will have a better appreciation of what films in theatres means to it. He charges that the industry has been "laggard" in telling its own story.

Vanderhaar reacted to a recent reader's [illegible] letter to the editor published by the Minneapolis Morning Tribune. It read: "It is my understanding that the motion picture industry releases two sets of advertising to local theatres," the reader stated in his letter. "One includes posters, photographs and printed matter which are restrained and in good taste. The other set verges on the pornographic."

Vanderhaar asserts that "it behooves the area's exhibitors to step up public relations efforts and to clarify some of the existing public confusion."

HOW TO BE A CINEMATOLOGIST

By ROBERT GESSNER
(Professor, NYU)

Cinematologist is a curious word to define, since it is not in the dictionary; in fact, it is an invention, designed to test applicants for membership in the Society of Cinematologists. "If you don't know what the word means," says the Unwritten Law of our Society, "then you aren't qualified to become a member." We are a self-admiring group of 50 whose aim "the study of the moving image" leaves plenty of room for television.

Exactly 320 years ago, January 1934, Warner Bros. released my first feature, which I wrote, based on my book, all with the same title, "Massacre." At that time nobody talked about cinema, or moving images. It was simply movies, as it was the Hays Office then. Professors of cinema and cinema curricula in colleges or universities leading to degrees and respectability had not been established, or hardly imagined. Whenever a stray teacher in a teacher-training school wandered into a classroom, carrying a circular tin can containing silver salts fixed on a cellulose nitrate base, he called its contents "an audio-visual aid." Now, three decades later, teachers of all persuasions are hurrying into classrooms with tin cans under both arms to teach in alphabetical order: Advertising, Art, Audio-Visual, Cinema, Communications, Communication Arts, Communication Arts, Communications-in-Education, Drama, Films, Fine Arts, English, Marketing, Motion Pictures, Speech, Television, Telecommunications, Theatre, and Theatre Arts. Today, at the level of higher education, there are approximately 750 courses in all phases of the subject; also, a dozen major departments granting degrees, including graduate degrees.

My story opens on a sunny day in sun-drenched southern California in the summer of 1933. The scene is the executive suite of Warner Brothers, Burbank. A young man in his early twenties is standing on a red carpet. Behind the executive desk sits Hal Wallis, executive-in-charge of studio production. His expression is a bland mixture of curiosity and annoyance. "Young man, I hear you arrive at the studio gates before eight in the morning. Is that so?"

Young man acknowledges he is an early riser.

"I hear," continues Patient Executive, "that you attend the dawn rushes."

Young Man admits to an interest in the previous day's shooting.

"I also hear you spend some time in Sound Recording."

Young Man confesses to a desire to appreciate the intricacies of applying sound to images.

"Likewise, some nosing around the Editing Department."

Young Man discloses a passionate fascination in Editing.

Patient Executive takes a deep breath, shakes h's head. "None of my writers get down here till ten, ten-thirty." He launches a soul-searching gaze. "What are you, kid, a spy from Metro?"

Young Man, only two weeks from the cloister of New York University, frowns in momentary bewilderment.

Patient Executive tries again. "Why do you wander around the Studio, visiting so many departments?"

Young Wanderer confesses to an urge to learn the craft; further confesses to suspicion that movies are an art form.

Executive shakes head impatiently. "Just be a writer, don't bother about anything else."

The following weeks are spent by Young Writer arriving at nine for an hour on the tennis court before typing; the noon till two hours are spent in studio gym with trainer and sparring partner. Agents assure Young Writer of $750 to $1,000 a week contract based on successful script and forthcoming novel recommended by The Book of the Month. Young Writer aghast: Shakespeare never made that much money, and besides it is The Depression. Shocking, sinful!

Upon completion of term, Young Idealist heads East. Our story now shifts to the inner office of the Chairman of the Department of English, Washington Square, New York University. As Young Teacher enters the Chairman jumps up in surprise. "Is it you? I never expected to see you again! None of my young writer-teachers return from Hollywood, except Tom Wolfe who didn't leave for that reason."

Young Teacher, who was Wolfe's replacement, confesses he has returned to teach the movies as art. The best way to learn is to teach, just stay a lesson ahead of the students.

English Chairman is startled. "Movies as art? You'd better try that out on the Extension People."

End of interview. The Extension People, who are already offering courses in Radio Writing and Radio Acting (sic!), welcome Motion Picture Writing and Production courses. Two years later Young Teacher is back in English Chairman's office. He is not interested in teaching people off the street how to catch The Chief out of Chicago for Hollywood.

English Chairman grows thoughtful. Enrollment in Extension is up, regular College down. "I have a popular course in the Ballad with Leadbelly coming in as a guest singer. Well, why not Movies? We will call it The Cinema as Literary Art. Great!"

One year later (a year sooner in the petition rhythm) Young Teacher is back in English Chairman's office. The belief is that the Movies should be a full-fledged department, four years of courses, leading to a Bachelor of Arts de- to be placed in the College catalogue between Mathematics and Music. Otherwise teaching no longer holds Original Aurora, Y.T. taken to New Dean, a pragmatist from the Middle West.

New Dean confesses that Movies on occasion resemble art, and it might be possible to train writers and directors within the Liberal Arts tradition and thus improve quality of talent; also improve audience level which is non-vocational objective of the Music and Fine Arts departments. And increase College enrollment during Depression.

Thus, in the Fall of 1941, there gathered an honoring inaugural of the first Liberal Arts degree-granting department. The gathering occurred at Washington Square, not far from the abodes of Edna St. Vincent Millay, Sherwood Anderson, Eugene O'Neill, Dreiser, Alan Seeger ("I Have a Rendezvous with Death"), painters and sculptors. The inaugural guests were Adolph Zukor, Harry Warner, Barney Balaban, Austin Keough, J. Robert Rubin, Sidney Howard, William Fadiman, and others.

Tom Brandon

Continued from page 9

him in this resolve was the findings of the Purdue University Opinion aPnel of 1960. Sample conclusions: three-fifth of all high school students polled saw nothing wrong in censorship of magazines, books and newspapers; three-fifth felt that police third degree methods were valid under certain circumstances; 41% thought that the right to vote might well be restricted; one-third were unwilling to allow foreign-born nationals all the basic freedoms allowed native-born citizens.

This same lack of understanding of the Bill of Rights, Brandon feels, has resulted in the curious suspicion with which many citizens regard recent decision of the U.S. Supreme Court. His short, he thinks, goes a long way towards lighting such dark areas of the mind.

The pic, which is currently playing a special engagement in Beverly Hills in order to qualify for the Oscar, was written in New York by novelist-playwright Millard Lampell and designed and directed on the Coast by William T. Hurtz, who designed the Oscar-winning "Gerald McBoing-Boing."

Since, from time to time, the Bill of Rights has been considered a rather controversial document, Brandon was asked whether the picture might have been made 10 years ago, in the midst of the McCarthy era. "It would have been made," he says now, "but I'm not sure it would ever have been released."

I Was a Teenaged 'Mugg'

By JERRY FRANKEN

(In an earlier era, the founder of this journal was wont, facetiously, to refer to his staff, including himself, as "muggs" The term has since been abolished, as is so stated in the VARIETY 'Style Sheet'. But for the present memoir of a former staffer, the term is allowed to slide by.—Ed)

The only man who ever gave me a raise before I even began working for him was Sime. He was also the only man I ever knew likely to do so.

It's more than 30 years ago but I remember every detail. I'd been a copy boy and done some feature writing for the N.Y. Times and then gone to work for a Broadway press agent with whom I soon became disenchanted. I knew I wanted to be a reporter and that I loved show business, and somehow I wangled an appointment with the founder owner and editor of VARIETY.

Sime Silverman was sitting at his desk on the platform overlooking West 46th St. Characteristically, he had his hat on, his jacket off, polka-dot bowtie and shirt collar open, and one by one was tearing the pages off a small memo pad then tearing each page into strips. His voice, a cross between a bark and a rasp, caught me offguard. I knew little enough about show business in those days but young as I was I knew the legend of Sime Silverman and somehow expected a man with a basso profundo.

The interview was short, probably because I had trouble separating my tongue from the blotter that was the roof of my mouh, but when he asked me how much salary I wanted I was all prepared. I knew that Sime was liberal and that he paid his staffers top money, probably better than any other publication in New York, mebbe the U.S. I also knew that beginner reporters on The New York Times started out at around $27.50. But Sime was liberal. So I asked for $35.

For a while he didn't answer, keeping his head down, tearing the white paper, while I hung from my own private proscenium. Then he looked at me, smiled, and barked, "O.K. Come in Monday. I'll start you at $45 a week. You're on a four-week trial."

The only thing I don't remember is how I ever got down the platform stairs and out on 46th St.

The Legit Beat

When I checked in for work the assignment sheet showed I was to cover legit. The Old Boy decided that, probably, because while working for the prossagent I'd done some work for several alleged Broadway producers, all short bankroll specialists. But they were about the only people I knew in legit, and they certainly weren't likely prospects as news sources. Where to go? Whom to see? Joe Hoffman, now a successful tv producer-writer, and then a VARIETY reporter, bailed me out. He suggested I get a list of legit producers from the classified phonebook, and away I went.

That first week was rough and arid. What little copy I turned in was bounced back to me, each piece with the same admonition from Sime: "Stop writing telegraphese," which is what my copy read like in my attempt to get the terse, slangy style. But two important things happened the second week, one of which shook me up; the other of which headed me in the right direction.

It's cheating a little bit to describe myself as a "teenaged," but I was barely minutes out of my teens and to make myself look older I'd grown a must 'he. In my second week on the paper I'd also hit the second half of the alphabetical list of legit producers. On this particular day I was in the late Brock Pemberton's office, groping, in my inexperience, for questions which might produce news. I don't know whether who was more uncomfortable, Pemberton or I, but in the middle of a stage wait a burly, six-footer with the face of a pug, walked in unannounced, boomed a greeting to Pemberton and started talking buddy-buddy. Pemberton looked at me, then the six-footer curiosly, and finally asked, "Don't you two know each other?" Neither of us did, so Pemberton introduced us. The other man was the late Jack (Ibee) Pulaski, himself somewhat of a legend. I'd heard of him during my rounds, but never met him; he'd been on vacation.

Jack Pulaski's Crack

Pulaski didn't acknowledge the introduction. He studied me for a while, almost as though I were a curio. Finally he spoke: "Holy smoke, a mugg with a mustache."

Then he turned to Pemberton, standing at the desk, linked arms and the two of them walked out. I sat in Pemberton's office alone for half an hour, wondering what chance I, a stranger in the business, would have getting news when Pulaski apparently knew anyone who counted intimately. I even thought of shaving my prided 'stache. You can see I was desperate.

A day or two later, though, I'd moved down the alphabet and was working on the S's, and this brought me to the office of Herman Shumlin, an ex-tradepaper reporter himself. Shumlin spent a long time with me, cluing me, giving me tips, and also giving me my first two-column story. It was about the Shuberts' attempts to fill their many theatres by importing British productions intact from London, and the fact that the maneuver, to date, had flopped.

The story gave me the feel and direction I needed, and Pulaski notwithstanding, I soon was developing my own news sources.

Thinking back, I also remember vividly my first Page 1 story. It was short, and I'd written it as a gag but Sime had seen the real portent of the yarn in that it represented a developing phenomenon called radio. The story was about a fairly new local half hour show on WOR and the fact that in an attempt to discipline their children, New York parents were writing the star of the show and asking him to admonish their kids to good behavior. The star was the late 'Uncle Don" (Carney). Sime's headline wrapped the whole thing up, using the title of a hit tune: "Ain't Misbehavin'."

Bill Hart

I also remember my first interview for VARIETY quite vividly, especially since it was the first time I'd ever gone out on an interview of any kind. The Old Boy called me to his desk one morning, told me that William S. Hart was staying at the Astor and to go interview him.

Now you have to take yourself back in time a little. Remember that talking pictures were still somewhat new. Also that Bill Hart was still as big as any name in show business, even though he was advanced in years. Also that the reporter going out on the interview was young, had never before spoken to a real, living, breathing film star and as a kid had watched this self-same star — and now was going out to meet him.

It was an experience. Hart met me at his hotel room door in undershorts and a T-shirt. Without any prompting he launched into a defense of his physical condition, obviously aware that many in the business must have felt he was really pushing on. To prove his stamina, he started doing knee-bends and other exercises, and throughout virtually the entire interview he kept at his calisthenics. He also made a statement I didn't use in my story, because I didn't believe him. He said he'd done a great deal of Shakespeare before turning cowpoke, but looking at that rather severe, hawknosed and impassive face, I didn't buy it. Not until years later, when I was reading a Players Club bulletin, did I discover that my cynicism in this case was unfounded and that indeed Hart had done the Bard.

Few Made It

Sime apparently had his own talent-search policy; he added men to the staff fairly frequently, but a surprisingly small percentage made it. I remember two in particular. One was an experienced reporter who also started out on a four-week trial but quit in two weeks, saying he could't figure the lingo, the business or the trade technique, He later became a byliner on one of the New York dailies.

The other was an ex-vaudevillian named Earl Bronson, who was related to Betty Bronson, the film actress. He wasn't on the paper too long but he really gave the staff a fright late one afternoon. The Old Boy was out of the office and Bronson, an able mimic, walked to the back and in a perfect imitation of Sime's voice, rasped out, "Knock it off you guys. You're all fired." There wasn't a staffer there who wasn't momentarily upset.

I wish I could remember the details of one episode, probably the only time VARIETY was "picketed." Sime had reviewed Clayton, Jackson & Durante in one of the supper clubs and ribbingly rapped them, referring to them as "lousy bums." Actually, he helped make the act and was a Durante fan from the start. In "retaliation," the act picketed the office, wearing signs to the effect that VARIETY is right. We are lousy bums."

Sime engendered, without effort, almost obsessive loyalty from his men. He returned it, except when it was abused. Once a reporter boozed up, ran up a whopping personal long distance call, but made the mistake of lying to Sime when he was asked about it. He was fired, pronto. On his last day, he paraded into the office with wife and brood and made an appeal. It didn't take, although he was rehired years later. Another time the late Al (Rush) Greason came in stewed, walked up to the Old Boy and, apparently because he felt ornery, cussed him out for 10 minutes without a breather. Sime looked up at him at the end of the tirade and told him, gently, to go home. Rush was back at his desk next day quiet as ever.

Pressagents Oft Just Born Lucky

By ART MOGER

Boston.

Someone once said: "Press agentry is a heinous crime for which the Napoleonic code hasn't yet meted out a just punishment. If you have a winner, no matter what you try to do can't hurt it. If you have a stinker, you can hide diamonds under the seats in the theatre and no one will come to look for them."

Maybe so, but also "you gotta be lucky." The best laid plans never materialize if you aren't at the right place at the right time.

Take for example, the personal appearance of John Ashley, one of the stars of American International's "Beach Party." When he landed in Hyannis to meet with his fans at the local drive-in, it was the third in a series of cities he had appeared in the same day. The customary radio interviews, press and autographing photos for the manager and his daughters, made for a tiring afternoon. But as he autographed stills in the play area of the drive-in, I butted in and said: "Salinger wants you on the phone, John." A youngster standing nearby asked, quizzically, "Pierre Salinger?" "Who else?" answered Ashley. With that he walked into the enclosure reserved for popcorn boxes and supplies at the drive-in.

"Man, that was cool. If ever I heard an 'exit-line,' that was it!"

We decided to eat at a local well-known dine and dance emporium, which also was the summer press headquarters for the late President Kennedy and his staff.

As we arrived, we noticed that a three-piece band was playing. The leader was a poor man's Roberta Sherwood, a bleached blonde of about 50, who beat on a drum and acted as sort of a mistress of ceremonies. The rest of the combo consisted of a bass fiddler and a piano player. Only the pianist wore a red silk jacket. He kept his head down, as though he were looking for the black and white notes.

The lady in white, playing the drums, grabbed the mike and shouted:

"We have the pleasure of a visitor from Hollywood. Will John Ashley, star of 'Beach Party,' come up and sing for us."

Surprised at this unexepcted solicitation, Ashley reluctantly got up and sang "Old Cape Cod." A smattering applause came from a handful of people who had gathered around the bar. It was rather late—about midnight.

Coming back to our table, Ashley commented, "That guy playing the piano was a dead-ringer for Pierre Salinger."

The little man in the red silk jacket came towards our table.

"You sing very well," he com-

(Continued on page 49)

MUST BE AN EASIER LIFE THAN A WRITER'S!

By FRANK KANE

I've been reading a lot lately about writers—the glamorous lives they lead and the enviable circumstances under which they work. After all, in what other profession can you just pick up and take off to any spot on earth and still operate—the "I can work as well on the Riviera as in my studio in Westport" kind of thing. And then, in what other field can you go for days without shaving without losing face and have a built-in excuse for ducking boring cocktail parties and stultifying dinner dates—"love to come, but I'm just in the throes of finishing a book. Got to keep at it to meet my deadline." And what other working stiff need never know the headaches and frustrations of daily commuting?

I never realized what a satisfying and glamorous way to make a living it is to be a writer. Only thing that bothers me is that I must be travelling in the wrong circles in the Authors Guild and Mystery Writers of America. Most of the writers I know, present company not excepted, are hag ridden by evaporating markets, suspended magazines, sliding rates and merging publishers.

But these aren't the only circumstances that are adding grey hairs to most writers' balding pates. There are other occupational hazards unique to this field that are equally tormenting:

For one thing, it's the only profession in the world where all anybody needs to be a competitor is a typewriter or access to one. Generals, actresses, crooks, politicians (if that be redundancy, make the most of it), roues, would-be roues, ex-madames, reformed stripteasers, unreformed stripteasers and other characters of all shades are seized with the itch to put their adventures down on paper for posterity—and for a whopping big advance.

Even guys like Louis Nizer, who have it made big in their own field, get the urge to see their names listed on the bestseller list. And rightly so! They make it and leave the rest of us poor day-in, day-outers eating their dust. The President of the United States and his kid brother haven't been above a little moonlighting, either, and have climbed up into that rarefied atmosphere. And then, of course, those renowned "amateurs," Ike Eisenhower and Harry Truman, have taken a typewriter in hand on occasion just so a contemporary like Winston Churchill shouldn't have the Late Unpleasantness all his own way.

And if the competition weren't bad enough, there's the problem of critics suffering from an acute case of cuteness. Like the one on the New York paper who opines: "From the way Frank Kane writes, it's obvious that he not only has a dislike for the English language—he has a downright hatred for it." This is the same gentleman who, whether he's reviewing the latest Agatha Christie or smacking his loose lips over the Larousse Gastronomique, always manages to insert his devout thanksgiving that "it's a pleasure to be reading something like this instead of junk about those phonies Johnny Liddell and Mike Shayne."

That 'Junk'

Now, I don't know how Brett Halliday feels about it, but speaking as the writer of the "Johnny Liddell" "junk" I'm beginning to get worried. After 25 novels that have sold better than 15,000,000 copies and are translated into 17 languages, after 50 television shows and five years as contract writer on "The Shadow," after two movies and 300 short stories—if he doesn't stop calling "Johnny" a phony, he's going to give me a feeling of insecurity.

And that other critic who accuses me of having a belly fixation because all of my characters are "belly shooters"! If he has mentioned this fixation of mine once in a review, he's mentioned it even more. However, the only consolation I have in this instance is that this is the only kind of a guy I could successfully challenge to a duel. Let him aim at my pointed head. I'll settle for his belly.

And there are occupational hazards closer to home for the average writer. Like the wife who gets impatient with the genius for dawdling over his morning coffee and peremptorally orders him to "get back to your typing." This is the same gorgeous creature who gives him the inspiration to keep turning out deathless prose by propping her monthly bills alongside his typewriter.

Then there are the kids, who prance happily in from school and head directly for the den where Dad has been locked in all morning. They pick up the last page of typescript, look at the page number, then frown: "Gee, Dad! Only 20 pages today? You'll never get that thing done in time to take us to Freedomland next Tuesday!" But its appreciation like this at home that enhances the writer's sense of accomplishment and contribution to the culture of his times.

Even these brief contacts with the outside world are stimulating to the writer. After all, his is the loneliest profession in the world. In any other field, he can take on an assistant, turn the drudgery and detail work over to him. But in writing, there's nobody to turn nothing over to. It's between the writer, the seat of his chair and the typewriter. That's a frightening word to the average writer—typewriter. Every morning wher he sits down in front of it, it leers at him, its four rows of teeth bared, daring him to lay a finger on it.

Calculated Mistake

Occasionally, out of sheer necessity to rejoin the human race, the writer is sucked into accepting an invitation to address a woman's club or a class in creative writing. It's a mistake and he knows it, but he accepts out of sheer desperation. Invariably, after he has finished his dissertation, some lovely lady will arise with the question: "Don't you ever have the feeling that you'd like to do something better?" It's a waste of time explaining to the lovely creature that if we weren't doing the best job of which we're capable in the field where we're best qualified, we wouldn't be able to afford wasting the time talking to the group at hand.

They show unmistakable signs of sympathy at the fact that you're really slipping when you inform them that you're no longer being published in the hardcover edition. It hardly seems worthwhile to explain that the publisher takes 50% of the softcover rights and parts of other rights when he puts out the hardcover edition. They wouldn't appreciate the fact that the average hardcover publisher offers a $1,500 advance to a writer whose pocketbook rights bring $5,000, thereby assuring himself of a $1,000 profit before he even brings the book out. All they want to know is that the hardcover books look better on their shelves than the softcover book.

These are the neighbors, who be they doctors, lawyers or merchants, would think you were crazy if you asked them to perform their services to the community gratis. Yet, they haven't the slightest hesitation to ask the writer to work up some skits, or do the blackouts for the President's dinner, or even write a show for the local talent to macerate.

With all these hazards, this last may seem to be the least of a writer's worries, yet it sometimes is the most frustrating. I'm referring, of course, to the complete lack of humor exhibited by the proofreaders of most publishing houses. All of the clever lines come back with queries on the galleyproofs, but the one that fractured me the worst was when the proofreader on my current "The Mourning After" corrected the sign outside a striptease joint from "Clothed for Alterations" to "Closed for Alterations." Maybe it was an improvement but it spoiled my afternoon.

So, in spite of the rosy picture Paul Gallico and Kenneth Roberts and Nicholas Montserrat paint of the life of a writer, a lot of us privates in the ranks figure there must be an easier way to make a living. Wonder how the boys selling Electroluxes are doing these days?

UNIVERSAL HAS MORE IN STORE FOR '64 THAN EVER

"CHARADE"

"DARK PURPOSE"

"CAPTAIN NEWMAN M.D."

"MAN'S FAVORITE SPORT?"

"THE CHALK GARDEN"

"THE BRASS BOTTLE"

"WILD AND WONDERFUL"

"BEDTIME STORY"

Recall of Broadway That Was

Continued from page 36

miere in Munich and in subsequent presentations on the Continent. Atkinson had disliked the American adaptation of the play and the Guild's production, and headed his review "Muddle at Verdun." Barnes had been tremendously impressed, while Watts and I also had liked it. Hutchens and Skene were, I think, in the neutral corner. Over the usquebaugh, the discussion flared into a heated argument between Atkinson and Barnes over the former's notice. As tempers rose the suckling pig was all but forgotten. Atkinson started to leave, but was prevailed upon not to. Finally the argument subsided, but a coolness remained which even other rounds of Irish and the piece de resistance could not dispel. Oh, it was a fine, characteristic Gaelic brannigan all right, and probably its most characteristic aspect was that it developed out of a German play.

More Oases

On our own, we patronized many of the speakeasies of the period, particularly Tony's, which drew New York's literati and top theatre people and was the after-midnight home of the Algonquin Round Table; Jack & Charlie's, first in 49th and later, as now, in 52d, the Stork Club, when it was in West 53th St.; the Club Napoleon, the Simplon, the Ball & Chain; Frankie & Johnnie's and a host of others. As Mugs, however we favored only a few places with our own special brand of togetherness when we assembled for periodic night sessions. The Type & Print was probably our favorite hangout.

The Type & Print—not to be confused with the more respectable Artists' & Writers' Club—was located in a dingy, dusty loft building in West 40th St., near the Herald Tribune.

It was there, as well as in the neighboring Artists' & Writers' Club (or Bleeck's) that fantastic match games took place. Others joined us—Herald Tribune and Times staffers and such high ranking Broadway press agents as Richard Maney, Bob Sisk and Charlie Washburn.

Usually it was to the Type & Print Club that Percy Hammond came after finishing one of those burnished reviews that he wrote with such agony. There he would wait for a galleyproof to be brought by an office boy and, after reading and correcting it, he would start telling stories of the old days in Chicago. When these sessions broke up the sun was well in the sky and most people were going to work. With his cane contributing to his air of jauntiness, Percy would stroll leisurely to the taxi stand at 7th Ave. and 40th St. and, having deposited his portly figure in the waiting cab, commandingly say to the driver: "East Hampton, please."

It was inevitable that, after several seasons in New York, The Mugs should expand their activities on an international scale. One wintry night Watts and I decided that it would be a good idea if we went to Europe in the Spring. Skene felt the call of Paris and of Harry's Bar which, in those days, was really a newspaper hangout, and we made plans to come along. Hutchens and Barnes couldn't make it since the season was still active and somebody besides Sam Zolotow and Charles Belmont Davis had to man the dramatic departments of the Times and Herald Tribune, respectively.

'Kopenick' and Paul Robeson

Combining business with pleasure, the best play we saw in Berlin and, along with the Paul Robeson "Othello" in London, the best we saw in Europe was "The Captain of Kopenick," with Werner Krauss in the title role. Karl Zuckmayer's play dealing with a little man who, by stealing an officer's uniform and getting away with the impersonation, caused a scandal in army circles had considerable satirical comment to make on the glorification of Prussian militarism, and it was excellently produced and acted. It was based on an actual happening, the humor of which even the Kaiser had relished.

After Berlin, Prague, Vienna, Budapest and Munich passed in kaleidoscopic procession. In that period Vienna was probably the most bitter-sweet city in Europe, a capital without a country and it was filled with agreeably melancholic memories of its Empire greatness. Budapest was the gayest place; even a brief visit confirmed that.

For Skene this trip through Mittel-Europa, much of it by plane in the days when flying was still a novelty, was merely a prelude to Paris. There he really expanded. We spent hours visiting his old cronies and his old haunts and, when Watts and I gave up and sought a little sleep, Skene went on alone. The choicest of his pals was Sparrow Robertson, a wiry, aptly-named little fellow, who wrote a sports column for the Paris Herald-Tribune. Although he had lived in Paris for years, Sparrow had neglected to learn French and his written English, while expressive and not without color, would not have caused Walter Pater great concern.

Through Bob Sisk, the Theatre Guild's press representative and a great friend of Eugene O'Neill, the three of us were invited to visit the dramatist and his wife Carlotta Monterey, the actress, who were then living in the chateau Le Plessis, near Tours. It was a generous, expansive gesture on O'Neill's part to offer hospitality to three wandering scribblers, and I'm sure he didn't realize what he was in for.

When we ran into Sparrow at a boite—which was difficult not to do—he asked us what our plans were for the weekend.

"We're going down to Tours to spend the night with Eugene O'Neill and his wife," Watts replied. Sparrow gave no sign of recognition. Patently the name meant nothing to him.

"Who?" he asked.

"You know, Eugene O'Neill, the great American dramatist, Pulitzer prizewinner; wrote 'Emperor Jones,' 'Anna Christie' and 'Desire Under The Elms,' recently had a big hit in 'Strange Interlude.'"

Sparrow still seemed to be unimpressed, shook his head sadly.

O'Neill a Sparrow Fan

O'Neill met us at the train. He and Carlotta Monterey were charming, and our stay couldn't have been pleasanter or more stimulating. Sitting around the fireplace after dinner we reviewed the state of the current New York theatre, the drama in general and then the conversation turned towards sports. O'Neill said that his great delight in the Paris Herald Tribune was Sparrow Robertson's column and that, unwilling to wait for the delivery of the paper, he sometimes drove into Tours to pick up a copy just to read Sparrow's reflections on la vie sportif and what Jeff Dickson was up to.

Back in Paris, we found Sparrow in his accustomed haunts.

"How was the trip, boys?" he asked.

We described it in detail, not omitting O'Neill's laudatory comments about the questioner.

"Did Gene really say that about me?" he said, his eyes brightening. "My old pal, Gene O'Neill!"

The men's bar and the coeducational steamroom on the rue Cambon side of the Ritz Hotel were popular meeting places for Americans, various other strangers and even a few French. There Marc Connelly, with the Pulitzer Prize for "The Green Pastures" firmly in his possession, held forth anecdotes and animadversions on the theatre; there John Gunther, who was on leave from his post in Vienna, gave us the inside on Central Europe; there George Jessel proved he could be as amusing and witty offstage as on. Abel Green, now VARIETY's editor, but then in charge of the Paris bureau, joined us frequently. Lee Shubert darted in and out and, meeting us on a nearby street, dragged us into the Ritz bar for a drink. He gave us no chance to order.

"Champagne cocktails," he demanded. To Skene a champagne cocktail was akin to drinking camomile tea, but he decided not to demur. Having once been arrested for resisting a Shubert opening, he was taking no chances with a Shubert bearing gifts.

My wanderings with Watts and Skene came to an end because George S. Kaufman, still the ranking drama editor of The Times, had taken a leave of absence to work with a newcomer, Moss Hart, on a comedy called "Once In a Lifetime" and it was necessary for me to get back to New York and the drama desk.

On subsequent visits to the German capital Hitler and his National Socialists were making themselves increasingly evident. In 1932, however, we were assured by various and sundry newspapermen, with the notable exception of Guido Enderis, the marvelous, gnome-like little man who was for so long the correspondent of the N.Y. Times, that Hitler and his bully boys were on their way out. These optimistic statements did not appear to be substantiated by a fracas in a Kurfurstendamm rathskeller, where we were supping one evening when storm troopers invaded the place and started a free-for-all. Six months later Von Hindenberg appointed Hitler to be Chancellor and the German story from then onward to 1945 was written in blood and bombast, fire and fury, and hatred and horror.

The Boys Grow Older

Without the presence of Skene these Mugs travels, enjoyable as they were, somehow never recaptured the fine carefree, careless rapture of that first trip in 1930. It was, I suppose, fitting that my wife and I read of Don's death in 1938 in the Paris Herald Tribune while on a train en route from Boulogne to Paris. But a lot of things had happened to the world and to us and we could no longer accurately be described as Young Men of Manhattan.

It was toward the end of 1932 that things began happeneding to The Mugs. John Hutches left to spend some time in Spain and Majorca and Bosley Crowther followed him in The Times' drama department. Early in 1933, I too left The Times to become play editor of Paramount Pictures in New York, and Lewis Nichols joined the drama staff. In the ensuing years the character of the Mugs meetings changed. With the repeal of Prohibition, it was no longer necessary to congregate at the Paramount Hotel, and "21" more often than not became our meeting place. Although he was never an official member of our informal group, the highly articulate Howard Dietz, then MGM's vicepresident in charge of advertising and publicity, and still a musical show lyricist of note, became a welcome participant in our rallies and attended many of them. Robert Benchley, S. N. Behrman and such Hollywood figures as George Stevens, Gregory La Cava, Harry Kurnitz and Gene Fowler came from time to time, as did Lucius Beebe and Sir Cedric Hardwicke. Beebe and Sir Cedric with the Mugs! Truly, we were growing respectable, probably too much so for our own good.

Not only were we no longer marchers, but in one way and another we had ceased to be second-stringers. Watts and Barnes became first line critics, Skene died and Hutchens, back in New York, turned to book reviewing. Like so many other worthy people and institutions, The Mugs were affected by time and change. But it was great fun while it lasted, and I doubt that, even under approximate circumstances, such fun could be duplicated on Broadway today.

Gets Bolshoi Film Rights

Boston.

Davis Film Distributors has acquired national distribution rights for the Bolshoi Ballet's "The Little Humpbacked Horse," and its curtain raiser "The Musical Spring" with the exception of the states of California, Florida and the city of New York.

Mel Davis reported that "A Pair of Briefs" (Rank), distributed in the U.S. by the brother firm of Mel and Stan Davis, has been sold to E. M. Loew's new West End Cinema for first run Boston playoff. The picture is set for a multiple run in Washington, D. C. and is also set in leading theatres in Minneapolis, Rochester, N.Y.; Indianapolis, Springfield, Mass.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; Milwaukee, Atlanta, San Francisco, St. Louis, Louisville, Ky.; Chicago.

Davis, which acquired "Passion Holiday" for world wide distribution, has set key cities starting with New Year's including a multiple in Philadelphia, Minneapolis, Seattle, Washington, D.C., Kansas City.

Stage Fright—And Triumph

Continued from page 11

but could never express them. I couldn't converse naturally with strangers. With girls, I was hopeless. Then one day, while teaching, a vision came to me. I saw myself 20 years thence in the same classroom, repeating the same words, safely ensconced in my ivory tower, having learned how to cope with my sense of inferiority in limited situations—still unaware of my inner self. Without then knowing it, I had reached a crossroad.

I began to take part in amateur theatricals at night. Rehearsals saw me doing fine but opening night found me ill. It was like throwing salt into an old wound. I formed my own company and turned to directing plays—but this was avoiding the problem. I read volumes on the subject of psychology and the mind. Nothing helped. Then one day I heard of Butler Davenport and his "Free Theatre" on 27th St. "Davvy" had played with Richard Mansfield. He produced, directed and starred. He was a hard taskmaster but he offered actors and beginners the opportunity to play before the public—though without pay. He had a vast knowledge of theatre, especially of the classics, and had started Frank Wilson, Gene Raymond, King Donovan, John Ireland, etc.

A Dazed Thespian

My first play was "Father's Sons" written by Davenport himself. I was still teaching and after my work would immediately go by subway from Brooklyn to Manhattan to perform. Each night, right up to my entrance, I would run over my lines although I had learned them "cold" weeks before. I was unable to eat before the performance and during the course of the latter I was in my usual state. I spoke my lines by rote as in a poem, going from one speech to the next only after "Davvy" came to a pause. (Fortunately my first experience was with one actor only). Matters became complicated at times because "Davvy," who was then old, would often jump lines. I didn't listen on stage, knowing I would "go blank." The old maestro often wondered about me but somehow I stayed on. Perhaps he had faith in me—or was just short an actor at the time. I went from one play to another, still teaching and rehearsing a new play after each performance up to 2 A.M. There were no "dark days" at the "Free Theatre."

On the Wings of Music

I was not getting anywhere. I was merely coping with my fears in similar situations. Though I cultivated the association of professional actors from Broadway, read everything on modern theatre, and studied Stanislavsky and "The Method," I still moved on stage with fearful self-consciousness. My head refused to move slowly, if direction dictated it, and my eyes were stuck in their sockets. Oftentimes well-intentioned theatregoers advised me to quit. I refused to heed. Knowing what I had to do, I discussed it with no one. Everything had failed, especially words. The answer, I knew, would come through me—by doing. In the privacy of my own room, I was free. And before those I knew, I could weave a magic spell while acting. My fight was against the monster within me that leered and laughed whenever I tried to find myself. Some day, I thought, I would bridge the awesome gap into the unknown.

Then one night it happened—suddenly — beautifully — like a cloudburst on the parched earth. I shall never forget it. Here is how it came about. We were playing Ibsen's "The Master Builder." After the show, Davenport told us we could take an hour break before the "Hamlet" rehearsal. Instead of going to the Lex Cafe on the next corner, I went straightaway to see Nino Narducci, a young painter whose "bohemian" apartment a few doors away was usually filled with young artists, poets and aspiring actors. This night a party was in full swing. The crackling blaze in the fireplace cast eerie figures in an otherwise dark abode, and the sotto-voce hush of romance and the music of Tchaikovsky presented a picture of warmth and kinship to my hungry soul. I fell into a languid mood. Tenseness through overwork (I was getting only a few hours sleep a night) left me. Nino suggested that I "conduct" the next piece, "The Waltz of the Flowers" by the aforementioned composer.

I stepped up to an improvised podium with a makeshift baton in my hand. As Nino threw a dramatic spotlight on my cadaverous face, the room blacked out completely. I was in Carnegie Hall conducting a symphony orchestra. I raised my arms and waited. All eyes were on my bleak face. My body quivered as my soul, in one briefly-charged agonized moment, cried out to heaven to be unleased and freed of its bonds. Then—suddenly—as though guided by a great force my arms flashed down on the opening note and I soared on the wings of the music, transcending all fears and doubt. I don't remember much of what I did that night but later I was told that I had hit every note—as though I had actually conducted! I can still recall the chills running up and down my spine as I moved on the podium, my spirit freed at last from its cage. I had "walked with God."

Immediately thereafter, I went to rehearsal, the mood unbroken. That night I swept through the "platform scene" as Horatio with the grace and fire of one re-born. Through my own ecstacy, I had tapped the fundamental stream of life itself where there was only joy. I had never been afraid before friends or kindred souls. Now music had brought all humanity together for me. It was my bridge to understanding—and through its experience, I had been able to sense the LCD (lowest common denominator) of all things—the deeply unconscious yearning for everlasting life and expression. Thus, I had discovered a way to make a personal identification with life that was not intellectual but as moving and emotional as life can be to each one of us.

Soon afterward, I left teaching to become an actor. It was a long way to Broadway and Hollywood, one might say, but my work was cut out for me and the rest was merely effort.

The Hard Way

Continued from page 36

by writing any more of them. What did I want to write about? How did I want to write it?

Well, my book was going to be about a man like the late Mike Todd, and his ability to live in perpetual crisis. The possibilities were obvious. For a paperback novel I would only need to emphasize the action, the love affairs, the inside workings of the world of a master showman. And there it would be—half a million copies of a totally forgettable story.

But to aim high is to aim inward. Is this all a man like Mike Todd signifies? Isn't there more? Isn't there a response he evokes that has nothing to do with the mere outward events of his life? What did I want to say about this man?

I wanted to say this: despite his superficiality, his one-dimensional success drive, his hyperthyroid boldness, his mere desire to be gaudy, there was, is, something in him that is a part of the human story. He is one of those whose essence has been to perform, one of the numberless, now-forgotten people whose sheer energy has helped to drag mankind generation by generation up from the caves. His type flourished in Rome and the Renaissance, and will help to power the space age. This human vitality—wherever we find it—is a thing to celebrate.

I don't know how much of that I got into the book. Very possibly, when my Muse glanced at me, I only jingled at her. But I intend to keep on trying.

That, I suppose, is what I am trying to say: we must set our sights as high as we can within the limits of the work we are doing. Because there is always the chance—just a chance—that someday we will portray in our work—warts and all—the true lineaments of a man.

None of us can aim higher than that.

"That Fine Italian Hand" retitle for Vera Caspary's "Illicit," upcoming Fred Kohlmar production at 20th-Fox.

Boxoffice Good In Italy Despite TV; End of Studio 'Boom' No Disaster

By ROBERT F. HAWKINS

Rome.

Caution is a much-used word these days in the Italian film industry as it moves into a new year with slightly less assuredness than it did 12 months ago. The "boom" of the past few years is, at least for the moment, over, but Italy remains a nearly unique phenomenon: a modern country which despite inroads by television, motorization, outdoor life, etc., still manages to keep its yearly boxoffice totals and admission figures at close to par.

Now that the bloom is off the boom, efforts are being made in most facets of the industry to prevent the easy opposite from happening, and none is yet speaking of crisis.

Caution, therefore. Caution in spending, caution in choosing projects, caution on the part of banks in granting funds for filmmaking. With adroit management, industry toppers here feel, the vitality and validity of the Italian film can be saved as, importantly, the current slowdown has been one of finance, not ideas.

Observers opined that while lush days are over, the elimination of many fly-by-night filmmakers (and regrettably, some established vets as well) will in the long run accomplish by drastic means what the industry has itself tried to do for a long time: turn filmmaking from its past artisan-like status into a functional industry. The "survivors" should, if predictions follow through, come out of the current transition period notably stronger.

It is patent that under the current circumstances, few companies, even the solid ones, have firm ideas about what their 1964 activity will encompass.

Cineriz, one of the strongest, has a new Federico Fellini pic "Giulietta degli Spiriti" in mind, is currently winding Michelangelo Antonioni's "Deserto Rosso," with Richard Harris and Monica Vitti; and planning Francesco Rosi's new "Spagna"; Campaniel and Franciosa's "Voci Bianche"; Jacopetti and Prosperi's "Mondo Cane No. 2" and "Africa Addio"; among others. Company is making an important move early this year in taking a New York office to oversee their films' Stateside distribution. Move could have notable developments.

Among other outfits, VIDES continues in a strong position, having placed most if not all its pix on the world market (Walter Reade's Continental handling in U.S), with more planned (including a Claudia Cardinale starer directed by Luchino Visconti). Still up for release and eagerly awaited is their new Pietro Germi follow-up to "Divorce, Italian Style," "Seduced and Abandoned," to name just one of several.

Ponti & Joe Levine

Carlo Ponti's series of productions in tandem with Joseph Levine's Embassy Pictures is currently in release here, and both are planning some video skeins to be made in Tirrenia Studios owned jointly by Ponti and Maleno Malenoti. Sancro Films likewise looks busy, with a series of pix to follow their eminently successful "Conjugal Bed," among them "The Magnificent Cuckold."

Joseph Fryd is also active, having recently wound "Hercules, Samson and Ulysses" and "Naked World," and winding "An Italian in Warsaw," a satyrical comedy, with others including "Sandokan" and a western, both with Steve Reeves, in the making. Galatea is putting the finishing touches on "Italiano Brava Gente" but biding its time before embarking on further skeds.

Dino DeLaurentiis' Studio is about to open for partial business, and producer's latest, "Il Maestro di Vigevano," with Alberto Sordi, is a holiday release. "The Bible," with John Huston at the helm, is DeLaurentiis' major effort, and it's hoped to start this major effort in spring, with Cinerama the probable ratio and a major tie-in for release likely.

Arco Films, headed by Alfredo Bini, is currently also re-gearing for 1964, with "The Passion According to Saint Matthew" among first pix of still unannounced series on slate.

Several other companies have been prepping programs but prefer to reveal them at a later date. The "Sexy by Night" trend of exploitation items continues unabated, but a censor crack-down and audience apathy may bring a switch soon in this long-profitable skein. Medium-budgeted actioners and local comedies are also riding high, as they usually do in times of uncertainty. There has also, inevitably, been a drop in finance going to new directors for first feature efforts.

Lucky P.A.'s

Continued from page 45

mented to Ashley. "I want to thank you for letting me accompany you without a rehearsal. It was fun!"

"Thanks," said Ashley. "Did anyone ever tell you that you look exactly like the President's secretary?"

"They should," answered the little man, puffing on a big cigar. "I am!"

The resultant publicity was staggering. You can't arrange a plant" like this for all the American wheat in Hungary!

Gregory Peck & John Huston

One time Gregory Peck and John Huston came through New England to promote "Moby Dick." After three gruelling days in New Bedford, a trip to Providence, and a stay in Boston, the Hollywoodites were begging for a rest.

"Let's cut our schedule in Boston to a bare minimum," suggested Huston.

We had but two items on the agenda. One was for a personal appearance on the stage of the local theatre and the other was a visit to the Chelsea Naval Hospital.

It was decided to cut out the visit to the hospital. Who would miss it, anyhow? When word came back to us that the Commander had sent a scathing release to the wire services, denouncing Hollywood stars as using war casualties for their personal publicity, Huston decided that it would be to everyone's advantage to "make the scheduled visit."

Cajoling and pleading with the naval officers, we were allowed to visit the hospital. As we arrived, Peck and Huston were pulled into a room. They emerged garbed a la Ben Casey. Photographers, tv cameramen, reporters accompanied them into a room where a little girl lay immobile. Her name was Judith White. She had suffered third degree burns over 86% of her body as a result of trying to heat some milk for her puppy. Her beautiful face was unscathed. Accidentally, the light from the stove ignited her nightgown and she became a human pyre. She gave no signs of emotion as she writhed in pain for weeks. Her doctors prayed that she would react to some stimulus.

Peck was her favorite movie star. When she saw him, the doctors said her eyes became brighter and she smiled for the first time. Peck promised he'd talk to her from the Ed Sullivan Show a few days hence. He sent her a portable television set. Huston promised her a part in his new film, when she got out of the hospital.

The following Sunday night millions heard Gregory Peck say: "I am talking to my sweetheart, Judy White, at the Chelsea Naval Hospital . . ." He went on to describe her plight and asked listeners to send greeting cards to her. They did—136,000 of them!

Judy is now a young lady, without a trace of her horrible burns. She is a cheerleader at high school and when she gets time, Huston wants her to come to Hollywood.

But no flack staged this either.

Recently, producer James H. Nicholson and Sam Z. Arkoff, heads of American International Pictures, were honored as "the producers of the year," and "boo-boo" was turned into a hilarious introduction.

Vincent Price, sitting on a casket, with its lids bobbing up and down, "spoke" to the audience from the screen.

At a given signal, he was to point to a real casket on the floor of the hotel's ballroom, and Morey Amsterdam, the comedian, was to jump out.

All was in readiness; rehearsals, testing of lens, distances measured for perfect illumination and projection and—above all—the services of a fellow named (honest, he says it's true!) Francis Xavier Katz. This little man (all of five feet, with his elevator shoes) swore he knew his business because he had won an Academy Award for work on "The Waterfront." (Maybe as a longshoreman, I guess!)

The ballroom was filled. The house lights dimmed and the film began. Suddenly, after a few minutes of screen humor, the sound started to drag, the house went completely dark, the screen went blank.

A befuddled Francis Xavier Katz began to dismantle the projector. He checked the arc lights. He checked the lens. He checked the film for a break. Then, he discovered, much to his embarrassment, that a waiter had accidentally kicked out the electric plug from the wall! The continuity had been broken—but the show went on.

Then Morey Amsterdam came to the dais and said:

"When you are lying in a casket you think many things. I kept saying to myself: 'I am not dead, what am I doing in the casket? If I am dead, then how come I have to take a drink so badly?"

Lives of Actors

Continued from page 41

standards have increased. Marie Dressler in her book points out, "That old one about work not being hard if you love it is a lie, one of the biggest with which we try to drug ourselves. I tell you honestly, the more you love what you do, the harder it is to get by yourself."

But, how to fight the apathy? Not being given a chance to at least fail still frustrates me. The late Adolphe Menjou in his book summed it up, "The average casting director interviews neophyte job hunters only when trapped into it. He hasn't the time to see them all. The major studios all have scouts to search for new talent, but when a talent scout appears with a young prospect in tow, the casting director is apt to view the new 'find' with a jaundiced eye. He has become cynical about the ability of these prospective Gables and Bergmans; they appear and disappear by the hundreds. Even when a young Thespian has just received accolades from the Broadway critics, he had better arrive accompanied by an important agent and armed with a letter from the president of the company."

Marie Dressler said of her success, "Nobody knows better than I the part that friends and luck have played in my life. But there's something else which should not be overlooked: even if I had failed. I should know the incomparable satisfaction of knowing that I had tried. To know that one has never tried, that is the only death."

And so we actors continue in our fight. Cecil B. DeMille claimed that he admired a man with "strength of character and conviction," that his favorite actor (Gary Cooper) had the embodiment that says that art consists of concealing its artfulness and his favorite actress (Barbara Stanwyck) was most cooperative, less tempermental, and a better workman." DeMille had no excuse for alibis nor does Bette Davis who disagreed with DeMille's basic philosophy when she said, "An actor who can't afford to have enemies shouldn't be an actor."

I'm grateful for those interviews, those books on the theatre, those autobiographies. I feel closer to the stars who wrote them because they spoke to me. And whenever I long for the lavishness of those on the inside I think of Joan Crawford's comment in her book, "You don't need things, all that you have is what you carry in your heart and spirit."

Could Be A Change Coming From Traditional 'Loop' Rule

By MORRY ROTH

Chicago.

Day-and-dating, the simultaneous opening of a picture at mainstem and outliving theatres, came to Chicago via the back door and in a small way in 1963. What happens at the front door in 1964 depends upon the Balaban & Katz theatre chain, owners of four of the six major downtown deluxers and traditionally proponents of Loop preem booking primacy.

Most of the pressume for daydate relationships has come from those operators with suburban houses, particularly the new batch of hardtops in shopping centres. It is the contention of these owners that suburban theatres are in no way in competition with the Loop houses and that they cater to an entirely different clientele.

One possible crack in B&K's resistance to simultaneous openings is the chain's own bid for a new theatre in the Oakbrook shopping centre. Several suburban ops are cautiously hopeful that B&K will be more sympathetic to their point of view if the theatre chain has a similar operation.

The daydate instances in 1963 were not the sort of swallows that necessarily portend a great parallel preem summer. Chuck Teitel had a bangup 14-week run off Columbia's "L-Shaped Room" in his near north side Town and downtown World Playhouse theatres. However, these are art houses and Teitel was more interested in putting himself in a better bidding position for big art pix than he was in carrying the daydate banner.

'Damaged' Example

In another case, Essaness played a sex hygiene picture, "Damaged Goods," at its own Woods Theatre in the Loop and in 22 nabe situations at the same time. The picture did okay in the nabes and only fair at the Woods, but an Essaness spokesman said that the simultaneous Loop opening "gave the picture class" and helped it in the neighborhoods.

The case that could have broken the daydate ban (and probably would have had other suburban ops clamoring for similar treatment) didn't take place because of a booking mixup. According to Oscar Brotman, 20th offered him "Move Over Darling" for a dual Christmas opening in his downtown Loop and suburban Hillside theatres. The deal was not consummated because Brotman could not get out of a prior commitment.

Film Row opinion of the advantages of daydate is not as unanimous as might be expected.

While the Loop remains the virtually exclusive outlet for bowing major new pix, the distribs have been willing if not eager to experiment with st runs. Within the past year, nearly all big pictures and hardticket pix went into neighborhood houses on a limited basis, that is to between 10 and 20 houses on a zone basis.

The selected-theatres A-run has been successful according to the distributors, but the owners of the smaller houses say that it just pushes them one step further back. Unlike day and dating, which would advance all runs, the "A-run showcase" sets back a substantial number of houses.

It's one nabe owner's wry observation that "holiday bookings" mean that the Loop gets a film for Christmas, the preferred theatres get for the between-semester school vacation—and he gets it for the Fourth of July.

It could well be that 1964 will be the year of decision for daydating on any substantial level in Chicago. It's a step that the distributors are considering with the greatest caution, since once it is tried it will be difficult to return to the old methods. Some tradesters think that it will depend upon the availability of big pictures in the coming year. That is, the exhibitors can still make enough on subruns of the big pix to keep them happy. However, if several of the planned heavyweights should die at the boxoffice, current grumbling could turn into loud howls.

Yugoslavia Importing Fewer U.S. Films Only Because Of: The Expense

By STOJAN BRALOVIC

Belgrade.

Let us not be too scholarly, but simply pass it off this way: Yugoslavian film reviewers and sociologists are not occasionally puzzled by American feature films, those they get to see. The reasons are not obscure, bearing the distance in geography and ideology from this modified Communist state and the mixed-capitalism folkways of the United States.

This does not mean that Yugoslavia is not fascinated by American product. Indeed this is an old reaction dating back to before World War I when people spoke of "Edison" as a great cinematic name and when this country was then part of the Austrio-Hungarian Empire that fell to splinters when the war was lost.

During the first period of independence, 1930-1940, a partnership of American and Yugoslav business interests controlled all major film theatres here. Of some 450 features imported at this period perhaps 60% originated in Hollywood.

Since World War II and with the regime of Marshall Tito, the situation here has undergone notable changes. These have been duly reported through the years, especially in the Anniversary and International Film Editions of VARIETY. For a long time the emotional mood of the terrible struggle against the Germans revealed itself in an almost unrelieved diet of war heroics. These were popular here but offered little for export.

In recent years the Yugoslav film industry has begun to attract favorable notice internationally. Its films have been entered in many festivals. As yet they have not quite solved the riddle of the American market. Which is one reason they study U.S. product so closely—both for clues in the U.S. taste itself and to that element in Hollywood product which permits U.S. film entertainment to circulate the world over with such boxoffice success.

There is, be it again emphasized, a considerable degree of individual enterprise here. Not perhaps as Americans think of it, but our Yugoslavian producers do exercise much independence of choice.

Decline In Numbers

In 1952 Yugoslavia imported from the United States 32 feature films, in 1955 an even 92. Though in 1959 the number dropped to 77 and in 1962 to 35 films. The reason for this decline should be sought in the nature of economic transactions. Yet, even under these conditions American films still are one third of all imported motion pictures exhibited here.

Of 800 motion pitcures circulating in Yugoslav, perhaps 300 are from the United States. They are often reviewed with much seriousness estimates publication annually of about 1,000 pieces dealing with U.S. films.

Product is distributed by five import enterprises situated in various population centres. A film may be first shown in Belgrade and only after six months in Ljubljana, or vice versa.

Among motion pictures recently imported the following ones had the greatest success: "The First Texan," "Crack in the Mirror," "Fanny," "Strangers on the Train," "The Midnight Lace," "Taste of Fear," "The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance," "Anna Karanina," "My Geisha," "Hatari," "The Nun's Story," "Teachers' Pet," "Sergeant Rutledge," "Alamo," "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," "Miracle Maker," "When the Bells Ring," "View from the Bridge," "The Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone," "South Pacific," "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn," "Warlock," "At Gun Point," "Psycho," "Rio Bravo," "The Solid Gold Cadiliac," "Woman Obsessed," and "Where the Boys Are."

Others were "Anastasia," "The Bus Stop," "Butterfield 8," "Davy Crocket and Pirate.," "Horsemen," "Moby Dick," "Some Came Running," "Apartment," "Tea and Symphony," "North - Northwest," "Anna Franks Diary" and many others.

THRU UA CONTINUING PROGRESS

John WAYNE Maureen O'HARA
in McLINTOCK!
Co-starring
PATRICK WAYNE • STEFANIE POWERS
JACK KRUSCHEN • CHILL WILLS
And Guest Star YVONNE DeCARLO
Original screenplay by JAMES EDWARD GRANT
Directed by ANDREW V. McLAGLEN • Produced by MICHAEL WAYNE
A BATJAC PRODUCTION
TECHNICOLOR® PANAVISION®

THE MIRISCH COMPANY presents
A BLAKE EDWARDS PRODUCTION
DAVID NIVEN • PETER SELLERS
ROBERT WAGNER • CAPUCINE
in
THE PINK PANTHER
with BRENDA DE BANZIE • COLIN GORDON and introducing FRAN JEFFRIES and with CLAUDIA CARDINALE as the PRINCESS
Directed by BLAKE EDWARDS • Screenplay by MAURICE RICHLIN and BLAKE EDWARDS Produced by MARTIN JUROW • Music-HENRY MANCINI • A MIRISCH-G-E Production
TECHNICOLOR® TECHNIRAMA®

A LAURENCE HARVEY Production
THE CEREMONY
Starring
LAURENCE HARVEY | SARAH MILES | ROBERT WALKER
JOHN IRELAND | Also starring ROSS MARTIN LEE PATTERSON
JACK McGOWRAN MURRAY MELVIN NOEL PURCELL
Produced and Directed by LAURENCE HARVEY
From a Screenplay by BEN BARZMAN

HARRY SALTZMAN and ALBERT R. BROCCOLI present
IAN FLEMING'S
FROM RUSSIA WITH LOVE
STARRING SEAN CONNERY as JAMES BOND / INTRODUCING DANIELA BIANCHI
Screenplay by RICHARD MAIBAUM • Adapted by JOHANNA HARWOOD
Produced by HARRY SALTZMAN and ALBERT R. BROCCOLI
Directed by TERENCE YOUNG...EON PRODUCTIONS, LTD.
TECHNICOLOR®

THE MIRISCH COMPANY presents
YUL BRYNNER
GEORGE CHAKIRIS
SHIRLEY ANNE FIELD
in
KINGS OF THE SUN
co-starring RICHARD BASEHART BRAD DEXTER
Directed by J. LEE THOMPSON • Produced by LEWIS J. RACHMIL
Screenplay by ELLIOTT ARNOLD and JAMES R. WEBB Story by ELLIOTT ARNOLD
Color by DE LUXE • PANAVISION

STUART MILLAR and LAWRENCE TURMAN
present
HENRY FONDA • CLIFF ROBERTSON • EDIE ADAMS • MARGARET LEIGHTON
SHELLEY BERMAN • LEE TRACY and ANN SOTHERN in GORE VIDAL'S
THE BEST MAN
Directed by FRANKLIN SCHAFFNER • Screenplay by GORE VIDAL
Produced by STUART MILLAR and LAWRENCE TURMAN

FRANK ROSS presents
ONE MAN'S WAY
(The Norman Vincent Peale Story)
Starring
DON MURRAY and Introducing
DIANA HYLAND
Directed by DENIS SANDERS
Screenplay by ELEANORE GRIFFIN and JOHN W. BLOCH
Produced by FRANK ROSS

JAMES DARREN • PAMELA TIFFIN
IN
FOR THOSE WHO THINK YOUNG
CO-STARRING
PAUL LYNDE • TINA LOUISE • NANCY SINATRA
BOB DENVER • CLAUDIA MARTIN
INTRODUCING WOODY WOODBURY
Executive Producer HOWARD W. KOCH • Produced by HUGH BENSON
Directed by LESLIE MARTINSON
Screenplay by JAMES O'HANLON, GEORGE O'HANLON and DAN BEAUMONT
Story by DAN BEAUMONT • A SCHENCK-KOCH Production
TECHNICOLOR® and TECHNISCOPE®

. . . CONTINUING PRODUCT!

YUL BRYNNER
RICHARD WIDMARK
GEORGE CHAKIRIS
IN FLIGHT FROM ASHIYA
WITH
SUZY PARKER • SHIRLEY KNIGHT and DANIÈLE GAUBERT
Directed by MICHAEL ANDERSON • Produced by HAROLD HECHT
Screenplay by ELLIOTT ARNOLD and WALDO SALT
A CO-PRODUCTION OF DAIEI MOTION PICTURE COMPANY LTD. & HAROLD HECHT FILMS, INC.
EASTMANCOLOR and PANAVISION®

Melina MERCOURI · Peter USTINOV · Maximilian SCHELL in JULES DASSIN'S
TOPKAPI
Co-starring
ROBERT MORLEY
Screenplay by JULES DASSIN and MONYA DANISCHEWSKY
Produced and Directed by JULES DASSIN
Based on a Novel by ERIC AMBLER • A FILMWAYS-HELENA PROD.
COLOR

THE MIRISCH CORPORATION
presents
CLIFF ROBERTSON · GEORGE CHAKIRIS
in
633 SQUADRON
Directed by WALTER E. GRAUMAN
Screenplay by JAMES CLAVELL and HOWARD W. KOCH
Executive Producer LEWIS J. RACHMIL
Produced by CECIL F. FORD
Color by DE LUXE • PANAVISION®

BURT LANCASTER
in
THE TRAIN
co-starring
PAUL SCOFIELD · JEANNE MOREAU
Screenplay by FRANKLIN COEN • FRANK DAVIS and WALTER BERNSTEIN
Produced by JULES BRICKEN • Directed by JOHN FRANKENHEIMER
A FRANCO-ITALIAN, LES PRODUCTIONS ARTISTES ASSOCIES-ARIANE FILMS CO-PRODUCTION PANAVISION®

William Holden
in Ten Days To Penang
co-starring
SUSANNAH YORK · CAPUCINE · TETSURO TAMBA
Screenplay by KARL TUNBERG | Produced and Directed by LEWIS GILBERT | A Helvia Production
COLOR

THE CORMAN COMPANY presents
THE DUBIOUS PATRIOTS
Starring
STEWART GRANGER · RAF VALLONE · MICKEY ROONEY
EDWARD BYRNES and HENRY SILVA as "Durrell"
Written by R. WRIGHT CAMPBELL
Produced by GENE and ROGER CORMAN • Directed by ROGER CORMAN
EASTMANCOLOR • PANAVISION®

PAN ARTS COMPANY presents
Peter SELLERS · Angela LANSBURY · Paula PRENTISS
in
THE WORLD OF HENRY ORIENT
with
Peter Duchin · Phyllis Thaxter · Bibi Osterwald
Screenplay by NUNNALLY and NORA JOHNSON
Produced by JEROME HELLMAN • Directed by GEORGE ROY HILL COLOR • PANAVISION®

GINA LOLLOBRIGIDA
SEAN CONNERY
RALPH RICHARDSON
In
WOMAN OF STRAW
Screenplay by STANLEY MANN and ROBERT MULLER
Directed by BASIL DEARDEN • Produced by MICHAEL RELPH
A DEARDEN-RELPH PRODUCTION
COLOR

Mencken 'Variety' Slanguage

Continued from page 6

have had a powerful influence upon current newspaper writing, both in the U.S. and in England. Conservative journalists in both countries have denounced them bitterly, but they are still widely imitated.

Mencken Footnote 9, page 213: (Payola became a national word after the disclosure of monkey business in popular TV quiz programs. See "On The Air," N.Y. Times, Nov. 22, 1959, Sec. 4, p. 1; also "Foreign Usage of Payola," by William Randle, AS [American Speech], Vol. XXXVI, Dec. 1961, pp. 275-7. Plugola, a subspecies—payments to disk jockeys in return for frequently playing a record company's new recording — was also disclosed during these scandals. Nayola, administrative donothingism, was reported in the Youngstown (Ohio) Vindicator, Feb. 12, 1960, p. 8. Laundrola has also been reported, as a name for the common practice among laundries of paying tribute to racketeers)."

Menk's Appreciation

Further on according to Mencken, "This list might be extended almost indefinitely, especially if one includes citations from the iconoclastic vocabulary of VARIETY, e.g., to ash-can, to angel, to showcase, to emcee or m.c. (serve as master of ceremonies), to background, to music, to guest, to biography, to bankroll, to premiere (often shortened to to preem) and to barnum. VARIETY frequently reduces verb phrases to simple verbs, e.g., to siesta for to take a siesta, to train, for to go by train and to outlet for to serve as an outlet. Rather curiously, it also affects a number of new and clumsy verbs, made from nouns, that are not nearly so vivid as the old verbs they displace, e.g., to author for to write, to guest for to entertain and to destruct for to destroy. Such forms are by no means confined to VARIETY. .

Verbing A La Mode

"Verbs are made not only of nouns but also of other parts of speech. To up has had a twilight sort of life in English for many years, but it did not flower in American until VARIETY began to use it. Nothing whatever can be said against it, for its brother, to down, has been accepted since Shakespeare's time. To up is now in very respectable usage, especially around the poker table. VARIETY has also used to in and to out, but only with apparent timidity, and not often. To the same general category belong to ad-lib and to yes and the verbs made of interjections, e.g., to shush and to wow, all of which have a reputable forerunner in to hem and haw, which goes back, in various forms, to the 15th century. Also, the pathologist of speech must not overlook the verbs made of adjectives, e.g., to obsolete and to a-la-mode, i.e., to spread icecream on a slice of fruit pie, thus converting it into pie a la mode. . . .

To Unstink

"To unstink, as in 'The American Reds have attempted to unstink themselves,' seems to have been coined by Westbrook Pegler. Walter Winchell and VARIETY have launched a number of analogues, but they have not come into general use. (The negative in- is apparently yielding to incomplete, in the jargon of football; sportscasters now report unsuccessful passes as incompleted rather than incomplete.")

Referring to the infiltration of English by Americanisms, Mencken footnotes p. 271, No. 7. At the start they made some effort to placate English prejudices. On July 10, 1929, VARIETY reported that a movie called, 'No! No! Napoleon' was being done in both an American version and an English translation. The sentence "a nut factory, eh?', was translated into 'A madhouse, eh?' This spirit of concession was well received by the English cinema magnates, and one of them contributed an article to the London Star on Feb. 4, 1930, in which he expressed the opinion that the day of American slang in England was over. 'English actors of both sexes,' he reported, 'are being employed in ever increasing number and a superior type of American artist is being engaged who has the culture and ability to acquire English cadences and intonations.' But Hollywood soon discovered that the English fans, at least in the lower orders, really enjoyed American slang, so nut factory and many congeners were restored to use and the 'superior type of American artist' was displaced by the traditional recruits from the 10c stores and barbecue stands."

Mencken continued, "Meanwhile, VARIETY and its imitators continue to generate and disseminate a large number of simplified spellings of their own, e.g., laff, ayem (a.m.), whodunit, burlesk and vodvil. Hollywood seems to have been responsible for the reduction of and to 'n, as in Sit 'n Eat, Park 'n Dine, and perhaps for hiway and traler (trailer) . . .

"The stage in its various forms shares with the newspapers, radio and tv the burden of disseminating neologians in the Republic, and its chief organ, VARIETY, has probably set afloat more of them than any other single agency. But in addition to their services in this cultural field, stagefolks also use many peculiar terms of their own. Some of them go back to the days of Shakespeare, but most, of course, are more recent, and there is a constant birth of new ones. The first effort that I am aware of to compile an American glossary was made by the highly respectable but stage-struck Brander Matthews, in 1917. In the following list, I have omitted terms whose meaning is known to everyone, e.g., star, boxoffice, ingenue, one-night stand, angel, hand, S.R.O., properties, understudy, tryout and free list.

Backing. Scenery hung behind doors, windows and other openings in the set.

Blow up, or dry up, or balloon, v. To forget one's lines.

Borders. Short curtains or strips of scenery (foliage, etc.) behind the top of the proscenium arch and across the top of the stage; also lights along the sides thereof.

Dog. An audience outside New York. To try out a play on the road is to try it on the dog.

Dressing. Filling a house with pass holders likely to applaud.

George Spelvin. A name used on playbills for a minor actor in a walk-on role, or to conceal the fact that an actor whose real name is given in one role is doubling in another.

Ghost. The company treasurer. The ghost is said to walk on payday.

Open cold, v. To present a play in New York without a tryout elsewhere.

Pop. The traditional nickname for the stage doorkeeper.

Side. A page in the typescript of an actor's speeches, given to him to memorize.

Thinking part. A part including no spoken lines.

Turkey. A failure.

Vaudeville, in its heyday, had a rich argot of its own, so some of which survives in the general vocabulary of the stage. Many of its terms, like those given in the preceding vocabulary, are now more or less obsolete, for vaudeville has decayed sadly. At the same time the minstrel show has disappeared. Meanwhile, the argot of burlesque, which was once virtually identical with that of vaudeville, has had to be enlarged to take in the vocabulary of striptease. The latter was listed by H. M. Alexander in his "Strip Tease" in 1938. From his list, and with the help of other authorities, I have put together the following:

Boston version. A show purged of its worst indecencies.

Bump, v. To thrust the hips forward.

Bust developer. A performer who croons offstage while the stripteaser is at work.

Catching the bumps. One of the jobs of the drummer in the orchestra.

Flannel mouth, or stooge. A straight man who acts as feeder to the comedian.

Flash. The sudden exposure at the end of an act, presumably of the entire carcass.

Gadget. A G-string.

Grind, v. To revolve the backside.

Panel. A stripteaser's diaphanous draperies.

Quiver, v. To rotate or oscillate the breasts.

Slinger, or peeler, or shucker, or stripper. A stripteaser.

Third banana. A comedian who submits to assault by another comedian.

Trailer. The stripteaser's exhibitionary strut before beginning to takeoff her clothes.

Wham. A striptease in which the teaser removes virtually all her clothes.

Many terms associated with the movies are the product of press-agents, e.g., wampas, a female aspirant to stardom; cobra, a girl powerfully aphrodisiacal; starlet, sex appeal, ooniph, glamor girl and the magnificent supercolossal.

Some of the other terms emanating from Hollywood wits have their points, e.g., to go Hollywood, meaning, when applied to an actor, to succumb to a suffocating sense of his own importance, and when applied to a movie writer or other intellectual, to abandon the habits and ideas of civilization and embrace the levantine life of the richer movie folks; casting couch for the divan in a casting director's office; tear bucket for an elderly actress playing heartbroken mothers; finger wringer for a star given to emoting; baddie for an actor playing villains; cliff-hanger for a serial melodrama; sobbie or weepie for a picture running to sadness; and bump man for a performer who undertakes dangerous stunts. VARIETY uses flesh to designate live players who appear in moviehouses.

(Footnote No. 3, p. 739, VARIETY calls pressagents flacks, a World War II term for antiaircraft fire. It was borrowed from the German flak, an abbreviation of Fliegerabwehrkanone, an antiaircraft cannon. Agents of extraordinary virulence are blast artists. They call themselves publicists, public relations counsel or publicity engineers. See Chi. VI. See. 7).

Production Code

"In the so-called Production Code, Mencken cites "by which all save a few outlaw producers are still bound. Its Index Expurgatorius includes, as permanent fixtures, broad (for woman), chippy, cocotte, courtesan, eunuch, fairy (in the sense of homosexual), floozy, harlot hot mamma, hussy, madam (in the sense of brothelkeepre), nance, pansy, slut, trollop, tart and wench, and of course, whore. Sex is also forbidden, as is the adjective sexual. Jew may be used only in complimentary connotations, and kike, yid, dago and nigger are prohibited altogether. God must be used circumspectly, and Gawd is under the the ban. So are Lord ("when used profanely"), Christ, 'guts, hell, hellcat, Jesus, Geez, son of a....., S.O.B., louse and punk. Travelling salesman may not be used 'where reference is made to a farmer's daughter' and liar is reserved for scenes 'in a light comedy vein." [Since then, of course, the Production Code has undergone several dilutions.—Ed.].

In a footnote to this, Mencken recalls, "Under the heading Verbotens of 1929 compiled by Joe Laurie Jr., VARIETY printed a list of words and phrases, forbidden to vaudevillians in that year. It included to hell with, cockeyed, wop, Arab (signifying a Jew), pushover, dammit, belly, fanny, and lousy. It should be added that these prohibitions were imposed by the Keith booking office, not by official censorship. [Same comment as in Production Code.—Ed.].

There is another footnote reference to late comedian-author Laurie's "Lefty's Notebook," in April 7, 1943 issue of VARIETY, having to do with carnival slang and criminal and underworld jargon.

COOPER REORGANIZES

Campbell Heads Board, Thompson Elected President

Cooper Foundation, which operates a circuit of theatres based in Denver, has reorganized its administrative staff with R. E. Campbell, who had been president, elected to the newly-created post of board chairman.

E. N. Thompson is resigning as senior v.p. of National Bank of Commerce Trust & Savings Assn. to become president of Cooper with responsibilities for general management. Roger V. Dickeson, counsel and for the last four months acting general manager, returns to law practice full time. Named v.p. for operations was George Gaughan, a managing executive for eight. Herman Haliberg was promoted to assistant v.p. for operations.

Forever Faithful Film Fans

Continued from page 15

cialized tastes of its audience, it unfortunately tends to be suspicious of film societies rather than enthusiastic about their progress and the general upgrading of tastes they engender.

The new Hollywood Museum (which should have been built 30 years ago) is beginning to alert production to the fact that film is an art—the only art—which can be traced from its beginnings and one in which some of the pioneers are still alive, although perhaps ignored in these last few hectic years of flux and strain.

Experts On the Past

Film research and study has gone on without any direct subsidy or financial help from the Hollywood studios. Most of the interesting experimental film work and film writing is being done by people now or formerly associated with film societies. It is always amazing to encounter 19-year-old film society members who have more knowledge about films made before they were born than does many a Hollywood oldtimer.

There are even "film nuts" who have private showings of all the films of such personalities as Veda Ann Borg, Louise Brooks or a retrospective showing of all the Busby Berkley musicals. Greater love hath no film society member.

Stumbling Blocks

One of the major stumbling blocks for the film society audience is the fact that most film groups use 16m films and not 35m, which might explain the theatreman's lack of enthusiasm and interest. It obviously puts some limitations upon the selection of films available. There has been a general feeling that the 35m distributor does not understand the 16m field and cares less.

Most film people are aware that negligence has robbed the moviegoer of many of the film classics, which have turned to brown powder in some unused vault when a few dollars or a little loving care could have saved them for future generations. If art collectors had been as careless in earlier days as some film distributors have been in our century, we would have no evidence that Rembrandt and other great masters ever really painted anything.

Treasures

Film is more than a commodity. It is a set of treasures which must be preserved for future generations to see and enjoy.

When American Federation of Film Societies was formed a decade ago, tracking down and preserving the films of the past was (as it still is) a major goal. But then most societies were floundering from a lack of "know how," lack of finances, lack of knowledge as to where to get good films and lack of confidence.

Today, most Federation member societies are thriving and growing. They even sometimes manage to break even financially. Although no member film society is a profit-making organization, a "break-even" point is every group's goal.

Narrow Guagers

A member society receives monthly newsletters giving information on new films and other relevant materials, reports on screenings and festivals, comments and critiques on films, etc. The quarterly magazine, "Film Society," gives analyses and general articles about the art of the film. A source list of 16m distributors is revised and reprinted each year and sent to all members. A new film society handbook will be off the press in April. An exchange program of study notes from member societies is sent out quarterly.

Unlike Hollywood, the major 16m film distributors find it easier to understand the workings of the film societies and offer them help whenever possible. They know their field well and many times use the socities as a "sounding board" for acquiring new product. A society has several times guaranteed enough bookings to make 16m prints of a film which they would like to have on a coming series. Over a dozen of the major 16m film distributors have joined the AFFS as associate members.

Major 35m distributors are actually surprised when they hear about an organization of film societies. Many have no idea who has the 16m rights to their films. Others have some excellent product which they would like to put into 16m but don't have the background or experience to do it. Still others can't believe that there is a market for their quality product among film societies and study groups.

What about film societies and competition with the theatres? The answer is, there just isn't any. Any member will tell you that there's nothing like seeing a good feature in a nice, well-kept and comfortable theatre with good sound and sharp projection. When all these factors converge, a theatre manager finds he can usually attract a full house. And there will probably be a generous sprinkling of film society members attending.

All the film societies ask of the film makers is the recognition of their existence. I can confirm the fact that they are alive and kicking and the future looks mighty bright.

You say there's no film society near you? Then perhaps you'd better think about starting one.

H'wood & Baseball

Continued from page 9

jumping out of the way of the bat? And he still doesn't want to go to a ballgame. I can't even shame him into it. The other day I said, 'You blankety blank Welsh tea drinking blankety-blank. If you're too cheap to buy a ticket I'll get you a pass."

Milland is on record with having uttered a nasty laugh and an unprintable retort. Anyway he was busy making "Rhubarb."

Smith's 'Rhubarb'

"Rhubarb" was an H. Allen Smith story about a cat that inherited a ball club, a neat theme. It did better than expected because the teams were the Yankees and Dodgers and right down to the last day of the season it looked as though they'd hook up in the World Series. Then the Giants won the flag in a playoff and it was Giants-Yankees, but that wasn't bad for the picture, either.

For some reason movie people have gone mostly offbeat in making ball films, going in for prescient cats helpful angels, amiable devils (Douglass Wallop's calling his Damn Yankees devil "Mr. Applegate" has to be the greatest stroke of genius since the invention of the wheel), magicians, etc. Nothing like some plain old .300 hitter, whose brother-in-law is being threatened by the loansharks coming in to save the day, hangover and all, by socking one out of the park.

I remember one spring when MGM tried to hop the bandwagon with something called "Angels and Pirates," in which a baseball manager gets advice from a supernatural voice from nowhere. That baby had to flop. The movie people didn't know that all baseball managers function that way normally.

Around that time Sam Goldwyn had decided to do the Lou Gehrig story, which had plenty of human interest because it dealt with a big star stricken at career's height by a fatal disease. Frawley got Lefty O'Doul, one of the big sulggers of the early '30s, a job as technical advisor, which meant Lefty had to show Cooper how to hold a bat and maybe throw a ball.

Gary Cooper

Cooper was eminently unenthusiastic and didn't bother to conceal his distaste with the elaborate equipment laid before him daily, plus Lefty's program for learning to use it.

O'Doul, meanwhile, envisioned Cooper throwing underhand and swinging a Lousville Slugger like a tennis racket. He started to sweat a little.

Growing desperate, O'Doul wheedled, "Come on, Gary, try one of these dandy gloves. Here, throw that ball to me."

Gooper merely shrugged.

This irritated O'Doul, who had once irritated National League pitching at a .398 clip.

"Whatsamatter with you, anyway?" he demanded. "What do you want me to do?"

"Just give me a horse and a gun," drawled Cooper, "and I'll shoot your fanny off."

When Chi Was Glamorous

Continued from page 32

the Herald-Examiner. He had triumphed in auditions held in the local room. You read aloud from a newspaper. If you could be understood you were in radio. Another winner was a reporter named Phil Harris, now news editor of the Tampa Tribune.

Radio had been on my list of assignments prior to my role as talent bird dog for WEBH. A radio set was lowered into a bank vault. In print I marveled that the human voice raised in song in the Hearst Bldg. two miles distant could penetrate that thickness of steel.

The Hearst studio was the setting for what must have been one of the earliest radio version of the telethon. The H-E was collecting funds for victims of a disaster. A pianist called Little Jack Little played request numbers for callers pledging contributions. I was pressed into service to help handle the phone calls. Perhaps, as happened in the later telethons, there was a wide gap between pledges and deliveries. But it's just possible that people, awed by the sound of their names on radio, felt that it would be a criminal offense to renege.

Freddie Lindstrom, a Chicago boy, was the rookie third baseman for the N.Y. Giants in the 1924 World Series. In barter for publicity a radio store gave us a set that I brought to Lindstrom's mother. The static was bad and we heard little of the game, but I didn't mention that in the glowing story. The set had been a Hearst gift and a product with that cachet you didn't knock.

In similar vein, an idea to pep up a routine daily story was vetoed. Houdini was playing a Loop theatre. A deal was arranged whereby we would sponsor his appearance at orphanages. We rented a long black limousine to take him around. On a stormy day the car got stuck in a snowbank. Houdini and I had to transfer to a cab. Shelved was my suggestion that I write a story about the great Houdini unable to escape from a snowbank. There was, I suspect, the feeling that it would reflect on a Hearst-hired car.

Frank Carson, managing editor of the Herald-Examiner and a one-time Tribune city editor, got a hang out of needling his old sheet. As a consequence Carson played a role in a comedy that became a prolog to tragedy.

Rudolph Valentino arrived in town coincidental with the publication of a Tribune editorial rapping him. Carson made sure that Valentino saw it. An Examiner reporter brought a copy to the station.

A coin-operated powder machine had been installed in the gents room of the Aragon ballroom. It was, said the instuctions, to be used for one's "personal puff." Aghast, the Trib cried that the American he-man was disintegrating under the sinister influence of Valentino, who had already brought the slave bracelet to male wrists.

Latin blood steaming, the "Sheik," abetted by Carson, wrote out a challenge to John Herrick, the editorial writer. Let Herrick choose the weapons! Rudy donned boxing gloves for one picture; another showed him lunging with a saber.

His challenge unanswered, Valentino went on to New York and was stricken with appendicitis. Coming out of the anesthetic, his first anxious query was, "Did I act like a powder puff?" Soon he was dead from peritonitis.

Not all days were sunny down at the depot. Hurrying east in flight from a vexing affair of the heart, Charlie Chaplin eluded the press. The search went on into the night. Near midnight I was detached from the posse and sent to the Belmont Hotel to ask Mary Garden why she had slapped her conductor after a performance of "Thais."

The usually loquacious Miss Garden declined to receive me. I was dispatched to a station to ransack a milk train for the elusive comedian. Five minutes after I left the Belmont, Chaplin checked in for the night. We did not learn this until the next day when he was aboard a train for the east.

I have often wondered what I would have done had Miss Garden beckoned and en route I encountered Chaplin. It would have called for an agonizing appraisal of news values. But I was not put to the test. I missed Charlie and I didn't get to see Mary. It was not the sort of thing that would have happened to Lowell Thomas or John Gunther, and it helps explain why they look good in their autobiographies.

The involvement of Hearst reporters in the movie biz went beyond carefree banter and hide-and-seek with the stars. We took people to the movies. We fished for our prey from among politicians, clergymen and women's club presidents. We photographed them under the marquees of theatres playing Marion Davies pictures. It was not required that they go inside. It was simpler and safer to draw on our imaginations for their review.

Thus, Gov. Len Small of Illinois was quoted, "Undoubtedly, Marion Davies' finest film to date. I can't wait to tell Mrs. Small about it and urge her to see it."

The next day a literal-minded librarian came from the morgue to the city desk to complain, "I find it difficult to believe that the governor made that statement. I looked up the clips. Mrs. Small has been dead for a year." No one paid him heed and morosely he shuffled back to his dusty bins.

The fun and games press men shared with the infant radio and the silent and early talkie movies were missing from tv's adolescence. Radio's display of ingratitude had made the publishers leery of the vacuum tube. The amusing little toy, the beneficiary of indulgent head pats from the press, had grown up to become a hearty diner at the advertising dollar table. Video went through its growing pains strictly on its own. When it attained full stature the press moved in on the principle of join 'em but don't pamper 'em. A good deal of what might have been newsprint advertising has been lost to commercials. But the press has benefited through the readership, interest and ad revenue produced by the weekend TV program supplements.

I can sympathize with the advertising manager, and the news editor struggling to make an 8 column banner read like red hot news to the fellow who has been listening to his car radio. But it's every man for himself. Personally I have found radio, ever since it left the studio and went out where the news was breaking, a reporter's ally. And to this circle of friends I have welcomed the mobile tv camera.

Years ago people involved in uncomfortable situations often brushed aside reporters armed only with pencils. They didn't mind being recorded in print as barking "no comment." But now most of them can't resist the bank of microphones and tv cameras. And drawn thereto they seem to feel that it's either a mark of stupidity or a confession of guilt, depending on the circumstances, to fling out a resounding "I have nothing to say." They talk and I make notes.

With electronic assistance I get a story, let us say, at O'Hare Airport at noon. It's good for a column or so in the early edition on the street at 6 p.m. At 10 p.m. I turn on the tv. There's a shot of the plane overhead; a view of the key figure disembarking, and finally 60 seconds or so of the Q. & A. I think it's real nice of radio and tv to go to all that expense to help me get a much more detailed story.

No ingrate, I'd be glad to repay the courtesy. I'd be delighted to see a return to the assignment sheet of the sparkling names that lure people to the boxoffice and the 23-inch set.

But it's not in the cards. No longer do the beauties and the stalwarts of Hollywood and Radio City change trains in Chicago. Rather, they fly over the city. But even if they were to land, city editors wouldn't be interested. Familiar faces of the films and the networks come to town for summer theatre but if any of them in recent years has received a news page hello I've missed it. There plays are reviewed but otherwise their visits are accorded the same fanfare given the sales manager of a hosiery company.

The city editor has his problems. He's got his stories on taxes, public housing and civil rights, and he must compete for space with the dispatches from Berlin, Viet Nam and Iran, the latter a place we called Persia and thought of vaguely as having something to do with rugs in the days when we went down to the stations to meet Alice Joyce.

Let the syndicated columns from Hollywood and New York tell about the stars on the amusement pages, says the city editor. The people may sit glued to their sets until past midnight but they're not interested when the heroes and heroines come to Chicago. That's what the man says. He may be right. But may be—well, no matter. He's the city editor and he's the boss.

My last experience in this line was back some 15 years ago when I did a series of articles on Van Johnson. The letters that drew were greater than the total response to a score of other series on public officials, business leaders, athletes and suburbs. They came from teenagers. Every sheet seeks to snare the kids, the theory being that if they become accustomed to you while they're young they'll stick with you when they buy papers for their own households.

HAVE BOOK, WILL TRAVEL

By BABETTE HALL

Most authors will. Some won't. I speak with feeling about this because when you're a member of a publicity firm engaged to p.a. a product, a man, an idea, it's not what's said in the corridors of the palace that counts — it's what said in the Bronx and out in St. Paul or Dallas or Yakima.

Our outstanding example of an author who wouldn't travel, who wouldn't even stay home, was a young man who had written a book about reincarnation in which a 29-year-old American housewife, under hypnosis, describes her former life and her death at the age of 66 in Ireland, and then goes even further back to being a baby in New Amsterdam, now New York. That is the sort of thing publicists live for: a book, a character to excite public interest. And excite it, it did. Bob Hope led the way; he made Bridey Murphy famous with one joke. Forty-eight hours later Bridey Murphy was an overnight sensation. We were deluged with inquiries. It was a case of love at first sight between the public and the lady of the Irish mists—and I mean Irish mists in more ways than one—who lived in the late 1800s.

Groucho Marx phoned in the middle of the night — night in New York anyway—for an interview; all America, starting with Bob Hope, was talking about her. It was a frustrating experience. Why? Because, with everyone crying for interviews, there was no one to be interviewed. Bridey Murphy obviously wasn't available. Her present counterpart was no more available; and the author of the book had gone into hiding—done a Houdini into some American mists. We could have written a book about the author of "The Search for Bridey Murphy" called "The Search for Morey Bernstein."

The exact opposite of this experience involved an author any VARIETY-addict will know—Frank Scully. "American Facts and Dates" lists 1952 as the year of the flying saucers. Scully knew about them before that; he even knew what was behind them. His book was titled "Behind the Flying Saucers." He even knew who was inside them—the men-from-Mars.

It was a lot of fun working on a book by another author everyone knows and likes — Joe E. Brown. From the owner of the Stage Delicatessen to any housewife he passes on the street seeing him is instant recognition and pleasure. His book was called "Laughter Is a Wonderful Thing." And he is the perfect example of that.

Oursler and TR

The name of a book which no one thought would do well, and which did, will surprise Hollywood where it is now being made into a movie. The author was the late Fulton Oursler, and the book was "The Greatest Story Ever Told." The first printing was infinitesimal. The printings will probably keep on forever. We can't take credit for that; we worked on it and we did a good job; but the real secret of success is inevitably in the book itself.

One surefire success was the dedication of Sagamore Hill—the home of President Theodore Roosevelt—as a national shrine. This is a home worthy of a president: a wonderful, rambling, rather ugly old house dubbed "The Birdcage" by his children because of the way the wind whistled through it. And filled with trophies — elephant tusks, leopard skin rugs, wild west prints; gifts from kings and queens and emperors and cowboys; a nursery containing what may be the original Teddy Bear, and a kitchen restored to the way it was when TR lived there, with its sugar barrel and coffeegrinder and spice jars, and plenty of room for living.

It was a dedication worthy of a president too. The President, the current one, was there; and two ex-Presidents, the Governor of the State of New York and dozens of dignitaries. The one hitch—the well-known half of a tv breakfast program became indignant because her husband was given a better seat than she was and aroused heaven and earth, and the FBI, to get up there too. She did.

"Kon-Tiki" was a wonderful book to work on. The author was a delightful young man who did all his own bookkeeping — and that became considerable — and who could endure loneliness and privation better than crowds and caviar. He proved that when, after crossing the South Seas on a raft without incident, he caught cold flying from Europe to America and went to the hospital, thus cancelling out all the parties and interviews set up for him—and that included the preview at Toot Shors of the film.

Probably the most dramatic job had nothing to do with the legit theatre or the movies. It was the arrival at Idlewild Airport of a wild animal dealer with a flying Noah's Ark. He'd written a book called "They Never Talk Back."

What a reception that was! The press, the tv people turned out. One baby elephant had to be fed whiskey from a milk bottle. The whole thing was glorious, and noisy. The author of the book obligingly let a 25-foot cobra entwine him for the benefit of photographers.

Some Things the Stars Forgot

Continued from page 11

fumed. "So give me a serious answer!"

* * *

Just after World War II, when Truman liberated the enlisted men, I was in Hollywood writing stiletto jobs on the great American dream factory for Everybody's Digest and other irreverent periodicals. One night I attended a press cocktail party for an Anglophile actor I'll call Dashitall, who appeared in his naval officer's uniform. I approached him and said, "Mr. Dashitall—."

He wheeled, his eyes lighting up full tilt as though I'd scored 25,000 on the bumpers, and extended his hand gladsomely. Wringing it with great enthusiasm, he said with all the fervor of Damon greeting long-post Pythias, "Well! How are you, old boy? So good to see you again! How have you been?"

I waited for the 21-gun-salute to subside and said, "I'm afraid you don't know me, Mr. Dashitall. I'm a magazine writer and I'd like to ask you one question. What do you think of the treatment enlisted men received from officers during the war?"

Icicles hung from every syllable as he snapped, "I really wouldn't know about that sort of thing!" Turning his back on me as another writer approached, he smiled dazzlingly and said, "Well! How are you, old boy? So good to see you again!"

* * *

How Steve Allen Got Hooked

In 1946 I discovered a very funny unknown comic who was burlesquing radio soap operas and commercials on West Coast radio in a 15-minute stint called "Smile Time," earning that he had originally been a writer of singing commercials for a Phoenix radio station, I asked him how he had happened to switch from cooking up singing commercials to frying them.

"Well," Steve Allen explained, scratching his head, "I didn't think the monsters I had created could ever affect me. Then one day, after writing a dozen jingles, for Pilsner Beer, I found myself obsessed with the desire for a bottle of beer. Not any beer, mind you. Pilsner Beer. Then I knew it was either the Casbah, the river, or Hollywood!"

* * *

At about this same pre-tv time I was writing a piece on Basil Rathbone, and watched him act in a Sherlock Holmes radio broadcast. A split second after Holmes discovered 12 headless corpses jammed in the jukebox, Rathbone and the program's organist started firing crumpled paperballs at one another. When the drama halted to let announcer Harry Bartell deliver the commercial, Rathbone slumped in a chair, made wry faces and kept up a running fire of such crushing comments as, "Oh, pooh! Bah! Oh, you're so damned dull!"

I asked Rathbone if his wonderful English diction had ever gone down in defeat before a tongue-twisting line. He recalled with a happy smile that he had once tripped on the line, "That board of directors, Watson, is nothing but a horde of bores!" but had raced on so swiftly that listeners had no time for reflection as to whether they had heard what they thought they had heard.

* * *

'Duffy's Tavern' and The Bard

When the late Ed Gardner of "Duffy's Tavern" fame was living in Bel-Air, I noticed that morocco-bound volumes of all his old radio scripts were on a shelf above a leather-bound series of Shakespeare. I asked him whether the relative positions of the two great contributions to world humor had any special significance. Gardner pondered the question thoughtfully as he stretched out with a cigar and drink.

"Well, yes," he finally growled. "While I'm glad to see that Shakespeare has finally reached the mass mind, he'd never do for "Duffy's Tavern." Stuff's too schmaltzy."

I think I'll always remember Ed Gardner best, however, as the man who spent his five-day honeymoon working out with the New York Giants, but thoughtfully brought his wife along.

* * *

When Elvis Presley was the hottest thing in show business, a magazine flew me to the Coast for a week to do a story on him. Like most adults of the day, my concept of Elvis the Pelvis was a leering, black jacket type with a decidedly unhealthy impact on the Lolita crowd. I found that everyone on the set of "Love Me Tender," his first film, also had this image of him; they'd been prepared to slice him into fine pieces as soon as he showed up. But when he did, Cameron Mitchell told me, all of them had fallen all over themselves showing him the ropes.

"Why?" I asked in amazement.

"I know it sounds fantastic," Mitchell said, "but the fact is that he turned out to be a very nice, polite, religious, simple kid."

When I had dinner with Elvis in his apartment one night, I found to my surprise that Mitchell was quite right. Elvis, who couldn't have been more respectful if I'd have been his maiden aunt, admitted to me that he was scared to death of newspaper and magazine writers. He had a sad, wounded look that came, I learned, from reading fabricated reports of sneering remarks attributed to him.

When we shook hands goodnight, his incredibly blue eyes held mine for a long moment. Then he said wistfully, "I feel you're an honest writer, sir, and I know that whatever you say about me, it will at least be the truth. I'm willin' to bet you won't put words in my mouth I never said to make me look bad."

Elvis won his bet. Not only that, but I wouldn't be surprised if I was the only writer in America who ever felt sorry for a poor kid who had $6,000,000 bucks in the bank.

It's the Big Easter fun show...and here's the incredible Warner campaign behind from Hollywood to Weeki

Warner Bros. is making it
MASSIVE FASHION
est department
ENORMOUS other leading FULL NAVY CO
were important adjuncts
NATIONAL ADVERTISERS
LIMPET-INSPIRED TOYS, ever developed for a
UNPRECEDENTED
"The Incredible Mr.
the "Spring of Live
UNIQUE ADVERTI
attraction. All we can tell you
DON KNOTTS

The INCREDIBLE Mr. Limpet

Warner Bros. Presents "THE INCREDIBLE MR. LIMPET"

FIRST UNDERWATER WORLD PREMIERE IN HISTORY AT WEEKI WACHEE SPRINGS, FLORIDA. Film will actually be shown underwater in an underwater theatre to 250 leading newspaper, radio and TV representatives with further festivities, events and excitement of a fabulous four day program taking place at Port Paradise Hotel at Crystal River. Don Knotts and cast along with Hollywood guest stars will be on hand.

SPECIAL TEN MINUTE EXPLOITATION TRAILER IN COLOR. The whole story of "The Incredible Mr. Limpet" press preview will be captured on film Wachee. Remember what "Vacationlands, U.S.A." did for "Spencer's Mountain"? happen all over again.

PROMOTION with twelve leading manufacturers and hundreds of the nation's fin- stores from one end of the country to the other.

RECORD CAMPAIGN featuring "Mr. Limpet" songs on Warner Bros. records and labels.

OPERATION. The Department of Defense and the United States Navy Department of this motion picture. Their full scale support will launch "Limpet" in every way possible. will sell "The Incredible Mr. Limpet" with point of sale ads in leading magazines.

GAMES, BOOKS as part of one of the most intensive merchandising campaigns motion picture.

UNDERWATER SWEEPSTAKES. Entries can be obtained at any theatre showing Limpet." They will be sent to Weeki Wachee with winning names to be selected at Mermaids " (by a live mermaid, of course).

SING, RADIO AND TV CAMPAIGN to match unique quality of this outstanding is they'll have the whole nation waiting, watching and wild about "Limpet."

WILL DO GUEST SPOTS ON BIG NETWORK TV SHOWS

Starring Don Knotts · Carole Cook · Andrew Duggan · Jack Weston · Larry Keating Screenplay by Jameson Brewer & John C. Rose Produced by John C. Rose Directed by Arthur Lubin Technicolor®

SOMBRE ISSUES & FRIVOLITY SUM UP 1963

(Continued from page 3)

offset to the Christine Keeler-and-Profuno gags of Britain. Elephant jokes displaced Tom Swifties which in turn had kayoed the "windup doll" one-liners. Surfin' music vied with rock 'n' roll and the folkniks. The Moscow Circus mopped up in the U.S. and Ringling flopped on its European tour.

Other 1963 phenomena: The banjo boom, bellydancers, the Hollywood names on Broadway marquees, the continued British legit invasion, the Great (Britain) Train Robbery, "Cleopatra" (finally released, and a blockbuster), "The Deputy" (anger-stirring German play), the motel-hotel building boom in anticipation of the 1964 N.Y. World's Fair, the pros-and-cons on Robert Moses' commandments anent the Fair and its ingredients, the autumnal flop of top-cost teleproductions, the boom in shopping centre hardtop cinemas vis-a-vis the drive-ins, the final upsurge of color tv, were among the frothy and the serious contributions to the 1963 show biz panorama.

The Frank Sinatra Jr. kidnapping and $240,000 ransom (most of it quickly recovered thanks to skillful FBI work) and more hot air on legit "ice" were pre-Christmas headlines.

And as if the restaurants didn't have enough of headaches with last winter's press blackout and Internal Revenue's scare over "expense account entertainment," also pre-Xmas came a Gotham waiters' walkout which hit over 100 of the posh and mass eateries. However, this was settled in five days.

The Nhu Act in town, on tv, or wherever, during 1963, was the beauteous Vietnamese sounder-offer (and she sure did). Equally telegenic is her 18-year-old daughter. The Southeast Asia debacle, which left her a widow, also apparently left a trail of unpaid bills to mark her American itinerary.

America had its own Fischer quints and Queen Elizabeth's fourth child was announced as due some time next spring.

New Copyright Act

Progress is continuing on rewriting the now obsolescent 1909 Copyright Act so that authors and publishers may stake a better claim in the jukebox field (the $590,000,000 business volume was unanticipated near the turn-of-the-centpry) but at the same time other vested interests have been retarding matters through claims for renewals and the like.

A compromise statute to please book publishers and authors, the music business, the film and tv interests, and the other intangibles which must be anticipated with a prophetic eye to the future, is still being hammered out. It's a slow process but meantime a three-year interim is protecting the potential copyright expiration of this and the next two years, i.e. dating back 56 years to 1907-8-9.

The pros-and-cons of copyright life being either 75 years, or life of the composer plus 50 years, as now in Europe, are among the prime issues still being debated.

Passing of Edith Piaf preceded 74-year-old French artist and cinema producer Jean Cocteau, by several hours. His fatal shock was said to be the result of the sad news of the 47-year-old "La Petite Mome" (The Sparrow) whose protegees had been Yves Montand, Eddie Constantine and Charles Azvanour, among others. Her big love was French boxer Marcel Cerdam who was killed in a plane crash while she awaited him in New York where she was playing. She was also married to songsmith-singer Jacques Pills and last year married 27-year-old singing protegee Theo Sarapo. WB plans her biopic.

Maurice Chevalier's golden jubilee last year was marked with new triumphs at the Theatre des Champs-Elysees where he finally reattained the honor and distinction of a prophet in his own homeland after a seven-year absence. At 75 he had already reconquered Broadway and London with his one-man shows and is still going strong.

Finding "retirement" a bore, Irving Berlin marked his 75th birthday by going to the Coast to start work on a new MGM filmusical, "Say It With Music."

A year of paradoxes all the way, there was this one, too: Khrushchev's son-in-law, Alexei Adzhubei, an admitted atheist, and editor of Izvestia, was received in private audience by the late Pope John XXIII. Many decried the Vatican's "softening" towards the Soviet Union.

Moscow's Maly Theatre audience, comprised primarily of Russian Jews, wept at the touring Italian troupe presentation of "The Diary of Anne Frank," the emotions heightened by the coincidence of the Passover season. Done in Italian, audiences followed the dialog via Russian earphone translation.

Soviet pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy and his wife received permission and reside in Britain. He disclaimed any political reasons, merely a desire to live there.

Russia's romantic cosmonauts, Valentina Tereshkova and Valery F. Bykovsky, made the headlines again with their nuptials under official USSR auspices.

The big international theatrical ruckus was Rolf Hochhuth's "Der Stellvertreter" (also called "The Deputy" or "The Representative") because of the playwright's premise that Pope Pius XII failed to speak up against Hitler's genocide of the Jews. Catholics naturally don't like it and politicos of all faiths wondered if the 31-year-old German playwright—a Lutheran—wasn't trying to shunt some of the Nazi shame to the Vatican portals.

Billy Rose, who originally proposed to produce it in N.Y., was not unsubtly attacked in the Catholic press on the allegations of seeking "profit" from mischief. Herman Shumlin, who took over the rights following Rose's relinquishment of his option, has been outspoken in his reasons for "giving the play widest exposure." Enough showmen concur because some 20 productions have been set since its preem in Berlin. Swiss Catholics were outraged following its Basle production and the reaction has been equally vocal following the Royal Shakespeare Co.'s London production at the Aldwych.

Hollywood Museum

Ground was broken for Sol Lesser's pet Hollywood Museum project. The MPAA voted $100,000 for a memorial for Eric Johnston, its longtime president, who died at 64.

Composer Igor Stravinsky celebrated his 81st birthday in Stockholm by singing "Happy Birthday" to himself. The Swedish State Radio learned he had previously arranged the song for maestro Pierre Monteux's 80th.

In 1963, Mickey Rooney, at 40, declared himself a bankrupt despite having earned some $12,000,000 in his 30-year professional career. Cowboy actor Gene Autry, now quite the diversification tycoon, acquired Frisco's famed Mark Hopkins, the new $6,000,000 Hotel Continental on Hollywood's Sunset Strip, the Sahara Inn, $12,000,000 motel outside of Chicago, besides other holdings in Palm Springs.

Teenage diskery singers Brenda Lee, Paul Anka, Ricky Nelson and Frankie Avalon did the Lohengrin bit.

Hurok's 50th

Sol Hurok's 50th anni as an impresario found him with a list as long as your elbow.

Vet British music publisher-songwriter Lawrence Wright, now 75, given the Novello Award, named in honor of British composer Ivor Novello for outstanding services to British popular and light music.

Anthony Quinn vied with George Jessel at the far-out "father of the year." The 47-year-old actor, married to Cecil B. DeMille's daughter, acknowledged the son by Jolanda Addolori, 28, born in Rome in 1961. Jessel, 65, agreed to pay $500-a-month maintenance to the 17-month-old daughter of actress Joan Tyler.

British publishing tycoon Lord Beaverbrook, 84, revealed secret marriage to Lady Dunn, 52.

Churchill & Marian Anderson

The grand warrior, Sir Winston Churchill, is in for a spate of biopic production on both sides of the Atlantic, among the Carl Foreman's high-budgeter.

Marian Anderson's 30th anni as an exclusive RCA Victor recording artist will be signalized with a worldwide "farewell tour" in 1964, following her concert next fall in Washington, which will be recorded live as a memento album.

A proposed Hollywood Film exhibit at the N.Y. World's Fair, under the aegis of actor George Murphy, coincided with the former song-and-dance man's decision to enter the race for U.S. Senator from California, as successor to Senator Clair Engle in '64. Latter underwent brain surgery last August. Murphy has latterly been a "goodwill ambassador" for Hollywood and is a v.p. of Technicolor.

Patrick Joseph Farrow, 20, son of actress Maureen O'Sullivan and late director John Farrow, was convicted on a marijuana rap in Santa Monica while on probation on a similar charge.

Joanne Woodward and Juliette Greco joined Elizabeth Taylor, Frank Sinatra, Paul Newman and Danny Kaye on the Pan Arab blacklist, presumably because of pro-Israeli sentiment.

Liz Taylor's London travelog got toprating more for her personal pulchritude than the Baedeker. She hosted the midnight Palladium gala for benefit of the actors' charities and, while the Liz-Richard Burton headlines diminished, her "Cleopatra" b.o. grosses soared.

As Sibyl Burton finally gave Richard Burton his divorce, and Elizabeth Taylor immediately announced their wedding plans, a Christmas nuptials was stalled by the economic legalistics attendant to the Eddie Fishers' community property, the singer's stake in Miss Taylor's "Cleopatra" and other earnings. At year's end it was left to the legal tilting of Louis Nizer in New York (for Fisher) and Martin Gang and Mickey Rudin in Hollywood (for Miss Taylor).

(However, the Arabs will not see "Cleo," per a UAR pronunciamento because of Miss Taylor's adoption of the Jewish faith after her marriage to the late Mike Todd. Incidentally, she will wed Burton in both a civil and Jewish ceremony, per announced plans).

For a time it looked as if Bob Hope's recurring eye ailment

(Continued on page 58)

NECROLOGY of 1963

Irving Aaronson
Lina Abarbannell
Louis Abrams
P. Dodd Ackerman Sr.
Frank R. Adams
Felix Adler
Harry Akst
Luis Alberni
Carmen Amaya
Harry Anger Sr.
Anna Appel
Pedro Armendariz
Herbert Asbury

Phil Baker
Richard Barthelmess
Bruce Barton Jr.
Nicholas Bela
Campton Bell
Gaston Bell
Spencer Bentley
Herman Bernstein
Clem Bevins
Logan Billingsley
Rene Black
Pierre Blanchar
John Bleeck
Monte Blue
Gustav Blum
Dr. Clay A. Boland
Laurence S. Bolognino
Bessie Bonsall
George Brandt
Dr. William E. Brandt
A. C. Bromhead
Dr. Gregory S. Brooks
Rowland Brown
David Burton
Alfred G. Burger

Edward L. Cahn
Jack W. Call
Dan A. Cameron
Alan Campbell
Gabriel Cansino
Albert L. Capstaff
Carlo Buti
Helen Carrington
Harry Carroll
Jack Carson
Bernard Charman
Philip Charnas
Arthur Christiansen
Arthur Clamage

Hazel Clayton
Ernest P. Clift
Jean Cocteau
Nat Cohn
Lester Cohen
Reg Connelly
Clair F. Conway
Mary Dowell Copeland
Tom Adrian Cracraft
Burton Crane
Ellen Crane
Robert E. Curtin Jr.
Jack Crystal
Bill Cunningham

Henry Daniell
Grace Darmond
Rose Davies
Charlie Davis
James P. Davis
Tobe Davis
Thomas M. De Huff
Thomas W. Denby
Carrie Demar
James R. Denny
Olga D'Este
Nat Deverich
William H. Door
Humphrey Doulens

Phil Eakins
Billy Eckstein
Eddie Edwards
Susie Edwards
Curtis F. Elie
Billy Elson
Abraham Ellstein
Guy Empey
George W. Engles
Skinnay Ennis
Sara Enright

Lynn Farnol
Robert B. Faricy
Walter Feldkamp
Joseph Fenston
Kenneth M. Fickett
Henry Fink
Carrie Finnell
James V. Fitzpatrick
Manny Fleischman
John Ford
Jack Forrester
Jacques Fray
Alan Frazer
Herbert J. Freezer
Leon A. Friedman
Arthur Frudenfeld

Jacob Gade
Amelita Galli-Curci
Ed Gardner
Louis Gasner
William Gaxton
Gene Geiger
William J. German
James J. Geller
Charles ZV. Glett
Max Goberman
Phil Goldstone
George Golitzen
Gladys G l ding
Mary Gordon
Arthur Gottlieb
Symon Gould
Philip L. Graham
Bill Grauer
Glen Gray
Dorothy Green
Morris Green
Walter Greene
Mannie Greenfield
Monroe Greenthal
Harry Grey
Albert L. Griffith

Natt Hale
Ursula Halloran
Nan Halperin
Jack Hanley
Dixie Harkins
Karl A Hartmann
Mrs. Elmer Harris
William T. Harris
Otto Harbach
Jimmy Hatlo
Ira Haupt
Stuart Haupt
Fred Hayman
Ben C. Hershfield
Paul Hindemith
John Hollingsworth
Benjamin F. Holzman
Sam Homsey Jr.
Willie Horowitz
Jack House
Eddy Howard
William W. Howard
Joseph S. Hummel
Benno Hutchshing
Aldous Huxley

Helen Innes
Yolanda Mero Irion
Yuji Iro
Ethel Irving

Eddie Janis
Russell Janney
Eric Johnston
J. Harold Jones
Stanley D. Jones

Herbert T. Kalmus
June Kapp
William Karzas
Lacy Kastner
Molly Kazan
Larry Keating
Arthur P. Kelly
Tom Keene
Keneth Kent
Anita King
James Kirkwood
Dave Kleckner
Karl Krug
Karyn Kupcinet

Leota Lane
Lawrence Langner

Mark Larkin
Mrs. Jock Lawrence
Ernesto Lecuona
Hans Lederer
Lew Leslie
Richard L'Estrange
Hal Le Sueur
Herman Levy
Nat Levy
A. J. Liebling
Walter H. Liebman
Abe Liss
Robert Littell
Frances D. Lockridge
Tom London
Sharon Lynn
Arthur S. Lyons

Harry Fred Mace
Kenneth Macgowan
Gustav Machaty
Louis Macniece
Gina Malo
Oscar Marienthal
Robert Marks
E. J. Mannix
Giuseppe Marotta
Boyd Martin
Joseph Martin
Mac Maurada
Elsa Maxwell
Frank Mayo
F. J. A. McCarthy
Milburn McCarty
Joseph R. McCurdy
Joseph McDonald
Tom McKnight
Stanley Melba
Adolphe Menjou
Andre Mertens
Benno Moiseiwitsch
Frederick J. Molokin
Byron Morgan
Harry Morris
Borris Morros
Lee Mortimer
Mrs. B. S. Moss

John B. Nathan
Theodore Newton

Jim O'Connor
Clifford Odets
William J. O'Donnell
Ole Olsen
Hal Olver
Tex O'Rourke
Christine Orr
Richard Oswald

Samuel Paley
Mrs. Geoffrey Parsons
Leon Pearson
Bertram Peacock
Don Pedro
Thomas Peluso
William J. Percival
Caesar Petrillo
Ivan Petroff
Roland Pertwee
Minna Phillips
Edith Piaf
Zasu Pitts
Ben Pivar
Sam Porfirio
Al Porgie
Francis Poulenc
Dick Powell
Sammy Price
Gertrude Purcell

Rosa Raisa
Brett Randall
Mary Rehan
Fritz Reiner
Anthony A. Rey
Andy Rice
Helen Rich
Grant Richards
James H. Richardson
Jason Robards Sr.
Herman Robbins
Jean Forbes Robertson
J. Russell Robinson
Franklyn D. Roche
Robert Rockmore
Vladmir Rosing

Luis C. Russell

Sabu (Sabu Dastigir)
William Sanders
Fred Sanger
Frank E. Savage
Syd Saylor
Noah Schechter
Charles P. Scheuer
Sir Isaac Schoenberg
Abe Schwartz
Harry Segal
M. L. Seidman
Phil Selznick
Florence B. Shaw
Howard J. Sheehan
Walter Shirley Jr.

Jacob J. Shubert
Carol Rees Shulman
Fred Siebert
Marguerita Sierra
Arthur Simon
Hugh Sinclair
Paul H. Sloane
Cyril Smith
J. Baxter Somerville
Mary Somerville
Robert Sparks
Theodore Speaker
Jack Spooner
Al St. John
Frank A. Stadler
Willy Stahl
Dave Stamper
George Stark
Arthur W. Stebbins
Col. James H. Steinman
Vera S. Sterne
David B. Stillman
Axel Stordahl
Ted Straeter
Sidney N. Strotz
Don Summerville
Marion Sunshine

Ted A. Taylor
Alec Templeton
Frederic Tillotson
William R. Tittlerton
Frank Tours
Guy Trosper
Frank Tuttle

Ira C. Uhr
Fred Uttal

Charley Van
John W. Vandercook
Sutton Vane
Jack L. Van Volkenburg
Floria Vestoff
Arthur R. Vinton
Solly Violinsky

Louis Weiss
Gerhart Von Westerman
Clyde D. Wagoner
Gilbert Wakefield
Frank B. Walker
Thomas L. Walker
Oliver Wallace
Yetta Wallenda
Frank Ward
Bryant Washburn
Dinah Washington
Trevor Watkins
Ted Weems
'Doc' Whipple
John Whiting
Tony Williams
Beverly Wills
Ray Wilson
Anna Deere Wiman
Marc J. Wolf
George Wood
Mickey Wood
Leonard Wookey
Monty Woolley
Cliff Work
Morton Wishengrad

Hideo Yoshida
Sir Alastair Young

Charles Zagrans
Hyman Zahl
Mario Zampi
James D. Zellerbach

THE NIGHT OF THE IGUANA
SEVEN DAYS IN MAY
OF HUMAN BONDAGE
SUNDAY IN NEW YORK
A GLOBAL AFFAIR
NEVER PUT IT IN WRITING
THE WILD AFFAIR
TAMAHINE
A BOY TEN FEET TALL
NO STRINGS
...to be filmed in Paris!

...from SEVEN ARTS IN 1964

7A

• NEW YORK • BEVERLY HILLS
LONDON • PARIS • TORONTO

CIVIL RIGHTS BECOMES EVERYBODY'S WORRY

(Continued from page 56)

would snafu his 12th annual Christmas tour to entertain American troops in overseas bases but he finally took off on the weekend before the holiday for Ankara, Turkey, and other points. Jerry Colinna, Tuesday Weld, Anita Bryant and Les Brown orch accompanied him.

Unknown pop singer Lulu Porter's impact in Poland when chosen by the State Dept. to represent the U.S. at the foreign music festival.

Lenny Bruce's autobiog appeared in Playboy, on the heels of his Coast conviction on a dope rap.

Two more vets, Bessie Love in Metro's "Children of the Damned" and Richard Arlen in Paramount's "Day of the Hanging," were others on the perennial comeback.

Upcoming film-tv actress, Dolores Hart, a beauty, entered a nunnery and Belgium's singing nun, Soeur Sourire, became a global bestseller via "Dominique" (in French).

Producer-director John Huston, who has also been a prizefighter, cavalryman, painter and writer, clicked in "The Cardinal" and looms as an Oscar histrionic contender.

Dinah Shore indulged in a $2,000,000 "luxury"—her decision to sit out tv, for one year.

HCL (Literature & Libel)

The high cost of serious libel was dramatized by newscaster John Henry Faulk's $3,500,000 award (cut late in '63 on appeal to $550,000) for blacklisting, and Georgia coach Wallace Butts' $3,060,000 award against the Satevepost. Alabama coach Paul (Bear) Bryant's $10,000,000 suit on the same issue is still pending.

The Satevepost faced another from Marlon Brando respecting its blaming of him for the troubles to "Mutiny." The actor told the VARIETY man in Tokyo, Dave Jampel, "If you send a multimillion dollar production to a place when, according to the precipitation records, it is the worst time of the year, and when you send it without a script, it seems there is some kind of primitive mistake. The reason for all of the big failures is the same—the mistake." The SEP took his alleged pecadillos and procrastination to task as the cause of the "Mutiny" debacle.

Stars and statesmen and savants converged March 6 at the Waldorf for "Time Throws a Party"—its 40th anni—and everyone VIP (Time-cover subject) from Eddie Arcaro to Darryl F. Zanuck was there. Henry Luce was beaucoup loose with the bankroll for the VIP party of parties. Not to mention its socko bally values.

A Walt Disney exec was kidding-on-the-square in "21" when he put it on the record, "Let's talk at least five minutes about our pictures so I can make this a legit deduction."

"Be kind to our customers" appeared to be a new slogan as even the poshest joints unbent—some nights the headwaiters and staff could have been arrested for vagrancy. Saloonkeepers went on panel shows to air their plaints, project their importance in local community economics and the like. A sample of Internal Revenueitis was cited by Chi's Palmer House which, for the first time in 38 years, had to cancel the midnight (second) show in the Empire Room. True, it was Lent, but not one customer—not even a stray conventioneer—wandered into the posh Empire Room.

Show Biz Books

Show biz books by or about show biz byliners included Max Gordon (in collaboration with Lewis Funke), Groucho Marx, George Abbott, Peggy Wood, Eddie Cantor, Elmer Rice, Rudolf Nureyev, Georges Balanchine, Melissa Hayden, Sterling Hayden (not related), Rose Franken, Jean Dalrymple, Edna Ferber, William Saroyan, Ben Hecht, Jean-Saul Sartre, Colette's "The Blue Lantern" (final work), Lawrence Langner's posthumously published book on GBS, Luis Bunuel, Michaelangelo Antonioni, James Goode, Jill Schary Zimmer, Garbo, Vernon Duke, Jack Brodsky & Nat Weiss' "Cleopatra Papers" and Walter Wanger's "My Life With Cleopatra" (Joe Hyams collab). Josephine Hull, Tennessee Williams, Max Kaminsky, Leonard Feather, "Mrs. GBS."

Bob Hope's "I Owe Russia $1,200" and Hedda Hopper's "The Whole Truth and Nothing But" were bestsellers. Michael Wilding has a $3,000,000 libel suit against the columnist (excluding collaborator James Brough) as result of statements in the book.

Mrs. Igor Cassini, 38, socialite-wife of the columnist ("Cholly Knickerbocker")—she was a prime component of the international Jet Set, a term coined by her husband—suicided at 38, said to have been brought on by the Federal indictment against the Hearst writer for failing to register as agent for Dominican Republic's dictator Rafael Trujillo and snubs of their former "friends." Cassini took leave from the N.Y. Journal-American, his parent sheet, and in the fall pleaded nolle contendre on the charge. It was disclosed he was a p.r. for other clients while still a columnist. William Randolph Hearst Jr. incidentally is married to Cassini's second wife, "Bootsie." After the N.Y. Mirror's foldo, society columnist Suzy moved over to the Journal as "Suzy Knickerbocker and C..... exit became final.

"Aida" with Katherine Dunham's Carib-style terp staging, reopened the Met's 79th season, to a new record high take of $101,018, at $50 top ($650 for centre parterre boxes), the same scale as last year's $55,200 b.o., but the h.... was achieved through fewer cuffo tickets.

Chi's Dial-A-Movie phone service gives the wouldbe fan the "moral evaluation" of the new films. It's an extension of Dial-A-Saint which gives the caller a Biblical quotation (and also a commercial for a funeral home).

Tokyo's preparations for the '64 Olympics included, besides new roads, hotels, housing, etc., a crackdown on the Ginza clipjoints and moderation and regulation of its traditional "hostesses."

Soccer football's global appeal resulted in a 23-nation hookup by Associated-Rediffusion with voiceovers in 20 different languages. This is being watched with an eye to the Tokyo Olympics in '64, whether by Telstar simulcast, or other hookup.

The JFK Tragedy

A stunned nation took stock of itself on the heels of the President Kennedy assassination, marked with 48 hours by a Dallas strip joint operator taking the law in his own hands to "wreak vengeance" on JFK's killer.

The country's and the world's hearts poured out in homage to the martyred Chief Executive and encomiums from all parts of the world and all walks of life were vivid manifestation of esteem and reverence. Streets, towns, villages, bridges, highways, schools, hospitals and institutions were renamed in his honor. The John F. Kennedy Cultural Center for the Performing Arts, on the banks of the Potomac, long a pet project of Jack and Jackie, will be among the lasting monuments in his honor, along with such more mundane manifestations as his likeness on a new 50c U.S. coin mintings and the like.

All media of communications and the lively arts, from encyclopedias, from topical radio-tv gags to Jack & Jackie and other White House references in motion pictures, in release, and plays in production or about to be produced, had to undergo eliding, editing or revision following the tragic event. No matter how sympatico the allusions to the First Family, all were constrained to exercise utmost good taste and circumvent any sensitivities. These were instances by no means as broad as the Vaughn Meader "First Family" nonsense. Even a locale song in Noel Coward's new legit musical, "The Girl Who Came To Supper," having to do with a Balkan ruler's assassination, was revised.

The JFK tragedy cancelled out two dinners wherein "Cleopatra" was vicariously involved. The N.Y. Newspaperwomen's annual fete would have saluted N.Y. Herald Tribune film critic Judith Crist, specifically for her "Cleo" film review, whereupon 20th-Fox cancelled a previously committed $250 table. The same national tragedy caused the Motion Picture Pioneers to postpone its annual dinner (Silver Jubilee), pre-Thanksgiving, at which Darryl F. Zanuck was the Pioneer of the Year and former President Eisenhower was slated to be the principal speaker.

The "good taste," pro and con, on the sundry JFK memorial albums and the radio stations' indeterminate okay or frown on "In The Summer of His Years," pop single excerpted from the BBC spot news show, "This Was The Week That Was," did not deter the emotional (and financial) support for the souvenir LPs. They sold into the millions.

Richest Actors

After the VARIETY headline on "Cary Grant, Richest Actor," some showman advanced Bing Crosby and Maurice Chevalier as contenders for the title, but the story dwelt on the perennial British juvenile's income from his participation deals in past and accruing film properties. It is estimated that by 1966 he may have $12,000,000 due him on sharing terms from Universal alone.

Cassius Clay, "the Nick Kenny of the squared circle," was a dubious winner over Doug Jones at Madison Square Garden and Sonny Liston continued to needle the Poet Laureate of the Cauliflower Cult, but CC (a) gave the Garden its first 18,000 SRO in six years, and (b) a Columbia recording contract for an LP of his poems and declamations. He sells better pugilistically than on records.

Dodger pitching hero Sandy Koufax signed for a new teleseries as did Mickey Mantle.

New York's offtrack gambling campaign proposal was punctuated by Aqueduct's Labor Day record 71,675 attendance and $5,569,646 "handle," topping the same track's 1960 Memorial Day record of $5,560,628 in wagers.

Northeast Louisiana State College's John Pennell cracked the 17-foot polevault barrier Aug. 24 in Miami with a new world's record catapult of 17-foot, 3 1-4-inch, bettering his own previous world's mark of 16-foot, 10 1-4-inches, thanks to course to the new fibre-glass pole.

Pro footballers betting on games threatened to falter what looms as possibly the next national pastime.

Close-circuiting the N.Y. Giants-Chi Bears' football championship playoff Dec. 29 is being appraised vis-a-vis other sports events on pay-see or other tollvision systems. Pat Weaver is hot on it with his Coast group. The $5,000,000 "gate" hoped for from the Feb. 25 Sonny Liston-Cassius Clay ruckus in Miami Beach will be another bellwether.

MCA's David (Sonny) Werblin bought the N.Y. Football Jets, hoping to share the new Shea Stadium in Flushing Meadows, with the N.Y. Mets. George Jessel, commenting on the fact that 2,000,000 people came to the Mets games despite their cellar position, observed, "Too bad some ballplayers didn't come also."

MCA's global horizons, incidentally, spread to the Orient with a proposed Disneyland—to be called Yomiuriland. Japanese industrialist Matsutaru Shoriki, a pioneer in baseball and tv there, publishes the 6,000,000 circulation Yomiuri. He contributed 100 acres to the project.

MCA's Expansion

MCA's stake in the permanence of Hollywood was pointed up by the longrange $50,000,000 expansion program earmarked for Revue-Universal City's production and other faculties.

The "premiere showcase" policy pioneered by UA for simultaneous saturation, day-date openings of pix in downtown deluxers and neighborhoods (20 or more theatres), increasingly adopted by other distributor-exhibitors.

UA, incidentally, is expanding into legit financing, via its Garrick Productions deal, a move which other film companies have practised off and on. MCA, then an agency, and now via its owned and operated Universal Pictures and Revue are dittoing, more with an eye to new writing talents. Metro, Seven Arts, 20th-Fox and Warners have likewise gone for it extensively, either via its parent corporate bankrolling, or via phonograph recording subsids (usually when its a musical).

Yale Prof. Frederick C. Barghoorn's Soviet arrest on "spy" charges strained Soviet-U.S. cultural relations. John Steinbeck and playwright Edward Albee, visiting Moscow at the time, expressed deep shock. A Soviet cultural mission concurrently in the U.S. got the brushoff in Washington.

David Merrick's "Hello, Dolly" (Carol Channing) musical gave him nine concurrent legits on Broadway and the road, but it was quickly cut to eight with the foldo of "Arturo Ui," once again proving a Broadway axiom that "Brecht isn't b.o. on Broadway."

Cosa Nostra's "singing" Joe Valachi keyed revival of gangster pix in theatres and on tv.

Because the Mona Lisa, on loan from the Paris Louvre, was such good b.o. in D.C. and N.Y., the famed painting was put in the U.S.-to-Europe "sailings," a VARIETY whimsy that seemingly tickled the risibilities of the lay press. It was picked up by many dailies, and Glamour mag's spread on the Leonardo Da Vinci work also spotlighted the VARIETY "sailing."

Tony Curtis, 37, married 18-year-old German actress Christine Kaufmann. Curtis in an interview accented that "sorehead" film producers bum-rapped stars' fancy salaries; that latter were worth all they could bring in on strength of their marquee values.

New N.Y. Skyscrapers

New Pan American Bldg. above Grand Central Station. 59 stories, includes a heliport which, it was hoped would shuttle traffic to the N.Y. World's Fair but this now looks cold. It houses 17,000 office workers and is called the world's biggest. Realtor Erwin Wolfson, who conceived it, didn't live to cut the ribbon but was given a helicopter ride over the uncompleted structure shortly before his death from cancer.

Another Manhattan landmark, Grand Central Palace, is giving way to a new 47-story Uris office structure, to house 10,000 workers.

New Madison Square Garden will be part of another gigantic office-bowling alleys-stadium complex above Pennsylvania Railroad Terminal on 7th Ave. and 32d St.

Strong Show Biz Support Of Civil Rights Campaign

Books have been written and will be written on the American Negroes' militant quest for equal civil rights. James Baldwin, Dick Gregory, Harry Belafonte, Nat King Cole, Lena Horne, Jackie Robinson et al. were joined by Marlon Brando, Joanne Woodward, Charlton Heston, Paul Newman, Burt Lancaster, Frank Sinatra, Gene Kelly, Blake Edwards, Tony Curtis, Gregory Peck, Antonio Franciosa, Rita Moreno, James Garner, to name a few, in their argument that authors and showfolk, sports heroes and kindred uniquely gifted Negroes should not be the only ones accorded some sort of "special" courtesies in the white man's world.

Equal housing, education, economic and civil rights were bitterly fought for. Gregory and Baldwin were particularly outspoken; the comedian sardonically observing that only in America could a $5,000-a-week comedian not be permitted to ride in the front part of a jitney bus in the Deep South.

Burt Lancaster flew in from Paris to the March on Washington Aug. 28 with a petition of 15,000 names; and Josephine Baker, expatriate St. Louis-born star of French revues, broke her vow never to return to her homeland (because of "oppression" to her race) also to make a fervent speech at the Lincoln Memorial.

From the Montgomery, Ala., showdown on freedom riders in '56 the racial battle segued to sit-ins in 1960 and reached its peak of protest in the next three years with pray-ins, drive-ins, kneel-ins, swim-ins (integrated pools), wade-ins (beaches), wait-ins (housing developments), park-ins (restaurant parking lots), stand-ins (theatre ticket booths), chain-ins, lie-ins (prostrating themselves before bulldozers on construction sites). But it had its effect eventually.

Forward Steps

Mercedes Ellington, 24-year-old granddaughter of songsmith-maestro Duke Ellington, got a job with the June Taylor Dancers (Jackie Gleason (CBS-TV) sans any influence from the composer-conductor.

Miami station WAME's all-Negro staff irked the ofay displacements, as "reverse segregation," and a Philly exhib's employment of Negro projectionists (in predominantly Negro neighborhoods) likewise raised Crow Jim objections.

The same separate locals' issues that snarled the Philly projectionists cropped up in Chi where the Negro AFM local refused, for a time, to merge with the white branch union.

The Mayfair, while on West 46th St. between Broadway and 8th Ave., is regarded as off-Broadway and John Gret, who has been a treasurer in Harlem cinemas, became the first Negro legit box-office man.

"The Worlds of Shakespeare," primed for campus and off-Broadway tours, has Negroes as its two principal players.
principal players Vinie Burrows and Earle Hyman.

No question but that tv's saturation coverage of the March on Washington was the showmanship climax to point up the civil rights issues.

Madeleine Sherwood, the Broadway legit actress who's also appeared in films and on tv, received a stiff six-months-at-hard labor sentence in Gasden, Ala., stemming from her "freedom march" following the path of the murdered William L. Moore of Baltimore who was shot to death near Attala, Ala., last March 23. She was arrested with 11 others in a racially integrated group, charged with breach of peace.

As flop-ins, mud-ins, chain-ins, lay-down-ins took more violent interference with building and construction, in contrast to the more peaceful demonstration of play-ins, sing-ins and the original sit-ins and fast-for-peace-ins, the AFL-CIO was divided in the wisdom of such hyperdramatic movements. It resulted in New York's Mayor Wagner finally ordering forceful ejection of pickets who were cluttering up City Hall and interfered with his entrance and exit to his personal office.

Meantime it had achieved results at the White Tower and Chock Full o' Nuts chain restaurants, climaxing with a 25% quota system although in the case of William Black's Chock Full chain he couldn't find enough white labor to employ.

The head of Chock Full o' Nuts lunchcounter chain and the coffee brand of the same name etc., and an industrialist w.k. in show biz, got the reverse-picketing from ofay students who accused Black of only hiring Negro personnel. Jackie Robinson is v.p. in charge of labor and public relations of Chock Full which has a non-tipping policy but whose personnel is rewarded with six weeks' salary bonuses and other emoluments. Black (who is Caucasian) rightfully took umbrage at the charge, simply stating no white personnel has ever applied for counterman's jobs.

A Negro ballplayer now does razorblade commercials; a Negro news magazine editor is moderator on a general news show; more castings in teleplays see Negro doctors, nurses, even a Negro bailiff, Negro "residents" in the hotel on the Bill Dana show, and the like, as manifestations of improved employment opportunities.

Along with a number of Negro newscasters, WINS-Radio, N.Y., hired Clyde H. Reid, former p.r. for the Brooklyn Tuberculosis & Health Assn. and ex-reporter for the N.Y. Amsterdam News, as an editorial writer. He reports directly to g.m. Mark Olds.

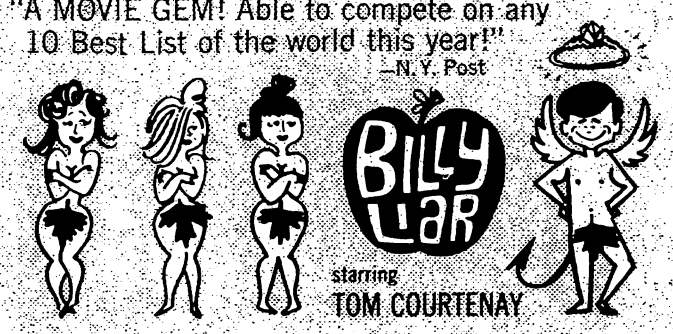
Amidist the 1963 summer of the Negroes' discontent there were militant moves by the Black Muslims and nonviolent but equally forceful moves by CORE, the NAACP and the Southern Christian Conference leaders for integrated theatre seating; film and television employment opportunities; Negro film subjects ("the

(Continued on page 60)

A SYMBOL OF EXCELLENCE IN MOTION PICTURE ENTERTAINMENT

WALTER READE STERLING INC.

"A MOVIE GEM! Able to compete on any 10 Best List of the world this year!" —N.Y. Post



starring TOM COURTENAY

"DELIGHTFUL SPOOF!" —N.Y. World Telegram

$Ladies who do$

are much more fun than Ladies who don't!

ROBERT MORLEY · PEGGY MOUNT · HARRY H. CORBETT

Produced by GEORGE BROWN/Directed by C. M. PENNINGTON-RICHARDS

"DEVILISH AND DARLING! A DELICIOUS FLAVORED SENSE OF HUMOR ABOUT THE CUSTOMS AND MORALITY OF THE SWEDES. ALBERTO SORDI PLAYS IT WITH AN AIR OF INGENUOUS EXPECTATION! A GEM OF A FILM!" N.Y. Times

A DINO DE LAURENTIIS production

STARRING Alberto Sordi IN

"To Bed...or not to Bed"

Directed by GIAN LUIGI POLIDORO • Produced by DINO DE LAURENTIIS

PARAMOUNT PICTURES AND WALTER READE-STERLING Present

THE LOVE GODDESSES

PRODUCED, WRITTEN AND DIRECTED BY SAUL J. TURELL AND GRAEME FERGUSON

TOSHIRO MIFUNE IN AKIRA KUROSAWA'S

HIGH and LOW

with Kyoko Kagawa Tatsuya Nakadai Tsutomu Yamazaki

"ONE OF THE BEST DETECTIVE THRILLERS EVER FILMED! MUST BE SEEN! BRAVO!" —N.Y. Times

JAMES WHITMORE IN

"BLACK LIKE ME"

The true story of a white man who dyed his skin to travel through the South as a Negro

SPECIAL ATTRACTION IN BREATHTAKING COLOR

Mediterranean Holiday

Your host and narrator BURL IVES

...more for 64!

"A JOLLY BAD FELLOW"
starring LEO McKERN and JANET MUNRO

"THE STRIKERS"
starring MARCELLO MASTROIANNI—directed by MARIO MONICELLI

"OMICRON"
starring RENATO SALVATORI—directed by UGO GREGORETTI

"TIME OF INDIFFERENCE"
starring SHELLEY WINTERS—ROD STEIGER—CLAUDIA CARDINALE—PAULETTE GODDARD

"THE WORLD'S GREATEST SWINDLES"
A FIVE PART FILM—produced by PIERRE ROUSTANG

"BEBO'S GIRL"
starring CLAUDIA CARDINALE and GEORGE CHAKIRIS

"SEDUCED AND ABANDONED"
directed by PIETRO GERMI

"FEFE"
starring MARCELLO MASTROIANNI (sequel to "DIVORCE—ITALIAN STYLE")

RELEASED BY CONTINENTAL DISTRIBUTING DIVISION OF THE WALTER READE-STERLING GROUP

241 East 34th Street, New York 16, N.Y. • MUrray Hill 3-6300

BRITISH SUCCESSFULLY INVADE BROADWAY

(Continued from page 58)

people like any other people regardless of color"), but despite this, all-Negro films, although getting good notices, were box-office flops.

Former Magistrate J. H. Rainey, who conducts a late-night discussion program over WDAS, Philly, was beaten by a Muslim guest on his program in the studio on June 25.

Arthur Miller & Edward Albee

Playwright Arthur Miller, who has been withholding his scripts from South Africa because of its apartheid policy, was followed by Edward Albee but the S. A. management consented to integrated audiences for "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" It was partially achieved but the play was halted in mid-run in Johannesburg because the censor allegedly was concerned with the play's "blasphemy." General belief is that the biracial audience edict may have also figured in prematurely halting the tour.

Folksinger Martha Schlamme cancelled her South African concert tour because she refused to "adjust" her repertoire and edit out "racial protest" songs . . . Negro judge casting on "Perry Mason" got some protest letters which CBS ignored.

Dixie's integration tensions were reflected in Senator James Eastland (D.-Miss.) objecting to the "blasphemous content" on a "Today" show early in the year which had caricatures of "Fraubus, Rankin and Barnett" allegedly trying to get into Heaven with "The Lord's Prayer" played as background music. The Mississippi solon accused NBC of "jazzed ridiculing of 'The Lord's Prayer'."

As Marlon Brando and Pernell Roberts ("Bonanza") (Chevrolet received a lot of mail on the latter) joined CORE and kindred integration lines, the N.Y. City Commission on Human Rights questioned the wisdom of ofay hostesses dancing with Negro ballroom patrons. Especially at a time when one East 14th St. (N.Y.) dime-a-dance joint had its license lifted because the hostesses were charged with "performing lewd and immoral dances."

Integration Blues

Peppermint Lounge, Madeira Beach, St. Petersburg, Fla., near race riot because of integrated dancing; Davidson Theatre, Thomasville, N.C., charged Negroes $5 for 60c tickets if Negroes wish to sit downstairs. Same policy for pro-integrationist ofays who want to sit in the balcony-for-colored — a $5 charge for the lesserpriced tickets for Negro patrons . . . Northern folksingers' benefits for Negro causes in Deep South and also in Carnegie Hall, notably by Pete Seeger, Theodore Bikel and Bob Dylan . . . IATSE's Dick Walsh knew of no complaints for alleged discrimination within Hollywood crafts . . . Upbeat in Negro actor employment cited by Hollywood telefilm producers . . . Amusement parks and swimmingpools in gradual integration although several still resistive . . . Mad Ave. hiring more Negro models in renewed pitch for the Negro consumer dollar, and "Bronze Beauty Parades" cropped up in the Harlems of the country . . . Chubby Checker walked out on a Yokohama Officers' Club when he spotted some guests (in blackface) sitting at ringside . . . FCC warned that stations with right-wing editorials on integration must allow Negroes equal time to rebut on civil rights.

West German film and tv production has spotlighted Negro talent. Trinidadian Billy Mo has applied for German citizenship. American singer Kenneth Spencer makes his permanent home in Wuppertal and tours in West German concert, and makes tv and film appearances. Philly-born Joe Bunch is a tv technical advisor in Frankfurt/Main. Elfie Firgert, "the dark-skinned Shirley Temple" of 10 years ago, is returning to films at 17 in the German pic production, "House In Montevideo," and she has appeared in two other flicks—"The Dark Star" and "Two Bavarians in a Harem."

Castro's invitation to American "students" a casus belli on freedom of movement, but U.S. Negro newsmen, invited as a body, nixed the Cuban dictator's blandishments although individually some expressed interest in "seeing for themselves."

Return of 'Runaways' To H'wood Production

Ray Milland, as narrator of a tv documentary on "Hollywood Comes Home," likened the exodus of the film industry in the past 12 years to "moving the Vatican out of Rome." Samuel Goldwyn pointed to past successes with British, Sahara, South Seas, French, Far East and kindred offshore locales as being "filmed with utmost realism right here in Hollywood." The Mirisches and Billy Wilder proved it with "Irma La Douce" right on the lot. Incidentally, this was one of two top UA grossers.

French producer Georges de Beauregard urged Gallic and other Continental producers "not to be insular" but to film all product in English and "dub in French, which does not mean overlooking our own native market" but with an eye to really getting into global competition with Hollywood.

Darryl F. Zanuck on his first trip to the Coast since assuming the presidency told the Hollywood crafts that 20th intends to accent homegrown production, save for the occasional venture, "because costs no longer favor overseas."

Mike Frankovich taking over Columbia production and Sol A. Schwartz shifting back to the homeoffice as a senior vicepresident pointed up the return-to-homegrounds filmmaking.

With Bill Orr's return as "overall" production supervisor at Warner Bros., actor Jack Webb was pinkslipped, after seven months, as head of WB-TV production. Orr was former topper there, when the studio had its biggest successes. Bill Dozier was another Hollywood to production topper (Screen Gems) to exit.

Booming U.S. Grosses

Per U. S. Dept. of Commerce figures, film receipts in the U.S. soared to an alltime high in 1963 and were expected to go higher in '64. The 1963 grosses totalled $1,450,000,000, topping the previous high in 1949 of $1,444,000,000. A billion-and-a-half is forecast for '64.

While the Business & Defense Administration arm of this agency concedes that higher admissions figured in these grosses, it also has noted that the increase of 3% above 1962's $1,405,000,000 takings reflect an increase in cinema attendance as well.

The Government agency places average weekly attendance in U.S. film theatres as 43,000,000 in 1962, compared to 42,500,000 tickets sold weekly in '62, and the 41,600,000 weekly admissions averaged in 1961.

Some of the Franco-Italo epidermis influences seemed to obtain with the return—or avowed increased return — of American film production to Hollywood. Joe Levine's "The Carpetbaggers" was a case in point but, after the ballyhoo anent Carroll Baker's candid closeups, it was decreed there that there'd be no nudity.

Festivals

The first New York Film Festival at Philharmonic Hall in the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts was a resounding success in the fall and pointed up anew the possibility of one in Hollywood. For the first time, in turn, Hollywood "recognized" the Frisco Film Fest; at least Carl Foreman entered "The Victors" (Columbia) as an out-of-competition.

The Mar del Plata (Argentine) festival was a fiasco from the American viewpoint, early in '63, warning the MPAA to put its "best face forward" in Cannes later. S. Frederick Gronich (from Paris) took command there, and Allen Rivkin, president of the Screen Writers' Guild, came from Hollywood to Cannes as the official U.S. delegate.

During the Cannes fest a film showing Algerians in torture was secretly shown; this pic had been banned by the French government. Titled "October In Paris," it dealt with the Algerian demonstrators during the 1961 bombes plastique and kindred outbreaks, and the resultant police and military reprisals.

One of the dramatic twists of the year was American success at the Moscow Film Festival. It was a succession of triumphs for the Hollywood contingent, easily topping the other 54 competing nations. Above all it was a mass hit with the Russians who paid $1.25 to the 3,000-seat Russia Cinema and the 6,000-seat Palace of Congresses, both sellouts before opening.

100 Film Fests Per Annum

Including television film festivals there are now over 100 such fetes per annum, starting from Acapulco, Amsterdam, Annecy, Antwerp to Valencia, Vallaloid, Vancouver, Venice (five different fests), Versailles, Villadolid, Vienna, Vin del Mar, Warna and Yorktown.

Berlin Fest's Alfred Bauer suggested a formula to curb the steadily increasing number via FIAPF (Federation of International Film Producers Assn.) which should recognize only three fests in the "A" category (Cannes, Venice and Berlin); these "A" fests to appoint an international jury to judge films; recognize but one festival each in Eastern Europe, North America, South America and Asia.

ANICA, the Italian film production org, chided by the Germans for giving accent to Nazi themes.

An anti-Semitic scene in an Argentine entry was clipped from "Roof Garden." Dr. Alfred Bauer, the Berlin Film Fest director, requested elimination of the scene showing neo-fascist youths urinating on a picnic luncheon prepared by a party of Jews.

Danish-made "A Stranger Knocks" delayed by N.Y. state censors because too realistic boudoir scenes.

An Icelandic film, "Gogo," depicted "an almost unbelievable participation of actual U.S. military personnel stationed in Keflavik base showing them (in the film's action) as drunks and girl-corrupters." Some saw this usage of actual GI "talent" in the homegrown film as Iceland's "revenge" against the U.S. because of resentment of continued GI personnel.

On the homefront, periodic rhubarb about utilization of U.S. troops as "movie extras" (Zanuck's "The Longest Day" was one such target) caused Senator Clair Engle (D.-Calif.) to warn the Defense Dept. not "to throw the baby out with the bathwater in writing restrictions against military cooperation with filmmakers. No medium glamorizes American troops more than films," he observed.

'Cleo' and 'MFL'

"Cleo," of course, was the big noise of the year with its cash-in-advance $18,000,000-$20,000,000 exhibitor payments. Elizabeth Taylor's percentage deal figures to earn her the alltime record high $7,000,000 from any one film. Picture's Broadway preem was an international event, with the foreign press corps covering it like a political event.

The pork-on-the-barrel "Cleo" deal keyed Jack L. Warner's similar setup for WB's "My Fair Lady."

MGM's showmanship followup with "The VIP's," starring the "Cleo" pair, got Radio City Music Hall booking and good b.o.

Stanley Kramer's "Mad Mad" junket of 250 international press was hailed (1) as a good showcase for Hollywood as the revitalized capital of film production and (2) introduced the Dimension 150, Cinerama's new single-lens projection. Technically, Dimension 150 augurs Cinerama's first rival since the CineMiracle process. Richard Vetter and Carl Williams are the developers of D-150, as it's called, and uses a single specially printed 70m print, thus following Cinerama's new single print process.

National General's Talaria Projector, new theatre color-vision perfected by General Electric, successfully demonstrated on Coast but Nate Halperin's TNT (Theatre Network Television) claims his Eidophor demonstration preceded Talaria by some three years.

Meantime the Screen Actors' Guild put in a pitch for advance payments on the potential world gross of Hollywood films that might be sold to tollvision.

By and large, of course, pay-see is still in the formative stage but the Coast pitch, via the Matty Fox-Walter O'Malley-Sylvester L. (Pat) Weaver Jr.-Tom Gallery sportscasts (baseball, particularly) into closed-circuit theatres, may be a more promising forward step.

As U.S. product became increasingly "realistic" with attendant relaxation of former curbs, the Italian Catholic Film Group noted that the 1962 crop of native production was "a better year morally" than heretofore.

While Otto Preminger was filming "The Cardinal" sequence at St. Stephen's Cathedral, in Vienna, the Austrian Catholics took umbrage at that portion of the script having to do with the World War II cardinal in Vienna and his cooperation with the Nazis.

The Pilot, official organ of the Archdiocese of Boston, editorialized "Not Again!" in chiding Italian producer Dino De Laurentiis' decision to film the "Sacco-Vanzetti case."

Meantime De Laurentiis' more ambitious undertaking, "The Bible," reportedly a $20,000,000 budgeter, is going ahead sans Columbia Pictures' cofinancing, as originally announced.

Another religioso, George Stevens' "The Greatest Story Ever Told," from the Fulton Oursler bestseller, now under UA aegis, has been escalating almost near that budget with mounting costs.

Disney

Walt Disney was the success story of the year. Ten years ago Disney Productions grossed $8,365,000 and netted $510,426. Last year Disney did $74,059,197 and earnings were $5,263,491. The 1963 semester was expected to see new records. This in turn started a renewed wave of thinking that movies are still family entertainment and must be clean to get mass acceptance.

MGM's net loss of $17,000,000 in 1963, in contrast to the 1962 $2,500,000 net profit, was blamed largely on the $19,000,000 "Mutiny On The Bounty" boxoffice bomb.

Ralph Hetzel became acting head of the Motion Picture Assn. of America following the death of Eric Johnston.

Italy Spain, Belgium and Japan, like Great Britain and the U. S. originally found that increased prosperity, with its concomitant cars, television and travel, made for the biggest inroads into film boxoffices.

Universal got over celebrating its 50th anni (in 1962) with a sales drive, Loew's marked its 60th and Columbia Pictures, comparative newcomer, will accent its 40th anni in '64.

TV Covered Itself With Glory In JFK Coverage

A memorable highlight of the President Kennedy assassination was television's coverage of the aftermath. Even the most rabid tv-hating newspapers grudgingly admitted the medium's tiptop coverage, literally a living newspaper into the home, right under the public's eyes as the news was in the making. Never again, it is hoped, will there have to be occasion for seeing murder—live—on a national network.

The $40,000,000 "bill" to broadcasting for its preemptions and out-of-pocket production expenses is as nothing compared to the enrichment of the medium in the scientifically expert video journalism job done. Not only nationally but internationally.

Otherwise, the 1963-64 teleseason was more of the same although ABC evidenced closing the gap between itself and NBC in the deuce spot. That "ratings" are not to be taken lightly was the Wall St. reaction when, for a day or two, there was indication CBS was "losing out in the battle of the ratings" with some attendant market reaction. When CBS topper Bill Paley stated nay, the market reflected it. Regardless, CBS remained on top.

The 'New' ABC

The "new" ABC had yet to make impact with its galaxy of new programming and by the same token CBS' personality parade pitch (Danny Kaye and Judy Garland) somehow was found wanting in ratings despite the quality of their programming. OK stuff for the sophisticates but the vast hinterlanders were still partial to "Beverly Hillbillies" and "Petticoat Junction." Only the Patty Duke Show (ABC) of the new crop made the Top 15 Nielsens initial ratings. Otherwise it was "Bonanza," Dick Van Dyke, "Lucy," Andy Griffith, Danny Thomas, Red Skelton, "Perry Mason," Donna Reed, "I've Got A Secret" and "Candid Camera," all holdovers.

Jerry Lewis was the first casualty of the new live shows ranking below Danny Kaye and Judy Garland, and prematurely settled his ABC-TV deal. Songstress, too, is a ratings casualty.

Mad Ave. meantime pondered anew of quality versus corn as the latter continued to hold the edge. ABC's "Hootenanny" was the 1963 sleeper, riding the folknik crest.

None the less all three networks thrived and both CBS and NBC's RCA parent soared to new Stock Market highs. Latter also suggests a stock split such as CBS declared in November.

Past year saw seven new countries initiate tv—Gibraltar, Malta, Trinidad-Tobago, Morocco, Indonesia, Taiwan and Kenya. There are now 65,502,000 tv sets outside the U.S. whose count is around 50,000,000 homes.

Great Britain's prime time lookership was placed at 7:30-10:30 p.m., with 9,874,000 average homes on an average looking at ITV and BBC programs.

Britain edicted a stiffer rap for commercial licensing, and starting June 30, 1964 they will pay $64,000,000 per annum as against the present $15,000,000 base.

It was estimated by a Motion Picture Export Assn. exec that Hollywood now has a $200,000,000 stake in tv through sales of features, vidfilm production, syndication and overseas income.

Global Telesyndication

Global telesyndication eyes $60,000,000 in foreign gross in '64 as more new channels are added or new nations open up to the video medium.

Biggest of the Hollywood-to-tv features trend was 7 Arts' 10-year, $21,500,000 deal for 215 post-1948 Universal films.

As the Ohio Catholic Legion of Decency decided to rate tv features as well as in theatres, the LOD factor started to loom in the sale of pictures to video. Some of the Continental product, particularly, was too sizzling for home-consumption.

Revue, Screen Gems, Four Star and WB are still in the telefilm running, but MGM and UA-TV were to the fore this semester.

A "Taxi" episode, with overly realistic s.a. overtones, become an issue in London as the BBC got beaucoup phone calls so the government-controlled web decided on a policy against "too much realism."

On the home sponsorial front, the NAB code authority urged broadcasters to fiilter out their most controversial ad pitches in cigaret ballyhoo. The FCC urged similar caution on all commercials.

Despite Telstar's "town hall of the world" electronic shenanigans, which partially snafued one pickup, the BBC is still hopeful to pick up the Tokyo 1964 Olympics sans interruption via satellite. Incidentally, Mexico City getting the nod for the 1968 games greatly disappointed Detroit which had made a strong pitch for the event, as did Lyons (France) and several other metropolises.

Jack Benny, dissatisfied with CBS' juggling of his time-slot, signed to return to NBC, which he deserted in 1948 along with a slew of top comics in an old MCA (agency) maneuver to beef-up CBS' comedy talent stable.

Distinguished Play Flops Distinguish Legit Season

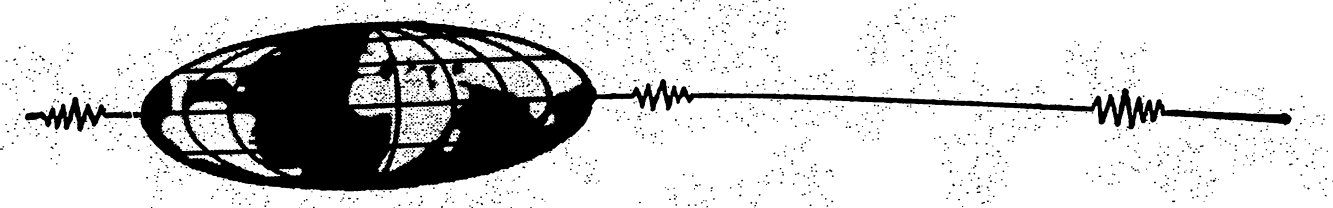
Distinguished American playwrights contributed some distinguished American flops, viz., Lillian Hellman's "My Mother, My Father and Me," which was termed "as filthy as William Inge's 'Natural Affection.'" (another Broadway b.o. bomb), Sidney

(Continued on page 62)

FROM

FILMWAYS

FOR 1964



THE WHEELER DEALERS
starring Lee Remick and
James Garner (Thru MGM)

THE AMERICANIZATION OF EMILY
starring James Garner, Julie Andrews and Melvyn Douglas
(Thru MGM)

TOPKAPI
starring Melina Mercouri, Peter
Ustinov and Maximilian Schell
(Thru UA)

THE SANDPIPER
A different kind of love story
(Thru Columbia)

MUSCLE BEACH
from the hilarious novel by Ira Wallach (Thru MGM)

and

THE LOVED ONE from the novel by Evelyn Waugh

MARTIN RANSOHOFF / Executive In Charge Of Production

GOSPEL & GOSSIP, RUNAWAYS & REGRETS

(Continued from page 60)

Kingsley's "Night Life" and Tennessee Williams' "The Milk Train Doesn't Stop Here Anymore," another of the overly frank genre.

These were in sharp contrast to the Jean Kerr comedy click, "Mary Mary," now in its third season, and marking a Broadway precedent where the WB film version at Radio City Music Hall played opposite the Broadway original—and not to the detriment of the latter.

Early in the season Neil Simon's "Barefoot In The Park" proved an unqualified comedy smash and put the spotlight anew on the former radio scripter whose previous legit credits, "Come Blow Your Horn" and "Little Me," were topped by "Park." Play's $125,000 investment was figured for a fast payoff with the $7,500 weekly net, not counting an escalating Paramount preproduction film deal that ranges from $150,000 to $400,000.

As six of the 12 new shows at the opening of the Broadway legit season were British imports. Equity expressed alarm. This despite a growing attitude for free exchange between British and U.S. Equity.

Three of last season's British entries, "Beyond The Fringe," "Oliver!" and "Stop The World—I Want To Get Off" are in their second years.

More Foreign Invasion

Alexander H. Cohen's Rome tuner, "Rugantino," Paris' "La Grosse Valse," "The Invincible," by Ion Nicola, a play about General DeGaulle; the Royal Shakespeare Co. into the Lincoln Center next June; the Marie Bell and Jean-Louis Barrault Co., including his wife, Madeline Renaud, from Paris, will add or have added to the international invasion of Broadway.

"How To Succeed" clicked in London, touted as the best American musical since "West Side Story." Also in London, the famed 145-year-old Old Vic took its finale curtain on June 15.

Dick Rodgers, in London for the opening of "Boys From Syracuse," 25-year-old revival panned for its book, and for rehearsals of "No Strings," struck back at the British press for its alleged "antiAmericanism" so far as his music is concerned. The public isn't averse, he stressed, citing the big biz done by his (and Hammerstein's shows), but since "Oklahoma!," the vet songsmith-producer reiterated, the critics have panned "Carousel," "South Pacific," "King and I," "Flower Drum Song" and "Sound of Music," although not one was a b.o. failure in the West End.

Rodgers who, of course, had tried it alone on both words and music with his "No Strings," sent the show on tour with Barbara McNair in the original Diahann Carroll role opposite Howard Keel and unlike the placidity of the Broadway run the biracial romance was a nightly hazard to Miss McNair. She cited walkouts, insults and threats. Nor was it restricted to southern-oriented stands; she experienced embarrassment and incidents in cities such as Pittsburgh, Kansas City and St. Louis.

Broadway Marquee Names

Unusual galaxy of marquee names punctuated the 1963-64 season although, unfortunately, in some instances their tungsten magnet was not sufficient to offset poor dramaturgy. Among those past, concurrent or soon due within this semester were are Kirk Douglas, Charles Boyer, Laurence Harvey, Jose Ferrer, Dennis O'Keefe, Mary Martin, Richard Burton, Claudette Colbert, Alec Guinness, Albert Finney, Lee Remick, Franchot Tone, Florence Henderson, Elaine Stritch, Sammy Davis Jr., Craig Stevens, Larry Parks, Christopher Plummer, Kim Stanley, Angela Lansbury, Van Heflin, Janis Paige, Cyril Ritchard, Julie Harris, Inga Swenson, Robert Horton, Stephen Douglass, Carol Channing, Margaret Leighton, Robert Alda, Barbra Streisand, Steve Lawrence, Sally Ann Howes, Sydney Chaplin, Scott McKay, Jan Sterling, Robert Preston.

Ethel Merman deserted the Broadway boards for the niteries and was a resounding click at the Hotel Plaza's Persian Room in New York.

Despite Ethel Merman's admonition that "too much book and not enough attention to boffo songs preoccupy presentday musicals," fact is that the weaknesses of the librettos of such Broadway tuneshows as "Mr. President" and "Jennie" created costly debacles. Despite hefty advance sales, such as over $2,000,000 for the Irving Berlin show, and $1,250,000 in theatre parties for the Mary Martin musical, both flopped. Latter was especially costly (capitalized at $550,000).

Th Internal Revenue crackdown on entertainment spending also had it reflex action in tightening of legit angeling.

Mounting costs, of course, proved a major deterrent. The "sudden death" of a straight play cost could be around $200,000) and musicals ($350,000-$500,000) made show biz backers seek other angeling. "Even a dog 'B' film, if we were to put in a couple of hundred grand, could have playoff value and ultimate tv salvaging," observed one Sardi's yet, "but with a legit it's do-or-die—and you know it quick."

Neil Simon's play, "Barefoot In The Park" got unanimous raves and the highly touted Noel Coward-Harry Kurnitz musical, "The Girl Who Came To Supper," after smash notices in Boston, and pans and/or mixed reviews in Toronto and Philly, looms as another Broadway click despite its mixed reviews.

No Pulitzer for Albee

John Mason Brown and John Gassner resigned in pique from the jury because there was no Pulitzer Prize award to Edward Albee's "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" which got both the Critics Circle and Antoinette Perry awards as well as the VARIETY's Drama Critics poll. The committee found no play "worthy" of a Pulitzer Prize.

Albee's play was scored for its "cesspool" language by Boston censor Richard J. Sinnott who forced the management to make dialog deletions of the Deity and other expletives.

The Shuberts' 50th Anni

Lawrence Shubert Lawrence Jr., taking over as operating head of the dynasty, quietly proceeded with facelifting everyone of the 17 Shubert houses in New York and six out-of-town. A public relations program—a Shubert first—was keyed to the 50th anni of Shubert Alley which was made a civic event.

J. J. Shubert

Death of Jacob J. Shubert, at 86, last of the Sam S., Lee and J.J. Shubert triumvirate, who came to Broadway from upstate Syracuse to become the most powerful theatreowners, was close on the heels of a U. S. tax claim for upwards of $15,000,000 against Lee Shubert. Latter predeceased the youngest—J. J.—by almost exactly 10 years.

Meantime the "battling widows" of John Shubert settled their court differences by recognizing the two children of the "second wife" but otherwise declaring Mrs. Helene Kerttu Shubert (No 1) the widow and chief beneficiary of the estimated $600,000 estate. Mrs. Jacob J. (Catherine Mary) Shubert, mother of John, had supported wife No. 2. While the children were legally recognized and some $50,000 (in two insurance policies) set aside for their education, any right of heritage was specifically ruled out.

Booze Between the Acts

"Tambourines to Glory" in its brief run at the reclaimed (for legit) Little Theatre (long a teleplayhouse) seemed to be paving the way for bars in theatres, a la London, Paris and elsewhere by dispensing free rye and Scotch evenings (coffee gratis only at mats). Howard S. Cullman has long been the sparkplug in the campaign to legalize booze between acts, now permissible only at the Met.

Lawrence Langner, distinguished producer, who died before last year's end at 72, willed his literary papers to the Yale Drama Library. Son Philip Langner and wife Armina Marshall are carrying on the Theatre Guild activities.

As "How To Succeed In Business Without Really Trying" marked its third year — longest current Broadway runner — it revealed over $11,000,000 in grosses from the Broadway, national, London and Australian companies; a second national company has since opened, and productions are planned for France, South Africa, Denmark, Sweden, Iceland, Germany, Italy, Argentina, Finland and Norway.

Toujours—The Critics

David Merrick, Howard Taubman et al, had no copyright on manager-critic hassles in 1963. Emile Littler, producer of "Signpost to Murder," batted out the London Express' Bernard Levin and when the latter got in on a fellow-critic's ducat, the producer sued and won apology and "substantial damages" from the Beaverbrook Newspapers for its critic's "trespass."

This is contrary to American privilege. Lee and J. J. Shubert of yore exercised similar prerogatives to bar Walter Winchell, Leonard Lyons and others at various times, but the N.Y. State laws do not forfend a critic buying his way into any opening night. N.Y. Post columnist Lyons, himself an ex-lawyer, was behind a bill legalizing this phase. Heretofore Winchell, for instance, had been stopped at the door and, in one instance, fooled the theatre's security guards by making up in bizarre manner and reviewing an opening from backstage.

Merrick, on tv, accented the producer's importance in "almost everything creative in legit," but Alan Jay Lerner, in a previous pronunciamento, stressed that legit was not an actor's or a director's but a writer's theatre; the writer alone, musical or otherwise, is the salvation.

During the newspaper blackout, radio-tv plugged pix and plays and gave rundowns on nitery entertainment. Many a byliner took to the mike to air critiques but most proved they're more effective behind a typewriter than in front of a video audience.

'Ice'

The spotlight on the "ice pickers union" and the general allegations of kickbacks that supposedly obtain among theatrical producers, theatres, scenic designers, costumers, etc., all to the detriment of the longevity of the attraction, not to mention the investors (angels), seems certain of spawning New York State legislation to regulate these practices.

Off-Broadway

Legit took stock of some 40 off-Broadway theatres, auditoriums, garrets etc. on the 11th anni of the movement. Tennessee Williams' "Summer and Smoke" preemed April 25, 1952, the semi-official date for the Off-Broadway tecoff, and of course playwrights like Edward Albee, Jack Richards, Jack Gelber, Arthur Kopit, not to mention revivals of Becket, Krapp, Genet, Shaw, Ibsen, Chekhov, Moliere, O'Neill, Brecht, O'Casey and Pirandello have been part of the fare.

The shoddy sibling rival to Broadway with its seedy surroundings and bohemian beatniks and girls in Lady Godiva hairdos have been deprecated by the true Broadwayfarer.

Incidentally, on- and off-Broadway, as well as in parks and other al fresco environments, Shakespeare four centuries after his death had one of his best seasons.

Bus-And-Truck Tours

Bus-and-truck legiters, brought to 164 cities, revitalized the road. Four shows ("Sound of Music," "Mary Mary," "Carnival," "Shot In The Dark") grossed almost $5,000,000 among them.

ANTA's "The Advocate," starring James Daley, written by new American playwright Robert Noah, vidtaped its premiere over five Group W (Westinghouse) stations in Boston, Cleveland, Pitt, Balto and Frisco to so-so reaction. It still was not a simulcast of a Broadway premiere but a previously taped version, timeslotted to project coincidentally with its Broadway opening night.

Barbra Streisand set for a legit musicalization of Fanny Brice's career. Early in '63 "Sophie" was a shortlived legit musicalization of Sophie Tucker's early career.

UK Teenagers Prefer Own 'Liverpool Beat'

The "Liverpool beat," the upsurge of native British diskery artists whom the UK teenagers preferred, the spread of hootenannies in England, Down Under and even the Continent, and even the "Nashville beat" (country & western) by homegrown British youngsters usurping the Yank originals, were among the music biz highlights.

French teenagers ("decegenaires"), like their Yank counterpart, have put new imprint on Gallic show biz with big disk sales, music halls and boites. Johnny Halliday, the French Elvis Presley, is still tops; the French go in for Anglo-Saxon names to fit the rock 'n' roll idiom. The kids have their own fan mag, Le Salut des Copains.

Folk Music Boom

Folk music of course topped rock 'n' roll in many respects. For one thing, the better-heeled and higher-calibre cast of kids made it sounder economics for impresarios and artists, and a delight to the local auspices which have had their fill of riotous aftermaths with Jazz Festivals and the like.

Some better ballads broke through in the past year but items such as "Da Doo Ron Ron," "Tra La La," "Ooby Dooby Shee [illegible]" and "Do Dee Oh Do" made many wonder if these will be the 1963 "standards" of the future.

From gospel to freedom songs, from bossa nova to jug and other folknik variations, not forgetting the still dominant Twist and the incipient upsurge of banjo music, the musical patterns focused chiefly around the hootenanny popularity and the folknik vogue.

Gospel jazz, folk jazz in churches and even a "jazz mass" at Christ Episcopal Church's "Festival of the Lively Arts," in Dearborn, Mich., were other religioso music manifestations.

A switch on the church bingo party was the Univ. of Wisconsin's Congo party staged at a Lutheran Church in Madison, which didn't rest too well with the local gendarmerie.

Ex-rabbi Shlomo Carlebach became a folknik exponent and even cut an "At The Village Gate" album. Another ex-rabbi, Jackie Mason, after clicking on broader horizons of tv and niteries, also waxed several LPs, of which "I Want To Leave You With The Words of a Great Comedian" was a hit album.

Tabus

There were the usual tabus on disks. Most recently, Lena Horne's militant "Now!," an integration [illegible] set to the Israeli folk song, "Hava Nagila," got the WCBS-Radio nix until deejay Bill Randle played it to prove that its rock 'n' roll freneticism was against station policy and had nothing to do with lyric content.

WCBS has an extensive "delete" list for its disk jockeys because of r&r or dubious lyric content, some of it considered too "far-out" for any number of reasons.

Network frown on Pete Seeger and The Weavers on ABC's "Hootenanny" created an intra-folknik rhubarb. Talent talked "boycott" of the surprise videlick, but ABC said it was seconding previous CBS and NBC frown on the folksinger because of past politico leanings.

Folksinger Bob Dylan's "John Birch" song satirization also got Ed Sullivan's sponsorial frown.

East Germany had its own "Maketa," defined as a new version of the boogie, but none the less heralded as superior to the "degrading western" dance known as The Twist. Incidentally, Negro singer Chubby Checker (real name Ernest Evans), 22, a onetime South Philadelphia chicken plucker, and Holland's Catherina Lodders, 21, last year's "Miss World," announced their engagement. They met last January in the Philippines where she and six other beauts were on the bill which starred Checker, whose recording of "The Twist," became a global smash.

'Three Billion Millionaires'

UA and its board chairman Robert S. Benjamin sparked an all-star "Three Billion Millionaires" (UNICEF) for benefit of the UN children. All-star package comprising Jack Benny, Carol Burnett, Wally Cox, Bing Crosby, Sammy Davis Jr., Judy Garland, Danny Kaye, George Maharis and Terry-Thomas took Peter Farrow and Diane Lampert, its creators, a year-and-a-half to consummate. It's expected to raise many thousands for UNICEF.

Other offbeat albums included "birds and bees" advice to teenagers; income tax satire; the usual political lampoons; satires on the Christine Keeler-John Profumo scandal including a "theme" song for "Christine"; DGG of Germany's LP on "JFK In Germany," a waxed track of the late President Kennedy's visit there, proceeds to benefit the Peace Corps; Cassius Clay's poetry, "I Am The Greatest," on Columbia; and the lengthy dramas like "Strange Interlude," "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" and "Spoon River Anthology" into permanent album form: soundtracks of Mrs. Kennedy's tour of the White House, Elizabeth Taylor's ditto of London, tours of the Vatican, opening of New York's Lincoln Center, "how to" albums (in anything from languages to Debbie Drake's "Look Good, Feel Great" exercises), dancing lessons, typewriting, bowling, golfing, etc.), Cape Canaveral man-shoots, highlight events of the year, and the like.

Princess Soraya, apart from being linked with a Yank and a German film star romantically, slated to play Catherine the Great of Russia in "The Empress," Dino de Laurentiis' Italian production, probably shooting in Yugoslavia in '64. Former Empress of Iran enjoined a French diskery's tango platter, called "Saroya," because of use of her photograph.

And Brigitte Bardot won a similar invasion-of-privacy suit against Guy Beart's recording, "Bob, Bob, B.B." as a "scandalous intrusion on her private life." While the pop song flatteringly albeit indirectly refers to BB as a "national monument," the film star sued and won. All copies were ordered destroyed; furthermore, anyone retaining one faces a $20 fine.

There has been a memorial tribute to Pope John XXIII titled "The Sound of the Vatican" and kindred more serious recordings for home use—and posterity.

The economics of the Music industry for 1962 broke down as follows to make it "Music's Billion Dollar Beat," viz.: $565,000,000 in disk sales; $630,000,000 in sheet music and musical instruments (the folkniks boomed the guitar business to new highs, and now the banjomania, via Frisco and New York "banjo clubs," looms large on the horizon); giving the industry a grand total of $1,195,000,000.

As a side-bar, the U.S. Air Force exchanges in Europe now account for 1,000,000 platter sales a year, making this a strong potential for Yank and European diskeries.

ASCAP's $34,842,010 And BMI's $13,000,000

While ASCAP rolled up a peak income of $34,841,010 last year, there was much hue-and-cry that the competitive Broadcast Music, despite its smaller $13,000,000 annual take, seems "to control the airwaves and performance shots." The veteran American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers pointed up that "90% of the new songs played on the air are licensed by BMI" and because of this "a new ASCAP song hasn't got a chance today."

For all of ASCAP's $33,000,000 affluence, a much smaller country like Germany, through its GEMA (Gesellschaft fuer Musikalische Auffuerhungs und Mechanische Vervielfaeltingunsrechte) expected a $25,000,000 payoff in 1963. That longwinded German tag literally means the Assn. for Musical Offerings & Mechanical Repeating Rights.

Despite the "Liverpool sound" and Britain's Beatlemania, the click of "The Singing Nun" (Soeur Sourire, the Belgian novitiate) whose "Dominique" and other musical ditties swept the world, also stirred a religioso cycle in the United Kingdom.

Richard Rodgers composed the

(Continued on page 63)

AGING PROCESS FELT BY STARS & SHOW BIZ

(Continued from page 62)

official N.Y. World's Fair 1964 song, and Robbins-Feist-Miller (The Big 3), through its Tokyo affiliate, snagged "The Olympics Song," the official pop ditty of the '64 games.

There were report at year's end that BMI may also undergo a Consent Decree as happened twice with ASCAP as a means to clarify the broadcasters' tie-in with the music business.

ASCAP honored Katherine Bainbridge, its oldest living member, who just turned 100 at her California home. She did the lyrics to some 60 tunes in her half-century career. Lawrence Welk was considering her newest "Hi-Fi Polka."

After all these years Jimmy Durante produced a bestselling "September Song" album on the WB label; Duke Ellington clicked on his 14-week tour as a cultural envoy under U.S. State Dept. auspices although he had to fly his own physician to Pakistan when taken ill en route, but the 64-year-old composer-conductor did not interrupt his itinerary. CBS' "20th Century" plans a tv spectacular of the tour.

Big-Coin Investments By Diskeries In Legit

Record company involvement in Broadway, through direct investment or through parent company financing, reached multi-million dollar proportions this past year. Columbia Records was back again with $375,000 in Meredith Willson's "Here's Love" and $150,000 in Ervin Drake's "What Makes Sammy Run." CBS, Col's parent company, has a $297,000 stake in Noel Coward's "The Girl Who Came To Supper." The original Broadway cast album rights to all three are in Columbia's hopper, of course.

Capitol Records came into the financing groove with an estimated $200,000 in "Funny Girl," the Ray Stark and Seven Arts production of the Jule Styne-Bob Merrill musical based on the life of Fanny Brice in which Barbra Steisand will star. Cap was also set to put "Zenda" into the groove but the Vernon Duke-Leonard Adelson-Sid Kuller-Martin Charnin's musical folded in its pre-Broadway tryout and the album was scratched. Cap had no investment in the show. Everett Freeman wrote the book.

Another cast album that was scratched this past season was Rick Besoyan's "The Student Gypsy," scheduled to be grooved by RCA Victor. The show folded after a brief Broadway run and Victor dropped $12,000 in the venture. Victor, however, has Broadway representation this season with "Jennie," "110 In The Shade" and "Hello Dolly."

ABC-Par's $1,000,000 Stake

ABC-Paramount got into the original Broadway cast album via a $1,000,000 tieup between its parent company, American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, with the Jule Styne-Lester Osterman On Stage Productions. The musicals involved are "A Girl To Remember," "The Ghost Goes West" and "Mrs. A."

After dropping $200,000 in last season's "Hot Spot," Warner Bros. Records returned to legit musical financing (this time with Warner Bros. Pictures' publishing firm, Music Publishers Holding Corp.) with $100,000 investment in Alexander H. Cohen's Italian musical "Rugitano." Another newcomer to the financing field is Roulette Records with a $100,000 stake in "Kelly," upcoming Moose Charlop-Eddie Lawrence tuner.

Dramatic plays also began swinging into the disk arena. Columbia Records led the field with Edward Albee's "Who's Afraid Of Virginia Woolf?" Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude" and the off-Broadway productions of "Brecht on Brecht" and "In White America." Command Records did "School For Scandal" and London did "The Hollow Crown."

The 1963-64 season also shaped up as the biggest since the 1930s for ASCAP with 17 shows by its writer-members scheduled. BMI, too, increased its legit activity with seven shows by its writers on the season's schedule.

Niteries Look Forward To N.Y. '64 Fair Influx

No nudes at the '64 Fair is good news for the Broadway and Village joints which figure that Robert Moses' tabu on a "funway" will hypo Manhattan nitery biz.

Greenwich Village is now the ranking cafe hub of Manhattan, eclipsing the midtown belt.

Sample of the '64 convention business (coincidental with the Fair) is Philco's $1,500,000 party for 5,000 dealers, distributors, salesmen, execs and their wives. Among the peripheral boom is a 5,000-ticket order for May 25, 1964, from Philco's Owen H. Klepper, scattered over such shows as "Jennie," and "How To Succeed." Nor can they be balcony seats, so Philco's largesse will perforce embrace a number of shows.

The bellydancing vogue is expected to continue well into the 1964-65 N.Y. World's Fair season. brace a number of shows. His request for "Jennie" became academic in light of the show's pre-New Year's foldo).

New T-Bird wriggle-waggle dance, with ceilingward leaps, was among the terp mores, but the Twist and its contiguous Mashed Potato, Madison, etc. still is dominant.

New British teenage dance, The Blues, which loomed as displacement of The Twist, incorporates a step called "the Philip," described as a "cheeky movement." It is based on the familiar hands-behind-back stance of Prince Philip, the Duke of Edinburgh, husband of Queen Elizabeth.

Greenwich Village's beatniks, mixed racial patronage, oddball behavior, and kindred mores, caused the better-grade coffeehouses to brew a new image, and seek to strip itself of its former aura.

Borrowing a figleaf from Paris' amateur strip contests, Pitt's Casino, local burleskery, had its biggest b.o. week with an "amateur exotic contest."

AGVA Scandal

The McClellan committee's expose of the AGVA scandal forced cleanup within the union.

Chi's Gate of Horn lost its license because of a Lenny Bruce booking and the comedian faced obscenity raps elsewhere although, paradoxically, when he worked "clean" in Florida he was just as big b.o.

Monte Proser and couturier-cum-vaudancer Don Loper plan reopening Billy Rose's Diamond Horseshoe for the N.Y. Fair influx. Rose meantime clicked at his Ziegfeld Theatre with such variety stars as Maurice Chevalier, Danny Kaye and Jack Benny in one-man shows.

MCA's Larry Barnett succeeded Larry Kanaga as prez of GAC which subsequently went public with a stock issue.

Despite the burgeoning Carib tourist business, beefed-up further by casino appurtenances denied Florida, the seasonal complaint from Miami's environs were more vocal than actual. Florida continues to boom and, in a measure, despite the lack of gambling, pays talent into the "Las Vegas salaries."

The new New York Playboy Club became snarled in the SLA (State Liquor Authority) mess which caused the resignation of a judge and other officials and a general housecleaning.

The N.Y. City License Commissioner also frowned on the club's "bunnies" mixing with the customers, hence denied a cabaret license. The PC, none the less, is one of Gotham's few nitery clicks.

Joe Valachi's 'Singing'

The Joe Valachi "Cosa Nostra" (Our Thing) "singalong" on tv hookup before the Sen. McClellan crime probing subcommittee put the spotlight on a number of questionably "fronted" bars and bistros in midtown Manhattan, Greenwich Village, and elsewhere, and loss of their licenses as Valachi name-dropped top known hoodlums and charged ties with New Orleans and Las Vegas gambling and inferentially, other show biz links.

N.Y. City Tax Commissioner Paul P. Rao Jr., as president of the United Italian-American League Inc., approved the Valachi hearings as "rendering valuable public service" and regretted the "irresponsible accusation that the Justice Dept. and Senate committee was maintaining a smear against Italian-Americans."

The N.Y. Times' page one, five-parter on Las Vegas, not so much an "expose" but an examination of legalized gambling and its economic-politico-union ties, coupled with a sizzling book, "The Green Felt Jungle, put further spotlight on Vegas.

For a time the new Americana, N.Y., spent "almost Florida salaries" for names in the bid by then v.p.-g.m. Claude C. Philippe to put the new Loew's-Tisch hostelry on the map, which he did with this, along with the April In Paris ball, etc. Philippe is now a hotel consultant plus building his own hotels in Paris, Geneva and the Caribbean.

Butane gas explosion at the Indiana State Fairgrounds killed 62 when "Holiday On Ice" played Indianapolis and for a time curbed the show's touring although none of the cast was injured.

Churchman Raps Religioso Pix

Continued from page 3

found in a Christian-Judaic interpretation of films such as the recent "To Kill A Mockingbird," "Lawrence of Arabia" and "David and Lisa." It has been a basic part of my task as a specialized viewer to offer insights relating such films as these to the Christian-Judaic tradition. Let me offer some examples of this.

A child sees things differently from the ways that an older person sees them. "To Kill A Mockingbird" gave us, at its best, a child's view of certain things: the makeup of small-town life, the sometimes fearful, snarled roots in a jungle of human emotions, the unspeakable tragedy of social malignancy when it strikes down that beauty which is a human life.

Certainly, this film was a sermon and an exceedingly prowerful one. It inflicted the terrible pain of awakening consciousness, and thereby bestowed life to the process of knowing. But it was warm and compassionate and wise in its childlike way, because it contained the fresh and haunting contemplation of persons and events which belonged to Scout Finch when she was nine.

"To Kill A Mockingbird" gave us a memorable moment of film when a lynching mob was turned back from the town jail because Scout and Jem, two youngsters, unknowingly changed a dehumanized mob of maddened men into a small group of self-conscious human beings.

'Lawrence'

"Lawrence of Arabia" was an entirely different kind of film to interpret and to review for religious publications.

In a context marked by unprecedented mobility in location and action, there emerged so profound a study in depth of a man's character that his soul was bared before our very eyes. Rarely has a study of this depth been realized on film. That it should be achieved in a motion picture which was so overpowering in its conception that it dwarfed other mere "spectaculars," was an occasion for plaudits.

Lawrence could never again be the man he was before he met the desert; yet he must live out the years of his life. But what life was it? Did he know who he was? Had Lawrence met Lawrence? This was the question posed by this motion picture and, of course, there was no easy answer to it.

But there were indications which pointed tne way toward an answer. Lawrence had been flamboyant and he had postured; he had become the "hero" he wished, in a sense, to become. Yet there were the two sides to his nature, always at war with each other; while playing the hero, and even passionately believing in what he was doing as the hero, he was yet able to discern the ultimate folly and emptiness of the "hero" role and, indeed, of any role.

This is precisely what "Lawrence of Arabia" was later trying to escape: the confines of a role. He was trying to be a person, an honest, ordinary human being. But the general had told him he could never be ordinary, for he was "extraordinary." Lawrence's search for the nature and ground of humanness itself, in a culture and system of increasing dehumanization, is what the public has always grasped as the terrible bond between itself and Lawrence. This is the ultimate reason for the eternal fascination and mystery of the legend of Lawrence.

"David and Lisa" has been interpreted and reviewed by many. It was remarkable for its simplicity and integrity. It concerned two young persons who were mentally ill. At its conclusion, when Lisa had finally confronted herself and accepted what she found, the young man David not only was permissive in the initial pain of relating which wracked his being, but resolutely did not refuse this aspect of involvement in another human life.

As a religious motion picture reviewer, I feel that I am caught eternally in a kind of ambivalence. The Hollywood and New York press agents quite sincerely tout "religious" movies (i.e., movies on religious themes) which generally make serious religion appear to serious persons to be ridiculous, and submerge authentically spiritual questions underneath the facade of mere spectacle or sentimentalism. Films come along whose images identify them with morally controversial themes, but these films often are dealing with such a genuinely religious question as "what does it mean to be human?" (The religious nature of this question is grounded in the biblical understanding that God has created man in His own image, and that human life therefore possesses a holy meaning).

Sometimes certain church people get mad at me for puncturing their respectability image by reminding them that human life, any human life, bears the mark of God's creation and redemption. Too, movie industry people can sometimes get mad at me for pointing out the burlesque quality of some press-agented "biblical" films, and for identifying the profoundly religious quality of certain motion pictures which are boxoffice by virtue of being sensationally "wicked."

It is a confusing thing to be a religious movie critic, trying to hold onto one's integrity concerning both one's religion and the objective quality of film production itself, while endeavoring to fight off merely superficially pious platitudes.

IRELAND TENT NAMES JIM WALLS BARKER

Dublin.

Jim Walls, secretary and chief accountant of Odeon (Ireland), Rank setup here, has been named Chief Barker of the Variety Club of Ireland. Noel Coade (Irish tele) is first assistant and Ray O'Keeffe, second assistant.

Noel Mountaine is property master; Ken McCullagh, treasurer; Gerry McGuinness, press guy. Canvasmen named are Jimmy Campbell, Michael Collins, Dermot O'Connor, Phil Parker, Sammy Parker and Val Thomas. Main Guy for the South of Ireland will be Dermot Breen, and for the North, Jim McCaherty.

TV Tuning Up For Elections

Continued from page 3

siderably shook up by the assassination of Pres. John F. Kennedy on Nov. 22.

Kickoff In March

The formal kickoff of the three networks' entry into the Presidential race will occur March 10 with detailed reports on the New Hampshire primary where the Republican Party contenders will be slugging it out. ABC and NBC, however, engaged in a preliminary workout last November in covering the gubernatorial elections in Kentucky. While CBS sat this one out, ABC and NBC went allout in this dry-run to test out personnel and vote-tallying techniques.

For NBC, this was a sharpening of procedures used on previous election nights. For ABC News, operating for the first time under prexy Elmer W. Lower (ex NBC v.p. and general manager of news), it was a debut performance with results that satisfied the web's execs. Both webs were able to call the results of the Kentucky elections about a half-hour after all the polling places closed on the basis of analysing data from swing counties in the state.

Come next November, all three webs will be feeding results from scattered swing counties around the nation into electronic computors which will be predicting the ultimate result before 8:30 p.m. that Tuesday night.

In alphabetical order, here's how the three networks have staffed their units for the Presidential unit:

For ABC, Bob Quinn has taken over the exec production assignment, concentrating from now till November on the web's election unit. He has Arnold Snyder working under as manager of a six-man team which will be expanded as events dictate. ABC, like CBS and NBC, will be covering all of the 11 primary contests, which will wind up in California in June. Howard K. Smith and Edward P. Morgan are shaping up as the web's key personalities for the conventions and election night.

For CBS, Bill Leonard will be the man in charge of off primaries, conventions and elections. Under Leonard, there are two producers, Bill Eames, in charge of the editorial side, and Bobby Wussler, in charge of the technical facilities. Don Hewitt will be the director at the conventions and elections.

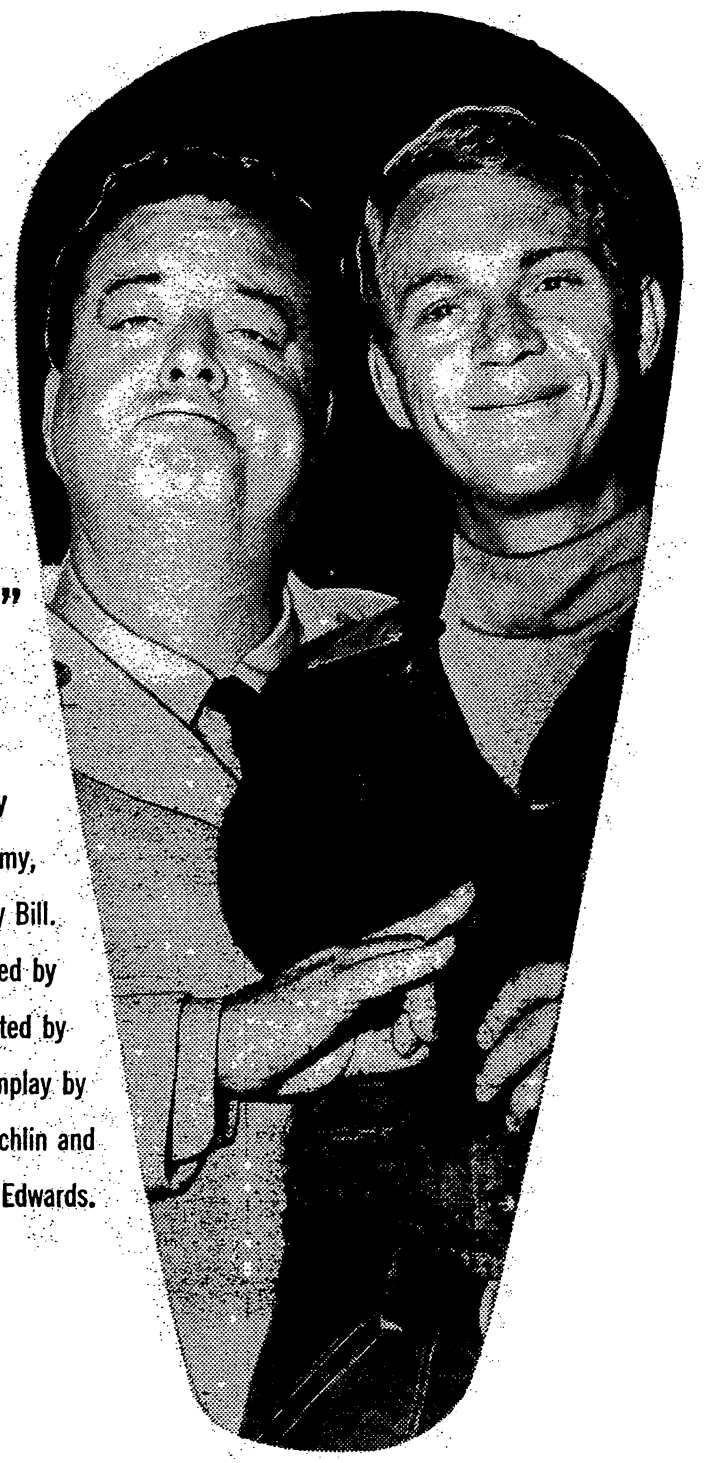
Walter Cronkite will anchor the conventions and elections CBS-TV while Bob Trout will handle radio. Eric Sevareid and Harry Reasoner are slated to operate as analysts.

CBS has two consultants on tap, Meade Alcorn and Louis Harris. The Harris association is particularly important for CBS insofar as he, together with IBM and CBS experts are responsible for VPA, the web's technique of analysing early returns from key precincts. In 1962, when VPA was first used, CBS employed it in 13 races in eight states and were able to call the results of 12 of the 13 correctly very soon after the polls closed. The 13th race, the Massachusetts governorship, was so tight that CBS refused to call it. It subsequently took four weeks for the outcome to be determined. CBS will use VPA in 47 states for the Presidential race and surrounding political contests.

For NBC, Frank Jordan will be the key figure in the web's election coverage. Others involved in the election planning realm are Robert Northshield, who in taking over Lower's former spot as manager of news. He'll supervise the entire operation. Ed Edwin, political consulant, has been named to program the RCA EDP (Electronic Data Processing) unit. Mary K. Boland, a political researcher, will also work on the computor. Reuven Frank, who produced the NBC News election shows in 1960 and '62, will again head the production staff. George Murrary will be associate producer and chief director.

As in 1960, David Brinkley and Chet Huntley will be the top anchor men for NBC's election coverage, with the rest of the web's large roster of news personalities to be placed in key positions around the country.

SMASHES 4 YEAR RECORD in N.Y. City area multiple booking!



JACKIE GLEASON STEVE McQUEEN

A BLAKE EDWARDS PRODUCTION

"SOLDIER IN THE RAIN"

"GREAT!" says Newsweek Magazine. "LOVED EVERY MINUTE!" raves Hedda Hopper! Hilarious fun story of two irregulars in the regular army, co-starring Tuesday Weld, Tony Bill. Music - Henry Mancini. Produced by Martin Jurow. Directed by Ralph Nelson. Screenplay by Maurice Richlin and Blake Edwards.

Allied Artists Means $ Business!

"THE STRANGLER"
VICTOR BUONO, smash discovery of "What Ever Happened To Baby Jane?" creates shocker-role filmed in tradition of "Psycho." Directed by Burt Topper. Screenplay by Bill S. Ballinger. Produced by Samuel Bischoff and David Diamond.

"NEVER PUT IT IN WRITING"
PAT BOONE stars in wild fun, fast romance, taut suspense and the craziest chase in years. Boone has a sure-fire hit title song. Written and directed by Andrew Stone, Produced by Andrew and Virginia Stone. A Seven Arts Production.

"THE NAKED KISS"
CONSTANCE TOWERS, ANTHONY EISLEY, MICHAEL DANTE in a sizzling man-woman drama. Most piercing revelation of the rise and fall of a harlot ever filmed. Produced, written and directed by Samuel Fuller. A Fromkiss-Firks Production.

"A YANK IN VIET-NAM"
MARSHALL THOMPSON, as a fighting U.S. Marine, joins up with a daring Saigon adventuress in the news-hot TIME-BOMB OF THE WORLD. Directed by Marshall Thompson. Produced by Wray Davis. Screenplay by Jane Wardell and Jack Lewis.

and many more in '64!

'64 N.Y. Fair's Admissions

Continued from page 3

yond this, there is no question that the 1939-1940 Fair, born out of the depression, vastly increased business for New York hotels, restaurants, department stores, the construction trades, and many other commercial interests.

It was also, in contrast to the new Fair, a genuine World's Fair with impressive foreign participation.

A Fair Appraisal

Moses has stated that the U.S. State Dept. created an atmosphere which was destructive to Soviet participation, and this also has a degree of truth. However, it is doubtful whether State had any influence on the negative decisions of such nations as Britain, France, Canada, Israel, Italy and our own associated Puerto Rico. Considering the ethnic background of millions of New Yorkers, these are rather conspicuous absentees. Yes, the Irish are with us! The fact of the matter is that the lack of approval of the International Bureau of Expositions which approved the Seattle Fair gave numerous foreign governments, which are members of that treaty organization, a valid excuse to decline participation, and, together with the excessive costs for construction and the reluctance of American trade unions to permit foreign artisans to work on foreign pavilions, influenced most governments to decline the blandishments for the many missions headed by Ex-Gov. Charles Poletti, though it must be admitted that the Fair's emissaries have proved a boon to the international airlines and a host of credit card organizations.

(Alfred Stern, president of Robinson-Capsis-Stern Associates Inc., was Account Executive for Entertainment to the Dept. of Exhibits and Concessions for the 1939-1940 World's Fair at the age of 21. As producer or managing director, he has served the U.S. Government, American communities, industries, and civic celebrations in the organization and direction of more than 40 major fairs, expositions and civic celebrations throughout the U.S. and Europe. His firm is presently responsible for five major projects at the N.Y. World's Fair, including the Electric Power & Light Exhibit Pavilion and show, "The Brightest Show on Earth"; the Borden Co. show, "All About Elsie"; the N.Y. State Exhibit, Clairol Pavilion and presentation, and The Port of Authority's exhibit.)

Moses has promised that the Fair will be a gourmet's delight. A half-dozen of New York's great restaurants emerged from the 1939-1940 World's Fair, including Le Pavillon, which was the restaurant in the French Pavilion; the Brussels, which was the dining spot in the Belgium Pavilion, the Pavillion Swiss, which was at the Swiss Pavilion; the Three Crowns, which was at the Swedish Pavilon, etc.

The new Fair is dominated by 25 Brass Rail grab-stands. It is true that Restaurant Associates, operators of the Four Seasons, La Fonda Del Sol, and the Forum of the Twelve Caesars, are managing the restaurant in the Gas Pavilion, entitled with epicurean questionability, "The Festival of Gas."

Absent Products

Moses has also declared that the Fair is "The Olympic Games of Commerce & Industry," and, certainly, the Fair is dominated by industrial interests. However, in contrast to the 1939-1940 Fair, no American food, cigaret or pharmaceutical company has an individual pavilion. These three categories represent an impressive array of absent consumer products.

I feel that the two flaws in Mr. Moses' basic concepts are the result of his determination that the Fair itself should not build pavilions available on a rental basis to smaller exhibitors who cannot afford to construct individual pavilions, but instead allow individual promoters, often of questionable background, to construct multiple exhibitor buildings. Their rents are exorbitant, their architecture borax, and in their eagerness to amortize their costs of construction, they will permit any sort of squeegee mop, Venetian blind, or Brazilian butterfly tray exhibitor to buy space. Inevitably, the quality of such exhibits will approximate a home show in Omaha, Neb., and the results are hardly the kind of thing conducive to a satisfied $2 front gate admission. Furthermore, these promoters have been touting every conceivable participant until many industries are bleeding from the ears, and these bunco artists have collectively, with notable exceptions, given the Fair a bad name. The worst of these have obviously fallen by the wayside, but the survivors will, for the most part, present pedestrian exhibits which I believe most people would gladly pay $2 not to see.

Can't Be Old Hat

The second commandment which Moses has violated is bracketing the Fair over the plan established for the 1939-1940 Fair, as, obviously, the one thing a Fair should be is new, not a repeat of a plan established a quarter of a century ago.

Under the Eisenhower administration, there was discussion as to whether an American World's Fair should be held in Washington or New York, and architect Victor Gruen developed a dynamic plan for a Fair in Washington which would have achieved the Cultural Center and a continuing permanent international trade fair following the two years operation of a World's Fair. President Eisenhower appointed a committee to investigate the relative merits of the Capital and New York as sites for a World's Fair, and this committee, influenced by New York State's Congressional delegation (the District of Columbia has none), and the fact that the New York representatives told them that the plumbing and trees left over from 1939 would save money, decided that New York should receive official government endorsement. The committee consisted of three distinguished members who shall remain nameless, but who among Fair professionals were referred to as the three blind mice. Because of the economic dependency of many foreign nations on U.S. foreign aid, it is doubtful that these governments would have been so successful in declining participation in a Fair in our nation's Capital.

The Federal Government allocated $17,000,000 for their pavilion at the Fair as against the $15,000,000 appropriated for the Federal Science Pavilion at Seattle's Century 21 Exposition. Obviously, $17,000,000 in New York buys less than $15-Mil. in Seattle, and the glass showbox which the Federal Government is erecting at Flushing Meadows is a banal piece of architecture as compared to the elegant U.S. pavilions designed by Minoru Yamasaki for Seattle and Edward Durell Stone for Brussels. Clearly, the new Federal Pavilion represents the dullest Federal architecture in any great exposition since the concrete bookends sponsored by the United Sates at the 1939-1940 Fair. The theme of the Federal participation is "The Challenge to Greatness," which we are convinced is a rather embattled, defensive theme. "The Opportunities of Greatness" sounds more appropriate for our nation, which has in the past absorbed much from the rest of the world and, now now having attained material and cultural maturity, is feeding back to the Free World.

The declared theme of Moses' Fair is "Peace Through Understanding," an interchangeable phrase at best. Understanding through peace would do just as well. Yet it must be admitted that the Fair's influence on exhibitors to conform with this lofty theme is rather loose. What, for example, does Sinclair's Dinoland, complete with Dinosaurs, Brontosaurus, Tyrannosaurus-Rex, and other prehistoric monsters have to do with this lofty credo? The Fair has a Committee on Conformity, yet conformity is just what a Fair should not have. A committee on variety would be far more constructive. However, realistically, it must be admitted that the exhibitors and concessionaires determine Fair rates and regulations rather than the Fair Corp. itself.

For example, it was declared by the Conformity Committee that all structures must be either in white or a natural material. Somehow or other, Travelers Insurance Pavilion is dominated by a red concrete umbrella, and I daresay at this point if H. J. Heinz wished to erect a 57-foot illuminated pickle, complete with warts, and would buy a suitable site, they would be welcome with open arms. If their participation required fountains of gushing mustard, that also would probably be OK. A tire company, for example, is erecting heroic-size tire Ferris Wheel in the Transportation Area, which certainly constites a significant contribution to the "Peace Through Understanding" theme.

Moses does not like amusement areas and is allergic to cotton candy, so this Fair has no "Hot Mikado," no "Star and Garter" and not even Rosita Royce & her Pigeons. It does have Michelangelo's Pieta in the Vatican Exhibit. Moses has decided that this has far more cultural significance than the parachute jump, but isn't this comparing apples and eggs, for the appeal of both enterprises is quite different.

Good Values

It is quite true that there will be a great deal of genuine entertainment at the Fair, as exhibit techniques have progressed since 1939, and many of the major industrial participants are working in showmanship techniques: Ford, General Electric, and Pepsi-Cola have employed Walt Disney. Jo Mielziner is creating a major portion of the Bell Telephone Co.'s exhibit. The Electric Power & Light Exhibit and the Borden Co. are presenting shows which we are producing, and many other industries realize that World's Fair participation must extend beyond mere showroom display of products which visitors can see for nothing in stores and displays throughout American.

Moses has often expressed his determination to create a public park in Flushing Meadows. There has been a park in Flushing Meadows since 1940, and because of its remote location, it has been an outstandingly unsuccessful area in regard to attendance.

The considerable unsold realestate at the Fair is now devoted to landscaped rest areas and "Pools of Meditation."

Yet with it all, Moses is a dynamic figure, and without him, it is doubtful that the project would be realized at all. Certainly, he is perhaps the nation's greatest authority on front gate amusement attractions, for he has with conviction predicted that the Fair will attract 70,000,000 in attendance and pay off the bondholders. Surely, both Broadway and Hollywood should retain him as a high-priced consultant, for very few other entrepreneurs would predict boxoffice attendance and revenue before they've seen what kind of show they have.

H'wood Up Over '62

Continued from page 3

at Desilu while WB became a tenant at Paramount.

Overall, however, major studio stage space wasn't taxed, as only some 107 features were made in this country by the principal production sources, plus parts of three others which were shot in the main abroad. Total of 53 films were shot out of the United States.

Outlook for current year is cloudy at the moment—not quite as clear, in fact, as situation was this same time a year ago. This is due partly to hesitancy on part of two major factors to commit more investment in production until they start getting back steady flow of coin from pix already completed or still before the cameras. Warners is estimated to have inventory of some $80,000,000 in pix now in release or coming out during the year. United Artists, of course, has reported $22 mil. riding on "Greatest Story Ever Told," which won't be out in Cinerama (three strip) for several months and the big cash flow is upcoming (but not yet in hand) from the $9,300,000 Cinerama (one strip) "Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World," which is off to a booming boxoffice start.

In any event, prospects are that U. S. producers will come close to, or perhaps even better, this year the number of features turned out in '63.

Aaron Rosenberg will produce "The Reward," from Michael Barrett novel, under his Arcola Productions banner for 20th-Fox release, with Serge Bourguignon to direct.

Germany's Too Frank Press

Continued from page 3

here by the major big-circulation dailies.

Germany, it's occasionally noted, doesn't have a Louella or Hedda or Winchell. It does have just a couple of their counterparts, a Munich columnist using the pseudonym "Hunter" and a Nuremberg gossip columnist printed under the name of "Fibi."

Both of these celebrity gossip writers often resort to rewriting press service items about antics of the international set. Reason is, with the competition from their own editorial staff, it's pretty hard to grind out the blind items when the front-page readers already know the whole scoop.

A beautiful brunette who was once a member of royalty and whose daily doings make her the No. 1 female name in Germany was recently "heavy-dating" a German actor.

She and this handsome male decided to get away from it all—so they took a holiday at his family's hunting lodge, a remote little hideaway sans water and plumbing. The German press got up close enough to tell the whole tale of their woodland capers. With names, of course.

When an Austrian-born film actress who has appeared on the French stage was angling to marry a handsome young French actor, she and he gave joint interviews, from the apartment they shared, openly discussing whether they would marry, what their future film and stage production plans were. Many interviews carried the joint address of the unwed pair.

The European approach to sex is a much more open and honest one than that of the United States. Despite America's claim to freedom and democracy, the papers shy away from writing such truths. Old tricks of using initials or suggesting the name of the personality involved are far too passe for the European readers. They are used to getting the facts.

A top European disk jockey recently moved out of the apartment he shared in Germany with a pretty young singer. She bemoaned his leaving — and tearfully told the press that not only did he disappear after a lovers' spat—but he took all the furniture with him!

Europe's cavortings are enough to make a young man turn to the Old World for a few flings at genuine 20th century livin' it up.

Those (Very) Personals

In the leading German papers, for instance, a man can buy an ad for a couple of bucks, seeking "pretty female companion, age 25-30, wanted to spend two weeks on the Riviera with German Businessman, 45, staying at best hotels and travelling in Mercedes. Sporty, good figure, attractive wardrobe desired. Send photos and applications to . . ."

The German marriage-search ads are known worldwide, with men and women listing their qualifications and telling what they seek in a partner (money in the bank, two-room apartment, new Volkswagen are among the standard requisites for the seekers). The blind ads urge all interested to write to a certain box number —and usually follow with personal correspondence and a discreet meeting at a restaurant.

The "vacation partner" ads go into full swing in May. One Stuttgart weekend paper listed 78 such "availabilities," for a pretty girl who had a couple of weeks coming and lacked the funds to hie herself off to Capri or Sicily.

The West Germans' approach to the girls they dub the "light maidens" is a humorous one, as well. In a land where a house is not a home, but a city-controlled visiting centre, the girls who ply their wares on the streets, in the woods, and even along the highways (the Autobahn Annies) find themselves the victims of a little light copy from the editors as well.

Perhaps unbelievable was the suit brought by an organized group of the sin sisters in Frankfurt. German families like to go wandering through the city-owned woods of a weekend, and had protested about seeing some of the girls in action in the area referred to as "The Green Hills Hotel." Their indigant protests resulted in wrathful action from the Frankfurt parliament. It banned the girls from soliciting in the forests. But the enraged country girls, under one defiant leader, brought court action in Frankfurt to protect their rights, as city residents, to stroll, or stop, or romance in the woods.

They lost the suit, of course. The city court decided that even if the forest belonged to the town, the city had the right to decide which of its inhabitants could use the great outdoors, and for what worthy purposes.

With all this action getting into the papers, and the names spelled out for the unimaginative, who could bear to go back to reading, "Is it true that J. L. is leaving M. B. for T. R.? And what producer's wife is mad as hops about his not-so-secret fling with his blond leading lady?"

Considering all this free and forthright "entertainment" in the German papers, it's a little difficult for the film and television makers to come up with a topic sensational enough to appeal to the viewers, and still tame enough to get through the straight-laced censorship.

Old Hoofology

Continued from page 3

is to dance away from their partners and, instead of being crazy, as people seem to think, it is only going back to the oldfashioned way of dancing in a modern form.

The expression of the times seems to be mass thinking and the modern dances follow suit—group dancing.

The seniors still want the waltz, foxtrot, cha-cha, tango with now and then a touch of the Twist tossed in to see if the last chiropractic treatment will really stand up. While the younger set is pretty well represented at the Hotel Taft grill in the evenings, they politely sit out these conventional dances hoping that the band will revert to a Hully Gully or Mashed Potato. That's when the seniors sit down and wonder if Lopez has lost his mind.

There's one style of music, however, that provides a common ground—The Twist! When we announce it there's a gasp throughout the room with overtones of anticipation. The juniors come right out and do it—and it's a pretty good parent-trap too. Everybody doing it has such fun that even Mr. & Mrs. Methuselah would give it a whirl if they came back out of antiquity.

One of the new dances, the bossa nova—that the seniors are trying to learn—is an aftermath of the samba. Call it a lazy man's samba. It is polyrhythmic rather than syncopated but it has a syncopated sound. It is supposed to be a blend of United States jazz and Brazilian music. Combining jazz with native rhythms was never considered especially unusual but, as everyone knows, it has become the thing to do recently.

An orchestra leader wants to please everyone. As music preferences stand the wishes of youth versus the desires of maturity are incompatible. We can please the hobbledehoys with the hully-gully but what happens to our standing with the older set? The answer is to play a little of everything.

Five Businessmen Back Reopening Scot Cinema

Anstruther.

Despite the shuttering of film houses elsewhere, five business men in this small East Scotland fishing village have sunk $6,000 of their personal savings in reopening a cinema which shuttered from lack of business two years ago. The 900-seat Regal Cinema was given a new lease of life with "Dr. No."

Others backing the reopening with farmer J. W. Clement are a local postman, Lindsay Berwick, who will be manager; grocer Eddie Clark; motor engineer William Band; and solicitor David Cook, who is secretary and a director of the company.

Clement said: "We feel the cinema will pay its way in the winter as well as the summer when vacationers come here. A lot of teenagers complain that there is nothing to do but hang around the street corners."

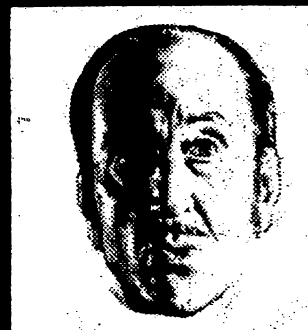
American International presents

YOUR FAVORITE CREEPS TOGETHER AGAIN!

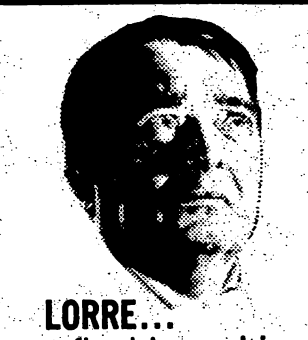
...every shroud has a silver lining when old fiends get together for a real blast of multiple mayhem!

KARLOFF... a casket case!

PRICE... a grave sort of fellow!



RATHBONE... a very reluctant corpse!



LORRE... a fiend in need is a fiend indeed!

BROWN... he digs graves the most!

JAMESON... a pretty ghoul is like a melody!

American International PRESENTS

THE COMEDY of TERRORS

IN PANAVISION® AND COLOR

STARRING

VINCENT PRICE • PETER LORRE • BORIS KARLOFF

CO-STARRING WITH

JOYCE JAMESON • RHUBARB THE CAT

SPECIAL GUEST STAR ALSO STARRING

JOE E. BROWN • BASIL RATHBONE

Produced by JAMES H. NICHOLSON and SAMUEL Z. ARKOFF • Co Producer ANTHONY CARRAS Directed by JACQUES TOURNEUR • Written by RICHARD MATHESON • Music by LES BAXTER

CONTACT YOUR American International EXCHANGE

Coffee, Brandy & Cigars

Continued from page 9

before she laughed just as heartily (in the scene where she first encounters her vis-a-vis, John Gilbert) in "Queen Christina."

* * *

Of Blessed Recall

One difference (among many) between today's films and yesteryear's is the lack of colorful "second string" and bit players we used to have, that zany lot that lent, for a moment, such zestful seasoning to so many pictures that would have been that much less without them—and "that much was often considerable. Well, such as: Franklin Pangborn, Tommy Mitchell, William Demarest, Robert Grieg, Hank Mann, Sig Rumann, Felix Bressart, Eric Blore, Paul Porcasi, Eugene Palette, Walter Catlett, Akim Tamiroff, Edward Everett Horton, Walter Connolly, Sig Arno, Alison Skipworth, Ernest Cossart, Basil Radford, Naunton Wayne, Mischa Auer, Warren Hymes, Andy Devine, Laura Hope Crewes, Frank McHugh, Matt Moore, Guy Kibbee, Jack Oakie, Ronald Squire, George Barbier, Raymond Cordy, Lionel Stander, Michael Chekov, Andre de Beranger, Ford Sterling, J. Farrel McDonald, etc. etc. Where, indeed, are the snows of yesterday?

* * *

Basic Drama Is Two

A psychiatrist wrote to the N. Y. Times not so long ago, describing Roman Polanski's "Knife in the Water" as a perfect example of the Oedipus complex. It was symptomatic of the current tendency to see "things behind things" in the new spate of European films. Not so, says Polanski, the young Polish director of this film. "It doesn't involve three people at all, despite the presence of the trio, but two." He quoted Rainer Maria Rilke: "All that I have written up to now has been very bad because I was dealing with three people and not two. If I had the courage, I would write only about two people because the conflict is between two people, not three—the third person is just an excuse." The quarrel in "Knife in the Water," said Polanski, is just between the husband and wife—the boy, who intrudes in their life, is just an excuse.

Which reminds me of what Alexander Dumas once said in another context: "The chains of matrimony are so heavy that it takes two to carry them, sometimes three." (A whole Lubitsch comedy concentrated into one sentence.)

* * *

Residue of Fright

Josef von Sternberg once made a film called "The Last Command" in which Emil Jannings, as a Czarist officer, manhandled by a mob during the Russian Revolution, develops a tic from the shock of his maltreatment. In case anyone ever thought this was an invention of a lurid imagination, it might be interesting for them to know that physiologically it was sound. The scion of one of the oldest and most aristocratic families of Russia, Prince Galitzine, developed a bad stutter as a result of the shock of the Russian Revolution. Eventually, he fled to Paris and got a job as a chauffeur. (In Sternberg's film, the Russian general drifts to Hollywood where he gets a job as a movie extra. This, too, actually happened.)

* * *

Sans Prescription

In the memoirs of Lydia Sokolova of the original Diaghilev Ballets Russes, she recounts this anecdote: "One evening when I was giving my pupil, a rich and handsome Frenchwoman with a lovely villa on the other side of Cap Martin, a lesson, I complained of a splitting headache. My pupil said she had something which would take the headache away, and she gave me a little box of powder, telling me to take a pinch and sniff it as if it were snuff. I followed her instructions, and she drove me back to my flat in her car. I suddenly felt an extraordinary tension round my face as if my jaw had been bound up, and I could neither eat nor speak. However, the headache disappeared and I went to a rehearsal. By the time it came my turn to dance I was feeling on top of the world: I threw myself into the role as I never remembered doing before or since, and enjoyed myself immensely. Diaghilev was watching, and when I finished dancing, he called me over to sit beside him, saying, 'You seem very excited.' I replied, 'I'm not excited, I just feel very well, and I was enjoying dancing and having a lovely time.' He looked at me for a few seconds in silence and then said, 'Who gave it to you?' I asked him what on earth he meant, but he merely repeated his question. 'Are you going to tell me who gave it to you?' I said, 'I don't know what you mean.' 'Weren't you given some powder to smell?' he asked. 'Yes,' I told him, 'for my headache. And now I feel so much better.' Diaghilev got up and walked away. From that day onward I neither gave that lady another lesson, nor did I ever speak to her again. The 'Old Man' has diagnosed the effects of cocaine . . ."

* * *

Historic Note

For cine-buffs: The original version, running almost five hours, of Abel Gance's "Napoleon" has been found by the Society for Film History Research in London, and two reels of the African footage shot by Erich von Stroheim for "Queen Kelly" has been acquired by the Cinematheque Francaise of Paris.

* * *

Real Crime and Fiction

Fritz Lang built his reputation as a director of the first rank on two types of films, the spectacle ("Siegfried", "Metropolis", etc.) and the crime film ("Dr. Mabuse", "Spies" etc.) A favorite theme of his in the latter category was the character, and its variations, of Dr. Mabuse, the master criminal. This sinister idea, which appears to have had its actual modern counterparts in organizations like the Black Dragon Society, the Mafia, etc. was set forth by Conan Doyle in his story, "The Final Problem" in "The Memoirs of Sherlock Holmes", some 70 years ago. Listen to this description of Moriarity-Mabuse: "He is the Napoleon of crime . . . He is the organizer of half that is evil and of nearly all that is undetected in this great city. He is a genius, a philosopher, an abstract thinker. He has a brain of the first order. He sits motionless, like a spider in the center of its web, but that web has a thousand radiations, and he knows well every quiver of each of them. He does little himself. He only plans. But his agents are numerous and splendidly organized. Is there a crime to be done, a paper to be abstracted, a house to be rifled, a man to be removed—the word is passed to the professor, the matter is organized and carried out. The agent may be caught. In that case, money is found for his bail or his defence. But the central power which uses the agent is never caught—never so much as suspected."

* * *

Author of 'The Leopard'

Those who think of the late and solitary Palermo prince, Tommasi di Lampedusa, whose novel, "The Leopard" (subsequently filmed) attained posthumous world fame, as a dour fellow, will be surprised to learn that he was capable of the most romantic flights of the imagination. What makes his short story (among a group discovered among his effects)—"Ligheia"—a minor masterpiece is the sweetness with which a simple but affecting story is told. A young journalist makes an acquaintance in a cafe in Turin with an aged, gruff peppery Italian Senator who is famous as one of the world's greatest Greek scholars. The old man derides the callow youth for his flighty interest in girls and facile love affairs. He, the Senator, one gathers, has never had anything to do with women. Finally, the Senator tells his story. In his youth, having retired to study on a solitary beach in Sicily, the Senator was seduced by a siren, Ligheia, an authentic daughter of Calliope, who flopped out of the sea into his rowboat while he was out fishing. With Ligheia, the future Senator spent 20 solitary, wonderful days. From her he learned the secret of the Greeks, and all he will know. Then she plunged back and left him . . . A few days later the Senator leaves Turin to go on a cruise with other savants. One morning the journalist reads that the Senator has disappeared at sea, probably fallen overboard when nobody was looking. Only the journalist knows what really happened: Ligheia had beckoned.

* * *

In memoriam—Jean Cocteau, that Harlequin, that Ariel, that eternal spring of the arts. Of a tiger caught in a hunter's trap, he gives the tiger's thoughts: "It is unbelievable, unbelievable! Too terrible, too unjust! Who will hunt for my wife, for my sons? Where are they? If I had only known . . . I would have . . ."

In Cairo, Cocteau and his travelling companion, Marcel Khill, had dinner with "Miss Europe" and invited her to go with them to the Sphinx. It was only when she was faced with it that she realized it wasn't what she had thought it was going to be, a night-club.

Visited at night, the Sphinx can be illuminated for a few piastres by a magnesium flare (it reminded Cocteau of the German Verey lights he experienced in the Yser trenches in Belgium in 1916) "revealing its ironic smile, like that of a spy caught red-handed in the light of a flash-light. The magnesium flare dies out but we know the Sphinx is still there, thinking. 'Well, yes, I am spying . . . what about it? What does that tell you about me? For what power am I spying? For whom? For what purpose? Which of the two of us does this discovery embarrass most? Take my advice, pocket your flash-light, leave me alone and go to bed as if you hadn't seen anything.'"

Fort Worth Spruceup

Fort Worth, Tex.

Refurbished Hollywood Theatre was reopened Christmas Day by the Trans-Texas Theatres. Renovating estimated over $150,000.

There's new marquee and sign, new foam cushioned seats, boxoffice in the lobby, a new tv lounge, new lighting fixtures, carpeting, rest rooms, and lobby vending machines.

Harry Gaines is manager of the house.

Posy to Hollywood

Continued from page 23

kids on Fairfax; the side streets are cozy and well-scrubbed, and the unjustly notorious Hollywood Blvd. is a prettifield toyshop replica of the justly and universally condemned Broadway of today's Manhattan. If you insist on a period piece, visit the hospitable Chateau Marmont; two minutes in its 1922-style lobby and you'll be whistling "Poor Butterfly."

Everyday goings-on in Hollywood are quite innocuous: The villagers do their bookhunting at the Pickwick, or Larry Edmunds', the latter devoted to exhuming the movie industry. A Victorian icecream parlor and an Edwardian beergarden are doing big business, and local Teddy-boys are less girlish than their Greenwich Village or Soho counterparts. The ratpack is no longer news, so no one is sick, sick any longer; health is the thing again, even though a leading healthfood dispenser did murder his, or someone else's, wife recently.

Parties

What about parties? Gatherings related to the cinema world, were usually held in Beverly Hills, devoted to shop talk. At the parties given by the more intellectual televisionaries, Hollywood's new elite, there is less shop talk—and more about abstract painting, Lawrence Durrell and aleatory music being the favored topics.

Some two years ago, while rusticating in the old Knickerbocker lobby, I thought of checking with my telephone service and learned that I was wanted back in the Palisades, as a movie magnate was momentarily, although unpredictably, expected. I sped home, finding my young and gifted wife (adv.) in earnest conversation with a youngish French playwright, but no magnate. "Oh, Mr. S's wife telephoned" my young and gifted ditto explained. "Her husband was tied up in a conference, but would get here shortly." Two hours later the magnate did arrive; he was elaborately jovial, accepted a drink and began to describe his #1 project—it sounded like an 18th century "Breakfast at Tiffany's" with "Naked Lunch" spicing.

In the middle of an especially juicy sentence, the magnate caused two fingers of his right hand to flutter eloquently: we thought that this was his way of pinpointing the story's approaching denouement. More finger-flutterings, this time rather impatient; the great man's fingers were within inches of the French playwright's nose, although Mr. S. was looking straight at me. The playwright, who functioned as assistant producer in films for a spell, had a sudden brainstorm: hastily producing a cigaret, he thrust it in the magnate's fluttering fingers. Without a word of thanks, the magnate lit up and brought his epic to a triumphant close. The Hollywood of yore was upon us once again.

Last of Star Reporters

Continued from page 9

of an early hangover. It was still dark, but his eyes hurt. His patience with the Coast Guard was at ebb before he said "Good morning." The red woolly head held a cargo of shale, which slid from side to side as the boat rocked.

He was back in the office at 3 p.m. Red looked bright and happy. He hung his coat, dumped some rumpled notes on a desk beside a typewriter, rubbed the cold tips of his fingers together, and went to the men's room. Inside, he found himself standing beside Jack Miley. "How did it go?" Jack said, looking at the wall ahead of him. Red grunted.

"It was all right," he said. "All right. We met the Ile de France. Some guy met us at the top of the gangway and I said I didn't care who was aboard, I needed a drink. This guy could parlay a little English, and he got me a couple of drinks. Then he said Gloria Swanson was aboard and some guy named Joseph P. Kennedy, and that was it.

"If I wanted to talk movies, he could set it up in Swanson's cabin. If I wanted to talk foreign loans, I could speak to Kennedy. So I combined the two. I got this guy Kennedy and Gloria Swanson, and we sat in her suite and drank all the way up the bay."

Joe Kennedy's Offer

Miley adjusted himself. "Deuell will get mad if you don't have a story." Red looked in the mirror and brushed his hair back. "I got a story," he said. "But get this: this man Kennedy drinks with me and we end up pals and he offers me a job at $300 a week in Hollywood." Dolan fixed his tie and laughed at his image. "Three hundred writing scripts."

"You know who he is?" Miley said softly. Red shook his head no. "If it's the Kennedy I think it is," Jack said, "he owns a big chunk of United Artists of 20th Century-Fox." Red's face stopped laughing. "You sure?" he said. "This guy gimme a phone number. You sure?"

Miley was sure. His friend left the men's room banking the turn and headed for a phone booth. He called Mr. Kennedy at his office, and found that his new friend had just arrived. They spoke. Yes, Mr. Kennedy said, he was indeed serious about the offer. Was Dolan interested? Dolan said yes.

He left the phone booth and sat, hunched forward and serious, at the typewriter, touching keys without hitting them, thinking against the vision of a cracked green wall across the room. He wrote his story. It wasn't great. It made Page 6, or perhaps 8, with a picture of Miss Swanson on the sundeck waving to the New York skyline.

When Deuell accepted the story, Red whispered in his ear. Whatever he said, no one ever found out. But the city editor looked up sharply, almost grimly, and said: "Okay. It's your decision." Red Dolan, the last of the flambouyant star reporters, had quit.

There are men, great and small, who fit the tempo of the times so well that when the time goes, they must go with it. Dolan was a Prohibition character. He went to Hollywood to live as he thought a great Hollywood writer should live. Red was color-blind, so he started off by buying $40 worth of lavender underwear.

He drew a fine salary, and did little work. Now and then, he stepped out of a small office where no story awaited him, into the hot metallic sunshine and the soft swish of palm trees leaning in theatrical attitudes. Red did not like it. This was loafing for a fee. He was late to all story conferences, but there weren't enough of them. Nobody seemed to care.

Red drank. As his drinking improved, his resistance declined. He became ill, and he went to a sanitarium. He was in the crucible of Hollywood insecurity; the test of nothingness to live in a plush vacuum. Life became a roller coaster of wild laughter and torn sheets and blank scenes and empty bottles. The downs were fast; the ups were slow. No one knew that Red Dolan was a star reporter. No one cared.

He hopped on a train and went to Washington, D.C. There, he saw friendly, compassionate faces. Some had pencils behind their ears. Red sat in a convivial atmosphere and drank with his confreres and his peers; the scribblers who dispense communal absolution to each other, no matter what the crime.

Someone told Red a joke told by Jimmy Cannon. He tipped his red head back for the final time, and laughed. He laughed until he couldn't catch his breath. Then he leaned his head forward, as though to wipe the tears from his eyes, and he was dead. The time and the man died together.

No paper carried a big obituary. Red Dolan wasn't worth it. He rated a paragraph here and there. Some referred to him as "Frank," one as Francis. A woman presented herself in New York and said that she was Red's sister. She came from New England. The men on The News were awed. No one had ever thought of Red as a person, as one who might have a family, a kid who at some time or other had been born somewhere and grew up in the pain and frustration common to all. No. Red Dolan was a star reporter, period. His sister ordered the body to be cremated and the ashes placed in an urn. Red had been godless so there was no requiem mass, no recitation of Kaddisch; no eulogy. Still, some mark or respect was required. So Red's sister was given the use of a neat apartment in New York late one afternoon, got the urn, and phoned her brother's friends to stop by for a drink on Red.

Ten of them showed. They sat around, slick of hair and dark of tie, glancing surreptitiously at the blue urn gracing the mantel. It just didn't seem right to have Red Dolan in an urn. They spoke in whispers and gulped their drinks. One or two said: "Well, here's to better days" and soon the sibillating softness of the whispers began to loosen into normal conversation, and from there it went on to anecdotes about Red and what a helluva guy he was, and they filled his sister with wild and wonderful tales of Red's greatness as a writer, a man, a drinker, a reporter, an investigator, a scriptwriter and a misunderstood genius.

They laughed themselves fatigued talking about his chronic lateness. Now, ironically, he would be referred to as The Late Red Dolan. The sister walked over to the mantel and carefully lifted the blue urn. She turned it so that the neck pointed toward the reporters. They looked in, and saw that it was empty.

"Red hasn't arrived yet," she said. "Isn't that just like him?"

Another Budd Schulberg

Pittsburgh.

Harry Feinstein, zone manager in the Tri-State area here for Stanley-Warner Theatres, has halved the work load of his advertising and district manager, Jules Curley. Feinstein has hired Budd Schulberg (not the writer) to handle the publicity and advertising duties.

Schulberg has had top ad posts with Manhattan Shirt Co. and Gimbel's Department Store. Curley will continue to be district manager with supervision of the Stanley, Warner, Squirrel Hill, Hollywood and Whitehall Theatres.

This is a return to the practice that was discontinued when Henry Burger, now the midwest zone manager, took over both jobs. Curley took on the same load but Feinstein decided last week that it was just too much for one man.

National Screen Service

congratulates

VARIETY

ON ITS 58TH ANNIVERSARY

All-Time Top Grossers

Continued from page 37

101 Dalmations (Disney-BV) (1961)	6,300,000
Nun's Story (WB) (1959)	6,300,000
Picnic (Col) (1956)	6,300,000
Old Yeller (Disney-BV) (1958)	6,250,000
War and Peace (De Laurentiis-Par) (1956)	6,250,000
Vikings (Bryna-UA) (1958)	6,100,000
Welcome Stranger (Par) (1957)	6,100,000
La Dolce Vita (Astor) (1961)	6,000,000
North By Northwest (MGM) (1959)	6,000,000
Raintree County (MGM) (1958)	6,000,000
Hans Christian Andersen (Goldwyn-RKO) (1953)	6,000,000
Hell and Back (U) (1955)	6,000,000
High and Mighty (WB) (1954)	6,000,000
Ivanhoe (MGM) (1952)	6,000,000
Sea Chase (WB) (1955)	6,000,000
Sergeant York (WB) (1941)	6,000,000
7 Year Itch (20th) (1955)	6,000,000
Star Is Born (WB) (1955)	6,000,000
Strategic Air Command (Briskin-Par) (1955)	6,000,000
Tall Men (20th) (1955)	6,000,000
Life With Father (WB) (1947)	6,000,000
Come Blow Horn (Yorkin-Lear-Par) (1963)	6,000,000
Butterfield Eight (Berman-MGM) (1961)	6,000,000
Thrill of All (Hunter-U) (1963)	6,000,000
Bye Bye Birdie (Kohlmar-Sidney-Col) (1963)	6,000,000
Gypsy (Le Roy-WB) (1963)	6,000,000
Blue Skies (Par) (1946)	5,700,000
Rear Window (Hitchcock-Par) (1954)	5,700,000
7 Brides for 7 Brothers (MGM) (1954)	5,600,000
Teahouse of August Moon (MGM) (1957)	5,600,000
Leave Her to Heaven (20th) (1946)	5,550,000
Bon Voyage (Disney-RKO) (1962)	5,500,000
Egg and I (U) (1947)	5,500,000
Ocean's 11 (WB) (1960)	5,500,000
Anatomy of Murder (Preminger-Col) (1959)	5,500,000
Solomon and Sheba (UA) (1960)	5,500,000
Please Don't Eat Daisies (M-G) (1959)	5,500,000
Big Parade (MGM) (1925)	5,500,000
House of Wax (WB) (1953)	5,500,000
Sleeping Beauty (Disney-BV) (1959)	5,300,000
Eddy Duchin Story (Col) (1956)	5,300,000
Blackboard Jungle (MGM) (1955)	5,250,000
Unconquered (DeMille-Par) (1947)	5,250,000
Yearling (MGM) (1947)	5,250,000
Elmer Gantry (Smith-UA) (1960)	5,200,000
Rio Bravo (WB) (1959)	5,200,000
Hole in the Head (Capra-UA) (1959)	5,200,000
Moby Dick (WB) (1956)	5,200,000
Magnificent Obsession (U) (1954)	5,200,000
Meet Me in St. Louis (MGM) (1954)	5,200,000
Mogambo (MGM) (1953)	5,200,000
Show Boat (MGM) (1951)	5,200,000
From the Terrace (20th) (1960)	5,200,000
Gentlemen Prefer Blondes (20th) (1953)	5,100,000
Great Escape (Mirsich-UA) (1963)	5,100,000
The Outlaw (RKO) (1946)	5,075,000
Forever Amber (20th) (1947)	5,050,000
Friendly Persuasion (AA) (1956)	5,050,000
On the Beach (Kramer-UA) (1959)	5,000,000
Journey to Center of Earth (20th) (1960)	5,000,000
Anastasia (20th) (1957)	5,000,000
Island in Sun (20th) (1957)	5,000,000
North to Alaska (20th) (1960)	5,000,000
East of Eden (WB) (1955)	5,000,000
Green Dolphin Street (MGM) (1947)	5,000,000
Jolson Sings Again (Col) (1949)	5,000,000
Moulin Rouge (Romulus-UA) (1953)	5,000,000
Mrs. Miniver (M-G) (1942)	5,000,000
No Biz Like Show Biz (20th) (1955)	5,000,000
Razor's Edge (20th) (1947)	5,000,000
Red Shoes (E-L) (1948)	5,000,000
Song of Bernadette (20th) (1943)	5,000,000
Three Coins in Fountain (20th) (1954)	5,000,000
Vera Cruz (HHL-UA) (1955)	5,000,000
Man Called Peter (20th) (1955)	5,000,000
Farewell to Arms (20th) (1958)	5,000,000
Judgment at Nuremberg (Kramer-UA) (1961)	5,000,000
Flower Drum Song (Hunter-U) (1962)	5,000,000
Interns (Cohn-Col) (1962)	5,000,000
Castaways (Disney-BV) (1963)	5,000,000
The Birds (Hitchcock-U) (1963)	5,000,000
Yum Yum Tree (Brisson-Col) (1963)	5,000,000
55 Days at Peking (Bronston-AA) (1963)	5,000,000
Spellbound (Selznick-UA) (1946)	4,975,000
Since You Went Away (Selznick-UA) (1944)	4,950,000
Pepe (Col) (1961)	4,800,000
King Solomon's Mines (MGM) (1950)	4,800,000
Searchers (WB) (1956)	4,800,000
Notorious (RKO) (1946)	4,800,000
Yankee Doodle Dandy (WB) (1942)	4,800,000
Streetcar Named Desire (WB) (1951)	4,750,000
Salome (Col) (1953)	4,750,000
Bambi (Disney-BV) (1949)	4,700,000
Babes in Toyland (Disney-BV) (1961)	4,700,000
Hercules (WB) (1959)	4,700,000
Battleground (MGM) (1950)	4,700,000
Dragnet (WB) (1954)	4,700,000
Pal Joey (Col) (1957)	4,700,000
Annie Get Your Gun (MGM) (1950)	4,650,000
Green Years (MGM) (1946)	4,600,000
Fanny (WB) (1961)	4,500,000
Return Peyton Place (20th) (1961)	4,500,000
Young Lions (20th) (1958)	4,500,000
Pride and Passion (Kramer-UA) (1957)	4,500,000
Don't Go Near Water (MGM) (1958)	4,500,000
Love Me Tender (20th) (1957)	4,500,000
Conqueror (RKO) (1956)	4,500,000
Rebel Without a Cause (WB) (1956)	4,500,000
Anchors Aweigh (MGM) (1945)	4,500,000
Bachelor and Bobbysoxer (RKO) (1947)	4,500,000
Bridges of Toko-Ri (Par) (1955)	4,500,000
Catch a Thief (Par) (1955)	4,500,000
Easy to Wed (MGM) (1946)	4,500,000
Four Horsemen (MGM) (1921)	4,500,000
Great Caruso (MGM) (1951)	4,500,000
Paleface (Par) (1945)	4,500,000
Random Harvest (MGM) (1942)	4,500,000
Road to Rio (Par) (1948)	4,500,000
Road to Utopia (Par) (1945)	4,500,000
Thrill of a Romance (MGM) (1945)	4,500,000
Till Clouds Roll By (MGM) (1945)	4,500,000
Valley of Decision (MGM) (1945)	4,500,000
Desiree (20th) (1954)	4,500,000
Easter Parade (MGM) (1948)	4,500,000
Lolita (7 Arts-Harris-MGM)	4,500,000
Diamond Head (Bresler-Col) (1963)	4,500,000
Spencer's Mountain (Daves-WB) (1963)	4,500,000
Cheaper by the Dozen (20th) (1950)	4,425,000
Inn of 6th Happiness (20th) (1959)	4,400,000
Written on Wind (U) (1957)	4,400,000
Two Years Before Mast (Par) (1946)	4,400,000
Knights of Round Table (MGM) (1954)	4,400,000
Man With Golden Arm (Preminger-UA) (1956)	4,350,000
Man in Grey Flannel Suit (20th) (1956)	4,350,000
Red River (Hawks-UA) (1948)	4,350,000
Hucksters (MGM) (1947)	4,350,000
Harvey Girls (MGM) (1946)	4,350,000
Stage Door Canteen (UA) (1943)	4,350,000
Summer Magic (Disney-BV) (1963)	4,350,000
One-Eyed Jacks (Par) (1961)	4,300,000
G.I. Blues (Par) (1960)	4,300,000
Some Came Running (MGM) (1959)	4,300,000
Gunfight at O.K. Corral (Par) (1957)	4,300,000
Lost Weekend (Par) (1946)	4,300,000
Sailor Beware (Par) (1952)	4,300,000
Bus Stop (20th) (1956)	4,250,000
Adventure (MGM) (1946)	4,250,000
Egyptian (20th) (1954)	4,250,000
Saratoga Trunk (WB) (1946)	4,250,000
Demetrius and Gladiators (20th) (1954)	4,250,000
Living It Up (Par) (1954)	4,250,000
30 Seconds Over Tokyo (MGM) (1954)	4,250,000
Blue Hawaii (Par) (1961)	4,200,000
Parrish (WB) (1961)	4,200,000
Heaven Knows, Mr. Allison (20th) (1957)	4,200,000
Rose Tattoo (Par) (1954)	4,200,000
Hollywood Canteen (WB) (1944)	4,200,000
Three Musketeers (MGM) (1948)	4,200,000
Weekend at Waldorf (MGM) (1945)	4,200,000
On the Waterfront (Spiegel-Col) (1954)	4,200,000
Can-Can (20th) (1960)	4,200,000
Father of the Bride (MGM) (1950)	4,150,000
Born Yesterday (Col) (1951)	4,115,000
Misfits (Taylor-UA) (1961)	4,100,000
Bad Seed (WB) (1956)	4,100,000
Man Who Knew Too Much (Par) (1956)	4,100,000
African Queen (Romulus-UA) (1952)	4,100,000
Hondo (Batjac-UA) (1954)	4,100,000
Joan of Arc (RKO) (1949)	4,100,000
Johnny Belinda (WB) (1948)	4,100,000
Sergeants 3 (Essex-UA) (1962)	4,100,000
I Was a Male War Bride (20th) (1949)	4,100,000
Love Me or Leave Me (MGM) 1955)	4,100,000
Margie (20th) (1946)	4,100,000
Mother Wore Tights (20th) (1947)	4,100,000
Snake Pit (20th) (1949)	4,100,000
Deep in My Heart (MGM) (1955)	4,100,000
Cass Timberlane (MGM) (1948)	4,050,000
State Fair (20th) (1945)	4,050,000
Never On Sunday (Lopert) (1960)	4,000,000
Horse Soldiers (Mirisch-UA) (1959)	4,000,000
Big Country (Wyler-UA) (1958)	4,000,000
American in Paris (MGM) (1951)	4,000,000
Ben-Hur (MGM) (1926)	4,000,000
Dolly Sisters (20th) (1945)	4,000,000
Emperor Waltz (Par) (1948)	4,000,000
Holiday in Mexico (MGM) (1946)	4,000,000
Jumping Jacks (Par) (1952)	4,000,000
Kid from Brooklyn (Goldwyn-RKO) (1946)	4,000,000
Left Hand of God (20th) (1955)	4,000,000
Love Is Splendored Thing (20th) (1955)	4,000,000
Moon Is Blue (Preminger-UA) (1953)	4,000,000
Night and Day (WB) (1946)	4,000,000
Reap the Wild Wind (Par) (1942)	4,000,000
Sabrina (Par) (1954)	4,000,000
Sands of Iwo Jima (Rep) (1950)	4,000,000
Seven Little Foys (Par) (1955)	4,000,000
Singing Fool (WB) (1928)	4,000,000
Smokey (20th) (1946)	4,000,000
Ziegfeld Follies (M-G) (1946)	4,000,000
Mr. Hobbs Vacation (20th) (1962)	4,000,000
Baby Jane (Aldrich-WB) (1962)	4,000,000
Hud (Ritt-Ravetch-Par) (1963)	4,000,000
Days of Wine Roses (Manulis-WB) (1963)	4,000,000

Denotes rentals guaranteed to date. Film has opened in only 55 domestic situations. It is impossible to project likely gross for full market playoff.*

Turks Make 200 Films Annually

By EROL KENT

Istanbul.

Turkish film industry continues tremendously active, but technical facilities and standards of production remain poor. Over 200 local features were made within the past year, catering strictly to the natives. It's a profitable business locally, especially if the service of one of about a dozen popular Turk players can be obtained. More pretentious efforts such as "Stranger in Town," shown at the 1963 Moscow Film Festival and reviewed in VARIETY at the time, do not as yet hold much playoff potential for the foreign film market.

Last year, however, rated as a landmark in Turkish film-making, since Turks were used in crews for at least three major foreign production companies filming in Istanbul. The three productions in question were: Elia Kazan's "America, America," Harry Saltzman's "From Russia With Love" and Jules Dassin's "Topkapi" (formerly titled "Light of Day"), the latter starring Melina Mercouri, Peter Ustinov, Maximillian Schell, Robert Morley and Akim Tamiroff. In addition to these three major projects, there were several Italian, Spanish and Greek pictures partly shot in this country.

The Year of 'Cleopatra'

Continued from page 37

establish itself as a hit. This success had timely impact on the entire 20th-Fox economic scheme of things; the company needed a hypo and Zanuck, who was to replace Spyros P. Skouras as president, personally provided it. "Longest Day" is herein clocked at $12,750,000 and looks to reach $15,250,000 as the first domestic market palyoff is concluded.

"Lawrence of Arabia," the Academy Award winner produced by Sam Spiegel and David Lean for Columbia, is another in Klondikesville. In fact, says Col execs, it's the biggest money-maker in Col history and that's nice saying.

Top b.o. comedy of the year was "Irma la Douce," from Billy Wilder-Mirisch Co.-UA., with an estimated $11,000,000 in prospect.

(To repeat, all figures in this story and the charts going with it are rentals which the distributors collect, or figure to collect, from exhibitors only in the United States and Canada.)

Walt Disney struck it rich with 1963 releases, all clearly "family entertainment." Showman in recent years attained an enviable record of b.o. mileage out of relatively unexpensive productions. His big one of the year is "Son of Flubber," with a potential of $7,400,000, was another in the wacky comedy vein which appealed to young and old alike in sufficient numbers to make for a smash.

Paramount reaped tall stakes with "Hud," and also came up with one of the biggest surprise packages of the year in "Duel of the Titans." Latter, Italian-made, was bought by Par for like penny-ante stakes, already has raked in $1,250,000 and promises to clear the $1,450,000 mark upon full playoff.

Also at Par, Jerry Lewis continued to have friends among the people, if not the critics. His "Nutty Professor" is an estimated $3,500,000 grosser.

Bob Hope was not overwhelming, his "Call Me Bwana" being tallied at $2,200,000, while John Wayne still was coming in strong with "McLintock" at $7,250,000.

Warners' "Spencer's Mountain," via Delmer Daves, made it fine even though a good part of the market did not respond. This one was slow in the east but went over potently in other areas.

"PT 109," produced by Bryon Foy for Warners under Jack L. Warner's personal supervision, had $2,700,000 "in the house" when it was withdrawn from circulation upon the assassination of its protagonist, John F. Kenedy. Film deals with his experiences as a naval officer in the Pacific during World War II. When it is returned to market, "PT 109" ought to climb to a total of $3,500,000, although this really is a toughie to predict.

The late Jerry Wald was represented this year by "The Stripper," his finale for 20th. As noted by some observers Wald will be remembered for other efforts, not "Stripper," which is estimated at a low $1,500,000.

Joe Pasternak's "Jumbo" was a disappointment at MGM with a total gross figured at $2,750,000. Same company had one of the top sleepers of the year, if not the top one, in "Flipper." This Ivan Tors production, concerning a boy and a pet dolphin, was brought in at about $550,000 and is likely to rake in $2,500,000 domestically.

VARIETY's parade of all-time top grossers (separately charted) continues David O. Selznick's "Gone With the Wind" (via MGM) with the crown at $41,200,000. The only possible future threat from among the 1963 releases is "Cleo." In this connection, much remains to be demonstrated.

Quebec's Cold War

Continued from page 37

part of French-Canadians who really feel they've been getting a raw deal, and snubbed on top of it.

Just how touchy is the situation, again in the case of Place des Arts, was reflected also months before the opening in the protest against Edman—he's still there— and the heated objection that no French opera was included in the opening programming.

In the nitery field, the most obvious development is the increase in the use of French comics, singers, etc.

Helps Tourism?

Beaucoup of the talent is from France, but plenty is also from Montreal and outlying areas of the province.

As it turns out, this isn't such a bad deal for two reasons: It has opened a new market for nitery turns from France, and it has given the city a more authentic French atmosphere in the nitery field—something which tourists prefer.

After all, Henny Youngman or the Maguire Sisters they can get in Detroit or Philly; what they look for in Montreal—the "gay Paree of North America"—is a French atmosphere.

Nevertheless, the change is still significant, when you consider that it wasn't long ago when a show with the standard comic-singer-dancer bill played at the old El Morocco, a good section of the audience was of French-Canadian extraction.

The CBC, government-owned radio-and-TV net, is very conscious of what's happening, to the point that even its English channel in Montreal, occasionally let's go with a program of French overtones, as if to prove that (a) they see the writing on the wall, or (b) that the Anglo-Saxons may be blind sometime, but they're not that dumb

'Tune Detective' Recalls Einstein

Continued from page 4

surprisingly intelligible English, unembarrassed by his German accent. Never before had I encountered a man of such simplicity and directness, so absolutely without pretense or affectation or self-consciousness of any kind. He was honestly interested in the quiet life of Princeton and its people.

The shock of unruly gray hair, the heavy mustache and the peculiarly soft yet penetrating eyes have often been described and are familiar also through many pictures of the great scientist. His rather short, compact figure was always completely relaxed, and nothing seemed to ruffle the complete serenity of his expression.

Obviously Dr. Einstein was more interested in discussing music than mathematics. He had a thorough knowledge of the classics, particularly Bach, but referred deprecatingly, even disparagingly, to his own efforts as an amateur performer. "I often have to count in the billions," he said, rather plaintively," but still find it difficult to count four!"

My own special thrill came late in the evening, when I was asked to do a little entertaining at the piano. Einstein was sitting in a large armchair when I started my stock music parodies, singing the words of the nursery rhyme, "Jack and Jill," in the style of oratorio, grand opera, a Schubert lied, a Debussy chanson and eventually jazz and hillbilly.

No sooner had I started than the guest of honor pulled his chair right up beside the piano, listening intently, watching every note at the keyboard as though to memorize it, and laughing uproariously, like a naively pleased child. He was particularly hilarious over my Wagnerian version, in which the adventures of Jack and Jill were given an exaggeratedly alliterative treatment, beginning "Hans und Hila, hehr und heifer, den Hugel hinan! Wollten Wasser zum waschen, wogende Wellen!" (A translation is hardly necessary.) I do not remember ever having a better audience. We were friends from that moment on.

Another meeting took place a few days later, when a documentary film was being shown at the Nassau Club and Einstein cordially invited me to sit beside him and practice my German. Naturally we discussed music again. (I forgot what the motion picture was about.) The name of Schoenberg came up and Einstein permitted himself a wry little joke: Mehr Berg als schon!" ("More mountain than beautiful!")

We met again in New York at luncheon given in honor of the pianist-composer, Leopold Godowsky. Einstein was one of the distinguished guests, naturally at the head table. As they filed up to the dais he was recognized by the rest of the audience and greeted with spontaneous applause. Apparently thinking that this enthusiasm was intended for Godowsky, Einstein joined in heartily, quite unaware of his own importance.

Weidman, Bing & Bach

Jerome Weidman has told the story of Einstein's leading him to an honest enjoyment of Bach's music by way of a popular Bing Crosby record, for the purpose, as the scientist put it, of "Opening up yet another fragment of the frontier of beauty." There are many other anecdotes that reveal his tolerant attitude toward the arts, and particularly music, the deeply religious feeling that supported and complemented his scientific investigations, the unaffected simplicity and integrity that ruled his life as the outstanding celebrity of Princeton's Institute for Advanced Study.

Perhaps the most revealing of them all was the brief conversation quoted on one of Edward R. Murrow's "Person to Person" television programs. The photographer, Yousuf Karsh, told of a reporter who said to Einstein: "Now we have the hydrogen bomb. Supposing we decide to use it on each other, what then?" To which Einstein replied, "Alas, we would no longer be able to listen to the music of Mozart."

My own final recollection is of what was in effect a miracle, almost too personal to be put into words. My sister Carola was by far the most talented member of our large family, both a pianist and a painter of professional standing. But her life had not been happy. After studying with Leschetizky abroad, she married an eccentric Viennese "music-lover" and halted her potential career to raise a family of three children. After the husband's death she suffered a series of frustrations and disappointments which eventually broke down her physical and mental health and created a complete loss of confidence in her artistic ability. When Einstein came to Princeton, she was living with her oldest brother, Dr. J. Duncan Spaeth, famous as a teacher of English and coach of the university crews. She had for several years refused to touch a piano or make any effort to paint or draw, resigning herself to the drudgery of housework and obviously abandoning all thought of any better life.

Her salvation came through a chance remark of Dr. Einstein's to the effect that he was looking for someone who could accompany his informal violin-playing. "I do not want a fine pianist," he said. "I want a musician who can read anything at sight and make up for my mistakes."

My immediate thought was of my sister Carola, but there was a delicate psychological problem to be solved. The first step was to bring them together without her knowing what we had in mind. In this plan my brother cooperated handsomely by inviting Dr. Einstein to dinner, with the promise of some real Viennese cooking, at which my sister was an expert.

The dinner was a great success, and the genial scientist, warmed by the schnitzel and other nostalgic delicacies, gradually drew my sister into a discussion of his favorite subjects of music and art. When she was about to withdraw to the kitchen, from force of habit, he insisted that she stay and continue the conversation. The effect was magical. For the first time in years she became really articulate. The evening ended with a promise that she would soon come to his home and accompany him in some violin sonatas he had found in the university library.

A New Life Reborn

That was the start of a new life for a deeply troubled soul. Before long Carola was not only playing the piano regularly but taking up her pencil and brush again. One of her favorite subjects was Einstein himself, and a number of her drawings of that placid, intelligent face may still be seen at the Einstein house and elsewhere in Princeton. (The best of them was published as a full-page illustration in Fortune magazine.)

My sister continued to draw and paint professionally to the end of her life, besides playing the piano as an avocation. In time she acquired her own apartment in Princeton, traveling from there to all parts of the east to carry out commissions. Her work was exhibited in the leading galleries, and her portraits and landscapes hang in many an American home today.

To me the saving of this one artistic soul was as significant in its way as some of the most important scientific discoveries of the immortal scholar. Einstein may be remembered in world history chiefly for his contribution to the atomic age, for better or worse. I prefer to think of him as a practically unique human being, who succeeded in accomplishing, by sheer simplicity and sincerity, what had baffled our professional psychiatrists.

(Editorial Note: The author of these reminiscences, famous as the "Tune Detective" of radio, television and the screen, and now in his 24th year as a member of the Metropolitan Opera Quiz panel, has written 32 books, of which the most recent are "The Importance of Music" and "50 Years with Music." The University of Michigan Press has just reissued in paperback his first work, a doctoral dissertation on "Milton's Knowledge of Music," written over 50 years ago and still the definitive book on the subject. Dr. Spaeth's "History of Popular Music in America" (Random House) is a similarly definitive volume, now listed in the official White House library.)

Lively Guys & Gals

Continued from page 7

poses a shapely thigh as Principal Boy in panto and it would be a risky bet to say that she won't do it again. At 79, Jean Cadell pops up frequently in films and 78-year-old Allan Jeayes and 72-year-old Harold Scott are both, as of this writing, playing one routine-roles in "The Masters" at the Piccadilly.

Skipping At 75

As for 75-year-old "youngsters," they abound. Hugh Wakefield, Dame Edith Evans, who opened in the West End at the Queen's Theatre in November with "Gentle Jack," Miles Malleson, Athene Seyler, busy in both legit and pix, C. Denier Warren and Gladys Cooper are still very much on active service. Zena Dare (76) has proved herself a remarkable woman. She has been on the stage since 1899 and is winding up her career —or so she insists—by touring with "My Fair Lady," after having played Mrs. Higgins throughout the Drury Lane run. She missed only a handful of the 2,281 performances, and that because of vacations.

Durables

Clarkson Rose (74) also typifies the pep of these old troupers. As well as playing Dame in pantomime regularly for years he has run his famous "Twinkle" summer seaside show since 1921. In 1963 he decided to rest "Twinkle" because, as a change of pace, he wanted to do some straight thesping as guest artiste in stock!

Marie Lohr, Fay Compton, Henry Oscar, Ernest Milton, Randolph Sutton and Billy Russell vaude comics Billy Danvers, Nora Nicholson, Marie Burke, Douglas Byng and Una Venning are other prominent 70-year-olds still in harness.

Comedienne Margaret Rutherford is another character so full of vim that vitamins take her. At 71, she is having a click success with her film portrayals of Miss Marple, is in constant demand for films and plays and, in her spare time gives poetry readings.

Hulbert-Courtneidge

Jack Hulbert, who is 71, and his wife Cicely Courtneidge, a year younger, toured and then opened in the West End in a comedy this season. Though the critics massacred the play even the most acid had however grudgingly to admit Hulbert and Miss Courtneidge still have an effervescent, energetic enthusiasm and theatrical authority which lifts the spirits.

Robertson Hare, despite undergoing surgery a year or so ago, is, at 72, still more than holding his own surrounded by young comics, in the rumbustious goings-on in "A Funny Thing Happened On the Way to the Eorum." Stanley Holloway, a brisk, on-the-ball 73, isn't doing too badly in Hollywood either.

After these names it seems hardly worth mentioning the many striplings of ages between 60 and 70 who, at a time when most people are thinking of putting their feet up in retirement, are still doing their stuff. They range from Basil Sydney (69) and Jerry Verno (68) via Cecil Parker, Olga Lindo, Naurkon Wayne, Marie Ney, Martita Hunt, the youthful looking, glamorous Evelyn Laye (63) and Vic Oliver (65). But special mention must be made of 64-year-old Billy Cotton, the bandleader. The energy he puts into the Billy Cotton tv and radio bandshows has to be seen to be believed and is calculated to make many 20-year-olds wilt with exhaustion. In fact it's been equalled only by the Crazy Gang, who would have rated honorable mention in this piece. But, apart from Bud Flanagan, and "Monsewer" Eddie Gray, the others are still sticking rigidly to their decision to retire.

What makes these veteran troupers tick after a lifetime in the business? They take things steady when they are not working, which is rarely. Dedicated to their jobs, enjoying every minute and usually "thinking young," they cultivate an enviable zest that communicates to the audience.

Where's The Audience Gone?

Continued from page 5

one being, as the song put it, "Oh, Dear! What Can the Matter Be?"

With Production: Could it be that we've passed from the era of Size to the Era of Sex and Shock? Are moviemakers mistaking sexual suggestivity for artistic excitement? Could it be that the heights of drama aren't to be found in a hospital's mental wards? Are audiences, often burned, now overwary and easily won over to other forms of entertainment (recall how theatre business dipped in areas that had not yet had television)?

Could it be that the link between producer and audience is partly at fault? The link I'm thinking of is advertising. And it's the audience rather than the link that's missing. Are the ads telling enough of just what the film's about? Are the ads perhaps insulting and alienating those they wish to attract? Could it be that the wild sex-and-violence ads are far more appealing to the moviemakers than to the potential movie viewers? (Can you imagine how certain admen might handle certain films: "See David! See Lisa! . . . What was the other side of this love-starved girl? . . . What went on in that darkened school of wild and turbulent teenagers? That first touch did it!"; or perhaps: "Lock up your wives, boys! . . . Where will that lusty Tom Jones strike next? . . . That Loss of Innocence gal has got our Luther man!," etc.

Maybe some are a bit tired of the suggestive and shocking (actually silly) snatches of dialog in the ads that promise all sort of gross things. You know the type: "What are you doing to my sister?" or "Admit it Edna, this is one thing you never planned on!" or "But you said you were white!" etc.

Those Ads?

Could it be that too many ads are reduced to too simple a formula: 1) hero tussling vertically with villian; 2) hero tussling horizontally with heroine; 3) thousands of soldiers, charioteers or chorus girls coming up over the horizon; and 4) millions of little people swarming over the big letters that form the title (" it's big! big!! big!!!")

Could it be that we're just sick of being shocked? That fewer and fewer families are willing to pay for a sitter, a dinner, a parking place, a ticket and refreshments just to watch some karate or incest? There are too many other lovely ways to spend an evening.

With Exhibition: Could it be that the theatre managers who are a bit lax in keeping their theatres clean, up-to-date, well policed and well-run have helped give all theatre managers a black eye just as a few moviemakers can hurt Hollywood as a whole?

Could it be that parents are tired of sending their children to a kiddie show and finding them exposed to raw sexy trailers of next week's regular show? And who are the dirty little men who know just what shocking or suggestive scenes to choose in making up previews that are more repulsive than the complete film shown in its proper context?

Audience Values (?)

Could it be that composing a double-bill of an adult film and a family film isn't what many would consider family entertainment?

Could it be that few of the pictures are really worth the current prices—either for the ticket or for the Pepsi and popcorn at the concession stand?

Could it be that the theatremen are so busy fighting classification (calling it Censorship) that they fail to see that many of the people in the forefront seeking information about the audience suitability of films are some of their best customers? And could it be that some classification tags are written up as a deliberate appeal to teenagers?

Could it be that some of the "clean" entertainment that people fail to "support" (as if filmgoing was a duty) just isn't "good" entertainment but merely innocuous mediocrity?

With the Industry as a Whole: Could it be that the 12-year-old mentality of several years ago may have changed a bit and for the better? Or that some of the audience might be almost as smart as some of the picturemakers?

Could some of the matter be that people are tired of having their noses rubbed in the dregs of life and having some moviemakers wise them up to what life's all about—especially when they knew all this stuff and more long ago?

Could it be that perhaps there's a happy medium somewhere in between the extremes of sugar and slime?

Could it be that the time has come when moviemakers should tone down their howls that they're deprived of freedom and get back to making movies? Freedom, when you think of it, is a climate within which great art or junk alike can be turned out. One wonders why, with the decline of censorship, the improvement of quality isn't proportional. Could it be that "lack of freedom" is merely a loudly-shouted excuse? . . . that what's needed isn't more freedom but more talent?

What can the matter be? Where is the audience?

I don't know, but I do hope you'll find the answer.

Talent Dearth

Continued from page 4

selves with a few acts and do so. However, as so very few topliners wish to do this, the question very rarely arises, especially when they can live in the comfort of their own home and do one television show and pick up more money than in six days at one of our provincial theatres.

What therefore is our answer to having vaudeville theatres without vaudeville, and this has been our biggest headache. None the less there are means of keeping these houses going profitably without vaudeville, for which they were primarily designed.

The first task was to get the public to accept them as theatres or places of entertainment rather than variety houses, and once we had done this it was a question of finding suitable attractions as diversified as playing within a matter of weeks, opera, ballet, revue, musical comedy, legit, jazz concerts—in fact every facet of show business. It is interesting to note that when one can get great attractions such as the Bolshoi Ballet, the Red Army, and many other once-nightly shows of this description the public will pay as much as three times the normal admission to see these extraodrinary performers.

Unfortunately, there is a world shortage of top class shows. In my travels, in one montth, I did 21,000 miles, and all my opposite numbers in every territory I visit come up with the same question, "What have you found, what can you recommend?" when in fact the purpose of my visit was to ask them the same question.

We are going in for more and more big spectacular shows all the time. This is fine in theory, but unless you have stars in these type of shows no matter how spectacular they are you still do no business. People will not come in to see a first class show with great entertainers who have no name value, and therein lies the problem.

In spite of the somewhat pessimistic comments I have made so far my company has taken the view, a viewpoint with which I personally agree, that we should spend money in modernizing our theatres and offering our patrons every possible comfort on their visits, and that our future lies in the presentation of attractions of such a calibre that they could stay for many months in each major city.

In other words, although there are not sufficent attractions for short term visits we do have the possibility of getting attractions that can stay a very long time.

Finally, we keep on plugging our slogan, "There is nothing like the magic of a visit to the live theatre."

Warner Bros. purchased "The Battle of the Villa Fiorita" by Rumer Godden, and assigned it for production to Delmar Dayes.

A Memory of J.J.

By BOB RUSSELL

You were a kid of 17. A promising baritone. You auditioned for a Shubert show and struck it big—a four-line bit.

The show was moving to another house and a rehearsal was called on a Sunday. You had a date. So your date sat out front and when the stage manager told you about the no visitors rule you pleaded—in vain. So you walked out with your girl and went to the hockey game at the Garden.

Next night you reported before half hour and the stage manager says, "You can't go on. See J.J. tomorrow morning."

The inner sanctum. The throne room. The holy of holies. J.J.'s private office. To you, like standing before God. He looks up from beneath lowered eyebrows (a trademark with J.J.). "A date, eh. How old are you? Hmmmmm, seventeen. Well, the director of the entire production says it's you or him. If you were me, which would you choose?" "Mr. Shubert," you say, "I'd choose the director."

"That," says J.J., "is exactly what I've done."

You're almost out the door when he calls, "Wait! Come here. I think you've learned a valuable lesson. See me in a couple of weeks. I may have something for you in a new show."

He did. Four of them.

J.J. Shubert and the theatre was one of the world's greatest love affairs. You never knew when he'd show up out front or backstage, at rehearsals, in town or out. He followed the "Passing Show" all over the map just to stand in the wings and watch Willie Howard in his sketches. J.J. would laugh 'til the tears streamed down his cheeks. It was the greatest tonic in the world for what was so often a lonely man. When Howard came off and passed J.J. on his way to his dressingroom Shubert would quickly hide his handkerchief, wet with tears of laughter, then characteristically tilt his head downward while his lower lip jutted upward and he'd hiss to the great little comedian, "You bum, you; you couldn't draw flies in July." And he'd stomp away in a sulk. Next town would find him again in the wings helpless with laughter at Willie's unforgettable sketches. Of all his stars none broke up J.J. like Willie Howard.

There were other incidents, of course. Sometimes the thought came to you that this fabulously rich tycoon with a genius for production and business would have willingly given millions just to have had the creative gift—this from a man who could buy the greatest creative talents in all show business.

J.J. knew every piece of scenery, costumes and props in the Shubert warehouses. If some flat or drop came apart (even if it had appeared in 30 of his shows) J.J. would scream, "Fix it! Sew it up!" Never, "Throw it out." He loved every old relic as if he himself had put it together.

The stories about J.J. are legend, many based on fact. This one probably is not:

One August day J.J. wandered into the Winter Garden during an "Artists and Models" rehearsal. Twelve girls were standing on a ledge while a tenor sang to them from below. J.J. asked the director what the 12 girls were doing up there.

"It's a religioso scene," said the director. "They represent the 12 Apostles."

"Twelve Apostles!" exploded J.J. "This is a Shubert show—make it 24!"

And this anecdote very likely is true.

J.J. had a penchant for watching from the wings. One night a stagehand crashed heavily into him while making a fast change of scene. The grip cussed him out properly and the banged-up owner of the theatre and the show yelled back, "I'm J.J. Shubert! I own this show!"

"I don't give a damn who you are," retorted the stagehand, "Stay the hell out of my way when I'm working!" And away he went.

A Shubert aide rushed up to the boss and said, "Shall we get rid of him?"

"Of course not," growled J.J., "The man happens to be right."

The Shuberts were reputed to be the toughest businessmen. Their business deals will undoubtedly be chronicled in full some day. Their benefactions never will be. I think that's the way a tycoon of show business, who understood what a 17-year-old kid, who chose his girl before his job, would have wanted it.

Right of Privacy

Continued from page 24

ture in full page advertisements of the magazine, in two other magazines.

She recovered a substantial judgment on the trial. On appeal the higher court set the judgment aside and held that a person's photograph originally published in a periodical as a newsworthy subject may be republished subsequently without the person's written consent in another medium, as an advertisement for the periodical itself. The court emphasized that, as a public figure, she had the right of privacy, but held that this did not protect her from a true and fair representation in what the court called incidental advertising of the news medium.

Case of Gautier's Dogs

Not so long ago, Gautier, who had been presenting his well-known trained animal act for years throughout this country and abroad, brought suit under the Civil Rights Law against a television company, which had televised his act between the halves of a football game without his consent.

His contract provided that his performance at the football game was not to be shown on television. His act was however televised with the usual commercials inserted before and after his act. He recovered a judgment on the trial, but this too was set aside by the higher courts.

Among the reasons given for not allowing the judgment to stand, the higher court ruled that the use of a person's name or picture in a newspaper, magazine, or newsreel in connection with an item that is newsworthy is not a use for purposes of trade within the meaning of the Civil Rights Law.

That case has been usually cited and relied upon by the courts in many recent cases, where a person sued for the use of his name or picture in connection with an advertisement.

What apparently has up to the present time been entirely overlooked by all concerned is that when the Appellate Division held that Gautier could not recover in his action, which was brought for a violation of the Civil Rights Law, the judge who wrote the decision said: "We pass only on the question argued and briefed on this appeal. We do not here pass upon the question as to whether, upon a proper record, plaintiff could recover on quasi contract or on any other legal theory.

'Quasi Contract'

This is a clear intimation that a performer may recover damages if he sues on quasi contract, which means not an actual contract but a contract which the law implies, to pay him the reasonable value of the use of his name or picture.

The importance of this to persons in the theatrical profession who are recognized as stars or whose name has value, is obvious. If he or she can recover the reasonable value of the use of his or her name or picture in connection with an advertisement, they can recover substantial amounts in line with what they would charge if they entered into a contract for the use of their name or picture. Examples of this are numerous: baseball and football stars and theatrical performers whose names are well known on the stage or television and who are shown in commericals for shaving creams, razor blades, etc.

As a practical matter, there are many situations in which a performer might recover a very substantial amount by bringing an action on "quasi contract or on any other legal theory," as suggested by the court in the Gautier case.

Some Revisions

Robert Aldrich production of "What Ever Happened to Baby Jane?" via Warners, last year was overquoted at $5,000,000. It should have been $4,000,000.

Last year overlooked were "Commancheros" (20th), at $3,500,000, and "Errand Boy" (Par), at $3,000,000. "Chapman Report" (WB) must be cut from last year's quotation of $4,000,000 to a more realistic $2,500,000.

Is Greece 'Ridiculously Active' Producer?

By RENA VELISSARIOU

Athens.

Greece is one country where motion picture production increase from year to year. In 1963 there were 130 features made here. People in and around the trade are inclined to consider this production activity "ridiculous" for such a small kingdom with so limited capital and playoff. Especially because there is not any substantial qualitly of improvement of the films produced.

Most Greek producers are minor operators who as soon as they get a story idea in their mind, look for an investor. It's sign a director and a few actors and off they go!

Often there isn't even a screenplay to shoot from. Footage is improvised. Of course all these attempts are low budgeted projects meant only for local consumption.

There are some serious producers, however, who are working efficiently trying to improve the quality of their product. These are the Finos Film, the AnZervos Film, the Georges Lazarides and Roussopoulos Bros. Company and a few others.

To the above list, add the Damaskinos and Michaelides Organization which re-started production activity last year with the following three pictures:

(1.) "Heartbeat At a School Desk" starring Aliki Vouyouklaki and Dimitri Papamihael. It is written and directed by Alecos Sakellarios and made in two versions: Greek and Turck.

(2.) "The Red Lamps" based on a Greek play by Alexis Galanos, with Jenny Karezi, Georges Foundas, Dimitri Papamihael, etc. It is directed by B. Georgiades and the musical background is written by Manos Hatzidakis ("Never on Sunday").

(3). "A Sunday Girl" written and directed by Nestor Matsas with Xenia Kalogeropoulou, Despo Diamantidou, Mary Chronopoulou and N. Peryalis.

The pictures with the Finos Film label tend to click at the boxoffice though year just ended there have not. Finos is now launching Zoe Laskari as its star of tomorrow. Features produced by Finos during 1963 were "A Girl For Two," written and directed by John Dalianides, with Alecos Alexandrakis, Martha Karayanni and Zoe Laskari; "Something Burning" in color and Scope written and directed by John Dalianides with Dinos Heliopoulos, Rena Vlahopoulou, Costas Voutsas, Martha Karayanni and "Amock" directed by Dinos Dimopoulos, with Floretta Zanna, Anna Veneti, Lefteris Vournas and Zoras Tsapelis.

Total of Five

AnZervos Studio had a total of five pictures produced in 1963. To itemize:

(1). "The Little Venuses" directed by Nicos Koundouros who won a prive in the Berlin and Salonica Festivals for this picture.

(2.) "The Prodigal" directed by Maria Plyta. It is based on a classic operetta by Hatziapostolou "The Heart of a Father." The cast includes Nicos Mosohonas, Xenia Kalogeropoulou and Dimos Starenios.

(3.) "The Big Secret" directed by D. Sclavos with Christina Sylva and Pantelis Zervos.

(4.) "A Bum With a Heart" directed by John Daefas with Basile Diamantopoulos, and Georges Pantzas.

(5.) "Wrecks of Life" directed by Larry Frisch with Xenia Kalogeropoulou and Dimos Starenios.

Georges Lazarides and Roussopoulos Bros. Company have also produced three pictures last year, to wit, "Tuesday and 13," written by Georges Roussos and directed by Orestis Lascos with a cast which includes N. Stavrides, and Beata Assimacopoulou. "Small and Big in Action" directed by Orestis Lascos with Mary Aroni, Lambros Constantaras and B. Avlonitis. Finally, "Thirst for Life" directed by Socrates Kapsaskis with Anna Fonsou in the leading role.

Greek American producer James Parish made a film here titled "Brother Anna" avec Peter Fissoun, Xenia Kalogeropoulou and Byron Pallis, which won a prize in the Salonica Festival.

Most of the other pictures produced are made by minor producers and individuals and very few of them are exported abroad.

Shot In Greece

Greeks are renting facilities meantime to foreign producers. But while it once appeaed that Athens would become another lively motion picture centre like Rome, Madrid and Munich, such expections were not fulfilled as anticipated. It was pretty intoxicating when "Guns of Navarone" and "Three Hundred Spartans" were shooting on location here. Nothing comparable has followed.

Walt Disney's production "The Moonspinners" starring Hayley Mills was shot on location in Saint Nicholas of the Crete Island, last summer. The production unit with a crew of 100 spent more than three months in this island. The Greek Film Union of Technicians protested to the Ministry of Industry because Disney has brought all his crew from the States. Thousands of Greek villagers had been lined up, however, to work as extras in this production. Also Greek choreographer Vicki Tounta created folk dances in the picture danced by a 16 member ballet.

Another film to be lensed here is the "Flesh and Flower" a co-production of Marion Gering and the Studio Alfa slated to start rolling next February in Greece and Turkey.

The Studio Alfa has in its schedule another co-production also for this year. It is titled "The Naked Brigade" and will be co-produced with Albert Cohen. The story is written by Sanford Walf and it is about the women groups of the underground movement during the German occupation in Greece.

John Contes has completed location scouting in the Aegean islands and Peloponese and will start shooting his next film "Hysteria" in color and scope next month. (February). John Contes is a Greek American director who made last year the picture "The Hands."

Many other films are scheduled to be lensed here next spring and summer but nothing is yet as definite.

Top Rental Features of 1963

Continued from page 37

Taras Bulba	(7 Arts-UA) (Dec., '62)	3,000,000	3,400,000
Donovan's Reef	(Ford-Par) (July)	2,900,000	3,300,000
Wheeler Dealers	(Ransohoff-MGM) (Oct.)	1,000,000	3,200,000
Fun in Acapulco	(Wallis-Par) (Nov.)	7,500,000	3,100,000
Savage Sam	(Disney-BV) (June)	2,600,000	3,000,000
Barabbas	(De Laurentiis-Col) (Oct., '62)	2,850,000	2,900,000
Jumbo	(Pasternak-MGM) (Dec., '62)	2,400,000	2,750,000
40 Pounds Trouble	(Curtis-U) (Feb.)	2,500,000	2,750,000
White Stallions	(Disney-BV) (Feb.)	2,300,000	2,550,000
Capt. Sinbad	(King Bros.-MGM) (July)	2,000,000	2,500,000
Flipper	(Tors-MGM) (June)	1,060,000	2,500,000
Women of the World	(Embassy) (July)	1,900,000	2,500,000
Gathering of Eagles	(U) (July)	2,000,000	2,500,000
Sodom and Gomorrah	(Titanus-20th) (Jan.)	2,100,000	2,500,000
Doctor No	(Eon-UA) (May)	2,100,000	2,400,000
David and Lisa	(Perry-Reade) (Feb.)	2,000,000	2,300,000
Beach Party	(AIP) (Aug.)	1,200,000	2,300,000
New Kind of Love	(Shavelson-Par) (Oct.)	2,000,000	2,250,000
Call Me Bwana	(Eon-UA) (June)	1,700,000	2,200,000
My Six Loves	(Par) (Apr.)	1,750,000	2,185,000
Jason and Argonauts	(Schneer-Col) (June)	1,900,000	2,100,000
Gidget to Rome	(Bresler-Col) (Aug.)	1,800,000	2,000,000
Tammy and Doctor	(Hunter-U) (June)	1,700,000	2,000,000
Mondo Cane	(Italo-Times) (April)	1,050,000	2,000,000
Courtship Eddie's Father	(Pasternak-MGM) (Mar.)	1,800,000	2,000,000
Happened at World's Fair	(Richmond-MGM) (April)	2,250,000	2,500,000
The Leopard	(Titanus-20th) (Oct.)	1,250,000	1,800,000
Caretakers	(Bartlett-UA) (Aug.)	1,350,000	1,800,000
Two for Seesaw	(Mirish-UA) (Dec., '62)	1,500,000	1,750,000
For Love or Money	(U) (Oct.)	1,300,000	1,750,000
List of Adrian Messenger	(Joel-U) (July)	1,500,000	1,700,000
Who's Got the Action	(Rose-Par) (June)	1,400,000	1,600,000
The Stripper	(Wald-20th) (June)	1,200,000	1,500,000
Duel of Titans	(Italo-Par) (June)	1,250,000	1,450,000
Girl Named Tamiko	(Wallis-Par) (Feb.)	1,000,000	1,400,000
The Raven	(AIP) (Feb.)	1,300,000	1,400,000
The Lion	(20th) (Nov.)	1,100,000	1,300,000
King Kong vs. Godzilla	(Toho-U) (July)	1,100,000	1,250,000
Gritic's Choice	(Rosenberg-WB) (April)	1,150,000	1,250,000
The Balcony	(Reade-Sterling) (Mar.)	900,000	1,200,000
Haunted Palace	(AIP) (Sept.)	750,000	1,200,000
The Haunting	(Wise-MGM) (Sept.)	700,000	1,200,000
Hootenanny Hoot	(Katzman-MGM) (Sept.)	800,000	1,200,000
Condemned of Altona	(Ponti-20th)	750,000	1,100,000
L-Shaped Room	(Royal-Col) (June)	700,000	1,000,000
9 Hours to Rama	(Robson-20th) (April)	800,000	1,000,000
Tarzan's Challenges	(Weintraub-MGM) (June)	800,000	1,000,000

This figure represents the amount of exhibitor-guaranteed rentals. The production has opened in only 55 domestic situations so far and too much hazard would be involved in predicting the ultimate total.*

Continued Success

ED BEGLEY

IN ROME

Thirty-Seven Happy Clients Congratulate International Film Editing, Cutting Copy International, Trans-Africa Films on joining

AMERICAN FILM SERVICE

in its new contractual arrangements with the best production talent in Europe. For full length features or television spots, for American-managed production, for crews and equipment, for editing in the most completely equipped American cutting rooms . . .

AMERICAN FILM SERVICE

Knows What, Knows Who, Knows Where, Knows How . . .
In Europe, Africa, and the Middle-East.

WHAT THEY SAY

WELLES: " . . they know the business."

LEVINE: ". . . their work is poetry."

LAURENTIIS: ". . . my best people."

ZANUCK: ". . . who needs them?"

AMERICAN FILM SERVICE

CABLE ADDRESS: AFILM ROMA TELEPHONE: 389774 and 464783

SALITA SAN NICOLA DA TOLENTINO 13 and VIA FRANCESCO CARRARA 26, ROMA

JERRY LEWIS PRODUCTIONS INC.

Now in release:

"WHO'S MINDING THE STORE?"

A JERRY LEWIS-YORK PRODUCTION

A PARAMOUNT RELEASE

Now in production:

"THE PATSY"

A JERRY LEWIS PRODUCTION

A PARAMOUNT RELEASE

Future projects:

2, 3, OR 4 HOUR TELEVISION SHOWS LIVE OR TAPE

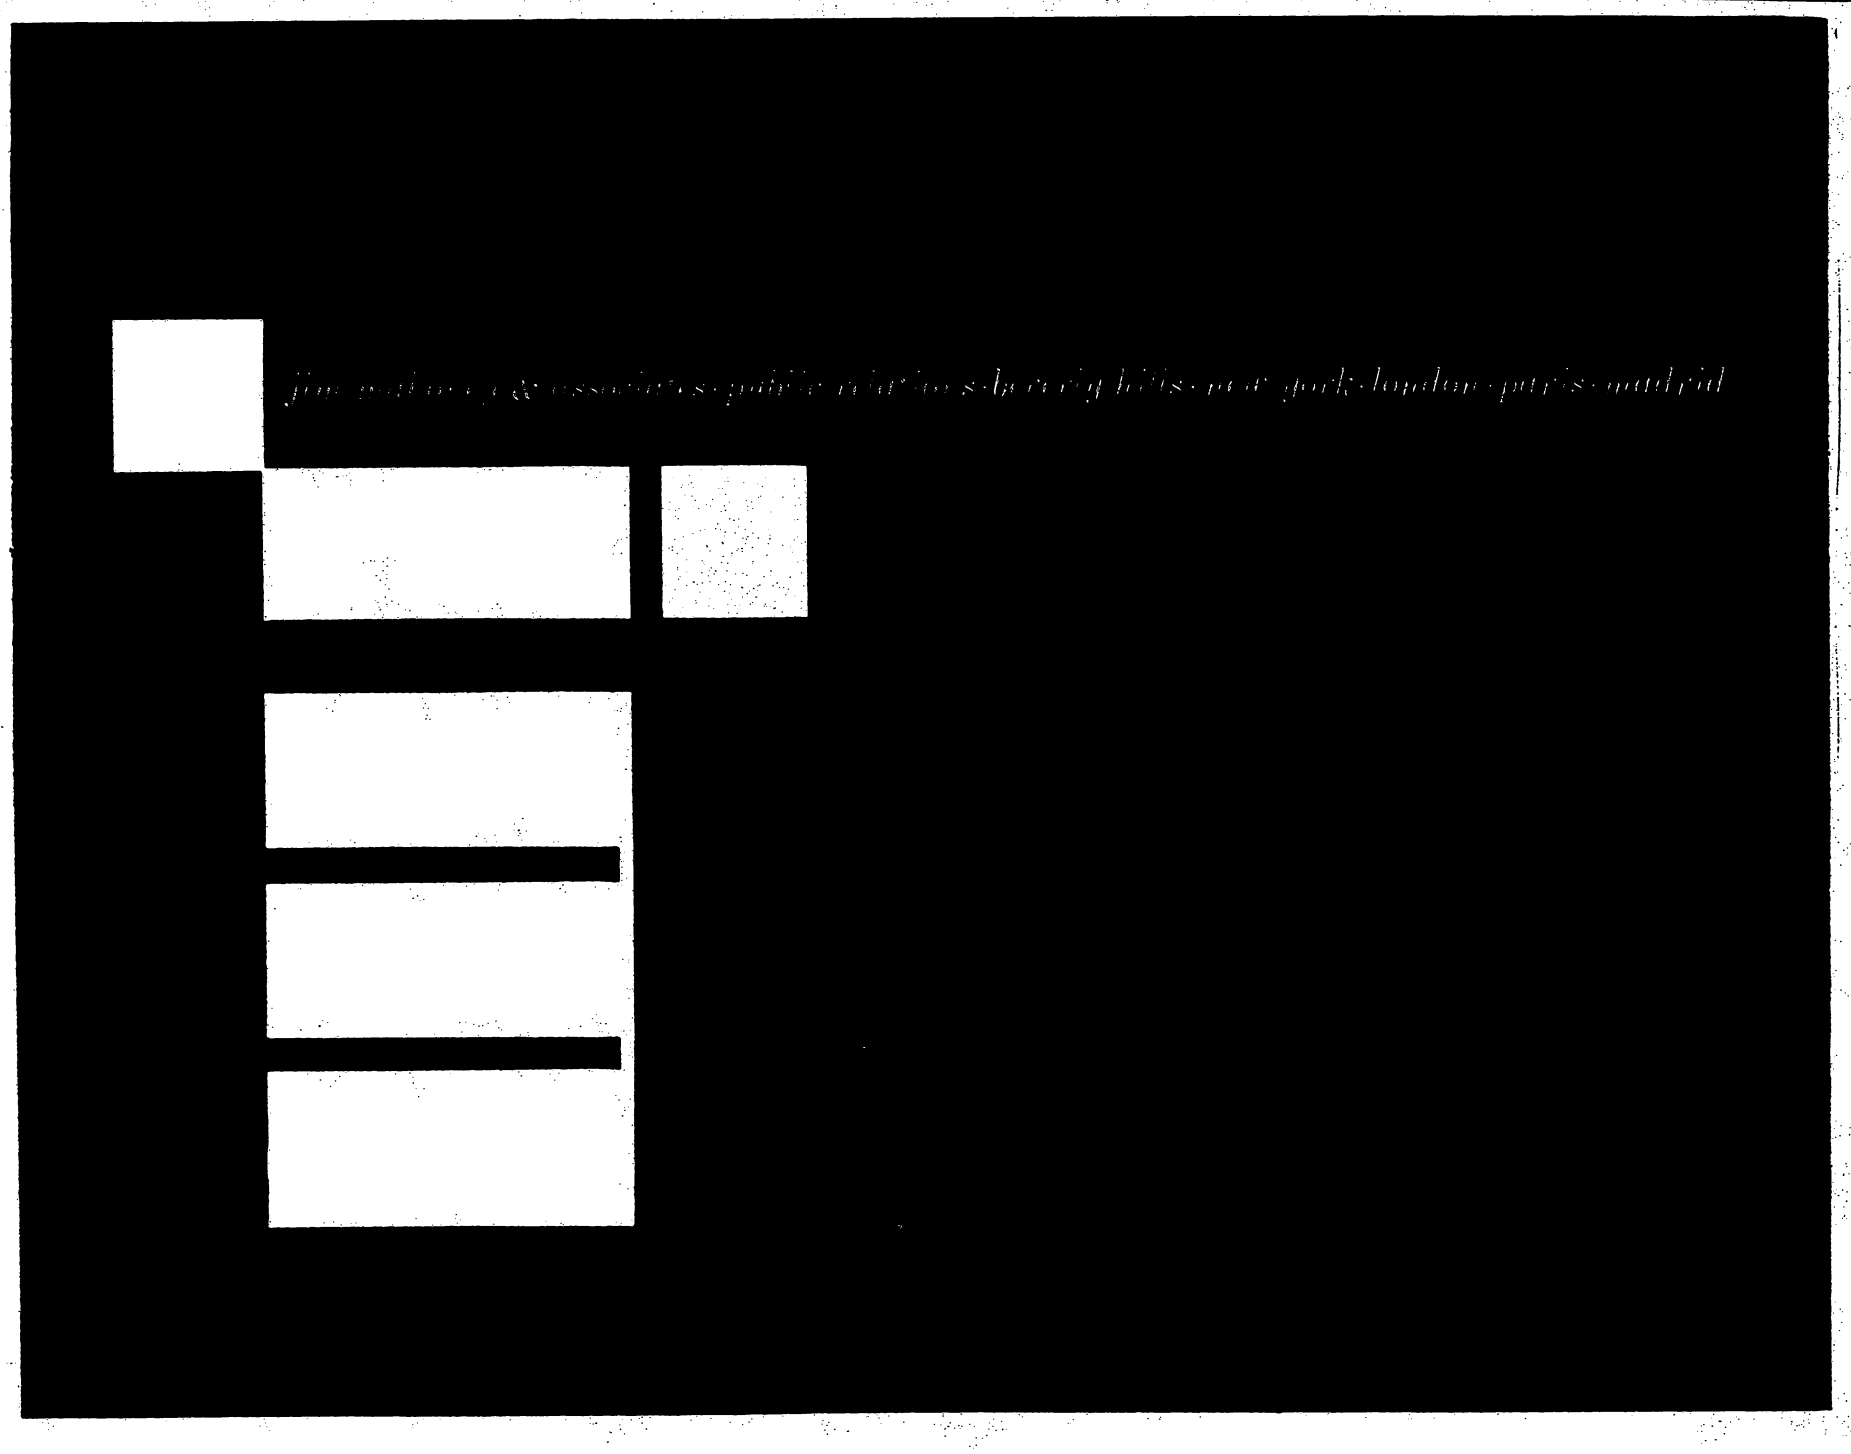
Address Inquiries to: Menninger Clinic

DORE SCHARY

1963

ACT ONE

LOVE AND KISSES



INTERNATIONAL FILM TV-FILM AND DOCUMENTARY MARKET

A WORLD-RESOUNDING SUCCESS

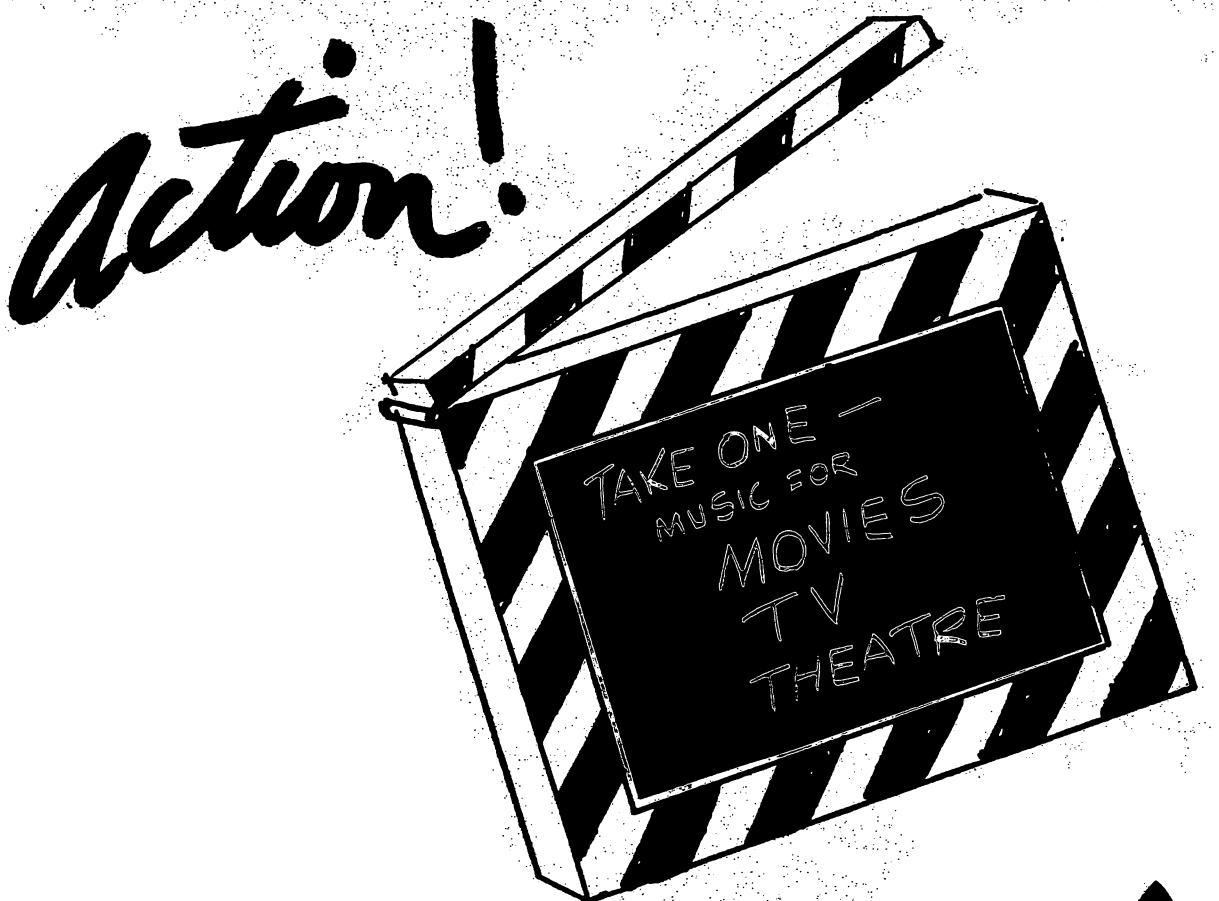
MIFED — the International Film, TV-film and Documentary Market — was launched in 1960 to coincide with the thirty-eighth Milan Trade Fair. Its initial success was an encouragement to further meetings.

MIFED is held twice a year: in APRIL during the Milan Trade Fair, the world's largest display of sample goods and products, and again in OCTOBER.

MIFED is a rallying centre for film men from all over the world, including Asia and Africa.

MIFED

Information from: MIFED - Largo Domodossola 1 - Milano (Italy)
Telegrams: MIFED - Milano



A. SCHROEDER MUSIC CORP.

25 West 56 Street
New York 19, N. Y.
JUdson 2-8810

ABBY STEINBERG • WALLY GOLD • DAVID MOOK • ARNOLD GOLAND

JANUARY MUSIC CORPORATION / SEA-LARK ENTERPRISES, INC.
ARCH MUSIC CO., INC. / A. SCHROEDER MUSIC PUBLISHING CO., LTD.—ENGLAND
A. SCHROEDER MUSIC (AUSTRALIA) PTY. LTD.—AUSTRALIA
A. SCHROEDER MUSIKVERLAG KG—GERMANY / A. SCHROEDER-BASART, N.V.—HOLLAND / A. SCHROEDER PUBLISHING LTD.—JAPAN
SMART EDITORA MUSICAL LTDA.—BRAZIL / EDIZIONI A. SCHROEDER—ITALY
EDITIONS MUSICALES A. SCHROEDER—FRANCE / A. SCHROEDER MUSIKFORLAG—SCANDINAVIA / SMART EDICIONES S.R.L.—ARGENTINA
A. SCHROEDER-GREVER INTERNATIONAL S.A.—MEXICO / A. SCHROEDER MUSIC LIMITED—SOUTH AFRICA

ON THE OCCASION OF THE 20th ANNIVERSARY OF DELMER DAVES AS A DIRECTOR.....

How do you say "thank you" to the thousands of people who have helped me make films since I started directing 20 years ago??? At least I know where to start: in 1943 Jack Warner had enough faith in a young writer to give him one and a quarter million dollars to make DESTINATION TOKYO, and Cary Grant and John Garfield for stars for his first directorial assignment!!! And, since Cary Grant had approval of director in his contract and had faith in me, I know I have to thank him, too . . . and Johnny Garfield . . . Then come the first of the thousands of "thank you's" to producers and stars and staffs and crews and players and extras and home office men and exhibitors and a generous few hundred million theatre-goers! So . . . to all ye who remember, THANKS FOR:

The Twenty Crowded Years (1943-1963) Alphabetically

THE FILMS:	THE PLAYERS: (including those marked who here made their first film appearance or one of their earliest ones)
(† "in collaboration")
AN AFFAIR TO REMEMBER (20th) (1957) (screenplay†)	Cary Grant, John Garfield, Alan Ieen Nesbitt, Richard Denning, Neva Patterson . . .
A SUMMER PLACE (W.B.) (1959) (screenplay, producer, director)	Sandra Dee, Troy Donahue*, Richard Egan, Dorothy McGuire, Arthur Kennedy, Constance Ford, Beulah Bondi . . .
BIRD OF PARADISE (20th-Fox) (1951) original screenplay, director)	Jeff Chandler, Debra Paget, Louis Jourdan, Everett Sloane, Jack Elam*, Maurice Schwartz . . .
BROKEN ARROW (20th-Fox) (director)	James Stewart, Jeff Chandler*, Debra Paget*, Basil Ruysdael . . .
THE BADLANDERS (MGM) (1958) (director)	Alan Ladd, Ernest Borgnine, Katy Jurado, Nehemiah Persoff, Kent Smith, Ford Rainey . . .
COWBOY (Col.) (1957) (director)	Glenn Ford, Jack Lemmon, Anna Kashfi, Brian Donlevi . . .
DARK PASSAGE (WB) (1947) (screenplay, director)	Humphrey Bogart, Lauren Bacall, Anges Moorhead, Tom d'Andrea, Bruce Bennett . . .
DEMETRIUS & THE GLADIATORS (20th) (1954) (director)	Susan Hayward, Victor Mature, Michael Rennie, Debra Paget, Anne Bancroft, Richard Egan, Ernest Borgnine, Barry Jones, William Marshall* . . .
DESTINATION TOKYO (WB) (1944) (screenplay†, director)	Gary Grant, John Garfield, Alan Hale, Dane Clark*, Tom Tully*, Warner Anderson*, Robert Hutton*, William Prince*, John Forsythe*, John Ridgeley, Faye Emerson . . .
DRUMBEAT (WB) (1954) (original screenplay, producer, director)	Alan Ladd, Charles Bronson*, Marisa Pavan*, Audrey Dalton, Warner Anderson, Hayden Rorke . . .
HOLLYWOOD CANTEEN (WB) (1944) (original screenplay, director) (NOTE: the profits from this film ran the Hollywood Canteen and many subsequent post-war charities, still continuing.)	Dane Clark, Robert Hutton, Joan Leslie, Janis Paige* with Bette Davis, Jack Benny, Joe E. Brown, Eddie Cantor, Jack Carson, Joan Crawford, John Garfield, Peter Lorre, Ida Lupino, Dennis Morgan, Eleanor Parker, Roy Rodgers and Trigger, Barbara Stanwyck, Jane Wyman, and with Jimmy Dorsey and his band, Carmen Cavallero and his orchestra, Joseph Szigeti . . .
THE HANGING TREE (WB) (1958) (director)	Gary Cooper, Maria Schell, Karl Malden, George Scott*, Ben Piazza*, Karl Swenson, Virginia Gregg, John Dierkes . .
JUBAL (Col.) (1956) (screenplay†, director)	Glen Ford, Ernest Borgnine, Rod Steiger, Felicia Farr*, Valerie French*, Charles Bronson, Noah Beery, Jr., Basil Ruysdael, Jack Elam, John Dierkes .
KINGS GO FORTH (U.A.) (1958) (director)	Frank Sinatra, Natalie Wood, Tony Curtis, Leora Dana, Karl Swenson* . . .
A KISS IN THE DARK (WB) (1949) (director)	Jane Wyman, David Niven, Victor Moore, Broderick Crawford, Wayne Morris . . .
THE LAST WAGON (20th) (1956) (screenplay†, director)	Richard Widmark, Felcia Farr, Susan Kohner*, Nick Adams*, Tommy Rettig, James Drury*, Ray Stricklyn*, Stephanie Griffin . . .
NEVER LET ME GO (MGM) (1953) (director)	Clark Gable, Gene Tierney, Bernard Miles, Richard Haydn, Kenneth More*, Theodore Bikel* . . .
PARRISH (WB) (1960) (screenplay, producer, director)	Troy Donahue, Karl Malden, Claudette Colbert, Dean Jagger, Connie Stevens*, Diane McBain*, Sharon Hugueny*, Hampton Francher*, David Knapp* . . .
PRIDE OF THE MARINES (WB) (1945) (director)	John Garfield, Eleanor Parker, Dane Clark, Rosemary DeCamp, Ann Doran, Anthony Caruso, Tom d'Andrea*, Don McGuire .
THE RED HOUSE (UA) (1946) (screenplay, director)	Edward G. Robinson, Judith Anderson, Lon McAllister, Allene Roberts*, Julie London*, Rory Calhoun* . . .
RETURN OF THE TEXAN (20th) (1952) (director)	Dale Robertson, Walter Brennan, Jeanne Dru, Richard Boone*, Robert Horton* . . .
ROME ADVENTURE (WB) (1961) (screenplay, producer, director)	Troy Donahue, Suzanne Pleshette*, Rossano Brazzi, Constance Ford, Hampton Francher, Angie Dickinson . . .
SPENCER'S MOUNTAIN (WB) (1963) (screenplay, producer, director)	Henry Fonda, Maureen O'Hara, James McArthur, Mimsy Farmer*, Donald Crisp, Lillian Bronson, Wally Cox, Virginia Gregg, Kym Karath*, Veronica Cartwright
STAGE DOOR CANTEEN (UA) (1943) (original screenplay) (NOTE: the profits from this supported Stage Door Canteens in New York and across the land.)	Lon McAllister*, Judith Anderson, Tallulah Bankhead, Ralph Bellamy, Edgar Bergen, Ray Bolger, Ina Claire, Katherine Cornell, Jane Cowl, Gracie Fields, Lynn Fontaine, Helen Hayes, Jean Hersholt, Katherine Hepburn, George Jessel, Gertrude Lawrence, Gypsy Rose Lee, Alfred Lunt, Elsa Maxwell, Harpo Marx, Yehudi Menuhin, Ethel Merman, Paul Muni, Merle Oberon, George Raft, Cornelia Otis Skinner, Ethel Waters, Johnny Weismuller, Ed Wynn, Sam Jaffe...
SUSAN SLADE (WB) (1960) (screenplay, producer, director)	Troy Donahue, Connie Stevens, Dorothy McGuire, Lloyd Nolan, Brian Aherne, Nafalie Schaefer, Grant Williams*, Kent Smith, Bert Convy* . . .
TASK FORCE (WB) (1949) (original screenplay, director)	Gary Cooper, Walter Brennan, Jane Wyatt, Wayne Morris, Julie London, Bruce Bennett, Jack Holt...
THREE-TEN TO YUMA (Col.) (1957) (director)	Glenn Ford, Van Heflin, Felicia Farr, Leora Dana*, Henry Jones, Richard Jaeckel, Robert Emhardt*, Ford Rainey*, George Mitchell*, Robert Ellenstine* . . .
TO THE VICTOR (WB) (1948) (director)	Dennis Morgan, Viveca Lindfors, Victor Francen, Dorothy Malone*, Bruce Bennett, William Conrad*, Douglas Kennedy* . . .
TREASURE OF THE GOLDEN CONDOR (20th) (1953) (screenplay, director)	Cornell Wilde, Anne Bancroft*, Constance Smith, Finlay Currie, Leo G. Carroll, Faye Wray, George McCready . . .
THE VERY THOUGHT OF YOU (WB) (1944) (screenplay†, director)	Dennis Morgan, Eleanor Parker*, Dane Clark, Faye Emerson, William Prince, Beulah Bondy, Henry Travers, Andrea King* . . .
WHITE FEATHER (20th-Fox) (1955) (screenplay†)	Robert Wagner, Debra Paget, Jeffrey Hunter, Hugh O'Brian*, John Lund, Milburn Stone . . .
YOUNGBLOOD HAWKE (WB) (1963-64) (screenplay, producer, director)	James Farnciscus, Genevieve Page, Suzanne Pleshette, Mildred Dunnock, Lee Bowman, Eva Gabor, Eddie Andrews, John Dehner, Mary Astor, Don Porter, John Emery, Mark Miller, Rusty Lane, Werner Klemperer, Kent Smith, Hayden Rorke . . .

20 YEARS, 32 FILMS, and at least 320,000,000 THANKS from

DELMER DAVES

Writer — Producer — Director

Photo: Giuseppe Proja

MICHELE MERCIER

G.A.C. — N.C.E.
Roma — II, Via Tevere

Congratulations From—

WILLIAM
PERLBERG and GEORGE
SEATON

Releasing Through Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios / Culver City, California

BIRTHDAY
GREETINGS to VARIETY from CANADA!

FAMOUS PLAYERS
CANADIAN CORPORATION LTD.

READY EARLY 1964

ELDORADO FILMS, INC.
(in association with Eric L'Epine Smith Agency, London, England)

will produce in Eastmancolor and wide screen

"FANNY HILL" Memoirs of a Woman of Pleasure

• With a Cast
of 12 International Stars

To be produced in London early this year

★

Eldorado Films, Inc.
110 East 42 St.
New York 17, N. Y.

"Yes, Virginia, there is a Little Mary Sunshine and I'm going to make a movie about her."

Rick Besoyan's affectionate spoof won superlatives from the critics and delighted thousands during its three year run in New York.

It continues to delight hundreds of thousands in successful engagements across the country and abroad.

As a timeless motion picture in wide-screen color, appealing to young and old, it will delight millions.

Howard Barker

Co-producer:
The Original Production
LITTLE MARY SUNSHINE

Co-producer:
Forthcoming Broadway Production
CHRYSANTHEMUM

Taurus Films . Howard Barker Studio n.y.c.

Congratulations...

ROBERT L. LIPPERT

CLIFFORD STINE

A.S.C.

Coming Release:

"BEDTIME STORY"

STANLEY WARNER THEATRES

BIG BIG BIG

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAM
W. P. MARSHALL, President
1201 (4-00)

CLASS OF SERVICE
This is a fast message unless its deferred character is indicated by the proper symbol.

SYMBOLS
DL = Day Letter
NL = Night Letter
LT = International Letter Telegram

The filing time shown in the date line on domestic telegrams is LOCAL TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is LOCAL TIME at point of destination.

K OMA404 PD OMAHA NEBR 26 322P CST=
JACK LORD=
141 EL CAMINO SUITE 207 BEVERLY HILLS CALIF=
CONGRATULATIONS. YOUR TEN EXCITING PERFORMANCES AT SIDNEY IOWA CHAMPIONSHIP RODEO BROKE ALL RECORDS FOR ATTENDANCE AND GROSS TICKET
SALES FOR FORTY YEAR HISTORY OF THIS EVENT. YOU MIGHT LIKE TO KNOW THE AUDITED GROSS FIGURE WAS $124,000.00 AND THAT THE SIX DAY ATTENDANCE
FIGURE EXCEEDED PREVIOUS TOP YEAR OF 1959 BY 5,689. CONTINUED SUCCESS
WITH YOUR GREAT ACT=
THERON ORR TREASURER SIDNEY RODEO COMMITTEE

THE COMPANY WILL APPRECIATE SUGGESTIONS FROM ITS PATRONS CONCERNING ITS SERVICE.

JACK LORD BIGGEST GROSSER IN RODEO'S HISTORY

JACK LORD

STAR OF TELEVISION'S
"STONEY BURKE"
AVAILABLE FOR LIMITED NUMBER OF PERSONAL APPEARANCES
AT TOP
STATE FAIRS &
MAJOR RODEOS

FOR PERSONAL APPEARANCES CONTACT:
MIKE NORTH · 274-0766 (AREA CODE 213)
188 NORTH CANON DRIVE · BEVERLY HILLS · CALIFORNIA

FOR REPRESENTATION IN ALL OTHER FIELDS CONTACT:
CHASIN · PARK · CITRON AGENCY, INC.
10889 WILSHIRE BLVD. · L.A. 24 · CALIF. · PHONE 879-0450

Joseph Fryd

With Best Wishes for 1964

Presents:

(1) "HERCULES, SAMSON, and ULYSSES"

Worldwide Distribution:
METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER

(2) "MONDO NUDO"
(Naked World)

Written by GIUSEPPE MAROTTA

(3) "SANDOKAN"

Starring STEVE REEVES
Worldwide Distribution:
METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER

(4) Now Finished Shooting in Poland:

"AN ITALIAN IN WARSAW"

With Antonio Ciffariello

(5) Shooting in 1964:

STEVE REEVES

In His First U.S.-Made WESTERN

Joseph Fryd

Via Paisiello, 12, Rome Italy — Tel. 868 140 — 864 148

Entertainment excellence... enriching the new American leisure life

A B P T

AMERICAN BROADCASTING—PARAMOUNT THEATRES, INC.

RALPH LEVY

THE UNIQUE AND INCOMPARABLE

YMA SUMAC

"THERE HAS NEVER BEEN A VOICE LIKE IT AND NEVER WILL BE AGAIN"

U.S.A. RECORD-BREAKING CONCERTS IN 47 STATES

USSR
MOSCOW: (Chaikovsky Hall, Lenin Stadium)

LENINGRAD	ROSTOV	VORONEZH	YEREVAN
TALLIN	TASHKENT	KHARKOV	KIROVABAD
BALKA	STALINSK	ODESSA	ASTRAKHAN
RIGA	KIYEV	STALINO	STALINGRAD
KAUNAS	ZHITOMIR	KIRGHIZ	BAKU
VILNYUS	VINNITSA	NOVOSIBIRSK	ASHKHABAD
TARTU	TULA	KRAZNODAR	SAMARKLAND
MINSK	KURSK	TBILISI	ALMA-TA
SMOLENSK			GORKIY

ENGLAND
LONDON: (Royal Albert Hall, Royal Festival Hall)

MANCHESTER	HULL	YORK	SUNDERLAND
BIRMINGHAM	NEWCASTLE	EDINBURGH	DUNDEE
CARDIFF	ABERDEEN	WICK	GLASGOW
PLYMOUTH	BELFAST	LIVERPOOL	BLACKBURN
BLACKPOOL	LEEDS	COVENTRY	BRISTOL
EXETER	SOUTHAMPTON	SHEFFIELD

IRELAND

DUBLIN	WATERFORD	CORK	GALWAY

POLAND

WARSAW	RZESZOW	TORUN	LUBLIN
SACZ	GORZOW	WROCTAW	GIZYCKO
BYDGOSZCZ	LODZ	KRAKOV	CZESTOCHOWA
POZNAN	KATOWICE	GDANSK	MAZOWIECKY
BIAYSTOK	GDYNIA	WROCLAW	PREMYSLK

GREECE

ATHENS	PIRAIEVS	THESSALONIKI	KORINTHOS

ROUMANIA

BOUCHAREST	CONSTANTA	TIMISOARA	SATU-MARE

GERMANY
BERLIN: (Deutschland Halle)

DUSSELDORF	FRANKFURT	HAMBURG

HOLLAND

AMSTERDAM	THE HAGUE	ROTTERDAM	NIJMEGEN
TILBURG	EINDHOVEN	TILBURG	GRONINGEN

BELGIUM

BRUSSELS	GENT	LIEGE	DEURNE

FRANCE
PARIS: (Palais de Challiot)

LYON	LE HAVRE	BORDEAUX	MARSEILLE
REIMS	NICE	MONACO	CANNES

SWITZERLAND

ZURICH	BASEL	LAUSANNE	GENEVE
LUZERNE	VADUZ	BADEN	WINTERTHUR

ITALY

ROME	MILANO	GENOVA	TORINO
VENEZIA	PADOVA	BOLOGNA	RIMINE
NAPLES	FIRENZE	LIVORNO	PIZZA
BARI	TARANTO	MESSINA	REGGIO
CALABRIA	PALERMO	CORSICA	SARDINIA

SPAIN AND PORTUGAL

MADRID	BARCELONA	LISBON	CASINO STORIL

AFRICA

ALGIERS	ORAN	TUNISE	CASABLANCA
TRIPOLI	CAIRO	KHARTOUM	ETHIOPIA
KENYA	NAIROBI	ZANZIBAR	MOZAMBIQUE
PRETORIA	JOHANNESBURG	LEOPOLDVILLE	DAKAR

ASIA

TEL AVIV	UZBECK	TURKMEN	KSAKSTAN
JERUSALEM	KIRGHIZ	ANDIZHAN	ULAN BATOR

JAPAN

TOKYO	NAGOYA	OSAKA	KYOTO

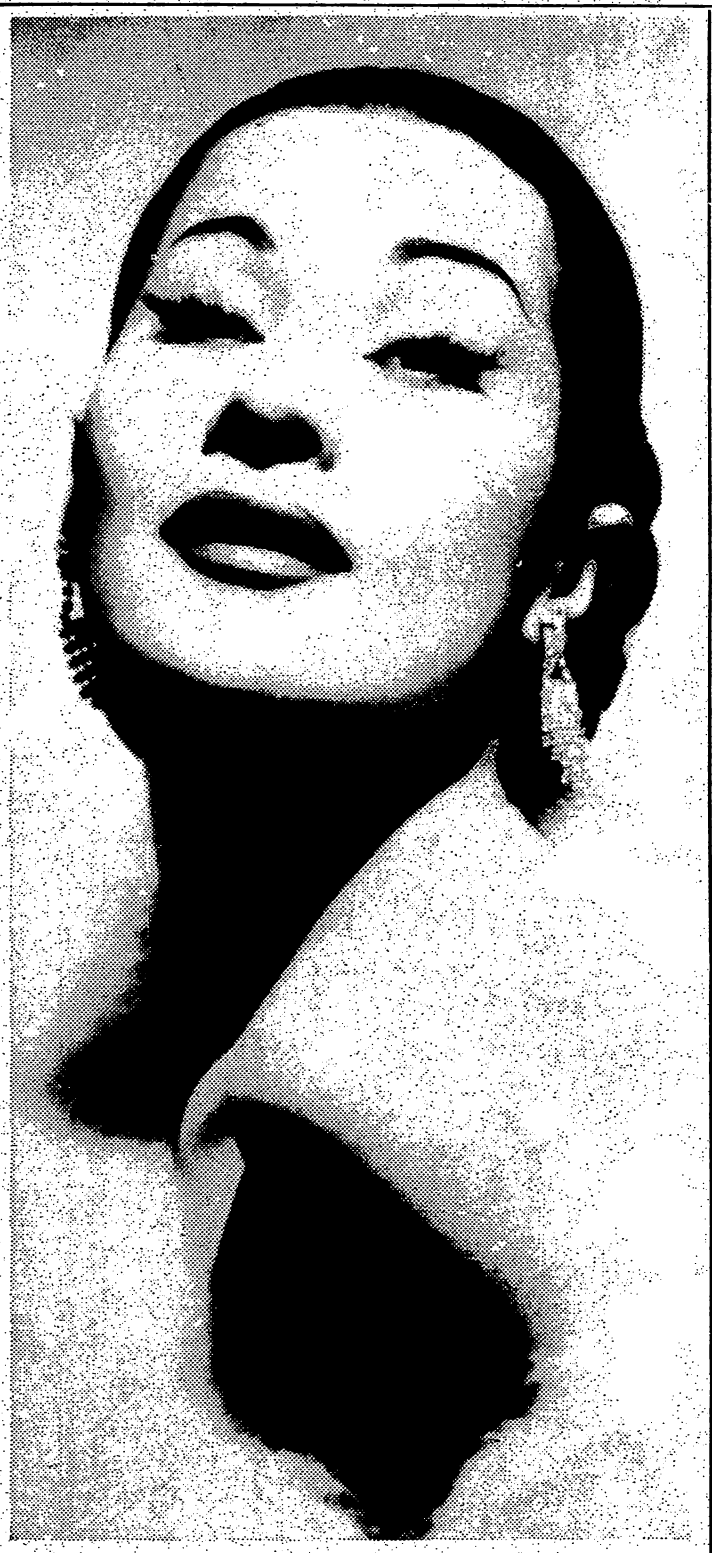
CANADA

MONTREAL	QUEBEC	RIVIERS	JOLIETTE
OTTAWA	TORONTO	HAMILTON	LONDON
PARRY SOUND	PORT ARTHUR	WINNIPEG	BRANDON
BONIFACE	REGINA	SASKATOON	CALGARY
EDMONTON	VANCOUVER	VICTORIA	WESTMINSTER

LATIN AMERICA

MEXICO	LIMA	LA PAZ	HABANA
BOGOTA	MONTEVIDEO	RIO DE JANEIRO	CALI
QUITO	SAO PAULO	SANTOS	BUENOS AIRES
ROSARIO	RECIFE	SALVADOR	PORTO ALEGRE
CURITIVA	CARACAS	BELO HORIZONTE	RIO GRANDE
MEDELLIN	BARRANQUILLA	SANTO DOMINGO

2000 CONCERTS!



THE MOST EXCITING VOICE IN THE WORLD

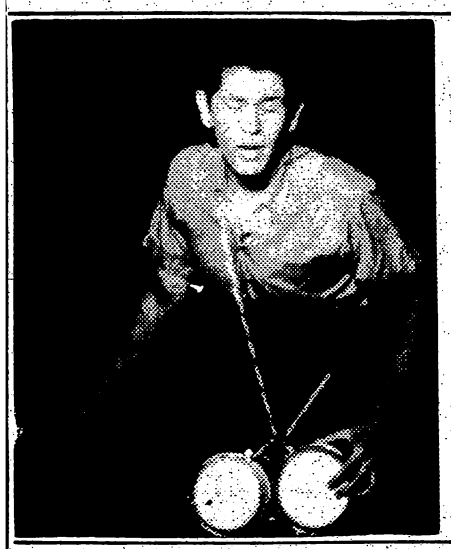
Ranging from the depths of the ocean to the heights of the Andes. Runs the gamut of emotions from love to hate when she sings the sensual, primitive music of her people, the Incas, as well as operatic arias, popular and folk music of the world.

NOW AVAILABLE IN

STEREOPHONIC SOUND

ON

Capitol RECORDS



NOW A NEW ACT

Created and Produced By MOISES VIVANCO

World's Foremost Authority on Ancient Music

featuring

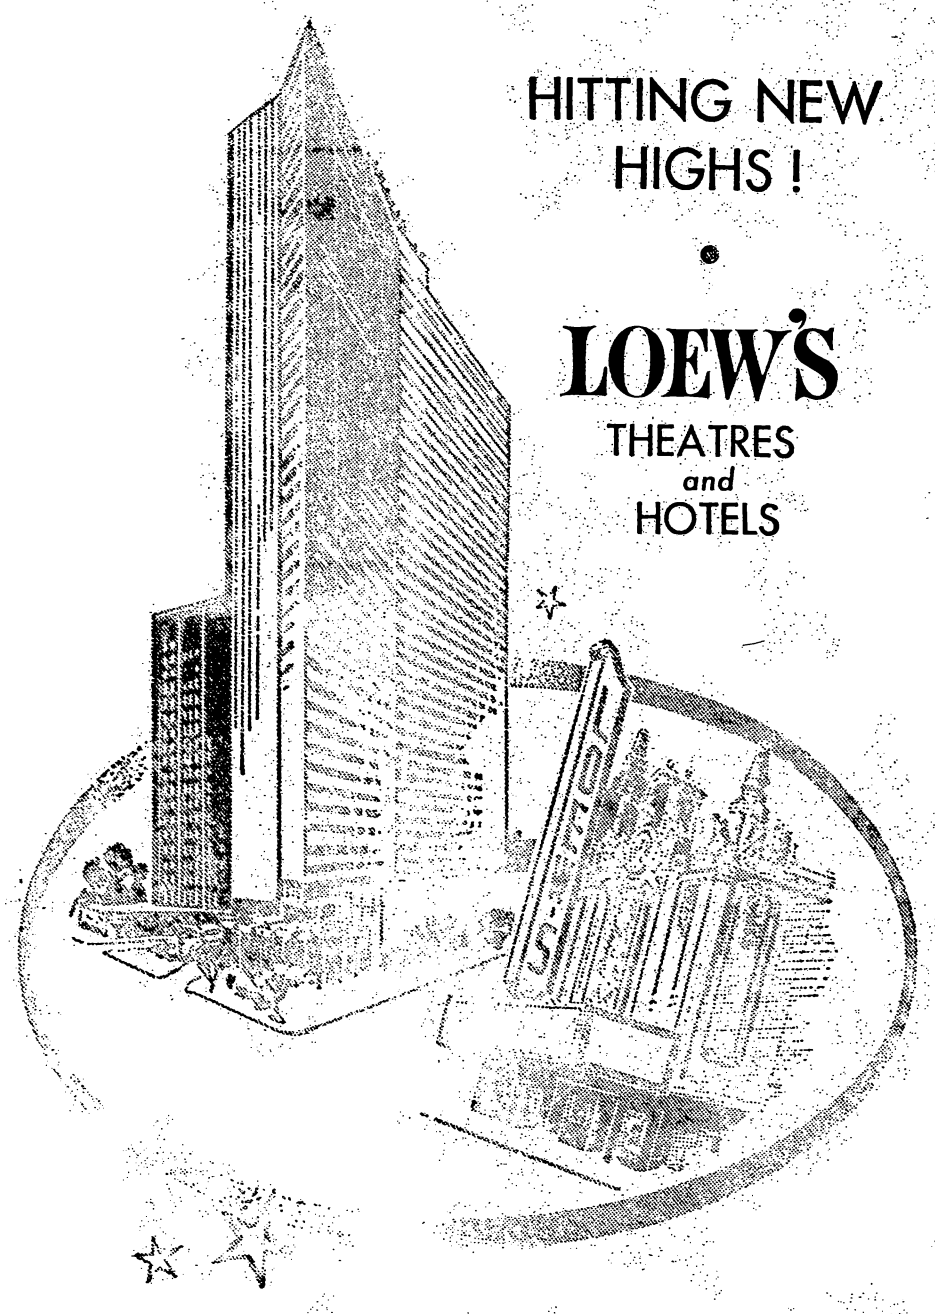
CHARLES VIVANCO
AMERICAN FOLK SINGER

and

NEW, EXCITING ACTS FROM ALL OVER THE WORLD

CONTACT "VIP" INTERCONTINENTAL-PRODUCTIONS, P.O. BOX 97, BEVERLY HILLS, CALIF.

John Wayne



HITTING NEW HIGHS !

•

LOEW'S
THEATRES
and HOTELS

Congratulations on Your

58th ANNIVERSARY

Skouras Theatres Corporation
United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc.
Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc.

CONGRATULATIONS

Alliance Amusement Co.
Chicago

S. J. GREGORY, President

THE FINEST HOURS

Le VIEN FILMS

Presents With Pride

Winston Churchill's own dramatic story

as told in his War Memoirs

2 Hours—In Color

★

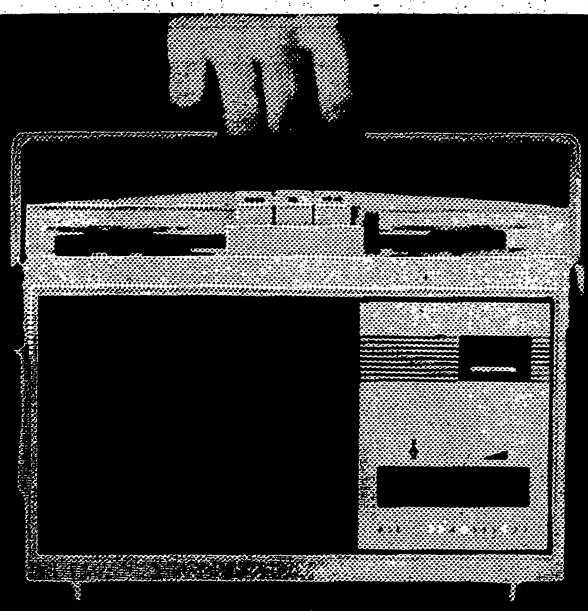
Royal Premiere — London

April, 1964

LE VIEN FILMS LTD., 111 Wardour Street, London W.1. GERRard 8517

From Coast to Coast

RKO
FIRST-RUN
THEATRES



Don't let the SMALL size fool you.'

This tape recorder is BIG quality through and through.

It's the all-new, Norelco transistor, battery portable.

Big in performance... Big in versatility... Big in reliability... Big in everything but size. Think of it. A 7-pound, cordless, over-the-shoulder tape recorder that lets you record any performance, anywhere, any time—auditions, readings, rehearsals, sessions, lessons—whether completely impromptu or scheduled, whether music or spoken word—with big machine fidelity; a professionally-engineered machine that gives you playback, through its own wide-range loudspeaker, so outstanding you will hardly believe your ears.

This new all-transistor Norelco Continental '101' works on ordinary flashlight batteries. It records and plays back up to 2 hours on a single 4" reel. Simple to use? Push two buttons and you're recording—one...and you're playing back. Its dynamic microphone picks up any sound within a broad radius with astonishing fidelity. Its bass and treble-control allows you to adjust the tone to your own taste. Its constant-speed motor with capstan drive insures distortion-free performance and broadcast-quality tapes. Ruggedly built... handsomely styled... surprisingly low priced. See it, hear it, try it...at your favorite hi-fi dealer or camera store.

Write for Brochure W: North American Philips Company, Inc., High Fidelity Products Division, 100 East 42nd Street, New York, New York 10017.

Norelco

the Fontainebleau

OCEANFRONT, 44th TO 48th STREETS • MIAMI BEACH, FLORIDA

... Host to Celebrities from all fields of entertainment ...

AMERICA'S LARGEST AND FINEST RESORT HOTEL

BEN NOVACK
President

DUKE STEWART
Manager

NEW YORK OFFICE
730 - 5th AVENUE
TEL. Circle 5-7800

NEWARK OFFICE
TEL. MArket 3-2474

JACK SMIGHT

DIRECTOR

Now Shooting

"I'D RATHER BE RICH"

Ross Hunter Production — Universal

CINERIZ

DISTRIBUZIONE S.P.A.
ROMA, 9, Viale Castrense

NEW YORK—500 FIFTH AVENUE
Phone: LAckawanna 4-0339

with

SEASON'S GREETINGS

and best wishes for a happy and prosperous

NEW YEAR

FEDERICO FELLINI's "Giulietta degli Spiriti" ● MICHELANGELO ANTONIONI: "Deserto Rosso" (Technicolor) ● FRANCESCO ROSI: "Spagna" (Technicolor) ● ALESSANDRO BLASETTI: "Liola", from the play by Pirandello ● FESTA CAMPANILE and FRANCIOSA: "Le Voci Bianche" (Technicolor) ● JACOPETTI and PROSPERI: "MONDO CANE N. 2" and "AFRICA ADDIO" (Technicolor)

ROGERS & COWAN, INC.

Public Relations

NEW YORK
BEVERLY HILLS
LONDON
PARIS
ROME
MADRID
MUNICH TOKYO

BRIGID BAZLEN

Personal Management: KURT FRINGS, Beverly Hills, California

International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Machine Operators of the United States and Canada
A.F.L. - C.I.O.

Representing Craftsmen Employed in Production, Distribution and Exhibition in the Entertainment Field

RICHARD F. WALSH
International President

HARLAND HOLMDEN
General Secretary-Treasurer

SUITE 1900
1270 AVENUE OF THE AMERICAS NEW YORK 20, N. Y.

The Technicolor Group of Laboratories are justly proud of the technical progress embodied in their latest development, Techniscope—a further progressive step by this world-famous triumvirate of laboratories which strives always to achieve "better quality at lower cost." Remember these other Technicolor successes:

- SUPER TECHNIRAMA-70
  For 70mm. prints for very big screens and Road-Show presentation.
- AUTO-OPTICAL DISSOLVES & FADES
  Without duplicates. Highest photographic quality.
- SELECTIVE PRINTING
  For different versions, elimination of scenes, etc. No duplicates. Highest quality.

and now

Techniscope®

the cost-saving new method of 'Scope type production

The new shooting system with great depth of field which provides anamorphic release prints without distortions, using less than half as much negative as compared with the normal 4 perforation systems.

THE SIGN OF SEASONED EXPERIENCE

THE TECHNICOLOR GROUP OF LABORATORIES

Technicolor Limited,
Bath Road,
Harmondsworth,
West Drayton, Middx.
SKYport 5432

Technicolor Corporation,
6311 Romaine Street,
P.O. Box 38-547,
Hollywood 38,
California.
Hollywood 7-1101

Technicolor Italiana, S.p.A.
Via Tiburtina 1138,
Roma.
Roma 416.447

LEON FROMKESS
SAM FIRKS

PRODUCTIONS, INC.

In Release:
"SHOCK CORRIDOR"

In Production:
"THE NAKED KISS"

In Preparation:
"BLOOD ON THE ARROW"

Releasing thru Allied Artists Picture Corp.

Thanks to our guests in 1963 who made 6 to 10 AM such a ball on KNX Radio –Hollywood

BOB CRANE
and to the Donna Reed Show on ABC for my first full year in TV

New York's largest specialists in motion picture & TV insurance
(cast, film, weather, liability, cameras, props, plagiarism...)

WINKLER ASSOCIATES, LTD.
120 W. 57 St., New York 19, Circle 7-3365

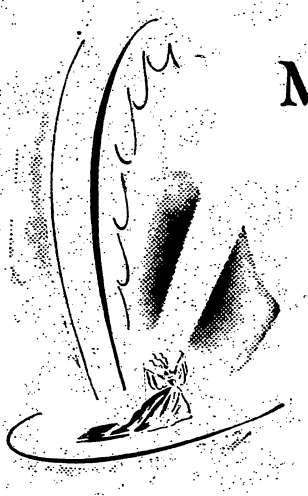
Greetings VARIETY from GREATER CHICAGOLAND DRIVE-IN THEATRE ASSOCIATION

RADIO CITY MUSIC HALL

Showplace of the Nation — Rockefeller Center, N. Y.



An institution known throughout the world for its presentation of outstanding motion pictures and stage shows notable for their good taste, beauty and perfection of execution.

Congratulations!
VARIETY

RUSSELL MARKERT
Radio City Music Hall

BEST WISHES

★

Irving Berlin

TITRA

is proud of winning the

I.F.I.D.A. AWARD

for the best dubbing of 1963

for

"DIVORCE ITALIAN STYLE"

TITRA DUBBING CO., INC. 1600 Broadway, New York City PL 7-6681

LBJ To Maintain Pattern

Continued from page 4

House luncheons, especially when they honor a distinguished foreign visitor. In previous administrations, many luncheons have been held but without music.

The Johnsons may institute a "double bill" or "triple bill," using more than one star on the same after-dinner program. The stars may represent different forms of the arts. This approach has not before been tried in the Executive Mansion.

There have, of course, been instances where a number of performers appeared on the same White House program, but, in all instances, the represented a "package." For example, in the Eisenhower administration, the stars of several musical comedies then on Broadway came down to sing the hit songs from those shows.

Mrs. Johnson's idea is to have a blend in using more than one star at a time. She might, for instance have both opera selections by one artist and spirtuals by a group of singers.

Van Cliburn was the first star called into service by the new Administration. He performed at the large party President and Mrs. Johnson held in honor of German Chancellor Ludwig Erhard in Texas.

Robert Merrill, representing America's achievements in opera, will sing at the State dinner in the White House honoring Italian President Antonio Segni in mid-January. (Mrs. Johnson had also wanted Leontyne Price on the same program, but because of a conflict in Miss Price's schedule, she will perform at a later date in the Executive Mansion.)

At Mrs. Johnson's request, Richard Adler has been acting as a consultant on talent for the White House. She has also had discussion with father Gilbert V. Hartke, head of Catholic University's drama department.

One well-educated guess is that Erich Leinsdorf and at least some of his Boston Symphony will perform at an early date. The President and Leinsdorf have been good personal friends since 1938 when the President, as a young congressman, singlehandedly prevented Leinsdorf from being deported to Austria. The conductor and musical director of the Boston Symphony has subsequently become a U.S. citizen.

When Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony in a Washington concert in 1962, the Johnsons attended and gave an after-concert party in his honor in their home.

Carol Channing, another personal friend who twice performed in the Johnsons' home while he was Vicepresident, is another certain to be invited, her commitments with the new "Hello, Dolly" permitting.

The finest carbons ever made...

NATIONAL

PROJECTOR CARBONS

Piaf

Continued from page 4

the French chanteuse and the dramatic lowlife paeans. She had actually been born and found singing in the streets. The fantastic background of her life and rise is common knowledge.

So are the last years which alternated with suffering, suicidal tours and last attempts to find love and companionship. Even if a certain morbidity entered into her last successful public appearances here, there were the many who came to only see and hear her. She had an innate show sense and her composers did their best work for her and the rising, talented people around her always benefitted in their work from it.

She had that fragile thing that is such an asset in show biz. Her talent was so personal and ingrained that it could keep abreast of all fads and changes in techniques and outlooks. In short, it was probably a form of show biz grace.

Discotheques

Continued from page 4

bership clubs for license reasons and some do enforce it by speaking type peepholes. Sometimes, if packed, they may try to refuse patrons. But tourists can usually get in. A local Gaslight keeps a key format and American hostesses doing impromptu singing and dances in the tights of old saloon days of the old American west.

Some of the above have tried to work in various types of appeal to keep patrons who now seem to be giving up the ever-moving, on-the-town aspects of yore. Princess, under Jean Castel, has a downstairs discotheque and a restaurant upstairs with a bar at street level.

Maurice Girodias, head of Olympia Press, who made a name with those banned-in-America books, has finally found the right format for his triple-tiered Grandes Severines on the Left Bank. Upstairs is the Blues Bar gladhanded by Yank singer Mae Mercer with a $1.50 for each drink.

And there is a Latino boite in the cellar and a Russo-type restaurant tagged Chez Vodka. All combine for an easy but variegated evening. Saints Peres has a roomy disk room with a restaurant upstairs. And so it goes.

There are also cabaret-restaurants which have simple shows going on while patrons munch full seale meals to the wee hours. Le Balcantine, L'Ajacienne and Le Cannibale do this while a sort of pocket revue with eats is at the Tete De L'Art with stars featured.

Merit Badge for Cohan

Henry H. Cohan, longtime manager of the Beverly Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn., will be awarded the Black Rock Civic and Men's Club's 1963 merit citation at the neighborhood group's annual dinner dance Jan. 25. He's the first theatreman ever to receive the award.

Among other civic activities, Cohan was cited for his twice-a-year free "safety matinees" for children.

DAMAGED FILM HOSPITAL

"THE FILM DOCTORS"

WILL OPERATE ON 8—16—35mm Color • Black & White DAMAGED MOTION PICTURE FILM

OUTSTANDING RESULTS USING RAPIDWELD & RAPIDTREAT

1. All scratches (black lines) were removed from both emulsion and base.
2. All other physical damages—tears, brittleness, dirt, abrasions were eliminated.
3. Our Safe-Gard Coat was applied to absorb all future damages—giving the emulsion permanent protection.

Free 1964 Edition "The World of Rejuvenation"

RAPID FILM TECHNIQUE, INC.

37-02 27th St., L.I.C., 1, N.Y.

Specialists in the Science of Film Rejuvenation in the EAST it's MOVIELAB for...

COLOR BLACK & WHITE

FOR YOUR SCREENINGS

Film & Tape EDITING & STORAGE Rooms

MOVIELAB BUILDING, 619 WEST 54th STREET, NEW YORK 19, PHONE 586-0360 (AREA CODE 212)

A "Pat" Hand!

FOR 1964

Personal Management:
Randy Wood - Jack Spina

Guest Appearance
GEORGE STEVENS
"The Greatest Story Ever Told"

Public Relations:
Glenn Rose Associates, Inc.

artist

DONG KINGMAN

title background paintings

Bop Pops & Comedy Click In UK

Continued from page 3

ably were not in the business a year, six months, even a couple of months before their respective waxes climbed the sales scales. With few exceptions—The Beatles being the most notable—the tyro hit paraders are as raw as onions onstage, their lack of experience often so blatant and their vocalizing generally so inferior to their studio recording that a few years back when the vaude business was on its feet they would never have been allowed on the bill.

But the tab buyers for live shows today are youngsters who just aren't interested in whether a guy has worked the country and come up the hard way. The teenage audiences turn up to see their disk idols in the flesh and, according to one local promoter, are so presold on "their boy" that if he did his whole act on his head they'd still scream the place down.

The Rush to Market

The "one jump to fame" popsters have not only been keeping the disk biz alight, and the live show theatre circuits all-booked up with package shows but have stirred so much excitement and publicity that the better ones among the "green battalions" have made the step into films. American producer Milton Subotsky for instance has made a couple of successful pop-plugging pix here which are best described as canned package shows with all the benefits that celluloid can give.

Even TV Succumbs

Television, too, is finding itself having to bow to some extent to the warbling newcomers with their scant and freshly-learned presentation routines. Most commercial stations are featuring popmusic shows like "Thank Your Lucky Stars," from ABC-TV, which is a major showcase for the teenage troubadours and many take "Ready Steady Go" from Associated-Rediffusion, another prime time vehicle dominated by the "young in art."

While the music business—or, more strictly, the high-sales, pop section of it—has been taken over by the amateur talents to the confusion and often dismay of the veteran administrators and business men behind the scenes (to say nothing of the hurt felt by artists who spent years building the repertoire, etc. and now cannot get a look-in), amateurs are breaking in in other fields.

Most classic example of this is the runaway success of "Beyond the Fringe" staged at the Fortune Theatre and starring four youngsters just up from Cambridge—Alan Bennett, Peter Cook, Jonathan Miller and Dudley Moore. That they took the place apart from the word go (and their material still is, although they personally have moved on to other pastures) is now a matter of show biz history. Likewise, it's also a matter of record that their success at the Fortune sparked a whole trend towards satirical humor which, as it turned out, was the prerogative of the undergraduate amateurs—or, as one "with it" tv producer prefers to call 'em, "the new professionals."

So What's Really New?

The most talked about tv show of last season was undoubtedly BBC's "That Was The Week That Was" which was precisely in the "new professional" vein. The commercial network tried a similar production "What The Public Wants" but, hampered too severely by the TV Act, the project was abandoned.

In the theatre the Bennett-Cook-Miller-Moore smash in the West End has been followed up by lesser, but still worthy, productions from University students. One is the 1963 "Cambridge Footlights Revue" which is being taken to Broadway by Ed Sullivan, is being filmed by British Pay-TV interests and, like "Beyond The Fringe" before it, is a "hot property" on the disk store counters.

One of the main reasons for many of the lighting successes which amateurs have pulled off in the past couple of years is that the national supply of experienced talent has been used so often by tv that now there is a definite shortage of fresh faces. Duly, a new face that shows anything resembling ability gets a swift come-on from the tv companies. Stations run both on-the-air and closed-circuit "nursery" shows in their never-ending search for upcomers.

Recent, and highly illustrative, case in point is the spiraling of comedian Jimmy Tarbuck. With only eight months in the business during which he "worked the clubs for $14 a night," he was spotted by an ABC-TV talent scout. The 22-year-old gagger was slotted at a moments notice into the station's highrated "Comedy Bandbox," a show caught by Val Parnell, executive producer of Associated Television's "Sunday Night At The London Palladium." Tarbuck was very swiftly given second spot on the Palladium bill on the following week (and he duly wowed 'em). As the variety, tv radio and club dates now roll in, Tarbuck, in really express time, can be safely said to have made the grade.

Throughout British show business, then, the gap between wishful, starry-eyed thinking and the actual realization of an amateur's dream has shrunk staggeringly. Those least equipped for "instant stardom" however, find the step back into obscurity just as speedy.

'Fanny Hill'

Continued from page 3

ceived the green light of entry into the harbor of New York. It was during the pre-Labor Day stampede of college students and teachers returning from the gay capitals of Europe that a sprinkling of our customs inspectors, particularly those assigned for pier duty, appeared in a frisky, raffish mood.

On this occasion, baggage inspection involved three young and decidedly pretty schoolmarms. When the trio disembarked they were greeted at customs by an inspector who muttered: "Okay, girls, you look like the Henry Miller type! Let's have your 'Tropic of Cancer' and 'Tropic of Capricorn'."

The girls, who had indeed arrived with several sizzling Miller items and had cached them in their ski trousers beneath a pile of unwashed undies, nervously giggled but ignored the request.

Instead, they showed the inspector some dog-eared cross-word puzzle books, a batch of Raymond Chandler whodunits and John Dewey's "The Child and the Curriculum."

At this point in the proceedings, another customs inspector looked up from his own investigatory diggings nearby.

"I think the girls look like smugglers," he hissed.

"No," said the first inspector, "more like snugglers to me." He then proceeded to chalkmark their luggage okay and sent them on their hellbent way, knowing full well that in their crammed luggage lurked the vivid, four-letter prose.

But all this is a thing of the past. With the courts almost daily removing the word "objectionable" from many smuggled classics, the game loses tang. Even "The Kama Sutra of Vatsyayana: The Classic Hindu Treatise on Love and Social Conduct," that choice bit of erotica translated by Sir Richard Burton, is OK today.

NEW YORK! HOLLYWOOD! TIMBUKTU!
Film Shippers to All the World
BARNETT INTERNATIONAL
Forwarders Inc.
543 WEST 43rd STREET, NEW YORK 36, NEW YORK
BRyant 9-1616
Cable "BARINTFOR" N. Y.

LEE KRESEL
Director
English Version
"DIVORCE ITALIAN STYLE"
I.F.I.D.A. Award — Best Dubbing, 1963

ATTENTION ALL PRODUCERS
Screenwriter, who actually lived this story, offers copyrighted screenplay (5 years in the making) of full-length Caribbean smash!
THE BAY OF PIGS AFFAIR
Authentic true story of:
Love, romance, murder, humor, espionage and international intrigue! Cuban history with Batista to Castro emphasis, Cuban exiles organizations, missile bases pin-pointed with details of their revelation to an unsuspecting America, Playa Giron battle capped with details of 20 month imprisonment and dramatic release of Brigade 2506 battle-scarred veterans, U. S. Quarantine and JFK assassination before-during-after details and the present freedom fight to liberate Cuba!
Send production offers to:
MELEXIM Productions
422 Washington Building
Washington 5, D. C.

Hear Hollywood Commentator
DICK STROUT
Suite 404
1717 N. Highland Av.
Hollywood 28, Cal.
469-0884
ON over 800 Stations in America!

Season's Greetings
ESSANESS
WOODS
CHICAGO

Congratulations to VARIETY
— and A Happy New Year To All My Friends Throughout The World.
Dave Chasen

My Very Best Wishes

SAMUEL GOLDWYN

Why Not Off-TV?

By SAM KURTZMAN

The other day at my favorite nickel, dime and $98 store, while looking for a fine toothcomb, I was told that they were fresh out.

"How come?" I wanted to know.

"Well," the girl answered. "It seems that every network producer, tv packager and pilot contemplator has been in here. They just bought like crazy."

"How come?" I repeated.

"You know. They use them to find new ideas for tv."

"But what's a pilot contemplator?"

"Oh, any American over 12 years of age."

"True," I agreed, and bought a wide toothcomb of which the store had a silo full.

When I got home, and being over 12 myself, I began culling for new tv ideas too. It was a little tougher with this comb, but I was in no rush.

Then it occurred to me that the providers of tv entertainment had gone to books, magazines, parlor games, children's plays, morality plays, immorality plays, movies, newspapers, puppet shows, courts of law, hospitals, suburbia, burlesque, strawhat theatre, Greek drama and Broadway as sources for material.

But what about Off-Broadway?

And I don't mean all of Off-Broadway.

I mean the Theatre of the Absurd.

Of course television has shown several documentaries of the works of Max Frisch, Samuel Beckett, Eugene Ionesco, Edward Albee, Jean Genet, Jean-Paul Sartre and others. But these authors have never written directly for television.

What America needs is Off-TV.

What America needs are some Absurd series.

And I don't mean ridiculous series. Those we've had. Lots of them.

Now let's have "Who's Afraid of Donna Reed?" and "Candid Rhinoceros" and "The Bald Soprano Meets Phil Silvers" and "Arrest and Trial and No Exit."

As it's usually the more intellectual and the more affluent who frequent the Theatre of the Absurd, Off-TV will open new vistas for sponsors. Instead of cornflakes and deodorants, Off-TV will feature commercials for Ferrari cars, original Picassos, Scottish castles, private islands and Christine Keeler.

Naturally, to comply with FCC regulations, Off-TV will have to be compatible with regular tv. This means that the usual receiver will have to have a second screen at the side of the set. Those in the household interested in Off-TV will watch it sideways while the rest of the family looks at Ed Sullivan.

For intellectual but less affluent families who cannot afford the installation of the Off-TV tube I have another suggestion. They can turn the entire set sideways and look through the corner of their eyes.

The following are examples of what an enterprising Off-TV producer might consider for the forthcoming season. Any sponsor interested in viewing a complete pilot, please contact me at the nearest Sandbox. I'll be there.

EXHIBIT I.

What's My Endgame?

This is a panel show with four panelists, an m.c. and a guest. All are hidden in trashcans and all we see on the screen are six metal containers.

Whenever a participant speaks he lifts his lid slightly, and when he is through, lets it drop.

The advantage of this show is that you know who speaks simply by watching which lid is up. Another advantage is that there is no need for makeup.

The object of the game in "What's My Endgame?" is for the panel to guess what the guest has on.

Naturally this can lead to humorous responses for some guests might have on a gorilla costume or a bathing suit, or nothing, or another trashcan.

"What's My Endgame?" is a must for the 1965 season.

* * *

EXHIBIT II.

McHale's Balcony

(Exterior). Long shot of military base. We see a young draftee wandering among the buildings. He carries a suitcase in one hand and a bunch of papers in the other. He is obviously bewildered. Suddenly he is confronted by two identical buildings. One is marked "Headquarters" and the other "Special Services."

He is about to enter Headquarters when he hears a tapping against a windowpane and sees a beautiful girl beckoning in the other building. He changes course and walks into Special Services.

(Interior). A plush parlor of 1890 vintage. We see six gorgeous girls dressed in army officer uniforms, except that they wear no shirts or ties beneath their jackets, and instead of trousers they wear form fitting olive green stockings. All of these lovely females are one-star generals. The draftee enters.

DRAFTEE: Hello, oh, gosh, am I interrupting something?

FIRST GIRL: Why don't you salute, stupid?

DRAFTEE: (Makes dimwitted effort at a salute).

SECOND GIRL: He saluted me! (She leaps forward, embraces the soldier and plants a long, passionate kiss upon his lips).

DRAFTEE: Gosh, I didn't know I was allowed to kiss officers.

SECOND GIRL: Of course not. But part of our Special Services is to make you into an officer.

DRAFTEE: You mean I'll be an officer?

FIRST GIRL: Of course, stupid. Now, what rank would you like?

DRAFTEE: Gosh, could I be a captain?

FIRST GIRL: Look stupid. We don't kiss anybody below our rank and we're one-star generals. Now what rank would you like to be?

DRAFTEE: (Thinks and thinks and thinks). A two-star general.

FIRST GIRL: Give him a C for imagination. You could have said three-star or four-star.

DRAFTEE: I'm sorry I'm stupid.

SECOND GIRL: That's all right, we can have a stupid two-star general. You saluted me first, so I get to pin the stars on you.

(Again she kisses him hard as she reaches with one hand and picks up insignia and pins them upon him. The other girls bring in a new officer's uniform and proceed to strip him of his old clothes and fit him into the general's garb. They laugh and giggle and tickle).

DRAFTEE: Oh, gosh.

(The girls now stand aside and admire him).

FIRST GIRL: You're a two-star general. Oh, boy!!!

(They leap on him, kiss him, each girl pulling him to herself, fighting off the others. This goes on for a while, then we fade out. There is a long pause, then we fade in. The draftee's uniform is in tatters. He is alone. He is tired, but content).

DRAFTEE: (Faces audience, speaks directly into camera). Right now you expect a big blackout line, don't you? Well, I'm sorry, but this is the Theatre of the Absurd. We play this with symbols and in many levels of meaning. My line will have to be something deep, something that means one thing to one, another to another of you. So listen closely and look for the hidden message. This is the message: Buy the product.

(COMMERCIAL)

The sponsor, no doubt, will see only one meaning, but that is good enough for him.

Are you beginning to see why Off-TV should be On-TV?

* * *

EXHIBIT III.

Oh, Dad, Poor Dad, Mamma's Hung You In The Closet And I'm Feeling So Sad So I Moved All The Clothes To Make Room For Daddy.

This is a Danny Thomas type of Off-TV show. The beautiful thing about this series is that with such a long title we don't need any show. The characters will take turns in reading the title. At the end of each reading will come the commercial. Any questions?

* * *

EXHIBIT IV.

Waiting For Kildare

(We open on a surgery amphitheatre. Students, interns and residents have filled the seats radiating from the centre. But this surgery is different. Where we normally find equipment like an operating table, anesthetist's setup, autoclaves, etc., this room is completely bare except for two trees. Why these two trees grow in surgery nobody knows. We see Dr. Gillespie speaking to the patient. Both are unshaven, dressed as bums and are barefooted).

GILLESPIE: So you have appendecitis, eh?

PATIENT: What's that?

GILLESPIE: I said you have appendecitis, eh?

PATIENT: Is that what's giving me the bellyache?

GILLESPIE: If you have appendecitis you'd have a bellyache.

PATIENT: Yeah, I guess you're right.

GILLESPIE: I'm right about what?

PATIENT: Well, you're a doctor so you're right. Sometimes.

GILLESPIE: Yeah, I'm right sometime. Take a card, any card. (He holds out a deck).

PATIENT: Aren't these business cards?

GILLESPIE: Yeah. You already have one.

(Puts them away).

PATIENT: No harm.

GILLESPIE: No harm.

(They look at each other). So you have appendecitis, eh?

PATIENT: I guess so.

GILLESPIE: Sure. You've got a bellyache, haven't you?

PATIENT: Yeah.

GILLESPIE: Still, it might be upset stomach.

PATIENT: I know, but you're a doctor and you said appendecitis, so let it be appendecitis.

GILLESPIE: But I could be wrong.

PATIENT: But you're a doctor and you shouldn't be wrong.

GILLESPIE: But I could be.

PATIENT: Yeah, sure. But then what's to believe?

GILLESPIE: You're right. So you better have faith.

PATIENT: I have faith in you. What have I got?

GILLESPIE: I don't really know.

PATIENT: I'm glad you're positive.

GILLESPIE: I'm positive that I don't really know.

PATIENT: You're a good doctor. So what are you going to do?

GILLESPIE: Operate.

PATIENT: On what?

GILLESPIE: Oh, I'll take something out.

PATIENT: My appendix?

GILLESPIE: No.

PATIENT: Why not?

GILLESPIE: Because you might not have appendecitis, and then I'll make a fool of myself and you'll never have faith again.

PATIENT: Then what are you going to take out?

GILLESPIE: Don't worry. I'll find something.

PATIENT: Good.

GILLESPIE: Why good?

PATIENT: Well, you'll be doing somthing.

GILLESPIE: Yes, it's good to keep busy.

PATIENT: So when will you operate?

GILLESPIE: As soon as Kildare gets here.

PATIENT: But that's what you said yesterday.

GILLESPIE: What did I say yesterday?

PATIENT: I don't remember.

GILLESPIE: You see, maybe it's not your appendix at all. Maybe it's your brain.

PATIENT: I don't care what you operate on. Let's get going.

GILLESPIE: I will.

PATIENT: When?

GILLESPIE: As soon as Kildare gets here.

PATIENT: But that's what you said yesterday and the day before yesterday and the day before that.

GILLESPIE: I can't operate until Kildare gets here.

PATIENT: Why must you wait for Kildare?

GILLESPIE: I don't know.

PATIENT: Then operate now. Take something out. My bellyache is killing me.

GILLESPIE: I have to wait for Kildare.

PATIENT: But you know Kildare isn't coming.

GILLESPIE: Maybe he will this time.

PATIENT: That's what you always say.

GILLESPIE: Oh, Kildare will

(Continued on page 108)

LAMENT FOR LOST LORE

By MAX WILK

Hollywood.

I am sitting in the small, untidy inner sanctum of a television producer-writer on a hot afternoon, in Studio City, Calif. He is a man pushing 60, capable, seasoned, with a sharp wit undiminished by the grinding pace and the battles of 30 or more years' worth of performing writing and producing comedy material for star performers in vaudeville, on Broadway, in Radio City studios, and now, Hollywood. Today he is engaged (as are most of us who enjoy eating regularly) in pre-packaging half-hour episodes for a weekly situation comedy show.

He does not loathe his work, nor denigrate it. He does the best he can, and since he is by every standard, a talented old pro, his best is pretty good. But this has been a long day, and we stop work for a while. I have a coke, he (out of deference to a nervous stomach) takes tea. Weary wits, we spell ourselves, and shortly launch into the writer's national pasttime; we trade jokes, reminisce, dredge up anecdotes from the past. We start to relive vicariously experiences and long-gone memories.

He wants to make a particular point about the uses of irrelevance in good comedy. He tells me about the season of 1928, in vaudeville, the year I was a midget at a summer camp in Maine. He was playing piano, three-a-day, for a diseuse: On the bill in Cleveland was another act, a certain "nut" comic (whose name I have since forgotten). During his act, he would go to the rear of the stage, pick up the curtain, and peer underneath. Then he would turn to the audience, apropos of nothing, and confide "Say—guess what? The next act on the bill has a carpet."

I chortle. I offer in return a memory of Clark & McCullough in "Strike Up The Band." For every anecdote of mine, he has a dozen of his own . . . some dating from the era when he wrote for Eddie Cantor and Groucho Marx in radio, others from the cockeyed days of World War II, when as an officer in a unit assigned to produce radio shows for the Army, he commanded a ragtag bobtail outfit of a dozen-odd of the highest-priced radio gag men in the business.

Then there was the hitch he put in as staff writer for the Brothers Shubert, during which he labored in the lunatic vineyards of "Helzapoppin," with the late Ole Olsen & Chic Johnson—another stretch of his career was spent (long before CORE) in writing and producing a radio program with an all-colored cast. The jokes and stories he has stored away in his head emerge as if brought forth from the depths of a bottomless theatrical trunk. He can (and does) go on for hours with them, and he never bores and he never repeats himself—at least, not to me. Our luncheons and coffee-breaks become sessions to which I look forward.

Why Not Write It?

Weeks go by. One afternoon, late, we are walking towards the parking-lot; time to go home. Tomorrow is another day at the plant; we will check in at 9:30 and once again fall to stuffing comedy sausages for the camera. He is telling me a suddenly-remembered quip of Bob Hope's earliest radio days. I stop him. "You know something?," I ask. "I've been listening to you for days now, and you keep breaking me up with all these great stories and jokes from comics, from vaudeville and burlesque. Man, you are a living repository of 40 years' show business history. Why the heck don't you sit down and write all these stories? You could go 200 pages without repeating yourself!"

"Why should I?" he asks. "It's much more fun telling 'em."

"Yes, but think of the people you'd reach." I insist.

He snorts. "Who? A few vaudeville buffs, and a certain number of my relatives and creditors? Oh, and don't forget lawyers—checking through for possible libel suits. No thanks, Max," he says. "I'll leave the book-writing to young energetic types like you . . ."

Another joke, and he goes home. So do I.

Eventually, my term of enlistment in the funny-factory is up, and I return to my home in Connecticut from Beverly Hills, the heart of the high-rent district. Occasionally, my producer friend and I correspond. His letters are caustic, witty, full of sardonic comment on the day-to-day workings of the studio in which he continues to function.

* * *

One afternoon, riding home on a commuter train, a small item at the bottom of the obituary page hits me between the eyes. My friend Tom McKnight has tragically lost his life in an automobile accident in California.

Now he is buried, and with him is interred, not only his warmth and humanity and professional skills, but also that fund of shrewd, often caustic humor, the observations on the present, the reminiscences and jokes accumulated through four decades of American show business.

I wish you'd written that book, Tom.

Swiss Com'l TV Looms as Reality Some Time In '64

Zurich.

After more than 10 years of television, of which the first four years from 1953 to '57 were considered as a "tryout period," the introduction of commercials finally looks inevitable and may become a reality by 1964, provided the Swiss Radio Association, holder of the tv concession in Switzerland, succeeds in obtaining clearance from the Swiss Newspapers Publishers' Association with which it has an agreement to withhold commercials from Swiss video screens till the end of 1967.

This 10-year agreement, which started in '57, stems from the Newspaper Publishers' agreement at that time, when the tryout period came to an end, to contribute importantly to the financing of Swiss tv on condition it refrain from commercials for 10 years, thereby eliminating, or at least stalling, the newspapers' most potential enemy as a rival advertising medium.

The agreement further stipulated that the newspaper publishers' contribution of $465,000 per year would no longer be needed as soon as subscription fees would suffice as a source of financing, in addition to state subsidies. It was figured that 180,000 subscribers would allow the Swiss television network to become financially independent — a number that would, per conservative estimates, presumably be reached by 1965. The actual development, however, belied these estimates to an amazing degree. By the end of 1961, there were over 190,000 tv subscribers in Switzerland, another 50,000 were added the following year, and by mid-1963, total subscriptions amounted to more than 332,000.

The first 1,000,000 should be reached by 1970 at the latest — quite an accomplishment considering that the population of Switzerland today amounts to 5,500,000. If present plans for the introduction of commercial tv materialize, it should provide Swiss video with an annual gross of $3,500,00, the major part of which would serve to finance as well as enhance the quality of non-commercial telecasts.

Commercial spots would be strictly separated from other telecasts and incorporated into the frame of a non-commercial daily program of 60-90 minutes' length. Spots would be of 30-second average time per commercial, amounting to $1,400 per minute, excluding production cost. Political and/or religious advertising will not be accepted. Discussions are underway whether advertising of alcoholic beverages, tobacco and certain pharmaceutical products should be banned or not. Clerical as well as youth organizations strongly urge a tv advertising ban for these products, whilst other circles plead for a more liberal policy.

Television's 'Look Back In Anger'

'63 Characterized By Taut Tempers and Emotional Indulgences As Competition Among TV Networks Hits Fever Pitch — Moral of the Story: 'There's No Rating In Hating'

By GEORGE ROSEN

While 1963 may have marked a little less violence on the nation's television screens, as compared to a few years' back, it represented, nonetheless, a new high in violent passions within the tv industry.

Never has competition, network vs. network, advertiser vs. advertiser, agency vs. agency, been fired to such intense heat. Never have tempers been so taut. Never have vengeances, some of them highly personal, been so emotionally indulged.

Now that it's a new year, many of the participants can review their role for the tv semester of '63 only if they "look back in anger." Witness a steamed-up Danny Seymour, J. Walter Thompson's top exec and second only to prexy Norman Strouse, in his last spring's avowed campaign to "bust up" the Sunday evening lineup of CBS to secure a prominent Sabbath showcasing (the most prized in all tv) for Ford as a counterweight to Chevrolet's "Bonanza" blockbuster. When he failed (CBS refused to consider dislodging Ed Sullivan), he took the Ford business to ABC with an order for three weekly minutes of "Arrest & Trial" Sundays 8:30 to 10.

The cool Nielsen assessment of his heated plunge ("Arrest & Trial," with a Nielsen share of 23%, ranks well below the average show's rating and far beneath that of many other programs he could have bought for Ford) is believed by some observers to be one of the key factors behind the major revamp of J. Walter Thompson's tv buying for next season, with newly-appointed exec Bill Hylan (ex-CBS) in direct line command.

Seymour's emotional disaffection of CBS, of course, traces to his other failures to induce CBS prexy Jim Aubrey to fit JWT clients into the network's "icecream" spots. For example, Aubrey flatly refused to accept Seymour's order to place the Ford-sponsored "Hazel" in the Tuesday 9 to 9:30 p.m. half-hour immediately following Red Skelton.

A Bestirred Bud Barry

Or, again referring to the hotly contested CBS Tuesday 9 to 9:30 period, witness a bestirred Bud Barry fighting —with every Young & Rubicam resource he could muster —to move Jack Benny from 9:30-10 p.m. to the 9 o'clock slot. Arguing that Benny and cosponsor General Foods, CBS-TV's biggest client, had a "moral right" to continue to follow immediately after Red Skelton, whom Aubrey moved from 8:30 to 8 p.m. this season, Barry (but not until after hot words and a determined campaign) lost. Meantime, Barry's arch agency rival, Benton & Bowles' Lee Rich, who also handles a big chunk of the General Foods network buying, quietly arranged to buy the contested CBS 9 to 9:30 period for his other giant client, Procter & Gamble.

Now that the smoke is beginning to clear, the latest Nielsens shows "Petticoat Junction" at 9 way up in the Top 10 listings. And Jack Benny, who stayed at 9:30, is ahead of last year's Nielsen with a fat rating of 29.1. However, the emotional climate which permeated the Benny show headquarters became so heated that the veteran comedian, the minute CBS failed to exercise its option for next season, signed with NBC. While the Bob Kintner network, it's figured, will offer Benny its best half-hour, observers point out that, currently, NBC has but one program which outrates Benny—namely, "Bonanza." And even though Benny stalked off to NBC, General Foods after coolly assessing the facts, decided to remain with CBS next season.

But the hot tempers have by no means been restricted to the network-agency relations front. They've abounded on the network-producer frontiers as well. While the fighting and the squabbling may not have received the glaring publicity of "David Susskind Blasts Webs" headlines, new and volatile personalities have given new bitterness to old relationships.

For example, ABC's Ed Sherick, whom ABC-TV prexy Tom Moore recently installed in the vital and sensitive post of program v.p. (without any prior experience in this area), unleashed, even before his new swivel chair was warm, some hotly adverse criticisms— by phone and in person—to some of the more prominent production companies. Result was that several decided to make ABC the "third port of call" when offering their new program wares. As a further result, certain key pilots—which had been scheduled to be offered first to ABC—were never discussed at 7 W. 66th St. Instead they are already "in the can" for another network.

Hot tempers and temptations for revenge, many agency men feel, has made—on several occasions—for a weakening in a network schedule. "Counter programming," they assert, is but a "euphemism" for anger-inspired, vengeful program rejuggling. To move a program to improve its rating, they say, is one thing. But to move a program to "knock off" a competitor's, they feel, is self-defeating.

Take, for example, ABC's move of "Ben Casey" from 10-11 p.m. on Mondays (where a year ago it had a Top Five Nielsen of 29.5) to Wednesdays at 9 was, in the view of agency men, a patent attempt to "attack" CBS-TV's "Beverly Hillbillies," television's toprated show. ABC was said to believe that even though Casey's rating might well be reduced, the latter would do severe Nielsen damage to "Hillbillies." Result—today "Ben Casey" ranks 38th in the national Nielsen tallies while "Beverly Hillbillies" is still the No. 1 show and in fact has actually increased its year ago Nielsen of 33.7 to 37.7. "Casey," meantime, together with cosponsors Procter & Gamble, Alberto-Culver, Brown & Williamson, Noxzema and Bristol-Myers, is down from last November's 29.5 to its present 20.8.

All of which, as one agency wag put it, contains a key moral: "If you want a Nielsen rating, first put away your hating."

No Room For Daddy

By CHARLES ISAACS

Hollywood.

"Danny Thomas Retires."

Danny Thomas read the headline in VARIETY, put the paper aside and walked slowly onto the rehearsal stage. He was the picture of sadness. His head was bowed, his cigar drooped and singed the hair sticking out of his open sport shirt. He even said "ouch!" sadly.

Charles Isaacs

"What's the matter, Danny?" pretty Marjorie Lord asked.

"I'm quitting," Danny answered. "I'm folding the show."

Marjorie laughed. "Quitting? You? Quitting?"

"It's true," Danny said.

Marjorie stared at him a moment, then realizing he was serious exclaimed, "You can't do that! You can't just leave! I'm your wife!"

"Wife?" Danny asked incredulously. "What are you talking about? You're Marjorie Lord. I'm Danny Thomas."

"Your're Danny Williams!" Marjorie began to sob, "and I'm Mrs. Williams. I've been married to you for nine years."

"Marjorie!" Danny spoke sharply. Stop being foolish. We were never married."

Marjorie suddenly checked her sobs and blazed at him with anger. "Now I know why you threw out that first script the writers wrote for us years ago. It was a marriage ceremony."

Danny shook his head. "I just didn't think it was a funny marriage."

Rice & Old Nielsens

"No," Marjorie snarled, "not because it wasn't funny. You said it was too legitimate. You just didn't want to marry me in front of witnesses. Especially with the kind of Nielsen we have."

"Honey," Danny said gently, "I'm really very fond of you, but you are married to someone else."

"But that's only two days a week," Marjorie started to cry again. "And it's not sponsored."

"I know" Danny said tolerantly, "and it's not produced and you ad lib it, but still, it's your real marriage. I'm just makebelieve."

"What are you going to do now?"

"Oh, I've got plenty to keep me busy. I want to have time to think and plan. I've got several shows to worry about. The Bill Dana Show, The Joey Bishop Show, The Dick Van Dyke Show ,The Andy Griffith Show and the new Walter Brennan Show. I want to watch them more closely and see if I can figure out why they're so successful when the leads all have small noses."

"What will happen to all the nice people around us? What about Sheldon Leonard?"

"He'l be fine. After all, he's not really a producer-director, he's a marlin fisherman."

"But he made a great sacrifice for us. He gave up acting to become our director."

"Gave up acting?" Danny hooted. "Gave up playing hoods! Why he was in so many gangster pictures Joe Valachi informed on him. He was sure he'd seen him some place. Besides, Shel is in business with me and we'll go on together. As a matter of fact, we plan to package Outer Space. There are plenty of people out there on those crazy planets who haven't seen family situation shows."

Marjorie sighed. "Well, I'm going to put on new makeup." She started away and turned back. "Will you go back to your real wife, too, Danny?"

"Sure I will. Of course, I don't know if she'll remember me. I've been away so much that everytime I bring home free General Foods products she thinks I'm the delivery boy."

Marjorie walked away and Rusty Hamer ambled in.

"Hi, Maggie," he called to her. She passed him with a sad face.

"What's the matter?"

"You'll see," she said.

Rusty walked over to the conference table. "What's eating her?"

"She was upset," Danny said. His brown eyes gazed at Rusty with affection. Eleven years ago Rusty had been a redheaded curly-haired little monster. Now he was taller.

"Rusty, I don't know how to tell you this—"Danny began.

"What dya mean, you don't know how to tell me?" Rusty demanded. "You've been yelling at me for all these years. You were never bashful about telling me anything!"

"Don't be rude!" Danny thundered at him, "Can't you learn any manners? Haven't the nice, gracious words the writers put in your mouth rubbed off on your tongue just a little bit?"

"I only remember the big insult jokes they gave me," Rusty said. "That was the real me."

"Well, okay," Danny sneered, "you asked for it. I'm quitting."

"No!" Rusty gasped. He gave a little cry. "I'm sorry, daddy, I didn't mean to be nasty. Don't leave us!"

"This is just a make-believe family," Danny pleaded. "You have a home to go to."

"No," the big redheaded boy cried, "I've been here 11 years. This is my home. You're my daddy."

"I'm not your daddy!"

"It says on the door 'Make Room For Daddy,' so if

(Continued on page 98)

Is TV Psychosomatic?

By CARROLL CARROLL

As I sit night after night watching tv, I suddenly start wondering if there really is such a thing. What if there isn't? What if it's not there at all, just something I imagine; an aberration, an hallucination brought on by some traumatic experience? How terrible to be plagued with the fear that I might have made-up "Grindl." And yet, who knows?

When I was a little boy I was badly scared by my aunt's one-eyed gardner. I've learned enough psychiatry from "The 11th Hour," and other prime time seances, to realize that the shocking gardener incident may be why I think I see a monster with one glowing eye standing where the bookcase used to be. Sometimes I think I should seek help. I may send away for a book called "How To Look Into Your Own Mind Without Getting Crosseyed" or "A Doctor Makes A Buck." I might discover that America has not really substituted "look" for "bock" and "trauma" for "drama.' Maybe my firm belief that this has really happened is the result of an over-protective parent. For instance, when I was a year old my mother used to carry me downstairs instead of letting me go down all by myself, fall and clunk my little noggin. This action could have given me the same point of view I now feel the rest of the world has. Does everybody really see tv or do I just imagine I hear them talking to me about it, while in reality I'm merely talking to myself?

How Do You Kick The Habit?

I hear something inside me murmuring "Waste! Waste! Waste!" as I sit night after night watching regular tv programming, hooked as any junkie on an electronic complex of complexes. Yet I don't know how to kick the habit. And as I rationalize, "Is it really a waste?", I ask myself, "How, for instance would I ever have learned to sublimate retreat into the glory of defeat, if I hadn't subjected myself to two solid seasons of watching the New Yerk Mets in action." Then I wonder, did I watch them? Are they possible?

If it hadn't been for an hourlong teleplay called "Upside Down Is The Man On The Riderless Horse," I would still not know why I always spill soup on my tie. This was a searching psychological probe into the life of a man who was a failure as a traffic policeman because he subconsciously wanted to be a chiropodist. It was a powerful vehicle, a sort of a tricycle that made a try at combining three great tv cycles . . . The police cycle, the doctor cycle and the psychological cycle. For a while I thought it might lead to a cycle of tv entertainment delving into the secrets of any chiropodist's file and teaching people, who were not able to toe the line, how to align the toes. It did not accomplish all that but it did cure me of spotting my cravat, because by relating to it, and sublimating, I was able to understand that I had this disgusting habit only because my mother let me know she'd prayed for a girl instead of a boy. It was as simple as that. The slobbery was merely a psychological type for snobbery. I was protesting against being what I am, in conflict with the urge to be what my mother wanted me to be. The result was that instead of getting spots before my eyes, I got the spots on my ties. Those who scoff at analysis claim this isn't a psychological phenomenon at all, and that my life is just a series of typographical errors.

Another beautiful and haunting hour I seem to have spent with tv was watching a play called "Mute Is The Singer Whose Golden Voice Turns Green The Skin Of Dreams." This one taught me why I have never been able to master the art of sewing on buttons. It seems, when I was a little boy I threw an anchor out of a rowboat without tying the anchor rope to a ring on the side of the boat. This is a simple boyhood memory yet who would think of it unless taken back step by step through the horrible moments of discovery as the anchor sank and took the rope with it. There I sat, my world crashed around me, as the boat drifted out to sea. I could have been drowned. Perhaps I was.

Even this thought would not have occurred to me if it were not for that series called "Is The Impossible Possible." Unfortunately this series had its first 13 weeks cancelled immediately after its premiere because research showed the world was not ready for it. It was above the head of your average tv viewer, it was a masterful piece of gazing into the gauzy world beyond our comprehension, a world which, fortunately, seems completely clear and familiar to all who write for tv. I also learned what love was from this one episode of that gripping series. It was called, with simple directness, "Treasure That Little Nothing You Hold So Loosely In Your Hands."

This was a delicate bijou glance at the human soul in its writhing relation to reality and it took me by the hand, gave me a mental kick in the pants, an emotional slap on the back and a literal pain in the neck. It immediately revealed to me the truth about the girl I thought I was in love with and, man, did we have a fight! The subplot taught me that a man's body can be larger than his ego, that a 14½ collar is cramping to a 16 neck and that a 36-inch sleeve will hide the hand on a 29-inch arm.

The world of fantasy reveals the world of reality and fiction becomes stranger than truth. These facts have been made clear to me. No more do I live with my resentments, clutching them to my heart and letting no one know how I feel. TV has taught me this is the wrong thing to do. So now I get rid of all my resentments by pouring them right onto the world. And I know if I keep on doing this long enough my story, too, will be on tv, either as an episode on a psychology show or a police show. That can only happen of course, if there really is such a thing as tv.

I guess I'll just have to wait patiently till the doctor can see me.

The Rating Maker

By AL SCHWARTZ

(With apologies to N. Richard Nash)

FOREWARD

When drought in ratings hits the lush grasslands of the richly fertile networks, they are green no more and the dying is a palpable thing. What happens to programs can be read in coldly statistical reports issued by the Wheelson Co. What happens to the people of the networks—beyond the terrible phenomena of sudden huge gaps in their schedules—is an incalculable and febrile kind of desperation. Shows with obvious merit die and the hopes and careers of many talented performers, writers and craftsmen die along with them.

ACT I

(The lights come up slowly to reveal a conference room of the C.B.N.A. television network. In the center of the room stands the inevitable elongated conference table.

Seated at the table we discover L. M. Thomas, head of business administration. Thomas is tough, vigorous and ready for battle with another pressure-ridden day. He glances at a sheaf of papers on the desk. He rises to his feet as H. B. Strongheart, the president of C.B.N.A. enters. Strongheart is in his mid-50s, a good man to take store in. He lives in the future. There is deep vision in him).

L.M.
(rising)

Morning, H.B.

H.B.

Morning, L.M.

L.M.

I debated pulling you out of that drag race, H.B. but I believe this meeting to be highly imperative.

(Irritated, H.B. raises the visor of his racing helmet and glares at L.M.).

H.B.

Get to the point!

L.M.

Two nights from now Wheelson conducts its new survey, and you know what happened after their last report eight of our shows went down the drain.

H.B.
(sadly)

I thought the public wanted hillbillies.

L.M.

Hillbillies, yes, but not Martian hillbillies. The public isn't ready for a "way out-house."

H.B.
(sitting down at table)

Okay, L.M. Proceed.

L.M.

Shouldn't C.W. be here? After all he is head of rating research.

H.B.

Let him sleep. He didn't get much sleep last night.

L.M.

I don't mind if he sleeps, but I wish you'd make him stop using the conference table.

(He angrily pokes the sprawled figure on the table).

L.M.
(bitterly)

If we could only get our ratings that high.

(He again prods the slumbering figure of C.W. Scan. C.W. struggles to an elbow and rubs his bleary eyes).

C.W.
(reciting in monotone)

. . . Bonanza, 32 . . . Dick Van Dyke, 29 . . . Danny Thomas, 26 . . . Lucille Ball, 24 . . . Dr. Sam Sebastion, 12 . . .

H.B.
(angrily)

That's—8! We leaped four points last week.

L.M.
(glumly)

H.B. If we don't do something abot our ratings we'll lose every sponsor we've got.

(The three sit lost in thought for a moment. Suddenly the office door swings open screaming on its hinges, whacking against the wall like a pistol shot. The three turn to the door but there is no one there).

L.M.

Who opened that door?

H.B.

Must have been the wind.

(BILL STARDUST steps into the doorway. He is a big man, lithe, agile—a braggart, a gentle dreamer. He carries a sort of hickory stick—it is his weapon, his magic wand, his pride of manhood. He hears H.B.'s line about the wind).

STARDUST

The name's Stardust. Stardust is the name.

H.B.

What is it? What can we do for you?

STARDUST

You're asking the wrong question. The question is what can I do for you.

L.M.

What?? ?

STARDUST

You need help. You're in a parcel of trouble. So far this year they've cancelled eight dramatic shows, six situation comedies, four soap operas, three quizzes, two frost warnings, and Dr. Sam Sebastian is about to lose his stethoscope.

H.B.

You seem to know a lot about our shows?

STARDUST

What are you gonna do about it?

L.M.

If you know we lost the shows, you ought to know what killed them. Ratings. Ever hear of them?

STARDUST

Hear of them. That's all I hear. Wherever I go, there's rating trouble ahead of me. But when I leave—behind me there's high ratings—high ratings.

L.M.

I think this man is crazy.

H.B.

You mean you can raise ratings?

STARDUST

It's been done, brother, its been done.

H.B.

Where? How?

STARDUST

Take my word for it. Last year I raised the rating of one program so high they had to change the name of the show to Route 99. You are looking at a specialist. I can raise Huntley's rating without disturbing Brinkley.

H.B.

What's the deal?

STARDUST

One hundred dollars in advance, and when Wheelson takes its next rating yours will be the highest rating of any network.

H.B.

L.M. pay him the hundred.

* * *

ACT 2

(The same conference room a short time later. L.M. is paying Stardust his fee, counting out the money on the conference table. H.B. is watching quietly; C.W. with keyed excitement).

L.M.

Ninety- ninety five—one hundred. There's your hundred bucks. What's your plan?

STARDUST

What I'm gonna ask you to do—it ain't gonna make much sense. But what's sensible about a flash of lightning?

L.M.

Lightning! H.B. I told you he was crazy.

STARDUST

Now here's what I want you to do.

(he hurries to the window and points out)

You see that little old wagon of mine? On that wagon I got me a big bass drum. Somebody's gotta beat that drum!

L.M.

Beat it? What for?

STARDUST

Don't ask questions. Now who's gonna beat that drum?

H.B.

Me. I'll beat it.

L.M.
(flabbergasted)

You—the president of a network!

H.B.

I need the exereise. It will keep my wrists in shape for next week's drag races.

STARDUST
(pretending to talk to himself, but his eye on L.M.)

Too bad you ain't got a mule on the place.

L.M.
(startled)

A mule?

STARDUST

On second thought any vice president will do. L.M. get a length of strong rope, find yourself a vice president and tie his legs together.

L.M.

I ain't goona do it.

STARDUST

Oh, come now, L.M. you promised.

(STARDUST turns to C.W.)

Well, C.W., that leaves you with the most important task of all. I want you to pay close attention. Now as I recall the Wheelson company takes its ratings off 600 meters placed in 600 tv sets in 600 homes. Correct?

L.M.

What are you driving at?

STARDUST

Just this. Now in my wagon I got a bucket of white paint—its special—its electro-magnetized, oxygenated, dechromonated white. C.W. I want you to go out and paint a white line . . .

L.M.
(interrupting)

Paint one. He can't even walk one.

STARDUST

. . . you go out and paint a great big white line with a great big arrow pointing in the direction of those 600 homes.

L.M.

Give me back the hundred bucks. You are crazy.

STARDUST
(pocketing the money)

I'm not that crazy. C.W. here's your brush. Start making like Tom Sawyer!

* * *

ACT 3

(TIME: A few nights later.

SCENE: Roof of Station C.B.N.A.

As the scene opens, H.B. can be seen beating his drum. C.W. stands to one side holding a bedraggled brush, his ivy league suit splattered with white paint. L.M. sits atop a protesting figure with its legs tied together).

L.M.

And how do you propose to accomplish your ridiculous miracle?

STARDUST

What do you care how I do it as long as its done. But I'll tell you how I'll do it.

(pointing up)

See that teeny white cloud? I'll lift my stick and take a long swipe at it. Then I say some magic words like: "Cumulus, Nimbulo—Cumulus." Pretty soon that teeny white cloud puffs up with anger, bursts into a flaming tongue of forked lightning, and shoots a fiery bolt down to earth. The electrical discharge from the bolt follows the white line C.W. painted, into the 600 homes, into the 600 television sets, and into the 600 Wheelson meters knocking out all meters except those tuned to C.B.N.A.

H.B.

Brilliant strategy. Brilliant.

L.M.
(the practical one)

What makes you so sure it won't knock us off, too?

STARDUST

Faith, brother, faith. I've got so much faith it's leaking out of my shoes.

(STARDUST takes his stick, and points it at the white cloud)

STARDUST
(chanting)

Cumulus! Nimbulo! Cumulus!

(The cloud swells black and ugly. There is a loud clap of thunder followed by a blinding flash of lightning).

STARDUST

Look . . . down there . . . look at that bolt of lightning strike the white line. In a few seconds you should have the highest ratings of any network!

(a bewildered expression crosses his face)

Wait a minute. The lightning is going in the wrong direction. It's headed this way!

(He starts beating C.W. over the head with his stick).

You fool you! You painted the arrow on the wrong

No Room for Daddy

Continued from page 97

you're not 'daddy' who the hell are you?"

"I'm Danny Thomas, an actor, playing your daddy."

"I don't believe you."

"Look at me, Rusty. Do I resemble you at all? Do you look like me? Look at my face. Look at my nose. Do you have my nose?"

"Gosh, no—I think you got yours and part of mine, too. Anyway, that doesn't mean anything. Lots of sons don't look like their fathers."

"Rusty, you've been playing a part for 11 years. Rusty Williams created by Mel Shavelson."

"Mel Shavelson?"

"Yes, Mel Shavelson, a very talented writer, director, producer of television and motion pictures created you."

"Then I'm half-Jewish?"

"He's not your father either. He wrote a character and we cast you to play the part."

"You mean my life has all been a sham?"

"I figured I had a cheap father."

"For the last time. I'm not your father! This was play acting. You are Rusty Hamer—not Rusty Williams. You are an actor. At the end of this season you're free to get another job. I'm sure with your talents you'll do very well."

"If I'm not your son, then Marjorie isn't my mother. Right?"

"Right." Danny said. "She's Marjorie Lord, an actress."

"Good. I'm gonna marry that girl," Rusty said and swaggered from the stage.

Danny lit his cigar stub and looked around the shadowed set. Eleven years he had given to this show. What had he gotten in return? Money. But was money happiness? He blew a smoke ring and thought, "I love smoke rings. I get 50 smoke rings out of each cigar. The cigars cost a dollar. Thats 2c a smoke ring. Yes, money is happiness."

His reverie was broken by the piping voice of little Angela Cartwright. "Hello, Danny." She came over and kissed him on the check and choked on a smoke ring.

"Am I early?"

"No, the others are here," Danny said. "Sweetheart, I want to tell you something. Promise me that you'll be brave, and won't cry, no matter what I say."

Angela sat close to him and said, "Yes, daddy."

"We are doing our last season, darling," Danny said softly.

"What do you mean, last season?"

"We're splitting up."

"You mean you and mon are getting a divorce?"

"No, we're not getting a divorce!"

"A trial separation?"

"Look!" Danny said, trying to control his temper, "I've just been through this with your mother—I mean Marjorie! She is not going to be my wife anymore!"

"Who gets custody of me?" Angela asked, bewildered.

"Your own mother gets custody of you!" Danny shouted.

Angela scarcely listened. "When you adopted me I thought it was forever."

"It was with 13-week options!"

"You lied to the welfare people!"

"Baby, I love you, but you've got to understand. You were never my real daughter. I hired you for a television show—and I've paid you all these years."

"That's it!" shouted Angela. She leaped off her chair. "This is just a plot. You're softsoaping me! You're going to cut my salary! Where's my agent? Help! Somebody call my agent! I'm being cut in salary!"

"Shut up!" Danny shouted and dust shook down from the parallels. "Angela, another scream out of you and I'll turn you over my knee."

Angela laughed. "Now you're my Daddy again."

Danny smiled. "You little minx. Honey, listen. You've got to believe me. The show is folding this year. I just wanted you to hear it from me instead of reading it in VARIETY."

"It can't be all over!" cried Angela, "Why I've still got the best years of my life ahead of me—until I'm 10 at least."

"Honey, you'll work on other shows."

"Other shows!" wailed Angela, "How much call is there for a little girl like me—pretty, sophisticated and natural. I'll be competing with all the stagestruck amateurs—not to mention dozens of midgets."

"You're a beautiful little girl," Danny said, "and you'll be coming off a hit show."

"But what will I do? Where will I go? I've been on this stage all of my life. I've never talked like real people. I've just memorized lines."

"Then get Jack Elinson and Chuck Stewart to write your everyday dialog for the rest of your life. Be careful not to repeat any of it, or they get residuals."

"Well, if that's the way things are, okay," she smiled. She put out her hand. "Goodbye, Danny."

"What dya mean, goodbye?" Danny frowned, "we still have all season together."

"I know," she said evenly, "and it's strictly business. From now on you're just a bignosed actor who feeds me straight lines!" She turned and flounced off.

Two men walked into the livingroom set and began measuring the walls with a long steel tape. Danny looked at them curiously and then walked over.

"Fellows, mind if I ask what you're doing?"

"Not at all," one said with a smile, "we're measuring your sets."

"May I ask why?"

"We bought them for delivery in March and just want to make sure we get 'em. We start shooting in April on our new series."

"What new series is that?" Danny asked.

"Brand new idea. The network loves it and between you and me, we think General Foods is real hot for it."

"What's the name of it?"

"Make Room for Mommy!"

They completed their measuring and left. Danny wandered over to the couch and sat down. An electrician, not noticing him, turned out all the lights except a single lamp near the couch. Danny leaned back and blew a smoke ring. "Two cents . . ."

He blew another, "Four cents . . . six cents . . . eight cents . . ." A tear formed in the corner of his right eye, another in the left They swelled and finally tumbled down alongside his nose and on down his cigar. More tears followed and soon the cigar went out.

TV BEHIND THE IRON CURTAIN

Miracles of the Media

By DAVID SCHOENBRUN

Paris.

The audience was drawing to a close. The Pope had said little, preferring to ask questions, keen questions that revealed both interest and knowledge of modern communications. His Holiness was particularly concerned about the problems of telecommunications and the vast complexities of the television machinery required for so difficult and fast-moving an event as President Eisenhower's globe-trotting good-will mission.

Turning to the television reporters, the Pontiff said: "Do you realize that you have been given the power to work miracles? You can speak softly and be heard around the world. You point your machines, and, behold, a hundred million people can enter a church built only to hold a few hundred. Just think what Saint Peter might have done to spread the Gospel had he been able to use television and radio! Yours is a great power, indeed, gentlemen. Remember that power must be used with responsibility at all times."

The words of the Pope have taken on an added meaning today, for at the time of that audience there was not yet a talking star in the sky that could bring to all the world the sounds and sights of a public event. Those who heard the Pope's discourse on television must have recalled his words in the terrible days that followed the assassination of the President, when, in one of the darkest hours of history, television achieved its finest hour of public service and wrought a world-wide miracle.

For the first time in history almost all the peoples of the civilized worlds, and the industrially advanced countries, lived through the same moment, shared the same feelings, participated in the same event, at one and the same time. No one can even begin to comprehend the effect of this miracle. What will be its enduring influence on the hearts and minds of a half a billion people? What does it mean when Russians and Americans share the same emotional scene, and weep together at the bier of an American President, although they are worlds apart in almost every respect? Will it, perhaps, have no effect, no influence at all? Would the reaction have been the same as in the years before the invention of radio and television?

TV: A Medium Apart

Public opinion pollsters and serious scholars around the world are in the process of studying these questions. Whether or not they find the answers, one of the observations of the Pope has been confirmed and reconfirmed: television is a miraculous power which brought hundreds of millions of people into St. Matthews to join the leaders of the world in a last tribute to John F. Kennedy that was unique in human history. No other medium of human expression can work this miracle of world-wide, instantaneous and simultaneous participation in a single event.

Confirmation of the Pontiff's vision brings with it added confirmation of his warning: such great power is an awesome responsibility. In the space of a few brief, tragic hours television both succeeded brilliantly and failed lamentably to bear this trust with the full responsibility and dignity that it demands. All the men and women of the electronics industry, executives, technicians, editors, broadcasters performed a miracle of steadiness, strength and sobriety as they brought the world to the funeral of the President. So magnificent was the performance of all concerned, for so many trying hours and days, that the television industry was praised by all, including its most carping critics.

It no way diminishes the honor of television to recall, however, some of the dreadful moments of its failures, the endless repetition of the same information, and, worse, misinformation; the droning of the mechanical men who write nothing that they read and do not even seem to understand what they are mouthing; worst of all, the violation of basic principles of law and justice, as television acted as witness, prosecutor, judge and jury, with an almost wild-eyed irresponsibility. No other medium of human expression can work this miscarriage of justice on so vast a scale, to say nothing of the bottomless vacuity to which this changeling can sink before and after reaching the noblest heights of inspiration. This, too, merits study by those concerned with public opinion and the role of free communications in a free society.

The growing powers of government, necessary though they may be in a shrinking, crowded world, strike fear in all thinking men. The force and geometric progression of central powers make it more than ever imperative that free men act with such responsibility, such self-discipline and trust, that government powers will neither be tempted nor provoked to curb freedom in the name of the commonweal. Many thoughtful men have been concerned about the issue of freedom and responsibility in this century of technological growth and the demands of an exploding population. Never before has there been so evident a demonstration of the need for deep concern, and for a full appraisal of all the media of information in the blinding light of the electronic miracle.

If St. Peter Had Used TV

So spectacular is television, so powerful its impact on so many peoples everywhere that one forgets not only its errors and its failures, but its very real limitations. Television cameras can see and hear and transmit but they cannot see, hear and transmit all that is happening even directly within their range. Above all cameras do not distinguish between truths and lies, both of which are telegenic, because cameras cannot think. This is a fact that is frequently overlooked by television officials and by television producers who become more fascinated with effects than facts, and who bandy about such phrases as "thousand pound pencil" or "cinema verite," as though a camera were writing anything, or a pencil itself anything more than a tool in the hands of a writer, a human being, a thinking man. As for "cinema verite" and other such superficialities lightly tossed about, what was the cinematic verity that the world found in sounds and sights alone?

Even the Pope, with all the wisdom, experience and humanity of the pontifical office, was mystified by the electronic miracle into posing a dubious proposition. When one is invited to think of what Saint Peter might have done to spread the Gospel if he had had television at his disposal, one must first ask: would Saint Peter have been permitted to use television by the authorities of Rome, and, if so, would the Gospel have been given equal time with the Senate, and, finally, would there still have been the power of the faith of a human being and the miracle of the written word and all that competes for the minds and hearts of men, outside of the electronic arena?

Television may have worked a miracle, may have had the greatest single and most immediate impact on the world, but it is not at all sure that the most enduring influence, the most meaningful impact was not that of the other media of communications, all of which have a particular and unique role in human affairs. Did the massive, miasmic pervasiveness of global television provide all the information and understanding that people needed and sought? Or, despite the television hypnosis were there not more papers and magazines bought and read than ever before? Whose influence was the greater: the commentator's or the columnists? The newscaster or the newswriter? Whose the more beneficial?

The answers may never be

(Continued on page 119)

HARDEST GUY TO PLEASE: GOMULKA

Warsaw.

(Radio Free Europe, the privately-supported American broadcasting station with headquarters and studios in Munich, has more than a passing interest in television programming in its five target countries. On the air daily with a full program schedule to Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Rumania, RFE must continually evaluate tv's impact on its potential listening audience. The following is taken from a recent Radio Free Europe special report to behind the Iron Curtain.)

In spite of the high cost of tv sets—in Czechoslovakia one must pay the equivalent of five months salary for the cheapest set—coupled with rather dull programming and almost non-existent repair and service facilities, television has become enormously popular behind the Iron Curtain.

Regardless of the present shortcomings of Communist TV, no one can deny that it has had a considerable development in the last five years. Rumania, for example, has seen its tv sets increase from 500 in early 1958 to almost 500,000 today. Another bloc country—Poland—has had an equally spectacular growth in set registrations; from a little over 22,000 in 1957 to approximately 1,000,000 this year.

Part of the trouble with television behind the curtain comes from its rapid growth. Russia had only two stations in 1950. Today there are 130, including 94 with full production facilities. Transmissions are made in 32 languages and cover a territory with a total population of 100,000,000.

According to an editorial in Pravda a few weeks ago, all Soviet broadcasting is still somewhat "dreary and stereotyped and lacking in effectiveness and vigor." Russian tv efforts have come in for particularly heavy criticism from its own press. While admitting that some excellent live productions of opera, concerts and children's programs are carried, one of the main criticisms has been that "there is too much talk and too few pictures."

Techniques of production have also been hit. From the viewers' standpoint, there is little imagination in the control booth, with many centerstage shots and little camera movement.

Another Russian paper, Literaturnaya Gazeta, complains that television is becoming a "graveyard of old plays," with drama productions that are a "profanation of two arts—that of theatre and that of television."

Resent 'Foreign Style'

A second major problem of Communist TV was pointed up in an attack by the Polish Communist Party first secretary in a recent central committee plenum. Secretary Gomulka, also an ardent and outspoken critic of Radio Free Europe for different reasons, noted that a "foreign style" is too often evident in Polish tv fare.

Trybuna Ludu carried the reply of Wlodzimierz Sokorski, head of the Polish radio-tv network, who protested that every transmission is given a careful political screening before going on the air.

Sokorski, who was Polish Minister of Culture in the Stalinist era (1952-56) but developed "liberal" tendencies rather quickly after Gomulka's return to the government, admitted that there could be no excuse for errors committed by his departments, though they did try to follow the party line in the "difficult sphere of propaganda and culture."

However, he explained, the tv network was working under "serious technical and financial difficulties," thus raising the third tv problem area—inadequate financing of tv writing, programming and production.

Sokorsky added that apart from films, all of his tv material had to be sent live because he lacked the

(Continued on page 123)

WHY I GIVE CONCERTS

By JACK BENNY

Hollywood.

This article has absolutely nothing to do with VARIETY's anniversary issue. The only reason I am writing it is because one day, while having lunch in New York, VARIETY asked me why I give concerts.

"With all your different activities—a weekly show on television, guest appearances, benefits, annual appearances at Las Vegas and Lake Tahoe, banquets, how do you find time to do concerts and why do you do them?," was the VARIETY question.

So I told the editor that instead of explaining it while trying to enjoy our lunch, I would write it as as article. He could then read it and so could everybody else in show business who is the least bit interested.

Why anyone would be interested, I haven't the slightest idea, but here goes:

The most important reason for my giving violin concerts—which I have been doing for the past seven years—is because I am definitely a frustrated violinist.

Some of my frustrations comes, of course, from the fact that my wife, Mary, long ago banished me to a far corner of the house when I practice. It's a small room, 90% tile and 10% towel—the same place in better circle's is known as the powderroom. And she has long since stopped apologizing to the neighbors who live on that side of the horse. We did once hear them wonder why they never saw the cats we obviously house, and didn't know about the kennel laws in Beverly Hills, but we ignore those slurs.

If by some miracle, I could become another Isaac Stern or a Yehudi Menuhin overnight, I would gladly give up my career as a comedian. As it is, I have managed to combine the two careers. One pays more than the other,however. Fortunately.

I have given concerts with practically every major symphony orchestra in America, and to show you the guts I have, I appeared first at Carnegie Hall. I fear nothing.

I have been acclaimed by such great conductors as Alfred Wallenstein, Leonard Bernstein, Paul Paray, Izler Solomon, George Szell, Paul Kletzki, William Steinberg and Stanislaw Skcowaszewski to name a few. (In fact, the last name sounded like a few).

During my lifetime I have also played duets with Jascha Heifetz, Isaac Sterm, Yehudi Menuhin, Joseph Szigeti, the late Albert Spalding, Janey Mansfield and Henny Youngman.

My closest friend in the world of classical music is Isaac Stern. He insults me more often than George Burns, who has been a friend of mine for 40 years. I'll never forget a remark that Isaac made to me after a concert I gave in Philadelphia.

We went out for a bite to eat afterwards and suddenly he looked up at me and said: "You know, Jack, when you walk out on the stage with your violin, dressed in tails, stand in front of a 90-piece orchestra, you actually look like the world's greatest violinist . . It's a darn shame you have to play."

If he had stopped in the middle of that sentence, I would have appreciated it much more.

I've saved my press clippings, of course. I am thrifty in all ways. Some of them I quote, to prove that I've really played these concerts. They weren't dream sequences from my television show.

The Chicago Daily News wrote: "Never has there been such a performance. I broke the Opera House record for benefits, and the hearts of violin lovers for miles around."

The San Francisco News-Call Bulletin wrote: "Mr. Benny does things with the violin that a Heifetz probably couldn't match. Is the world ready for such fiddling?"

Wellllll . . I've been wondering for a long time what they meant by that!

The Detroit Free Press said: "Detroit laughed when Benny stood up to play."

The Cleveland Plain Dealer wrote: "Only an artist who knows how to really play his instrument could do the wrong things so rightly."

You can believe I'll never let that critic get near my violin teacher to get the true story.

And the Dallas Times Herald's reviewer commented: "As a violinist, Jack Benny is the world's greatest comedian."

That has always seemed somewhat ambigious to me but I've never wanted to delve further into the full meaning of his remarks.

Of course, I have had other reviews too. Among them:

The Philadelphia Bulletin wrote: "Like Heifetz, Jack Benny holds the violin under his chin."

I have been insulted by some of the finest music critics. One who shall be nameless (Sam Nameless, that is) wrote:

"Last night at the Academy of Music, Jack Benny played Mendelsohn. Mendelsohn lost.

In Pittsburgh, I am known as the Van Gogh of the violinists. This started when I played Gypsy Airs.

A woman stood up in the audience during the number and yelled, "My God, he's lost his ear!"

I do know, however, that most of my musical friends around the country like me, and they do think I'm doing a good job in the concert field for the benefit of the musicians' pension funds. Incidentally, all my appearances with concert orchestras are done for charity. I wouldn't dare charge them.

To date I have raised $3,455,354.93 (the pennies were thrown on the stage) for various symphonies around the country. On the serious side, it is gratifying to note that my superb (this is my criticism) playing has helped save some symphonies from going out of business and has contributed to the income of some violin teachers after parents heard me play and then demanded that their own children take lessons.

Imitation is indeed a sincere form of flattery. And then I think of all the suffering neighbors. Possibly in addition to helping the musicians, I've aided the soundproofing industry, too?

Eyeball-To-Eyeball TV Debate as Windup Of Ga. B'cast Institute

Atlanta.

Theodor Pierson, one of the nation's outstanding communications lawyers, will keynote a novel "face-to-face" debate between broadcasters and two members of the Federall Communications Commission at the 19th annual Georgia Radio-Television Institute.

This eyeball-to-eyeball debate will take up the entire final day of the three-day institute, sponsored jointly by the Georgia Assn. of Broadcasters, Inc., and the Henry W. Grady School of Journalism at the University of Georgia in Athens, where the institute will take place in the Center of Continuing Education on the campus, Jan. 21-23.

FCC Commissioners who will participate in the debate will be Kenneth A. Cox and Lee Loevinger.

More than 250 broadcasters and students from Georgia and the Southeastern states are expected to enter into the discussion and dialog with the commissioners.

Institute Chairman Barry Sherman, WQXI, Atlanta, in announcing plans for the debate, said:

"We are delighted that Mr. Pierson has accepted the invitation to be our keynoter. He has promised to present new concepts in the area of broadcaster-government relations."

VARIETY

"VARIETY is the mother of enjoyment."

VIVIAN GREY, Book I, Chapter IV, Benjamin Disraeli

"VARIETY's the very spice of life."

THE TASK Book II, THE TIMEPIECE, Line 606, William Cowper

"Not chaos-like together crush'd and bruis'd,
But, as the world, harmoniously confus'd:
Where order in VARIETY we see,
And where, though all things differ, all agree."

WINDSOR FOREST, Line 13, Alexander Pope

"Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
Her infinite VARIETY."

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA ACT II, Sc. 2 Line 243, William Shakespeare

"No pleasure endures unseasoned by VARIETY."

MAXIM 460, Publilius Syrus

WEDNESDAY

"Where's he that died o' Wednesday?
What place on earth hath he?"

FALSTAFF'S SONG, Stanza 1, Edmund Clarence Stedman

"Wednesday's child is full of woe."

MOTHER GOOSE

"Thou didst swear to me upon a parcel-gilt goblet, sitting in my Dolphin-chamber, at the round table by a sea-coal fire, upon Wednesday..."

KING HENRY IV, Part II, Act 1, Sc. 3, Line 96, William Shakespeare

"And if I loved you Wednesday,
Well, what is that to you?
I do not love you Thursday—
So much is true."

THURSDAY, Stanza 1, Edna St. Vincent Millay

SOURCE: Bartlett's Familiar Quotations

NBC

Look to NBC for the best VARIETY of news, entertainment and information

Now... the new EASTMAN Sound Recording Tape

Mark well the coding shown here. You'll find it on the back of all EASTMAN Sound Recording Tapes.

Look! "Lifetime Coded" for Positive Identification!

"Lifetime Coding"—your assurance of highest quality! A permanent legend continuously repeated on the back of EASTMAN Sound Recording Tapes (1) identifies the Eastman Kodak Company as the manufacturer; (2) provides positive batch-coating identification, thus assures the most closely matched sound characteristics in the industry. The coding also provides a convenient means of cataloging tapes.

No stretch—thanks to new DUROL Base! A specially prepared form of cellulose triacetate, this support material is distinguished for its high strength, low elongation. When equipment accidents happen, the new Eastman tapes break clean with practically no stretch. As a result, splices are made quickly, easily, with minimum program loss.

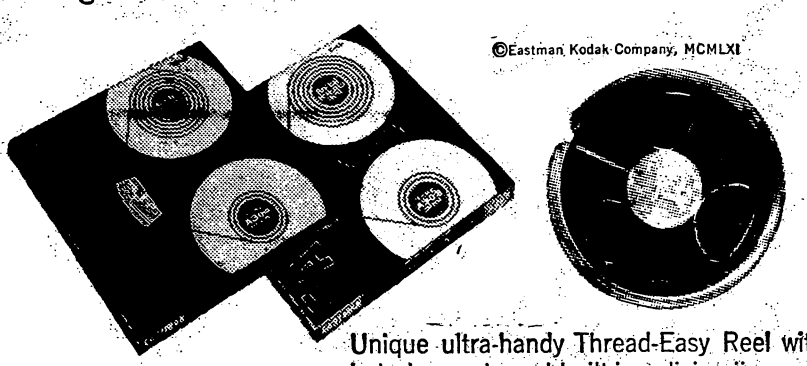
For information, see your electronic supplier or write

Magnetic Products Sales

EASTMAN KODAK COMPANY
Rochester, N.Y. 14650

New "R-type" binder provides a smoother, tougher surface to suppress tape noise and distortion. In addition, it is extremely abrasion-resistant, thus reducing oxide build-up. Even more important are the superb magnetic characteristics of "R-type" binder dispersions which make possible two great recording tapes—both available now.

At leading electronic supply houses: Type A303, a vastly superior low-print tape with output comparable to a fine general-purpose tape . also Type A304, a high-output tape with remarkably low print-through characteristics.



©Eastman Kodak Company, MCMLXI

Unique ultra-handy Thread-Easy Reel with indexing scale and built-in splicing jig.

STUFF THAT PANELS ARE MADE OF

By MANNIE MANHEIM

Hollywood.

"Our guest this evening is a ranking member of the Senate Finance Committee and an authority on Government fiscal affairs—he is the eminent United States Senator, Thaddeus Schissel. Welcome, Senator."

"Happy to be here, Mr. Rivers."

"The members of the panel who will question Senator Schlissel are Jack Ring of the N.Y. Times, Mamie Haig of the Seattle Dispatch, Fletcher Drummond of the Syracuse Journal and our permanent panelist, Mr. Harry Zweiback. We'll begin the questioning with Mr. Zweiback."

"Senator Schlissel, in a speech before the Plastic Bottle Washers Union on June 9th, 19545, you said and I quote, 'I believe what this country needs is a forward looking, ambitious program of collecting revenue that will eventually eliminate the present income tax. Remember, my friends, there are more ways than one to skin a cat.' Unquote. Senator, what did you have in mind when you made that speech?"

"Just what I said, Mr. Zweiback. That's plain English."

"Then, Senator, what you were really saying was that we should abolish the income tax entirely?"

"What I was really saying, Mr. Zweiback, was what I really said."

"I'm interested in your warning that there are many ways to skin a cat. Senator, would that remark, perchance, relate to a national lottery?"

"I didn't mention a lottery. I mentioned a cat."

"But you wouldn't object to a lottery, now, would you, Senator?"

"Only if it were the will of the people, sir."

"Aren't you saying then, Senator, that you'd like a lottery to be the will of the people and wasn't that actually what you meant when you said there are many ways to skin a cat?"

"Mr. Zweiback, sir, I'd advise you not to attempt to paint me into a corner 'cause, sir, I won't allow it."

"I'm not trying to paint you in a corner, sir. You said that the income tax should be abolished and my question was whether you were feeling out the Plastic Bottle Washers upon the feasibility of a lottery?"

"Mr. Zweiback, a lottery is categorized under gambling and gambling is against the law of the land except in Nevada and New Hampshire — and, as a United States Senator, I'm not about to violate the law."

"Well, then, Senator Schlissel, let's refer to a speech you delivered before the Ladies Auxiliary of the Culinary Workers in Perth Amboy, New Jersey, on Feb. 12th, 1959."

"I always speak to the lovely ladies of Perth on Lincoln's Birthday. It's a great honor, sir."

"And you said—and this is five years later than your Plastic Bottle Washer Speech — that, "Even though the taxes are being reduced, this country will never be sound until we eliminate the income tax in its entirety and there are many ways of doing that—remember, dear ladies, the old adage about skinning a cat.' What did you mean in that talk, Senator?"

"Mr. Zweiback, I must say for an intelligent gentleman of the press, you seem to have difficulty understanding our native tongue. No offense intended, sir."

"I'm just trying to put your words in focus, Senator. Isn't it true that your method of skinning a cat is to establish a lottery? Isn't that what you really meant?"

"Now, Mr. Zweiback, why do you continue asking me if what I said wasn't what I meant! If you don't mind, sir, just forget asking me if what I said wasn't what you thought I said which wasn't what I said at all."

"No offense, Senator, it's just our method of obtaining a story. Let's try another approach. Didn't a cousin of yours, Barry Schlissel, win $8,000 in last year's Irish sweepstakes?"

"I heard that Barry won something—but that has nothing to do ——it isn't germane—to my efforts to eliminate the income tax."

"I was attempting to show that members of your family are prone to gamble and it's quite possible that you do, too—and, in possessing that inherent trait, isn't it within the realm of believability that this is your reason for overtly planning a national lottery, which, in turn, would tend to make us a nation of gamblers?"

"At no time, sir, did I advocate a lottery, overtly or covertly."

"But you didn't say you'd object to one."

"And I didn't mention that I favored one, either."

"I'd like now to recall a conversation you had in the Senate Men's Room when you said to Senator Glenn Schmott, 'The only way we can get rid of the g.d. taxes is to have a lottery like they have in other countries — and right here in New Hampshire.' Did you say that, Senator?"

"When did you say that alleged conversation occurred?"

"On Friday, October 13th."

"Mr. Zweiback, for your information and for the edification of your television audience, allow me to state unequivocally that I did not enter the swinging doors of the Senate Men's Room on that date."

"Come, Senator, we're all human. How could you remember that you didn't use the facilities of the men's room?"

"How do you know that I did?"

"Because Senator, I was in a booth with my midget tape recorder. Would you like me to play back your conversation?"

"No-no—that does it, Mr. Zweiback. I'm getting the hell out of here. This is too much. Too-much-I tell you-too—much."

"Senator, come back, we still have three panel members waiting to question you. Senator! Senator! I guess he's gone. Ladies and gentlemen, due to circumstances beyond our control, we'll be unable to continue our panel discussion. We return you to your local station where you will undoubtedly be entertained by a hootenanny."

Ralph Gleason's Edu'l TV Jazz Segments Extended

"Jazz Casual, Series 11," the second jazz series produced by Ralph J. Gleason, of the San Francisco Chronicle, is unwinding on the National Educational Television web.

Series of 11 programs features Gerry Mulligan Quartet, Jimmy Rushing, Earl Hines, Woody Herman Big Band, Paul Winter Sextet, Lambert - Hendricks - Bavan vocal group, among others.

Congratulations to VARIETY
THE SPICE OF LIFE
JERRY LEIGHTON
(the disk jockey that made chicago ill)
RA 6-1932 945-6291

West German TV Now Bringing In Top Playwrights

Frankfurt.

Only a few years ago, the West German television had such a bad reputation for misusing and underpaying playwrights, and giving authors so few chances for original dramas, that some of the leading writers who did lend their talents to the new medium worked under pseudonyms.

With the growing years, though, all that has changed. And with the competition forced by the Second Television Network, and by the nine members of the First Television Net who vie with each other to produce outstanding productions, originals done exclusively or initially for the German television, have come into their own.

West German television is now considered well-paying, and assures the talented dramatist of a future—not only can he continue to write for the stations, but many of the plays that are originally shown on the screen go from there to the stage in Germany.

One of the stations making up the First Television Net indicated that this year it performed four plays for television, and in addition did 10 full-length originals, running about an hour.

"The Luck Runs Behind," an original by Horst Lommer, has been made into an hour-long tv film.

"Having," an original by the German-Hungarian playwright

(Continued on page 106)

1964 Ushers In 'Nervous Era' For British Com'l TV Operators; Not All Honey For BBC, Either

By HAROLD MYERS

London.

This is the year of decision. Commercial television will be starting its second term at the end of July and the second BBC channel is scheduled to go on the air on April 20, while pay-tv trials will be starting in London and several key provincial cities by the late fall.

These momentous developments represent the long drawn out sequel to the highly controversial Pilkington Report of a couple of years ago. In most respects they represent a major disappointment for the industry, notably for the commercial network operators, who will not only have to wait some three or four years before they can get a second network going, but meantime face a tax on advertising to the tune of some $50,000,000 a year.

It is not all honey for BBC-TV, either. Admittedly the Corporation will be having its second outlet within a few months, but meantime there is a financial problem. The Government has, so far, resisted overtures to increase the license fee (currently running at $11.20 per annum) which the BBC feels to be necessary if it is to have the financial wherewithal to operate the second channel with complete political and economic freedom. That is something that the Corporation is currently battling out with the authorities, but the likelihood is that in the not-too-distant future — possibly after the next General Election — the license will go up to either $14 or $16 a year.

But make no mistake, it is the commercial web which has been on the receiving end of the toughest blows. And ironically the hard swipes have come from a Conservative Government which, just a few years back, defied all opposition to put the competitive network on the air. Admittedly, profits had been running higher than had been expected, though in the early days some of the losses incurred were pretty terrifying. Nonetheless, it came as a bitter shock when the Government decided that there would be no competitive commercial outlet for the time being, and in the meantime there would be an unprecedented tax on revenue. That was just about the last thing which free enterprise operators had anticipated from a Government which advocated free enterprise.

Within the next two or three weeks the names of the companies who will operate the commercial network from July onwards will be named by the Independent Television Authority, and no one expects any serious changes in the setup. The present program companies are reconciled to the view that they had it good for quite a time, and must now be prepared to take it on the chin. They will still be able to make profits, though far removed from the scale to which they had become accustomed over the years. But there are side issues which are causing considerable concern to many people whose livelihood is wrapped up in the success of the television industry.

These apply particularly to the growing number of people on the creative side of television production. There appears to be little doubt that the $50,000,000 a year tax bite is going to mean economies in many directions. and there is a widespread fear that program quality may suffer in consequence. What is almost certain, however, is that there will have to be a cutback in the volume of vidpic production which has always been regarded as an extravagant and luxury extension of the program companies' operation.

The British tv majors have taken a limited number of plunges into the vidpic scene and the leader in the field has consistently been Associated-Television, which has its wholly-owned subsidiary, in Independent Television Corp., headquartered in the United States. ABC-TV has taken a few limited fliers. but the others have adopted a more cautious wait-and-see attitude. Now, there is a growing belief that the two leaders in this sphere of production will restrict the volume of film series and indulge in less speculative programming enterprises. If that should come to pass at a time when the feature film industry is in the throes of a major crisis, the outlook for studios, technicians, etc., could, indeed, be bleak. But the Government was duly warned, not only by the program companies, but also by the unions, who would be affected, and chose to ignore those warnings.

Hope For 1967

There is still hope that come 1967, or thereabouts, the second commercial network will be authorized by the Government, and to meet that eventuality the Independent Television Authority will only be issuing new franchises for a limited three-year span. If and when the second network comes, it is unlikely to embrace the entire country as will be the case with the BBC's second UHF, 625-line channel) but will be concentrated in the main populated areas such as London, Midlands, the North and the industrial regions of Scotland. And when that happens, the existing format of split weeks in the major areas will undoubtedly be terminated, and seven-day contracts will be awarded the successful companies.

From the strictly commercial viewpoint, the one redeeming feature of the recently enacted legislation was the Governmental decision to ignore Pilkington and to recommend field trials for a piped feevee system. Inevitably many of the companies deeply involved in commercial networking are associated with the successful payvision outfits. But it is widely recognized that this will be an expensive undertaking involving a heavy capital investment over a ultimate hope that the trials will be successful and the Postmaster-General will eventually authorize a permanent system.

The mere fact that trials are to get under way, however, has given some heart to harassed film production personnel who look to a pay television service as an instrument for offering new areas of employment. At this juncture, however, it is impossible to gauge with any reasonable degree of accuracy the amount of new production which such a system would demand, though there is a belief period of some years, with the that it would consume a minimum of three to four feature programs a week. If that estimation is anywhere near accurate it will go a long way towards picking up the slack.

12th Season on Television
THE ADVENTURES OF OZZIE AND HARRIET
Televised Over ABC-TV Every Week

Annual report!

Again this year
the CBS Television Network is attracting television's biggest average audience
day and night.

BASED ON NIELSEN TELEVISION INDEX ESTIMATES,
SUBJECT TO QUALIFICATIONS
WHICH THE CBS TELEVISION NETWORK
WILL SUPPLY ON REQUEST.

Chi TV's Journalistic Orgy Looms As Major '64 Story

By LES BROWN

Chicago.

Almost to its own surprise the ABC anchor, WBKB-TV, made a commitment to a fullscale news operation last fall, and that development could have a dramatic effect on the whole Chicago television picture in 1964.

The entry of another serious contender carries with it the implied threat of smaller portions of the pie for the present news champions here (WBBM-TV and WNBQ, in that order) and possibly even of a shakeup in the station standings in this market. To keep anything like that from happening, the CBS and NBC outlets are putting a stronger accent than ever on news, with the result that Windy City televiewers are being treated to a journalistic orgy, whether they like it or not.

News is the key to station status in this market, as it is in most, and the topdog reaps the benefits that range from mere prestige to the queueing up of bluechip sponsors for all availabilities, including the special reports and documentaries. That's the status that WBBM-TV has been enjoying for many a year and that it is stepping up its efforts to preserve. That's the status that WNBQ has been hungering for and inching up to, with help from the Huntley-Brinkley parlay and from a sizzling "Tonight" show which has added rating points to the adjacent 10 p.m. newscast. And that's the status that WBKB has just begun to make a bid for, having acquired the services of two highly respected tv journalists, Hugh Hill and Frank Reynolds, who were October defectors from WBBM-TV.

(In all this, the indie WGN-TV is in a class by itself, with little hope for news supremacy as a non-network outlet, but with enviable leadership in the related field of sports, which has benefits of its own.)

Reynolds-Hill-Dreier Parlay

Although it now has a Big Three in Reynolds, Hill and Alex Dreier to front its newscasts, WBKB will have to come from way behind if it's to hit a competitive stride in the local news footrace. Lacking in newsroom depth, the station in effect is building its department from the top down rather than from the bottom up, and it may take time to convince the local audience that the ABC station is making a major journalism effort. Still to be determined too is how well the styles (and personalities) of Hill and Reynolds will blend with that of Alex Dreier, for without such a meshing the station's own news personality is bound to be out of focus and patently hybrid.

WBKB's thrust into news has, naturally, meant more hours per week of news service, with 10 minutes added on weeknights and the Big Three given carte blanche to develop news specials. Additionally, the station has begun editorializing, with veepee Sterling (Red) Quinlan voicing the opinion essays on camera from scripts prepared by another WBBM-TV expatriate, Bill Garry.

If the ABC station has increased its news output, WBBM-TV and WNBQ are drenching the airwaves with it. The latter has added nearly three hours per week of news-weather-analysis to last season's schedule (this in addition to NBC-TV's expanded Huntley-Brinkley effort at 5:30 p.m.) and offers nothing in local live programming during the week that isn't produced by the news department. WNBQ's weekends too have a strong news orientation, with a 5:45 p.m. telecast added on Saturdays, a 10 ayem opus tacked on Sundays and the weekly "Dateline: Chicago" documentary slotted on Sunday nights. Overall, its local news output has increased 41% over the previous season, although there was no shortage of newscasts even then.

The leader, WBBM-TV, is also laying it on this semester, fattening both its 6 and 10 p.m. news strips from 15 minutes to a half-hour. Not to be one-upped by WNBQ's regularly scheduled documentaries, it too embarked on a weekly series and in characteristic bigtime fashion with three separate production teams assigned to the project. Further, it has launched an irregularly scheduled series titled "Feedback" as a means to a running dialog with the populace of this metro area, and that too classifies as a news service.

To hang on to its commanding position in this market, WBBM-TV has also been "deepening" its news staff with former cityside reporters from the Chicago American, having to date hired away such legmen as Wendell Smith, Mort Edelstein, Walter Jacobson and Sheri Blair. Station's raid on that particular paper isn't surprising inasmuch as news director John (Red) Madigan is himself an alumnus of the afternoon sheet as its former city editor.

From WNBQ's standpoint, the WBKB entry into the news race could prove to be a blessing. The NBC station sees itself in the beautiful position of gaining ground from the Hill-Reynolds switch of channels, rather than losing ground from a three-way competition. Figuring goes this way: since Hill and Reynolds had established a following at WBBM-TV, it is just possible that they would carry some of it away from the CBS station to WBKB. And since they didn't win the WNBQ advocates while they were with WBBM-TV, it would seem reasonable that they'd have no better chance of getting them now. So any inroads that might be made by WBKB into the present scheme would figure to be chiefly at WBBM-TV's expense, and that might give WNBQ just enough room to slip ahead.

On the other hand, there just might prove to be entirely too much newscasting on the Chicago airwaves, with each station asserting itself with more and longer news shows. Should that be the case, the surfeited viewer might find himself escaping to WGN-TV.

Shurick's Post

Edward Shurick, v.p. and senior exec of H-R Television, has been named chairman of the Television Trade Pactices Committee of Station Representatives Assn. He replaces Steve Machcinski, resigned.

Other members of the committee are Walter Nilson, Katz Agency; Jack Fritz, Blair TV, Lon King, Peters, Griffin, Woodward; Charles Standard, Meeker Co.; Robert Kizer, Avery-Knodel.

JIMMIE DODD
M-I-C-K-E-Y M-O-U-S-E

West German TV

Continued from page 103

Julius Hay, concerning a sensational murder process with 41 farm wives accused of poisoning their husbands with arsenic, will be carried over the German TV screens in January, with Rolf Haedrich directing.

The first television film from author Hermann Moers, called "Koll," is slated for next March, along with "Journey Friendship" by British dramatist Johnny Speight.

On March 19 comes up "Friday in Wilhelmsburg," a television original by Christian Geissler.

The Second TV Net comes up with an original for Christmas Eve, in the production of a play called "Winter Quarter," based on a short story by O. Henry, and directed by Rainer Erler. And the same net has an original by Vladimir Semitjov titled "The Girl at the Cash Register," with Eberhard Itzenplitz directing, slated for January with "The Do-Gooder" by Claude Martin and Hugo Hartung coming up on the following night.

More and more, the German television is looking for fresh writers with good ideas for dramatic productions, and many of the writers who were formerly employed writing for the cinemas are now switching to television. With the film industry more or less on the skids, it appears that the dramatists, at least, will be able to find plenty of work for the rich television stations, who are competing for their output.

Cost for an hourlong television original, including fee to dramatist, and filmization, runs from $125,000 to $150,000 here.

A TV Prescription For Coproduction

By GERALD ADLER
(NBC International)

London.

Does your schedule have that old, run down, tired feeling? Are your finances strained? Well, you can cure both of these problems—and get more out of life—with a special tonic known as COPRO.

The fact that COPRO has not yet been entirely proven should not deter you from making use of this remedy. Great benefits—both for himself and for future generations—are in store for the first fully successful COPRO pioneer.

Previous users who report negative results may well have taken the wrong dose, or the right dose but at the wrong time, or else they forgot to shake the bottle before using. On the other hand, optimum results should be obtained with the first treatment provided a few simple rules are followed:

1. Don't try to buy COPRO at a discount. It is a very sensitive mixture and can only stand up if compounded of the best ingredients. It must compete in effectiveness with established Hollywood remedies that contain only the most costly elements. Experience with various kinds of COPRO proves it is worse than useless when the makers try to cut corners.

On the surface some of the elements seem cheaper, but this is a trap. They must be offset by additional catalysts—often imported—which adds to the expense. If a can of your regular remedy costs $125,000, it is imperative that you budget the same amount for each can of COPRO.

How, you may ask, is COPRO a remedy for financial strain when it costs the same? The answer is that although the money must never be saved on the ingredients, the cost will be shared by an overseas user thus affording ultimate financial satisfaction. This is particularly true because the overseas user invariably prefers COPRO to straight importations and therefore will make a far larger contribution to the cost.

2. Be sure your COPRO formula is valid. There are various methods of concocting COPRO but not all of them are successful. The formula used must have a basic validity and not be merely contrived so as to match the COPRO label. The best actor in the world will not lend validity to the series about an American third baseman who is on loan to the Lancashire Cricket Club; the greatest actress in earth cannot give strength to a formula based on the stranded airline stewardess from Idaho who stays on to keep a sweet shop in Piccadilly.

Get a See-Through Bottle

3. Keep your COPRO in the proper bottle. The setting must also be valid. There is no benefit to be derived from setting a series in London when the identical series could be made in New York. The best bottle for COPRO is a see-through bottle so that the setting is seen and appreciated. The world over, every studio looks alike from the inside. Just as chianti never tastes like chianti unless the bottle is in a straw basket, your COPRO will have no character unless served in a distinctive bottle. Which means get out on location, stay out on location and when you return, go out again. It will cost more and offset your savings elsewhere but, remember, good COPRO cannot be bought at a discount.

4. Fill the bottle to the brim. Although the see-through bottle is recommended the patient should not be able to see clear through and out the other side. The bottle must be filled with real substance. Too much COPRO has proven ineffective as a mere travelog. Strong story and characterization must be added to location.

5. Avoid artificial ingredients. Most COPRO is made in England where a quota limits the broadcast of imported films and films containing imported elements. The fewer the American elements that are included in his COPRO, the greater is the opportunity for the English partner to make use of imported American film elsewhere in his schedule. This situation results in pressure to exclude necessary American ingredients from the COPRO and to substitute instead artificial ingredients simply because the latter satisfy quota requirements. Obviously this pressure must be resisted in the ultimate interest of both partners. If the COPRO is watered down to meet artificial restrictions, with no regard to creative considerations, it may be so weakened as to do neither partner any good.

6. Prevent allergic reactions. Remember that the COPRO will be used in both partners' countries and therefore care must be taken to filter out any ingredients to which patients in either country may prove allergic. More than usual attention must be paid to word usage, accent, facts about each country and accuracy of simulated settings. American audiences will recognize London from the heavy fog but British viewers will be put off by such heavy fog in fog-free July. British audiences are accustomed to Oxford-accented actors pretending to be Chicago gangsters but to American ears the result is ludicrous. Americans may expect to see a flag in a stand behind a desk but if the flag is behind a British official's desk his people will spot it as phoney. And while the British will immediately understand when the heroine complains of a "ladder" in her stocking, American audiences will have to make an extra and unnecessary effort to comprehend that she really suffered a "run."

Follow these not so simple rules and there is a fighting chance that your COPRO will succeed, thus giving your program schedule a refreshing new look and your treasury a higher than usual overseas income. But remember, only a small percentage of Hollywood projects succeed and COPRO should be given the benefit of similar odds. Occassional COPRO rating failures should not invalidate the principle that when COPRO is good it can be very effective.

COPRO should never be thought of as a miracle cure but as a tonic. If compounded carefully and correctly it has as much chance as any other tonic of making you feel on top of the world.

HUGH DOWNS

Exclusive Representative: Martin Goodman Productions, Inc., 36 Central Park South, New York. PLaza 1-3555

A Question of Content...Not Semantics!

Any station can program information... and many do...but does their information mean anything? Breezy conversation on topics of limited interest or chit-chat between personalities can be construed as information. But is it?

At KMOX Radio, talk has a purpose... to inform, entertain, educate or amuse... to fill the listener's continuing need for knowledge of our ever-changing world...to permit him to share intimately in ideas and events of vital interest.

Whatever form the information takes... political debates, a medical forum on cancer, discussions of the world's religions, broadcast editorials or an analysis of juvenile delinquency...
KMOX Radio listeners are assured of thought-provoking, meaningful programming.

CONTENT, not semantics, separates information from talk!

KMOX CBS RADIO

"The Voice of St. Louis"

A CBS Owned radio station • Represented nationally by CBS Radio Spot Sales

Domestic Syndication Found Ailing In 1963

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

Syndication in 1963 took a leap forward in the foreign field, vidfilms, cartoons, features and other tv program material sharing in the prosperity. Overall, domestically, the year found vidfilms syndication ailing, despite the relative success of a number of vidfilm syndication outfits.

The Federal Communications Commission decision outlawing option time did very little in significant proportions to ease the tight local situation. The year found a comparative large number of syndication properties fighting to win a slot in local markets throughout the country. The better off-network shows did win berths, but the amount of product available compared to the scarcity of berths created a general ailing climate in syndication throughout the year.

Total vidfilms syndication grosses, however, were buoyed by the growing revenues from the foreign field. An estimated $60,000,000 was racked up in foreign syndication, the figure embracing all forms of tv program material, features, cartoons, vidfilms, vidtaped shows, etc.

First-run syndication series in 1963 were few and far between, but there were thrusts in the first-run direction by such vidfilm houses as United Artists Television, Independent Television Corp., Official Films, and station groups such as Westinghouse. Some of the first-runners shook up the notion that there no longer was any regional and local advertising biz around for first-run sponsorship.

The restricted opportunities of vidfilms domestically didn't find any echoes in the feature-to-tv end of the biz. In general, 1963 saw the pool of available first-run features dwindle. It was a case of steady demand, as stations across the country in the main retained their feature slots, in the face of a diminishing supply. Naturally, the prices of features climbed throughout the year, in key markets across the country. Another consequence was the widening of the buyers' sights as they searched for cinematic product. Non-Hollywood type product ranging from the spear and sandal themes to arthouse product found berths far more readily than in years past.

Option Time—Little Happened

What had been a dream in many syndicators mind came to pass in 1963. That dream was that the FCC would upset option time. The dream, however, contained the thought that affils, once freed from option time, would turn to syndicated programming for significant portions of their local schedule and bump the programming service of their respective networks.

What happened in reality, though, was quite different from the wishful dream of syndicators. The FCC ruling declaring network option time illegal—a ruling which is under appeal helped more stations gains muscle to bump network shows in favor of local or syndicated program. Number of preemptions, though, wasn't very significant, in terms of the total programming services of the three networks, and small compared to what proved to be wishful thinking of syndicators.

The bulk of the vidfilm biz in 1963 was chalked up by off-network properties. It required no small talent to select the more saleable off-network properties.

It would be incorrect to assess the off-network biz only in terms of the off-network hours. The half-hour entries coming into syndication after a successful network run also proved to be popular buys in markets throughout the country. Again, in the case of the off-network half-hours, the market in general was very selective, the better properties earning their residual talent payments plus a profit and the others either losing in the distribution effort, or even failing to win a place in the syndication hopper.

Although vidfilm syndication throughout the year operated in a more limited field, syndication proved to be the mainstay of such operations as Four Star, Warner Bros., and other firms. In years past when Meto TV had a tough time of it on the network level, it was the syndication efforts of Metro TV, under Dick Harper, which served to balance Metro's tv biz. This year out, the case was similar for Four Star and Warner Bros. Both companies didn't do well on the network level, relying on their syndication efforts to retain their tv impact. Metro TV did hit it big on the network level during the '63-'64 season. The Four Stars and Warner Bros. hope to do the same, but while, they tread water on the network level, each has a thriving syndication wing for continued support.

United Artists Television represented a company in transition during 1963. The policy of its parent motion picture company, United Artists, in seeking out coproductions with indie producers payed off on the network level in the '63-'64 season. The syndication wing, which took over the Ziv banner, went away from its strictly action adventure first-run format. Wolper Productions six one hour pubaffairs specials dramatically represented the swing-over for a UA-TV (nee Ziv) entry. UA-TV cut down on its first-run releases, remaining one of the few syndication houses with first-runners at all. United Artists Associated, another UA subsid, under the direction of Irwin Ezzes, handling features and cartoons, lost its corporate name and came under the United Artists Television banner.

In features, a characteristic of the year, was the growing sophistication in buying. For many years, when hundreds of pix were on the market, stations bought pix and slotted them in a harem-scarem fashion. In 1963, stations couldn't afford such a luxury with the feature supply diminishing. Station buyers have become very aware of the rating potential in the relatively few packages being released. They have also broadened their perspective to include non-Hollywood product. Now, more than ever before, stations are slotting their pix in order to obtain maximum mileage from each of them. The realization of the short supply finally has hit home.

Another characteristic of the year in the features-to-tv biz is that many of the Hollywood multimillion dollar pix of fairly recent vintage became available to tv. Television, once declared the mortal foe of the motion picture industry, began in an increasing degree to inherit the "blockbuster" pix, the cinematic product designed with extravagant budgets so that people would be lured away from their tv sets.

The year also saw factor of color, both in features and vidfilms, playing an increasing role in the saleability of product. Color has become a plus factor in marketing programs, in many major markets in the country.

Foreign Field

In the foreign field, two parallel industry trade organizations funtioned, one a division of the Motion Picture Export Assn. and the other Television Programs Export Assn. MPEA's tv division headed by Bill Fineshriber, and John McCarthy's-helmed TPEA, both worked to expand the international horizons of American based program suppliers. In the midst of their efforts, though, there were undercurrents of dissatisfactions, with respective members of the two organizations claiming that the multiplicity of efforts serves more as a divisive factor abroad, than what could be offered if only one organization existed. MPEA's tv committee consists of major motion picture companies which have tv divisions. TPEA's strength consists of the three American networks, along with a few other program companies. It seemed highly unlikely at year's end, that a merger could be realized between the two industry export associations. Three American networks are firmly opposed to joining any trade organization, the leadership of which might be pointed to the motion picture companies and their tv subsids.

Only foreign owned firm to make any consistent program impact on the American scene is Independent Television Corp., a subsid of Associated Television of England. ITC on the network level coproduced with NBC-TV and Herb Brodkin "Espionage." In syndication, ITC has had Jo Stafford specials, first-run vidfilm entries and cartoons. Under the aegis of board chairman Mike Nidorf and exec v.p. Abe Mandell, ITC has been a profitable operation.

At year's end, syndicators are looking toward the upcoming NAB convention. The April meeting in Chicago, where syndicators will have their TFE-'64 meet at a nearby hotel could serve as the sounding board for any significant alteration of the domestic syndication field.

LANNY ROSS

January 10-16: Royal York, Toronto
322 East 57th Street, N. Y.

Admen Project Themselves As Greater Industry Force

By BILL GREELEY

The ad industry couldn't have predicted a year ago what would be the No. 1 concern when 1963 came to a close.

There's been the perennial moans about the diminishing margin of profits for agencies. There's been the more audible grousing about networks' increasing control of programming. There's been, at last, tough negotiations with AFTRA and SAG on new blurb contracts with the ad men making pay concessions.

But, as a spokesman for the American Assn. of Advertising Agencies put it, that org's Broadcast Policy Committee has after all been totally consumed with the ratings problem that has arisen out of the Washington hearings of last spring. The ad industry, which at first tried to take a more-or-less sideline position after the hearings is now getting all the way into the affray. The ratings, says the spokesman, have been the single consideration of 4A's Broadcast committee over the last three or so months.

At this writing, said committee is preparing to reverse its stand of the summer when 4A's along with the Assn. of National Advertisers refused to join the National Assn. of Broadcasters Ratings Council. Stand at the time was supported with the contention that ratings were the business of the broadcaster, because it was, after all, his sales tool. The ad men also felt that their position would be weak insofar as all other members of the Council were broadcasters.

At the time, the 4A's set up a three-man committee of "watchdogs"—one from the Broadcast Policy Committee, one from the research committee and one from the media committee—to keep an eye on NAB's activities in the rating tangle. ANA designated one exec for similar monitoring.

But Group W's Don McGannon, chairman of the NAB Ratings Council, came back to the advertisers and agency men with a second appeal. He said that because the Council didn't appear to have support of the ad men, Nielsen and the other rating concerns were not cooperating in efforts to monitor the services and research the possibility of revised methodology.

At this writing, the Broadcast Policy committee had reversed its stand, and was ready to join the Rating Council. Plan had to get approval of the 4A's directors, and Policy Committeemen were meeting with ANA execs to get their backing on the joining (ANA had once again turned down McGannon's appeal to join, but 4A's broadcasters were hoping the advertisers would support the move so far as letting the agencies represent them on the Rating Council.

In not joining the Council, the ad men had hoped to stay away from the monitoring of the ratings, concentrating on research that might provide better methodology. In joining the NAB group, the 4A's hopes also to provide the necessary pressure to facilitate monitoring.

The 4A's Broadcasting Policy Committee is a powerhouse as far as representing the big-money broadcast agencies is concerned. Chairmaned by Richard A. R. Pinkham of Ted Bates, the members include Bill Hylan of J. Walter Thompson; Bud Barry of Young & Rubicam; Dave Miller of Y&R; Henry Fownes of MacManus, John & Adams; Phil Cohen of SSC&B; Ed Mahoney of Fuller & Smith & Ross; Al Hollender of Grey; Lee Rich of Benton & Bowles; and others.

McGannon's NAB Ratings Council is made up of network reps—David Adams of NBC, Si Siegel of ABC and Tom Fisher of CBS, Mutual prexy Robert Hurleigh and local station men from around the country. There also are reps from industry promotion groups, such as Radio Advertising Bureau and the Television Bureau of Advertising.

By December, the Council was able to report that Nielsen had around 60 new audimeter homes in his sample. Firm's goal was 100 new homes by Jan. 1 and virtually a new sample by the start of next season. One of the big complaints of the ad men is the static quality of the Nielsen sample, which has not changed much in the last 10 years.

Why Not Off-TV?

Continued from page 96

be here. He'll come one day.

PATIENT: But my belly—

GILLESPIE: I'm sorry, but we have to wait for Kildare.

PATIENT: All right, so I'll wait.

GILLESPIE: Good. We'll wait for Kildare.

(He sits down on the floor and the patient sits next to him).

PATIENT: We've waited so long, may as well wait again.

GILLESPIE: Oh, sure. We'll wait for Kildare.

PATIENT: But, I'd like to ask you something.

GILLESPIE: What's that?

PATIENT: Why are we always waiting for Kildare?

GILLESPIE: I forgot.

* * *

What the cursory reader of this proposal may have overlooked is the infinite variety of Off-TV. Not only can the plays and series and specials be Absurd, they can even be Dull. What's better yet is that there is no need for writers for this kind of program. A computer can write it. This article was written by IBM machine number 39137.

BESS MYERSON

"I've Got a Secret," CBS-TV
Tournament of Roses

MEL BLANC

"JACK BENNY PROGRAM"—"FLINTSTONES" for Hanna-Barbera
"BUGS BUNNY PROGRAM."
Creators and Producers of Humorous TV and Radio Commercials for Advertising Agencies
Taft Building, Hollywood

YOU WANT ACTION DRAMA
SUSPENSE
ROMANCE?

YOU'VE GOT IT!

Here's the last word in first run features for TV. 72 great motion pictures in all (Al Capone, Angel Baby, Friendly Persuasion, Pay or Die, Dondi, Big Circus, Hell to Eternity, Love In The Afternoon, Armored Command, King Of The Roaring 20's, The Bridge, and many more) – all jam-packed with big name stars (Gary Cooper, David Wayne, Audrey Hepburn, Vincent Edwards, Rod Steiger, Chuck Connors, David Janssen, Sal Mineo, Rita Moreno, Ernest Borgnine, Gina Lollobrigida, Tony Perkins, Maurice Chevalier, Vic Damone, Mickey Rooney and many more)

We call it CAVALCADE OF THE SIXTIES—GROUPS 1 & 2. You'll call it the most exciting package in years.

For more information, rates and promotional material, contact your AATV Sales Representative at any one of these locations.

165 W. 46th Street, N.Y. C. PLaza 7-8530
1232 So. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Illinois WAbash 2-7937
4376 Sunset Drive, Hollywood, California NOrmandy 2-9181
2204 Commerce St., Dallas, Texas Riverside 7-1658

ALLIED ARTISTS TV

Why British Writers Like To Work In TV ('At BBC We're Less Prudish and Censorious')

By SYDNEY NEWMAN
(Head of Drama Group, Television, BBC, London)

London.

A wiseacre once figured that all of Shakespeare's plays, including the rarely performed "Pericles, Prince of Tyre," if put into all the BBC's present drama slots, they would clear our literary needs for only 12 weeks. That means another 40 weeks of material still to find!

Comes April and the second network. The present BBC-1 combined with BBC-2 will jointly require annually about 550 single plays, episodes of series and serials to fill about 11 hours weekly and that ain't hay.

Amazingly, of the stuff we do, a lot of it is pretty good. Some of it, in fact, represents what is accounted to be some of the finest original writing in the world today. The spread of writers range from such top men as Alun Owen, Clive Exton, Nigel (Quatermass) Kneale, David Turner, Bernard Kops, David Mercer, Giles Cooper, John Mortimer, Jack Pulman to about 150 more regular contributors.

So what are the incentives and how do we hold the writers loyalties? Mainly, we produce the widest range of dramatic material going today. From the mass appeal of the twice weekly "Compact" to —well, for example, what contemporary playwright would give his eye-teeth to alternate in the schedule with Ionesco ("The Bald Prima Donna"), Beckett ("Krapp's Last Tape"), Durrenmatt ("The Physicists") in our new drama series "Festival?" Bernard Kops first television play "I Want To Go Home" nestled between Chekov's "The Duel" and Hugh Leonard's beautiful "Stephen D," adapted from James Joyce's "Portrait Of An Artist As A Young Man." Another boon to writers who sell to "Festival" is that it is open-ended. This is thanks to my BBC not-in-a-rut bosses who recognize that television needs at least one major drama spot which gives a play a chance to find its right length. Anouk Aimee, film star of "La Dolce Vita" and "8½" played her heart out in Cocteau's "The Human Voice" to a length of 38 minutes. Our "Hamlet at Elsinore" is big in cast, Christopher Plummer, Alec Clunes, Bob Shaw, June Tobin and 125 others, big in cost and big in length—about two and a half hours. (A special shorter version is being prepared for more conformist markets.)

Also Radio

Another virtue in selling plays to the BBC is radio. People tend to forget that we operate three domestic sound networks. cooperation between television and radio story editors makes a writer's work go further and that means more dough for him. More money to him too from a lively selling organization pushing production abroad and finally because BBC reruns many of its dramas mostly at off-peak times.

Writers like us too because we are less prudish and censorious about the use of language and portrayal of human relations—social and sexual—when it is in reasonable good taste and dramatically justified.

Biggest trick in holding writers is the recognition of the obvious —respect—something they want more than loot (and I don't want my writer buddies who read this to think I'm trying to soft-soap them to get out of paying higher fees). For writers of single plays it has to do with such mundanites as reading their script right away, buying and paying for it right away, giving polite and clear reasons for its rejection or suggestions for its improvement. It means no fiddling with it behind his back. It means inviting him to rehearsals. It means getting his opinions on casting, and giving him a chance to knock down your suggestion for a director. It means at least giving him every opportunity of explaining to the director the stuff he has packed between his script lines.

Respect grows not only out of the recognition that we need scripts but from a profound acceptance of the role of the artist in society. Television is journalism, it's entertainment, but it's Art too! Writers are society's nerve-endings. They're our eyes and ears and they make it possible for audiences to see themselves—not just two-dimensional like the television screen itself but with the depth and perception of human experience focused, highlighted and elevated aloft by those of us in broadcasting. If one feels that plays are not merely an adjunct of a commercial nor a means of filling air-time, there is no problem in showing respect for the writer.

A small amount of the stuff we use is, of course, based on the work of dead authors, but that saves only some trouble. Adaptors can be just as tricky. A reasonably distinguished author recently took his name off an adaptation of a Russian classic because some of our boys had tampered with it.

While it may not be difficult to show respect to the writer of the single play, relations get tricky with the money earning contributors to the weekly same-character type series. Here writers resent the fact that their material must be changed because central characters of a continuing series require consistent characterization. Quite often the star actor himself knows more about the character he is playing than any writer. In our hit series "Z Cars," for which John Hopkins and Allan Prior make the major contributors, this problem largely doesn't exist.

We also don't have this trouble on the many-half hour toprated serials like "Lorna Doone" and "Kidnapped." It helps the writer when he regards a serial as a very long play, but presented in half-hour chunks. There are many outstanding writers here whose mouths are watering at the prospect of a new group of prime time serials based on adult novels, like "Germinal" by Zola. Giles Cooper is now at work on "Madame Bovary" by Flaubert.

Biggest challenge is, of course, the discovery and help given to new and unknown writers. Our 52 a year "First Night" popular hour dramas based on contemporary themes uncovers new authors like Terence Frisby and Alan Sharpe. The latter especially to much critical acclaim. "First Night" also managed to get from Arnold ("Chips With Everything") Wesker a first television play "Menace."

And, of course, playwrights need directors. While Alun Owen and Clive Exton have been well directed by others there is no doubt that in Ted Kotcheff they have someone who sees the world as they want it seen. There are other successful marriages, David Mercer/Don Taylor, David Perry/Charles Jarrott, Jack Pulman/Eric Tayler, which I continue to encourage. They way things are set up in BBC Drama Group you never see any of that demeaning author's "humble gratitude" nonsense. Here a director and a writer are two equals standing each in his own right but needing one another.

Basic organizational notes. About 14 story editors cope with our present output and we'll probably hire another six or seven before BBC-2 hits the air. A Central Script Library handles something like 5,000 unsolicited scripts a year. All are read and doubtful ones re-read, but inevitably 99 9/10% are returned "with regret." Another department attached to the Solicitor's office handles all negotiations and contracts.

By its scope, its nature and its great freedom, BBC Drama Group can let the writer and, for that matter, the producers, directors, actors and myriads of creative people around the place, tread firmly into the unknown.

"Pericles, Prince of Tyre," has a total cast of 78 including principals, courtiers, a bawd, gentlemen and soldiery, plays three and a quarter hours but is copyright-free.

FRED ROBBINS

"ROBBINS' NEST"—WNEW, N.Y.; "ASSIGNMENT HOLLYWOOD" Syndicated Coast to Coast Radio Luxembourg and Photoplay Magazine
Mgt. JACK BEEKMAN
JUdson 6-2324, New York

Eastern Bloc Steps Up Jamming of Radio and TV

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt.

Proof of how successful the radio and television stations are in West Germany is—how many Eastern powers are trying to jam them.

Current cold war battle is being fought here over the airwaves, with the Communist party from East Germany recently having stepped up its activities, by building new jamming transmitters to block out television from West Germany.

Coincidentally (but much less than a coincidence under the Red planning) West Germany got its eagerly-awaited Second Television Network on April 1, 1963—and at just about the same date, the first jamming center aimed at blocking out television programs from West Germany was completed in Sieglitzberg, East Germany.

The Red countries have long occupied themselves with blocking out radio programs from the West European countries with high-powered equipment built to interfere with reception. And as the people of the Red satellites step up their ownership of television sets as well as radio, the Reds are turning to television themselves—not, of course, to give their people a chance to view entertaining programs or hear genuine news programs, but to prevent them from getting the same kind of information and entertainment from the free western lands.

In fact, recently in East Berlin, the tricky Red officials that run the Ulbricht regime came up with an ingenious way to get the school children to tattle on their parents for watching the broadcasts from West Germany that are frowned on by the Commie regime.

Schoolchildren in numerous East Berlin classes were asked to draw pictures and write little sketches about the children's programs that they had viewed the last couple of days on their television sets at home.

And with a little fast scanning, the teachers would know whether the children's programs were the propaganda-slanted shows that originated from their own land—or whether the children and their parents had been watching the suspect programs from West Germany's two television networks.

Reprisals against the parents who were suspected of being Western world sympathizers would, of course, be simple to mete out. And the innocent children were forced to betray their parents for trying to see or hear the West German programs.

17 Languages

Deutsche Welle (Voice of Germany) is the 10-year-old West German shortwave center that is now broadcasting in 17 languages through its six shortwave transmitters.

And despite the constant blockage, the center is now aiming programs at Bulgaria and Roumania plus other Red lands, and even sending programs in Kisuaheli to Africa and in some of the Slavic tongues to eastern Europe.

Fifty-eight foreign stations are able to carry the program "Learn German with the Deutsche Welle," and the outlet relies on news broadcasts and documentaries to tell its story, while shying away from anything that smacks too strongly of "propaganda."

A recent "secret decision of the Communist party in the Soviet Zone of East Germany was to step up activities against the West German television networks—which in an odd way proves how effective the networks are.

There are 13 jamming transbroadcasts from the Deutsche Welle alone, in Bulgaria and Roumania," and as far north as Siberia.

Authorities in the hot and cold war for the radio and television channels estimate that Russia alone is spending close to a billion dollars to try to prevent the people of Russia and Eastern Europe from listening to foreign radio stations, by operating 2,500 installations that exist solely to jam broadcasts from the non-Commie countries.

Special attempts to block out the programs, it was noted, were utilized when the shows discussed such hot topics as the European Common Market, the United Nations General Assembly, and shooting of East German escapees at the West Berlin wall, and difficulties looming between China and Russia.

Jamming, incidentally, is a violation of the United Nations Economic and Social Council resolution of August, 1950, which condemns deliberate interference with radio signals as a "denial of the right of all persons to be fully informed concerning news, opinions, and ideas regardless of frontiers."

East Germany has more than 400 jamming transmitters — but the people there are getting used to hearing the programs between the beeps. And, according to letters they send to the stations across the barrier, and reports from refugees, the programs are getting through.

When Communist party volunteers climbed to the rooftops of some of the houses in East Germany to turn the antennae away from reception of West German television shows, the householders organized night patrols of their own—and during the dark hours, turned the antennae right back again.

It's an expensive war for the Reds, and one in which Western Europe is making no counter-attacks. A listener in Paris or Frankfurt or London is perfectly free to tune in Radio Moscow or East Berlin or Budapest any time he wants to listen.

BEN GRAUER

TV NBC RADIO

More Powell Sales

Four Star Distribution reports its 55th sale on the hour rerun series, "Dick Powell Theatre" to WKBT, La Crosse. Other markets recently pacted for the dramatic package include Buffalo, Grand Junction, Colorado Springs and Montrose.

Other Four Star sales last week included "Stagecoach West" to KRON, San Francisco; "Rifleman" to KTVT, Dallas-Ft. Worth; and "Detectives" to WTVO, Rockford, and WKBT, LaCrosse.

Talk, talk, talk . . . on WOR daily 12:15 to 1 p.m. and still TALKING! Ed and Pegeen Fitzgerald may well be the performers who ORIGINATED making with the conversation for the benefit of eavesdroppers!

I Was a Teenage Gourmet

Or, Gastronomy Is Good for the Gag-Writer

By KEN ENGLUND

Hollywood.

To whet your appetite I'm writing a nostalgic book subtitled: "A Gastronomical Alimentary Tract on the Eating Habits (and Drinking) of Colleagues in The Creative Crafts Circa 1932-1963. Proving That The Knife (and Fork) is Mightier Than The Pen."

For The Title—Larks In a Casserole—I am indebted to Alexandre Dumas and his "Dictionary of Cuisine." For The Philosophy: I am indebted to Lord Byron. (Editor's note: "Name Dropper!") "Give me Love, Food and Drink —and you can have all the rest."

I'm saving Love ("Forbidden Fruits I Have Known") for a later very thick volume and will only address myself to the problems now of sustanance as it relates to People in Show Biz. And what motivates them wanting to Eat and Drink.

Of course, unlike normal citizens of the community, show people are motivated by all sorts of selfish self-indulgent considerations. Vaudevillian George Beatty, for example, used to explain that he went on the stage, "so I could sleep late."

On tour, when a balcony heckler would interrupt the Beatty monologue, he would stop talking, skewer his tormentor with a long steely look, then squelch: "Young man, tomorrow morning when you are lifting your second load onto the truck, I will be having breakfast in bed!"

So much for George Beatty's motivation. I went into the show business to eat. I could have remained a non-pro and stayed in The Englund Family Business. (I come from a long, proud line of Gas Meter Readers but when I sold my first joke in 1933 . . .)

But allow me to step modestly aside for a moment and let Louis Untermeyer and Ralph E. Shikes tell it, quoting from their "Best Humor Annual" of 1953: "Englund's first steady job was with Phil Baker. He was hired, says Englund, 'on the strength of my loud ties and one joke submitted for Baker's radio show, The Armour Hour: 'Things are so bad in Hollywood that King Kong is now working for an organgrinder!' Englund had previously 'made' O. O. McIntyre's and Walter Winchell's columns, after which he wrote a weekly column for a local butcher's window."

"The butcher wanted to be known as a neighborhood wit," writes Englund, "so I ghosted the column for him and titled it 'Gabriel Over The Butchershop.' Later in life I wrote for peanuts, but this time it was for liver sausage—which was what I got paid off in."

Hooked on Room Service

Phil Baker paid me off in room service—at Chicago's Ambassador East. It was in the middle of my first collaboration—with Broadway's Jack Murray—that I tasted my very first very own hot corned-beef-on-rye with a whole dill pickle washed down with a Dr. Brown's Celery Tonic. Suddenly I knew I was hooked for life. From that fateful moment on, I had a kosher delicatessen monkey on my back!

In retrospect, the added thrill was that I was working with the mastermind of "Room Service" himself, Jack Murray, later co-author with Allen Boretz of the Broadway play by the same name.

A good deal of the meat of that merry hit based on the true adventures, and penniless derring-do, of three Tin Pan Alley Musketeers—Murray, Ben Oakland and Berry Trivers—who lived by their wits, existing solely on the room service of a Times Square hotel for several not-so-merry months, while starving it out on the threshold of fame and fortune.

* * *

Dave Freedman's Pad

Skipping lightly now to later New York City chapters in my Culinary Life, I find one titled:

David Freedman's Central Park West penthouse apartment where I again encounter Dr. Brown's Celery Tonic, together with Moxie, Green River, Orange Crush, Lemon, Lime, Wild Cherry, and Cream Soda, plus imported Ginger Beer kept in great succulent quantities in an iced cooler in the Bathroom of David's top floor study-workshop. And while drinking same, have Divers Larks collaborating openly on "The Laugh With Ken Murray Show" (Radio), secretly on Freedman's Block & Sully and Tim & Irene Shows. (Radio). And for the record: the same Irene Ryan now costars on "The Beverly Hillbillies," and moonlighting doing sketches for The Follies and for Bert Lahr-Bea Lillie in 'The Show is On,' while rewriting the European operetta 'The White Horse Inn' (for Broadway).

Not to mention kibitzing with—and slipping a fresh quip now and again to—David's pal, Lou Holtz, or inserting a humorous passage into David's other air show, "Baby Snooks," starring Fanny Brice, with Hanley Stafford as "Daddy." David Freedman was a walking comedy factory, and had hatched—or helped to fame—a whole cookoo's nest of comedians and comedienes creating powerful material for them in all mediums. Eddie Cantor's radio success was due in large measure to highly polished routines from the Freedman comedy-lathe.

Yet all this star dust wasn't the attraction for me. David Freedman and I were drawn together by our mutual gluttony. As David would exaggerate it, "Ken would polish off the food in the plates, devour the plates and table silver, masticate the table thoroughly, then chew through the surrounding walls and buildings!"

I was a growing boy, I admit. And a haggard one. Because with our killing round-the-clock schedule we seldom slept, and in order to grind out the radio scripts and get them out of the way so we could work on the Shubert Shows (the thing we really cared the most about!) we had to sacrifice one entire night's sleep a week. Food was our only fuel to keep us frantically hammering out jokes on a never-ending assembly line of comedy. But let me set the scene to give you all a better idea of what went on.

Fun In A Fun Factory

Scene: The Freedman Penthouse Study-Workshop, one entire wall lined with green steel files containing thousands of indexed jokes on topics from A to Z. Bookshelves crammed with bound performed scripts of Eddie Cantor, Baby Snooks, et al radio shows.

Kenneth Englund, a gawky, thin, sincere, pimply-faced, idealistic, money-hungry Chicago youth, enters at Wednesday noon as per schedule to collaborate on finishing the Ken Murray radio routines, only to discover David Freedman, a half-bald, warmhearted, salty-talking, rather big-bellied coffee-house-r, seated at his large desk, puffing on an even bigger cigar, furiously working on the phone placing bets at every racetrack in America.

After lending a sympathetic, if callow ear to the problems of his morning—the uncertain condition of the turf at Pimlico—the vagaries of playing surefire long shots based on sincere and knowledgeable tips from the waiters at Lindy's (Big Louie and Harry The Horse) David and I compare notes and script pages, to find that I have written the first Murray routine as agreed—and now we are to concoct the last sketch together for the weekly radio romp sponsored by those funloving Lever Bros. Only—and it's a big only! —David, the horseplayer has been too busy with more important tasks to get around to the writing of Murray's middle routine—as agreed!

About this time, faithful Lloyd Rosenmond appears on the scene with typewriter at the ready so David and I plunge into work. And the files. David remembers a Cantor middle routine with Jimmy Wallington we might revamp for Murray with no one the wiser.

After seriously fracturing our funnybones in a vain attempt to re-fashion and resurrect the yellowing Eddie-Jimmy diolog, we are forced to the dismal conclusion that we'll have to actually make up something fresh.

By this hour Lou Holtz has dropped by for a ginger beer giving David in exchange some hot tips in the market secretly siphoned from Wall Street chronies the night before when Lou entertained at one of their private Park Avenue parties.

When Holtz makes a comedy bow and graceful exit, an agitated Tim Ryan phones to remind David that the advertising agency insists on an immediate rewrite of an unacceptable Tim & Irene middle routine.

Stalling The Shuberts

Harry Kaufman, general manager for the Shuberts, calls next. At the Shuberts' insistence he'll be up at the end of the day to hear David read the new Lahr-Lillie sketches.

"Tonight at 8 sharp, Dave! Mister Lee says you've been stalling us long enough! No matter

(Continued on page 123)

BILL SHIPLEY

TV's Prime-Time Candidates: Electioneering Can Be Fun

By BRUCE CARROLL

This fall the networks introduced the daily half-hour tv news show. But the increasing pace of international developments and the 1964 national elections make this meager step too small to handle the full story properly. All three networks must plan to integrate (very popular this year) the primary and national election campaigns into regular prime-time entertainment.

In the early part of the year most of the shows should be tailored to meet the requirements of the Republican primary battles. For example Senator Barry Goldwater will appear first, on "Bonanza," playing a merchant from the Arizona Territory lost near the Ponderosa while on his way to Washington, D.C. Ben Cartwright asks him to stay on for a few days. He does, delighted at how wonderful life is without the income tax, social security, and the United Nations. Barry and Adam, the well read Cartwrights get into a lengthy discussion on the contemporary German writer Karl Marx. The episode ends with Goldwater well rested, ready to proceed eastward to conquer the Rocky's and reach Washington safely.

Governor Rockefeller would of course need a more up-to-date, urban setting for any show on which he was to appear. He is understand to want a guest appearance on "East Side/West Side." He could tour the slums praising the heroes of various minority groups like Martin Luther King, David Ben Gurion, Christopher Columbus and Casey Stengel. Then after a thorough tour he would have ample chance to speak in favor of civil rights, honesty, home, and the sacred family relationship. He would, of course, find that the driving force behind all good in the city was George C. Scott who, through unorthodox methods, achieves lofty goals. Being a wise politician wishing to get the tv vote, he would promise to give Scott, if he gets elected, the post of Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare. The final decision whether or not to appoint Scott to the Cabinet would naturally be based on the show's rating.

The agile Richard Nixon, while denying any Presidential ambitions this year, has indicated interest in showing up the administration's foreign policy. "Wide World of Sports" would be an excellent vehicle for his aims. He could regain the U.S. prestige lost when Khrushchev beat Rusk at badminton last year. And Mr. Nixon feels confident that he could easily be victorious in a race against DeGaulle, Erhard, and Sir Alec Home, around the Berlin wall.

There will probably be other candidates. Harold Stassen might be examined by "Dr. Kildare" to prove that he's still in fine shape after six unsuccessful bids for the GOP nomination.

The only woman candidate could perhaps fit into the lives of the Nelsons, changing the name of that show to "Ozzie, Harriet, and Margaret Chase Smith."

Election excitement always builds during the summer. After the primaries are over, instead of going into reruns, ABC is understood to be mapping an expansion of its "Greatest Show on Earth" series to cover the Republican and Democratic Conventions.

To help promote the new administration, the Democratic National Committee has shown interest in several shows: President Johnson could return briefly to school-teaching and help "Mr. Novak" out of a jam. The Texas image might be improved by restaging the Battle of the Alamo, live, on the "Ed Sullivan Show." Treasury Secretary Dillon would stress economy as a regular panelist on "The Price is Right." "Ben Casey" will be used to push Medicare And the family angle could be highlighted by changing the name of "The Lucy Show" to "The Lucy Baines Show."

The biggest night of course will be Election Eve Monday Nov. 2, 1964. At 7:30 The Democratic nominees will appear on "To Tell the Truth." This will be followed by the Republican candidate unloading his secret campaign weapon on "I've Got a Secret." At 8:30 "Wagon Train" becomes "Campaign Train" for a last roundup of the campaign promises and at 10 o'clock in a show of national harmony all candidates across the nation get together to "Sing Along with Mitch."

The strategy behind all this is to get the tv audience so weary that after they vote on Tuesday they'll all go home and go to bed, and be content to read the election results in Wednesday's newspapers; thus making unnecessary the huge effort and expense that each network originally planned to devote to covering election night returns.

Saga of a Poodle

"Every Night, Josephine," by Jacqueline Susann (Geis; $3.95), proves that if an author can't write the apocryphal American best-seller, supposedly entitled "Lincoln's Doctor's Dog" (no book about Lincoln, doctors or dogs has ever failed), the next best thing is to be a beautiful television actress married to a prominent tv producer (Irving Mansfield), with a personable poodle to profile, plus a genuine flair for writing.

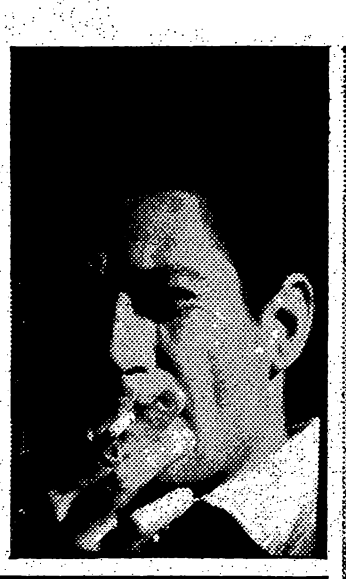
Mrs. Mansfield's dog tale wags with good humor, sentiment, show biz names, and proper pup anecdotes. It's hard to see how this tome can miss, and Josephine's (the poodle's) biog could make a good tv script or two for the Mansfield if they ever lack for material —which seems unlikely. Rodo.

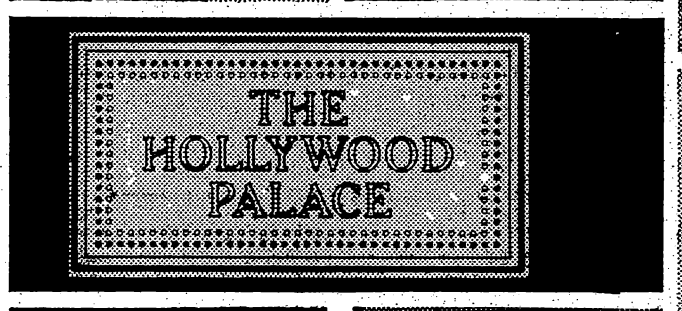
JACK BARRY

Developing 5 Pilots for CBS-Paramount TV Productions
MC and Producer—"THE JACK BARRY SHOW"—KTLA-TV
Saturdays—7 P.M. - 8 P.M.
MC and Producer—"ADDOGRAMS"—KTLA-TV, Mon-Fri., 7:30-8 P.M.

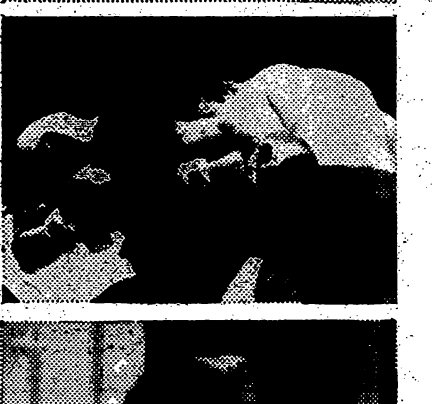
HARRY VON ZELL

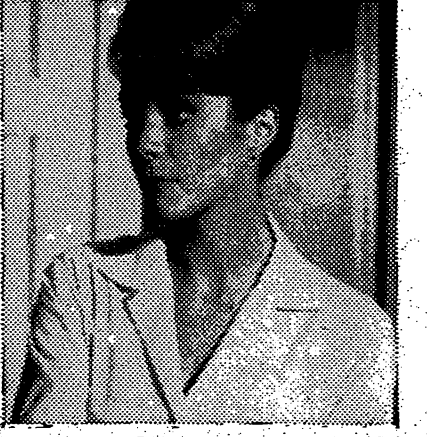
"THE ANDY WILLIAMS SHOW"

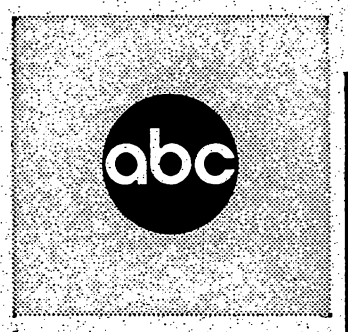




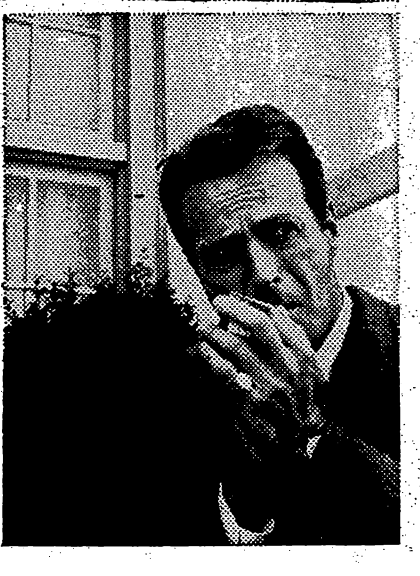
THE
HOLLYWOOD
PALACE







abc



B'casting and the Congress

By MIKE MOSETTIG

Washington.

From its triumph which arose from tragedy, broadcasting has in Congress an abundant reservoir of goodwill which in 1964 the industry will be almost solely responsible for enlarging or frittering away.

The industry's performance in three fields—politics, commercials and ratings—will have a more enduring effect on its Capitol Hill relations than the limited broadcast legislation likely to come out of Congress in the next six months.

The upcoming year marks the last phase of a four-year transition from tempest to temperance in the industry's mercurial relations with Capitol politicos.

In the four years since the 1959 quiz show debacle, broadcasting has gradually been gaining the initiative in building its stature and image with Congress.

Because of the short election-year legislative session upcoming, the industry will have the time and impetus to nail down its enhanced status at the Capitol.

Topping off the four-year transition was broadcasting's performance in covering the events following President Kennedy's assassination. The coverage stilled the industry's critics and made them reexamine the medium they had been harpooning. It also secured the position of broadcasting's political friends. Most importantly, some of whom it left its mark with, are those well placed in the Congressional power structure.

'Sink or Swim'

As viewed by those in the know at the Capitol, broadcasting is immersed in respect and goodwill. The message now to broadcasters from objective Congressional sources is: "Sink or swim."

In order of their immediate importance, the measuring rods for broadcasting perfomance will be its coveage of the 1964 campaign and election; its effectiveness at self-regulation of "overcommercialization" and its ability to clean up the "ratings mess."

Necessarily in an election year, politics will be the most important performance index. In this area, Senators and Congressmen don't need outside or expert advice.

A good example of how broadcasting's efforts can backfire in this area is last year's editorial hearings. Had not several influential Congressmen been gutted by station editorials, the House Communications subcommittee would not have undertaken its "fact-finding study" of airwave opinion.

Politicians regard television during campaign time as a genie in a bottle. The sparse efforts to relax equal time Sec. 315 are a good indication of how Congress is only going to let the genie out very slowly—if at all.

A good broadcasting performance in the upcoming election will likely result in an unhinging of Sec. 315 at least to the point of Senatorial, Gubernatorial and Congressional elections. This is what Senate Communications subcommittee chairman John Pastore (D-R.I.) thinks that he can push through both houses if the politicians and broadcasters get along well in the 1964 campaigns.

Heads-up coverage by stations will also likely stave off Congressional moves to add more shackles to the "fairness doctrine."

A scant few members of Congress realize the complexity of FCC regulation in this arena and a packetful of politicians, singed by broadcast coverage of their campaigns, could re-write the doctrine into absurdity if left unchecked.

On the "overcommercialization issue", the general Congressional attitude is one of impatience with the industry and at the same time warines of FCC's attempts to impose curbs.

Even if the bill of Rep. Walter Rogers (D-Tex.) preventing FCC from limiting commercial time passes the House, the Senate won't touch the measure with a 10-foot pole.

While the House for the moment is more intent on staving off "bureaucratic clutter," the Senate dons are worried as well about "commercial clutter."

Objective Senate sources feel Rogers may have gotten himself in a bind with his commercial bill. Its pasesage, they opine, would lead some irresponsible broadcasters to the view they have a Congressional fiat to air as many commercials as they please. These Senate sources, buttressed by "responsible" broadcast opinion, feel the end result would be an unbearable commercial problem which could only lead to excessive legislation and regulr tion.

The upshot is the effort of Sen. Pastore and Senate Commerce Committee chairman Warren Magnuson (D-Wash.) to prod NAB prexy Le Roy Collins and the networks into voluntary action on this front.

As to ratings, the possibility of legislative action was summed up by a Congressman who said: "Oren Harris is a patient man, but . . ."

Thus best states the mood of the Arkansas Democrat who will look askance on a problem for only so long. In any event this session will be too short to write ratings legislation, but if by Jan. 1965, when the 89th Congress convenes and ratings are still a "mess," broadcasters better hold their hats.

The broadcasting power structure in Congress centers around the two Commerce Committee and two Communications subcommittee chairman — Harris, Magnuson, Rogers and Pastore. All are relatively secure politically and barring the unforseen will be facing industry spokesmen across committee tables for years to come.

Of the four, Rogers is the newest in power, and is slowly fitting into his spurs. He, also, is the most intent of the group on checking FCC.

But he acts under Harris' eye and so far has had the Arkansan's support in reining in E. William Henry & Co.

While not quite as upset about FCC "power grabbing," Magnuson and Pastore say they are willing to go the last mile with the industry on self-regulation.

Like some football coaches, the view of these four men is that a good offense is the best defense. As seen from Capitol Hill, this is the industry's year to fully platoon on offense. The shape of future legislation, they say, will be determined by the number of industry points scored.

JOE FRANKLIN'S MEMORY LANE
Monday thru Friday
WOR-TV

'Escapism' Themes TV's Quest For '64-'65 Shows; Pilots in 9 Months Ahead

By DAVE KAUFMAN

Hollywood.

As of Jan. 1 1964, most of the Hollywood telefilm studios had completed production on their pilot projects for next season, nine months ahead of the 1964-65 semester, with the hopes (1) that their pilot will sell; (2) that a hit or two may emerge from the multitude of pilots rolling off the assembly line.

Vidfilm execs deeply enmeshed in planning for next season are concentrating on action, adventure, espionage, and, of course, that most stable of staples—comedy. Out of the varied environs of Hollywood's tv film industry there is only one new psychiatry series being piloted, a vivid illustration of industry sentiment that the so-called "sick" shows are on the downward trend.

While it might be said there are only two psychiatrist series and so how could that be too much, the answer can be found from the producer of one of them, Irving Elman, of MGM-TV's "The Eleventh Hour," now in its second season. Elman's contention is that while it's true only "Hour" and "Breaking Point" fit into this category, there are too many so-called "sick" shows because many another dramatic series, and anthologies in particular, pursue this same subject. He feels the result has been a preponderance of "sick" shows and his sentiment is widely shared among Hollywood's filmmakers as they plan for the future.

In a sense allied to this type of show is the "East Side, West Side" type, which is generally conceded in Hollywood to be very well done, but again it's a series which generally deals with depressing, downbeat themes, since its principal and focal subject is a social worker. There has been too much emphasis on the sordid or seamy side of life, too much of life in the sewer, it's felt here.

Not included in this analysis are the medico series, "Ben Casey" and "Dr. Kildare." That's because while such series must, by their very nature, deal with a variety of illnesses, at the same time they have an uplift tone in the fact that the doctor heroes of each are dedicated men of medicine who always seek to help, and to cure. Also, as "Breaking Point" producers Mort Fine and David Friedkin recently pointed out, there is strong self-identification with a doctor, long identified to the public, but there is not in the case of psychiatry, even today still a relatively new area.

Also, as of this writing, there is only one new anthology series being planned. However, it should be noted that this doesn't necessarily mean there won't be any new entries in this category since anthology series don't as a rule require pilots, and often are sold on the basis of a star name who will be host for such a series, as in the cases of Bob Hope and his Chrysler Theatre or the Richard Boone show. However, several so-called semi-anthologies are in the works—shows where there are two or three leads, but the emphasis is placed on guest stars so that basically they are anthologies.

This season was to have been the big test for anthologies, with seven or eight such series on the various networks. By mid-season, it was evident none ranked highly in the Nielsens, and the ratings problem which has always plagued anthologies still is with this type of show.

Yen for Escapism

Consequently, the blueprinters of tv's future were, on the whole, going in for escapism not only in the form of comedy, but via action, adventure spy stories, etc. As always, there are the exceptions, such as Bing Crosby Productions' "The House" project, while deals with politics on the state level. James Moser, creator of "Ben Casey" and "Medic," created this property, a fact which certainly enhances its prospects of saleability. CBS-TV is involved in it on a co-production basis.

Not all Hollywood tv film executives confined their efforts for the future to the content of their product. Some feel the form, the length, is an all-important factor, and one of them is Alan J. Miller, production chief at Revue studios, by far the largest telefilm studio not only in Hollywood, but in the world.

Miller inclines to the theory that viewers are interested in shows which will be 90-min. or even two hours in length. Revue is producing the pilot of tv film's initial two-hour series, for NBC-TV, at the present time, and if it meets with the network's approval there will be a two-hour series next season.

Miller's Revue studios thus far is the only one turning out the longies, with a trio of 90-min. series, the expanded "Wagon Train," plus "The Virginian" and "Arrest and Trail." But it's also engaged in the pilot of a 90-min. comedy series, "90 Bristol Court," for NBC-TV, for next season. The Revue production head feels the longer show makes for better story-telling, that there will be more series of such length.

However, this is not a sentiment

(Continued on page 121)

It's Nice to Reach The Top, But Plenty Tough Staying There

By NORMAN BAER

In an industry with the high mortality rate of ours, there always has to be room at the top. There are an awful lot of people reaching for that brass ring. They know it's there to be had, and that no one has a monopoly on it. Of course, once you're at the top its as hard to stay as it was to get there.

There are many roads that lead to the top, including some that haven't been traveled yet. Some of the roads have been turned into broad well traveled highways. These are roads that have been made safe by the pioneers. They include the Western road, the Medical road, the Hillbilly road and the Courtroom road among others. One of the sad commentaries on our business is that the safety of these roads too often kills off the urge to explore other avenues. As a result, many of the people who reach the top are look-alikes. But there's stll room at the summit for explorers, even if the space reserved for them is narrowing.

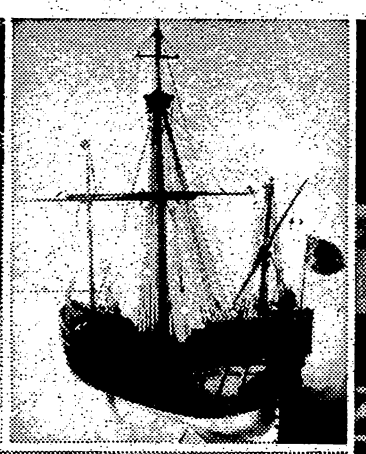
The path to the top starts more often than not with an idea: Now in many ways the cheapest commodity in television is ideas. That refers to quantity, not necessarily quality. Almost everyone has an idea for a television show. This is a mania not confined to people in the business either. It's virtually impossible for a producer to go anywhere without being approached with an idea for a show. While the idea is certainly important, by itself it isn't enough to get to the top. It's the execution that really counts. Many a good idea lies dormant in a desk drawer or on the back of a crumpled envelope, while lesser ideas are brought to fruition. It's what you do with the idea that counts.

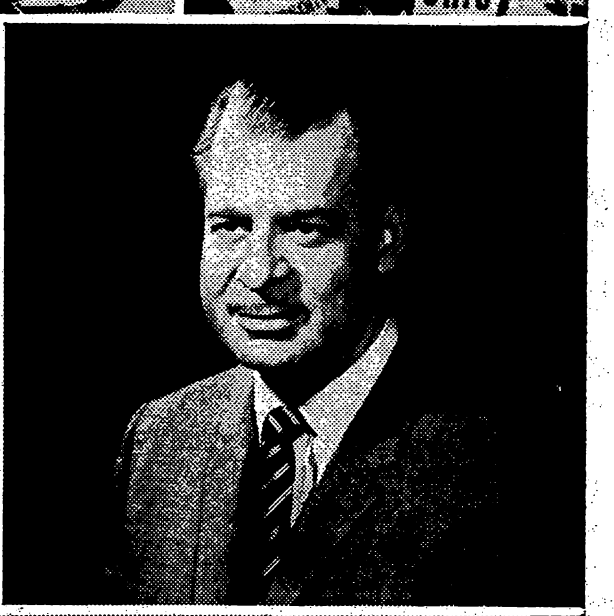
There are very few shows on the air about which we don't hear the comment (from someone not even remotely connected with it), "That's the same idea I had." But as the old saying goes, "It's far better to light a candle, than curse the darkness."

Those who reach the top are the ones who light the candles, those who execute the ideas.

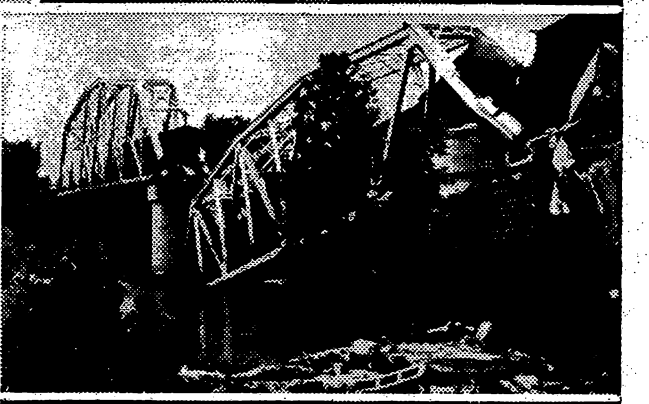
IRV KUPCINET
KUP'S SHOW
Produced by PAUL FRUMKIN—Directed by CLIFF BRAUN
WBKB—ABC—TV—Chicago

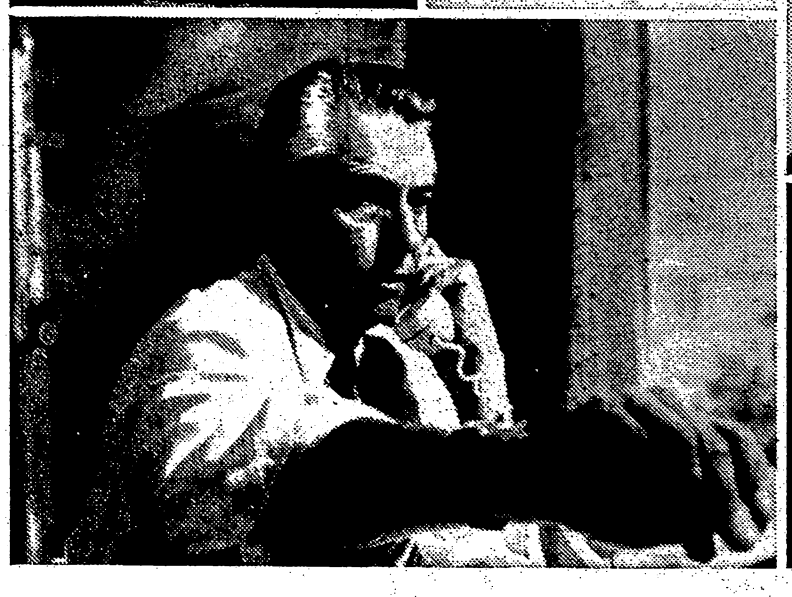
JOYCE GORDON
Spokeswoman—M.C.—Panelist
Personal Management: CARL EASTMAN
141 East 55th Street, New York. PL 1-5566
West Coast Representation: Abrams-Rubaloff Assn.

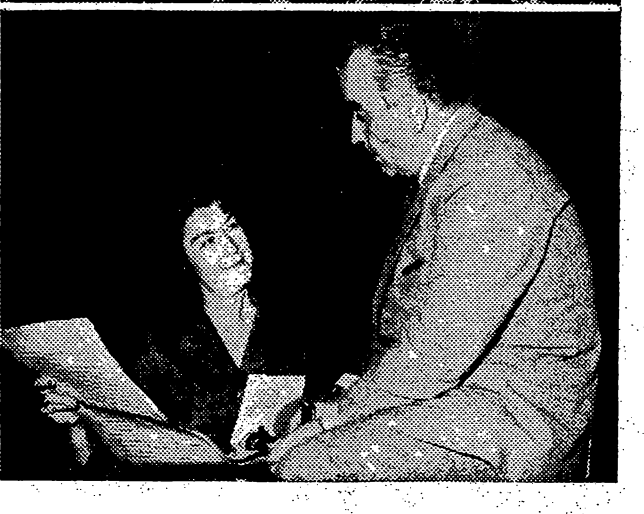




abc NEWS







CKOY: A Playback Into Memorable Radio Moments

By PAUL A. GARDNER

Ottawa.

"The increase to 50,000 watts makes you one of the most powerful radio stations in North America," said Hollywood columnist and radio gabber Jimmy Fiddler in a taped tribute to CKOY, which recently stepped up into wattage to the highest permissible on this continent. It's the only station here operating on 50,000 watts around the clock. (The other Ottawa station is Frank Ryan's CFRA, but adjacent Hull, Que., beams in CKCH, owned by Le Droit, Ottawa French-language daily. CJET, Smith's Falls, also hits this capital.) (Station memorialized the event last month with a special program called "From One to Fifty.")

CKOY some years ago employed Jack Kent Cooke as "consulting director." Cooke, now a U.S. citizen and in California radio, kept touch from Toronto and now and then sent his brother Hal Cooke to Ottawa as trouble-shooter—notably in labor negotiations, which resulted a few years ago in a strike. Its g.m. for some time now has been Jack Daly, and labor relations seem to run smoothly. CKOY is owned by a group headed by Irving Cameron and including Carline Wilson, daughter of the late senator Cairine Wilson.

CKOY was founded (as 100-watt CKOC) in 1924 by Dr. George McKinley Geldert who—introduced by CKOY's Hal Anthony (who did a generally smooth job on the "One To Fifty" show as producer, announcer and narrator) said, "I used it more as a community station than as a commercial enterprise." After that heretical statement he was cut off for some rhetoric by Anthony, which suddenliy turned into a candid admission of (past) faults, including "amateurish talent" and "weak payrolls."

No examples of community service were cited—such as Mac Lipson's hard-hitting series of a few years ago, sponsored by a lumber company. The show pranced into a recap of entertainers of the 1920's—"when the air was not filled with radioactive Strontium 90 but with entertainment." (No mention of another of today's air-fillers: tv.)

The rasping voice of the Shadow was followed by a gag from Eddie Cantor, intro'd by Jimmy Wallington, and a snatch from "Amos 'n' Andy." Then Dr. Geldert came in live again, to tell how the original studio was his dining room, 48 sq. ft., from which the table had to be moved during broadcasts. The living room was full of transmitting equipment—"There were no transcriptions, tapes or cartridges then—all live. Eventually radio's true potential was seen—the sell . . . Our first sponsor was the American Playing Card Co., which took three spots in a half-hour bridge-instruction program for $25, once a week. Then came "Reach for a Lucky Instead of a Sweet," "Four Out of Five Have It," the Clicquot Club Eskimos and "Remember, Your Future is in Florida, the Fairest White Goddess of the States." (He didn't add that the future most folks bought turned out to be under water.)

Major Bowes & Bob Hope

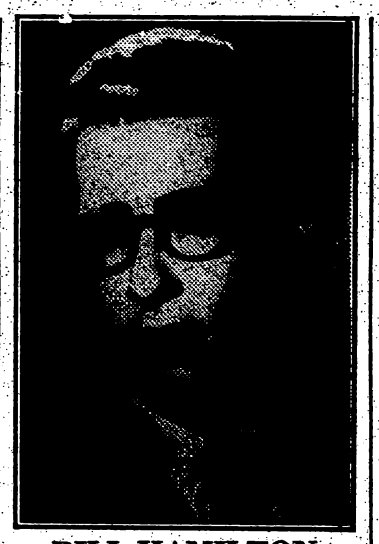
Next came bits from "Major Bowes Amateur Hour" and "This is Bob 'Bulova' Hope, back in California, where it's not much colder than it was in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan . Once you learn to say that you never again have to buy dental floss!" Then "Hardy Family" with Mickey Rooney, Lewis Stone and Fay Holden; and a pants-losing sketch by Jack Benny and Rochester (Eddie Anderson).

A couple of golden minutes from (Fred) "Allen's Alley" brought Fred and wife Portland (Hoffa—no relation to czar James) visiting Senator Claghorn (Kenny Delmar), who y'alled, "When Ah eat crackers in bed Ah only eat Georgia crackers! . Ah'm singin' 'Swanee' and that's the Jolson River, so kneel down and uncover!" Then Mrs. Nussbaum (Minerva Pious) told the classic tale of her western-fan husband who called out "Hi Ho Silver" in his sleep, whereupon the lady above began calling, "Hi Ho Nussbaum!" And Ajax Cassidy, toasting "Free Ireland, Eamonn de Valera, King George and Morton Downey."

The Prince of Wales was heard abdicating for the sake of "the woman I love," followed by the rescue of the trapped miners from the Moose River (N.S.) gold mine (later immortalized in song by Wilf Carter, with "Keep Smiling, Old Pal" on flip). Then more stirring words from Anthony: "In 1940 CKOY in effect had enlisted on the side of democracy."

"I never knew what it was to take a holiday," cut in Dr. Geldert. "Censorship regulations were so tight, especially in Ottawa; staff was short and so was equipment." Cut to Churchill: "Conquer we must and we shall . . . This was their finest hour!"—and then John Daly's announcement on Dec. 7, 1941, that the Japanese had attacked Pearl Harbor—and again Daly announcing FDR's death, then Arthur Godfrey describing his funeral.

In '48 CKCO became CKOY—change recalled with Ella Fitzgerald singing "A Tisket a Tasket," Tommy Dorsey's "Little Brown Jug" and Clyde McCoy's "Sugar Blues." Old and new styles of newscasting were heard in contrast—with a rare Canadian touch T. C. "Tommy Douglas, head of the New Democratic Party,



BILL HAMILTON
Announcer—Narrator
Chicago, HO 9-3312

TV's Detractors Make a Girl Mad

By JUNE TAYLOR

Nothing annoys me more than stage directors and choreographers who sneer at television. In fact that goes for anybody in show business who disdains tv's output as being low item on the artistic totem pole. All I can say is, "How dare they!" Many a director or producer who has hit pay dirt in the theatre couldn't last a month on television. The pace is too fast for them. Television has developed a corps of "stage executives" who operate at split-second speed. They have to be able to make lightning decisions. These decisions can't be sound unless they have had so much experience and background that good taste is almost automatic.

Stage directors and choreographers have a cinch compared to their tv counterparts.

The average Broadway musical is in preparation for a year before it hits the Great White Way. There are meetings, discussions, revisions, hirings, firings. The music is written and the dances planned six months before the opening. They are in a constant state of flux, even before the first rehearsal. More revisions take place after the out-of-town opening. By the time the musical hits Broadway, the choreographer may have been replaced and the dances altered beyond recognition.

Compare this to a tv choreographer, like myself, who has to produce a dance number every week. Decisions, decisions, decisions. The pace is frantic, but we get things done that would seem impossible to the stage director who has weeks or months to do his chores.

Let's make some pertinent comparisons.

Where the stage choreographer can be deliberate in his planning, we television people are figuratively only one step ahead of the camera. No sooner is one show off the air than we are in the middle of planning another.

Take the matter of costumes, in the theatre they are planned far in advance and completed in time so that changes can be made. We order our costumes for the Jackie Gleason Show two days before we get them. There is no time to send them back for alterations. Very often we use pins and scissors to get the costumes to fit properly. One consolation—we don't have to worry about colors because our show is in black and white, but it's important that the costumes match the set, and that can be a problem.

Take the matter of rehearsals. We are allowed only 30 hours a week for each show—10 of these hours are on the day of the telecast. The dancers in any Broadway musical would hardly get started in 30 hours.

Bane and Savior of TV

Take the matter of music. We plan that in a matter of hours. Then the arrangements have to be turned out practically overnight. That means plenty of overtime cost. Overtime is both the bane and the savior of television. What it does to the budget is fantastic, but without it no weekly variety show could exist.

Once we set the routines, the music and the costumes, that's it. We can't give it a tryout in Philadelphia or New Haven. In short, we can't fool around. That's why it's so important to get it right in the first place.

Broadcasting Codes At The Crossroads?

By STOCKTON HELFFRICH
(Manager, New York Code Office, NAB)

The broadcast codes go through priority cycles as to trade—and general—newsworthiness. Depending on where the sporadic pressures may be coming from, they are talked up; they are talked about. While some will scoff as to their effectiveness, few would favor no controls at all. Be they good or bad, effective or otherwise, to be for the broadcast codes has long been to be on the side of the angels.

Have the codes got any teeth? Yes, certainly more than the baby teeth with which they started. These have some tendencies to malocclusion — built-in contradictions as it were—and they have more than a brief gnash to go towards a solid bite. Three decades of my working life now having been taken up with their ruminations, let me once again offer an inventory on the status of the broadcast codes.

As with other media of communication, radio and television had an early awareness of some needed self-protection. Like the Motion Picture Production Code, the early Radio Code of Good Practices and, chronologically later, the Television Code, comprised, and comprise, what in essence are combinations of guidelines and statements of intent. They are not supposed to be read as dogma, although some people in and out of the business lean in that direction. They came about and still derive from a combination of outside criticism, inside self-criticism, and a sense of responsibility combined with varying types of self interest. Where that last becomes too narrow, the constructive aspects of the Codes are debased. Where a wider sense of responsibility is at work, the application of the broadcast codes can demonstrate significant broadcaster awareness of the public intelligence.

The codes of basic documents—credos, statements of belief and intent—have been revised from time to time to meet changes in the world they reflect. That is to say, for example, if one edition of the Television Code frowned on broadcast of something like "The Iceman Cometh," inevitably it had to follow a later edition would—and does—allow otherwise. Times and mores change; so to a degree have the codes reflecting them. In general, during the last few years, there tend to have been broader interpretations of the codes, and greater pressures to update them. More so, first, in the area of program fare and, second, in that of commercial content. Increasingly during 1963 has there been a marked stepping up of more stringency in the code controls over commercial copy.

For the codes as a whole, the basic precepts have been with us for quite some time. It is the interpretations which are changing and likely will, and certainly should, change even more. In fact, and in brief, the main burden of these few comments is to argue that mechanical approaches to implementing the codes are out of date and simply not enough. Such approaches do not allow sufficiently for the changes going on or already achieved in the world around us. It is in the here and now, as a context, where the codes must operate. The codes have no reason for being, their implementation no meaning, unless they change to meet the new demands upon broadcasters from the world around them.

The television and radio networks, station groups and leading stations, employ no small numbers of editors, or others with editorial qualifications, to screen material before it is broadcast. The leading networks carry staffs of two dozen or more people in this area. An estimated cost for the combined code staffs at ABC, CBS and NBC would doubtless be in excess of $750,000 per year. At a comparatively lesser cost, single local stations approximate like responsibilities by delegating personnel to double in brass on the broadcast screening front.

These editors are umpires both as to program content and as to advertising copy. In the program area their sensitivity to the expectations of their audiences would appear to comprise reasonably educated guesses. In the best of what television has to offer, they are encouraging and promoting programs which do indeed present, as the Television Code now allows, "genuine artistic or literary material, valid moral and social issues, significant controversial and challenging concepts, and other subject matter involving adult themes."

On the commercial front—and with my concentration hereunder on matters of advertising content rather than placement—the broadcast gate-keepers have tougher sledding; the problems are considerably more numerous and perhaps more complex. Among Code subscribers, few but exceptional stations, the leading station groups and the networks, have adequate copy clearance procedures. In practical terms, the Gotham-based network copy clearance staffs carry a major responsibility, augmented by the three-year old trouble-shooting activities of the New York Code office. This means that a considerable amount of test and local spot advertising still can be aired without proper substantiation of the advertising claims being asked for or received. By contrast, advertis-

(Continued on page 124)

BARBARA HELLER
On THE JACKIE GLEASON SHOW
7:30 to 8:30 every Saturday—CBS-TV
Representative: Harry Rohm—Ashley-Steiner—New York
Personal Manager: Walter Myers—Hollywood, Calif.

ROBERT R. RUSSELL
For Broadway: "OH, MY BELOVED" (Book, Music and Lyrics)
For Television: A Comedy Panel Show and 3 Game Shows (in preparation)
Thanks to ABC-TV for "YOURS FOR A SONG" ('61, '62 and '63)
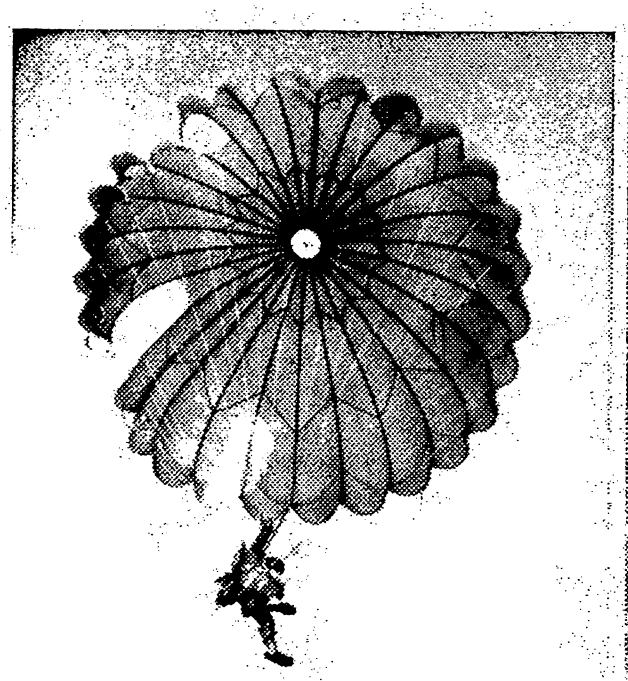
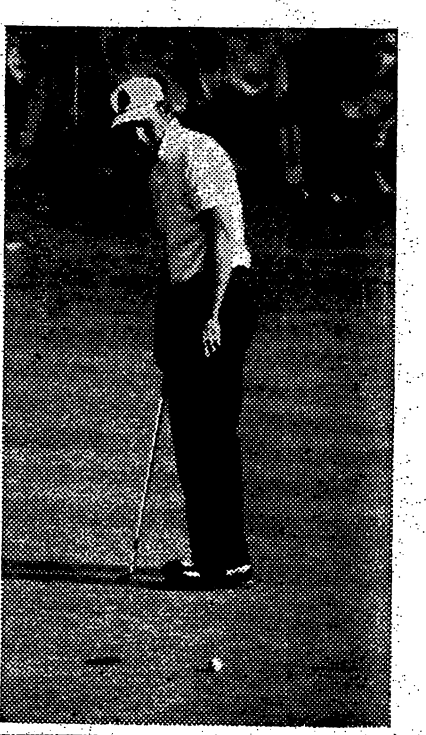
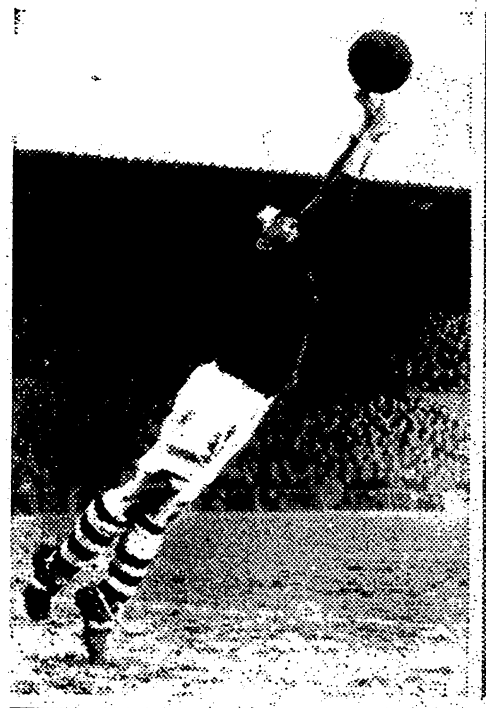
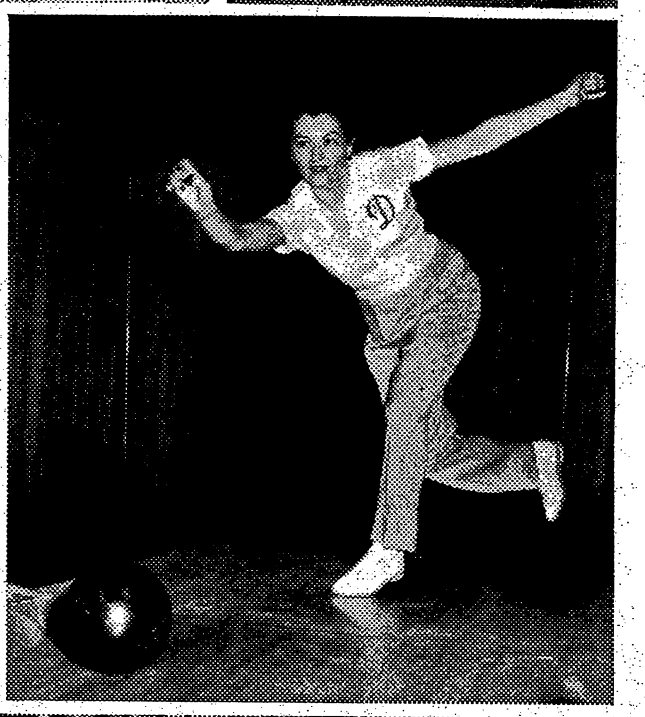
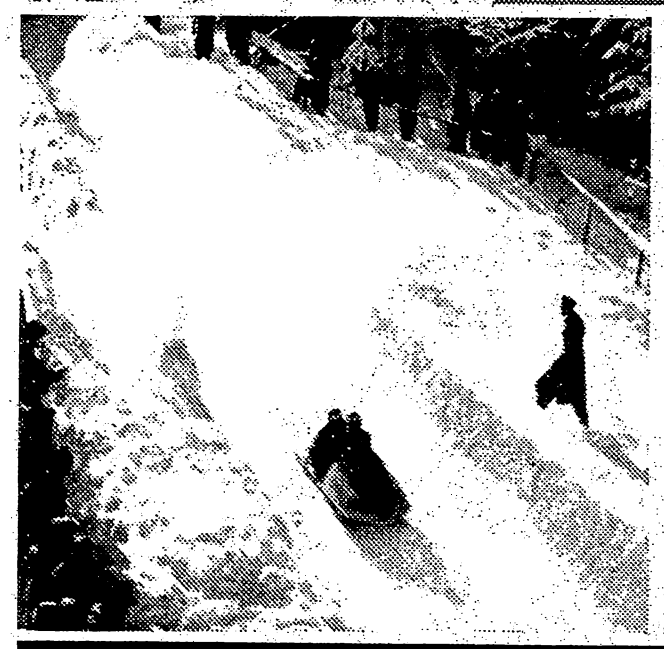
Circle—5-1577, New York





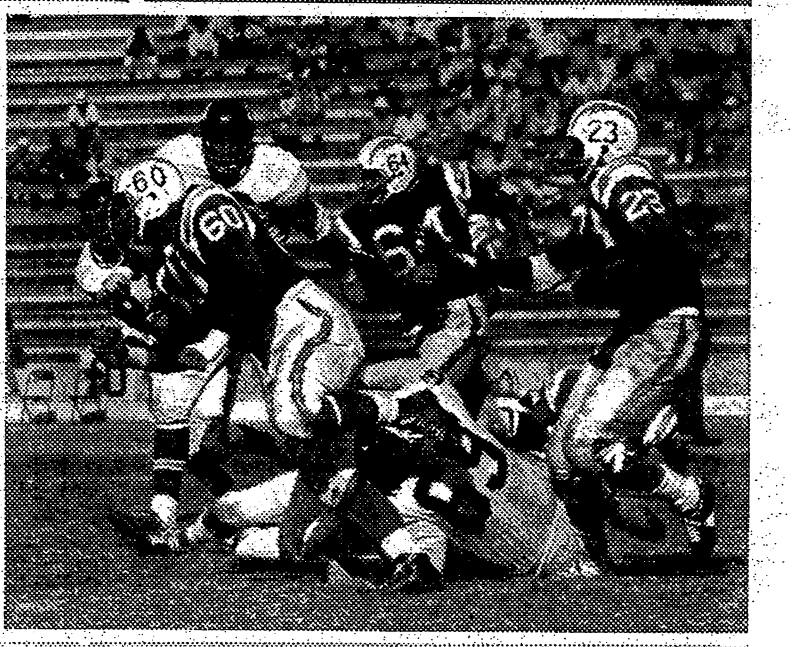


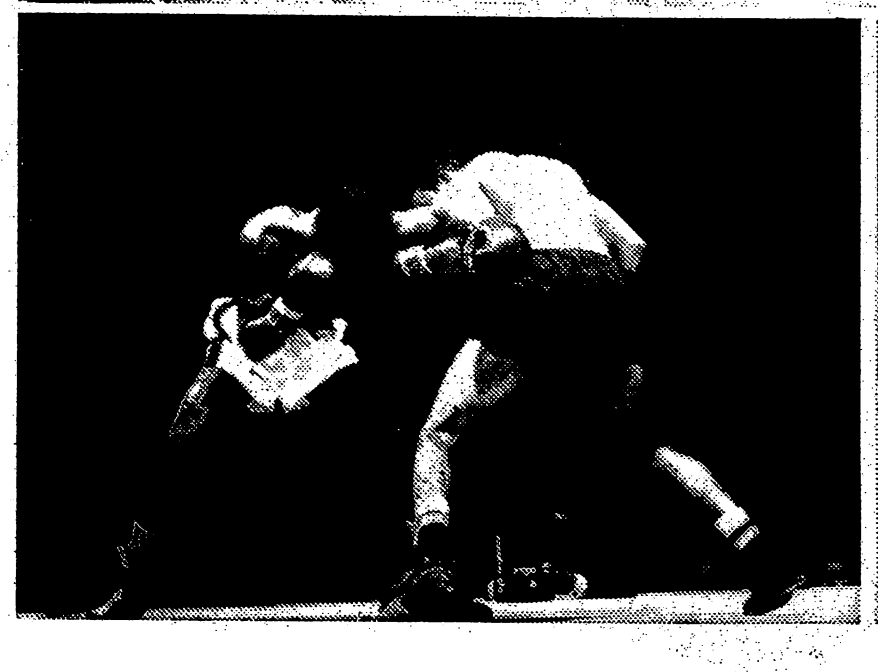


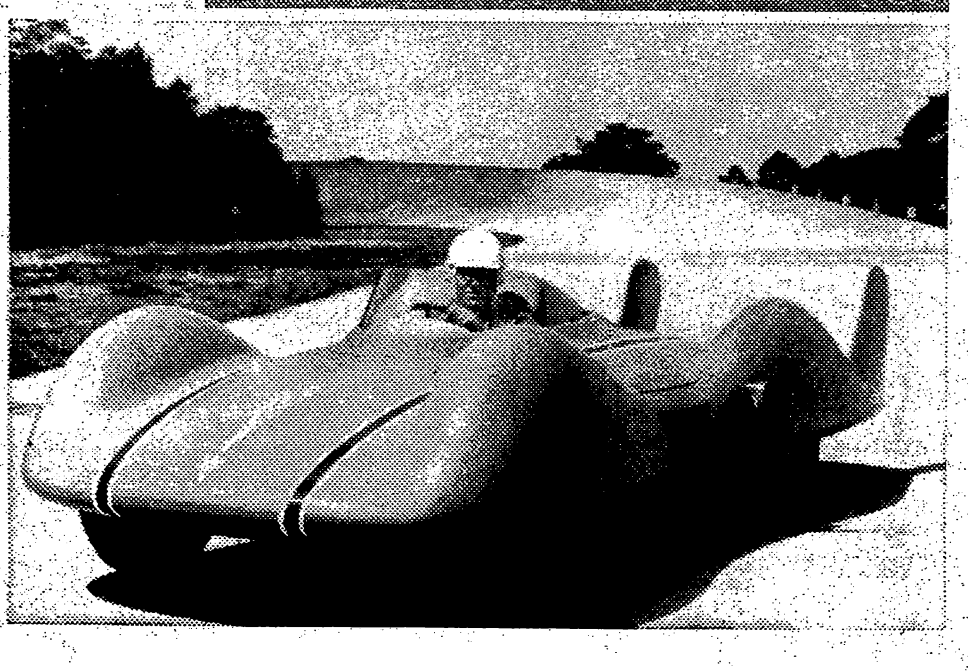


52 Weeks of Sports

abc







Bridging The Gap—Radio And TV In Singapore Society

By JOHN DUCLOS
(Head of B'cast Division, Singapore)

Singapore.

Any person who claims precise knowledge of the constituent elements which form the Singapore society in all its social, cultural and economic complexities is either a super-Singaporean or an ego-inflated ass.

Each one of us is so preoccupied and so involved in the pattern of our own way of life, of our own duties and responsibilities (touching as they do, possibly, many other patterns of life and attitudes in our immediate environments) that it is practically impossible to make even intelligent assessments of other unknown but not necessarily less important patterns. This of course is just an inherent problem of a plural society. It's no use pretending that within our plural society, or even because of it, prejudice doesn't exist. Prejudice is bred out of ignorance. So enlightenment can only come when prejudice is removed, and prejudice will be removed when, among other important things, as many people as possible know more and more about each other. To try and get as many people as possible to know more and more of each other is one of the many objects of the Broadcasting Division, which has been entrusted to administer radio and television on behalf of the Ministry of Culture. This attempt is an attempt to bridge the gap.

Before I proceed with the manner in which we are attempting to bridge the gap, let me first of all explain that another equally important work we do is in informing our listeners and viewers. Despite the different constituent elements we have in our midst, we are committed to live under one single political system, i.e., democracy. Without going into a discussion on democracy, of systems based upon democracy, suffice it for me to say that inherent in this political system are the rights and privileges which accrue from it against the responsibilities and duties demanded. The State attempts to bring about homogeneity out of the framework of the political system by impartial application of law either established or legislated for, and this is reflected in the policies which emerge from time to time. Legislation are complex things. Within the framework of legislation the administrative machinery functions. It is our function to explain the day-to-day workings of Government ministries and departments in so far as they serve the public; not in dry legal terms, but in practical what's, why's and when's. These are best done as documentaries and features in plain ordinary language.

When you consider that despite the ever-increasing number of schools and opportunities for educating all our young, we still have an illiteracy problem, you can imagine why it is necessary to tell our people about their rights and what they can expect. Many ministries exist for the sole purpose of administering them. It is one of our duties to act as publicity agents for such ministries to tell people how they can help themselves to obtain their rights with the least amount of trouble. This action is another way of bridging the gap.

You will readily admit that in this competitive world the best commodity never sells unless you employ an advertising agent to plan a publicity campaign to inform the public about the commodity's superiority over other similar goods. In this competitive world, also, when there are so many other products vying for supremacy, it is hard to see the wood for the trees. Therefore advertising becomes an important factor. It can safely be said that every government in the world which prides on its achievements cannot project its image without a publicity medium. Any claim of achievement is hollow unless the society it affects agrees that it is an achievement, and society can only agree if it is in fact an achievement. Publicity helps to inform society that the service or services provided exist so that they can themselves say whether it satisfies them to the extent that Government may claim it a success.

The 'Totality of Effect'

I think it's important not to regard what I've just written as being so obvious that it doesn't require mentioning. It is in the nature of our complex society that each legislation by Government, be it considered good, bad or indifferent, doesn't have an immediate totality of effect on all the constituent elements of our society as in other less complex societies. Much that happens some time occurs only in one segment of our society; or, rather, the legislation affects that particular segment more than other segments although the legislation applies equally to all. This in itself is no different from other less complicated societies. But the difference lies in the poor communications between groups or elements in our own society. Hence many who are unaware of the effects of policies as they concern other than their own groups don't even realize the significant resultant changes which often take place and, worse still, tend to arrive at wrong conclusions. We are trying to obviate this and in our attempt we hope to bridge the gap. As a corollary to this we hope what we're doing will bring about the homogeneity which every State must have before it produces a society with a common overall loyalty to it, despite the many differences of its constituent members.

The Chinese, possessed with a fair degree of sensitivity about the

(Continued on page 119)

ED HERLIHY

RON RAWSON

Collins' Yearend Sumup on Issues; Still on Cig Kick

Washington.

NAB prexy LeRoy Collins came up with still another idea on curbing cigaret advertising.

Collins indirectly suggested cigarets might be placed under a Code ban similar to that prohibiting liquor advertisign.

In a wide-ranging interview on "Opinion in the Capital" on WTTG-TV here, Collins said "no other advertising has the impact that broadcast advertising has."

"I think you'll agree," he told interviewers Mark Evans, Metromedia veep and Lawrence Laurent, Washington Post radio-tv critic, "we have a special responsibility in this respect . . . not a great deal unlike the one we exercise for example in the area of advertising whiskey."

Noting that broadcasters sacrifice coin by shirking booze commercials, Collins said, "but still our members feel that there is a public need and a public responsibility that they should accept, and they do."

He said this gives broadcasting "a stature and position of integrity which is fine and sound."

When asked if he had converted anyone to his position, Collins replied the NAB Board wouldnt' act until the cigaret report of the U.S. Surgeon General was issued.

On politics, Collins refused to shut the door completely against the possibility he might run for the U.S. Senate from Florida.

While averring "I never paint myself . . . into a corner," Collins said in regard to the Senate race, "I don't expect to run. I'm not making any plans to, and I'm quite sure that I won't make any plans to."

Collins admitted, however, he had promised Florida Sen. Spessard Holland that he would be the first to know if Collins decided to jump into the Senate race.

Commenting on his controversial speech damning extremism and racism, Collins said he had no regrets about making the talk. "I'm proud of that speech," he added.

Noting that four or five stations resigned from NAB because of the talk, Collins also said several new members came into NAB because it had a president willing to make such statements.

Further digressing on politics, Collins denied rumors that he and President Johnson don't get along well becauce of Collins' actions as chairman of the 1960 Democratic convention.

"There was never any soundness to any feeling that Mr. Johnson and I didn't get along very well together, because I was just going straight down the middle of the road trying to do justice and to do the right thing under difficult circumstances. I think he (Johnson) fully realized that I was fair, and that's all that either he, or Senator Kennedy then, or any other prospective candidates expected of that post."

He predicted the President might lose some Southern support in 1964 because of his pro-civil right stand, but added "I think he's going to fare very well in the South."

TV's Major Role Today Among Talent Agencies

By JOE COHEN

Television has emerged as the most important segment in the agency field, according to Marvin Josephson, exec veepee of Artists Agency Corp., one of the newer agencies that has emerged since the demise of MCA last year. AAC is the result of the union of Rosenberg-Coryell, Broadcast Management Inc., and Ziegler, Hellman & Ross.

Television packages have become the primary revenue producer of talent offices, exceeding even the revenue of films, to a great extent, said Josephson. What's more, Josephson says that the film industry attitude to television personalities has changed considerably during the past few years. It was only a short time ago, he explained, that the filmsters used to look down at their nose of the teevee personnel. Today, the feeling is quite the reverse.

Josephson pointed out that a director such as Norman Jewison is much in demand in pictures and only a short time ago, he was exclusively in video. He recently entered into a joint five-year deal with Universal and Tony Curtis. John Frankenheimer, Bob Mulligan and others have preceded Jewison from tv to films.

Television since its infancy manifested an ability to lead. Josephson declared that the early era had films adapting properties developed in television. Pictures later took over some of the names and now directors, writers and others developed in the telecast media have become the hot personalities in the film capital.

The importance of television is seen by the fact that one package brings in more commissions than many actor clients. An actor or a singer, no matter how huge an earner, requires a lot of "servicing." Talent deals have to be negotiated individually, and even if the earnings come to a gigantic sum, the profits aren't as huge as they are in the video packaging field.

Yet, Josephson points out that it is extremely necessary for an agency to have high, low and medium earners in order to round out its activities. By the same token, a talent office has to maintain departments that do not pay their own freight, if only to insure a supply of talent that will ultimately filter to the top, and perhaps be important package components.

Josephson's study of the composition of talent office indicates that all the major agencies, except one (General Artists Corp.) derive the bulk of their income from tv packaging. GAC's top field is personal appearances, he says, even though its tv earnings have kited in the past year.

What's more, according to Josephson, talent agencies today are not limited by established patterns. There is no limit to the ingenuity or imagination in contriving new types of packages, both on the financial or artistic end. Although giving credit to Lew Wasserman, MCA president, as being a strong force in the creation of imaginative deals, he says that the independent offices have contributed hugely to the novelty needed to maintain freshness in the percenter business and to provide greater bases of earnings for all those sharing in a package.

Josephson started as an attorney at CBS and drifted into the agency biz. He headed Broadcast Management until he combined with the other two offices in the creation of the present percentery.

Community Chests' Help From Show And Adv. Circles

By GEORGE W. HAYDEN
(United Community Funds & Councils of America)

More than 170 individuals, firms and agencies in the entertainment and advertising fields have contributed time, money and imagination to the nation's largest fund raising effort. From the entertainment capitols of New York and Hollywood have come an impressive display of support for this year's United Fund and Community Chest campaigns in 2,200 cities and towns.

These men and women deserve more than a nod for their unflagging effort to help relieve the nation's folks who are temporarily in need. They helped raise funds necessary to provide recreation services for all ages. Their support also helped provide the necessary where-with-all to help finance research in many areas of health.

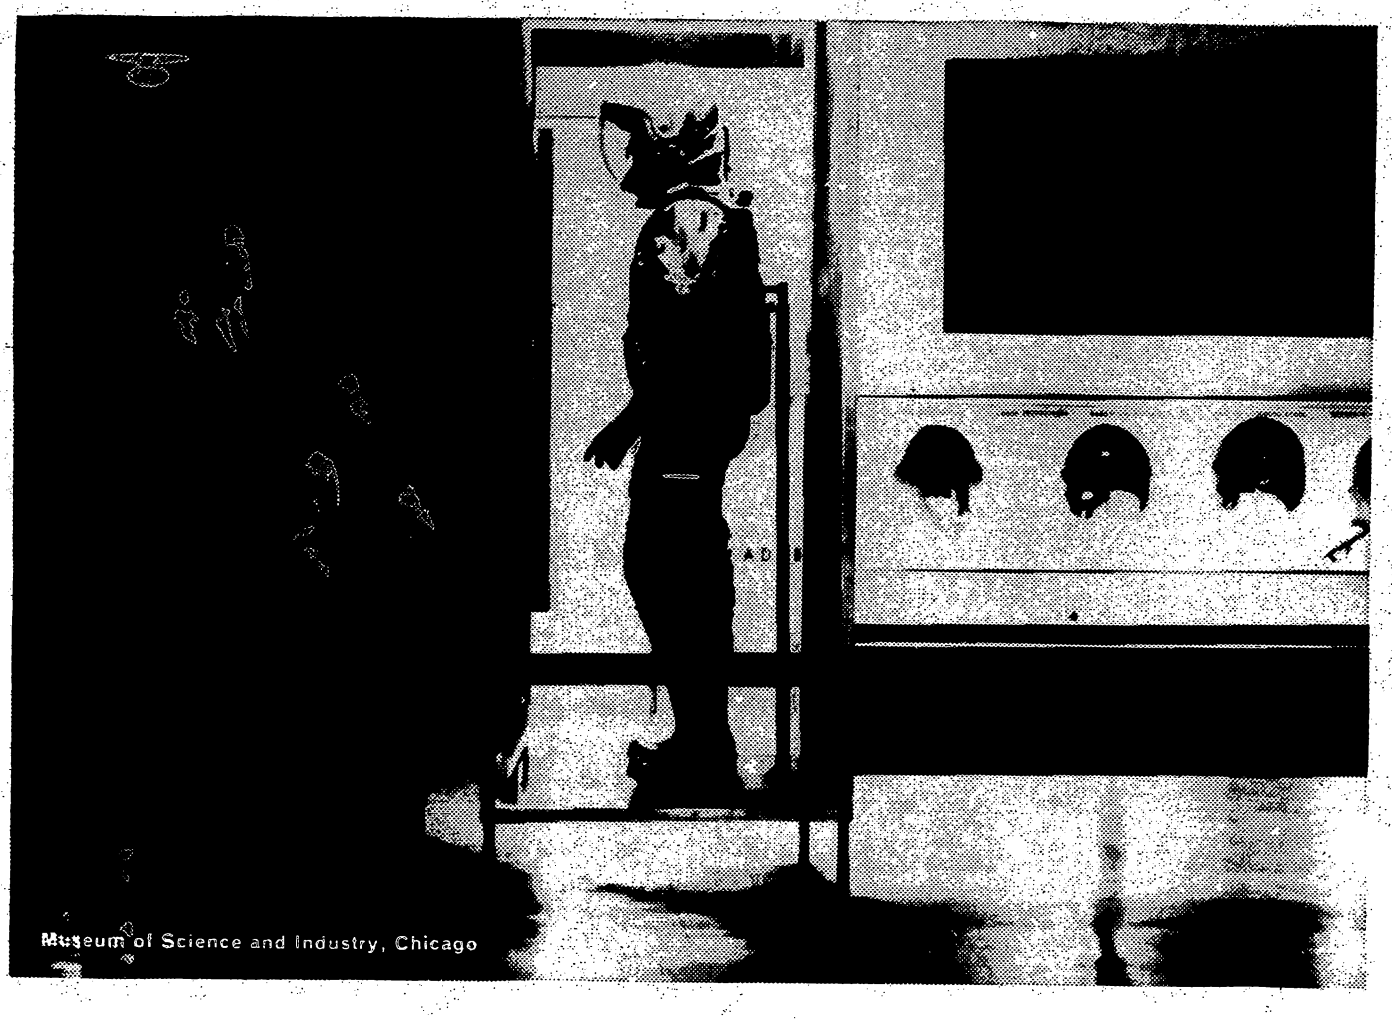
Many tv performers gave half the promotional films for their shows to help plug the campaign. The usual format was to plug the show for the first half of the program, and United Way giving in the second half.

Other firms helped by donating film spots for air use, others by helping make film trailers for film house showing. Radio spots were made. Networks and local broadcast outlets regularly ran the material.

When it all added up, the work of the national television and radio committee, L. W. Bruff of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Company, chairman, and those who assisted, represents a massive contribution of time and talent which show biz can be proud. It proves to all the world entertainers, sponsors and

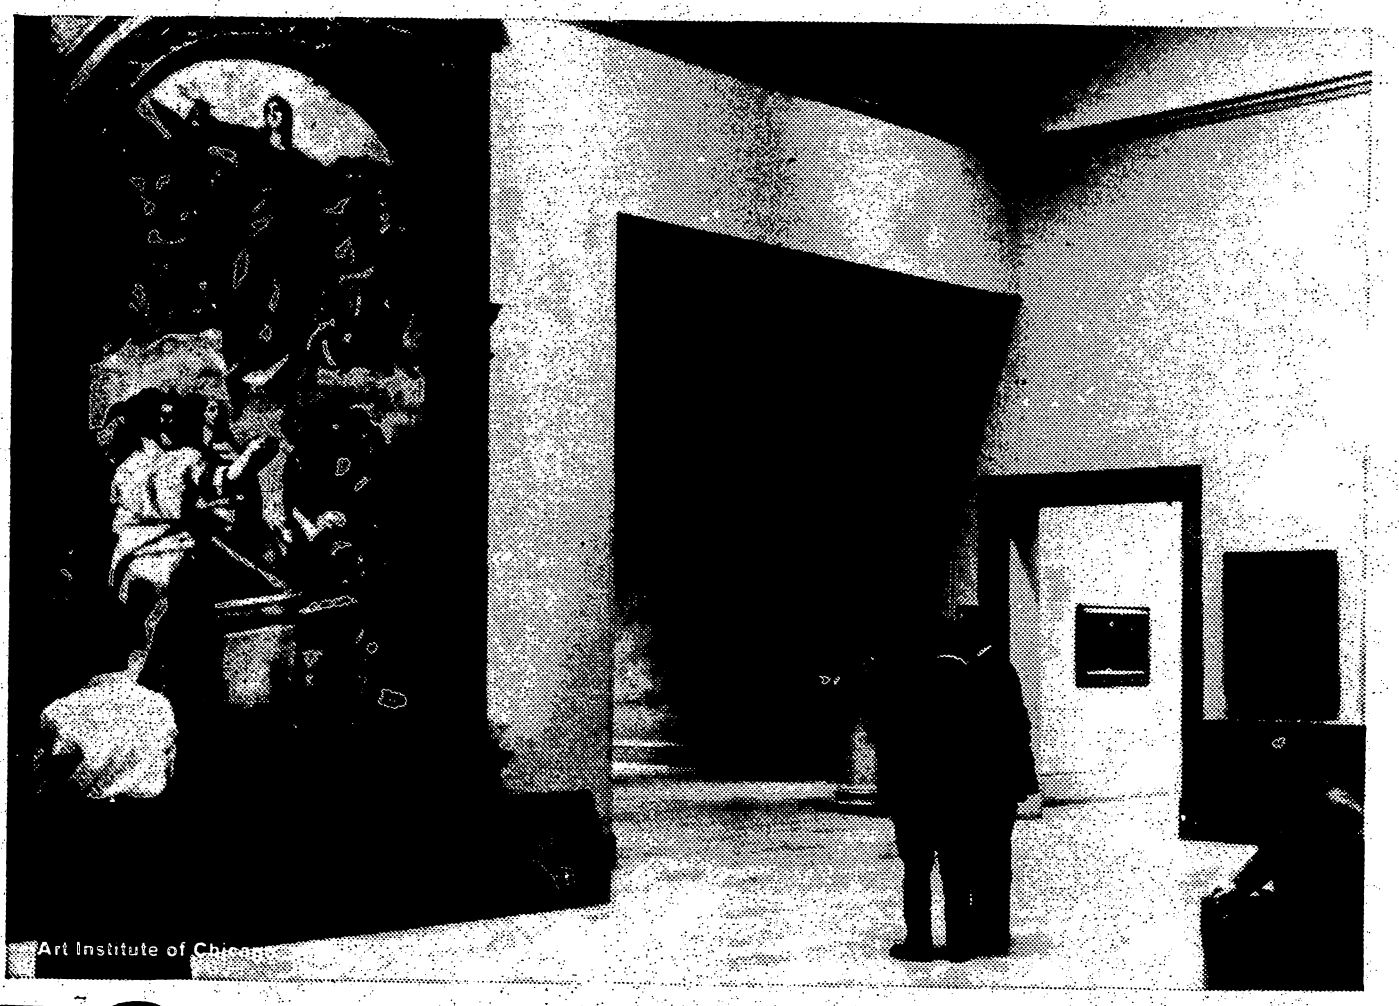
(Continued on page 124)

JACK STERLING
CBS



THE MOST RESPECTED CALL LETTERS IN BROADCASTING

WGN IS CHICAGO



WGN radio television — CHICAGO

Singapore TV

Continued from page 117

Chinese positions in Singapore, will see the utter futility of holding general views about "the Chinese" when the term can mean a whole host of things, ranging from the Malayan - assimilated Straits or local-born (many of whom don't even speak a Chinese dialect) to the extremely chauvinistic fellow-citizen who will not bend from his views about the superiority of the Chinese way of life and thought, and that these would always prevail in our society. Superimposed on this we have other no less important stratifications—religion, economics, language and dialect groups, education, social status, trade and business interests and affiliations, political convictions and products of the interplay of these and other factors including economic, political and other influences upon each and all the various groups and sub-groups.

The Malays and Indians, and those who belong to other minority groups a,lso realize the utter futility of holding general views about the Malays, the Indians, the Eurasians, the Ceylonese, the Sikhs ,the Europeans, etc. for more or less the same considerations.

Pleasing Everybody

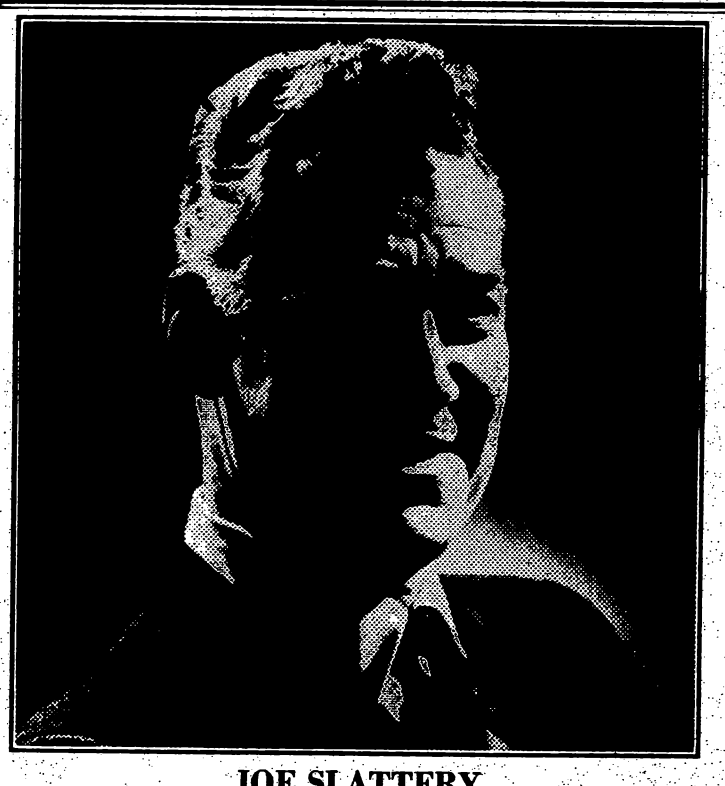
We therefore, a broadcasting and television service catering for all elements in four languages (English, Malay, Chinese and Tamil) and six Chinese dialects, must necessarily take note of all this and design our output not only along common denominator lines, but often directing them specifically. No wonder we often find it hard to please anyone! But apart from these considerations, we are also guided by policies which no one can grumble about. For instance, no one can say that it is undesirable to encourage understanding and appreciation of the different cultures from which we have out origins. It is however possible to criticize the way we are doing it. It is also undeniable that everybody who owes loyalty to the State would support our policy to reflect every movement, action or idea which will hasten nation-building and a sense of common loyalty among us. In doing this, sometimes we're accused of over-doing it. But our critics have come from those who are bored because they are already loyal and need no reminding. To them I would ask for forbearance. Others among us are not yet completely assimilated. Not all those who aren't completely assimilated are subversive. Singapore society, as we know it today, is new. Only recently have people begun to consider that they have a stake in this country and it would be too much to expect people to discard their origins. Nation-buliding can be a long process, but time isn't on our side. Against all the pressures it's our duty to see that we emerge as a State within the larger Malaysia as soon as possible.

Culture itself can't be forced; it must grow naturally. However, it grows unpredictably. But if we're conscious of what we're trying to achieve, it's possible to set the conditions within which there's a better chance for the more desirable elements of a new culture to gain quicker acceptance. In this direction, the educational policy for our young is relevant. Many of you may know that broadcasting to schools is another important function which we undertake, and it would be safe to assume that by the end of next year, or earlier, we would be extending the service over television as well.

All this sounds doctrinaire, deliberate and Machiavellian, but is it really so? Not really! Publicity and propaganda can only succeed if the ideas projected to those affected by them have a fair chance of being accepted. No unpalatable idea has ever been put across successfully in democracy, although it has been achieved successfully in totalitarian States where the rights and dignity of the individual are subservient to the State machinery. Radio and television can't succeed if the main function of pure entertainment takes secondary place. Entertainment is part of culture, so how we entertain is also important. In an organization that provides 60 hours a day of radio broadcasts in four languages and six Chinese dialects, plus an average of six and a half hours daily of television in four languages, entertainment forms a great bulk of our output. Of the 60 hours more than half carry advertising as television would before the end of the years when a second channel—Channel 8—is likely to be starting up. Over each television channel we will provide a second channel as well, which will make it easier for people to follow programs in languages unfamiliar to them by the provision of a verbal commentary in their own language, while a third language would be provided as subtitles over the program shown on television .

If you've taken us for granted and sometimes complain about our programs, both radio and television, please remember that you have in Singapore the most unique radio and television service in the world, as nowhere else do you find a radio and television organization providing a domestic service of such complexity; and no other television organization in the world has been able to provide a six and a half hour daily service after six months' operation and starting up a second channel by the same organization in less than a year of the first channel at that.

This has meant hard work and systematic planning by all concerned with the project. I'm happy to state publicily that the high expectations which I had about the calibre of our young men and women have been more than justified.



JOE SLATTERY
ANNOUNCER — NARRATOR — ACTOR
Represented By: SHIRLEY HAMILTON, INC.
360 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 1, Illinois—DEarborn 2-1803

GARY OWENS, INC.
Who Does a Whole Bunch of Stuff
KMPC—KCOP-TV HOLLYWOOD

Miracles of Media

Continued from page 99

known or accepted unanimously. It is important to ask the questions, however, if only to revive a sense of perspective among all of us who were fascinated and rightly grateful for the miracle that bound us together in an hour of grief and trial.

Millions of people are going to reread, over and over again, all that was written in those terrible days, and since. The hunger to know, to understand, can not be satisfied by spectacles, no matter how engrossing, no matter how indispensibly precious and unequalled at a given moment in time. Television is essentially the medium of multi-sensual simultaneity. This is not all that it is—it excels in educational and entertaining exploration of people and places—but that is what it mostly and uniquely is. No other medium affects so many senses of so many people so spontaneously. But radio is unique in its own role and performs miracles beyond the limited powers of television. It is fluid, almost wind-free of complex devices, reaches further more easily and is a complement rather than an impediment to other simultaneous human activities. Radio is universally accessible at very low cost and depends, for its effect, more on the mind of men than the automation or limitations of the machine. Television can blind the seeing; radio illuminates the sightless.

The Written Word

No medium can perform the wonders of the written word, the permanent record of man's noblest thoughts, preserved for his enjoyment and enlightenment at the time of his free choosing. Is a picture worth a thousand words? All the pictures that were ever created cannot replace a Song of David, a sonnet of Shakespeare, an essay by Jefferson. Cameras brought us visions of tragedy and nobility but the printing presses have brought us greater understanding and knowledge in reflection.

There is, therefore, nothing like television, nothing like radio, nothing like the written word. Each is a distinct and unique power. Each calls for care and trust in its use. All, together, none alone, provide the information and the views that can both clarify and confuse, blind or illuminate, depress or inspire, depending upon the responsibility of each medium, the freedom it enjoys, and the willingness of the citizen not only to watch, listen and peruse but to think for himself. The so-called "Coming of Age" of television was nothing of the kind, despite all its achievements. It was a phenomenal performance, a giant growth, not a coming of age. One has only to watch television since the moment of trial and ponder on the programs being prepared for next year and the year after, to know that age, in the sense of the expression, is still to come.

One has only to listen to radio and read the papers to realize that there is no reason to rejoice about a "coming of age," for, with age, comes rigidity, crotchiness, staleness anl failing senses, along with maturity and wisdom. There are few human miracles, and no accomplishment is definitive nor unchanging. The miracle that the Pope admired, and that benefited all mankind, is only an example of man's equal capacity for nobility and baseness.

I WAS A BBC MAN

By ERIC MASCHWITZ

London.

Until Friday, May 11, last, I had been for more than 30 years what is known over here as a "BBC man." This only inasfar as radio and tv were concerned: over the period I had engaged in a number of other independent pursuits. What in fact is a "BBC man?"

Some uniformed citizens think of him as an unworldly product of either Oxford or Cambridge, who got his job through family influence; others are convinced that he must be a leftist lay-about of dubious moral fibre. I can assure anyone who may be interested that neither definition is correct. "BBC men" are on the whole very like most other people in show business: they come from here, there and everywhere, hold widely divergent views, work and worry, make love and get drunk. In one respect only are they uniquely fortunate: they suffer from a minimum of interference from those above and around them, including the British Government (which is quite erroneously believed to have a finger on the BBC).

When my contract with the BBC had come to an end I decided that it might be refreshing to transfer my allegiance to one of its rivals on the "commercial" network. Accordingly I accepted an offer from Associated-Rediffusion with which I am now a producer in charge of special projects. The offer came from an old friend, John McMillan, who is shortly to become A-R's General Manager. John and I had been together in the Army at the end of the war, both concerned with the setting up of British Forces Network in Germany. At that time I had been his boss, now he is mine. That's the way it goes.

There was nothing particularly dramatic about the transfer: for some years now producers have tended to move to and fro between the two channels. If I was a little nervous of making the change I certainly had no need to be: life "over here" is very much the same as life "over there." If anything, I find it stimulating to be working at Television House (right in the middle of town) after five years spent in Television Centre (four miles away from the centre). If I am irked by anything it is by the "commercial breaks" that upset the production-rhythm to which I had grown so accustomed. There is also the business of censorship. Oddly enough, this is rather stricter with ITV than BBC.

As for "ITV men" these appear to me to be almost indistinguishable from "BBC men," i.e. they work and worry, make love and get drunk. Their offices and studios crackle electrically with dreams and ideas. Their successes are triumphant, their failures devastating. They are as interested in high drama and documentaries as they are in thrillers and comedy shows that bring in the big audience. Although money-spinners, they have no sponsors to get in their hair, only the advertisers who pay heavily for "spot commercials." And the shadow of these demi-gods does not appear to be particularly oppressive.

To put it briefly, I find my "change of life" an altogether fascinating experience. It leaves me with two over-riding convictions, the first that tv is the most maddening and obsessive profession imaginable, the second that, however much they may complain, the British are entertained by the two best television services in the world today.

'New Look' In Animated Blurbs; Art Director King

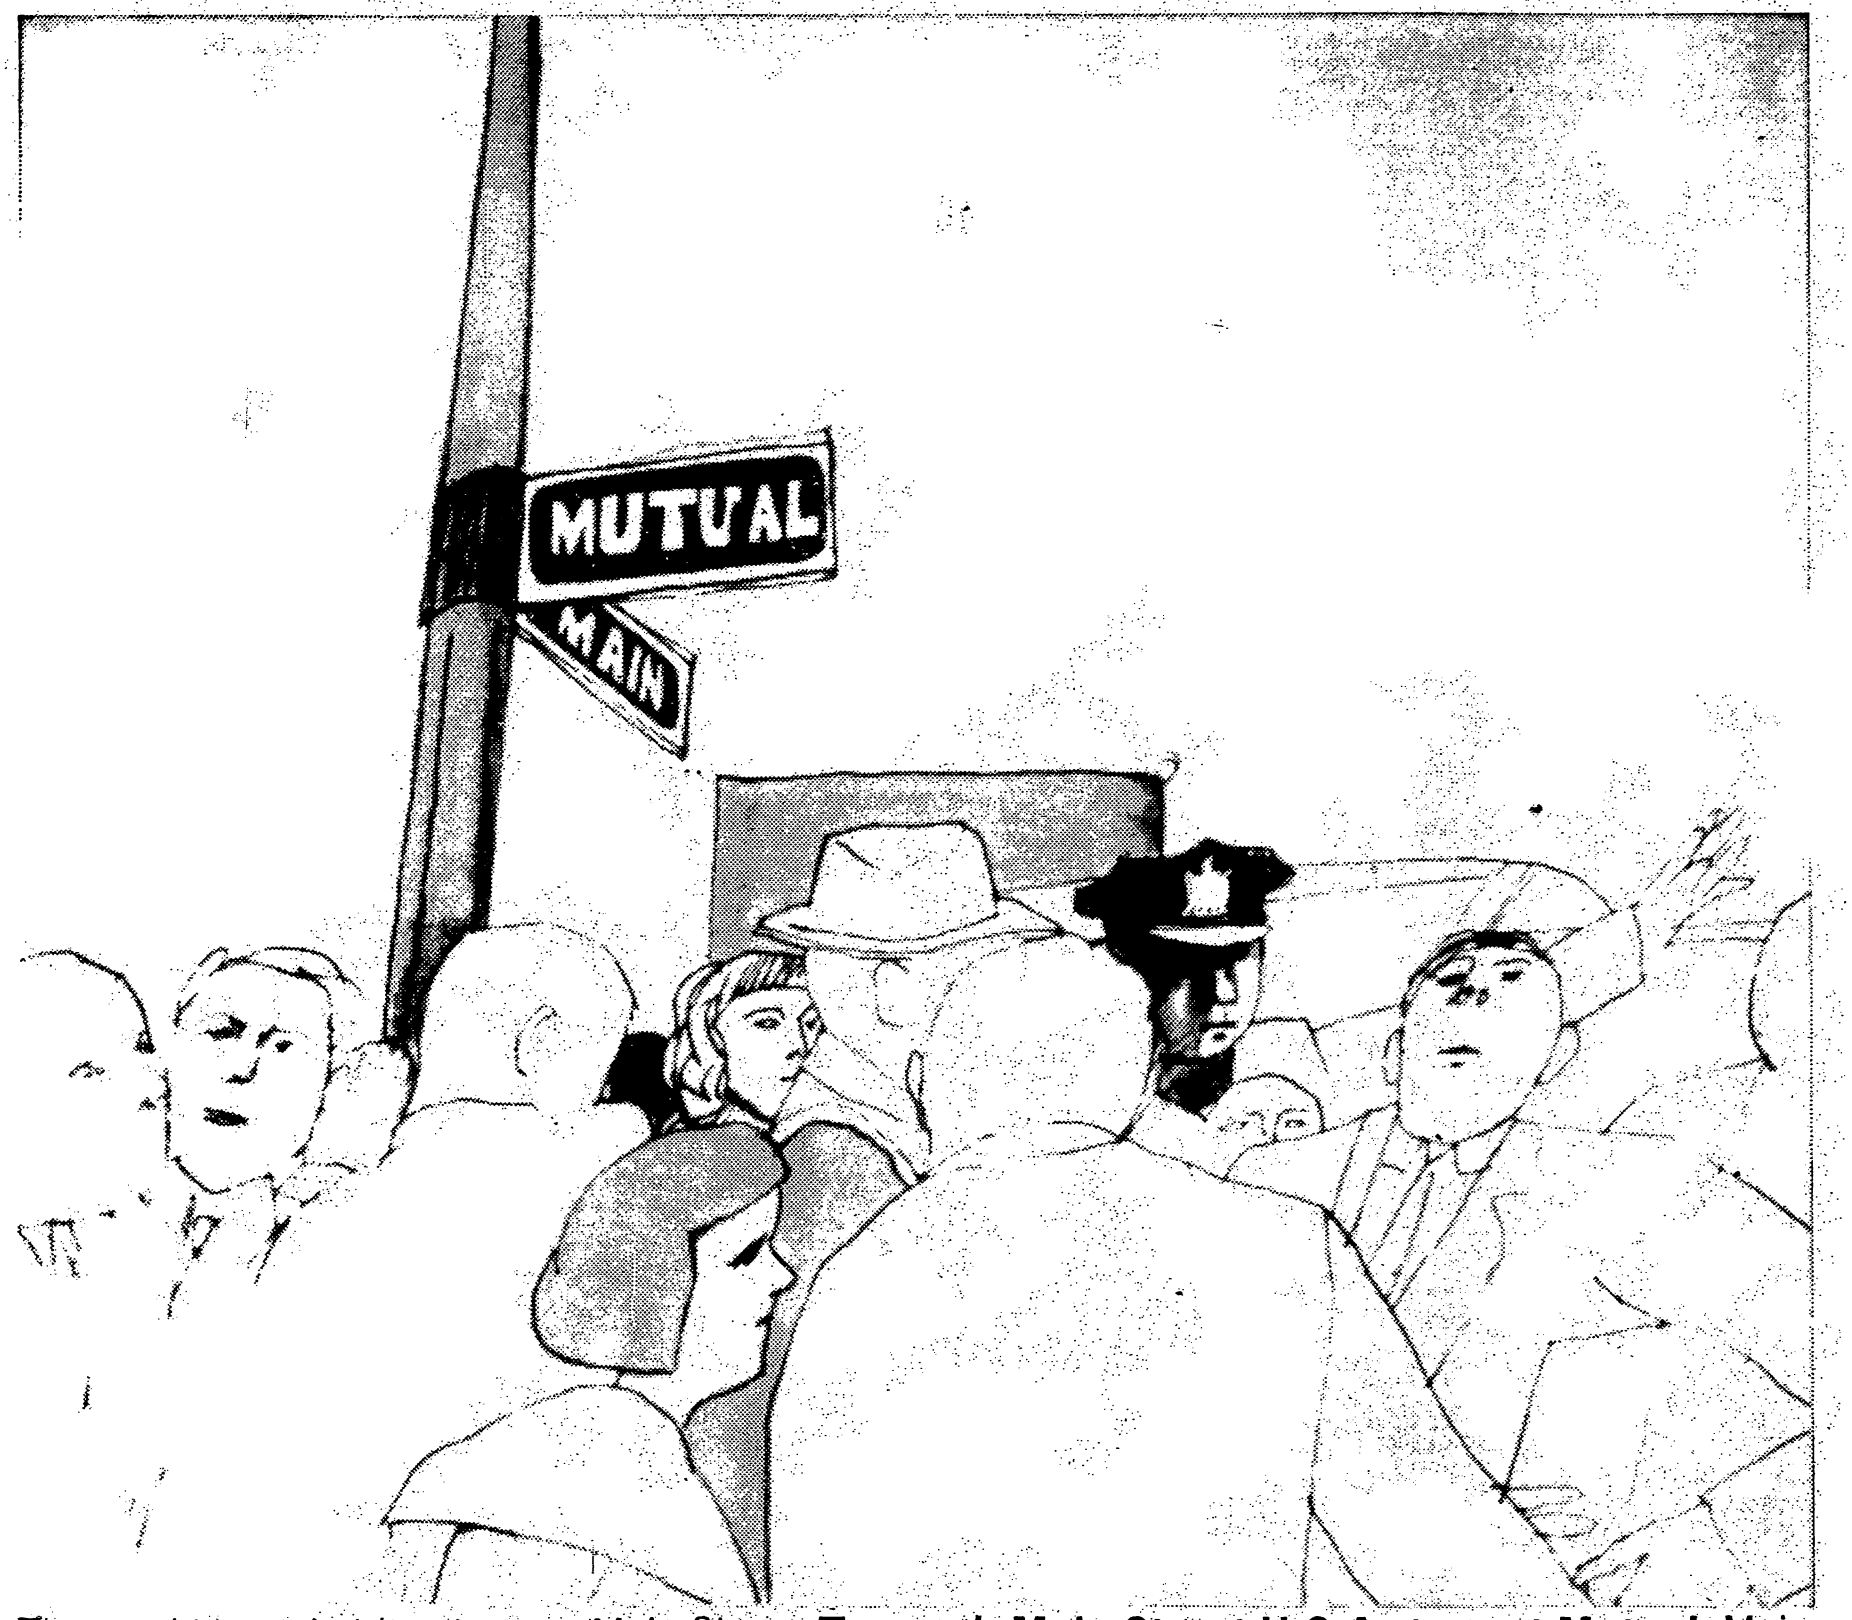
Madison Ave.'s current fad for "visual ideas" and an "overall graphic feel" in tv commercials has been a bonanza for animation blurb houses.

So says Arnold Stone, veepee and exec producer of Pintoff Productions, a company that a year ago was doing nothing but animation spots and theatrical shorts. Blurbery's business is now 75% live action to 25% animation, and, says Stone, the same trend has similarly affected other animation houses, such as Elektra, Pelican and others.

"The whole commercial business runs in fads," says Stone. Helping the current fad for graphics and design, he says, is the new respect at the major tv ad agencies for the art director. And the kinship between the art directors and the animation producers is obvious. There also are animation production techniques that particularly lend to graphic and visual sharpness in live production. One that the Pintoff producers use is recording the soundtrack first. Stone says his company also tries to involve the agency and client in the project as it develops, then there are no surprises when the finished product is viewed.

With the vanguard clients and agencies, he says there is little room any more for the factory techniques in grinding out blurbs. The big live houses are picking up on the trend to the "new look" by hiring graphic and art people, including still photogs.

JIMMY NELSON
DANNY O'DAY, FARFEL AND CO.
Palmer House, Chicago—Port O' Call, St. Petersburg—Riviera, Las Vegas—Roostertail, Detroit—Condado Beach, San Juan—Shower of Stars, Miami Beach—Radio City Music Hall, N. Y.—and—
Saturday mornings on the CBS Television Network for the Nestle Company



The road to market has to pass Main Street. To reach Main Street U.S.A., turn at Mutual. Main Street, U.S.A. is the big "buy-way"—the street that sells through local radio. Mutual owns Main Street, U.S.A. lock, stock and big town—with 500 listenable affiliates everywhere. If you want to sell where the buying is biggest, check the signpost and turn at Mutual. LANDMARK: Mutual delivers 97 of the top 100 Main Streets in America. Mutual Radio 3M A Service to Independent Stations.

'Escapisim' Themes '64-'65

Continued from page 113

expressed by many execs in Hollywood at this time. Goodson-Todman Productions is working on "Hall of Justice," also a two-hour pilot, in association with NBC-TV, but otherwise most of the new entries planned for next season are in the hourlong form. Except for comedy, which on the whole is following its traditional half-hour form.

An idea which a number of Hollywood execs have flirted with from time to time—that of producing a series abroad—was tested in two instances this season, and the results were no convincing argument for tv's equivalent of "runaway" production. Actually, one of the series, "Espionage," appears to have been well done, but being slotted opposite two of tv's more popular series, "The Beverly Hillbillies" and "Ben Casey," hasn't had a chance to garner any ratings. (Add to this the fact it's an anthology).

As for the other, MGM-TV's "Harry's Girls," which was lensed on the French Riviera, it was a mid-season casualty. The series was not a good one, and MGM production chief Bob Weitman let it be known recently he's not apt to repeat this mistake. The producer of the series felt shooting it abroad would enhance the series, but as it turned out it would have been better off done on the Metro back lot, so to speak. Despite the failure of "Harry's Girls," however, Screen Gems plans to produce its new Eve Arden series in London, if the pilot sells.

This will also be known as the season when the networks went on a big and expensive personality push, seeking out stars who have not been on tv at all, or who have had limited exposure. Thus Danny Kaye and Judy Garland came on for weekly series on CBS-TV, and Jerry Lewis on ABC-TV. Lewis' two-hour series was a disaster, and he was cancelled after 13 weeks. Kaye, on the other hand, has come through with a consistently fine weekly series, and alhtough his ratings have not been great, the network is satisfied with his work, and is already talking about next year for DK.

As for Miss Garland, her hour-long variety show has had a number of problems, and there has been a revolving door turn over of personnel on the show. Her ratings have not been impressive, and her future at this point is a question-mark.

No hit emerged this season to measure up to the stature of last year's blockbuster, "The Beverly Hillbillies," which continues to dominate the Nielsens. However, two new entries, "My Favorite Martian," and "Petticoat Junction," latter the creation of Paul Henning who also created "Hillbillies," have with consistency racked up high ratings and are sure-fire renewals for next season, as of this writing.

35-40 Series Due for Axe

One thing appears certain at midseason mark, and that is that come next spring, again there will be between 35-40 series axed That's been the nature of network tv for some years now, and nothing has occurred this season to indicate there will be any change in the mortality rate. Some producers have long argued that this sizable axings rate handicaps them in that it creates instability, and they cannot plan for the future. On the other hand, there are those who counter that the casualty rate forces producers to turn out better and better quality shows, that otherwise mediocrity would have its rewards. Since a network is not apt to cancel shows which have wide receptivity, this puts the onus squarely on the producers' shoulders, where it belongs, they argue.

One inescapable fact is that the casualty rate is the best method yet devised to eradicate the inferior show and talent, and by the same token to reward those who have contributed better shows with obviously finer creative talent. The networks, after all, can't afford to be sentimentalists. They are in business to sell advertising, to attract audiences, and if the producer can't deliver them he had better look to himself rather than find a convenient scapegoat. Once in a great while, and this is a rarity, a really fine show such as a "Naked City" is guillotined, but this is the exception to the rule.

RALPH CAMARGO
ANNOUNCER—ACTOR—NARRATOR
Billie's Registry—PLaza 2-7676

This season was marked by a rare freedom for producers and production executives, also—a freedom from what had been increasing from Washington against tv and its content. With the exodus of ex-FCChairman Newton Minow from Washington, there also appeared to be a decrease in the number of publicity-hunting Congressional investigations of video, so that producers did enjoy a rare freedom in making their product. Not that Minow or Congress often approached producers directly, but their pressure on the networks had resulted in network pressure on the producers. Since no one seemed to know precisely what Washington was worried about except in ambiguous terms, it had created much uncertainty and confusion.

In Hollywood, Revue studios continued to dominate production from a standpoint of volume, with MGM-TV the runnerup as a result of its resurgence under the supervision of production chief Bob Weitman. Screen Gems was next, followed by Desilu, and from then on the product is widely scattered among a number of indies. Indies have gained increasingly in stature the past few years, because it is the smaller companies who have turned out hits such as "The Beverly Hillbillies," "Ben Casey," "The Dick Van Dyke Show," "The Andy Griffith Show," "My Favorite Martian," "Petticoat Junction" and "The Danny Thomas Show."

Taking a look nine-months ahead at next season, a foolhardy thing at best, it would seem offhand there will be an upbeat in the "Burke's Law" type of series light, breezy escapism, an increase in action and adventure shows. The most interesting gamble of all could, of course, be that two-hour Revue feature film series being blueprinted for NBC-TV.

As for this season, it could be best summed up as one which contained almost no surprises, was routinish in most respects.

NEW BRIT. TELEPIX SOURCE: CONTINENT

London.

While in the past, the only real measure of competition to American programming for the limited airtime allowed to offshore programs on the British tv networks, came from Commonwealth countries like Australia and Canada, now a new competitor looms—Europe.

Recent program mart organized by the European Broadcasting Union in connection with MIFED, the Milan Fair Trade, has apparently stimulated U.K. interest in European product. Associated-Rediffusion, which had senior executives at the Milan showings, is slotting an "International Hour" in the new year as a vehicle to several European shows it has picked up.

BBC, which has successfully held two Continental film "festivals" on screen, is in the market for another batch of European feature pix, and is also dickering with several EBU sources re the pickup of Continental vidshows.

Commercials: Last Bailiwick For Good Music On TV, Radio

—By SONNY HAYES—

Are you tired of listening to the so-called "Top 40" tunes now blaring at you on all the disk jockey shows? Want to know how the deejays can dispense better, more professional, music to your tired ears? It's simple. Let them, instead of wrapping their multitudinous commercials around what passes for today's pop record hits, wrap them around other commercials.

Of course, I'm being facetious, but only to a point. To my mind, radio and tv commercials today represent one of the last outposts of good broadcast music. And I refer not only to the spots for which I compose or arrange and score the music, but those of my competitors as well. Listen to the tunes your kids hum as they concentrate on taking apart their new Christmas toys this season. Two to one, instead of the Top 40 garbage, you'll hear such catchy themes as "Let Your Fingers Do the Walking (Through the Yellow Pages)" or music from the toy commercials that inundated the kids' innocent little ears this year.

As a band vocalist during the lush days of the Big Band era before beginning to package scores for commercials, I had all the fun and education of the one-nighters. It's no secret that the kids miss that today. The music business now is going through a get-rich-quick era. Recording artists, publishers and the jocks are overlooking the finer points that we had to learn—or else we didn't make it. Also, too few people in the music business today take pride in their work.

That's why commercials represent the last bailiwick of good music on the air. Since our music forms an integral part of the advertising copy, we must take pride in our work. The music in a commercial must enhance the product, it must blend with the other selling points to help sock home the commercial message and not be music just for music's sake. And it must be treated with the same loving care that a vocalist like Frank Sinatra—to my mind, the best in our business—treats the lyrics to a song.

What I mean is, you must have a feel for the music and the way it helps interpret the ad copy, then phrase it and bring it to life just as Sinatra pours life into his lyrics.

How It Works

Let me explain. The secret of good music in a commercial is to treat the music as color, as indicated by the employment of instruments in the score, shading it as Sinatra shades his words. For a Lucky Strike commercial we did ("Luckies Separate the Men from the Boys"), the visualization began with a plane in flight, showed the plane descending to land on the runway, then taxi to the hangar where the pilot and his crew emerged. At that point the pretty girl in our cast, the stewardess, made her appearance.

Because of my personal taste and background, the ad copy to me suggested the color green. The plane in flight called for gusty music, or the Marine Corps' shade of Olive Drab. That was to grab the viewer's attention at the outset. As the plane descended, the music lightened a bit to a softer green, then shifted to pastel tones as we saw the girl. That's the kind of shading that results in good music on today's commercials.

Some of our top recording artists today—that does not mean the ones with the so-called beat—apparently agree that our music is worth working with. It's a lucrative field for them, of course. But that's why, more and more, you're seeing such top singers on tv spots as Jo Stafford, Rosemary Clooney, Joanie Sommers, et al. By casting a singer carefully, moreover, it's possible to achieve just the sound required by the ad copy. That's why I've used, even for off-screen voices, such artists as Stuart Foster and Fran Warren.

If the sound of our music is that good, that much better than the Pop 40 stuff today, why hasn't more of it been converted to pop tunes? Probably because we write for a specific product and the ad agency or sponsor involved must retain all rights to the music.

PAUL FORD
SEASON'S GREETINGS
Now Starring in
"NEVER TOO LATE"—The Playhouse, New York
Direction—Louis Shurr Agency

Vidfilming In Britain For the World Market

By LESLIE T. HARRIS
(American Consultant to Associated TeleVision Ltd.)

JIM CAMPBELL
Announcer—Actor—Narrator
Registry JUdson 2-3800

London.

A change in emphasis—certainly a change of direction—would appear inevitable for British vidfilmers in 1964. Two unrelated, but equally important factors are responsible.

The drying up of the syndicated film market in the United States over the past three years and the disinclination of the networks to gamble on foreign television series have placed an increasingly heavy financial burden on the international market to recoup the cost of telefilms made in Great Britain. As long as the income and profit of the commercial contractors remained stable, this prospect could be faced with a certain amount of aplomb.

That was until the Black Knight of the GPO, Mr. Bevins, wielded his blunt-edged far-axe. But since the eight-year idyll between the Conservative Government and the commercial contractors was shattered by the blow of a $64,000,000 tax on earned income—not profits—a certain coolness to long range capital investment has descended over moat and keep of fair Elstree, Wembley, Hanover Square and Television House. In fact, it is doubtful that anything less than a second network will induce these belted Earls of the Ether, now standing pike to pike behind their turreted battlements, to "detacher des monnaie" for any further television film projects.

The cost of financing the second network is in itself another long range deterrent to telefilm production, since the capital investment necessary will have to be raised largely by the present contractors. While new stock issues will undoubtedly be offered, the degree of public enthusiasm may be dampened somewhat by the weakness in television stocks at the present time.

Co-Production The Key

Under these circumstances, the commercial contractors' past emphasis on "always a series but never a pilot" will certainly be re-examined and a much stronger effort will be made to attract American network interest in pilot co-production in the future.

The original prejudice against pilots was largely a matter of immediacy. By the time a pilot had been conceived, produced, revised and subjected to scrutiny by the contractors and their American associates, either the project got lost or so much time had elapsed that in order to avoid a scheduling crisis, a crash program was laid on, usually resulting in a panic production.

To avoid this in future, long range programing planning will be attempted by the contractors. Individual pilot projects will be reviewed well in advance. In this way, participation by all the contractors can be guaranteed, with the result that any American partners can expect a larger recoupment from overseas.

While a great deal is made of the enormous incomes of the tv titans, the di-poles of commercial television in 1963 only attracted 17% of the advertising dollar—about $240,000,000—which will now be reduced to approximately $180,000,000 as a result of the Government bite.

Additional efforts will obviously be made to attract U.S. production companies to undertake further projects abroad, with a guaranteed underwrite by the British contractors for any reasonable idea, provided it qualifies for U.K. quota.

Stiffer Quota?

Quota restrictions, though, will probably be stiffened. Pending the allocations of the new channels for the second network next spring, licenses have only been temporarily extended and all the contractors are watching their P's and Q's while under the microscope of the good Doctor—now Lord Hill— of the I.T.A.

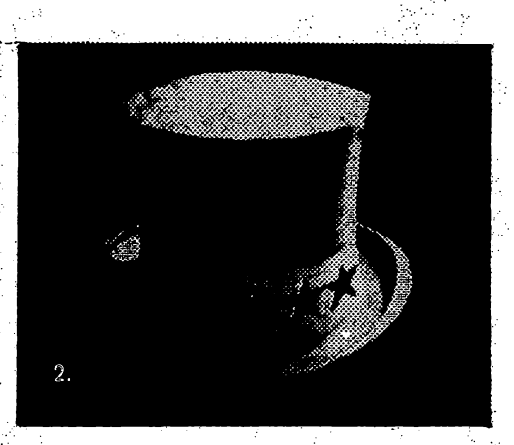
There is also the rather dreary prospect of a Labor Government, whose antipathy for commercial television is only exceeded by its advantages of toiling in the electronic vineyards against Harold Wilson's current spiritual fixation that the advertising of washing

(Continued on page 124)

photo quiz

How many of our "salesmen" do you recognize?

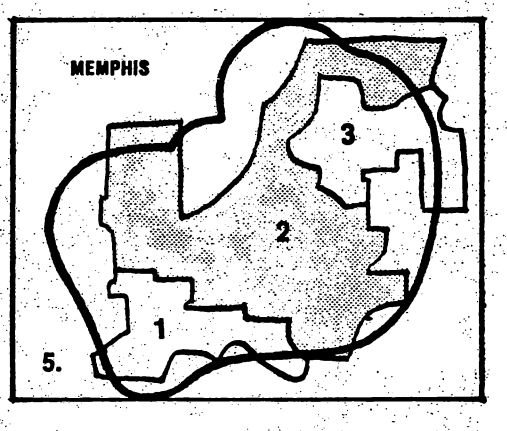
1.



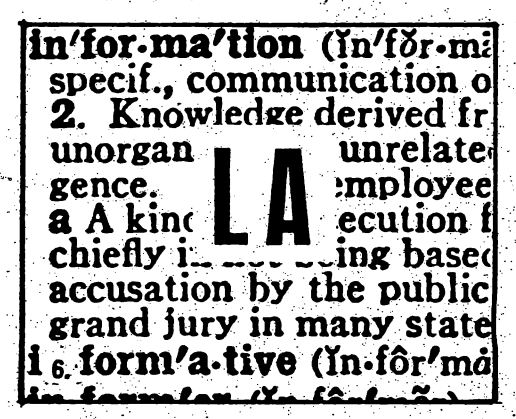
2.

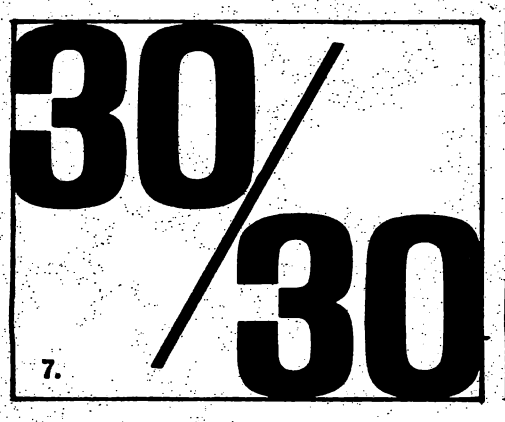
3.

4.



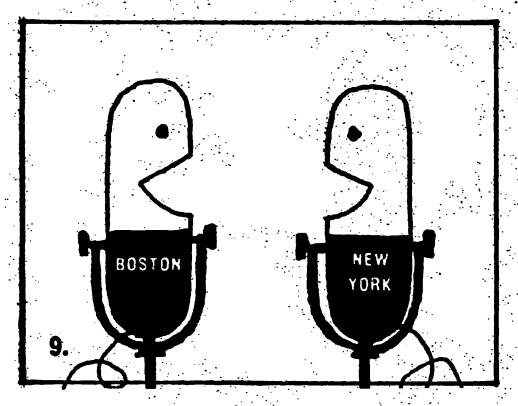
5.



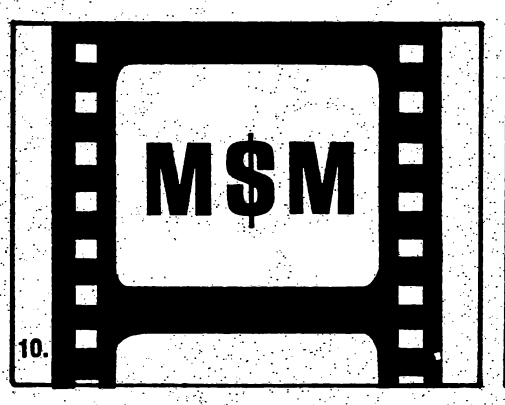


7.

8.



9.



10.

11.

1. Major Mudd . . . typical of the exciting local personalities developed by WNAC-TV Boston, for greater audience acceptance and advertising impact.
2. The Yankee Network . . . with radio stations in all major New England markets, for efficient advertiser saturation of the entire 6-state area.
3. Beethoven . . . representative of WGMS radio Washington, D. C., programming classical music and news to the best educated, most influential audience in America.
4. Calder and Johnson . . . the exciting radio personalities who have switched morning listening habits with their new radio show on KFRC San Francisco.
5. WHBQ radio Memphis . . . programming and coverage designed to dominate three important trading areas.
6. "The Information Station" . . . KHJ radio Los Angeles, newly programmed to meet the needs of America's No. 1 market.
7. 30/30 Plan . . . exclusive new sales plan developed by RKO General Broadcasting, now available on CKLW Detroit, and other RKO General radio stations.
8. Dobie Gillis . . . first run off the network and already the top-rated show in its time period on WHBQ-TV Memphis.
9. "Talk Radio" . . . WNAC Boston and WOR New York reach large, attentive, adult audiences with this compelling format.
10. M$M . . . Million Dollar Movie on stations WOR-TV New York, CKLW-TV Detroit, and KHJ-TV Los Angeles. TV's most famous prime time movie program affording full minute spot availabilities.
11. The New Breed . . . experienced, national sales executives of RKO General Broadcasting will tell you how, the RKO General "station salesmen" (shown above) can move more of your merchandise in seven major U.S. markets. For full information call, wire or write.

RKO GENERAL

RKO General Broadcasting • National Sales:
NEW YORK, 1290 Ave. of the Americas, LO 4-8000
CHICAGO, Tribune Tower Building, 644-2470
LOS ANGELES, 5515 Melrose Avenue, HO 2-2133
SAN FRANCISCO, 415 Bush Street, YU 2-9200

new need...new breed

I Was a Teenage Gourmet

Continued from page 111

how rough those skits are, I must hear what they're like tonight!"

"Make it 10:30 sharp, Harry," responds David cooly cheerful.

This is indeed cool, quick thinking under Shubert fire because I know that not one of those sketches have even been written yet.

"The only solution I see, men, is to throw ourselves into dinner. Moore's or Gallagher's, which'll it be?" our check-grabbing chief would query, rising finally from his padded leather swivel chair, belly shaking like Santa Claus.

And how I would take advantage of his culinary kindness! Gnawing my way through the menu, at Moore's (or Gallegher's), plowing through two shrimp cocktails, terraces of corned beef and cabbage, magic mountains of Russian rye, piles of pumpernickel, pineapple pie, green apple pie without cheese, apple pie with cheese cake flushed down with flagons of milk, draft beer and coffee.

Freedman and Rosenmond almost keeping pace with me, for we three partners in comedy crime—and fatigue—were grimly stoking up our boilers for the long writing day's journey into night—and the next morning.

Waddling away from the groaning board and returning reluctantly to our painful unfinished duties at the tired typewriter, we would nevertheless manage to lay out first the contour of the Broadway show skits, in the nick of time for David to convincingly ad lib some future Lahr-Lillie antics.

The Shuberts' dapper Harry Kaufman enters ramrod stiff (he had to, because of the high collars he favored!) would sit at 10:30 sharp to listen suspiciously while Freedman read aloud the half dozen sketches he had contracted to deliver. Freedman would pretend to be reading words when actually (and no kidding!) he was looking at blank paper propped up behind a large cardboard folder. Believe me, a true feat of magnificent fakery!

Laffing It Up

Lloyd and I would aid the act by holding our sides with mirth, David's cue to act out the rest of the sketch leaping out of the swivel chair to play both Bert and Bea's parts. In a matter of minutes, "High Collar Harry" Kaufman would be chuckling, then laughing aloud; in a matter of a half hour he would be propelled out of the study-workship, a Green River clutched in his hand, David backslapping the satisfied executive out the door amid laughter from all.

For the record: Kaufman made four trips to that madcap Central Park atelier without discovering that not a word of "the Show Is On" sketches were on paper. Only in our antic disorganized, overburdened heads.

Kaufman safely out the door, we would next feverishly revise the unacceptable Tim & Irene routine. When we thought it was burnished brightly enough to get us by, Lloyd would be dispatched to waiting typists at the Advertising Agency, with all the drama of a Pony Express rider trying to outdistance a war party of Comanches.

Just like the Pony Express, we had the timing down pat. Inasmuch as the Tim & Irene clambake went into rehearsal first thing the next morning we knew it would be too late, in all probability, for the agency to throw out the rewrite. To further eliminate all hostile elements from Operation Hairbreadth, David would grab the phone and call Tim to smooth the path, chuckling over the new belly-laughs Ken came up with! (Mostly exhumed from the files.)

And to take Tim's mind off the moldy material, David, our great salesman, would quickly tittilate our victim with tantalizing tips on the horses and stock market. We always did our best to avoid Irene—she had too good a memory!

Safely off the horns of the Shubert—Tim & Irene dilemma we'd stop to draw a breath. This wasn't easy either! By this hour the Freedman factory would be thick with his lethal cigarsmoke.

Hooked On Moxie

After throwing the windows wide, swigging a quart each of life-giving Moxie, munching a sack of Babe Ruths and tootsie rolls, we'd be refreshed and ready to tackle the missing "Laugh With Ken Murray" material.

"Campers!" Freedman our innkeeper would announce cheerily at the stroke of midnight. "Everybody back into the files!"

At 6 a.m. we were a toxic trio. Likewise some of the Murray routines. But they were finished. So were we! Joke drained-out, ginger-berry-eyed, clammy pores oozing a witches brew of stale peanuts, wild cherry pop, and Beeman's gum.

After objectively appraising the condition of his two subalterns (with some resemblance to a ring doctor examining a pair of punch drunk fighters) David would compassionately suggest that we go to sleep and refresh ourselves—"for 15 minutes."

It seems that in the mad shuffle of other deadlines we had lost the fact that Freedman had faithfully promised to "spike up" Block & Sully's vaudeville act. For they were opening on the morrow (which was, of course, today!) at the Palace—somewhere! And David had promised to faithfully phone pal Jesse a couple of "boff opening gags!" At the command "everybody sleep!" I had naively looked around for the beds. Before I could inquire as to the availability of guest bedrooms, the master of the troplex was snoring comfortably, tilted back in his desk chair, stocking feet dangling. Lloyd, his head cradled in his arms, lay slumped over the typewriter. I saw that I was the luckiest—I had the couch to sack out on.

Later I found that David had carefully planned this arrangement! Because, as junior of the group, and "a kid" I needed the couch more. Naturally as I grew up later on in our mad whirl collaboration, I gallantly traded resting places with Lloyd. Dave, however, always slept happily in the swivel chair during the brief—all too brief—siesta.

Refreshed we would rise—'our mouths feeling like' "The inside of a streetcar motorman's glove." (Found in the files under: Streetcar, Subway, Horsecar Motormen, Transportation, or Glove Gags.)

Or like: "The bottom of a birdcage that hasn't been cleaned for a month." (Mouth, Hangover, Bird or Sick Jokes.)

Or like: "A Chinese family had just moved out!" (To be found under Oriental Insults—remarkable historically when you stop to think that this was years before Red China!)

The early morning routine would then call for a brisk taxi ride to a Chinese restaurant (ont of a half dozen open for business around the clock just as we were) and soothing steaming bowls of Yacamein, healing poultices of egg foo young, with continuous intervenous injections of eggroll, spareribs and fried shrimp. Thank the fates we were all the same blood type because we were soon eating off each others plates. The Chinese Family Mouth Joke actually had whetted our appetites.

Florence Nightingale Fanny

On special occasions, Fanny Brice would appear without warning in the Freedman kitchen to whip up a wildly wonderful breakfast of motza-meal pancakes and pork sausage—her "Snooks" special.

Thus renewed we would continue creating till noon Thursday at which time I wouldn't bother taking the elevator; instead would plummet to the street like a dead weight to be scooped up mercifully by a waiting medic who also doubled as a cabdriver.

Yet, during the short ambulance ride home to my mercifully-nearby Central Park West pad, I would be revived by the fumes from passing buses, enough to take stock and draw satisfaction from the past endless hours. Knowing in my dispeptic heart of hearts that perhaps some of the time-in the heat of cleative battle—we might have written rotten. But we had eaten good!

And that's the way te Fortune Cookie crumbled in the good old days of being apprenticed to a master comedy craftsman, a gallant trencherman, a fat father-figure, and a very fine fellow well met—and fed—David Freedman.

LOUIS SUDLER

Host of "ARTISTS SHOWCASE", 1963 EMMY AWARD Winning Program now entering fourth consecutive year on the air. In color Sunday Afternoons WNBQ-NBC-TV, Chicago.

Iron Curtain TV

Continued from page 99

basic technical equipment with which to synchronize sound and picture.

"This makes the political responsibility for every transmission much more complicated, since we have no chance of checking a program beforehand, as we do with radio. We repeatedly find ourselves in an embarrassing position.

He compared Poland's position with that of East Germany, tv-wise. East Germany has "much better technical equipment," he said—and might well have added, much closer political control of their programming.

Gomulka has been a fairly consistent tv critic. Just a little over a year ago, in a conference of the Warsaw Communist Party, he singled out the medium for special criticism, citing two recent programs as cases in point.

One was an admiring documentary on land reclamation in the United States. The second was a news background program in which three prominent journalists discussed international affairs in terms of the views of Premier Khrushchev, President Kennedy and President de Gaulle. Each journalist paraphrased the attitudes of one of the statesmen.

Gomulka, who apparently watched the program, seemed to feel that the Kennedy viewpoint had got the best of the debate. One of the participating journalists, Wieslaw Gornicki, had been preparing to take up an assignment in New York as Polish Press Agency (PAP) correspondent. His plans immediately became indefinite, leading one to the assumption that he was the panelist representing President Kennedy.

ED REIMERS

Exclusive Management: ABRAMS-RUBALOFF & ASSOC.

TV—The Great Mutation

By MILTON M. RAISON

Hollywood.

The sense of the word "mutation," as defined by the Oxford Dictionary, which has a rather punctilious concern about our mother tongue is this: a variety or change, which is not so much a complete change as a new species which combines the variant of other existing species.

Is there a better description of television today?

Television, as we know it, combines the best or worst features of the stage, radio, motion pictures, vaudeville, burlesque, opera, the concert hall, Chautauqua, the circus, the lottery, the newspaper, the magazine and, of course, the billboard.

I hear a voice from the audience asking, "Is that bad?" The answer must be yes, because television has little of the form of the above-mentioned genre of entertainment and no control—with the possible exception of radio—over its own life and future.

Recently, we've been frightened by the word "mutation," because it has come to mean something horrible that will take place after enough atomic bombs have poisoned the atmosphere. The human race, and for that matter, everything that has life, will, like television, then have no control over its own life and future. One can very well imagine that our great-grandchildren will be one-eyed monsters with four legs, which, incidentally, might be a good description of television today, for it sees too little, lacks depth of perception, which one-eyed people lack—and runs too fast.

Let's examine form. Is a 15-minute newscast television? Yes. Is a half-hour comedy show television? Yes. Is an hour Western television? Often; though you may find that the same show could have been presented more effectively in half an hour as Rod Serling found out. Is a 90-minute show television? Quite often, though here again you may find that 90 minutes is a padded hour—or, as in "Arrest and Trial," two 45-minute segments. Is a two-hour show television? Jerry Lewis couldn't prove it, and Revue is about to try it, but it has been successful with personalities like Steve Allen, Jack Paar and Johnny Carson. We will skip the two-hour old motion pictures shown on television because here, nothing but bad cutting and the commercials originate with television personnel.

But of the shows that do originate with television personnel, few of them have jelled into what I call form.

A book has form, no matter if it has far-out writing by Henry Miller or Jack Kerouac, or is a simple love story. A play has form, even if it's extremely avante-garde, off-Broadway theatre, or experimental theatre-in-the-round or on-the-square. A motion picture has form, even if it's a new, new, new, new wave epic. A short-story has form, even if it has a New Yorker ending. Circuses, vaudeville and burlesque have always had form, as have opera and recitals.

The Difference Is Ads

What makes these entertainment media different from television—which is the greatest entertainment medium of them all? One thing: Advertising.

Now no one in the television business is going to suggest that advertising be done away with. This, of course, would be ridiculous. But it does seem puzzling to many of the creative men and women in the industry that the sponsors and advertisers don't pay more attention to the fact that the commercial in a tv show is so often inadequate, childish, loud, crude and in bad taste. It's puzzling because, according to Time magazine, the executives of our giant corporations and huge advertising agencies are exceptional men. They are college-bred; they attend the opera and concerts; they wear clothes in the best possible taste; they establish worthy foundations; they are inveterate theatregoers and read the best books and collect the finest art. Yet, for some curious reason, they lose all their training, taste, sophistication and sense of values, when it comes to advertising their products. Could it be that they secretly regard the viewers of free television as the great, gray, unthinking masses of people as described by Orwell in "1984"?

They are always telling the television producers and writers to give us something "different." Yet, when a show is a hit, they insist on something similar and television always goes in cycles. They say, "We'll even go for unhappy endings." But is this really true? Think of the fights the producers and even networks have had with sponsors and advertising agencies about honest unhappy endings.

They say, "Give us the truth—don't underestimate the intelligence of the television audience."

But how much truth can you find on television? Do the doctor shows really tell the truth about doctors? "Arrest and Trial" recently had the guts to do a show where the doctor was shown as a careful, calculating man, too worried about procedure and his reputation to help a dying child. But because the AMA has a hand in the preparation of all doctor scripts, you rarely find the portraiture of a doctor who conspires to cheat an insurance company, or splits fees, or overcharges.

Perhaps it is because so much of television has a basic dishonesty, because it is pushed, pummelled and molded along the lines which represent the sponsors' and advertisers' idea of enterstainment, that it has achieved no form or "style."

The novella eventually became the novel; the wandering minstrels and puppet shows of antiquity, became the theatre; the two-reelers in motion pictures, grew to become full and mature films. Television has had almost a generation to develop an honest form or style of its own, but it seems as far away as ever, despite the efforts of many dedicated and intelligent workers in that field. And it can only be because of the advertising matter which is so often and so crudely injected into the best and most sensitive of shows.

Magazines and newspapers have lived with advertising for years—in fact, lived because of it. So has radio. Yet somehow each of these fields coagulated into a basically pleasing form of entertainment.

Perhaps pay-tv will do the trick. When people pay to see television, members of the television industry will be finally free—and if freedom and artistry lies in pay-tv, will commercial tv be far behind? Perhaps we need pay-tv as a catalyst before realizing the potential of the greatest mass entertainment the world has ever known.

Naturally, this is true only of television which depends on creative ideas and continuity and stories, because the networks coverage of world events is the finest and most complete that man has ever been privileged to see. But there must be a deeply buried guilt about advertising when such events are televised, because all commercials immediately go off the air. This is something to ponder.

Radio Lux Predates Common Market And Still Scoops It Regularly

Frankfurt.

Little old Radio Luxembourg claims that it scooped the Common Market, and is doing just about as much good in promoting international relations.

One of its most popular programs, "The Happy Wave," is a combination three hours of popular platters aired nightly from midnight until 3 a.m. — with French, English and German disk jockeys combining their talents to answer requests, in their assorted three lingos, and play the popular platters for their audiences in at least three different countries.

Current count of listeneers to this odd multi-lingual outlet is somewhere roughly around 60,000,000 — an estimated 8,000,000 in England, 20,000,000 in France, and 30,000,000 more in Belgium, Holland and Germany.

This figure has taken a big jump up in recent years, because of the 6,000,000 transistor radios in Europe that enable folks on the go to tune in on the offbeat station.

Not only is the station on the air from 7 p.m. to 3 a.m. for the radio listeners, but it is producing television nightly from 7 to 11, with a half million viewers for its French-language productions.

And just to show how successful it is in getting its message across to the listeners—a recent commercial for the British publication New Musical Express resulted in over 100,000 inquiries about the paper from 24 countries.

"208," as it's generally called because of its meters on the medium wavelength band, piled up a hefty $1,500,000 in advertising from its British commercials alone last year. And, it's regretfully noting, it's raising its commercial rates about 15%, for the first time in its 12-year history.

Study of its listeners shows that 34% fall into the 25 to 44 age group, 36% are in the 16 to 24 age group, and 29% are 45 or over.

With a disk jockey format of "platter, chatter and ad, platter, chatter and ad," this station is probably the biggest little money maker in the world. While you can dart across the country in an easy 90 minutes by car (it's only 37 miles across and 62 up and down), it's just about impossible to get away from its commercial influence anywhere in Europe.

Vidfilming in Britain

Continued from page 121

machines on television is the work of the devil.

However, as long as Mr. Wilson's gypsy band remains strongly encamped on the sound stages, it is not considered likely that a Labor Government will exercise any undue restraint on the commercial contractors—providing, of course, that they abstain from encouraging too much U.S. participation in either their production or programming.

Whether U.S. programmers will be tempted to assault the fortress Europe in 1964 may be determined by the network reaction to Herbert Brodkin's excursion into English production with "Espionage." This is the first time that a 'hot' American producer has made a trial run abroad, but it doesn't look as if "Espionage," produced in co-operation with ATV, can survive the battering from "Beverly Hillbillies." From a production standpoint, it is unquestionably the finest television series ever made abroad. But it is an anthology.

Any change of direction will be most evident in the taping of programs for British Commonwealth countries, without providing for U.S. sale. These programs make no concessions whatsoever in modifying subject matter or accents in order to improve acceptability in the United States. They include such long-run British attractions as "Coronation Street," "Probation Officer" and "Emergency Ward Ten." "The London Palladium Show" has for some time been seen both in Canada and Australia, but the introduction of a full line of taped features outside the U.K. is comparatively new. With the course now firmly set in the direction of live production, the syndication of taped programs gives the contractors an opportunity to reduce some of the original cost. Whether this venture is successful, however, depends to some degree on the resilience of the ties still binding the Commonwealtn. It also contemplates some form of reciprocity by the British contractors in accepting product made in Australia and Canada. Several such programs are now seen in England, and others are under consideration.

British produced series such as "Sir Francis Drake" and "Danger Man" give every indication of earning substantial profits on reruns.

With the launching of a second commercial channel in 1966, and the kickoff of the BBC "kangaroo kaper"—(BBC Channel Two uses a kangaroo as its symbol)—in the Spring of 1964, the prospects for vidfilm producers would seem good. But so far the BBC has given no indication of making any celluloid commitments, and here it takes a full year to get a series in production.

The BBC can still throw the commercial channel a curve by coming up with a heavy U.S. telefilm schedule on Channel 2, though, since they are not required to conform to any quota restriction.

Any indication that BBC is going to give the ITV a cost per thousand headache will almost inevitably trigger off a resumption of vidfilm production. To provide comparable live programming would require an outlay for additional facilities, which would cancel out any anticipated savings from nixing film production.

That and the fact that British produced film series have always done well, rating-wise. "Sentimental Agent," "Espionage" and "The Saint," at present, are all scoring well over 40, and outside of the "Palladium Show" and "Coronation Street," nothing can touch them.

In any event, the commercial contractors have no immediate problem until the current supply of canned stuff runs out. That won't be until March 1964.

Right now, after their traumatic experience with the Pilkington Report, Mr. Bevins and the fact that Christine Keeler and Mandy staged a comeback for the newspapers, the thing they want most of all is—a breathing period.

Community Chest & Adv.

Continued from page 117

advertising agency people have hearts as big as the need.

Here are some of the men and women who helped make this year's radio and television participation a most important factor in the world's largest voluntary fund organization.

Harry Ackerman, Screen Gems.
Fred W. Adams, American Motors.
Joseph Alterman of Theatre Owners of America.
Lucille Ball.
Joseph Barbera, Hanna-Barbera Productions.
Freddy Bartholomew, Benton & Bowles.
Charles C. Barry, Young & Rubicam.
Fred Barton, Q-TV Inc.
David F. Beard, Reynolds Metals.
David Begelman, Creative Management.
Dale Bell, ABC.
Ralph Bellamy.
Bea Benaderet.
Gertrude Berg.
Larry Berns, McHale's Navy.
Joey Bishop.
Harold Blackburn.
BBDO.
Janet Blair.
Roger H. Bolin, Westinghouse Electric.
Richard Boone.
Shirley Booth.
Ernest Borgnine.
Charles Bradley, BBDO.
David Bradshaw, Young & Rubicam.
Jerry Bredouw, ABC.
Frank Brill, Music Corp. of America.
Jerry Briskin, Screen Gems.
Steve Broidy, Allied Artists.
L. W. Bruff, Liggett & Myers.
Walter H. Bunker, Young & Rubicam.
David W. Burke, General Electric.
Larry Byer, NBC.
Richard Chamberlain.
Philip H. Cohen, Sullivan, Stauffer, C & B.
Nat King Cole.
Owen Comora, Young & Rubicam.
Joseph Cotten.
Alan Courtney, MGM.
John Cowden, CBS.
Hume Cronyn.
Bill Dana.
R. A. Davis, Kraft.
J. E. Dean, Du Pont.
H. Allan Dingwall, Jr., General Foods.
William Dozier, Screen Gems.
Sidney H. Eiges, NBC.
Jason Evers.
Nanette Fabray.
William R. Farrell, Monsanto Chemical.
Art Fellows, The Fugitive.
Ted Fetter, ABC.
Joe Flynn.
Irene Foley, CBS.
John Donald Foley, ABC.
Pat Fox.
Richard E. Forbes, Chrysler.
James Franciscus.
Allen Funt.
Ted German, BBDO.
George R. Giroux, Procter & Gamble.
Irving Gitlin, NBC.
Bill Golden, MGM.
James A. Gordon, H. J. Heinz.
Howard Gray, R. J. Reynolds.
Elenor Guinchi, Advertising Council.
Steve Halpern, Channing (ABC).
Hank Hamilton, ABC.
James E. Hanna, N. W. Ayer & Son.
William Hanna, Hanna-Barbera
Dave Hanson, Leo Burnett.
Louis Hausman, NBC.
Arthur Hull Hayes, CBS.
Lee Hayes, CBS.
George Heinemann, NBC.
Paul Henning, Petticoat Junction (CBS).
Norman Henry, Phil Silvers Show (CBS).
Bob Hope.
Joe Hornsby, BBDO.
John B. Hunter, Jr., B. F. Goodrich.
Lewis Hunter, NBC.
David Jansen.
Glynis Johns.
Mitchell Johnson, William Esty Co.
Milt Josefsberg, Joey Bishop Show (NBC).
Joseph F. Keating, Mutual Broadcasting System.
Nicholas F. Keesley, Lennen & Newell.
Jack Keller, Swanson Studios.
Pat Kelley, Channing (ABC).
V. Kenyon, Maxon.
Milt Kramer, Frank Music Company.
John W. Kiermaier, CBS.
Gordon Kinney, Advertising Council.
Bernie Knee, Swanson Studios.
Daniel Ladd, P. Lorillard.
Walter Lantz, Walter Lantz.
George LeMaire, MGM.
Jack Lemmon.
Robert Lewine, CBS.
Lansing B. Lindquist.
Bill Linden, ABC.
Art Linkletter.
Jay Livingston, CBS.
Gary Lockwood.
Robert Markell, The Defenders (CBS).
E. G. Marshall.
Quinn Martin, The Fugitive (ABC).
Roland Martini, Gardner Advertising.
Leonard Maskin, ABC.
Johnny Mathis.
Buddy MacKinsey, Swanson Studios.
Thomas A. McAvity, NBC.
Thomas H. McDermott, Four Star.
Donald H. McGannon, Westinghouse Broadcasting.
Philip McHugh, McHugh & Hoffman.
William McIlvain, Leo Burnett.
Celeste Meakin, Advertising Council.
Ethel Merman.
Paul Miller, Channing (ABC).
Garry Moore.
Ralph Nelson, Twilight Zone (CBS).
David O. Nyren, Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample.
Maureen O'Hara.
P. R. Olmstead, Kellogg Company.
Richard M. Pack, Westinghouse Broadcasting.
Jack Palance.
Austin Peterson, Advertising Council.
Richard A. R. Pinkham, Ted Bates.
Larry Potow, Candid Camera (CBS).
Betty Quadt, NBC.
Tony Randall.
J. Neil Reagan, McCann-Erickson.
Robert Reed.
James G. Riddel, ABC.
Dick Riddle.
Bob Ruby.
Robert Ryan.
Thomas W. Sarnoff, NBC.
Mrs. L. S. Schwartz, Advertising Council.
George C. Scott.
John Scuoppo, NBC.
William Self, 20th Century-Fox.
Rod Serling.
Ed Siegenfeld, NBC.
Phil Silvers.
John P. Simpson, Foote, Cone & Belding.
Douglas L. Smith, S. C. Johnson.
Sidney P. Solow, Consolidated Film.
Lin Stafford, CBS.
Edward Stanley, NBC.
Robert J. Stefan, BBDO.
Albert R. Stevens, American Tobacco.
James D. Stocker, Scott Paper.
William W. Suitt, Allum, Suitt & Raymond
David Susskind.
Bob Swanson, Swanson Studios.
Jessica Tandy.
Jerry Taylor, CBS.
Danny Thomas.
Jerry Thorpe, Desilu.
Samuel Thurm, Lever Bros.
Lewis H. Titterton, Compton Advertising.
Herminio Traviesas, BBDO.
Charles M. Underhill, U.S. Steel.
Vincent Wasilewski, NAB.
Lew R. Wasserman, MCA.
Ray Weber, Swift & Co.
David A. Werblin, MCA.
J. Andrew Weschler, BBDO.
Richard Wesson, Petticoat Junction (CBS).
Arnold J. Wester, William Esty.
Robert D. Wolfe, Grey Advertising.
Scott Young, Leo Burnett.

SEEK MORE STRICT GERMAN TV CONTROLS

Wiesbaden.

West Germany's Association of Film and Television Producers, meeting here, has demanded much more rigid controls of German television, in order to equalize its competition with the German cinemas.

The group has sent demands to the West German government asking for two vital changes—First, they request that the two German television stations turn all their productions over to private firms with the exception of those program sections for which the stations are politically responsible. As part of this, they ask that the television studios which the stations have taken over be resold into private hands so that the stations are not in effect building up powerful monopolies.

Second, they ask that there be a rigid control over the percentage of foreign (and mainly American) programs that the two television stations can show.

Broadcasting Codes

Continued from page 115

ing receiving network airing gets a closer scrutiny and in many cases needs little defense.

Why do we continue to have significant FTC and FDA cases involving television advertising? We would have to admit, despite definite credit wherever it is due, that commercial copy clearance activities continue weaker than they sould be. One of the most obvious vulnerabilities boils down to a continuing matter of believability in broadcast advertising. Whether those in the trade like it or not, there is more than a little truth in recent statements by such successful advertising agency figures as David Ogilvy or Fred Papert. Their common sense contention that advertising must be believable cuts to the heart of one of the continuing and weakest areas of advertising practice.

Too many advertisers still practice weasel-wording, a calculated risk policy which helps to erode public confidence in advertising generally and to erode high code standards. A grey area is established which increasingly forces upon broadcasters difficult decisions in borderline areas.

To speak of believability is automatically to include responsibility for documentation of copy claims. But also discussion of believability in advertising additionally covers the whole gamut of copywriters' conceits, gimmicks and status-motivated absurdities. Small wonder as far back as six years ago Carl Sandburg dubbed certain television advertising as "filled with inanity, assinity, silliness and cheap trickery." What is embarrassing for specific advertisers, their agencies and broadcasting, is the degree to which he could still make the charge. And where advertisers or the broadcast media continue to suffer embarrassment in public, it is largely because our exchanges in private still fall short of what is needed.

Does an office like mine or a Code-subscribing clearance office implementing the good taste and other ground rules of the codes step out of bounds by raising such a demur on believability in that word's broadest sense? When a commercial in all black, all white emotional terms depicts a person with a problem which instantly and completely disappears as soon as the victim discovers the product, how can common sense viewers possibly take seriously the advertising promise so undelated to their everyday experiences? These exaggerated absurdities patently invite incredulity, subconscious or otherwise, when projected on a television screen towards which increasingly discerning husbands, wives and children are focusing their attention. Ingenuity in advertising they'll recognize, respect and accept. But viewers are by now sophisticated enough to expect and deserve some solid facts as well.

'Unbelievabilities'

Other commercials are punctuated with claims about eight out of 10, or one out of six, or three out of four who do or recommend this or that in a fashion that projects a handful sampling as having universal application. Some consumers even though they do not have the facts are becoming less gullible, especially when they reflect upon what appear to be contradictory competitive claims.

The aura of these unbelievabilities continues to surround and color the believability of other pitches with which and reasonable veiwer is welling to identify. In brief, and detractors of this next argument notwithstanding, the good things advertisers and their agencies do are judged in the context of the distorted things done by, presumably, other advertisers and their agencies. No wonder the pioneers among advertising practitioners are smeared by the honest resistance of discriminating viewers to the unbelievabilities some advertisers perpetuate.

One of the reasons broadcasters are themselves having difficulties in doing something about all of this is a continuing dichotomy in analyzing the problem. We come to our difficulties too much from our point of view rather than from that of our viewers. Code support among broadcasters continues to be marked by a preoccupation with the image and protection of broadcasting and broadcast advertising, rather than with a less qualified concern for the interests of the customers out there in the audience.

Broadcaster activity in self-regulation can be truly successful today only where the orientation places narrow broadcaster self-interest second to the good of broadcast audiences. Where acts of broadcaster editorial discrimination affecting commercials go forward in the interests of the audience and potential consumers, they result in the advancement of broadcasters' own and advertisers' reasonable selfish interests. To the degree broadcasters, and advertisers utilizing the broadcast media, think first of their responsibilities to vewers, listeners and/or consumers, it inevitably follows that broadcast self-regulatory activities in the protection of said audience will automatically protect broadcasters and broadcast advertisers.

Happily, among advertisers there is some healthy support around for this sentiment. Would that such advertisers were given to more articulation of their support. For, needless to say, there are also those among advertisers who either hold out from joining the self-regulatory efforts of responsible broadcasters or confound them with the adroitness of their brinkmanship. Some of these, in complacent support of their advertising claims, submit substantiation too flimsy for reasonable souls to accept. They also offer what our attorney would call "self-serving declarations." "We have checked this with our lawyers and are assured that it will bet by the FTC. No need for you to inquire further." Or they'll offer clinical data which leaves much to be desired as to the adequacy of the sample, the presence of necessary controls, the basic design of the tests, the significance of the results.

Clearly these things and all of the aforementioned "inanities and assininities" affect the believability of broadcast advertising. They influence viewer and listener opinion of broadcast advertising. They help to explain the recurring criticisms not only of broadcast advertising in particular but broadcast practice in general.

The questions of whether or not you feel self-regulation can work and what can be done to make it work better are not idle ones. There are those who strongly feel self-regulation should be scrapped. There are those who feel it should be no stronger than is necessary to keep that big bug-a-boo, the government, out. My own belief is that obsessive anxiety about government interference gets in the way of sufficient genuine interest in self-regulation itself.

Closed-Circuit TV For Indpls. Race

Hollywood.

Closed-circuit telecasting of the Indianapolis 500-mile Speedway Race May 30 will be covered by 12 cameras, 30 mikes and nine announcers.

MCA-TV has acquired the closed-circuit telecasting rights to the event, and its sports supervisor, Jay Michaels, reported that every foot of the two-and-one-half mile track will be covered for viewers. MCA-TV has been working for the past three months with groups who have had previous experience in closed-circuit work and with engineers from the networks.

MCA-TV and the speedway will build the largest permanent tv studio ever constructed for a single sports event on the speedway grounds, Michaels said, adding the studio will have facilities for a full color telecasting of the race in subsequent years, although the first one will be in b-and-w. Equipment for the vidcast will begin to be installed April 1. Tape coverage begins May 1 on a limited basis and full operations on May 23.

Theater owners and race promoters around the country have contacted MCA-TV and the speedway anent the closed-circuit telecasting, but no allocations of franchises have been made yet, pending finalization of a just-completed survey by Michaels.

You'd expect to pay a nickel for such a nail

This tempered-steel nail will penetrate poured concrete.

①

It is shown about three times actual size to clarify the details.

②

Notice the lengthwise fluting on the shaft: it prevents splitting, whether you are driving into concrete or wood.

③

The fluting gives the nail a screw-like grip. It won't pull out.

④

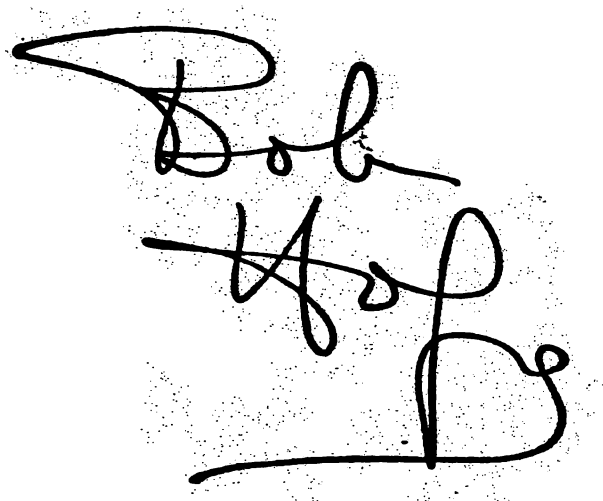
The head will not split off. See how it is shaped to countersink itself on the final blow of the hammer.

⑤

Good as it is, you can buy a pound of these nails for 49¢. There are approximately 100 in a pound.

MORAL:
There is no such thing as a dull product.
Only dull approaches to interesting products.
What's your problem?

YOUNG & RUBICAM, Advertising



"EIGHT ON THE LAM"

Hope Enterprises Inc.

CONNIE FRANCIS

1964 Release

M G M'S

"LOOKING FOR LOVE"

a FRANMET Production

Starting January 21, SAHARA, Las Vegas

In The Spring 1964

INAUGURATING

WORLD-WIDE TV TOUR

Exclusively MGM Records

Management: GEORGE SCHECK, 161 West 54th Street, New York 19, N. Y. JUdson 6-6767

Cables—MERNAMUSIC

DANNY KAYE

A Salute TO 1963

AND Thanks TO

THE GREAT ONE !

FRANK FONTAINE

Newest ALBUM: "HOW SWEET IT IS"

Newest SINGLE: "ALOUETTE"

ABC PARAMOUNT RECORDS

Personal Manager
JOE LYTTLE

GAC

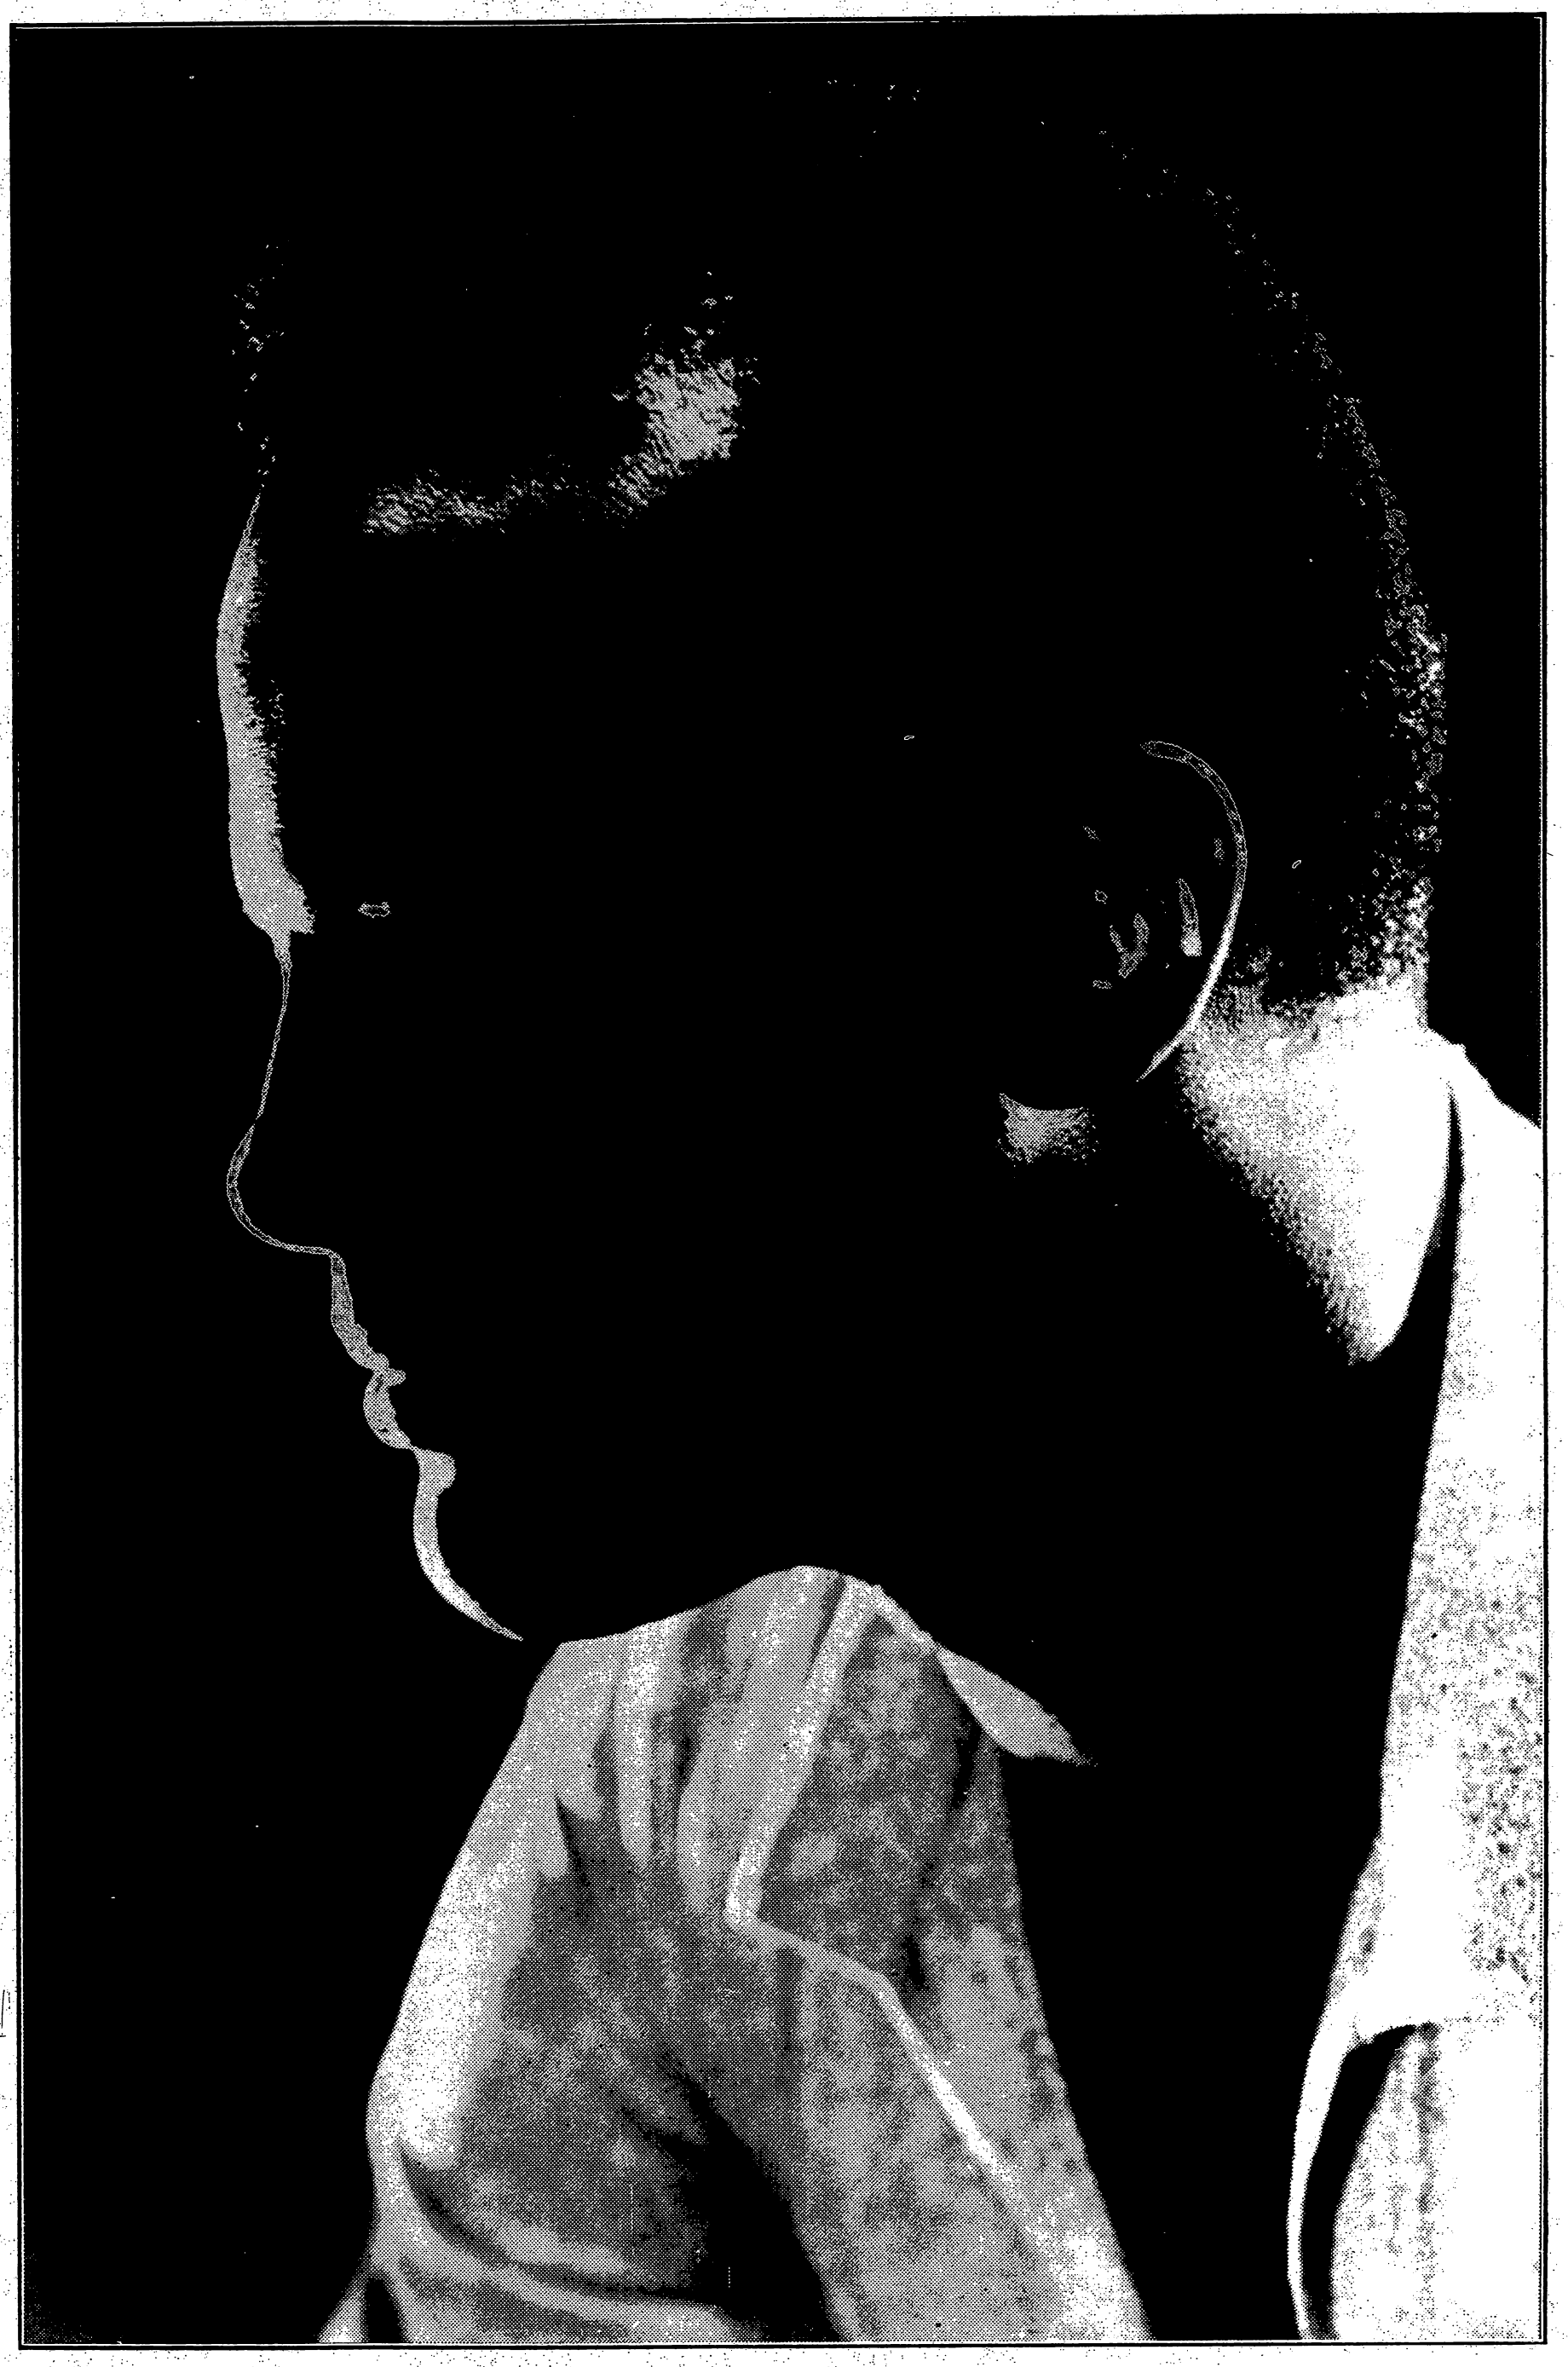
TV producer bored, bored, bored

Award-winning producer-director; single, 31, very solvent, currently employed.

Top programming (network & packager) and glamour ad agency credits.

Seeks challenge, travel, money in that order.

Box V-3543, Variety, 154 West 46th Street, New York, N. Y. 10036.



Congratulations on the 58th Anniversary of VARIETY on our 130th!

Maine Broadcasting System

WCSH-TV	PORTLAND	1953
(10th ANNIVERSARY YEAR)
WLBZ-TV	BANGOR	1954
WCSH-RADIO	PORTLAND	1925
WLBZ-RADIO	BANGOR	1926
WRDO-RADIO	AUGUSTA	1932

Celebrating In 1964 A Grand Total of 130 Years of Pioneering Broadcasting Service In Northern New England

CARL REINER

CREATOR — PRODUCER — WRITER

"THE DICK VAN DYKE SHOW"

★

GORDON COTLER

★

PETSOURKE

Voice Over Film

JOEL CRAGER

Personal Management: CARL EASTMAN

PLaza 1-5566 PLaza 2-7676

Best Wishes to

VARIETY

on its 58th ANNIVERSARY!

from

VIRGINIA GRAHAM

Good Will Ambassador

THE CLAIROL CO.

"GIRL TALK"

ABC-TV

Monday thru Friday

10:30 - 11 A.M.

BRITISH CALENDAR

A series of up-to-date quarter-hour programs featuring a variety of events in Britain is available every two weeks on a continuous basis or for programming on a weekly basis using 13 or 26 issues. 16mm Black & White SOF.

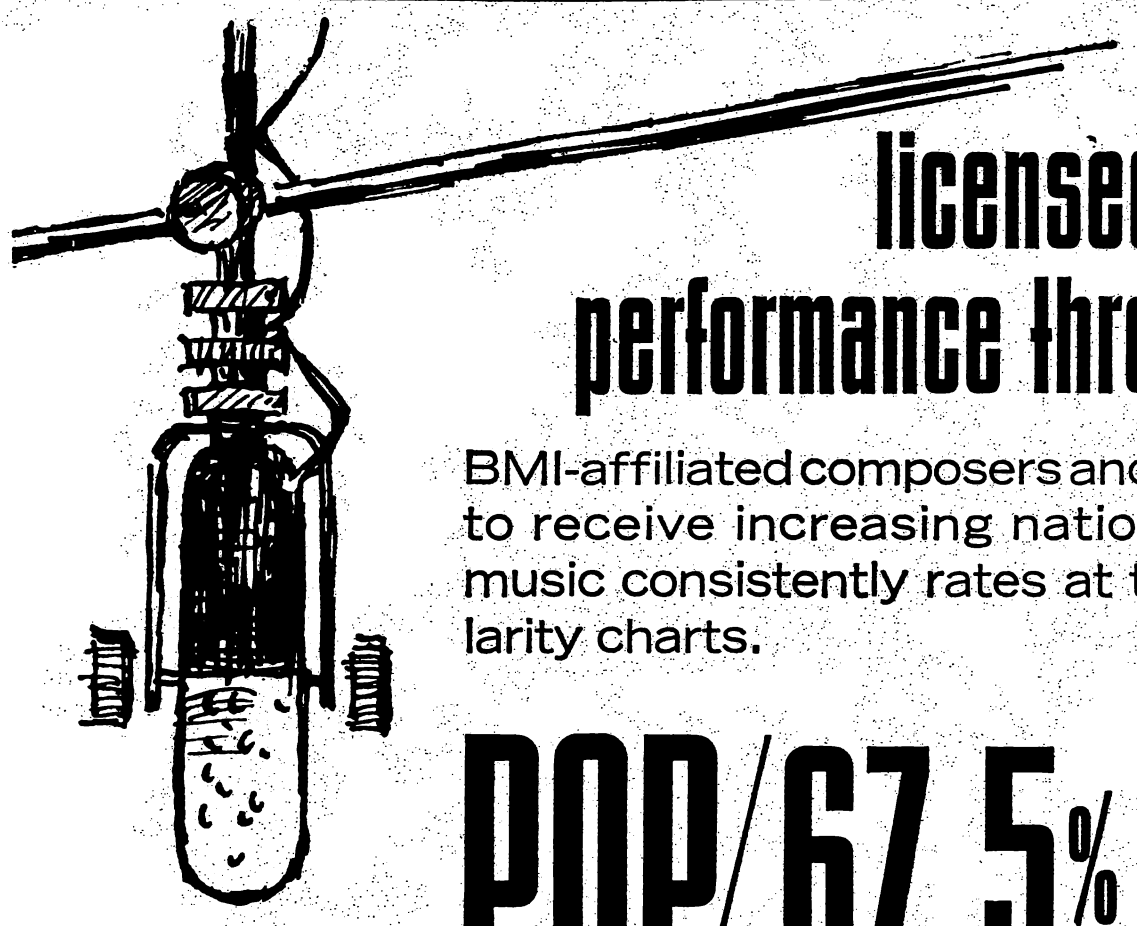
Write for FREE Kit

BRITISH INFORMATION SERVICES

845 Third Avenue

New York, N.Y. 10022

PL. 2-8400



licensed for performance through BMI

BMI-affiliated composers and publishers continue to receive increasing national acclaim...their music consistently rates at the top of the popularity charts.

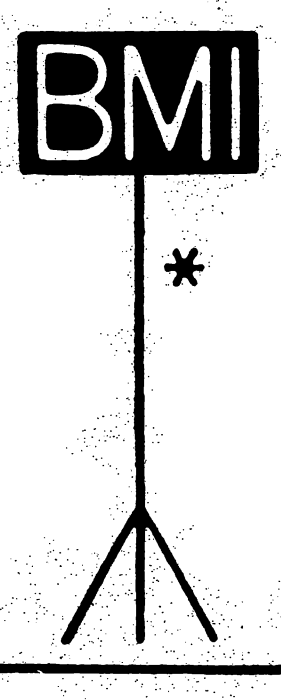
POP/67.5% of the top song hits in Billboard's "Honor Roll" charts for five consecutive years (1958-1962), 67.5% were BMI.

C&W/93.7% of the top Country and Western songs in Billboard's C & W charts for five consecutive years (1958-1962), 93.7% were BMI.

R&B/84.1% of the top Rhythm & Blues songs in Billboard's R & B charts for five consecutive years (1958-1962), 84.1% were BMI.

MIDDLE ROAD/62.2% of the "Middle-Road Singles,"* classified as "not too far out in either direction..." and listed in Billboard during the past year, 62.2% were BMI.

*This chart originated in Aug. 1962



ONE HALF OF THE ALL-TIME MILLION RECORD SELLERS (Singles)

Of the 669 titles in the combined listings of Billboard (Dec. 29, 1962) and Cash Box (Aug. 10, 1963) 335 are in the BMI repertoire.

BROADCAST MUSIC, INC.

589 FIFTH AVENUE • NEW YORK 17, NEW YORK

CHICAGO • LOS ANGELES • NASHVILLE • TORONTO • MONTREAL

ART CARNEY

Personal Management: WILLIAM McCAFFREY

JACK LESCOULIE

The LEE PHILLIP Show

WBBM-TV, Chicago

And 48 Other Midwest Stations

CREATIVE PROGRAMMING

375 Park Ave. • New York 22, N. Y. • Plaza 1-0600

9460 Wilshire Boulevard • Beverly Hills, California • CRestview 4-7357

WILLIAM SELF

20th Century-Fox Television

John Cannon

- announcer
- narrator
- m.c.

• Radio Registry

James Starbuck

DIRECTOR – CHOREOGRAPHER

•

"SING ALONG WITH MITCH"
NBC-TV

•

TELESISTEMA MEXICANO, S.A.

AV. CHAPULTEPEC 18 MEXICO. D. F.

20 LOCAL T.V. STATIONS

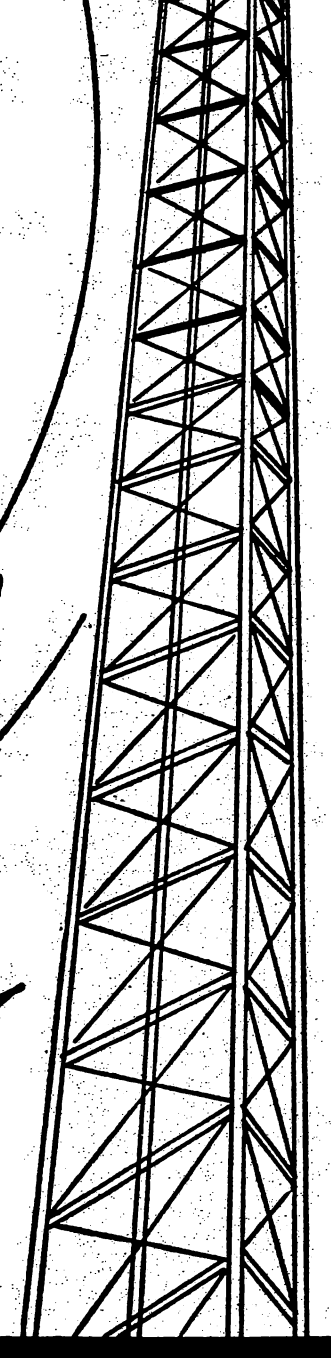
2 NETWORK GROUPS

THE LARGEST AUDIENCE
SOUTH OF THE BORDER

1,200.000
T.V. SETS

30 VIDEO TAPE
RECORDERS

THE ONLY "VIDEO CRUISER" IN LATIN AMERICA
FULLY EQUIPPED WITH TWO VTR'S



Readers of VARIETY may as well know that Telesistema Mexicano has no comercial representative in the U.S. or any other foreign countries.
Program or spot advertising of imported goods is sold to distributors located in Mexico.

Carmel Quinn

STAR OF TELEVISION·RADIO·NIGHT CLUBS·RECORDS·CONCERTS·FAIRS

WILLIAM MORRIS AGENCY

• HEADLINE RECORDS •

Public Relations
REGGIE RICCARDI
135 West 55 St., New York 19, N. Y.
Circle 7-1235

TED MACK

★

BILL HOBIN

Producer – Director

★

Best Wishes

TONY BENNETT

and sincere THANKS to

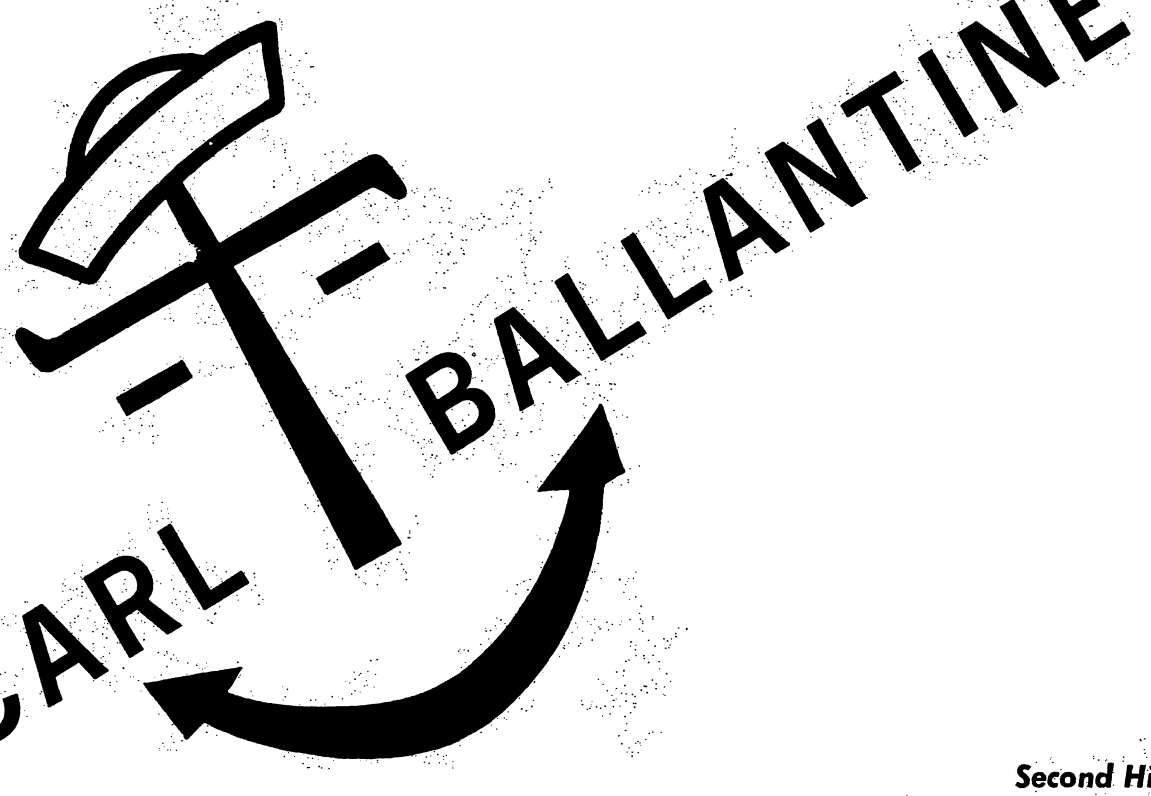
RALPH SHARON, BILLY EXINER and HAL GAYLOR for consistently fine accompaniment

COLUMBIA RECORDS

GAC

Publicized by MAL BRAVEMAN ASSOC.
Record Promotion: JOE PETRALIA



Second Hitch
McHALE'S NAVY
ABC-TV

TONY CHARMOLI

CURRENTLY IN TV:

DANNY KAYE SHOW

NIGHT CLUBS:

CAROL LAWRENCE
JULIET PROWSE

FOLIES BERGERE—HOTEL TROPICANA
LAS VEGAS

R.S.V.P.
Rick Spalla Video Productions

RICK SPALLA PRODUCTIONS, INC.
HOLLYWOOD NEWSREEL SYNDICATE, INC.

- PRODUCERS
- NEWSREELS
- PACKAGERS
- COMMERCIALS

Available Now:

39-HALF HOURS (Also 5, 10, 15 Minute Segments)

"HOLLYWOOD STAR NEWSREEL"

(Glamorous Premieres ★ Fabulous Parties ★ Exciting Weddings ★ Exclusive Interviews)

Distributed by Rick Spalla Video Productions
Foreign Distribution—MCA-TV Ltd.

26-HALF HOURS

"GUEST SHOT"

(Hobbies of the Stars)

Distributed by Trans-Lux Television Corp.

Hollywood (46)
GOLDWYN STUDIOS
1041 N. Formosa Ave.
HO. 9-7307

New York (36)
FILM CENTER BLDG.
630 Ninth Ave.
LT. 1-9344

We showed the Italians how to make LOVE

(in an unreserved, British way)

We provide London (England, of course, not Ky, Ohio or Ontario) with its television programmes on the commercial channel, Monday to Friday, 52 weeks in a year.

No one could call us insular. We rely on you people for splendid series like 'Naked City' and we have run a production of 'Electra' in Greek (without subtitles but with an audience of over 3,000,000).

However, many of our programmes are characteristically British, and one of the most recent of these is THE LOVER, commissioned from the English dramatist Harold Pinter, directed by Joan Kemp-Welch and acted by Alan Badel and Vivien Merchant. It was received warmly by the public in March and the critics applied what we believe is an American word to it. They called it a 'breakthrough'.

Shown at Naples in September, it was awarded the PRIX ITALIA for television drama. This is thought to be the highest award possible.

A further accolade came in November when the Guild of Television Producers and Directors in London declared THE LOVER the best television drama script of the year, awarded Alan Badel the title of best actor of the year, Vivien Merchant best actress of the year, and Joan Kemp-Welch the prize for the most outstanding creative work in television. We are pleased.

Associated-Rediffusion

TELEVISION HOUSE, LONDON WC2

576 TOP RATED HOURS

Prime Network Time

19,200,000,001 VIEWERS

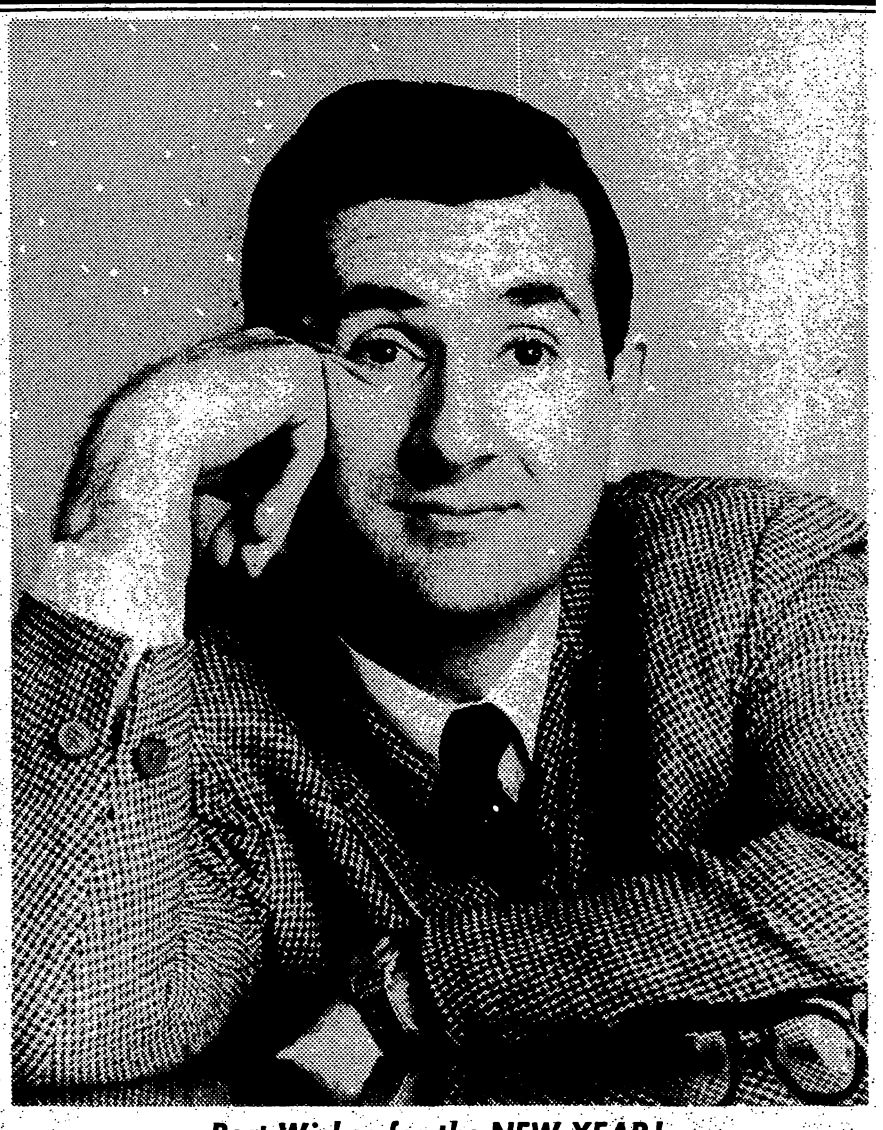
JAMES HOBSON

Producer/Director

Area Code 213-274-5488

Best Wishes

JOEL KANE



Best Wishes for the NEW YEAR!

HERB DUNCAN

Actor – Narrator

PLaza 2-7676

Once again, thanks

for all your help in keeping millions of viewers tuned to our clients' shows (and their commercials)

ANDY GRIFFITH
General Foods: S.O.S.

BILL DANA SHOW
Sunbeam: Toothbrush

BING CROSBY SHOW
Lever: Pepsodent

BREAKING POINT
Kitchens of Sara Lee; Armour: Dial; Sunbeam: Shavemaster

BURKE'S LAW
Menley & James: Contac

CANDID CAMERA
Clairol; Lever: Imperial Margarine

CHANNING
Clairol; Kitchens of Sara Lee

COMBAT
Armour: Dial, Canned Meats; Sunbeam: Shavemaster

DANNY THOMAS
General Foods: Kool-Aid, Good Seasons Sauces & Gravies, Good Seasons Salad Dressings

DEFENDERS
Clairol; Lever: Imperial Margarine

ELEVENTH HOUR
S. C. Johnson: Klear

ESPIONAGE
S. C. Johnson: Klear

FARMER'S DAUGHTER
Clairol

FUGITIVE
Clairol; Menley & James: Contac

HALLMARK HALL OF FAME
Hallmark Cards

HOLLYWOOD AND THE STARS
Purex

HOOTENANNY
Clairol; Menley & James: Contac

INTERNATIONAL SHOWTIME
S. C. Johnson: Klear; Sunbeam: Shavemaster, Toothbrush

I'VE GOT A SECRET
Paper Mate

JERRY LEWIS
Armour: Dial, Canned Meats; Clairol

JIMMY DEAN
Clairol; Kitchens of Sara Lee

JOEY BISHOP
Sunbeam: Toothbrush

JUDY GARLAND
Menley & James: Contac

KRAFT SUSPENSE THEATRE
Kraft: Confections, Dinners, Barbeque Sauce

THE LIEUTENANT
Sunbeam: Shavemaster

LAWRENCE WELK
Clairol

LOMBARDO NEW YEAR'S EVE SHOW
Clairol

LUCY SHOW
Lever: Imperial Margarine

MONDAY NIGHT MOVIES
Clairol; Sunbeam: Shavemaster, Toothbrush

MY FAVORITE MARTIAN
Paper Mate

OUTER LIMITS
Clairol

PERRY COMO SPECIALS
Kraft: Confections, Dinners, Barbeque Sauce

PERRY MASON
Clairol

PHIL SILVERS
General Foods: S.O.S.

PRICE IS RIGHT
Lever: Imperial Margarine

RED SKELTON SHOW
Lever: Pepsodent; S. C. Johnson: Klear

RON COCHRAN NEWS
Kitchens of Sara Lee; Sunbeam: Shavemaster

SATURDAY NIGHT AT THE MOVIES
Menley & James: Contac; Sunbeam: Shavemaster; Toothbrush

77 SUNSET STRIP
Armour: Dial, Canned Meats; Menley & James: Contac; Sunbeam: Toothbrush

TEMPLE HOUSTON
Sunbeam: Shavemaster

WAGON TRAIN
Clairol; Menley & James: Contac

TONIGHT SHOW
Sunbeam: Shavemaster

FOOTE, CONE & BELDING

New York · Chicago · Los Angeles · San Francisco · Houston · Toronto · London · Frankfurt · Mexico City · Montreal

GOODMAN ACE

*the station with the latin beat....1480 kc

WHOM

136 WEST 52nd STREET
NEW YORK, N. Y. 10019
CIrcle 6-3900

TOUGH ACT TO FOLLOW... because it's loaded with talent!

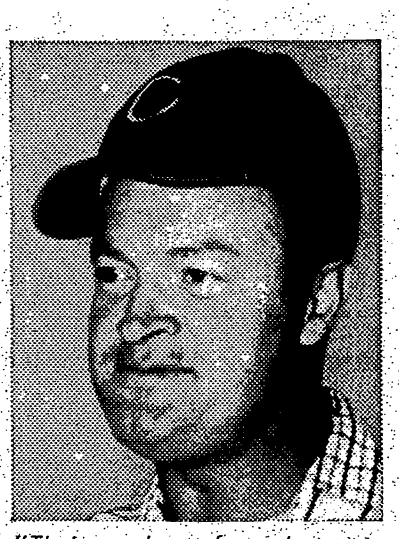
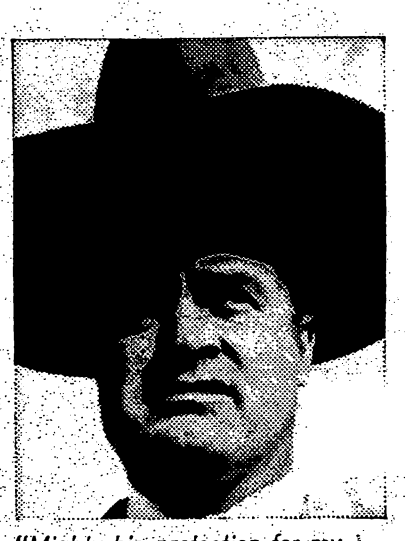
CLARK JONES

This is what they're saying about our 5-year or 50,000-mile warranty*



"That no-charge-for-parts-or-labor makes a big hit with me."

"Shows infinite confidence in the workmanship, I must say."



"Mighty big protection for my investment. Mighty big."

"I am proud to have an original of this historic document."

"The car's so great, the warranty is pure gravy."

"5 years or 50,000 miles. I wish I'd had it for the palace coach."

We don't blame "them" for cheering. You'll cheer, too.

Think of it. If at any time during the warranty period a defect in workmanship or materials shows up in the engine and drive train of your car, it won't cost you a cent for required replacement parts or labor.

And consider this: the warranty still lasts for the full 5 years or 50,000 miles even if the car is sold or traded in. That added value will do wonders for the re-sale price. When you're looking over the new 1964's from Chrysler Corporation, remember that only they have this 5-year or 50,000-mile warranty to protect their original greatness.

*Chrysler Corporation warrants for 5 years or 50,000 miles, whichever comes first, against defects in materials and workmanship and will replace or repair at a Chrysler Motors Corporation Authorized Dealer's place of business, the engine block, head and internal parts, intake manifold, water pump, transmission case and internal parts (excluding manual clutch), torque converter, drive shaft, universal joints, rear axle and differential, and rear wheel bearings of its 1964 automobiles, provided the owner has the engine oil changed every 3 months or 4,000 miles, whichever comes first, the oil filter replaced every second oil change and the carburetor air filter cleaned every 6 months and replaced every 2 years, and every 6 months furnishes to such a dealer evidence of performance of the required service, and requests the dealer to certify (1) receipt of such evidence and (2) the car's then current mileage.

Plymouth Chrysler · Imperial · Dodge

CHRYSLER CORPORATION

SEE BOB HOPE AND THE CHRYSLER THEATRE, NBC-TV, FRIDAYS

Congratulations

VARIETY

On Your 58th Birthday

HORACE McMAHON

Congratulations To

WCSH-TV

(Channel 6)

Portland, Me.

on the occasion of its

10th Anniversary

and thanks to the staff and management for their help and understanding during my recent illness.

DAVID W. SERETTE

Production Mgr., WCSH-TV

THE FENADY ASSOCIATES

•

20TH CENTURY-FOX TELEVISION

Andrew J. Fenady
Bernard McEveety
George Fenady
Richard Caffey
Richard Markowitz

JULIUS LA ROSA

Representative—WILLIAM McCAFFREY

With best wishes from

Associated Television Ltd.

BRYNA RAEBURN

RADIO REGISTRY
JU 2-8800

BILLIE'S REGISTRY
PL 2-7676

Eleven years together
in NEWS and WEATHER

FAHEY FLYNN
and
P. J. HOFF

WBBM TV
CHICAGO

Congratulations VARIETY
On Your 58th Anniversary

SCREEN GEMS, INC.

TELEVISION SUBSIDIARY OF COLUMBIA PICTURES CORP.
711 Fifth Avenue, New York 22 PL 1-4432

NEW YORK DETROIT CHICAGO DALLAS HOLLYWOOD ATLANTA TORONTO

AMERICAN COLLEGE OF RADIO ARTS, CRAFTS AND SCIENCES

Salutes the recipients of its third annual Chicago ACOR awards

- Best Documentary or Community Interest Series
  WMAQ: "Chicago, City of Giants"
- Best Individual Documentary Program
  WGN: "The TUF Guys"
- Best Cultural Contribution — Program Series
  WMAQ: "Carnival of Books"
- Best Cultural Contribution — Single Program
  WLS: "The Space Age Comes To Chicago"
- Best Overall News Operation
  WBBM Radio
- Best Regularly Scheduled News Program Personality
  WMAQ: Len O'Connor
- Best Coverage of a News Event
  WAAF: "The Great March On Washington"
- Best Single Or Series of Editorials
  WIND: "Blow To Slum Landlords"
- Best Sports Personality In Regularly Scheduled Series
  WCFL: Bob Elson on Chicago White Sox Baseball
- Best Coverage of a Special Sports Event
  WGN: Jack Brickhouse with St. Louis-Los Angeles Baseball Series
- Best On-the-Air Personality
  WBBM: Paul Gibson
- Best Creative Radio Commercial Compaign By a Chicago Agency or Station For Local Use Only
  McCann-Erickson: Chicago Milk Foundation
- Best Creative Radio Commercial Campaign By a Chicago Agency For Regional Or National Use
  D'Arcy: Standard Oil

and

RADIO MAN-OF-THE-YEAR
E. H. SHOMO
vice pres.-general manager, WBBM Radio

"BUD" and JIM STEWART
HERE'S GERALDINE
WBKB — CHICAGO

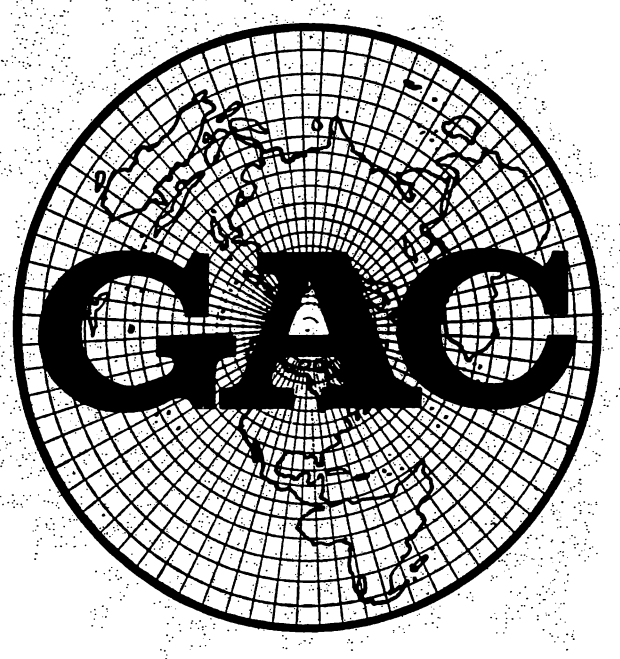
FRANK BUTLER
NARRATOR — ANNOUNCER

Exclusive Representation
ROBERT LONGENECKER
Los Angeles — OL 3-3770

16MM EKTACHROME and BLACK & WHITE Processing 35MM

"SPACE ANGEL" "THE CHUCKLEHEADS"
"CLUTCH CARGO" "FRACTURED FLICKLERS"
"SCIENCE IN ACTION"

Filmservice Laboratories, Inc.
Call Gil Scott
6327 Santa Monica Blvd., HOllywood 4-5141



GENERAL ARTISTS CORPORATION

NEW YORK • BEVERLY HILLS • CHICAGO • LAS VEGAS • LONDON • ROME

MARTIN GOODMAN PRODUCTIONS, INC.

667 MADISON AVE., NEW YORK,

PLAZA 1-3555

Season's Greetings

HENRY COOKE

WMAQ — NBC — CHICAGO

Season's Greetings

Jim Conway

Chicago

DON McNEILL

PAUL L. FRUMKIN

PRODUCER, "KUP'S SHOW", WBKB-TV CHICAGO
Producer, Kup's "AT RANDOM," 1959-62 (WBBM-TV) Writer-Producer, "SUSAN'S SHOW," 1956-60 (WBBM-TV) and "SUSAN'S SHOW," 1957 (CBS Television Network) Writer-Producer, Mike Douglas' "HI LADIES," 1953-55 (WGN-TV)

WHLI
THE VOICE OF LONG ISLAND

ONE OF THE NATION'S MOST HONORED SUBURBAN RADIO STATIONS

REPRESENTED BY [illegible]

10,000 WATTS
WHLI AM 1100 FM 98.3
HEMPSTEAD LONG ISLAND N.Y.
the voice of long island

the JOEY BISHOP SHOW

1963-64

SATURDAYS, 8:30 P.M.

In COLOR on

NBC-TV

co-starring

ABBY DALTON

with

CORBETT MONICA

JOE BESSER
MARY TREEN
MATTHEW DAVID SMITH

Directed by James V. Kern

and special thanks to our guest stars . . .
Andrews Sisters, Jack Benny, Edgar Bergen and Charlie McCarthy, Milton Berle, Jack Carter,
Vic Damone, Leo Durocher, Phil Foster, Fisher & Marks,
Buddy Hackett, Don Knotts, Jack E. Leonard,
Bobby Rydell, Roberta Sherwood, Paula Stewart,
Danny Thomas, Andy Williams . . . and more to come!

Sponsored by P. Lorillard Co.

Sardi's East

123 East 54th Street

New York, N. Y.

for reservations call PLaza 1-6655

Happy 58th,

VARIETY

MAL BELLAIRS

WBBM—CBS, CHICAGO

Mal Bellairs Show

Sun. 12 - 5 P.M.

Music Wagon

9 - 10 A.M., M-F

Mal Bellairs Music

7:20 - 8 A.M.

Mal Bellairs Show

2 - 4:30 P.M., M-F

have a happy!

THIRTY ONE YEARS

of

KNOW HOW

and

KNOW WHO

PUBLICITY FOR PROGRAMS, PROJECTS AND PERSONALITIES

DAVID O. ALBER ASSOCIATES, INC.

44 East 53rd Street

New York 22, N. Y. TEmpleton 8-8300

Affiliates in Leading Cities

TEX ANTOINE

and UNCLE WETHBEE

Together in Weather for 14 Years

11:10 PM

WNBC-TV

Monday thru Friday

Brought to you by

CON-EDISON

★

An

OLOGY ENDEAVORS, Inc.

Production

JOSEPH GALLICCHIO

"ARTISTS' SHOWCASE"

Music Director,

Central Division

National Broadcasting

Company

Radio-Television

LEN O'CONNOR

NBC, CHICAGO

Greetings From

THE PAUL SALINER SHOW

WGN Chicago

Mon.-Fri., 9:30 p.m.

VINCE LLOYD

WGN, Inc.

Sports News

Congratulations

VARIETY

WALLY PHILLIPS

WGN CHICAGO

"HAVE TAPE — WILL TRAVEL"

Greetings From

SIG SAKOWICZ

WGN and WTAQ, Chicago

Who do the INDEPENDENTS choose to handle their INTERNATIONAL program sales?

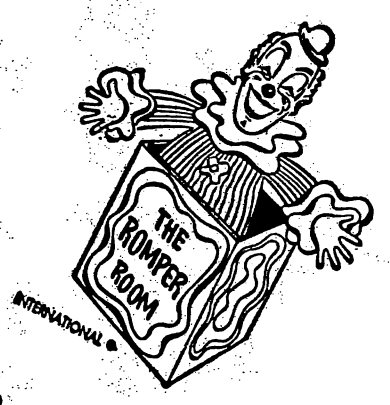
GROUP W
WESTINGHOUSE BROADCASTING COMPANY

OFFICIAL FILMS INC.

KTTV
LOS ANGELES



video varieties, inc.

Walter Reade-Sterling Inc

Franco London Film

ARTRANSA PARK STUDIOS

N T V
放送料金表
NIPPON TELEVISION CORPORATION

PACIFIC FILM PRODUCTIONS

WILLIAM BOYD ENTERPRISES

DUDLEY PICTURES CORPORATION

WPIX TV/11
THE ONE STATION NETWORK
NEW YORK

TV MARKETEERS, INC.

TRIANGLE PUBLICATIONS, INC.

These and over 30 INDEPENDENTS Have programs distributed by

FREMANTLE INTERNATIONAL, INC.

Fremantle International, Inc.
366 Madison Avenue
New York 17, New York

Talbot TV, Ltd.
30 Dean Street
London, W.1, England

Fremantle (Aust.) Pty., Ltd.
Caltex House
Sydney, NSW, Australia

Fremantle of Canada, Ltd.
17 Dundonald Street
Toronto 5, Ontario, Canada

1396 Ste. Catherine
Montreal, Quebec, Canada

Fremantle Italiana SRL
Palazzo Taverna
Via Monte Giordano 36
Rome, Italy

If you are an INDEPENDENT, with product available for the international market, you will be interested in discussing sales potential with the INDEPENDENT international TV distributor:

FREMANTLE INTERNATIONAL, INC.

TOOTS SHOR

HUNTING BIG GAME?

You'll find it in the Northwest . . . a big, rich ready market for your product.

This is the area which KSTP-TV serves and sells . . . $5 Billion in spendable income and 810,800 TV families. Let KSTP-TV start a sales stampede for you.

KSTP television 5 100,000 WATTS • NBC MINNEAPOLIS • ST. PAUL

KCMD Must Divulge Terms of AFTRA Pact

Washington.

The National Labor Relations Board ordered KCMO Broadcasting, Kansas City, Mo., to divulge terms of contracts signed by individual AFTRA members to the union's Kansas City local.

A three-member panel of the Board unanimously upheld a trial examiner's opinion that KCMO-AM-FM-TV should give the local complete details of contracts with three employees who had agreed not to perform on other stations in the Kansas City area.

Examiner Stanley Gilbert ruled the contracts with the AFTRA members were "legitimately involved in collective bargaining" and the union had a right to see them.

Voting for the order were NLRB Chairman Frank McCulloch and members Boyd Leedom and Gerald Brown.

Columbus — Gene O'Dell promoted to production manager at WTVN-TV, Taft Broadcasting outlet here. Other promotions announced by Joseph A. Jenkins, program director, include: Roger Johnson, commercial operations director; David Walters, continuity and Jerry Nixon, properties manager.

BBC-TV to Penetrate Distant Hebridean Islands

Oban, Scotland.

Lonely cottages and hamlets in distant Hebridean Islands will receive BBC-TV programs from London and Glasgow by August 1964.

The whole of the Western Isles will receive tv and VHF-sound-radio coverage by the second half of the year. Residents are cut off from normal entertainment, and have only mobile cinemas.

The Scot islands are a favorite ground for filmmakers. "Tight Little Island" was filmed by Ealing studios on Barra in 1946.

Theatrical Films For Television

Two Fast Moving Motion Pictures, one Englilsh, one American, available for fast outright sale. Principals only.

Contact Box #V-3548, VARIETY
154 West 46th Street, New York, N. Y. 10036

MEL ALLEN

COMMAND for perfect programming

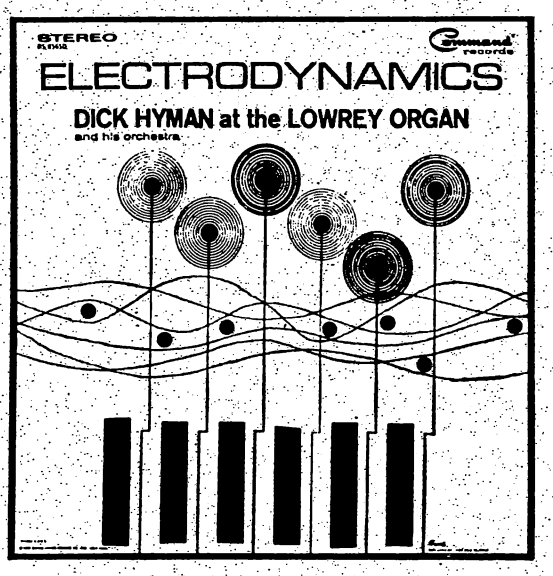
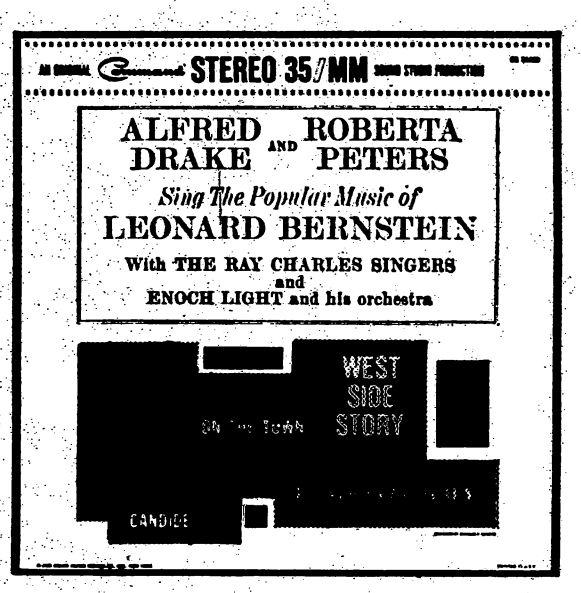
DICK VAN DYKE

Just released! A complete album of Dick Van Dyke singing his favorite songs.



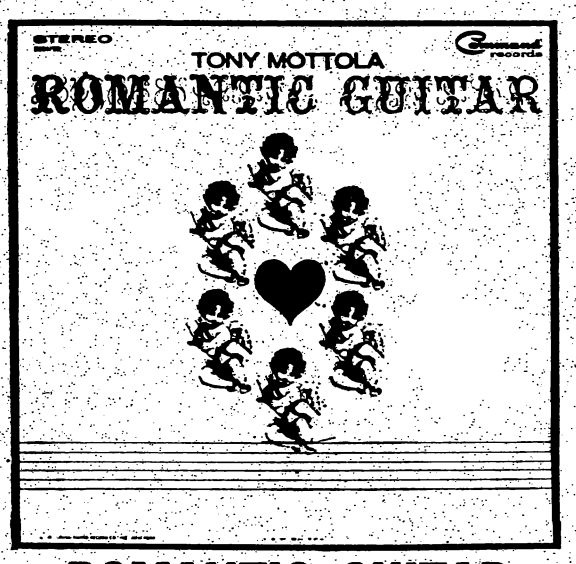
ELECTRODYNAMICS

"Unusually interesting . . . a riot of sounds."
— KANSAS CITY STAR



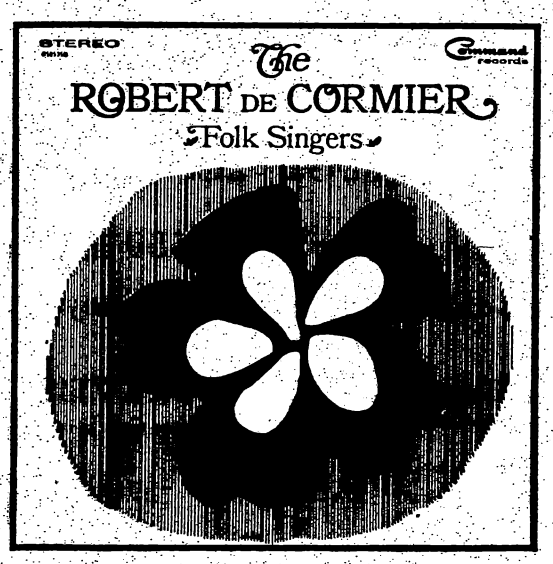
LEONARD BERNSTEIN

"Brilliant . . . magnificently sung . . . magnificently recorded."
— Radio Station WPAT



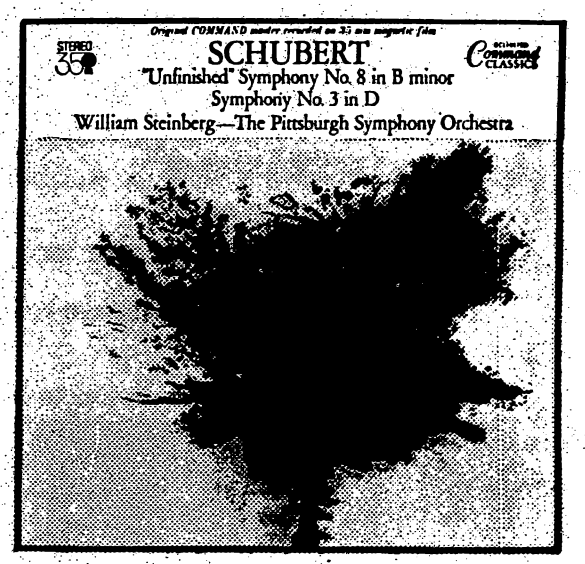
ROMANTIC GUITAR

"Comes off brilliantly . . . sings with wide warm electronic tones."
— AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE



THE ROBERT DE CORMIER FOLK SINGERS

"A superbly sung program of folk songs and spirituals with Command's matchless stereo sound."
— SCHOLASTIC MAGAZINE



SCHUBERT SYMPHONY NO. 3 & 8

"One of the best recently produced for sheer fidelity of sound . . . phenomenal."
— Stereo 1964 ed., HIGH FIDELITY

Special Offer For Radio Stations

Here's news of special interest to Program Directors. Leading manufacturers of playback equipment use Command records to demonstrate the full potential of their sets. What's more, COMMAND records are used for testing before the equipment leaves the factory. It's true. The Command technique of master recording originals on 35 mm magnetic film as well as on Command Tape now makes it possible to bring sound of unbelievable depth and clarity right into the listener's home. To bring magnificent sound of your listeners — program Command. And be sure to take advantage of the Special Offer to Program Directors at the bottom of this page.

AVAILABLE IN STEREO, MONAURAL, AND 4-TRACK TAPE

Command® RECORDS

WORLD LEADER IN RECORDED SOUND

ATTENTION:
RADIO PROGRAM DIRECTORS
MAIL FREE COUPON TODAY

GRAND AWARD RECORD CO., INC. DEPT V
1501 Broadway, New York 36, New York
Please send me complete information about SPECIAL OFFER on COMMAND AND GRAND AWARD, Mono and Stereo Records for Radio Stations.

NAME .....
RADIO STATION .....
ADDRESS .....
CITY .. ..ZONE ....STATE .....

Acquisitives*. . . live better in Cleveland

Cleveland homes top the next highest market by $2,500 in valuation.
WJW-TV is aimed at home owners—the acquisitive with money to spend.

*Ac-quis'-i-tive—given to desire, to buy and own.

LOS ANGELES KCBS	PHILADELPHIA WFIL	CLEVELAND WJW	MIAMI WGBS	TOLEDO WSPD	DETROIT WJBK	STORER BROADCASTING COMPANY
NEW YORK WHN	MILWAUKEE WITI-TV	CLEVELAND WJW-TV	ATLANTA WAGA-TV	TOLEDO WSPD-TV	DETROIT WJBK-TV

ACQUISITIVES WATCH
WJW-TV

'School of Week' Texas TV Feature

San Antonio.

Local teenagers have their sayso on KLRN-TV's weekly "Teen Show," presented every Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. The program alternates each week between San Antonio and Austin on the educational tv outlet.

Featured on the program is the "School of the Week," a segment produced, written and hosted by the local area. Each school is given a 10-minute segment of the program to do whatever students think will best represent their school to the surrounding community. The permanent hosts of the "School of the Week" segment are Sheri Garland and Jerry Frentress.

Another feature of the "Teen Show" is "Sez Who." A panel of four students from different schools speak their minds on current problems facing teenagers in the city today. The moderator for the panel of "Sez Who" is the Rev. Gene Jennings of St. Marks Episcopal Church.

"The Career Corner" features Marquita Salas, hostess of KLRN-TV and a panel of students from different local high schools who question adult guests about details of their careers and requirements for getting into the respective fields.

Outstanding local talent and teenage personalities are presented in special features and interviews. Penny McAllister and Doug Laughlin are the hosts who handle these interviews and presentations in addition to reporting news and items of interest from various schools.

100th Educ'l Grant

Washington.

FCC handed out educational television authorization No. 100, granting a construction permit to a Richmond, Va. outlet.

Recipient of the grant was Central Virginia Educational Television Corp. which will operate on channel 23 in Richmond.

Actually 105 permits have been granted for etv operations by FCC, but five had previously been surrendered.

PARK'S COLUMBUS SLOT

Columbus.

Warren S. Park Jr. has been appointed program director of WOSU-TV, Ohio State University's educational tv outlet, by Richard B. Hull, director of the OSU Telecommunications Center.

Park formerly was producer-director at WJAR-TV, Providence, R.I.; program director of WFNJ-TV, Youngstown, Ohio.; WMUR-TV, Manchester, N.H. and WGBH-TV, Boston.

Best Wishes

Judson Laire

Congratulations VARIETY

ABE RICE
ROBERT STRANG

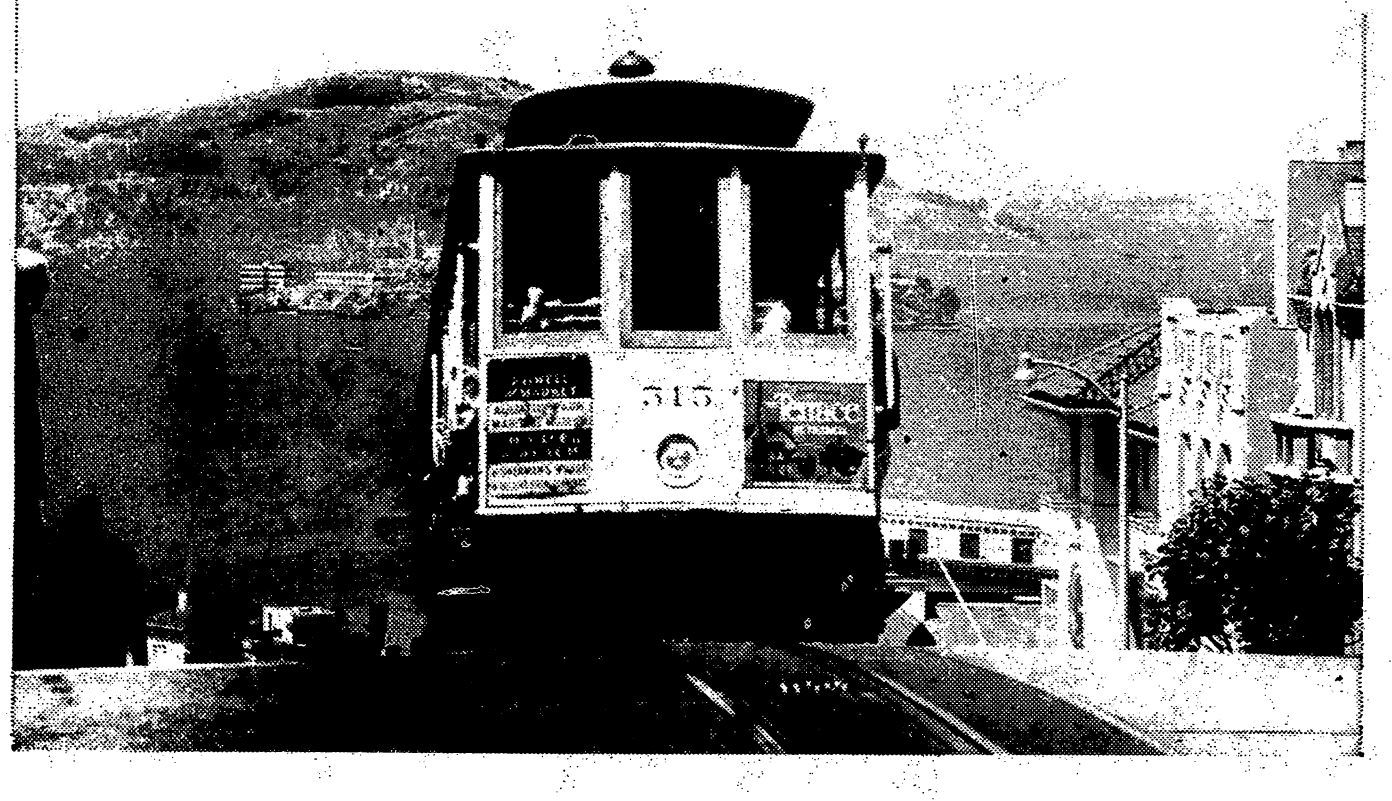
MARLON PARTELLEAU
BILL BUTLER

BOB BENEDETTI
BILL FRIEDKIN

ABC-TV—Chicago

FRANK COOPER ASSOCIATES Agency, Inc.

If you lived in San Francisco...



...you'd be sold on KRON-TV

Seek CATV Ban In Hartford Area

Hartford.

Public Utility Commission has under study a proposal to bar community antenna systems from simultaneously carrying programs that would compete with local stations. Atty. Robert Hardigan, representing Connecticut Television Inc. (operators of WHNB-TV, local NBC outlet) has asked the stage regulatory group to issue such a ban.

The attorney told the commission, at a meeting to consider CATV licensing recently, 'you recognize that there is a public interest in maintaining an existing station". It was claimed that small companies could be driven out of business if simultaneous broadcasts were not barred. And that WHNB would have to compete with NBC in New York in the event of CATV simulcasts.

Projecting his competition thesis, Atty. Hardigan said that if four CATV systems carried NBC programs from Channel 4 in New York, it could ruin Channel 30 (WHNB) by detracting from advertising revenues. This could result in the closing of local stations, with a loss of local news, local public service programming, and service to remote areas beyond the economical reach of CATV. Incidentally, WHNB-TV is one of 12 applicants for a PUC authorization in the state.

Hardigan proposal is one of several studies being undertaken by PUC after a recent hearing on CATV. Hearing presented PUC's proposed regulations for stringing transmissions to utility poles, a safety problem which the 1963 Legislature deeded to the commission.

At the hearing, companies seeking CATV licenses agreed that only one company should be licensed in each area, since it would be in-economical for CATV systems to compete. Despite prodding by the PUC chairman, no one could suggest how the PUC should decide which licensee to approve.

Hold 'TV Bingo' Lottery

Albuquerque.

"TV Bingo," daytime show telecast each weekday at noon on KOAT-TV here, is a lottery and must be halted, according to the decision of Albuquerque district attorney Al Sceresse.

Last week, the DA filed an injunction in district court here asking that the show—which started here about three months ago—be stopped. Hearings on the injunction will be held on Jan. 6.

DA took the action as the result of a law passed by the last state legislature defining lotteries and ruling against them. This action is the first court test of the law.

JAN SCOTT

ART DIRECTOR SCENIC DESIGNER

BOB LEWANDOWSKI

LE VAN ENTERPRISES, 203 N. WABASH AVE., CHICAGO, AN 3-6319

Polka - Go - Round - ABC - TV - Net
Press Internationale - WBKB - TV
Bob Lewandowski Radio Shows - WSBC - WTAQ
"Walk Through the Curtain" TV Special

Congratulations from

DON MEIER PRODUCTIONS, INC.

Producers of

MUTUAL OF OMAHA'S WILD KINGDOM, NBC-TV, Sundays, 5 P.M. (EST)

Starring Marlin Perkins and Jim Fowler

6th YEAR for the

GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY

the

Award Winning

"G. E. COLLEGE BOWL"

with

ROBERT EARLE

NBC-TV

Sundays

5:30 P.M., E.S.T.

●

2nd YEAR

IN ASSOCIATION WITH

GRANADA TV

"UNIVERSITY CHALLENGE"

England

Tuesdays, 7 P.M.

2nd YEAR

FOR THE

AMERICAN CYANAMID COMPANY

"ALUMNI FUN"

with

Clifton Fadiman

CBS-TV

Sundays, 5 P.M., E.S.T.

COLLEGE QUIZ BOWL COMPANY

730 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.

JOHN MOSES JOHN CLEARY DON REID

PUBLISHING—BROADCASTING

MB

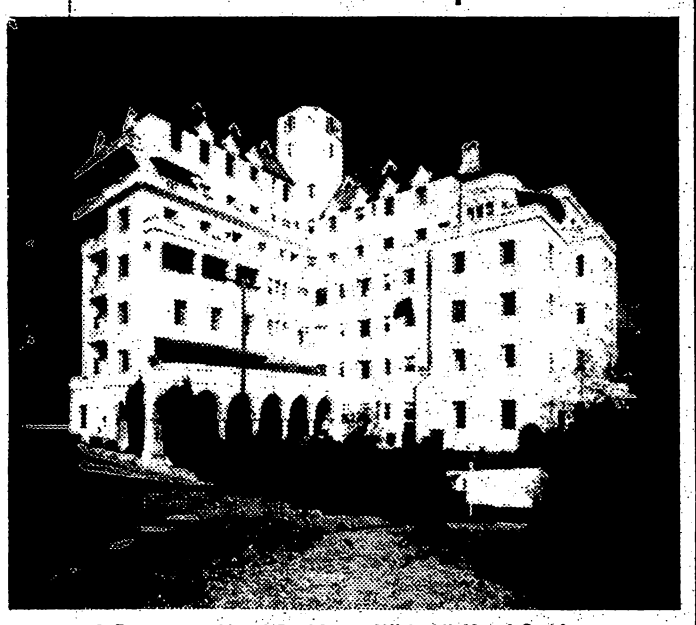
MACFADDEN-BARTELL CORPORATION

205 East 42nd Street, New York 17, N. Y.

MACFADDEN-BARTELL WOMEN'S GROUP
MACFADDEN-BARTELL MEN'S GROUP
MACFADDEN-BARTELL PAPERBACK BOOKS
TELECURACAO • TELEARUBA

WADO NEW YORK
WOKY MILWAUKEE
KCBQ SAN DIEGO

The Famous CHATEAU MARMONT
On The Sunset Strip



A Permanent Hotel Residence With All Hotel Services

Catering to the Motion Picture, Legit, Radio and TV Entertainment Professions

COMPLETELY AND BEAUTIFULLY REDECORATED
POOL • ELEGANT PENTHOUSE SUITES

8221 Sunset Blvd., Hollywood OL. 6-1010

THE KALMUS CORP.
PUBLIC RELATIONS

ALLAN H. KALMUS
445 Park Ave., New York 22, N. Y.
HA 1-1122

Lear Siegler Stake in Tollvision

Buys 9.3% of Subscription TV Shares—Manufacturing Toll Gear

Lear Siegler Inc., electronics firm of Santa Monica, Calif., which has total assets of $112,000,000, has invested $1,860,000 in Subscription Television Inc., West Coast (Pat Weaver) home toll tv system, and Lear Siegler has no qualms about the matter. This is stated, in effect by LSI chairman John G. Brooks and president Albert C. Handschumacher in a special letter to stockholders.

They say that LSI's participation in the subscription tv system has brough inquiries from stockholders and their representatives.

It's explained that Lear Siegler bough 9.3% of the Subscription Television stock, or 280,000 shares, and the $1,860,00 paid for this represents less than 1.7% of the LSI assets total.

There is a service subsidiary, called Lear Siegler Service Inc., which has contracts from the pay-tv outfit which cover installation and maintenance services on a cost-plus service fee of 8% after taxes. The parent Lear Siegler corporation has fixed-price contracts with the tv enterprise totaling nearly $8,000,000 for engineering and production of certain equipment.

Lear Siegler points to the identity of its parters in the Subscription Television operation, including Reuben H. Donnelly Corp., the Los Angeles Dodgers and San Francisco Giants baseball clubs and the investment banking firm of William R. Statts & Co.

It was last October that Subscription Television made a public offering of stock and received nearly $20,000,000 in funds. It was from this position that Subscription Television was able to award contracts of the aforementioned $8,000,000 to Lear Siegler.

Broadcast Material To Win a Place in The JFK Memorial Library

Washington.

NAB prexy Le Roy Collins asked broadcasters to donate film clips and tapes of the late President Kennedy to the John F. Kennedy Memorial Library at Harvard.

Collins said NAB agreed to a request of White House press secretary Pierre Salinger that broadcast material be included in the library.

Collins said the Kennedy library will be unique in reflecting not only state papers and other written material but also the late President's "long and continuing recognition of the effectiveness of radio and television communications and his frequent use of the media."

Specifically, NAB requested audio and visual tapes and silent and sound-on-film appearances by Kennedy in his pre-Presidential and White House years.

Scripts of speeches, panel shows, interviews and other radio and tv programs involving the late President were also requested.

Collins said NAB hopes to have the material collected within 60 days to be submitted to the planned $6,000,000 library for the late President.

NAB'S PEAK MEMBERSHIP

Washington.

NAB disclosed its AM radio membership has reached an all-time high of 2,005 stations.

NAB v.p. for station services William Carlisle said the new total represents a 7.5% increase over last year's mark.

PILOT FILMS WANTED

Will pay good price for half-hour situation comedy, comedy mystery, light drama, or similar pilot films for non-broadcast use.

Write Box V-3546, Variety
154 W. 46th St., N. Y. 10036

Absinthe House
130 West 48th St., N.Y.C.

Greetings to VARIETY
ALAN M. FISHBURN PRODUCTIONS
333 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago 1, Illinois

DONALD "RED" BLANCHARD
Barn Dance WGN Television - Radio Chicago

BUD CHASE
PRODUCER
Writer, Producer, Narrator "The Glass House"
Producer, On-Camera Host "Edgar Wallace Mysteries" Weekly
Currently in Production of Special Projects WBKB - ABC - TV - Chicago

ASHLEY-STEINER-FAMOUS ARTISTS, INC.

AGENCY • ARTISTS' MANAGER

LOS ANGELES
9255 Sunset Blvd.

NEW YORK
555 Madison Ave.

Exclusive International Associates

THE GRADE ORGANIZATION
235-241 REGENT STREET
LONDON, ENGLAND

LONDON ARTISTS LTD.
25 GILBERT STREET
LONDON, ENGLAND

LONDON MANAGEMENT
8 UPPER BROOK STREET
LONDON, ENGLAND

OLGA HORSTIG-PRIMUZ
78 CHAMPS ELYSEES
PARIS, FRANCE

ALAIN BERNHEIM
16 AVENUE HOCHE
PARIS, FRANCE

KAUFMAN-LERNER ASSOCIATES
VIA LISBONA 12
ROME, ITALY

Peter Birch

Director - Choreographer

CBS—TELEVISION NETWORK

"Captain Kangaroo"

You Put The Words In My Mouth...

VOICES

JUNE FORAY

Records — Cartoons — Commercials — Dubbing

"THE BULLWINKLE SHOW"
"FRACTURED FLICKERS"
"BEETLE BAILEY"
"THE ALVIN SHOW"

Representation: CHARLES STERN AGENCY

Saar Radio Faces Germany Eviction

Saarbruecken.

Saarland Radio, which has kicked off a tremendous feud in West Germany by announcing that it is stepping up its power and increasing its commercial time next month, may be kicked out of the important German Radio and Television Working Group.

The ARD (which stands for Arbeitsgemeinschaft der deutschen Rundfunkanstalten — Working Association of the German Radio Outlets) is considering ousting the Saar from its organization.

Saar Radio, which is currently the second smallest of the chain of nine in West Germany, has had very low income from its small percent of listeners and from its limited commercial time.

Hence, to increase its finances the Saar officials decided that the station would become "Voice of Europe" in January 1964, doubling its power from 150 kilowatts to 300 kilowatts for the time period following 12 noon, and increasing its commercial time as well.

The station has announced plans for programs that consist of 10% ads, 10% information, and 80% music, but would allow potential clients to block whole segments of time and originate or control the programs, completely different from the current German system in which the advertisers can buy spots only.

Now the ARD has announced that the Saar plans are a four-fold violation of the ARD rules which stipulate—1. Advertising must be separated from the rest of the program; 2. Advertising may have no influence on the program; 3. No spots after 10 p.m. or on Sundays or holidays; 4. Length of commercials must be in a strictly regulated formula in proportion to the rest of the show.

The Saar is continuing with its plans, and waiting for another meeting of the general membership of the ARD on January, which it hopes will be more receptive to its plans.

The Saar Radio, which has had to be subsidized with more than a million dollars a year from the German radio collection fees made by the German post, will be self-sustaining with its new system. It expects to raise about $3,000,000 a year under its new increased commercial scheme.

Houston—May Ryals has joined the staff of KHUL-FM as a femme disk jockey and will be heard from 6 p.m. till midnight on Sundays. The outlet has another femme record spinner, Kasey Cunningham who is heard nightly.

WFMT

CHICAGO'S FINE ARTS STATION

BEGINNING ITS 13TH YEAR

AND

CHICAGO PERSPECTIVE

CHICAGO'S FINE ARTS MAGAZINE

CONGRATULATE

VARIETY

BEGINNING ITS 59TH YEAR

Season's Best

JACK BRICKHOUSE

CHICAGO

PATTY CLARK

Singer: TV - Radio - Nightclubs

COMMERCIAL SPOKESWOMAN

Associated Booking Corp., Chicago

DOLPH HEWITT

Soloist

"Barn Dance" WGN Television — Radio Chicago

Grey Lockwood

BEST WISHES VARIETY FROM SESAC

SESAC is the second oldest music rights organization in the United States, representing the performance, recording and film synchronization rights to thousands upon thousands of compositions in every category of music.

SESAC music is licensed for performance to about 98% of the broadcasting industry, to hundreds of hotels throughout the country, to night clubs, concert halls, sports stadia, auditoriums, theatres and other establishments where copyrighted music is performed in public for profit.

SESAC compositions have been recorded on practically every big and small record label with performances by leading artists in every field of music.

SESAC produces the leading library of recorded music custom-tailored for the broadcasting industry—SESAC® RECORDINGS—containing over 3,000 selections, many of which are available for commercial phonograph record reproduction for sale to the general public.

SESAC represents a growing source of musical works for sub-publishers abroad and leading international recording artists.

SESAC is constantly expanding its repertory of distinction, and is actively seeking new publishers and catalogs to serve better the needs of all music users.

SESAC INC.

10 COLUMBUS CIRCLE
NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10019
PHONE: 212-JU 6-3450

H'wood Flirts With, Never Weds Israel: New Nation's Film Studios Still Trying

By AZARIA RAPOPORT

Tel Aviv.

As of the end of 1963, as in previous years, the Israel Motion Picture Industry is still looking for the Magic Formula: How to Succeed in Art and Business, even if it means trying

Unlike Oranges, Tourists and polished Diamonds, Israel's feature films haven't made it yet, as money-makers abroad, or as artistic achievements anywhere. Each year the two medium-sized, amply-equipped local studios "promise" to produce the film that would at last represent prestige, or earn foreign currency for Israel. Our producers and foreign producers travel, make plans, announce intentions and sign contracts, for the international coproduction. It's always optimistic.

No Israeli masterpiece is yet visible. But at least three of the five features produced and shown locally this past year have recouped their negative costs and made some money for their picture. So perhaps that really supports optimism.

As anticipated (see VARIETY Annual Edition, 1963), five Israeli features have been released, out of six scheduled for completion. One of them, "Hamartef" (The Cellar), the story of a young German Jew and his psychic rehabilitation, even got a special citation 'Recommended for showing to Youth and Schools" at the Berlin International Film Festival, 1963. Curiously, it didn't fare so well in Israel, for its heavy style of direction and its gimmickery (having the star, Shimon Israeli, play all parts in different and thick make-up), didn't strike here the response it evoked in Berlin, where anything Israeli proves to be received warmly, for fear of certain accusations.

"Eldorado" (a 'B' picture), did very well at the boxoffice, on the strength of it's smooth and unpretentious running and common story of converted convict, golden-hearted whore and a 'Dolce Vita' Tel Aviv High Society party-turned-orgy into the bargain. Yet it also enjoyed favorable reviews for Jaffa backgrounds, as well as for decent performances by stars Gila Almagor and Haim Topol.

"Rak Be'lira" (One Pound Only), a muddled comic affair, starring Gideon Singer and Yascov Ben Sira, failed critically, but reimbursed its producers at the boxoffice due to the farcical qualities of its stars and their personal popularity. "Af Mila Le'Morgenistein" (Not a Word to Morgenstein), a musical comedy based on the Ephraim Kishon stage-comedy, failed completely through the cooperation of three directors and a score of scripters. In the process, even good performances by Gila Almagor and Axraham Ben Yosef, as well as the music by Moshe Vilensky, failed to impress the audience.

The recently released "Eshet Ba'Gibor" (The Hero's Wife), the Peter Frye feature starring Batya Lancet (who also wrote the script), merited only meager boxoffice returns and bad reviews, stressing the pretentious story and unfulfilled promises by two of Israel's most striking theatre personalities.

Pace Increases

Yet, for all the shortcomings, 1963 had been the first year to have an Israeli feature released roughly once in two months. Added to the regular flow of documentaries, some of which have shown real distinction, imagination and technical ingenuity, it started looking like a regular industry. With some of the documentaries receiving prizes, special mention and wide distribution in festivals abroad and on foreign networks, an Israeli film stopped being regarded as amateurish a priority.

Israel has an audience that is most film-minded. Cinemas sell close to 50,000,000 tickets per year (to a population, sans television), yet numbering only a little more than 2,000,000). The government had set up a special office, for the encouragement of local films and coproductions. It has always been hoped that Americans or Britons of Jewish family origin would help. Mostly it's just been talk.

In production, some in advanced shooting, others in preparatory stage, there are now eight pictures, only two involving foreign participants or assistance. "Salach Shabati," a comedy about newcomers from oriental countries learning the ways and customs of the Western civilization that is modern Israel, is produced, written and directed by Ephraim Kishon, who stage-comedy "The Licence," is scheduled for a spring opening on Broadway, adapted by Jerome Weidman. It is being processed at the IMPS (The Merzlia studios) and has as director of photography Floyd Crosby ("High Noon") and Wally Millner as sound engineer, assisted by some of the country's best cameramen and soundmen. Haim Topol stars, as Salach Shabati, with a supporting cast including Gila Almagor and other prominent theatre actors.

"Mishpachat Simhon" (The Simchon Family), is based on a radio serial, a family-comedy depicting scenes from everyday's life and reacting to local problems in or combination of a situation-comedy and a comedy-of-manners. It is directed by Yoel Silberg and stars Meir Margalit (of Shweik fame on the stage). The script has been written by the author of the series, Moshe Ben Ephraim.

The international appeal, somewhat questionable in the above mentioned case, had been kept in mind by the producers of "Havou Banot La'Eilat" (Let's Have Girls for Eilat). While the previous features might have some appeal for Jewish audiences abroad, the scenery and tourist-appealing qualities of Israel's Red Sea port, Eilat, are hoped to attract attention from the general viewers abroad. The comedy is based on a plot as simple as it sounds. This pioneers' country lacks females and tries to hold the interest of cute female-tourists, even at the cost of matching one of them to the long-standing Bachelor-at-arms. Participating in this production, directed by Nathan Akselrod, one of Israel's film-pioneers and Leo Filler, are members of the Habimah Theatre, shortly to appear on Broadway, during its American tour.

The Content

Israel Weisler, better known as Pouchou, has authored at the time the "Havourah Shekazot" (Such a Gang), a delicate, sensitive local feature about the days of the underground groups fighting British restrictions in Mandatory Palestine. Pouchou has now written and directed, together with coproducer Amazya Hiouni, another comedy, telling the story of a gang of kids, who keep for a "pet" . . . an elderly lonely old man, "Oulay Teriu Sham" (Won't you come down?) is also processed, like the two previous features, at IMPS.

The Geva Studios are preparing three productions. One is "Daliah Ve'Hamaliceim" (Daliah and the Sailors), a comedy about seamen, written by Yosh and Manya Halevi, to be directed by Menahem Golan (who directed Eldorado) and starring Daliah Lavi (unless other commitments prevail). Ivan Lengeyel (director of some sensitivity and grace, who did "Sinya" last year) is directing for Geva the film version of "New Face in the Mirror," based on the best-seller by Yael Dayan, Genral Dayan's daughter. The story of a girl joining the Israeli Army, has scored some interest at the time, in the U.S. and other countries and the feature will be shot simultaneously in Hebrew and English versions, with Dina Doron ("Sinaya") in the lead and one foreign actor, whose name couldn't be disclosed as yet.

Another project on the Geva agenda is the Kishon comedy "The Canal," pending completion of "Shalach Shabati."

Margot Klauzner, head of the IMPS, is preparing to produce her own story "Mrs. Sabina & Her Boarders" (a drama). Slated to direct this feature is Czechoslovak, director of good standing Franticek Cap (winner of some awards, director of "Men Without Wings," "Decision by the River" etc). Franz Lederer, the European actor, is scheduled to play the main boarder. Mrs. Klauzner is also preparing to shoot a documentary about "Russian Jewry," for which she applied to the Soviet Ministry of Culture and Cinera, and had been verbally promised access to files and archives. Also in preproduction stages is a feature about Jewish-Arab relations in Israel.

Jew-Arab Romance

Another feature of this nature is to be produced and directed by Peter Frye, telling the story of a Jewish boy and an Arab girl (both of them 14), who suffer through backward ideas and traditions outdated, like the one demanding murder of the girl, just because she had been seen walking hand in hand with a boy.

Foreign interest is promised for

(Continued on page 190)

A Franco-Israeli Film

Tel Aviv.

Franco-Israeli coproduction of "Never on Saturday" is now scheduled for spring 1964. Semi & Joe Siritzky, of Athos Film in Paris, have pacted director Alex Joffe and scripter Jean Ferry to do a feature based on an idea by Israeli producer Jack Steiner and story by Shabtay Tevet.

Robert Hirsch (of the Academie Francaise) is expected to star and photography would be entrusted to Walter Votiz.

Upper Class Fun In India: Unreel Films at Home

By N. V. ESWAR

Bombay.

Gaining momentum here, and an important side-issue for film distributors are the rising number of private shows held with 16m versions of films. On a very conservative estimate, the 16m versions of Indian films alone net a little over two million rupees a year to the distributors.

It has become a habit of some in the upper strata of Indian Society to unreel a 16m film at home every week-end in the company of friends and relations. Also a 16m show has become a common item after a business lunch.

That there is verdant business in 16m is evidenced by the fact that while 16m rights were available on a perpetual basis for whole territories on royalties ranging from Rs. 2000/—to Rs. 5000/—, the Royalties asked today, aside from print costs, are as much as Rs. 30,000 to Rs. 50,000/— for the above average films and Rs. 7.500 to Rs. 10,000/— for the so-so films.

The numerical drop in the production of Indian films gave considerable fillip to business on foreign films. But full advantage was not taken by the foreign film distributors. A number of imports were literally allowed to rot on the wharves without earning a cent.

OPERAS TUMBLE FORTH

Menotti's Got One on Trampoline, One in Air

With one new opera, "The Last Savage" launched some months ago in Paris and due for presentation Jan. 23 at the Met Opera in Manhattan, composer Gian-Carlo Menotti is completing another opera, "Martin's Lie." This was commissioned by Americans among the Friends of Canterbury Cathedral in Britain.

Composer is always his own librettist. In this instance the story concerns a lad facing a tragic choice between truth and love in the 14th Century. Setting is a monastary-orphanage. "Martin's Lie" is due for mounting during the 1964 Bath Festival either at the Abbey there or Wells Cathedral.

Meantime Menotti's cantata, "The Death of The Bishop" commissioned and premiered at the last May Festival in Cincinnati will be heard in the eastern U.S. this summer at Tanglewood with Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

SOUTH AFRICA: GOOD SHOW COUNTRY, BUT CENSORSHIP CLOUDS GATHER

By EVELYN LEVISON

Johannesburg.

Dominant value in South Africa's theatre during 1963 was musical. It opened and closed to Rodgers and Hammerstein, Kern and Hammerstein, Lerner and Loewe. Against this was discord over the banning of "Who's Afraid Of Virginia Woolf?" by the recently-appointed Censorship Control Board. Add disappointment expressed by a few managements about the response accorded some of their offerings (John Fernald's production of "The Cherry Orchard" was one; "The Tiger and the Typists" directed by Taubie Kushlick another) and the total impression of 1963 comes clear.

Way ahead in b.o. returns was "My Fair Lady," which clicked one year on Nov. 2 in Cape Town, last call in a record-breaking run. "Sound of Music" at the Brooke Theatre, Johannesburg, rose above indifferent reviews. "The King and I," directed by Des Morley, and the lively Burke-Brickhill revival of "Oklahoma," now doing good business in Johannesburg, both made debuts in Durban, and also made theatre history for that city by being the first of its locally staged shows to tour to other centers.

"Show Boat," presented by the Johannesburg Operatic and Dramatic Society and stunningly staged by Anthony Farmer with a mixed black and white cast headed by Maori bass Inia Te Wiata, was a wow. Operatic commitments that made it necessary for Te Wiata to be in London mid-November limited the season, but the show played to capacity during its run at the 1,000-seater Civic Theatre, and fully justified the Society's decision to risk presenting such a costly production for a brief period. So insistent was the demand for seats by closing date, that plans have now been made for a "Show Boat" revival in February, when the same lead will return to the Republic to resume his role before embarking on a six-month tour of his home country, New Zealand.

On a much less ambitious scale, Leon Gluckman's "Minim Bili" ("Bili" being Zulu word for "Two") successor to last year's homegrown moneyspinner "Wait a Minim," proved a profitable investment both at Johannesburg's Intimate Theatre, where it opened, and on an extensive tour of the Republic. Enthusiastic audience reaction to his unpretentious but pungent satirical revues has encouraged Gluckman to combine the best items in both shows into a streamlined entertainment which he will present in association with the Decca Record Co. and their South African representatives Gallo (Africa) Ltd., in London's West End this year.

Among the youthful cast of South Africans who appeared in both productions here, and who devised all the material for both revues on a cooperative basis, are Paul and Andrew Tracey, folk-singing brothers with a profound practical knowledge of African tribal instruments culled from their father Hugh Tracey, founder of the International Library of African Music, and a world authority on the subject, singer Michel Martel, comedy dancers Kendrew Lascelles and Zelide Jeppe, and ex-schoolmaster Jeremy Taylor, whose zany cod on the peculiarities of South African English "Ag, Please, Daddy" was the highlight of "Wait a Minim," and a sensational seller on disk.

Love Those Greeks

Outstanding dramatic fare, and a memorable experience for legit lovers here was visit to Johannesburg's Civic Theatre of the Athens Drama Co., sponsored by Leon Gluckman, venturing some of his "Minim" loot. Two contrasts in Greek classical theatre were presented, (1) "Iphigenia In Aulis" of Euripides with Costas Kazakos (Agamemnon), Aleka Katseli (Clytemnestra) and Marie Moscholiou (Iphigenia), and (2) "Lysistrata" of Aristophanes.

From abroad also came the Theatre D'Union Culturelle, whose annual visit to the Republic brought plays by Moliere, Anouilh and Andre Roussin.

Visiting personalities from Britain and the States included three husband-and-wife theatre teams . . . Sir Donald Wolfit and Rosalind Iden, who came here for Colin Fish and Leon Gluckman in "The Master Builder," John Fernald, head of London's Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, and his wife Jenny Laird, who respectively directed and played leading role in Chekhov's "The Cherry Orchard" for the Performing Arts Council of the Transvaal; and Jerry Kilty and Cavada Humphrey, who with Fred Sadoff and British actress Karel Gardner gathered glowing notices from press in Port Elizabeth, Durban and Johannesburg for their "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?", before the play came to an abrupt, lamented and much disputed end in October.

Comedy highlight of the year, from a profit point of view, was undoubtedly the French farce "Pajama Tops." With his own theatre still pulling in the crowds for his long-running production of "Oliver," actor-manager Brian Brooke first staged the farce at the Playhouse in Johanesburg, transferred it to the Brooke when "Oliver" finally went on the road, and then joined the cast in place of an actor unable to travel, and took the show on a successful countrywide tour.

Yiddish Comedy

Strong reception of Neil Simon's U.S. comedy "Come Blow Your Horn" at the end of last year, encouraged Roy Cooke, who manages affairs at Johannesburg's Alexander Theatre, to repeat the recipe with Leonard Spiegelgass' "Dear Me, The Sky Is Falling," which opened in November directed by Ricky Arden. Large Jewish population ensured a healthy sendoff, though some critics labelled "Momma Libby" as being too hackneyed a character.

Two double bills presented by Taubie Kushlick evoked widely differing response from Intimate Theatre audiences. "The Private Ear and The Public Eye," with British actress Thelma Holt imported to play femme lead in both, was acclaimed by press and public, the earlier mentioned "Tiger and The Typists" was, with few exceptions, rejected with equal unanimity by both.

A new husband-and-wife management—Margaret and Robert Langford—who went into business at the end of last year, presented two well-directed productions . . . "Woman In a Dressing Gown" by British playwright Ted Willis, and Friedrich Durrenmatt's grimly humorous "The Physicists." In both Miss Inglis, rated South Africa's No. 1 actress, and Langford played key roles.

At Johannesburg's first Theatrical Garden Party, held in October to raise money for the Actors' Benevolent Fund, Miss Inglis presented a trophy in the name of her late husband Stewart Leith to the actor elected by popular vote as "best" of the year. Award went to Siegfried Mynhardt, oldtimer on the South African stage, and equally at home in English or Afrikaans. This for his performance as the Senior Fellow in P.A.C.T.'s production of "The Affair," this management's greatest success of the year.

Transvaal Subsidy

P.A.C.T. (The Performing Arts Council of the Transvaal, replacing the now defunct National Theatre Organization) staged seasons of opera, ballet, music and drama at Johannesburg's Civic Theatre in 1963, and proved that this $850,000 playhouse, about which there was some dispute when it was opened August, 1962, is playing an important part in the city's cultural life. P.A.C.T. productions this year ranged from presentations of "Tosca" and "The Marriage of Figaro," directed by Josef Witt from the Vienna State Opera, and performances of "Giselle," "Coppelia" and "Swan Lake" with French ballerina Yvette Chauvire, and Royal Covent Garden dancers Maryon Lane, David Blair and Beryl Grey leading the recently formed Transvaal Ballet, to J. M. Synge's "Playboy of the Western World," an Afrikaans translation of Ionesco's "Rhinosceros," and a Christmas production of the Gian-Carlo Menotti opera "Amahl and the Night Visitors,"

(Continued on page 190)

ANZAC LEGIT MUST IMPORT ACTORS

Australian Pay Scale Tops London's, But Not New York's—Yanks Have To Learn That Purchasing Power Relates To Wholly Different Type of Economy—Transportation Biggest Financial Risk—New Zealanders Can't Be Prodded To Buy Tickets First Week

John McCallum, as joint managing director of J.C. Williamson Theatres Ltd., the largest theatrical management in the Southern Hemisphere, and former star of British films, West End and Australian stage, is probably the most qualified key Aussie legit figure to express opinions on the difficulties facing an Australian theatre management to-day, and the reasons why there is a steady flow of talent from Down Under to overseas. Below, transcribed from an exclusive tape-recorded interview, he speaks to VARIETY*'s Melbourne correspondent, Raymond Stanley.*

Melbourne.

Question: What are some of the problems, non-existent in America or Britain, an Australian theatre management has to face today?

Answer: There are many. We are dependent upon supply of properties and stars. We haven't the local product, except very rarely. What is successful in London and New York isn't necessarily successful in Australia. Sometimes the local scene is even more difficult still because what is successful in Sydney is not necessarily successful in Melbourne, and vice versa. If a play or musical doesn't take we haven't another on the road waiting to come in, as happens in London and New York. Seasons have to be set a long time ahead. In consequence, not only because of this but because imported leading players naturally insist on a guaranteed playing time, if a show is a flop we can't take it off, we're stuck with it, and have to take losses on the chin several weeks and sometimes months, as happened with "Carnival."

Q: Can you give reasons why it's costlier to stage a show in Australia than America or Britain?

It's Way Out Yonder

A: To start with there's the expense of bringing out the stars, and sometimes the directors too. Some have to come first class and, by the time we pay expenses for rehearsals, it's $2,000 per person before the opening night. Costs are higher all round than in England. The standard of living is higher, also the basic wage; labour, materials etc., cost considerably more. But the big thing is the cost of transport because of distances. It's 500 miles at least between each move and cost of transport is very high. Few people realize that to go to Perth from Melbourne is further than to go to New Zealand. It's like going from London to Cairo. The costs of taking a show to Perth now are just about prohibitive unless it's a cast-iron attraction. Shipping to New Zealand also is very difficult. A margin of three weeks has to be allowed for safe shipping time because freighters alter their dates and we have to be sure of opening on a set day. Cost of flying is about $150 per person, even with the discount we get, so it's a big item to send a large company there. Orchestras are another problem because it is difficult to obtain good players in the first place. We try to pick up as many as we can to save the very high $44.10 living away allowance. (The actor, incidentally, gets $14.60 living away allowance). It's becoming increasingly difficult to build up an advance at the boxoffice. This is a very big worry. Even with the attraction of well known and big names we have what we call "the hang-back." There's an apathy about going to the theatre in the beginning—"oh well, there's time." This is a typical Australian attitude. It's a very hard one to get over, with all the publicity in the world, and particularly in New Zealand. We find that where in New Zealand a play has a stay for 2½ or 3 weeks the first week is very bad, whoever the star is. And then they realize what a good attraction it is, but it is too late. It is difficult to make up in the last two weeks what you've lost in the beginning.

Q: Would it help if seats were sold at reduced prices at first?

A: It wouldn't help. It isn't price resistance. We find that there aren't any complaints about the price—in fact the cheap seats are the hard ones to sell, and our top price for a musical is only $3.30 and for a straight play $2.50. With "How to Succeed," the circle and stalls are full but the upper circle isn't. Everybody here wants first class now and wants to be in the stalls or circle and preferably in the first four rows. It is a question of social status. Lowering the price of seats is not the answer.

Role of Video

Q: Has competition from tv reached its peak now?

A: I think it has in Melbourne and Sydney—its been here now since 1956 and people are used to it, they have become discriminating in their choice of programmes. I don't think that it has yet in South Australia, Queensland and Western Australia. It has only been there for a short time — these states are going to have another station soon—and people are still paying off their sets. Therefore they want value from them and are staying at home. We're finding that audiences for a straight play in Brisbane, for instance, have been cut by half since television came in.

Q: Do critics' comments have as much effect on the boxoffice as overseas?

A: No they don't — nothing like New York and London. But they're getting more important and now they can keep people away from a play, although they can't send people in. "The Miracle Worker" for instance got rave notices, but these didn't send the public in. If we do get rave notices it takes several days or even weeks before the boxoffice starts really ticking. It is either hit or miss in this country now. They all want to see "My Fair Lady," they all want to see "How to Succeed." Anything short of the very best they don't want to see. Whereas some years ago—before television certainly—a moderately good play could achieve a moderately good success, it can't now. it's either good or it's very bad at the boxoffice — there's nothing much in between. And we are compelled to spend more and more money on productions. "Camelot" will cost $225,000—by far the most money spent on any show in Australia.

Q: Shows seem to go better in Melbourne than Sydney—can you give any reason for this?

Gambling Hurts B.O.

A: In Sydney there is legalized gambling with one-armed bandits —poker machines. They're making a very serious inroad into theatre audiences, not only our's but other managements' and also cinema audiences. I understand that over $260¼ million went through these machines last year in New South Wales. The Government collected $26¼ million in taxes, so the Government likes them. But naturally this money—a lot of it at any rate—would have gone into other forms of entertainment, and of course we're suffering very severely. It has reached a critical stage in Sydney for all theatres and cinemas.

Q: Is it more remunerative to present for a short season the one-man or one-woman show — like Marcel Marceau, Joyce Grenfell, Victor Borge and John Gielgud?

A: No it isn't, unfortunately, because there is the problem of fitting in with other attractions. To give dates a long way ahead for a season of two or three weeks' duration in a theatre might interrupt the run of a very successful play. With these short seasons these individual artists are naturally very highly paid and they're not as remunerative as a straight play doing well over a long season.

Q: "My Fair Lady," "How to Succeed" and other musicals were strict copies of the overseas productions—is this sometimes a handicap?

A: Sometimes yes, sometimes no. With "My Fair Lady" there was no point in changing. It was such a brilliant production by Moss Hart that it would have been very wrong and presumptious on our part to change it. Sometimes we do our own productions and we would rather do this because it is creative work, and employs Australians on design and decor and is much more interesting altogther. We have the workshops and wardrobe to make everything. It depends entirely on the vehicle and how it should be done. With "Camelot" we are doing our own production and we feel that there is scope in this case to do this. In the case of "Bye Bye Birdie," it would have been wrong for us to have tried to do anything different.

Q: In the past five years Williamsons have staged only three Australian-written shows—Ray Lawler's "The Piccadilly Bushman," the musical "The Sentimental Bloke" and the comedy "Who'll Come A'Waltzing." Does this indicate there's generaly a lack of Australian playwriting talent, or that the home-written product spells death at the boxoffice for the large commercial management?

A: There's a good deal in both those suggestions, principally the first. There is a lack of Australian playwriting talent, there's no getting away from that. We've had one or two plays which have been successful. "Summer of the 17th Doll" was a milestone, and we have, I think, a very promising playwright in Patrick White, the novelist. He has to really arrive yet but his last play is a most interesting one, called "Night on Bald Mountain." And there are one or two others—like the ones you mentioned. "Piccadilly Bushman" I do think was a good play and well worth while staging. It just broke even for us.

Q: Is that a case where if you'd brought back somebody like Peter Finch it would have given it that extra boost?

A: Oh, undoubtedly. Peter Finch would be success here whatever he was in. But he won't come, not yet anyway. It's not as easy at that . . . But here was a case of an Australian play which we could cast with Australians—we always try to do this, by the way. It neither lost nor made money; we thought it was very well worth doing. But "The Sentimental Bloke" was a success. "Who'll Come A'Waltzing" was a financial failure—it lost over $13,500. We are a commercial management, not a subsidized one, so it's no good for us to put on Australian plays just because they are Australian. They must merit a professional production obviously and must pull at the boxoffice. It's a pity about "Waltzing" because it didn't deserve that loss at all, but was just another case of Australians not wanting their own I'm afraid. There is still quite a lot of that.

Salary Difference

Q: Are Australians who fill leading roles paid as highly as overseas people coming Down Under?

A: Not as much as people coming out here. Because those people are generally accepted stars in their own country and won't come except for considerably more than they can get at home. Even if for casting reasons we do have to import somebody who is not a star they are not going to leave England or America where they have commitments as often as not and have to keep up flats or a house, and come here for the same money as if they were living here. If anybody comes here for a year it's a pretty big commitment in their lives, so naturally they won't come except for good money. We do pay overseas people more, but at the same time local actors are well paid. They are better paid than in London. We pay considerably more for musical leads and supporting players than they do in London. And our chorus men are paid $44.10 minimum and girls $40.73 minimum, considerably higher than in England.

Q: What about America?

A: Oh no— the economy's entirely different there and that is one of our problems. Because of our different economy and different prices of admission, the offers that we can make to American artists seem small to them. But in terms of what money buys here . . . when they get here they realize it's quite different. Of course we can't offer them the money that they get over there. In the case of the Belafontes and people in that category, they don't make as much money as they do in America, but they want to come here, and they do make a great deal of money. A good Broadway actor who is not a star but is known on Broadway will want more to come here than he gets at home normally and that is our trouble — to match that. Consequently in the acting field we generally import more from England than the States.

Want Imported Talent

Q: Do you try to cast here in the first place?

A: Yes we do. But it does get back to this boxoffice business. If we say "imports from London," just those words make a difference at the boxoffice. Australians want imported stars. They won't accept their own as yet, which is why talented leading players here go abroad. However, we do try to cast them as often as we can.

Q: Is it a case of building up the people here?

A: Well, we've tried that. But the plain fact is the Australian public will not go to see their own. We've tried with several people. We always try to cast here. It saves us a lot of money. But there hasn't really been a very successful Australian star, who has become a star in Australia, since Gladys Moncrieff. They want to see her. But they just don't go and see their own as yet and the Peter Finches and people have to go away.

It's Scrounge Everywhere

Q: Do you envisage a time when Australian theatre will be self-supporting, except for normal exchange of stars as, say, between London and New York?

A: The theatre can't be said to self-support an actor anywhere. Take an actor in London. He does film work, radio work, television work and stage work—very few rely on stage the whole time. The same applies in New York, except for the stars. Therefore it isn't something that can be expected here with so little theatre. The answer is no. An actor will always have to be a jack of all trades, especially nowadays. With the emphasis now on the musical he's got to be better equipped—he's got to be able to sing and dance quite often to have continuous employment. Very few can do that.

Q: Do you think there'll be more television work in the future?

A: Yes, I do. We are catching up on the American product and we'll have to do our own. We should do our own. It has difficulties at the moment of course—the product has to be exported from here for it to make it worthwhile. The local market is not big enough. I think local production should be subsidized by the Government. The Government has taken a tremendous lot of taxation out of television in one way and another, and I think if they put a little bit of that back to foster local production it would pay off handsomely.

Legit Tastes in Switzerland

By GEORGE MEZOFI

Zurich.

Legit taste in Switzerland seems to be shifting from the formerly predominantly popular classical or semi-classical plays to contemporary authors. This is confirmed by performance statistics of 1962-'63 at the nine principal Swiss legit houses of Zurich, Basle, Berne, Lucerne, St. Gallen, Biel-Solothurn and Chur. Some of these houses, however, are not 100% legit stands, but also embrace opera, operetta and ballet. Only four, in fact, are strictly legit: the Zurich Schauspielhaus (Switzerland's top stage), smallseaters Komoedie Basle and Atelier Theatre Berne, as well as Stadttheatre Chur, a provincial house. On the other hand, Stadttheatre Zurich (not counted here) is the country's sole stage devoted exclusively to opera, operetta and ballet.

Contemporary authors (18) outnumber the classics and or semi-classics (such as G. B. Shaw, Ibsen, Nestroy, etc.), two to one among the most frequently performed plays. Topping the list is Switzerland's own Friedrich Duerrenmatt. His "Physicists" is heading the hit list at not less than four out of the nine houses: Komoedie Basle (41 performances), Atelier Theatre Berne (78), Staedtebundtheatre Biel-Solothurn (37) and Stadttheatre Chur (8). It also rates high at Stadttheatre St. Gallen, with 15 performances, whilst the Zurich Schauspielhaus, where "Physicists" had a record-breaking run of 65 performances during the 1961-'62 season following its world premiere at that house, registered a hit with Duerrenmatt's latest comedy, "Hercules and the Stable of Augias."

Another Swiss author, Max Frisch, scored with his "Andorra," though a Broadway casualty, at St. Gallen and Chur. Peter Ustinov's "Photo Finish" topped the list at Zurich's Schauspielhaus with 36 performances and also fared well at Stadttheatre Berne. American authors were not too lucky this past season. Only William Inge's "Bus Stop," at Atelier Theatre Berne, and Arthur Miller's "Death of a Salesman," at Stadttheatre Lucerne, managed to make the grade, whilst Tennessee Williams' "Period of Adjustment" and "Orpheus Descending," Thornton Wilder's "Skin of Our Teeth" and Michael Shurtleff's off-Broadway play, "Call Me By My Rightful Name," had to be written off as casualties at various theatres.

G. B. Shaw once again brought them in with "Arms and the Man" and "Caesar and Cleopatra" at Basle, but "Candida" failed to do the trick at Lucerne. Among the classics, Schiller topped the list at Berne with "Joan of Arc," but it was a lean season for Shakespeare, with only one successful production (Antony and Cleopatra) at Lucerne, whereas Berne even registered a flop with "Midsummer Night's Dream."

Decish Due in Jan. On PRS 4% B.O. Cut Bid

London.

The Performing Right Tribunal is expected to give its ruling by the end of January on a claim by the Performing Right Society for 4% of b.o. takes for pop concerts. At present, PRS receives 1% of three-quarters of the earning capacity of a hall.

Increase in PRS' slice of the take is being opposed by the Cinematograph Exhibitors Assn., Harold Davison Ltd., Harold Fielding Ltd. and promoters Larry Parnes and Vic Lewis.

Latter group is fighting the proposed increase on the grounds that the element which attracts the kid audiences to pop concerts is the performer, not the material he uses. PRS contends that the songs they sing are the attraction and that an author is entitled to share in the economic success of his work. His return, it adds, should be conditioned by the size of audience.

Istanbul Legit as $1.10 Bargain; Many Plays & Fans Turkey-Trot In

By EROL KENT

Istanbul.

Istanbul has gradually become one of Europe's most active theatrical centers. The Municipal Theatre, a city-subsidized company which will celebrate its 50th anniversary next year, has recently added a sixth house to the five theatres which it already operated in various parts of the city. Also, about a dozen strictly "private enterprise" companies perform an international repertory of plays. Prices of admission are unbelievably low by American standards (about $1.10 top for the private theatres and a 55c. top for the subsidized ones), but no one complains since production costs and general expenditures are scaled down accordingly.

First three months of the 1963-64 season offered no outstanding Turkish plays (with the possible exception of two one-actors by Gingor Dilmen, mentioned later in this report), although about a dozen scripts of strictly local interest have been put on. The following is a round-up of the principal Istanbul companies, including the titles of the plays they have so far presented this season:

MUNICIPAL THEATRES—"The Comedy of Errors," Victor Hugo's "A Thousand Francs' Recompense," Arnold Wesker's "Roots," Francois Billetdoux' "Tchin-Tchin," Durrenmatt's "The Physicists," Ustinov's "Photo Finish," Tennessee Williams' "The Rose Tattoo," Ronald Mitchell's "The Gilded Clock," Goldoni's "Mirandolina," Horst and and Pillau's "The Window Opening on the Yard" and several Turkish scripts have already been presented in repertory on this company's six stages. Three plays which will soon be added to the repertory are Saroyan's "The Time of Your Life," Brecht's "The Good Woman of Setzuan" and Pirandello's "Six Characters in Search of an Author." The Municipal Theatres function under the Artistic Direction of Muhsin Ertugrul, grand old man of the Turkish theatre, who has 110 actors, 70 apprentices, half a dozen directors, four designers (including David Pursley, a young American from the Dallas Theatre Center) and an army of technicians under his command. The Company, apart from its regular evening and to present six special matinees a week for children aged from 7 to 12, plus five matinees a week for youngsters aged from 12 to 16, on the stages of its various theatres. Mr. Ertugrul is now also planning to start puppet shows for children aged from 3 to 7, thereby completing his dream of luring every citizen of Istanbul to the theatre as they move from the cradle to the grave.

KENT PLAYERS—Yildiz Kenter, one of Turkey's leading actresses, who operate this company with her actor brother Musfik Kenter, opened the season with a three-character Turkish play called "Rose of the Sea." This was followed by Edward Albee's "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" retitled here "Who's Afraid of the Bad Wolf?"

DORMEN THEATRE—A revival of Emmanuel Robbles' "Montserrat" (not the Lillian Hellman version) was followed by Deval's "Tovaritch," presented with nostalgic 1920s costumes and props.

ORALOGLU THEATRE—"A Far Country" and British - thriller "Signpost to Murder," presented in repertory were followed by "On Borrowed Time," revived as a vehicle for actress-manager Lale Oraloglu's talented 8-year-old daughter Alex.

LITTLE THEATRE—This 285-seat theatre run by Engin Cezzar, formerly from Yale and the Actor's Studio, and his actress wife Gulriz Sururi, started the season with "Othello" and followed it with a bill of two one-act plays, "The Ears of Midas" and "The Living Monkey Restaurant," both written by Gunger Dilmen, a playwriting student at the Yale Drama School. The first play is a pleasant fantasy with an ancient Greek setting about the King Midas legend and the second a rather macabre piece about a tourist couple visiting a Hong-Kong restaurant where live monkeys' brains are served as a delicacy.

ARENA THEATRE—J. P. Breal's recent Paris hit "The Great Ear" and Marc Camoletti's "Boeing-Boeing" have been the two successful plays in this theatre's repertory so far.

MUNIR OZKUL THEATRE—"Sunday in New York," which has been having a long run at this theatre, will soon be replaced by "Romanoff and Juliet."

Istanbul's remaining five theatres have been playing mostly local light comedies and farces or else Turkish adaptations of light foreign fare. The most outstanding among these efforts was a local adaptation of "Blythe Spirit" in which Madame Arkadin became a Turco-Armenian clairvoyante.

As for the National Theatre, which presents plays in five playhouse, in Ankara and two theatres in the provincial cities of Izmir and Bursa, their repertory has so far consisted of Pirandella's "Right You Are," Ben Johnson's "Volpone," Pedro Bloch's "Enemies Don't Send Flowers," Durrenmatt's "The Physicists," Ustinov's "Photo Finish" and several Turkish plays.

The outstanding artistic event in the early part of the current season in Ankara is considered to be a full-length rendering of Tchaikowsky's "The Sleeping Beauty" presented by the Turkish National Ballet. The production was under the personal direction of Dame Ninette de Valois, who is able to devote more time to the Turkish ballet company (which she originally founded) now that she has retired from the British Royal Ballet (which she had also founded and made world-famous).

20 Groups Spark Athens Theatre

By RENA VELISSARIOU

Athens.

The theatrical season in Athens runs from mid-September to mid-May. In the summer months most of the legit groups move to open air theatres or tour the provinces.

The present winter season is one of the liveliest in Athens with 20 groups performing at an equal number of theatres, presenting Greek or foreign plays.

National Theatre in tourist-dominated summertime is heavy with Greek tragedies at the Epidavros and Athens Festivals. Current season opened with "Antony and Cleopatra" by Shakespeare with Anna Synodinou, Thanos Kotsopoulos and Lycourgos Kallerguis in the leading roles.

National Theatre has included this year the following plays: "Donna Diana" by Augustina Campania Moreto, "The Country Girl" by William Wycherly," Deardree of Sorrows" by John Millimgton Sygne." The Chalk Circle" by Johannes Von Gynther." Becket or the Price of God" by Jean Annouille and "Christ Suffering" a medieval classic.

Costas Moussouris produced "A Man For All Seasons" by Robert Bolt of Britain. It is very well staged and acted as all plays presented by this theatre and it may survive to end of the season. Anyway Moussouris has bought the rights for three more plays:" After the Fall," by Arthur Miller, "Man and Boy," by Terance Rattingan and "Life in Your Hands" by Peter Ustinov.

Dimitri Horn achieved a per-

(Continued on page 192)

At 70c Top, Chile's Capital Counts 11 Houses, 3,650 Seats

By HANS EHRMANN

Santiago.

On the same day that Hitler invaded Russia in 1941, a group of students from the University of Chile presented a program of one-acters at the unearthy hour of ten in the morning. Lucho Corboda, whose company was Santiago's only permanent theatrical attraction at that time had lent them his Teatro Imperio. That same evening he almost repented of his generosity: the students had accidentally packed his wig with their costumes and Cordoba was forced to appear in his own hair. Two years later, another student performance, this time at the Catholic University, laid the foundation for another University theatre.

Out of such slender beginnings, a theatrical movement was born. At present there are 11 legit houses in Santiago, seating a total of 3,650 spectators. There are well over 30 professional productions a year, ranging from Shakespeare and Moliere to Brecht, Durrenmatt and Albee, plus approximately 25% of plays by Chilean authors.

Due to their professionalism the two university theatres have grown up into companies quite different from their U. S. counterparts. In the beginning they were a reaction against Spanish style companies which, in spite of attractive star personalities, tended to over-improvise. Plays were often staged in a matter of days without a proper dress rehearsal it was far from unusual that actors should catch their first glimpse of the scenery on opening night. The prompter was a very important character indeed in these companies.

The university theatres imposed a diametrically opposed trend: team work replaced stars, rehearsal periods averaged a minimum of two months, the prompter's box became a thing of the past, the director came into his own and scenery and lighting acquired an importance heretofore undreamt of. The aim of these companies was to reestablish the dialogue between the trends of world theatre and Chilean audiences both in technique and repertoire.

A renewal of the theatrical scene, in many ways similar to that of Chile, took place at the same time in Argentine, Uruguay and Brazil.

At first the efforts of the Chilean university theatres were strictly amateur, involving a great deal of personal sacrifice for the actors. In the course of time, however, they obtained state subsidies channeled through the universities and were fully professionalized, also obtaining their own theatres.

Inevitably there was a period of considerable friction between old-time professionals and "these youngsters," but this became a thing of the past when the best of the surviving pros were assimilated by the University of Chile Theatre Institute and Catholic University Experimental Theatre.

Once these companies were firmly established, a series of new pocket-theatres (100 to 200 seats) followed in their wake, representing the unsubsidized branch of Chilean theatre. The number of playwrights is constantly increasing and Jorge Diaz and Egon Wolff, the best of these, may yet be heard of on a more international scale.

Theatre-going is cheap in this country: the average admission costs 50c and top prices (Saturday/Sunday) come to 70c. Of the eight drama critics, the bulk are in their mid 30s and have grown up with the university theatres, but there are exceptions at both ends: one aisle sitter is aged 19; another has reached a ripe 77 and also happens to be deaf. He sits in the front row and has been seen to place the mike of his hearing aid on the stage.

BERLIN SHOW BIZ CAPSULATED

By HANS HOEHN

Most Troublesome Play	Rolf Hochhuth's "Der Stellvertreter" (The Deputy)
Best New Play	Peter Ustinov's "Photo Finish"
New Musical Hit	Irving Berlin's "Annie Get Your Gun"
Most Surprising Top Performer	Heidi Bruehl, Annie of "Annie Get Your Gun"
Best actor	Martin Held (in several plays)
Best actress	Luitgard Im, Maria Becker and Maria Wimmer may fight it out
Most Successful German Film	Rialto's "Treasure of Silver Lake"
Most Successful Imported Film	Billy Wilder's "Irma La Douce"
Surprise Song Hit	Marlene Dietrich's "Where Have All the Flowers Gone"
Best Radio Station	AFN-Berlin
Best Ice Show	"Holiday On Ice" and Viennese Ice Revue (a tie)
Most Impressive	NBC's "The Tunnel"
Most Important Tv Coverage	Visit of the Late JFK in Germany

Learning Courage In Face of Television; Films' Built-In Values

By NORMAN B. RYDGE

(Chairman, Greater Union Theatres)

Sydney.

Over the past several years, it has been my pleasure to report the reconstruction and remodelling of important key release houses forming part of the Australia-wide theatre circuit owned and operated by Greater Union Theatres. This year we believe new history has been made for we have gone a step further. When this Anni issue of VARIETY goes to press, a brand-new city theatre will have been built and opened in Melbourne.

It has a special significance to the film trade in Australia, for it is the first time in many years and certainly since the advent of television seven years ago that there has been an increase in the number of city theatres in any state in this country.

This should not be interpreted as a sign that the exhibition business has solved its problems and reached a comfortable state of stability. Indeed, this is far from being the case so far as the overall picture is concerned. It is inevitable, with the multiplication of video transmitters, that there will be a further mortality in cinemas.

It does, however, reflect the confidence of my own organization and its continuing faith in the future of the Motion Picture Industry. In the year now ending we have been encouraged by the success attending our special showmanship efforts on behalf of both hardticket and semi-hardticket, longrun attractions. We have proved to our satisfaction that there is a solid demand for top-grade product when sold and presented in the modern manner.

It has meant a realization and wholehearted acceptance of the need for an entirely new concept in the marketing of motion pictures, involving the application of new ideas and methods of operation.

In only one respect, I believe there can be no disturbance to the fundamental principles which have governed the past. I mean the personal sense of values, ethics if you like, without which no industry can ever hope to build a future.

This precious sense of values is exemplified in the pride which any business takes in keeping faith with and fostering permanent relations with its clients. It requires the moderating influence of give and take and the realization that there must be a measure of reward for both parties. Neither can prosper indefinitely at the expense of the other party.

New minds are being applied to our industry in the conduct of its affairs all over the world, and it is proof of the flexible outlook of showmen that each new idea, every practical innovation, is welcomed with keen appreciation.

It is however, to my mind, inherent to the health and stability of our industry that the application of revisions of policy be based on the preservations of a true spirit of equity for all concerned —the producer, the exhibitor and the patron.

Widow Continues Austria's Oldtime Extempore Troupe

By EMIL MAASS

Vienna.

The Tschumer Theatre after the family name of the owner, is believed to be the last operating extempore stage in Austria. Mrs. Karoline Tschumer always corrects this remark to "in the world," but the years have taught VARIETY caution. This sympathetic elderly lady did not give up when her husband died two years ago. Karl Tschumer had founded his "amusement speciality" 48 years before that. Mrs. Karoline Tschumer wished to celebrate at least its 50th anniversary. Now that she has reached her goal and intends to keep on, as business is not so bad, as sophisticates would expect.

The theatre is a shack, wooden stage and simple wooden benches. Settings are primitive, but fitting a nearby inn helps out with some furniture. It is in that inn, anyway, where the members of the cast meet to "discuss the play."

The Latin word ex-tempore is actually too farfetched to characterize this method of theatre playing. One generally believes, that the actors play "just as they feel like." But that is not the fact. Under the chairmanship of Mrs. Tschumer they hold a meeting a la cabinet members.

There are not less than 700 plot-manuscripts from comedy to bloody drama. Titles such as "When the Stork Bites a Girl," "The Wife of the Shoemaker is Crazy" et al. Latest addition is a crime story "The Man with the Mask." The sequence of the scenes is never changed. But what happens in each scene may undergo improvisation, but always within the plot that is sacrosauct.

So ex-tempore indicates merely, that there are "no lines" for the actors in the regular sense. Conventions they have, and habits, and surefire bits but no written-down lines.

Though the Tschumer Theatre cannot afford advertising, its 50 year festival performance on an empty lot in Ottakring, a suburb of the capital, was not only sold out (600), but seats were reserved for the following show. Weather permitting, troupe performs on an open air stage.

For the golden anniversary the take was "staggering," with 20c top. De luxe cars, that stood the day before perhaps in front of the Theatre an der Wien to see "My Fair Lady," and bicycles were parked side by side at the Tschumer entrance.

12-TONE 'WOZZECK' A PARIS OPERA HIT

Paris.

Despite its heavy gloom, World War I plot, impressionism, and 12-tone music scale, Alban Berg's "Wozzeck" got rave notices from the critics here and thus gave the new Paris Opera impresario Georges Auric his first real socko since taking over the mangagement 18 months ago.

Auric used German singers but now has plans for a French adaptation and production later this season or next year. The staging of Jean-Louis Barrault and the musical direction of Pierre Boulez were also lauded.

You Don't Do Biz By Spanish Phone

By HALSEY RAINES

Palma de Majorca.

Legend has it that Spanish telephone instruments all go back to 1877, the first year after Alexander Graham Bell won his "A" in advanced physics. Be that as it may. There's another legend that Castilian psychiatrists admit on the quiet that their toughest patients are the one who went dippy trying to do business by phone between Palma on the island of Majorca, and Valencia, or Ibiza and Marseilles, or any two other points you might pick. The only real beneficiaries of this situation are perhaps the wife dodgers who can take a holiday in confidence that it is virtually impossible for the little woman back in Paris, Rome or Brooklyn to break through the sound barrier.

When Sean Connery, the brawny Scot who liquidated Dr. No, came to Majorca with Gina Lollobrigida and Ralph Richardson to work in "Woman of Straw," he decided he would like to ring up Fred Goldberg, United Artists publicity and exploitation chief, in Manhattan. His first, now historic remark was: "I've got just time to do it before lunch."

The sequence of events from this point goes roughly as follows:

Wednesday: Call placed with hotel operator at Cala Ratjada, the film location base, at 1:45 P.M. (Spanish time). At 10 P.M. operator still reporting inability to get Madrid "pick-up," the first step in a transoceanic talk. Connery goes to bed.

Thursday: Attempts renewed. Connery, after cradling phone in his hands for half an hour because he is told "Mr. Goldberg is on," is informed no communication can be achieved because the service at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, has been terminated.

"Impossible!" cries the star.

"It ees possible," says the operator firmly. "Thees subscriber maybe no pay hees bill."

"And with all that dough coming in from 'Dr. No.'" groans Connery out loud. "Try again tomorrow, and see if the bill's paid."

Friday: Connery out on a boat filming, having been informed that bad weather has knocked out all phone calls for 24 hours, when a frantic walkie-talkie message tells him to rush in, New York is waiting. Connery, picking up the phone in a mad sweat, hears a drum-piercing feminine voice call out: "Santa Maria! No me moleste, bestia! Mi padre informara a la policia!"

Saturday: Connery, now calling Goldberg at his home number, rushes in from a restful swim at 3 P.M. by an "Everything ready" message, only to hear an annoyed voice exclaiming: "By Jove, sir, are you calling Gibraltar?"

Sunday: Connery sits down to indite a long substitute telegram, but is told: "No telegraph service from the island today."

Monday: Connery complaining of hearing odd ringing sounds in his ears, resembling those of non-existent telephones. He gives strict orders no more calls to be attempted until he feels better. At this moment he is told frantically that Mr. Goldberg is on the wire.

"Fred!" he cries. "What a time I had! How are you, pal?"

Total silence for 15 minutes except for certain cricketlike chirps on the wire and some unprintable epithets.

The operator cuts in "The Paris call—she comes!"

"I've got no Paris call!" yells Connery.

"Ah, yes, eet ees a mistake. Mr. Goldberg he talk to Paris and we cut him off to speak you. Here is Mr. Goldberg."

"Can you hear me from Majorca?" booms Connery.

"Get off da phone, Majorca!" is the gruff answer. "This is Roma. Go fly a kite, Majorca."

Connery, snarling, casts the phone from him. A faint smile crosses his face as he sees it shatter. He rings for the maid, who looks at him in fright as she sees him, teeth clenched, clutching the bedpost. "You sick, sir?" she asks.

"Yes," says Connery. "Get me a bottle of scotch, a fast stenographer and a pair of shears. No, I've got the shears." He cuts the phone cord and adds: "You can carry this down with you."

Matador Plus a Rival Group Rule Barcelona Runs; Distribs: Ouch!

By JOAQUINA CABALLOL

Barcelona.

We have an old saying in Spain: "History repeats iself." What, in your country, too? Anyhow, around 1928, a big company was founded to control all the film houses in town, first and second run. The name of the corporation was CINAES. To some of the men in the film trade, CINAES was the wonder company, which would rule over picture distributors and even make their own prices. Sad to say, CINAES lasted about six years. All the parties who had entered their houses in the corporation regained the control of their property and had to start once again the fight with the distributors on the perennial question of what was, or was not, fair rental.

Now, some 35 years later similar circumstances arise. Something like what happened with CINAES turns up again. But now it is not a company, but an individual who has taken control of 10 first run houses out of the 27 which are the total which exist in Barcelona. The man who has done this job is the well known bull fight impresario Pedro Balana. In this latter activity he has been very lucky and it appears that as pic exhibitor is doing wonderfully since he came into it in 1942, 21 years ago.

The first house Balana bought in 1942 was Avenida de la Luz, a 300-seat situation in the station of the Sarria Underground. The first program he served was a Walt Disney Festival, six cartoons of the Three Little Pigs, which was destroyed after this projection. The second house he bought was the Alcazar and later on followed Principal Palacio, Tivoli, Borras, Poliorama, Coliseum, Novedades and Diagonal. Lately he has built new houses and these are Regio Palace, Aribau Cinema and Urgel Cinema, the latter with a seating capacity for 3,000, a very modern place, even luxurious, and well planned. Perhaps one must object to its situation in town (the same applies to Regio Palace) which undoubtedly is not central like the Tivoli, Coliseum and Novedades in the shopping and distinguished side of the city.

Urgel Cinema enjoys a third class working neighborhood, and unless the program does not appeal to everybody like the one with which he opened late in October 1963 starring moppet Marisol in "Marisol Goes to Rio," audiences from residential areas and those living in the suburbs of Sarria and San Gervasio, will not go near the place.

This absorption of locales by one operator has created certain uneasiness among the other exhibitors who have joined forces and created ACSA, a company which links almost all the houses where Balana does not prevail. The result of all this is that Barcelona's cinema business is in two hands only: Balana and ACSA.

As it is to be expected the victim is the distributor who must beg for dates, as exhibitors have taken control of the situation, and this problem arises at a moment when the market overflows with pictures of all nationalities. Undoubtedly in his heart of hearts the distributor hopes for some fight to arise among the ACSA group, or that the gigantic Balana organiaztion may fail in some place, which is nothing impossible, as the control of the enormous cinema business accumulated by the bull fight empresario needs very clear brains to carry it on. When a company becomes so big it is not the work of one man, but a chain of efficient individuals, each one in his place to make things run in good order with discipline and efficiency.

Numbers Game No More in Germany; Stress Pix Quality, Not Quantity

By HANS HOEHN

Berlin.

The West German film has gone through a number of very tough years. It has perhaps registered its all-time low—both artistically and commercially speaking—within the 1962-63 season. Several renowned companies went bankrupt, and the number of productions went considerably down. These figures speak an eloquent language:

In 1955, the West German film industry produced 122 pix.

In 1956: 120 pix; 1957, 111; '58, 110; '59, 106; 1960, 98; '61, 75 pix; '62, 64 and 1963, 50-to-60 films.

But there is justified hope that the German film industry has finally overcome its most critical time. Producer Horst Wendlandt believes the industry's absolute lowest level has reversed itself.

His opinion may not be generally shared by his colleagues as yet, but there's no denying that the average quality of the German film has improved in recent months. The time of those countless run-of-the-mill productions seems to be over. The fact may be stressed that Germany's producers (at least the majority of them) now do what they often haven't done before: they concentrate more on good stories. "The story's the thing, not the star," is more frequently heard among the domestic filmmakers.

Some new German pictures have the potentials of topflight moneymakers and it's interesting to note that nearly all of them have been based on good story material. Such productions as "The House in Montevideo," "The Gripsholm Castle," "The Big Love Game" (Der grosse Liebesreigen), "The Dead One of Beverly Hills," "Winnetou" are examples, among others. "Montevideo" is Helmut Kaeutner's remake of an old Curt Goetz film which once pleased millions of German cinemagoers. The late actor-director-author Goetz, one of the finest poets the German film ever had, also furnished the story material for "Beverly Hills." "Gripsholm" is based on a tale by the late (1935) Kurt Tucholsky, one of the best satirists and reconteurs of Germany's pre-Hitler era. "Winnetou" has been adapted from novels by Karl May, the idolized German adventure writer who is a sort of this country's Zane Grey, who died 52 years ago.

It's noteworthy that the outstanding writers mentioned above are all dead. This reveals a considerable drawback of the German film: the absence of good contemporary writers. This also goes for the stage and other media: Germany is still in search of good authors. Many of those who are utilized today lack originality. And with regard to the few really good ones: they often if not mostly feel offened because they know that, directly or indirectly, producers only hire them in order to cash in on their names.

The financial dilemma, of course, is also something that handicaps the native film industry. The aforementioned producer Wendlandt has this to say: "All in all, one can say that the banks have lost interest in investing in films. The lack of capital is a big drawback for the German film industry. Many a good project can't see realization due to lack of interest on the part of the banks. And those banks still are interested in investing in films have a tendency to rather support a film that costs 1,000,000 ($250,000) instead of 3,000,000 marks (750G).

Distributor's Influence

The situation of the German producer is still a far cry from being rosy. In the U.S. the producer is the boss, in Germany the producer must get along with the distributor who, in most cases, puts up the lion's share of the money. That the distributor has too much of his finger in the pie is rated as one of the most unhealthy situations about the domestic film industry.

Nearly two years ago a bunch of young German film intellectuals declared "Papa's cinema is dead." They prophesied a new era. Except one film ("Bread of Former Youth" which flopped) nothing happened. These young filmites are still mainly concerned with short films. They keep proving that they are good technicians but they go overboard with formalisms. This also applied to the above mentioned pic, "Bread of Former Youth." So it all proved a big disappointment along this line.

More or less the only young and new German film director who achieved something that stirred interest was Will Tremper. His "The Endless Night" is generally considered as one of the most interesting German pix of 1962. But Tremper isn't an adherent of the "Papa's Cinema Is Dead" movement. He goes his way more or less alone. It may be added that "Endless Night" was one of the biggest flops of the year. Also Tremper's initial (1961) film, "Flight to Berlin," was praised for quite a few good things but flopped badly at the boxoffice. Nevertheless, the Rialto-Film (Berlin), the most successful company in the land—the producing company of such pix as "Treasure of Silver Lake" and "Winnetou"—has hired Trempler to direct Betriebsausflug" (Excursion of Factory-Workers), an art-slanted pic in March.

Another new promising young film director, Edwin Zbonek, didn't click with "Man and Beast" but he is now on the commercial path. His latest, "The Henchman of London," is a CCC thriller based on a Bryan Edgar Wallace yarn entitled "White Carpet." Zbonek, incidentally, is of Austrian descent.

Berlin Theatre Data

STATE-OWNED

Opera House: 266 performances of opera, 30 ballets; 428,742 tickets sold.

Schiller - Theatre: 371 performances; 387,792 tickets sold.

Schiller (Studio): 88 performances; 15,914 tickets sold.

Park Theatre: 375 performances; 176,552 tickets sold.

PRIVATE THEATRES

Theatre on Kurfuerstendamm: 394 performances; 263,967 tickets sold.

Hebbel Theatre: 404 performances; 209,503 tickets sold.

Renaissance Theatre: 369 performances; 205,740 tickets sold.

Comedy Theatre: 418 performances; 199,472 tickets sold.

Berlin Theatre: 341 performances; 140,554 tickets sold.

Tribuene-Theatre: 320 performances; 95,676 tickets sold.

'Subsidy' Patriotic Word for Chile

By HANS EHRMANN

Santiago.

One question most American artists have to face at some stage of their visits to Chile concerns the lack of government subsidy of the arts in the U.S. Very few of these visiting artists are particularly enthusiastic in their defense of Uncle Sam's hands off policy where cultural coin is concerned.

Chile is in many ways fortunate, for it has obtained strong subsidies for the arts, without the drawback of political strings.

Total subsidies for show biz amount to approximately $500,000 a great deal of coin for Chile. Of this 60% is provided by the state and channelled through the universities (90% of this item goes to the U. of Chile) and the remaining 40% is provided by the Municipality of Santiago. Box office accounts for an additional income of $100.000, i.e. 20% on the total of subsidies.

The above sums give life to two 90-man orchestras, two ballet companies and three theatre companies. The U. of Chile, through its Music Extension Institute runs the National Symphony Orchestra and the National Ballet, part of whose subsidy is derived from a law establishing a special tax on cinema admissions. The Theatre Institute at the Teatro Antonio Varas is a professional Co. and also a branch of the U. of Chile's manifold activities in the cultural field.

Municipality of Santiago supports the Philharmonic Orchestra, the Ballet de Arte Moderno and a theatre company. The Catholic University's Experimental Theatre (also professional) also owes part of its financing to a state subsidy.

The story of most of these groups, whether musical, theatrical or choreographic is similar. They began their work with a great deal of enthusiasm and practically no money. As they improved, they received increasing support from the State or Municipality, allowing them to professionalize.

The municipal artists have yearly contracts; those dependent on the University of Chile have the same status as state employees in other fields, including pensions.

A certain amount of red tape has been inevitable under this setup and the different artistic units also suffer from the drawback that job-stability in some individuals cases has led to a bureaucratic mentality not particularly conductive to artistic progress.

However these minus aspects are well compensated for by the intensity of local artistic activities which, without subsidies, could never have reached their present levels in the different fields.

Where London Showfolk Seek Out Refreshment

By DICK RICHARDS

London.

Over the last few years London has lost at least three notable show biz "parish pumps," where showfolk gathered. They were the Screenwriters' Club, the Bolivar and the back bar of the Cafe Royal. Screenwriters, was a smart, modestly small club in the shadow of the Dorchester. It's title was a misnomer for it catered for all branches of the film business, writers, artists, producers, directors, technicians, and the entertainment press. As so often happens, financial problems caused wealthy folk outside the business to be made members. Prices became too stiff for the lesser paid brethren, but suspiciously low to the big leaguers. Result, nobody was fully satisfied and a happy hunting ground folded.

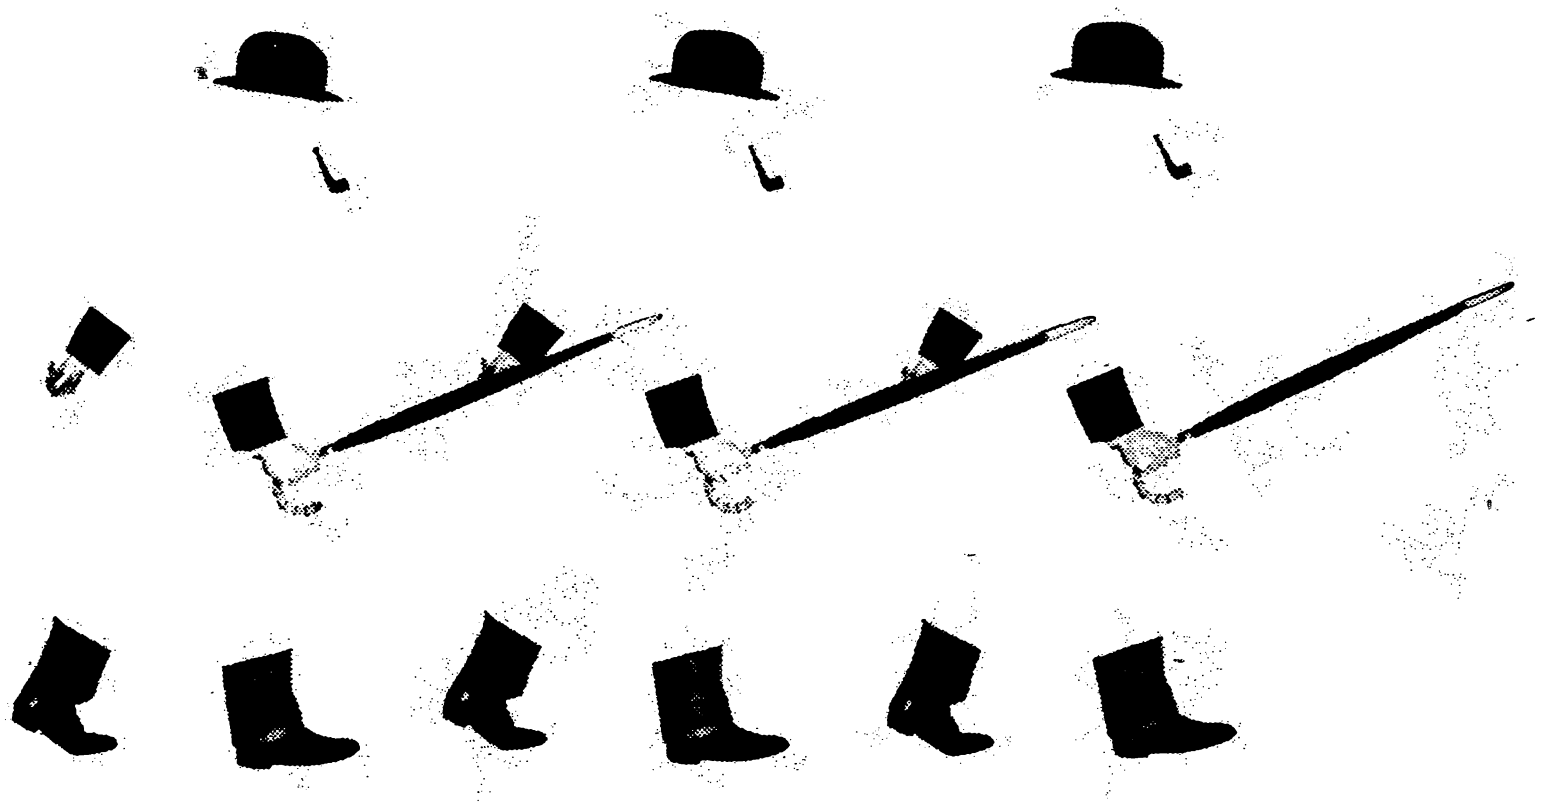
The Bolivar, a short stagger from the original Broadcasting House, was the hangout of sound radio folk, a warm, hospitable eaterie. It still functions as the BBC Club but none enters without a nostalgic twinge for the old Bolivar nights. As for the back bar at the Cafe Royal. It survived only briefly after Charles ("Mr. Piccadilly") Forte decided to turn his back on the famous restaurant's longtime showbiz and literary traditions and gave the place a new, commercial face-lift. In retrospect the Back Bar was not a particularly comfortable joint, but it had atmosphere and a faithful bunch of patriots. The grey marble bar was too high, the place was a shade cramped. But it was a gluepot for actors, agents, and scribes and was presided over by a bland horn-rimmed spectacled bartender named Jimmy, who was a sounding board for what was going on in the business, but had the polished savvy and discretion of knowing just how much vague hint and innuendo he should indulge, over the bar.

New Spots

Newest link in showbiz social camaraderie is the Pickwick Restaurant Club, recently opened opposite the Arts Theatre Club off Charing Cross Road. Wolf Mankowitz, Leslie Bricusse, Sammy Davis Jr., and Anthony Newley form the committee, with Harry Secombe as chairman. It's managed by Desmond Cavanagh, who has the distinct advantage of being assisted by his wife, a sister of film

(Continued on page 192)

ON THE MOVE



MGM BRITISH
THE V.I.P.s STUDIO

CURRENT

CHILDREN OF THE DAMNED
Ian Hendry/Alan Badel

NIGHT MUST FALL
Albert Finney

THE CHALK GARDEN
Deborah Kerr/Hayley Mills

633 SQUADRON
Cliff Robertson/George Chakiris

ESPIONAGE (TV)

THE AMERICANIZATION OF EMILY
(U.K. Filming)

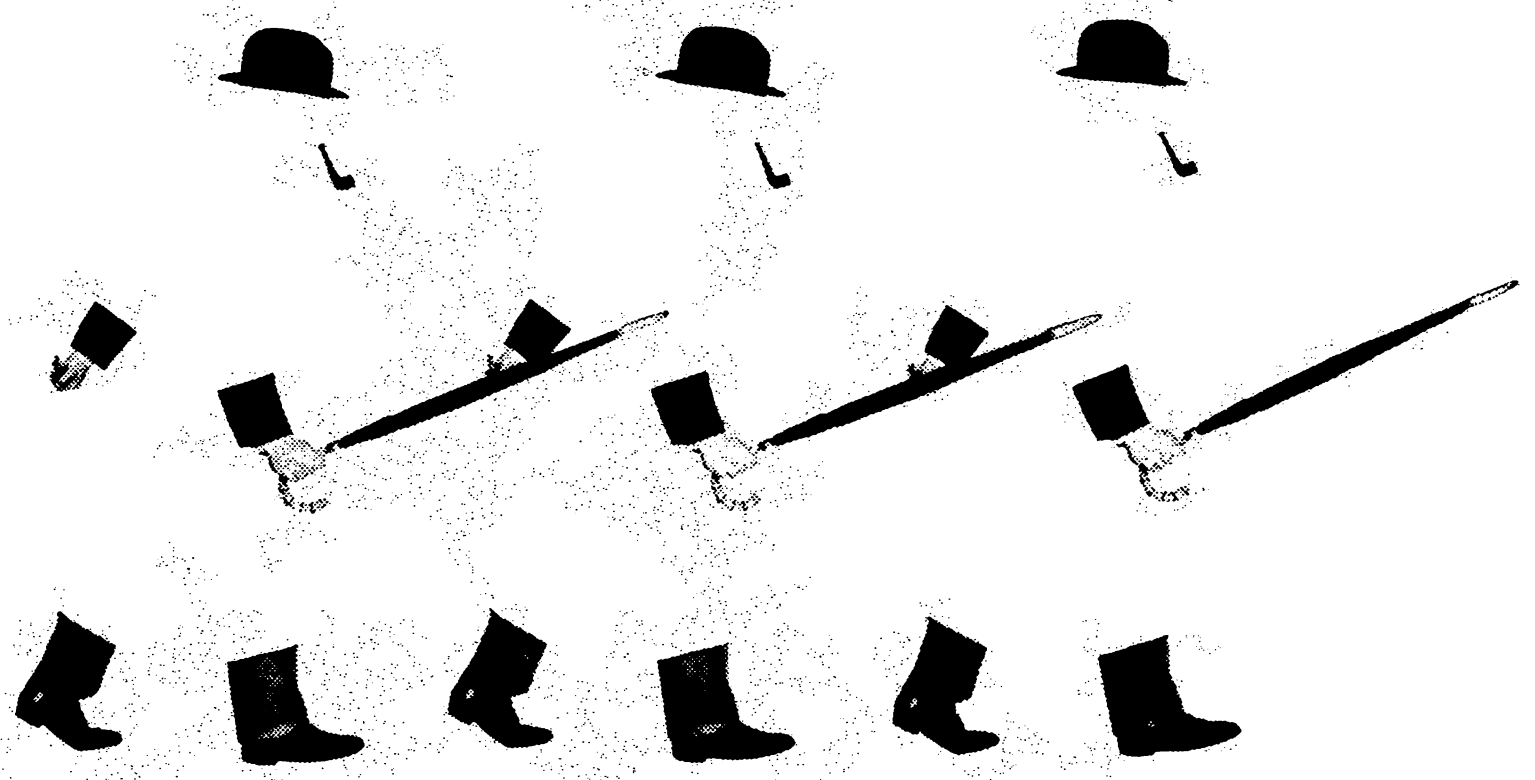
MURDER MOST FOUL
Margaret Rutherford

A SHOT IN THE DARK
Peter Sellers

MILLIE GOES TO BUDAPEST
(U.K. Filming)

GUNFIGHTERS OF CASA GRANDE
(Editing, Dubbing, Printing)

IN EUROPE TOO



MGM BRITISH
THE V.I.P.s STUDIO

COMING

JOURNEY'S END

A B C MURDERS

HYSTERIA

THEY DO IT WITH MIRRORS

BLEAK HOUSE

LADY CHATTERLEY'S LOVER

DANGER MAN (TV)

A LIKELY STORY

YOUNG CASSIDY

THE YELLOW ROLLS-ROYCE

BEST WISHES

from

JACK HYLTON

c/o FRED HARRIS
1270 Avenue of the Americas
Radio City
New York 20
Circle 7-3025

ADELPHI THEATRE
London, W.C.2.
REGent 1166
Current Production
"SIX OF ONE"
Starring
DORA BRYAN

BAVARIA Atelier Gesellschaft mbH.

7 Bavaria Filmplatz
8 Munich-Geiselgasteig
Germany
Telephone 47691
Cables: Bavariaatelier Munich, Germany

1961 Production included:

Billy Wilder's »ONE, TWO, THREE« (Pyramid Production for U.A.)
John Huston's »FREUD« (Universal-International)
Henry Levin's »THE WONDERFUL WORLD OF THE BROTHERS GRIMM« (MGM Cinerama)

1962

Byron Haskins' »CAPTAIN SINDBAD« (King Brothers Production)
John Sturges' »THE GREAT ESCAPE« (Mirisch-Alpha Production for U.A.)

You will find at your service: 10 Stages from 3.116 to 22.152 sq. ft. surface · Scoring Studio
15 Projection Rooms · 37 modern Cutting Rooms

Well equipped workshops: Carpenter's shop · Locksmith's shop · Sculpturers and Plasterers shops
Painter's shop, etc. Trained personnel

Stocks: Construction Dock · Furniture · Sets · Costumes, etc.

Laboratory: Black and White 16 mm and 35 mm · Color · Opticals · Tricks · Animation

Over 90 acres of forest and greens for all kinds of outdoor settings (outdoor tank and horizon screen)

Dramatic and romantic scenery of German and Austrian Alps for location
Studio Commissary (1200 to 1400 guests daily)

Every Good Wish to my Friends.
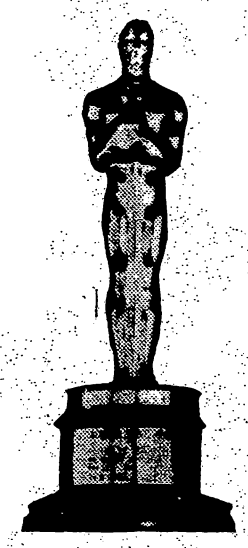
BERNARD DELFONT
LONDON
ENGLAND

From WALES and the WEST OF ENGLAND

THE SUCCESS OF TWW IN 1963 HAS INCLUDED



Motion Picture Academy Award
The Documentary (Short Features) Award was made to the TWW film DYLAN THOMAS, produced by Jack Howells

Cannes International Television Festival: Special Award

Festival of World Television: TWW documentary THE LONG DAY selected for special opening night programme

Encyclopaedia Britannica Awards: 1st and 2nd Awards for feature news (1962)

ITV NETWORK: DISCS A GO GO networked to 8 companies and regularly features in Regional Top Ten lists; THE LONG DAY and MAN TO REMEMBER (Lloyd George) fully networked.
LAND OF SONG fully networked every 4 weeks.
ITN (National news) included more than 80 injects of filmed reports by TWW cameramen.

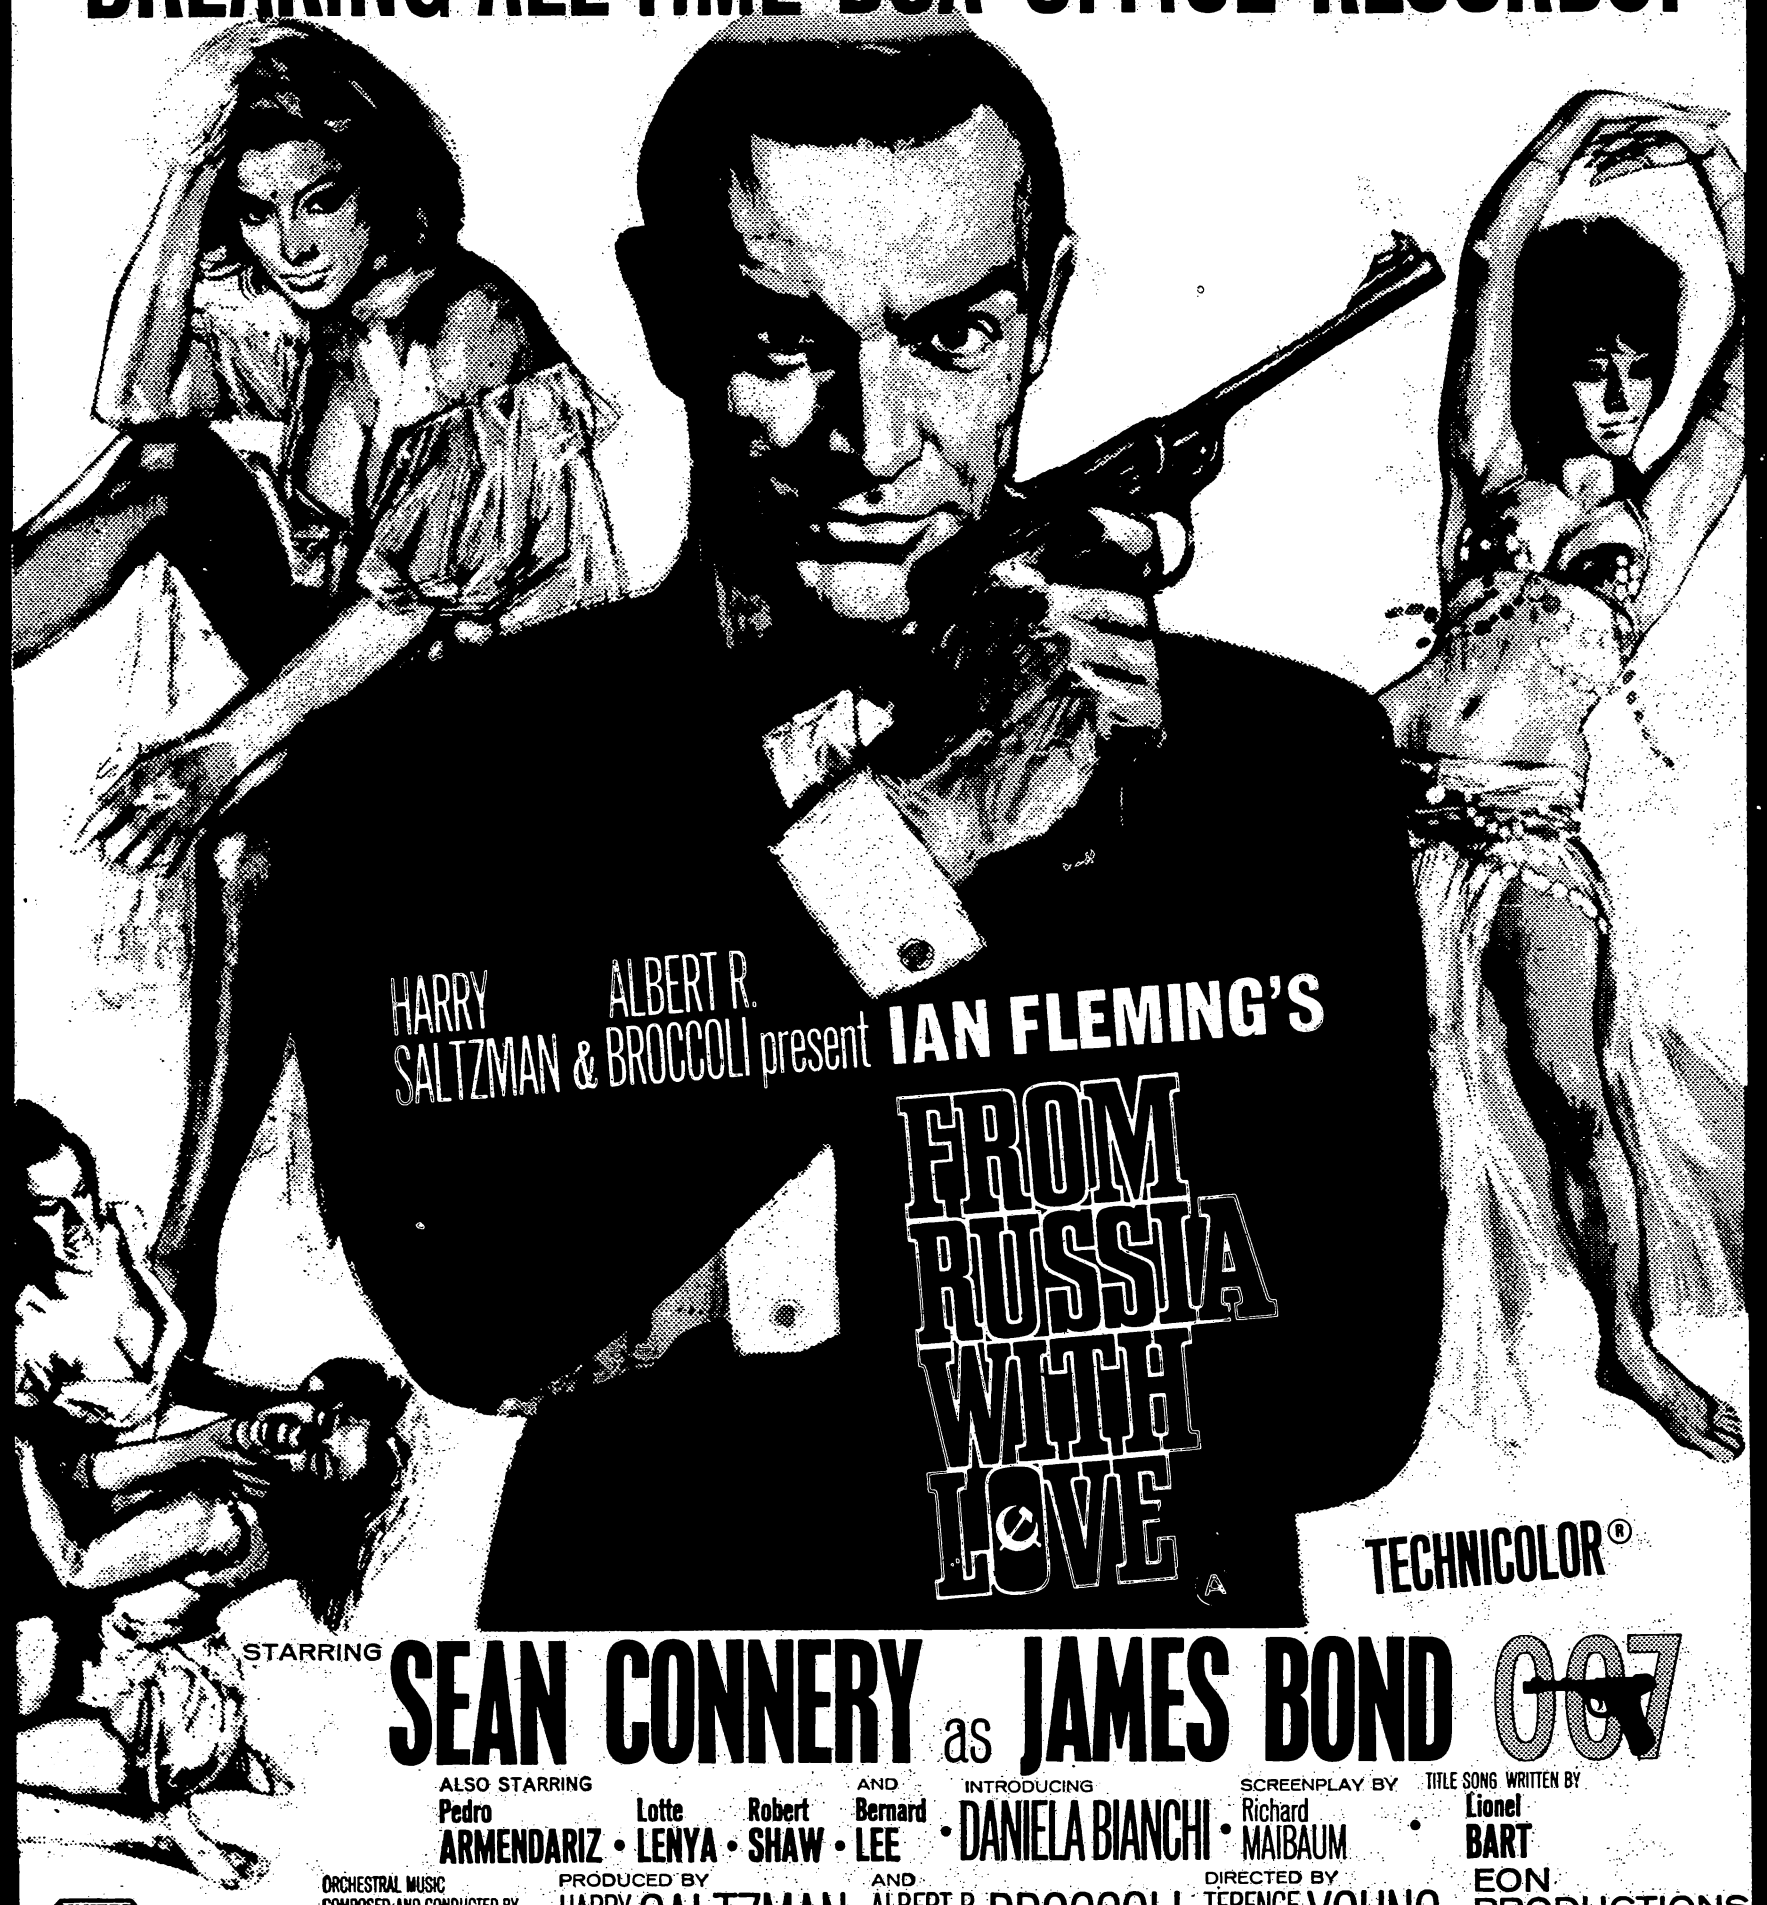
TWW

THE INDEPENDENT TELEVISION REGIONAL COMPANY serving WALES and the WEST OF ENGLAND

STUDIOS IN CARDIFF AND BRISTOL 207 SLOANE STREET, LONDON S.W.1

JAMES BOND IS BACK!

BREAKING ALL TIME BOX-OFFICE RECORDS!



ALSO STARRING Pedro ARMENDARIZ • Lotte LENYA • Robert SHAW • AND Bernard LEE • INTRODUCING DANIELA BIANCHI • SCREENPLAY BY Richard MAIBAUM • TITLE SONG WRITTEN BY Lionel BART

ORCHESTRAL MUSIC COMPOSED AND CONDUCTED BY John BARRY PRODUCED BY HARRY SALTZMAN AND ALBERT R. BROCCOLI • DIRECTED BY TERENCE YOUNG

UNITED ARTISTS

EON PRODUCTIONS LTD.

GOLDFINGER STARTING PRODUCTION

FEB. 24th. AT PINEWOOD STUDIOS

Happy Anni

ROBERT DHERY

ARTHUR LESSER

THANKS TO AMERICA

I found the guts during my 75th year to renew my One Man Show and play the big cities of America plus the Ziegfeld Theatre in New York for an entire month with the only help of a fine pianist, Fred Stamer.

THANKS TO THE VERDICT OF BROADWAY

I dared to play six weeks at the Saville Theatre in London following New York.

THANKS TO THE U.S.A. and LONDON

I decided then to play the big cities of South America and Canada and found the courage to crown the whole world tour playing my home town, Paris, at the Theatre des Champs-Elysees for 32 concerts, one after another, making in every place the greatest hit of my career of 63 years in show business.

Had it not been for the encouragement given to me by the great American public I would never have had the confidence to play all those great places during the same year and at my time of life.

BEST OF LUCK TO AMERICA FOR 1964

From The Heart,

Maurice Chevalier

They speak American at Shepperton *

They also have an Oscar-winning sound department—
Latest award for Lawrence of Arabia—
And one of the world's finest set-building teams—
Latest achievements, the massive sets for Paramount's 'Becket' and Columbia's 'The Victors'

* They also understand English

Shepperton Studios, Shepperton, Middlesex, England, Telephone Chertsey 2611

PETER SELLERS

"Carry on Cabby"

•

"Carry on Jack"

•

"Come Spy with Me"

Peter Rogers

CHURCHILLS

of BOND STREET

The oldest but still the newest night-spot in London

Two of the most extravagant floor-shows in Europe presented twice nightly at 11-00 p.m. and 1-00 a.m. supported by over 40 artistes. Two orchestras play for your entertainment from dusk to dawn. Dinner served from 8-00 p.m. onwards. Breakfast is on the house!

Hats, caps, novelties and souvenirs are given away to all visitors, to confirm the household legend throughout the world that . .

EVERY NIGHT IS CARNIVAL NIGHT AT CHURCHILLS

160, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.1.
HYDe Park 2626 (10 lines)

21 CLUB

TWENTY-ONE

LUNCHEON - DINNER - SUPPER
RESIDENTIAL 25 SUITES

Newly and beautifully furnished. Completely redecorated throughout. 24 hour room service.

DANCING & CABARET NIGHTLY

BARONS OF BEEF . . . SADDLES OF LAMB . . . STEAKS FROM THE FINEST ABERDEEN ANGUS HERDS . . . DOVER SOLES . . . SCOTCH SALMON ARE SERVED—THE FOOD FOR WHICH ENGLAND IS FAMOUS

The Casino Victoria Room is open nightly for CHEMIN-DE-FER, ROULETTE, POKER, BLACK JACK AND SNOOKER

8 CHESTERFIELD GARDENS,
CURZON STREET, MAYFAIR, W.1.
GROsvenor 3233 (10 lines)

LONDON : PARIS : MILAN : HAMBURG

Greetings
To All Our Friends Everywhere

FROM

THE CAMPBELL CONNELLY WORLD WIDE GROUP OF COMPANIES

LONDON:— ROY BERRY
10 Denmark Street,
London, W.C.2.

CALIFORNIA:— MIKE GOULD
11855 Laurelwood Drive,
Studio City,
California, U.S.A.

NEW YORK:— c/o CAMPBELL CONNELLY INC.
565 Fifth Avenue,
New York 17,
New York, U.S.A.

AMSTERDAM : COPENHAGEN : BARCELONA

SYDNEY RIO DE JANEIRO BUENOS AIRES

makers of fine documentaries seen in 25 countries.

REBELLION (1 hour)

An historical documentary made in the idiom of current affairs, on the rebellion in Ireland from 1913 to 1923. Only genuine archive material. An exciting and moving film.

THE JEW IN THE WORLD (3 half-hrs)

Part one shows the position of the Jew in Germany and Holland today, part two a history of the formation of Israel, part three the Jew in the U.S.A.,. in England, in Russia.

for these and many other fine documentaries made by T.R.I. contact

DESMOND SMITH
Suite 1412 551 5th Ave.
New York 17 Tel. OX 7-8646

tri
TELEVISION REPORTERS INTERNATIONAL LTD.
111 WARDOUR STREET
LONDON W.1., ENGLAND

RING OF SPIES ✳ THE SYSTEM ✳ THE GUEST ✳ TWO LEFT FEET ✳ IT'S ALL OVER TOWN ✳ STATION SIX-SAHARA ✳ LADIES WHO DO ✳ A PLACE TO GO ✳ GIRL IN THE HEADLINES ✳ HEAVENS ABOVE! ✳ IT'S ALL HAPPENING

LION INTERNATIONAL FILMS, BROADWICK HOUSE, BROADWICK STREET, LONDON, W.1.
AMERICAN REPRESENTATIVE: GARY DARTNALL, LION INTERNATIONAL FILMS, SUITE 1900, 1501, BROADWAY, NEW YORK, 36, N.Y., U.S.A.

KENNETH SHIPMAN PRODUCTIONS LTD.

Thirty-five, Piccadilly, London, W.1. Phone: Regent 5854/8. Cables: Shiprod, London, W.1.

TWICKENHAM FILM STUDIOS

St. Margarets, Twickenham, Middlesex. Pop. 4477.

PRODUCTIONS

★ THE SYSTEM A Kenneth Shipman-Michael Winner Production.

★ IT ALWAYS RAINS ON SOMEBODY

★ THE ATLANTEANS

FACILITIES

Location . . .

SOUND VAN with Portable Sound Recorders
NAGRA PILOTON

CAMERA CAR Mitchells and Arriflex Cameras.

Cinemascope — Wide Screen — Techniscope.

MOBILE GENERATOR and Portable Lighting Equipment.

Studio . . .

THREE STAGES and full Construction Facilities.

RECORDING THEATRE (Sound Transfers — Post Synchronising — Effects — Music Recording — Dubbing).

CUTTING ROOMS—15 fully equipped.

PREVIEW THEATRE

BEST WISHES

FROM

FRANCIS, DAY & HUNTER LTD.

B. FELDMAN & CO. LTD.

ROBBINS MUSIC CORPORATION LTD.

LONDON — ENGLAND

With Offices Throughout Europe

HAPPY NEW YEAR

PETER USTINOV

YOU SHOULD READ THIS ADVERTISEMENT
-it has the rich, warm glow of success!

ASSOCIATED BRITISH-

PATHE

PROUDLY PRESENT FOR 1964...

FRENCH DRESSING
JAMES BOOTH
ROY KINNEAR
MARISA MELL

What a Crazy World
JOE BROWN
SUSAN MAUGHAN
MARTY WILDE

JUST COMPLETED

CROOKS in CLOISTERS
RONALD FRASER · BARBARA WINDSOR · BERNARD CRIBBINS

IN PRODUCTION

The BARGEE
HARRY H. CORBETT
HUGH GRIFFITH
ERIC SYKES

WONDERFUL LIFE
CLIFF RICHARD'S GREATEST!

WEST 11
ALFRED LYNCH · KATHLEEN BREck
ERIC PORTMAN · DIANA DORS

The WORLD TEN TIMES OVER
SYLVIA SYMS EDWARD JUDD
JUNE RITCHIE

ALREADY SOLD TO U.S.A. AND CANADA

The CRACKSMAN
CHARLIE DRAKE
GEORGE SANDERS
DENNIS PRICE · NYREE DAWN PORTER

TV

THE AVENGERS

OUT OF THIS WORLD

MANY MORE OUTSTANDING SERIES AVAILABLE

THE SERVANT
DIRK BOGARDE · SARAH MILES
WENDY CRAIG and introducing JAMES FOX
THE SENSATION OF THE NEW YORK FILM FESTIVAL

ASSOCIATED BRITISH PLAN INTERNATIONALLY, PRODUCE INTERNATIONALLY

ASSOCIATED BRITISH-PATHE LTD.
2-4 DEAN STREET, LONDON, W.1. ENGLAND
Telephone: GERRARD 0444 Cables: PATHIREMA London

EMILE LITTLER

sends Greetings

FROM HIS LONDON THEATRES

The PALACE
"THE SOUND OF MUSIC"
MUSIC AND LYRICS BY RODGERS & HAMMERSTEIN

and

The CAMBRIDGE
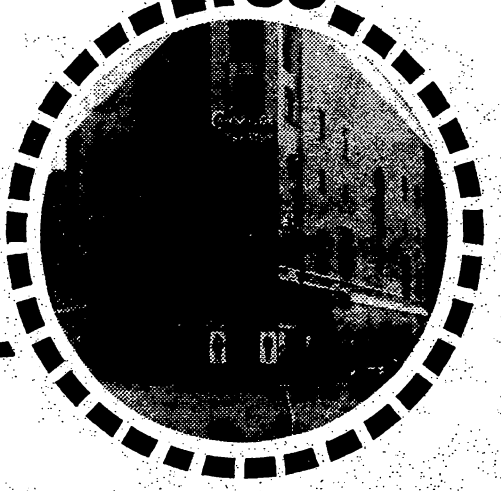
"HALF-A-SIXPENCE"



TWO OF LONDON'S LEADING AND MOST SUCCESSFUL THEATRES

Season's Greetings

from

THE ERIC DELANEY BAND

PYE RECORDS

DEREK BOULTON MANAGEMENT LTD.
37 Sudbrooke Road
London S.W. 12 (KELVIN 2122)

With All Good Wishes for 1964

SHEILA SOUTHERN
H.M.V. RECORDS
DEREK BOULTON MANAGEMENT LTD.
37 Sudbrooke Road
London S.W. 12 (KELVIN 2122)

A GREAT NOVEL

NOW A GREATER MOTION PICTURE!

ANNE BANCROFT PETER FINCH

AND

JAMES MASON

IN

THE PUMPKIN EATER

DIRECTED BY JACK CLAYTON

PRODUCED BY JAMES WOOLF

BASED ON THE NOVEL BY PENELOPE MORTIMER — SCREENPLAY BY HAROLD PINTER

A ROMULUS—JACK CLAYTON PRODUCTION FOR COLUMBIA RELEASE

LONDON'S MUSIC CENTRE

ACUFF-ROSE PUBLIC. LTD.
AVENUE MUSIC PUB. CO. LTD.
BELAFONTE MUSIC LIMITED
BEN SELVIN MUSIC LIMITED
BRADBURY WOOD LIMITED
BREGMAN, VOCCO & CONN LTD.
BRITANNIA MUSIC CO. LTD.
CLARENCE MUSIC LTD.
COMMAIR CHAPPELL LTD.
COMPASS MUSIC LIMITED
DELFONT MUSIC LIMITED
EDWIN H. MORRIS & CO. LIMITED
E. F. D. S. PUBLICATIONS, LIMITED
ERLE MUSIC LIMITED
FAMOUS CHAPPELL LIMITED
FRANK MUSIC CO. LIMITED
GALAHAD MUSIC LIMITED
IRVING BERLIN LIMITED

THE CHAPPELL GROUP OF COMPANIES take pleasure in Congratulating
VARIETY ON ITS 58th
ANNIVERSARY

JEWEL MUSIC PUB. CO. LTD.
LARRY ADLER MUSIC, LTD.
MADDOX MUSIC CO. LTD.
MICHELE MUSIC LTD.
MINSTREL MUSIC LTD.
NEW WORLD PUBLISHERS LTD.
PAXWIN MUSIC LTD.
P. K. MUSIC LIMITED
PLANETARY-NOM. LONDON, LTD.
SHELDON MUSIC LIMITED
SPRINGFIELD MUSIC LIMITED
STERLING MUSIC PUB. CO. LIMITED
TRAVIS MUSIC LIMITED
VALANDO MUSIC CO. LIMITED
VICTORIA MUSIC PUB. CO. LIMITED
WALTON MUSIC LIMITED
WALT DISNEY MUSIC CO. LIMITED
WILLIAMSON MUSIC LIMITED

50 NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W. I.

Greetings From

LONNIE DONEGAN

CYRIL BERLIN
THE GRADE ORGANIZATION LTD.
LONDON

LLOYD GREENFIELD
MANNIE GREENFIELD ASSOCIATES
NEW YORK

PYE RECORDS — LONDON

Best Wishes from

THE WALTER JOKEL MANAGEMENT

Representing

ARTISTS, WRITERS AND DIRECTORS

39, St. James's Place
London, S.W.1.
Phone: HYDe Park 5126/1011

Directors: WALTER JOKEL (Managing) THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY — G. C. WHEATLEY — J. S. KNIGHT

LESLIE GRADE
and
THE GRADE ORGANISATION LTD., are delighted through ELSTREE FILM DISTRIBUTORS LTD., to be allied with
ASSOCIATED BRITISH PICTURE CORPORATION in the production of

Britain's Greatest Array of Box-Office Successes—

The YOUNG ONES
starring
CLIFF RICHARD

SUMMER HOLIDAY
starring
CLIFF RICHARD

SPARROWS CAN'T SING

THE SERVANT
currently breaking records throughout Britain after International acclaim at the Venice and New York Film Festivals

NOW IN PRODUCTION
IN THE CANARY ISLANDS
CLIFF RICHARD
WALTER SLEZAK
SUSAN HAMPSHIRE
DENNIS PRICE
WONDERFUL LIFE
Co-Starring The SHADOWS
Featuring MELVYN HAYES
RICHARD O'SULLIVAN
and UNA STUBBS

THE GRADE ORGANISATION LTD., REGENT HOUSE. 235-241 REGENT ST., LONDON W.1. ENGLAND. Cables: GRADAGE, LONDON W.1.

Some of America's biggest names in entertainment

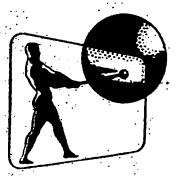
Count Basie Ray Charles
Nat King Cole Sammy Davis Jnr
Duke Ellington Ella Fitzgerald
Errol Garner Stan Kenton
Oscar Petersen Sarah Vaughan

tour Britain's key cities in theatres run by the Rank Organisation.

Over 50 movie theatres in the Rank circuit are equipped for full stage shows and personal appearance tours.

These theatres represent a total audience capacity of 100,000.

Detailed city-by-city guide to technical facilities and any further information from.



George Pinches, Booking Controller, The Rank Organisation, (Theatre Division), 11 Belgrave Road, London, S.W.1. England.
Tel: Victoria 6633 Cables: CEMAL SOU WEST.

(and many of today's top British stars)

THE BEATLES

The Biggest Box-Office Attraction in Britain Today

Now at the ODEON-ASTORIA

London's biggest theatre

one of the Rank Organisation's stage show theatres

And How Are Things In So. Africa?

Continued from page 166

with 14-year-old London actor Keith Collins brought out for juvenile lead.

This year a Performing Arts Council of Natal will come into being, and Sir Tyrone Guthrie and Durban actress Mary Peach have been invited to the Republic to inaugurate the new group's activities with a play celebrating the 400th anniversary of Shakespeare's birth. Similar celebrations in honor of the Bard will take place throughout South Africa, and plans are also forging ahead for the ambitious program of events lined up for an outsize Johannesburg Festival, skedded for September of this year.

Concerts over the past few years have commanded a growing South African following. Mark this season for 10-year-old piano prodigy, Marian Friedman, in debuts with civic orchestras in Cape Town, Durban, Pietermaritzburg and Johannesburg. Ovations went to Ruth Slenczynska, Michel Block and Shura Cherkassky. On the lighter side, Cliff Richard, Helen Shapiro, Jim Reeves, Carmen Cavallaro and German singer Freddy all did well on countrywide tours.

A new production outfit headed by H. S. Udwin ,former theatrical manager of African Consolidated Theatres, has formed two companies to bring imported entertainment to the Republic . . . Theatre International, with ambitious plans for future stage shows, and Concert International, promoting tours by concert artists. A season presented by four well known Italian opera stars inaugurated the second company in November, with a visit from two U.S. pop singers, Duane Eddy and John D. Loudermilk, to round off the year.

On Nov. 1, in terms of the Publications and Entertainments Bill passed by Parliament in February of last year, the 11-man Censorship Control Board under the chairmanship of Professor Dekker of Potchefstroom University met for the first time. The new body will deal with all films and stage productions, as well as local publications and all imported reading matter. Nationwide protests were registered by writers, artists and managements to the new Censorship Act, which was also strongly criticized in Parliament by the Opposition.

In the past no form of entertainment censorship other than for films has operated in South Africa, and it remains to be seen what effect the new body will have on the flourishing creative life of the country. With a banning order on an adult film like "Boccaccio '70" reversed by the Minister of the Interior himself last year, it is to be hoped that the Censorship Control Board will take a long, broad and enlightened view of the powers at its disposal, and will do nothing to hamper progress either in literature or the arts.

PETER SAUNDERS

AMBASSADORS THEATRE
London, W.C.2

DUCHESS THEATRE
London, W.C.2

Aussie Cinema Biz Off To $47,898,000 in '62

Melbourne.

Figures recently released in Canberra by the Commonwealth Statistician show that takings at Aussie cinemas fell from $68,656,500 in 1956-57 to $47,898,000 in 1961-62. In the same period, the number of theatres operating slipped from 1,939 to 1,645.

They Only 'Flirt' With Israel

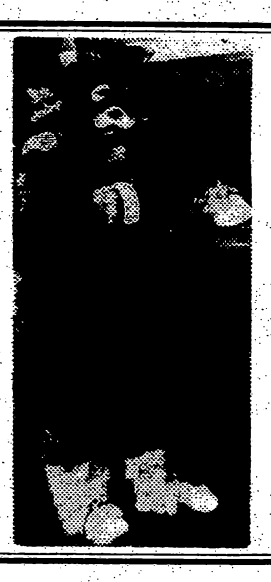
Continued from page 166

at least five more features, but nothing is sure as yet, judging from previous experiences. Cyril Frankel, of England ("The Very Edge") is planning to produce and direct "The Fifth Wheel," a story by Israel's noted playwright, Moshe Shamir, about a Kibbutz member, sent to Haifa-port to bring a new tractor to his community and becoming involved in so many funny happenings to give both laughs and the country-side a good showing. It is to be produced at Geva, by ARC Films.

Arthur Brauner (CCC of Berlin) is planning a coproduction of an Israeli story, also the exteriors for his "Nathan Der Wiser," for 1964 in Israel, with Wolfgang Gluck directing. Mr. Gluck, the Vienese tv and film director, had been twice here already to see whether he could doctor the remains of an old Israeli feature, made in 1954 and never publicly shown, "A Stone on Every Mile," which is to be produced by Elor Films and called "Bab El Wad." Mr. Gluck had been commissioned to shoot a 60 minutes feature on Philosopher Martin Buber, for the European tv.

Shai Ophir and Shimon Israeli, two Israeli performers of good standing, noted for their one-man shows, are planning an Israeli comedy featuring both of them, to be directed by an American director, who had known Shay K. Ophir since his Broadway days. Director John McGrath, of England (BBC "Z" Cars) has shown great interest in filming a script based on the Habimah production of "Yaldei Hazel" (Children of the Shadows), by Ben Zion Tomer, also to be shown by the Habimah and their American Tour.

The above list does not include various American producers and directors who had plans for features and studios in Israel, but somehow don't seem to be able to make use of the advantages offered to them by the government of Israel and its special encouragement bills. Thus, it seems, Israel films will have to rely on local resources and hope for a miracle in this field, the like of which has made other phantasies in this country into reality.



AL STEVENS
V.A.F.
BRITAIN'S TOP CAT – IMPERSONATOR
THE PURR-FECT TV CHILDREN'S ENTERTAINER
(NEARLY 50 BRITISH TV SHOWS)

P.A.
Bungalow, Veryn Hall, Abergele Road, Old Colwyn, Denbs. N. Wales
Publicity: Terrington Douglas

Enquiries
Burton Brown, Grade Organisation, Regent House, Regent Street, London, W.1. Tele: REG 8851

VARIETY

Wednesday, November 27, 1963

18 INTERNATIONAL

There's Gold In Them Thar Hills— Being Dug Out by German Westerns

Frankfurt, Nov. 26.

They laughed when a German producer went to Yugoslavia to turn out a "western," starring ex-Tarzan Lex Barker. And they howled at the filmization of German westerns based on the cowboy heroes, dreamed up 70 years ago by a German novelist who never saw the real wild west—author Karl May.

'Ben-Hur' on Gene... Release

"Re...

2. "Winnetou the First," base... on a novel written in 1893 by Karl May, directed by Harald Reinl, and ready for Christmas preems in this country.

And the film that started all th... shootin' flurry, of course, was "Treasure of the Silver Sea," the Barker western shot in Yugoslavia that got 'em all cowboy and Indian crazy.

Forty-one-year-old German producer Horst Wendlandt was riding the Edgar Wallace wave, of re-making detective stories, when he was hit with the notion that the best-selling novels for the young folks in West Germany were the old westerns turned out by Karl May in the last century.

Treasure' Started It All

And "Treasure," his first attempt at filming one of the out-of-date horse hero stories, came out just about a year ago. And it proved the biggest grosser of all the post-World War II German films. In its first three months, the film made up its production costs, which ran to an unseemly high of nearly $1,-000,000. Film likely will be the biggest grosser in the country this year; followed by a German co... edy ...

To date "Treasure" has been bought in more than 60 European, Asian, African and South American countries. In Italy, it grossed $60,-000 in four weeks. In Austria it's the biggest success since the end of the war, even out-grossing the former topper, the Romy Schn... er starrer, "Sissy."

...War of the Westerns

In the current "War of the Westerns," all the hard-hit German producers in search of a little quick money are trying to turn out something similar. And the battle is on to see who can draw the fastest gun—with Karl May, 70 years later, still in the lead.

Meanwhile, Wendlandt is going around the world on his quick cleanup with the "Treasure." He's sold it to the Russians, and also sold (to an as yet undisclosed buyer) in the U.S. for what he claims is the highest price ever paid in America for a German film—$100,-000 cash plus a split of ...ie profits.

Not only that, but he's raised so much Yank interest that Metro is going to film a western sequel called, "Winnetou Two" as a co-production with Wendlandt next year.

THE INTERNATIONAL PRODUCING COMPANY

RIALTO FILM PREBEN PHILIPSEN

Berlin — Copenhagen — Paris

presents

(AFTER

"THE TREASURE OF SILVER LAKE,"

THE SENSATIONAL EUROPEAN SUCCESS OF THE 1963 SEASON)

For the 1964 Season

WINNETOU (I)

(The Last BIG CHIEFTAIN of the RED-SKINS)

Starring

LEX BARKER — PIERRE BRICE

MARIO ADORF — MARIE VERSINI

And WALTER BARNES

Directed by DR. HARALD REINL

Start: CHRISTMAS 1963

Produced by

HORST WENDLANDT

Leading Light Entertainment Circuit in the Southern Hemisphere

TIVOLI CIRCUIT AUSTRALIA PTY. LTD.

Managing Directors—GORDON C. COOPER; LLOYD MARTIN

Tivoli Theatre, Melbourne — Tivoli Theatre, Sydney

— Current Attractions —

Tivoli Theatre, Melbourne
Tivoli Circuit and Aztec Services, by special arrangement with Tams-Witmark Music Library Inc., New York City, present—
THE WIZARD OF OZ
Featuring
KEVIN MILES, BOB HORNERY, FRANK LLOYD, DON McMANUS, REG DELL, PATTI McGRATH, JOAN HARRIS, PETER DEASE, JON DENNIS, NOLA FINN
CHORUS — SINGERS — DANCERS
Production Director—
STANLEY WILLIS-CROFT from London

Tivoli Theatre, Sydney
Tivoli Circuit and Aztec Services, in association with Robert Luff Holdings Ltd., London, present—
THE BLACK AND WHITE MINSTREL SHOW
Featuring
PENNY NICHOLLS, BOB ANDREWS, THE D'ANGOLYS, THE TWO PIRATES, EDDIE MENDOZA, THE BALCOMBES, ERIC WHITLEY, JEFF HUDSON, HARRY CURRIE, KEITH LEGGETT, MAUREEN WILSON, WENDY FAULKENER, JACKIE GRIFFITHS
Production Director—
GEORGE INNS, from London
★★★★★

— Commencing February 1964 —

Tivoli Theatre, Melbourne
Tivoli Circuit and Aztec Services, in association with Bernard Delfont of London, present—
STOP THE WORLD— I WANT TO GET OFF
The Musical Smash, by
ANTHONY NEWLEY and LESLIE BRICUSSE
Starring
JACKIE WARNER—from New York
EVELYN PAGE—from New York
Production Director—
JOHN BROOME, from London

American Representative: RUTH WEBB, 1650 Broadway, Suite 704, New York 19, New York European Representative: EDDIE JARRETT, The Grade Organisation Ltd., 235 Regent Street, London

Actor-Managers of Greece

Continued from page 168

sonal success this season in presenting at the Kentricon Theatre the one-man play "The Diary of a Madman" by Nicolayef Gogol. This will be followed by the "Love That Has No End' by Andre Roussin.

Perhaps Greece's most popular young actress, Aliki Vouyouklaki, is presenting "A Sunday in New York" with Costas Voutsas and Georges Pantzas in the two principal male roles.

Jenny Karezi preferred a local play by Campanellis to start with this season, titled "The Neighbourghood of Angels," with Nicos Kourkoulos and D. Papayannopoulos. This play proved a flop, however, and was followed soon by a local version of the "Born Yesterday"

Oldtimer. Caterina Andreadi, is doing very well, however, with the local play "The Dealer" by Dimitri Psathas which followed her summer hit "It is Never Too Late," by Sommer Longue.

Elsa Vergui is continuing with the "Balcony" by Jean Genet which will be followed by the local play "The Uprooted" by Alecos Lidorikis.

Alecos Alexandrakis is presenting at the Alfa Theatre "The Chinese Wall," by Max Frisch. His second play will be a local one by K. Mourselas "Madhouse World." Alecos Alexandrakis has selected for his program this season also "They Were All My Children," by Arthur Miller.

A Greek play "The Island of Venus," by Alexis Parnis is presented in Athens and Pireaus at two theatres by two different groups. In Athens is performed by B. Diamantopoulos and Sapfo Alkeou and in Pireaus at the Municipal Theatre by Vilma's kyrou group. Both performances are very well staged and acted.

'European Journal'

Rome.

A monthly video news program combining talents and facilities of eight European video nets is slated for unveiling this month.

Called "Il Giornale dell'Europa" (A European Journal) in Italy, opening show is work of six newsmen, one for each producing network. Italy is repped by Sandro DeFeo, France by Pierre Gresgraups, Britain by Paul Fox, Belgium by Andre Hagon, Switzerland by Alexandre Burger, W. Germany by H. H. Westermann.

Italy's first entry will be "Shooting in Rome," directed by Giuliano Tomei.

Yank Author Finds 1st Experiences in German Pix Reads Like Script

Berlin.

James Wakefield Burke, U.S. author residing here, could cite his own experiences in German picture making as a film script.

Arthur Brauner (CCC) asked him to help on the script of his western, "Old Shatterhand," and sent him to Yugoslavia where the pic was shot. At first it wasn't easy to get a director. After they got Leopold Lahola, they found it necessary get rid of him because of his inexperience with westerns. Luckily, they found Hugo Fregonese to take over.

Then Ladislas Fodor and Robert A. Stemmle, the two scripters, "disappeared," if indirectly. Most of what the two had written had to be thrown away. And Burke had to start all over again. And it was tough and quick writing in faraway Titoland.

Finally, Burke was asked to take over a role in this pic. He plays a colonel in this, his screen debut.

Brauner calls his CCC western a German-French-Italian co-production made in collaboration with Avala-Film, Belgrade. But at least it's a multi-nation film. With the exception of Ralf Wolter, a German comedian, all cast members are foreigners.

Roast Beef of Old England

Continued from page 169

actress Jeanne Moreau. Unique feature of this club is that there is no membership fee. Unless the committee gives an applicant the thumbs up he has no chance. The Sean Kenny decor is Dickensian. So's the menu, with such olde-worlde dishes as "Humble Pie," steak-and-kidney. Gag has not yet worn thin of watching actors persuading their agents to eat humble pie.

White Elephant

The White Elephant, in Curzon Street, quickly established itself as No 1 rendezvous for entertainment big shots and has had no difficulty in retaining its reputation. This is not a cheap club, but it has a deluxe atmosphere. Les Ambassadeurs, Siegi's and 21 Room are still magnets for the stars and producers, especially visiting American firemen, but can no longer be rated as predominantly theatrical oases. The Dorchester Bar no longer retains such a firm core of star-studded tipplers (the May Fair and the Westbury have provided keen opposition) but is still a pop thespian stamping ground.

Savage Club

There are still a number of professional clubs, though with the exception perhaps of the Savile and the Garrick, most admit that it is a struggle to "get by." The Savage Club, with its distinctive necktie and its years of tradition, recently suffered a blow by having to move out of its spacious premises off Pall Mall because of future re-planning. The members now share the amenities of the National Liberal Club. One cynical Savage was heard to say:"Two lost causes getting together." Another speculated how long it would be before all the Savages went into politics and all the Liberals went on the stage! To the visitor, the great loss is that most of the Savage Club's treasures, books, pictures, and mementoes of past glories have to be stored.

Green Room Club, again a club with history, atmosphere and too few active members, still has happy sessions in its underground premises behind the Strand, and this is one that features the one-armed bandits in the bar. Sometime ago the Stage Golfing Club moved temporarily, but now appears to have settled down permanently, to rooms above the Salisbury tavern in St. Martin's Lane. The Salisbury for years, by the way, was regarded as one of London's top theatrical pubs but rarely, now, do the big names penetrate its old fashioned, glass walled surroundings.

The Water Rats

Grand Order of Ratlings, better known as The Water Rats, have no regular club premises but hold their regular meetings at the Eccentric Club, subsequently adjourning to a nearby tavern for "after business" tippling. Nor does the Vaudeville Golfing Society have a permanent place for its activities, meetings being held in a West End saloon and much of its business and social activities being confined to various 19th holes. The modest club premises and at the moment these are in the heart of theatreland.

The New Arts Theatre Club, revitalized, re-jigged, re-decked, under the vigorous guidance of Kenneth Rive and Nat Cohen is aiming successfully to restore past glories by making the club more of a showbiz rendezvous. Economic reasons brought in a huge number of worthy members from all walks of life. This boosted the bank balance, but tended to swamp the real aim of the club, which has a theatre, film shows, club lunches and dinners with star legit speakers and so on. To this end the Critics' Circle members and the Film Publicity Guild, neither of which body has a place to lay its head, are being encouraged to use the New Arts as an H.Q.

And talking of clubs—of a very different breed—there's still no place like Al Burnett's Stork Room for attracting the pro's who like to burn the candle into the dawn. Every night, but particularly on Sundays, the place, which has a distinctive character exclusively its own, is the rendezvous for performers of all calibres, and particularly visiting Yanks. There they "insult" their host, Al Burnett, and will go into their own acts at the drop of a cue. Maybe the old New York Leon & Eddie's matched it. But very few others ever have. Some glamor, excitement and panache attach to the Caprice, under the bland and affable Mario Gallati, and the Ivy. The Caprice which, rumor cynically has it, was built around Henry Sherek's table, is a top eaterie, favored by the stars, and those who can afford to goggle at them. It is no place to go for a confidential business yack, since tables are closely adjacent and, at lunchtime, particularly, a tape recorder would reveal an incessant wave of irrelevant chatter, largely femme.

Isow's restaurant, in Soho, is Jewish influenced and is a regular hideout for top film and tv execs who want no social fiddle faddle over their gefulte fish. To them lunch is a mere continuation of the day-by-day hatchet work of existence in the Wardour Street (Film Row) jungle. Rule's, Scott's and Simpson's are other well known eating houses with firm showbiz support.

When it comes to taverns, there are many scattered around town. Folk you may meet in those adjacent to theatres depends, largely, of course, on who's working or rehearsing where. In Wardour Street the Duke of Wellington, the Intrepid Fox and the Ship are Three that cater considerably for the people who work in Wardour Street. The Grosvenor Arms near the BBC's Aeolian Holl usually has a full quota of musicians.

The pattern has changed over the year. Necessarily rising costs have raised club membership fees sometimes to exorbitant proportions and driven members to saloon bars. There is more commuting to town and so less hanging around the local bars. And showbiz has spread its tentacles so widely over London that people tend to drink and eat acording to geography. For instance, it is necessary to make a safari to Shepherd's Bush to pass a convivial time of day with the employees of BBC's Television Centre.

Greetings from

GEORGE ROSS & CAMPBELL SINGER

Authors of

"DIFFERENCE OF OPINION"

Current London Hit Produced by Peter Bridge at the Garrick Theatre

Earlier Plays Include:

"ANY OTHER BUSINESS" ("Calculated Risk")

"GUILTY PARTY"

Representation: ERIC GLASS LTD.
28 Berkeley Square
London, W.1.

Agent for U.S.A.
LUCY KROLL AGENCY
119 West 57th Street
New York City

SIMONE SIGNORET

YVES MONTAND

'Beatlemania' Bites Britain as Four From Liverpool Become a Show Biz Phenomenon; Press Clips Top Queen's

By ROGER WATKINS

London.

Assuming the proportions of a nationwide, unstoppable infection, the U.K. has fallen victim to what is locally known as "Beatlemania." The epidemic, pleasant enough, stems from four Liverpool pop singers—John Lennon, Paul McCartney, Ringo Starr and George Harrison—known professionally as The Beatles.

And, according to authoritive and veteran show biz trade sources, Britain has never seen anything like it.

In less than a year, The Beatles have sprung from total obscurity to the most publicized foursome in British entertainment history. It's gotten so big that Fleet Street hardly lets a day go by without either frontpaging or splashing a Beatles story and or pix.

But Fleet Street's affection for the four Liverpublians, who have set afire in Pan Alley, Film Row and broadcasting, generally, does not spring from any reason other than they make good news and good reading.

Teenagers' Faves

For instance, at almost any performance of the group whether it's for tv, stage or club, the crowd of teenage fans that encircle the location is usually so vast they have to be controlled and literally held back by dozens of police. London airport was recently besieged on their return from an overseas engagement. Firms are being forced to give an afternoon's "Beatle-leave" to young employees who risk getting trampled, crushed or asphyxiated in the thousands-strong crush for concert tickets.

Newsreel shots by the dozen, presspix, by the score and millions of words are being filed as Lennon, McCartney, Starr and Harrison collect press clippings exceeding that of the royal family. There's hardly a top writer in Fleet Street who at some time or another during the last few hectic months has not penned a feature piece on the group—either singly or as a collective phenomenon.

Concurrent Series

So hectic is the rush to get those highly individual mops of hair and smiles beaming out from the feature pages, that the Mirror and Sketch were running Beatles series concurrently with the Express which covered the broader field of The Liverpool Sound, too) and the Mail just days behind.

Overall, presswise, the publicity has reached saturation point with full, nationally-circulated stories on Beatles' coming and goings, doings and sayings, which are now all but a regular column in the U.K.'s assorted newsheets.

While the starchy Times hasn't exactly hopped on the bandwagon with the applauding feature bit, it nevertheless lightens its main newspages from time to time with Beatles-stimulated news reports. The somewhat less reserved Telegraph however has tended to whoop-it-up with newspix and yarns much as in the style of the more popular press.

Merchandising Angles

Result of the tremendous press exposure, tv appearances (BBC-TV even made a documentary on the lads along with radio and disk releases has not only sparked off a great merchandising glut—Beatles' sweaters, pencils, combs, stationery, various publications, and, of course, stills—but has kids dialing B-E-A-T-L-E-S on the telephone.

From the boxoffice point of view, with Beatlemania at its fever pitch, the quartet is an absolute sellout. Tickets attract as much black marketering as do those for a football Cup Final or those rare occasions when, say, an artist of the calibre of Frank Sinatra gives a performance.

They have triumphed in most show biz media, and now have their first feature film coming up. It's a Walter Shenson production for United Artists' release.

British Disk Best Sellers

London.

Want Hold Hand (Parlophone)	Beatles
She Loves You (Parlophone)	Beatles
Glad All Over (Columbia)	Clark Five
Were Made For Me (Columbia)	Dreamers
Secret Love (Decca)	Kirby
Only Want Be With You (Philips)	Springfield
Dominique (Philips)	Singing Nun
Maria Elena (RCA)	Tabajaros
Don't Talk To Him (Columbia)	Richard
24 Hours From Tulsa (United Artists)	Pitney

Music Business: It's A Know-How Business; Musings of Veteran

By HANS HOLZER

The conversation went like this.

Holzer: "So you like my song, huh?"

A&R Man: "Great song. Perfect for my new Group."

Holzer: "So?"

A&R Man: "No dice. They can't read."

Holzer: "So what? They can learn the melody by ear."

A&R Man: "N-nh. They can't read lyrics either."

* * *

Back in 1953, Seeco had just recorded a ballad of mine entitled "Bewitched Am I." There was a line in the lyric that went "Lead me through Eden's portal . . ." It was all very high class. Two weeks after release, I was approached by the representative of a singer who had just acquired his 17th manager (that year, that is) and it seems as how the young man liked my song, "except you gotta take out that line about the British Prime Minister."

* * *

Friend of mine went to see the head of a music firm so well known we shall call it Cohen-Callahan. He had a song he thought they would go for. But Mr. C. was disdainful.

"Your songs are constructed like nothing," he said, and raised his eyebrows. My friend slunk home, shattered. Two days later he returned with another hunk of material. This time Mr. C. hardly looked at the masterpiece and exclaimed, "Your construction is all wrong. You don't know how to write music. This song will never get any place."

Triumphantly, he threw the manuscript back at my friend, waiting for the inevitable sigh. Only my friend was laughing his head off. The song was a top Gershwin number.

* * *

One of the incidents in my book "Ghost Hunter" (recently published by Bobbs-Merrill) involves a certain West 56th St. restaurant where the alleged ghost of an advertising man had been observed after his untimely passing by his own hands. The late Danton Walker, a fellow-spook specialist, tipped me off to the case, and one night after the regular customers had left, we put a lady-psychic, a volunteer, into trance to see if the ghost would talk to us. He did, and the first thing he wanted was a stiff drink. Now Mrs. Meyers, my psychic, a vocal coach by profession, is as gentle, non-drinking a lady you want to meet. Possessed by the Madison Ave. souse, she became a raving alcoholic until I took her out of the trance state. When she awoke, remembering absolutely nothing, she was high as a kite.

It was the first time anyone had become inebriated by a ghost!

LAWRENCE WELK

Has Another Hit Dot Album!
"WONDERFUL, WONDERFUL"

Special Tastes Rule So. Africa

By EVELYN LEVISON

Johannesburg.

Dominating disk of 1963 in South Africa was a German LP made by a semi-classical vocal group—the Gunter Kallmann Choir—which generated its success from the title tune, an old world type ballad translated into German from an English song published in 1952 as "Elizabethan Serenade." Original writers were Ronald Binge and Christopher Hassall, poet and lyricist of many Ivor Novello shows, who died some months back.

New title, pruned to "Elizabeth Serenade," is also name of this LP which has triggered off more interest than even the Presley and Cliff Richard longplayers issued this past twelve months. S. African sales have far outpaced figures notched up in Germany where disk was waxed, and after eight months there is still healthy traffic over dealers' counters. Title song will later be issued as a single when sales of the LP begin to sag . . . still a far way off.

Other bestselling LP's of the year emigrating from Germany were Bert Kaempfert's "Original Swinging Safari" and "Freddy Auf Höher See," filmstar-singer Freddy having registered favorable impact during his recent personal appearance tour of the Republic.

Top USA LP's were Elvis Presley's "It Happened at the World's Fair" and "Trini Lopez at P.J.'s." Bestsellers ex England were "Summer Holiday" (Cliff Richard songs from pic soundtrack) and "Please Please Me" (The Beatles). Locally made LP moneyspinners included Dickie Loader's "Exclusively Yours," and, in Afrikaans, two Charles Jacobie disks, "Die Singende Beesboer" ("The Singing Cowboy") and "Veelsydige Charles Jacobie" ("Versatile Charles Jacobie").

Still way ahead as the favorite in the field of stage show recordings is the "My Fair Lady" Broadway original, with Harrison, Andrews and Holloway. Gaining impetus from the success of the touring company that has been playing S. Africa since November, 1962 (longest run ever for any show in this territory) the LP sales figures now top 80,000 and disks are still coming off the presses. Bestselling local cast recording of the year is "Oliver" made by the Brian Brooke Co. before the show opened in Johannesburg prior to nationwide tour.

Top pop artist on singles was Cliff Richard with waxings of "Bachelor Boy" and "Lucky Lips" his top sellers. Other important singles:—"From a Jack to a King" (Ned Miller), "Blue Train" (John D. Loudermilk) "Happy Birthday, My Darling" (Bob Gallion), "Ruby Baby" (Dion) and "I will Follow Him" (Little Peggy March). Introduction of the Bossa Nova to local dance floors jacked up Eydie Gorme's "Blame It on the Bossa Nova" into the hit charts, while good royalties were earned on local recordings of local tunes by the Meteors ("Meadowlands," written by Strike Vilakazi) and Johnny Kongos ("Tulips for Tomette" penned by mother and son team, Sylvia and Johnny Kongos).

As Others Hear Us; British Disks Making Their Mark on World Charts

By NORRIE PARAMOR & BOB BARRATT

London.

The past year has proved a considerable landmark for the British record industry. On the home front, at the time of writing, home-produced records fill two-thirds of the places in the U.K. hit parade, which from the advent of the rock 'n' roll era in the mid-1950 until quite recently had been dominated by American waxings. In addition, British artists, find ever-increasing acceptance in the world market. A breakthrough indeed.

In the U.S.A., the birthplace of popular music as we know it today, it is no longer a rarity to see a British disk hit the Top 100 chart. Dating back to the 1950s such artists as Frank Chacksfield, Cyril Stapleton and Edmundo Ros made it and Vera Lynn's "Auf Wiedersehen," Chris Barber's "Petite Fleur," David Whitfield's "Cara Mia" all succeeded in selling 1,000,000 copies during that decade.

The consistent album sales in recent years of orchestral music by Mantovani, Stanley Black, Johnny Gregory and Ronnie Aldrich, not forgetting the fine work Capitol have done with my (Norrie Paramor) albums, have been right up there.

The breakthrough began in earnest in 1960 with Marty Wilde's "Bad Boy," Mantovani's "Exodus Theme," Chackfield's "On The Beach" and the singles which introduced Anthony Newley to American ears. It gained momentum during 1961, spearheaded by Matt Monro's "My Kind of Girl," Helen Shapiro's "Walking Back to Happiness," "Tunes of Glory" by the Cambridge Strings, and Lonnie Donegan's humorous "Does Your Chewing Gum Lose its Flavor on the Bedport Overnight."

Acker Bilk's clarinet styling of his own "Stranger On The Shore" was a chart-topper in mid-1962 and went on to become a million-seller. The Tornados' "Telstar" filled the No. 1 spot at the start of 1963, also gaining them a gold disk. Among others who have enhanced the prestige of British talent in the U.S. were Charlie Drake, Cliff Richard, Kenny Ball, The Springfields and Ronnie Carroll, together with Frank Ifield and Rolf Harris, who, after reaching the top in Australia, have now settled on our shores and have cut their hit sides in London studios. Harris also just essayed a New York nitery engagement.

From Down Under

Comedian Charlie Drake achieved remarkable sales with "My Boomerang Won't Come Back" as did cartoonist-humorist-singer-songwriter Harris with "Sun Arise" and "Tie Me Kangaroo Down Sport" which climbed to No. 3. Kenny Ball's haunting jazz treatment of "Midnight in Moscow" reached No. 2 and found many customers also for his fresh approach to "Green Leaves of Summer" and "March of The Siamese Children." Richard's "Lucky Lips" followed up his previous chart-success in 1959 with "Living Doll" and The Springfields made several hit parade appearances, most notably with "Sliver Threads and Golden Needles." A rhythmic updating of the oldie "I Remember You" catapulted Frank Ifield and his subsequent re-stylings of "Lovesick Blues," "The Wayward Wind" and "I'm Confessin'" suggest that his importance as an international artist will be maintained.

Yank Break-Through

British songwriters too have been finding increasing acceptance for their work in the U.S. In addition to those already mentioned, "You Can Never Stop Me Loving You," "Portrait of My Love," "Diamonds," "Say Wonderful Things," "Scarlett O'Hara" and "From Me to You," have become familiar to American record-buyers via recordings by local artists. Special praise is due to Lionel Bart and Anthony Newley/Leslie Bricusse respectively for their scores of the smash musicals "Oliver!" and "Stop The World I Want To Get Off."

For teen-beat and rock 'n' roll disks it is an uphill struggle. But singles of an unusual, often comedy appeal by artists of especial individuality who have no direct equivalent among American singers, have been more readily accepted.

Turning to the rest of the world during 1963 recent achievements are most encouraging. British recording artists now have many fans in South Africa, where Richard's "Bachelor Boy," "It'll Be Me," "Lucky Lips" and "40 Days" all achieved the tops as did The Tornados' "Telstar." Other chart-riders have included The Shadows' "Dance On," "Foot Tapper" and "Atlantis," John Barry's "James Bond Theme," Jet Harris and Tony Meehan's "Diamonds," Kenneth McKellar's "The Longest Day" and Jimmy Justice's "Spanish Harlem."

"Telstar" was No. 1 in Australia too, where Richard and The Shadows have also been consistently among the bestsellers, while The Beatles and Gerry & The Pacemakers have successfully bowed the "Liverpool Sound" with "From Me To You" and "How Do You Do It" respectively. Ifield's "Lovesick Blues" proved that the local boy who made good overseas has not been forgotten.

New Zealand is always ready to welcome a good British disk and recent bestsellers have included Richard's "Summer Holiday" and "The Next Time," The Beatles' "Please Please Me" and The Searchers' "Sweets For My Sweet," together with "Lovesick Blues" and "Sun Arise."

Far East

In the Far East, Japan is probably the most promising market for British waxings. Alma Cogan has a strong record-buying following, ditto John Leyton. Cliff Richard, Hong Kong too has seen The Shadows' "Dance On" and "Foot Tapper" and Richard's "Summer Holiday," "Bachelor Boy," "It's All In The Game" and "Lucky Lips" on its bestseller lists, while "The Next Time" was India's No. 1 in April.

Israel is an exceptionally good market for British recordings, which have achieved innumerable Top 10 entries in recent months, and among the bestsellers were Richard, Ifield, Maureen Evans, Springfields, Beatles, Gerry & Pacemakers, Helen Shapiro, Billy Fury, Susan Maughan, plus several Shadows releases.

"Telstar" repeated its British and American success in France and Germany, in both of which territories Petula Clark remains a star name and Richard, Helen Shapiro and The Shadows are rapidly gaining recognition.

Lowlands and Scandinavia

In Holland, star performers have been The Shadows, Vera Lynn and The Tornados, not forgetting Cliff Richard who has had no less than seven Top-5 entries to date this year. Neighboring Belgium too gave an especially warm reception to "Telstar," "Bachelor Boy," "The Next Time" and "Lucky Lips."

Scandinavian tastes are currently running almost parallel to those in Great Britain. In Denmark Ronnie Carroll, Petula Clark, Brian Poole, Louise Cordet, Frankie Vaughan, The Shadows and Billie Davis have achieved good sales while chart-toppers include Russ Conway and Cliff Richard.

In Sweden Michael Cox, Ron Goodwin, Beatles, Ifield, Gerry & Pacemakers, Searchers, Heinz and Billy J. Kramer, have been highly successful, together with (as in Finland) several Richard and Shadows waxings. Ditto in the comparatively small but lively Norwegian market.

In recent months, Richard has sung in Spanish, French and German for recordings specifically aimed at these Continental markets and Ifield, Leyton and Miss Shapiro too have re-recorded some of their English-language hits for Continental release.

Our product has yet to make any real impact in such territories as Brazil, Argentina, Mexico, Spain and Italy but the feeling is that this year's breakthrough is only the beginning.

The Liverpool groups who have overrrun the U.K. charts during 1963 have not yet had time to make their presence fully felt overseas.

TEENS CALL TUNES IN PARIS

'RUBBED ELBOWS WITH—'

By L. WOLFE GILBERT

Hollywood

Started my varied career as a Coney Island saloon singer with a penchant for writing songs, because this was a good spot to introduce them. There were the College Inn, Perry's and Stauch's on Surf Ave. Eddie Cantor was in a bistro on the Boardwalk. This was where "Waiting For The Robert E. Lee" was born.

Around the corner was a ragtime pianoplayer wearing a derby hat who never said a word. This was Jimmy Durante. He played for the entertainers and songpluggers (including me) but never read a line to or for the customers. Lou Clayton and Eddie Jackson came along and changed that for Jimmy. Sime Silverman, editor of VARIETY, came to hear the trio, especially Jimmy, who had begun to talk, sing and make with jokes, and helped the Schnoz become the most beloved trouper of them all.

Prior to Coney Island I had done a single and played the Sullivan & Considine and Pantages circuits. Much later, I graduated to The Orpheum and Keith Theatres, culminiating at the famous Palace on Broadway.

On the Pantages circuit on or about 1907, right after the San Francisco Quake, I was on the bill with the noblest Roman of them all—the Boston Strong Boy, the champ himself, John L. Sullivan. The newspapermen had a Roman holiday dubbing "The Great John L." and myself as "Gilbert & Sullivan." Sullivan and I became fast friends. He called me Lazarus.

At that time writing parodies on the current song hits was a vogue—a forerunner of Allan Sherman today. So I did just that. Every day I'd make the rounds of the Roger Bros., Weber & Fields, Lillian Shaw, Nat Wills, Harry Cooper (of the Empire City Quartet, etc.) and kindred acts. Few of them ever paid me except with a meal, and I suffered no qualms of conscience when I later sold the same parody to a half a dozen of them without telling one act that I had sold it to the other.

Jolie

One day I walked into the Academy Hotel on 14th St., New York, looking for Al Jolson. At the time, he was doing an act with his brother, Harry, who had a good singing voice and another partner, a Jewish comedian Joe Palmer, who sang parodies. Palmer was a paralytic and had to be wheeled onstage. For that purpose, Jolson employed a chair similar to those seen on the Boardwalk at Atlantic City and maintained the illusion by wearing blackface and impersonating a professional chair-wheeler while he sang and whistled.

On this particular day, there was a snowstorm. Hungry as usual, I weathered the storm. As I walked into Al's room, I found him on his way out, draped, I noted enviously, in a good looking heavy overcoat. On a clothes tree hung another overcoat. Still shivering from the cold, I sang Jolson half a dozen parodies and then we talked money. Al wanted four of these parodies, and with a gulp in my throat, I said, "These are very funny, and so I have to get at least $7 for the four." Jolson responded, "You're nuts! I get parodies from Charlie Hoey of Hoey & Lee for $2 a piece."

I changed the subject and said, "Al, I see you've got two overcoats. Do you want to sell one to me?" Al replied, "Yes, I'll sell you one. This one is only four years old, and I want seven bucks for it." You guessed it, I got the coat, and Jolson got four parodies. As I left with the coat, Al said, "and besides I'm throwing in my partner Joe Palmer. You can have him." So the Jolson trio became Palmer & Gilbert. We still used the wheelchair, and we did two Jewish war veterans.

It was customary, via the laws of the Jewish Musicians Union, that if a producer intended to curtail any part of his pit orchestra, he must so notify the union on opening night. If he failed to do so, all the musicians must then remain intact for the run of the play.

Rumshinsky conducted on opening night, and as coproducer was to determine whether he needed the entire orchestra or not. This night, he counted the house and sensed he had a flop. He decided to do away with the bassoon player, one violinist, and the second drummer. But, he forgot to promptly notify the union. On the second day, realizing his mistake, and knowing that the saving of the musicians' three salaries might well make the difference between financial chaos and the ability to keep open, Rumshinsky appeared before the union committee.

Rumshinsky's Two Hats

He pleaded with tears in his eyes that it was an oversight, and that he could not afford the cost of the three musicians; that the salaries of these men might force them to close the show. This would put the cast, the ushers as well, out of work. The unioneers seemed to be impressed, and told Rumshinsky they would let him know their decision the next day. He started for the door and then suddenly stopped and said, "Gentlemen, when I was talking to you, I was talking as Rumshinsky, the producer. Now I address you as Rumshinsky, the composer. I need those three musicians to make music sound good!"

After the inauguration of Governor Whitman at Albany, there was a function called the Governor's Ball. Vincent Lopez ("Mister Nola") and his orchestra appeared on the scene. All the dignitaries were assembled in the large ballroom of the Ten Eyck hotel in Albany, as Vincent sat astride his piano stool and waited to play a dignified march to herald the entrance of the new Governor and his aides, who were flanked by the state militia.

A flunky came running into the ballroom warning Lopez to get ready. Vincent nervously asked, "What'll I play—what shall we play?" I was sitting next to Vincent, and I countered with "Hail To The Chief." "We don't know that," said Vince. In desperation I whispered, "play 'Stars And Stripes,' 'Semper Fidelis' or any Sousa March." "We don't know that stuff," shrieked Lopez. "Here comes the Governor," cued the aide, and as the imposing erect State militia started marching in, followed by Governor Whitman (each man in the militia—six foot two or three) Lopez and his then Hotel Pennsylvania dance orchestra went into "The Parade of the Wooden Soldiers"!

DID HIS CO-DIRECTOR MAKE KARAJAN SICK?

Vienna.

Angle-ridden and politicking-prone the Vienna Opera has long been. As per example there is the latest instance of the apparently very serious illness of conductor Herbert von Karajan with a "circulatory disease" which forced cancellation of artistic performance but not of ski partying in the Alps. It ends up with Karajan not so very sick and able to pick up dates in Britain at end of January.

Now it is heard here that Karajan wished to temporarily remove himself from Vienna, that there is a serious clash between him and the co-director.

There is now expectation that Karajan wil head the Vienna Opera on a visit to Paris next fall. Included would be a candlelight supper at $50 per in the Versailles Hotel of Mirrors. Doubt remains that the non-Italian Karajan will be on the stick when La Scala of Milan presents "La Boheme" in Moscow.

'LES IDOLS' RAGE BOOMS RECORDS

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Paris.

Rise in France of a teenage group with buying power, due to more affluence here, has created a boom in the recording and music hall spheres of show biz. Youth cries out to youth, creating teenage "stars."

These types are called "Les Idols," naturally enough. In two years they have changed the realities of the record setup in France. It is estimated that there are over 16,000,000 French persons under 20. Buying power is pegged near a billion dollars.

Instant Stars

During a six month period in 1963 over 5,000,000 platters were sold as recorded by new singers, mainly of rock 'n' roll and twist syndromes. It gave the disk biz a new impetus after it had been in trouble the last few years. Here as elsewhere one record may "make" a star.

Oddly enough when, several years ago, American r'n'r was tried via vaude appearances and records it did not catch on. In some instances, exemplars were even laughed off the stage. This was the "middleaged" reaction.

Youth Pro-Yank?

Despite the DeGaulle emphasis upon French nationalism the young crowd continue to fancy things American — cowboy films, Yank dances, ice cream sodas hamburgers and such American outposts as Paris' own "Le Drugstore." So the time came when Le Twist caught on and with it and after it much else of American musical origin.

It really began in early 1961. The twist raged in niteries and among the young set who were now owners of their own record players. Family ties and social aspects were changing. Youngsters seemed to be finding their ease in belonging to groups and not in the family, in poetic solitude or with only a friend, a girlfriend or boyfriend as the case may be.

With all family members working more, and youngsters getting much more spending money, the impact on show biz was pronounced. Notable success was a blonde French youth with the Americanized monicker of Johnny Hallyday.

Quite 'Moral'

He twisted and pranced about but his songs, when audible, were rock and with lyrics that talked about simple friendships with girls and not the dramatic, sexy relationships of yore. Songs also dealt with parents, chided them but did not attack them, and were mainly about innocent flirts, military service and eventual marriage. But always it was about an easygoing palship with that old so-called French sex insouciance soft-pedaled.

Hallyday was not a symbol of revolt, for the new youth movement was not anti-social but "ad-

(Continued on page 222)

A SONGWRITER BY ANY OTHER NAME...

By STANLEY GREEN

If anyone ever manages to establish some sort of ASCAP Hall of Fame, there is little doubt that among the most prominently represented songwriters will be Frank Roland, Ren G. May, Herbert Richard Lorenz, Dick Howard, Arthur Francis, and Gilbert Keyes. What's that? Never heard of them? That's not too surprising. For these happen to be the pennames of some of the giants among American composers and lyricists that were used at one time or another during their careers. The writers didn't keep their pseudonyms for very long, but they were used on published songs and may still be found on original sheet music copies.

Take this fellow Frank Roland. Sometimes he was also known as Noble MacClure. Most of the time, however, he was known by his real name, Victor Herbert. Herbert had no rival at the beginning of the century as the master of operetta. No other composer in the the field could match him in productivity or in marquee appeal. A Victor Herbert musical was always an event, and so was the publication of a new Victor Herbert song. In fact, Herbert even suspected that people bought copies of his music on the strength of his name alone. In 1904, to test the public's reaction to a Herbert composition sans the Herbert byline, the composer wrote a piano piece called "Al Fresco," and credited it to one Frank Roland. The sprightly number did quite well in sheet music sales, and a few months later satisfied that the public would buy his music on its merit, Herbert had the piece republished under his own name. But that wasn't the end of it. At about the same time, Herbert needed a gay number for a carnival scene in his forthcoming musical, "It Happened In Nordland." It wasn't long before "Al Fresco" was added to the new score and, with a lyric penned by Glen McDonough, it turned out to be one of the hits of the show. As for Noble MacClure—and what an imposing handle that one was—this name showed up on the sheet of at least three Victor Herbert piano pieces, "Get Together," "On Your Way," and "Valse a la Mode."

Irving Berlin

